

This prop is based on actual vintage insurance paperwork. Endorsements are added to the standard life insurance policy to tailor the coverage to fit the needs of the customer. People in hazardous occupations, like occult investigators, frequently get endorsements to cover them for specific types of injuries that are more likely for them than for ordinary people, madness, complete permanent disability, etc. Added coverage usually requires added premiums, which are specified on the endorsement. Endorsements might also indicate that premiums are to be lowered because the customer has special training or equipment that makes him safer than the average person, such as firearms expertise or the like.

Attach to insurance policy with glue or staples on page 3 in space for endorsements, as shown. Attach as many different endorsements as desired, one beneath another.

If using glue, just glue a strip along the edge, to leave room for other attachments, if desired.
