A sacred fist who knowingly carries or uses a weapon loses all class spells and features and advances no farther as a sacred fist until he atones for his action (see the atonement spell, page 201 of the Player's Handbook).

Like a member of any other class, a sacred fist may be a multiclass character, but multiclass sacred fists face a special restriction.

A sacred fist who gains a level in any class other than sacred fist may never again raise his sacred fist level, though he retains all his sacred fist abilities.

The path of the sacred fist requires a constant focus.

If a character adopts this class, he must pursue it to the exclusion of all other careers.

Once he has turned off the path, he may never return.

SEEKER OF THE MISTY ISLE

Millennia ago, a well-placed arrow from Corellon Larethian put out one of Gruumsh's eye.

But Gruumsh and Kurtulmak conspired to have their revenge on the deity of the elves.

Using potent magic (and sacrificing thousands of orcs, kobolds, and captive elves), Gruumsh and Kurtulmak managed to whisk away one of the world's most beautiful elven communities: the Misty Isle.

Neither Corellon Larethian's personal power nor the combined prowess of the elven nation's diviners was able to glean so much as a hint about where Gruumsh and Kurtulmak have hidden the Misty Isle—only that the elves there yet survive, though they are trapped and cannot contact their brethren.

Thus an elite order of elves was born: the seekers of the Misty Isle.

Ever since the Misty Isle was stolen away, the seekers have walked the length and breadth of the land, hunting patiently for the lost elves.

Even among the long-lived elves, a dozen generations of seekers have lived and died without discovering more than a few scattered clues as to the Misty Isle's location.

Yet still they search, and to give one's life to the seekers' cause is one of the noblest sacrifices an elf can make.

Joining the seekers is an arduous process, for the order admits only those likely to survive long travels in hostile lands.

And because looking for the Misty Isle is a lifelong quest, the ranks of the seekers are filled with those who no longer "fit in" among the elves: the heartbroken, the grieving, and the exiled.

Many have at least some training as a ranger or druid, because the forbidding wilderness where a seeker wanders provides entry trials of its own.

Multiclass barbarian druids and cleric/rangers also find the pursuit rewarding.

NPC seekers of the Misty Isle can be found nearly anywhere, because Gruumsh and Kurtulmak could have hidden a portal to the Misty Isle anywhere from a city sewer to a lonely mountain cave to the depths of the Abyss itself.

Seekers don't often stay in one place for long, but they'll join any quest that even hints at progress in the search for the Misty Isle.

Adaptation: This prestige class is both race- and deity-specific, but you can file off the serial numbers and use it for any group of elite wanderers.

The flavor of the class is a romanticized version of the French Foreign Legion—a group composed of people who want to start their lives over, far from everything they know.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a seeker of the Misty Isle, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: Must be inducted into the order by another member.

CLASS SKILLS

The seeker of the Misty Isle's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Speak Language (n/a), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the seeker of the Misty Isle prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Seekers of the Misty Isle are proficient with all martial weapons and with all light and medium armor.

Extra Domain: A seeker of the Misty Isle gains the granted power and spell access of the Travel domain at 1st level and the Magic domain at 7th level.

For an explanation of how nonclerics receive domain spells, see the Extra Domains section at the beginning of this Chapter.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new seeker of the Misty Isle level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class in which she could cast 2nd-level divine spells before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, wild shape ability, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of seeker of the Misty Isle to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class in which she could cast 2nd-level divine spells before she became a seeker of the Misty Isle, the player must decide which class to assign each level of seeker of the Misty Isle for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Swiftfooted (Ex): At 4th level, the seeker can ignore the normal -5 penalty for accelerated movement when she uses the following skills: Balance, Climb, Hide, Move Silently, and Survival (for following tracks).

Her penalty for accelerated tumbling is reduced from -10 to -5.

Corellon's Perception (Ex): A 5th-level seeker of the Misty Isles has sight and hearing far beyond a normal elf's, and she has attuned her senses to repetitively sweep her immediate area.

She gains a +5 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

Furthermore, she can attempt to spot or hear something she failed to notice previously once per round per skill as a free action (such attempts are ordinarily move actions).

Surefooted (Ex): As a side effect of the seeker of the Misty Isle's keen senses, she is always searching the terrain around her.

Accordingly, she has a preternatural sense of minute details in the landscape she can use to her advantage.

She can ignore DC modifiers on Balance, Move Silently, and Tumble checks derived from the surface or terrain.

Find the Path (Sp): A 6th-level seeker can use find the path on herself once per day as a spell-like ability.

Her caster level is equal to her class level.

Arcane Sight (Su): Three times per day, a 9th-level seeker of the Misty Isle's eyes glow blue, enabling her to use arcane sight, as the spell from a caster of the seeker's highest divine caster level.

Discern Location (Sp): A 10th-level seeker can use discern location once per week as a spell-like ability.

Her caster level is equal to her class level.

SHINING BLADE OF HEIRONEOUS

Heironeous's teachings focus on promoting good through the use of armed force.

Those among Heironeous's servants, both clerics and paladins, who aspire to become weapons in their deity's unending war against evil hope one day to enter the shining blades.

The shining blades of Heironeous is an order of knights dedicated to prowess in melee combat, which is achieved through prayer, devotion, and asceticism.

Members of the shining blades have an austere and simple lifestyle, forsaking all worldly wealth and many earthly pleasures in their quest to become but a blade in the hand of Heironeous.

Most shining blades of Heironeous are clerics or paladins. Some members of the order believe that a minimum of training as a cleric, combined with the intense martial discipline of the fighter is ideal to achieve the goal the shining blades seek, while others follow a single class exclusively.

Very few multiclass arcane spellcasters, rogues, or monks feel drawn to the shining blades.

NPC members of the shining blades are probably the most devout, single-minded, and driven crusaders in the world. Consumed with passion for the path they have chosen, they have little patience for those who are "blinded" by desire for material goods or personal power.

All that matters, they believe and preach, is the fight against evil; as long as evil remains strong, there is important work to be done.

Adaptation: This prestige class could just as easily be called the shining blade of Apollo, the shining blade of Ra, or any other deity that fights evil and has paladins.

If you change the deity, however, make sure you change the weapon to match.

Moradin's equivalent to this class would be the shining axes, while Corellon Larethian's might be the "shining arrows" (and it'd have a different 9th-level power).

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shining blade of Heironeous, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Base Save Bonus: Will +3.

Skill: Knowledge (religion) 7 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 1st-level divine spells Special: Must have Heironeous as a patron deity.

CLASS SKILLS

The shining blade of Heironeous's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the shining blade of Heironeous prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The shining blades of Heironeous are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all armor, and with shields.

Shock Blade (Su): Twice per day as a standard action, a shining blade of Heironeous can cause a slashing or piercing weapon he is holding to become a shock weapon, dealing an extra 1d6 points of electricity damage on a successful hit.

The weapon is enhanced this way for up to a number of rounds equal to the shining blade's level plus his Charisma modifier (if any), but only so long as the shining blade is holding the weapon.

If he is disarmed or gives the weapon to another character, the magical effect ends.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When an even-numbered level is gained, the shining blade of Heironeous gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class in which he could cast divine spells before he added the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class in which he could cast 1st-level spells before he became a shining blade, he must decide to which class he adds each level of shining blade for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Holy Blade (Su): At 5th level, the shining blade of Heironeous can bestow two magical enhancements upon his weapon.

This supernatural ability replaces the shock blade ability and can be used three times per day.

With each use of this ability, he can choose to make the weapon a shock weapon dealing +1d6 points of damage or a holy weapon dealing +2d6 points of bonus damage against evil creatures.

The weapon is enhanced this way for up to a number of rounds equal to the shining blade's level plus his Charisma modifier (if any), but only so long as the shining blade is holding the weapon.

If he is disarmed or gives the weapon to another character, the magical effect ends.

The two uses of this ability can overlap, so in a given combat a shining blade can spend one standard action to make his blade holy and another to make it a shock weapon.

The weapon cannot be made to be doubly holy or doubly shocking.

Brilliant Blade (Su): At 9th level, a shining blade can bestow three magical enhancements upon his weapon.

This supernatural ability replaces the holy blade ability and can be used six times per day.

With each use of this ability, he can choose to make the weapon a shock weapon dealing an extra 1d6 points of electricity damage, a holy weapon dealing an extra 2d6 points of damage against evil creatures, or a brilliant energy weapon, which sheds light as a torch and ignores nonliving matter (including armor, undead, constructs, and objects).

The weapon is enhanced this way for up to a number of rounds equal to the shining blade's level plus his Charisma modifier (if any), but only so long as the shining blade is holding the weapon.

If he is disarmed or gives the weapon to another character, the magical effect ends.

The three uses of this ability can overlap, so in a given combat a shining blade can spend one standard action to make his blade holy, another to make it a shock weapon, and another to make it a brilliant energy weapon.

The weapon cannot be made to be doubly holy, doubly shocking, or doubly brilliant.

STORMLORD

Most stormlords are clerics, druids, or cleric/sorcerers, although other class combinations, particularly those including fighter or even barbarian, are not unknown.

Wizards have their own means of destroying things, and bards rarely can generate enough force with their spells to be considered worthy by the Destroyer.

Stormlords often live as brigands, indulging their personal desires for wealth, food, luxury items, and wanton behavior as they crave random, spectacular acts of violence.

They often pose as lunatics, in order to spread the word of Talos, and otherwise adopt disguises in order to scout out rich prizes to strike at.

Adaptation: If you do not have the god Talos in your game then this prestige class works well with any god of storms, obviously, but it's also appropriate for nature deities or clerics and druids that venerate nature or weather in the abstract without worshipping a specific deity.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stormlord, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Save Bonus: Fort +4.

Feats: Endurance, Great Fortitude, Weapon Focus (any spear or javelin).

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron: Talos.

Special: The character must have been hit by a bolt of lightning, whether a natural bolt or one created by magic, and survived.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a stormlord (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

The following are class features of the stormlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stormlords gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each stormlord level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, additional favored enemies, and so on).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a stormlord, the player must decide to which class to add each stormlord level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Enhanced Javelins: Any javelin thrown by a stormlord counts as a +1 magic weapon.

This bonus increases at 6th level to +2 and at 10th level to +3.

Resistance to Electricity (Ex): As a stormlord gains levels in this prestige class, he becomes increasingly resistant to electrical energy, gaining resistance to electricity in the amount given on the table.

At 9th level, a stormlord gains immunity to electricity.

Shock Weapon (Su): Any spear or javelin used by a stormlord of 2nd level or higher is treated as a shock weapon (dealing an extra 1d6 points of electricity damage). The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

Storm Walk (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a stormlord (and his mount, if any) can walk or ride through storms (natural or magical) at his regular movement rate, completely unaffected by high winds (including gust of wind), pounding precipitation or waves, objects driven by the wind (which always seem to miss him), great claps of thunder, natural bolts of lightning, or any other natural symptom of Talos's fury.

Thundering Weapon (Su): For a stormlord of 5th level or higher, any spear or javelin he uses is treated as a thundering weapon (see page 225 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

This effect stacks with that of the stormlord's shock weapon ability.

Storm Ride (Sp): At 6th level, a stormlord gains the ability to fly during any storm as if using the fly spell.

Adverse wind conditions do not affect him; for example, even hurricane-force winds cannot knock him down or blow him away when flying.

Shocking Burst Weapon (Su): For a stormlord of 8th level or higher, any spear or javelin he uses is treated as a shocking burst weapon.

The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

This effect stacks with that of the stormlord's thundering weapon ability.

Storm of Elemental Fury (Sp): At 10th level, a stormlord can summon a storm of great magnitude and power.

Once per day, a stormlord can use storm of elemental fury as if he were a 17th-level cleric.

TEMPLE RAIDER OF OLIDAMMARA

Olidammara's worshipers don't have many temples of their own, but some of them spend a great deal of time in the temples of other deities—robbing them of every valuable that's even remotely portable.

The temple raiders are an elite cadre of thieves who worship the Laughing Rogue and specialize in stealing valuables and secret lore from the temples of other deities. Few enterprises are as dangerous as breaking into a temple, so Olidammara grants limited spellcasting abilities to temple raiders in his service.

Temple raiders are always listening for news of great riches or dark secrets at the temples of other deities, and they eagerly chase down rumors of hidden shrines and half-buried temples from bygone ages.

However, they typically have plenty of time between raids for normal adventuring, which they undertake frequently with their deity's blessing.

After all, dungeon adventuring hones the skills that the temple raider needs for special missions—such as liberating the war-booty that the clerics of St. Cuthbert's temple are now bringing home for safekeeping.

Rogues and bards usually have the skills a temple raider needs, whereas only a few rare clerics—even those of Olidammara—can pick a lock or sabotage a trap well enough to meet the temple raiders' standards.

Some rangers also find the life of a temple raider to their liking.

NPC temple raiders usually work in small teams, using stealth, disguise, or magic to infiltrate a rival temple secretly.

Once inside, they plunder the treasury, steal religious relics, and abscond with any secrets the clerics of the rival temple cared to write down.

If all goes well, they slip out unnoticed, but they're not above fighting their way to freedom.

They know that the penalty for stealing from a temple is usually death, so they're quick to draw blades when capture seems imminent.

Clerics who venerate other deities consider temple raiders a menace, so most of the latter pose as rogues, bards, or even clerics of Olidammara instead.

Player characters may encounter NPC temple raiders fleeing from town with their latest victims on their heels, or in the midst of planning a raid.

Adaptation: Any deity of rogues, thieves, or secret knowledge could be a patron for a temple raider.

Other campaigns may feature specific items or treasures that are kept by churches which would tempt a temple raider into stealing.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a temple raider of Olidammara, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Disable Device 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 1 rank, Open Lock 4 ranks, Search 8 ranks.

Special: The character must worship Olidammara and be invited to join the ranks of the temple raiders by at least three current members of that prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The temple raider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4 in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the temple raider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Temple raiders gain proficiency with all simple weapons and with the rapier. In addition, they gain proficiency with light and medium armor.

Spells per Day: A temple raider has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a temple raider spell, a temple raider must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a temple raider with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Temple raider bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the temple raider's Wisdom modifier.

When the temple raider gets 0 spells per day of a given level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level temple raider), he gains only the bonus spells he would be entitled to based on his Wisdom score for that spell level.

The temple raider's spell list appears below.

A temple raider has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just as a cleric.

A temple raider prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though a temple raider cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

A temple raider must spend 1 hour each night in quiet contemplation and supplication to Olidammara to regain his daily allotment of spells.

Time spent resting has no effect on whether he can prepare spells.

Trapfinding (Ex): Like rogues, temple raiders can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20.

They can also use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps.

A temple raider who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with her party) without disarming it.

Trap Sense (Ex): A temple raider has an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps.

These bonuses rise by an additional +1 every three levels above 1st (to +2 at 4th level, +3 at 7th, and +4 at 10th).

Sneak Attack (Ex): At 2nd level, a temple raider gains the ability to sneak attack opponents.

This functions identically to the rogue's sneak attack ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

At 2nd level, the temple raider's extra damage on a successful sneak attack is +1d6, and this rises by +1d6 per three temple raider levels thereafter.

If he already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 3rd level, a temple raider gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

He retains his Dexterity modifier to AC (if any) even if he is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

However, he still loses his Dexterity modifier to AC if immobilized.

If a temple raider already has uncanny dodge from a different class, he automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below) instead.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): A temple raider of 6th level or higher can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies an enemy the ability to sneak attack the temple raider by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has temple raider levels.

If a character already has uncanny dodge from a second class, the levels from the class(es) that grant uncanny dodge stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the temple raider.

For example, only a rogue of 17th level or higher could flank a 7th-level rogue/6th-level temple raider.

Skill Mastery (Ex): At 9th level, a temple raider becomes so certain in the use of certain skills that he can use them reliably even under adverse conditions.

Upon gaining this ability, he selects a number of skills equal to 3 + his Intelligence modifier.

When making a skill check with one of these skills, he may take 10 even if stress and distraction would normally prevent him from doing so.

Luck Domain: At 10th-level, the luck of Olidammara rubs off on a temple raider, granting the character access to the Luck domain.

He may use the domain's granted power and adds the domain's spells to his temple raider spell list (but not any other spell lists he might have).

If he already has the Luck domain, he can use its granted power one additional time per day.

TEMPLE RAIDER SPELL LIST

Temple raiders choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: detect law, detect secret doors, disguise self, invisibility to undead, obscuring mist, protection from law.

2nd Level: augury, cat's grace, darkvision, delay poison, invisibility, lesser restoration, undetectable alignment.

In addition, 10th-level temple raiders add the 1st- through 4th-level spells from the Luck domain to their spell list.

UR-PRIEST

Ur-priests despise gods.

However, a small number of them have learned to tap into divine power and use it for their own needs without praying to or worshipping a deity.

Instead, each day they go into a trance and mentally steal the power that gods normally channel to devout clerics.

Ur-priests are canny and cunning, never stealing too much power from any one deity, but instead metaphysically slip in, draw out the power they need for their spells, and slip out again.

They learn to be resilient toward divine power and creative with the energies that they steal.

The greatest ur-priest commands the level of power of the most powerful cleric, although she does not have the cleric's variety of spellcasting options.

A member of any class can become an ur-priest, even—and in fact, especially—an ex-cleric.

Ur-priests frequently work alone, although they occasionally find partnerships with members of other classes useful.

They do not congregate into anything resembling temples, for they fear that too many of them in one place might draw unwanted divine attention.

And of course they rarely associate with clerics or any other divine spellcasters, whom they see as lackeys and who view them as abominations.

Adaptation: This prestige class is written to describe characters who steal divine power from the gods and use it themselves.

It's also a good choice, however, for ex-clerics of gods who've somehow lost their connection to their deity (because the deity died, disappeared, or faded from existence because he had too few worshipers).

Secret societies of ur-priests could exist for the express purpose of elevating (or reelevating) someone or something to godhood.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an ur-priest, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Save Bonus: Fort +3, Will +3.

Skills: Bluff 6 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Spell Focus (evil).

Special: The character must have no ability to cast divine spells.

If such spellcasting ability was previously possessed (as with an ex-cleric), that ability is forever forsaken.

The character must be trained by another ur-priest.

CLASS SKILLS

The ur-priest's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the ur-priest prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ur-priests are proficient with simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Spells per Day: An ur-priest gains the ability to cast a number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, an ur-priest must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so an ur-priest with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Ur-priest bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + Wisdom modifier.

When Table 2–23 indicates that the ur-priest gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level, such as 0 2nd-level spells at 2nd level, the ur-priest gains only the bonus spells he would be entitled to based on his Wisdom score for that spell level.

The ur-priest spell list is identical to the cleric spell list. An ur-priest has access to any spell on the list and prepares those spells as a cleric, except that he does not pray for spells, he just takes them.

An ur-priest casts spells as a cleric does, except that unlike a cleric, he does not have the ability to spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells, nor does he have domain spells or associated domain granted powers.

He does not have restrictions on spells with alignments. To determine the caster level of an ur-priest, add the character's ur-priest levels to one-half of his levels in other spellcasting classes.

(Any levels gained in the cleric class by an ex-cleric don't count).

Rebuke Undead: Like an evil cleric, an ur-priest of 2nd level or higher can rebuke undead.

He uses his ur-priest level as the cleric level for determining success and damage (see Turn or Rebuke Undead, page 159 of the Player's Handbook).

Divine Spell Resistance (Su): At 4th level, an ur-priest gains spell resistance 15, but only against divine spells and the spell-like abilities of outsiders.

At 8th level, the ur-priest's spell resistance increases to 20.

Siphon Spell Power (Ex): Because they steal whatever power they can, ur-priests learn to manipulate their energy in ways that confound other casters.

An ur-priest of 6th level or higher can temporarily sacrifice two (or more) lower-level spell slots and use those slots to prepare a higher-level spell.

The higher-level spell must be of a level the ur-priest can cast.

Only one exchange of this sort can be made each day.

The levels of the lower-level slots are totaled, then reduced to three-quarters (round down) to determine the level of the extra higher-level spell slot.

For example, an ur-priest who sacrifices a 3rd-level spell and a 5th-level spell can use that spell slot to prepare an additional 6th-level spell ($3 + 5 = 8$, and $8 \times 3/4 = 6$).

Steal Spell-Like Ability (Su): The most powerful ur-priests can use the same techniques that siphon off the gods' spell power to steal the spell-like abilities of another creature.

Once each day, when a creature with spell-like abilities is within 50 feet of a 10th-level ur-priest, the ur-priest can choose one of the spell-like abilities of the creature to steal for himself.

The ur-priest can use the spell-like ability as often as the creature can, or three times per day, whichever is less.

The ur-priest uses the ability as the creature does with regard to caster level and save DCs.

This ability only lasts 24 hours.

The creature with the spell-like ability does not lose the ability when the ur-priest steals it.

If an ur-priest tries to steal a spell-like ability that the creature doesn't have, or tries to steal an ability that is supernatural rather than spell-like, the attempt automatically fails.

For example, if an ur-priest is near a noble salamander, he can steal fireball and use it three times that day or steal dispel magic and use it once that day.

If he is near a pit fiend, he could steal teleport without error (self plus 50 pounds of objects only) and use it three times per day, because the pit fiend can do it at will.

He could even steal the pit fiend's wish ability, but because a pit fiend can only use wish once per year, the ur-priest would be similarly limited.

He could not steal that power again from any creature for one year.

VOID DISCIPLE

Of all the elemental forces that make up the universe, the most powerful and the most difficult to control is the one that lies between and joins the others: void.

Void disciples understand that everything in the world contains all the basic elements, held together by the least tangible essence.

Void is like the silence between notes of music, giving rhythm and shape to the whole.

To those who understand the relationship of void to all other things, and who have the innate ability to personally perceive that relationship, distance and form become inconsequential.

Void disciples begin their training as spellcasters, and they continue to gain spellcasting ability as they rise in level.

They are generally students of a particular school or adherents to particular faith or philosophy.

Like other spellcasters, NPC void disciples play the role of wise elders or keepers of religious teachings and legends.

Those who have mastered the path of void are charged with the task of listening across the world's underlying stream of void for the births of those who have an innate affinity for void, and supervising the training of these individuals as they mature.

Adaptation: The void disciple prestige class represents a wise master if not an outright hermit, so it's a good choice for more solitary characters.

Any group of void disciples is likely to be far-flung—and given their ability to scry on one another, distance poses less of an organizational problem than it otherwise would.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a void disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any neutral.

Skill: Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Heighten Spell, Spell Penetration.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The void disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the void disciple.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Void disciples gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: A void disciple continues her magical training while mastering the powers of void.

At 2nd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th, 10th, 11th, and 12th level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained one level in a previous spellcasting class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class in which she could cast 3rd-level spells before becoming a void disciple, the player must decide to which class to add each void disciple level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Sense Void (Su): The first technique taught to the void disciple is the ability to reach out with the mind and sense the world around, exploring the unseen layer of reality most people rarely experience.

The void disciple's consciousness actually departs her body and extends into the world, allowing her to use her normal senses (sight, hearing, touch, taste, smell) to perceive whatever area, person, or thing she directs her attention to. The void disciple must make a Spellcraft check, with the DC determined by distance, not familiarity.

Distance	DC
Line of sight	5
Up to 1 mile (same village)	10
Up to 10 miles (same province)	15
Up to 100 miles (same clan's territory)	20
Up to 1,000 miles (another clan's territory)	25

A void disciple cannot sense across planar boundaries.

Thus, a void disciple standing on one side of a gate could not extend her senses through it.

With every four levels a void disciple attains beyond 1st, she gains the ability to perceive deeper levels of reality.

At 5th level, a void disciple can use detect magic and detect evil at will.

At 9th level, she can use discern lies and read emotional states, gaining a +10 bonus on Sense Motive checks.

At 13th level, she can detect thoughts at will.

A void disciple can use this ability once per day at 1st level.

With every two levels she attains beyond 1st, she can use the ability an additional time per day (twice at 3rd level, three times at 5th, and so on).

Moment of Clarity (Su): A void disciple of 4th level or higher can grant an ally the temporary ability to perform any skill or feat (with the exception of ancestor feats). The void disciple must use a standard action to touch the target.

The target gains either one feat or a number of ranks in one skill equal to his relevant ability modifier for that skill.

For example, a character with Dexterity 14 could gain 2 ranks in Ride, for a total skill modifier of +4.

The effect lasts for 1 round per level of the void disciple.

The void disciple can use this supernatural ability twice per day at 4th level, plus an additional use for every four additional levels she attains.

Altering the Course (Su): Once per day, a void disciple of 7th level or higher can add a +20 bonus on any single attack roll, skill check, or ability check she makes.

She cannot transfer this bonus to another character by any means.

This supernatural ability requires no action, and lasts only the duration of the single check.

Void Release (Su): Three times per day, a void disciple of 10th level or higher can touch an ally, allowing that character to use his highest ability score modifier in place of any one lower modifier (target's choice) for a number of rounds equal to half the void disciple's level.

For example, a severely wounded fighter could use his high Strength modifier in place of his low Dexterity modifier for a few rounds, increasing his Armor Class, Reflex save bonus, and ranged attack bonus (as well as Dexterity-based skills).

Void Suppression (Su): Once per day, a void disciple of 12th level or higher can make a melee touch attack to force the target to use his lowest ability score modifier in place of any one higher modifier (void disciple's choice) for 5 rounds.

For example, a void disciple could force an ogre to use his low Intelligence modifier in place of his high Strength modifier, severely weakening the brute's physical blows.

Void Strike (Su): Once per day, a 13th-level void disciple can make a melee touch attack to bestow 1d4 negative levels on the target.

The void disciple gains 5 temporary hit points for each negative level she bestows.

If the target has at least as many negative levels as Hit Dice, he dies.

Each negative level gives a creature a -1 competence penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, ability checks, and effective level (for determining the power, duration, DC, and other details of spells or special abilities). Additionally, a spellcaster loses one spell or spell slot from his highest available level.

Negative levels stack.

Assuming the target survives, he regains lost levels after 13 hours pass.

This ability relies on the void disciple's mastery of void, not negative energy, so it cannot be used to benefit undead.

WARPRIEST

Warpriests are fierce, earthy clerics who pray for peace but prepare for war.

Their strong wills, powerful personalities, and devotion to their deities make them fearsome combatants.

Clerics make good warpriests; members of other classes need levels as a cleric before they can qualify as warpriests because of the domain requirements.

Most NPC warpriests spend their time preparing for war. This effort includes personal training for combat, prayer, training with the local ruler's army, and studying military history or tactics.

Warpriests tend to have the more extroverted characteristics associated with their deities.

Occasionally they can be found scouting terrain in peacetime, and some have been known to hide their identities to spy on enemy nations.

They rarely go on adventures, and when they do it's to obtain some artifact or wondrous weapon to increase their prowess.

Adaptation: This prestige class is designed to represent the cleric who leads large numbers of troops into battle. Accordingly, members of the class are likely to be part of a military organization.

It's probable, though not strictly necessary, that the followers are also members of the same faith as the warpriest.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warpriest, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks, Sense Motive 5 ranks.

Feat: Combat Casting.

Spells: Able to cast at least one divine spell from one of the following domains' spell lists: Destruction, Protection, Strength, or War.

A character who can cast at least one spell from a domain counts as having access for this purpose.

Special: Ability to turn or rebuke undead.

CLASS SKILLS

The warpriest class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Knowledge (history) (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the warpriest prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Warpriests gain proficiency with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and shields (including tower shields).

Spells per Day/Spells Known: A warpriest continues advancing in divine spellcasting ability.

When a warpriest gains a new even-numbered level, the character gains new divine spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, more frequent remove disease, and so on).

For example, an 8th-level cleric/2nd-level warpriest gains divine spells per day as if he had risen to 9th level as a cleric.

When he next gains a level as a warpriest, making him an 8th-level cleric/3rd-level warpriest, his number of divine spells per day does not change; but when he improves his warpriest level to 4th, he gains divine spells per day as if he had risen to 10th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a warpriest, the player must decide which class to assign each even-numbered level of warpriest for the purpose of determining divine spells per day and spells known.

Bonus Domain: At 1st level, a warpriest gains the Glory domain (if he turns undead) or the Domination domain (if he rebukes undead).

Rally (Ex): A warpriest who currently is not suffering from a fear effect can use this ability as a standard action.

Allies within 60 feet who are suffering from any fear effect and who can hear the warpriest are allowed another saving throw against the fear effect, with a +1 morale bonus per warpriest level.

Turn or Rebuke Undead (Su): Levels of warpriest stack with any of the character's cleric or paladin levels when turning or rebuking undead.

Inflame (Ex): As a full-round action, the warpriest can inflame the passions of his allies.

All who can hear the warpriest gain a morale bonus on saving throws against any charm or fear effect.

The bonus begins at +2 for a 2nd-level warpriest and increases by +2 at each even-numbered level thereafter (+4 at 4th level, +6 at 6th level, and so on).

This effect lasts for 5 minutes after the speech ends, plus 1 minute per level of the warpriest.

The warpriest also gains the bonus.

Mass Cure Light Wounds (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, a warpriest can use mass cure light wounds once per day as a spell-like ability.

Treat the warpriest's caster level for this effect as equal to his highest divine caster level.

Fear Aura (Su): Once per day starting at 5th level, a warpriest can emanate a fear aura in a 20-foot radius for 1 round per level.

Foes must make a Will save (DC 10 + warpriest's class level + warpriest's Cha modifier) or be affected as if by a fear spell.

Heroes' Feast (Sp): Once per day, a warpriest of 6th level or higher can use heroes' feast as a spell-like ability.

Haste (Sp): At 7th level, a warpriest gains the ability to use haste three times per day as a spell-like ability.

Mass Heal (Sp): Once per day, a warpriest of 9th level or higher can use mass heal as a spell-like ability.

Treat the warpriest's caster level for this effect as equal to his highest divine caster level.

Implacable Foe (Su): At 10th level, a warpriest can channel positive (or negative) energy to keep allies fighting even after suffering mortal wounds.

Activating this ability requires only a move action, but the warpriest must concentrate to maintain it each round after that.

While active, the warpriest emanates an aura with a 100-foot radius.

Allies within the radius may ignore the effects of being reduced to 0 or less hp.

However, any creature reduced to -20 hp dies immediately.

When the effect ends, or if a creature moves more than 100 feet from the warpriest, the normal effects of the damage apply immediately.

If the warpriest normally turns undead, this ability affects living allies.

If the warpriest normally rebukes undead, this ability affects undead allies.

COMPLETE MAGE (3.5)

ABJURANT CHAMPION

"The true warrior disdains no weapon, no tool, that might win him the day on the field of battle.

And what is magic but another weapon hanging at your side, ready to be drawn and wielded when the need arises?"

—Caspian LaMont, Guard-Captain of the Knights Ascendant

While the eldritch knight (DMG 187) strives to balance his mystical and martial prowess, and the spellsworn (Complete Warrior) uses weapons to channel his spells, the abjurant champion focuses his arcane abilities both to augment his personal defense and to hinder enemy spellcasters. Perfectly suited for martial stalwarts who dabble in magic, this class offers characters the ability to improve their combat skills in ways neither soldiers nor spellcasters can.

BECOMING AN ABJURANT CHAMPION

Fighter/wizard and paladin/sorcerer are both common paths taken to become an abjurant champion, but given the requirements, any martial-oriented character can qualify by taking a single level of an arcane spellcasting class, from bard to wu jen.

Single-classed hexblades (Complete Warrior) or duskblades (Player's Handbook II) can qualify but usually lack the abjuration spells that make this combination function best.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feat: Combat Casting.

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast 1st-level arcane spells, including at least one abjuration spell.

Special: Must be proficient with at least one martial weapon.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Ride, Spellcraft, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

As an abjurant champion, your abilities are focused on melding arcane defenses and martial offense into a deadly alloy, a fierce combination of techniques that allow you to overpower or outlast your foes.

You are also skilled in utilizing your abilities separately, casting spells or wielding weapons as other classes do.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an abjurant champion, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Abjurant Armor (Su): Any time you cast an abjuration spell that grants you an armor bonus or shield bonus to AC, you can increase the value of the bonus by your abjurant champion class level.

Abjurant champions rely on mage armor, shield, and similar spells instead of actual armor.

Extended Abjuration (Su): You depend on your abjuration spells to protect you in combat.

Double the duration of abjuration spells you cast, as if you had applied the Extend Spell feat to them (but without any change in level or casting time).

Swift Abjuration (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can cast abjuration spells as a swift action, as if you had applied the Quicken Spell feat to them (but without any change in level).

The maximum level of spell you can quicken in this way is equal to 1/2 your class level (rounded up).

Arcane Boost (Su): Beginning at 4th level, you gain the ability to burn arcane energy to empower your martial abilities.

As a swift action, you can spend one of your uncast spells or spell slots to grant yourself one of the following insight bonuses for 1 round.

- Bonus on attack rolls equal to the spell's level.
- Bonus on weapon damage rolls equal to twice the spell's level.
- Bonus to AC equal to the spell's level.
- Bonus on saving throws equal to the spell's level.
- Resistance to acid, cold, electricity, fire, and sonic equal to 5 × the spell's level.

Martial Arcanist (Ex): At 5th level, you master the art of combining your militant and mystical training.

From this point on, your caster level in a chosen arcane spellcasting class is equal to your base attack bonus (unless it would otherwise be higher).

For example, a 7th-level fighter/1st-level wizard/5th-level abjurant champion has a base attack bonus of +12 (and thus a caster level of 12th).

You can apply this benefit to only one arcane class to which you have added spellcasting levels by your advancement as an abjurant champion.

PLAYING AN ABJURANT CHAMPION

You are a student of warfare and combat in all its forms. You seek to master the skills of the warrior but also to understand arcane magic, attempting to create a perfect fusion of the two seemingly disparate arts.

You are pragmatic and practical, determined to achieve victory.

This doesn't necessarily mean that you fight without honor, merely that you are willing to make use of every tool at your disposal.

You respect those who master either martial or mystical disciplines, but believe that they are short-sighted in their failure to understand that the two are complementary, not opposed.

If you are still a member of the order that trained you, you can count on regular opportunities for combat, adventure, and potentially lucrative assignments.

On the other hand, you'll be giving up some degree of personal freedom, since you are expected to answer when the organization calls.

COMBAT

You are a straightforward combatant in battle.

Although you might well be capable of casting offensive spells and should certainly do so when the situation calls for it, you are best suited to melee.

Use your various abilities to improve your combat effectiveness, casting enhancement spells and taking advantage of your arcane boost as necessary.

Although you don't want to squander your limited-use abilities, don't be afraid to use them either.

After all, if you don't win the day now, you might never make it to the next battle.

ADVANCEMENT

Only a select few organizations teach the skills of the abjurant champion: specific militant orders that have mastered magical techniques.

Although some of these orders are secret, many are not, so you could easily have sought one out.

Likely you already had some interest in augmenting your martial prowess with mystical arts, though it's possible you were simply a soldier looking for an edge on the battlefield. A few of these orders seek out those who show signs of the proper skills, or—if they are associated with a government or religion—recruit strong-willed or intelligent soldiers to serve them in new ways.

You might have been sworn to service, or the order might be far less formal, but you have vowed never to teach your techniques to another without the group's permission.

Abjurant champions are evenly divided between those who still belong to their order and those who have gone their own way.

You might be either, as your own desires (and the needs of the campaign) dictate.

In either case, you spend your free time training or studying, determined to become a master of your varied abilities.

As an abjurant champion, you should focus on skills that provide the greatest advantage in combat.

Physical skills, such as Climb and Jump, allow you to take optimal tactical positions, while Concentration and Spellcraft enable you to effectively make use of your magic and anticipate the magic of others.

Select feats that improve your martial talents, since you aren't likely to cast enough spells to make Spell Focus, Spell Penetration, and the like worthwhile.

Still Spell (and its sudden version in Complete Arcane) allows you to cast while wearing armor, if you so choose.

After reaching the end of the abjurant champion prestige class, you face a difficult decision about how to proceed.

Gaining additional levels in a martial class improves both your combat prowess and your caster level but prevents you from gaining additional spells (and higher spell levels).

On the other hand, advancing as an arcane caster reduces your combat prowess but opens up new spell options.

Consider mingling the two options, alternating between two classes to get the best of both worlds.

After all, with higher-level spells, your arcane boost provides a bigger punch.

RESOURCES

If you still belong to an organization, you can count on its members for support, since it is in the group's best interest to ensure its members remain effective.

The organization might be able to loan you magic items for short-term use, or on occasion sell you items that might not otherwise be available.

If you are a wizard, you might be able to trade spells with your fellow members.

If nothing else, the group provides contacts, allies, and a pipeline to potential employers.

On the other hand, the group leaders expect you to accept assignments they hand down and to come to the aid of your fellows.

If you have left the organization, you can no longer call on its resources for support, but neither does it have any influence over your activities.

ABJURANT CHAMPIONS IN THE WORLD

"Yeah, I thought the same thing.

'A mystic warrior with that kind of skill?

Not a chance!' And look where that attitude got me!"

—Tarvis One-Arm, former guardsman

Given the prevalence of magic and martial skills, it's not surprising that some groups or individuals seek to combine the two in ways never before attempted.

Because their abilities are useful under almost any combat circumstances, these battlecasters can effectively be placed in national armies, mercenary companies, adventuring parties, or anywhere else a strong arm and a swift sword are in demand.

ORGANIZATION

While not all abjurant champions are members of the same order, all of them learned their skills from some sort of organization.

These organizations vary dramatically, however.

The Knights Ascendant, for instance, is a mercenary guild that hires out only to causes the guild leaders believe are just and honorable, whereas the members of the Scions of Kas revere Vecna's fallen lieutenant as a deity in his own right and offer sword and spell to the service of any conqueror or warlord they consider sufficiently strong. Similar organizations might serve a church or a nation or act as the militant arm of an arcanist guild.

Regardless, a member's daily life allows little free time.

Waking hours not spent in direct service to the organization, on patrol, or on the field of battle are filled with martial training, arcane study, or both.

The abjurant champion is not a divine caster, but his abilities require him to be as disciplined as any holy warrior.

NPC REACTIONS

Unless an abjurant champion is blatant in his use of spells, most individuals can't easily distinguish him from a more mundane warrior (other than perhaps by his lack of visible armor) and react accordingly.

Fighter-types and spellcasters who recognize the mystic warrior for what he is, however, react with distrust, uncomfortable with the notion of their own art being combined with the other.

Such people begin one step nearer to hostile than they otherwise might.

ABJURANT CHAMPION LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research abjurant champions to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Mystic warriors?

Soldiers who can swing a sword and cast spells, I think.

DC 15: Oh, yeah, I've heard of the champions.

They learn how to use their magic to fight better on the battlefield.

It's not flashy, but it works.

DC 20: Abjurant champions can cast a wide variety of spells, depending on what they've studied, but they're particularly skilled at casting defensive spells.

They can cast them much faster than normal.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific abjurant champions in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake.

PCs who wish to meet with an abjurant champion need only follow tales and stories of "spell-using warriors" back to the organization that utilizes them.

Although this might send them in the wrong direction a few times, perhaps leading them to a spellsword or eldritch knight, it should eventually take them where they need to go.

ABJURANT CHAMPIONS IN THE GAME

Abjurant champions are relatively easy to integrate into most campaigns.

Even though their particular ability to combine two very different disciplines is unusual, the disciplines themselves are quite commonplace.

They can appear as adventurers or soldiers from a distant land, members of an order with which the PCs have had little direct interaction, or even as people whom the PCs have met before, but of whose special abilities they were unaware.

After all, in the midst of battle, it's difficult to tell that one particular soldier has somehow imbued himself with a small bonus or an enhancement spell.

The abjurant champion should appeal to PCs who enjoy playing martial characters, but who seek a touch of magical ability.

The prestige class allows them to prove particularly effective in combat without overshadowing other warriors in the party.

ADAPTATION

The abjurant champion can be made into a divine prestige class by altering the requirements and spellcasting progression.

Alternatively, with a bit more work, the class can be transformed into a psionic prestige class, with its boost costing a range of psionic power points.

On a campaign level, you might wish to restrict the champion to one particular organization of the setting.

ELDRITCH DISCIPLE

"You have seen the powers my calling has granted me. How can I not devote my entire soul to the divinity in the wild?"

—Leruun Anstrun, Disciple of the Wild

All warlocks harbor at least a grudging respect for the entities responsible for their powers.

They are clearly beings of great mystical might, and thus worthy of regard.

A rare few warlocks go beyond this attitude to actual reverence or worship of the fiendish, fey, or extraplanar powers that have made them far more than mortal.

Such is the life of an eldritch disciple devoted to a deity who granted her the arcane talents of the warlock.

Though her powers might take different forms, she knows that the source is the same.

BECOMING AN ELDRITCH DISCIPLE

Most eldritch disciples begin their careers as clerics, gaining reverence and insight into divine mysteries through that class before beginning to explore eldritch secrets.

Both Corellon Larethian and Lolth commonly encourage their most devoted and charismatic worshipers to become eldritch disciples (typically through powerful agents such as eladrins or demons), but any chaotic or evil deity has room for such an individual.

Occasionally, a warlock who "gets religion" finds his way into this class after dabbling as a cleric, but this instance is less common.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Invocations: Ability to use least invocations.

Special: Ability to turn or rebuke undead, must worship a chaotic or evil deity.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

In addition to improving your existing divine spellcasting and invocation-using abilities, as a divine disciple you gain the ability to channel positive or negative energy for a variety of purposes.

In particular, the eldritch spellweave ability allows you to combine the powers of both classes for a potent effect.

Invocations: At each level, you gain new invocations known and an increase in caster level as if you had also gained a level in an invocation-using class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

(This includes eldritch blast).

If you had more than one invocation-using class before becoming an eldritch disciple, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining caster level and invocations known.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an eldritch disciple, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Gift of the Divine Patron (Su): At 1st level, you gain a sacred gift of power from your divine patron (who is also the source of your cleric spells and, directly or indirectly, your warlock invocations).

Choose one of the following abilities at 1st level, and another ability every three levels thereafter (4th, 7th, and 10th level).

You can spend one of your turn/rebuke undead attempts as a swift action to activate the chosen power.

Corrupting Blast: In place of applying an eldritch essence invocation to your eldritch blast, you can change it into a corrupting blast.

In addition to its normal effect, the blast applies a penalty on the target's next Will save equal to 1/2 your class level (minimum -1).

If the target doesn't attempt a Will save before the end of your next turn, the effect fades.

Damage Reduction: You gain temporary damage reduction (overcome by cold iron) equal to 1/2 your class level (minimum 1).

This damage reduction stacks with the damage reduction granted by the warlock class.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1 round).

Fearful Glare: You can render a single living creature within 30 feet of you shaken for 1 round (Will negates; DC 10 + class level + Cha modifier).

The creature's HD can't exceed your character level.

Fiendish Resistance: You gain resistance to acid and fire equal to 10 + your class level.

This resistance stacks with the energy resistance granted by the warlock class.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1 round).

Your deity must be evil for you to select this gift.

Healing Blast: In place of applying an eldritch essence invocation to your eldritch blast, you can change it into a healing blast.

The blast heals living creatures instead of dealing damage to them (the damage healed is equal to the damage normally dealt).

Against undead, the healing blast deals damage as normal; against constructs or objects, the healing blast has no effect.

Your deity must be non-evil for you to select this gift.

Protective Aura: You surround yourself with a magic circle against evil centered on you.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1 round).

Your deity must be good for you to select this gift.

Strength of Will: You gain a bonus equal to 1/2 your class level (minimum +1) on your next save to resist a mind-affecting spell or ability.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1 round); if you haven't attempted an appropriate save in this time, the effect ends.

Wild Frenzy: You gain a +2 bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls with melee weapons and eldritch blasts, along with temporary hit points equal to twice your class level.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1 round).

Your deity must be chaotic for you to select this gift.

Turn/Rebuke Undead: Your eldritch disciple level stacks with your other class levels for the purpose of determining your ability to turn or rebuke undead.

Eldritch Spellweave (Su): Beginning at 5th level, you can apply an eldritch essence invocation you know (other than greatreach blast or spellblast; see the eldritch theurge class features on page 57) to any divine spell that affects a target or that requires a melee or ranged touch attack.

The spell's level must be at least as high as the level of the eldritch essence (for example, you can apply hellrime blast only to a spell of 4th level or higher).

If the essence requires a saving throw, use the normal save DC for that essence.

If an eldritch essence invocation changes the damage of the spell, it can be applied only to a spell that deals damage (you can't add brimstone blast to dimensional anchor, for example).

Using this ability increases the spell's casting time to 1 full-round action.

A spell that has a normal casting time of 1 full round or longer takes an extra full-round action to cast.

If the spell has more than one target or allows more than one attack, you must choose one target to be affected by the invocation; all other targets take only the normal effect of the spell.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1).

Timeless Body (Ex): Beginning at 10th level, the divine power of your patron infuses you with eternal vigor.

You no longer age (PH 37).

PLAYING AN ELDRITCH DISCIPLE

You are the favored and most devoted disciple of beings far beyond mortal ken.

Some mock or doubt your devotion, claiming that you have sullied the pure worship of the gods with eldritch trickery, but you understand that your connection is more potent than mortals can hope to understand.

You stand ready to serve when called upon, but since divine beings rarely interact with mortals directly, you spend your time in pursuit of your own goals.

Others see this as convenient hypocrisy on your part, but you know that as you advance your own causes and increase your own power, so too do you advance the causes and honor the power of your patron.

As long as you don't actively alienate other followers of your deity, you can fit into any organization that would welcome a cleric or similar character.

If—as is all too common among eldritch disciples—you don't quite fit in with a large-scale church, you might belong to a small or obscure cult dedicated not to your deity but to the otherworldly agents (infernal, fey, or otherwise) responsible for your arcane talents.

Far more likely, you engage in your religious practices on your own, considering them more personal than any shared experience in a church.

COMBAT

Your eldritch blast is still your most potent weapon, but your divine spells offer you a wider variety of options.

Although you have access to powerful offensive spells, consider using your magic to increase your own, or your companions', combat prowess.

Don't neglect your ability to heal yourself or your allies, but don't burn through your spells early in an attempt to do so; make the most efficient use of your spells in battle, saving the healing until combat is over or it becomes absolutely necessary.

Try to avoid standing on the front lines when possible, since you likely lack the defensive prowess of a single-classed cleric.

ADVANCEMENT

The belief of the eldritch disciple is an intensely personal one, and one that you did not acquire through any organized faith or practice.

You work now to increase your divine and eldritch powers both, and to make yourself as potent and skilled a servant of your patron as possible.

You might seek to complete a specific goal laid out for you by your patron deity or other, more powerful emissaries thereof; more likely, you pursue your own objectives, knowing that as you advance you honor the entity who empowers you.

Extra Turning is likely the single most valuable feat for you to select, since it gives you extra uses of your gifts.

Beyond that, focus on feats that benefit both of your arcane classes (such as Spell Penetration).

Choose invocations that don't tread too closely on your divine spellcasting—as long as you have the option of versatility, you might as well use it.

Investing additional ranks in Knowledge (religion) allows you to stay aware of the realities both of your own faith and of those around you, which can help your long-term survival.

Keep both your Wisdom and Charisma as high as you can—the former for your divine spellcasting, the latter for your invocations and divine gifts.

RESOURCES

Eldritch disciples are normally loners in terms of their religious practices—or, at best, are members of very small and often illicit cults.

As such, they have few outside resources on which they can draw, other than those that they or their adventuring companions can acquire on their own.

ELDRITCH DISCIPLES IN THE WORLD

“Worshippers of hellish or unnatural beings, practitioners of ill-understood magic...I find these initiates to be deluded at best, and heretics of the vilest and most dangerous type at worst.”

—Jozan, cleric of Pelor

Eldritch disciples represent the most devoted and most misunderstood servants of divine powers.

They might wander alone or serve as leaders or operatives of underground cults, but they rarely hold positions of great prominence or power—or at least, they rarely do so openly.

As such, this prestige class is well suited to secret cabalists or religious conspirators who function behind the scenes. Members are, to the last one, religious zealots, so even those who do not have sinister agendas or dangerous secrets are likely treated by others as if they do.

The eldritch disciple class allows players and DMs both to delve more thoroughly into the questions of what sorts of beings grant the power available to warlocks, and what sorts of individuals seek that power out.

ORGANIZATION

Although quite a few eldritch disciples join cults or similar organizations devoted to the power or patron whom they serve—and often hold positions of high esteem in those organizations—no orders specifically devoted to the eldritch disciple as a class exist.

NPC REACTIONS

Few people react well to the presence of an eldritch disciple.

The common folk do not understand the powers wielded by warlocks and think of them (sometimes accurately) as servants of darkness.

Add to that an overt fanaticism devoted to secretive entities other than the gods with which most people are familiar, and the fear and suspicion only increase.

People react to an eldritch disciple one step nearer to hostile than they normally would, and clerics and other religious individuals react two steps nearer to hostile unless they have a deity or alignment in common.

ELDRITCH DISCIPLE LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (religion) or the bardic knowledge ability can research eldritch disciples to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: An eldritch disciple is a believer in divine heresies, wielding both arcane and divine abilities.

DC 15: An eldritch disciple gains innate arcane powers as other warlocks do, but she supplements them by actively worshipping the source of those powers.

She channels divine energy as clerics do, but uses this power to mimic the abilities of terrible, otherworldly beings.

DC 20: An eldritch disciple combines the arcane and the divine to make herself resistant to injury, weaken the will of her enemies, or heal critical injuries.

The most powerful eldritch disciples even escape the bonds of aging.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific eldritch disciple in your campaign, the areas where she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

Characters seeking to contact an eldritch disciple have little recourse other than to attempt to locate a cult or cabal that worships the same power as the initiate they seek and hope the organization knows of her location...and is willing to share the information.

ELDRITCH DISCIPLES IN THE GAME

An eldritch disciple can first appear as a lone servitor of strange powers, or as the figure behind a mysterious cult. Because these characters often interact with powers outside traditional divinities, they are a useful way of introducing those concepts.

For instance, perhaps the PCs first learn of the existence of the faerie courts when researching the strange abilities of a new foe.

The eldritch disciple class is appropriate for players who enjoy portraying or exploring beliefs outside the mainstream of the campaign setting, players who would like to add a bit of variety to the warlock's relatively limited arsenal, or players who want to add some combat "punch" to a divine caster.

ADAPTATION

The most obvious alteration to the eldritch disciple is to drop the turn/rebuke undead requirement and provide a similar ability (usable only to activate gifts) at 1st level. While this removes some of the class's flavor, it does open the eldritch disciple to a wider range of druid/warlock or favored soul/warlock multiclass combinations.

Alternatively, you might go to another extreme in a campaign, allowing only worshipers of one particular entity or group to become eldritch disciples.

ELDRITCH THEURGE

"Magic resides in my mind, my heart, my blood, and my soul. How can anyone as limited as you possibly stand against me?"

—Oslavan Kaligos, the Night-Bearer

Most of those who find themselves blessed (or cursed) with magic burning in their fiendish blood become warlocks, but a rare few study formal magic to better understand and control their powers.

The result is the eldritch theurge, a master of both spells and invocations, a mage with the terrifying combination of potent spells and a reserve of abilities he can't possibly exhaust.

BECOMING AN ELDRITCH THEURGE

All eldritch theurges have levels in the warlock class, since this is the only currently known means to meet two of the requirements.

Most eldritch theurges take levels in wizard since this allows fastest access to the class, but a significant number become sorcerers, taking advantage of their high Charisma. A few meet the requirements as bards, though this is exceptionally rare.

Other combinations with arcane casting classes are possible, such as the wu jen (Complete Arcane) or the dread necromancer (Heroes of Horror), but are at least as rare as the bard.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Invocations: Ability to use least invocations.

Special: Eldritch blast +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance as an eldritch theurge, your skill with both arcane spells and invocations increases until you're able to combine them into a single potent energy.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class (but not an invocation-using class) to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an eldritch theurge, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Invocations: At each level, you gain new invocations known and an increase in caster level as if you had also gained a level in an invocation-using class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one invocation-using class before becoming an eldritch theurge, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining caster level and invocations known.

Damage Reduction (Su): Fortified by the supernatural power flowing through your body, you become resistant to physical attacks.

You gain damage reduction 1/cold iron at 1st level; this stacks with damage reduction gained from other sources.

Your damage reduction improves to 2/cold iron at 4th level, to 3/cold iron at 7th level, and to 4/cold iron at 10th level.

Fiendish Resilience (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you know the trick of fiendish resilience.

Once per day, as a free action, you can enter an elevated physical state that lasts for 2 minutes.

While in this state, you gain fast healing 1.

At 9th level, your fiendish resilience improves; while in your fiendish resilience state, you gain fast healing 2 instead.

This ability stacks with fiendish resilience granted by any other source.

Spellblast (Sp): This invocation (Lesser; 4th; Eldritch Essence), learned at 3rd level, allows you to place an arcane spell that affects an area upon your eldritch blast.

If the eldritch blast hits its target, the spell's area is centered on any corner of the target's space, even if the spell could normally be centered only on the caster.

If the eldritch blast misses its target, the spell is lost with no effect.

It takes a full-round action to cast the spell and fire the eldritch blast.

Only an area spell with a casting time no greater than 1 standard action can be placed upon your eldritch blast.

Only the first target of your eldritch blast is affected by the spell (for example, an eldritch chain spellblast centers the spell on the initial target, not on any of the secondary targets).

If your eldritch blast doesn't specify a target, you can't apply this invocation to the blast.

Treat spellblast as a spell whose level is equal to the area spell placed upon the eldritch blast (minimum 4th level).

Eldritch Spellweave (Su): Beginning at 5th level, you can apply an eldritch essence invocation you know (other than greatreach blast or spellblast) to any arcane spell that affects a target or that requires a melee or ranged touch attack.

The spell's level must be at least as high as the level of the eldritch essence (for example, you can apply hellrime blast only to a spell of 4th level or higher).

If the essence requires a saving throw, use the normal save DC for that essence.

If an eldritch essence invocation changes the damage of the spell, it can be applied only to a spell that deals damage (you can't add brimstone blast to charm monster).

Using this ability increases the spell's casting time to 1 full-round action.

A spell that has a normal casting time of 1 full round or longer takes an extra full-round action to cast.

If the spell has more than one target or allows more than one attack, you choose one target to be affected by the invocation; all other targets take only the normal effect of the spell.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1).

Greatreach Blast (Sp): This invocation (Greater; 5th; Eldritch Essence) allows you to place an arcane spell with a range of touch upon your eldritch blast.

If the eldritch blast hits its target, the spell takes effect on that target as if you had touched it.

If the eldritch blast misses its target, the spell is lost with no effect.

It takes a full-round action to cast the spell and fire the eldritch blast.

Only a touch spell with a casting time no greater than 1 standard action can be placed upon your eldritch blast.

Only the first target of your eldritch blast is affected by the spell (for example, an eldritch greatreach chain delivers the touch spell on the initial target, not on any of the secondary targets).

Treat greatreach blast as a spell whose level is equal to the touch spell placed upon the eldritch blast (minimum 5th level).

PLAYING AN ELDRITCH THEURGE

You are a master of multiple forms of magic, drawn from your inhuman heritage, your sheer determination, and your intellectual study—or perhaps it's a product of the blood of dragons that might be part of your ancestry.

Your combination of innate and learned abilities makes you a superior specimen.

You might feel a responsibility because of this and work to defend others, or you might be arrogant and ambitious, determined to take your "rightful place" among the weaker peoples of the world.

In either case, you are unquestionably proud of what you are and what you have accomplished; humility is a rare feature indeed among eldritch theurges.

COMBAT

Your options in combat are more varied than those of other spellcasters.

Use your eldritch blast as a default weapon, picking off foes throughout the field until you can maneuver yourself into a position where your other, possibly more potent spells (or blast/spell combos) are effective.

Because your combination of spells and invocations likely means that you can target both individuals and crowds, you can function equally well among a party of melee combatants, archers, or other spellcasters.

Perhaps the only hard and fast rule is that you rarely, if ever, want to close to melee range.

Only when menaced by blade or claw do your abilities potentially fail you, placing you in serious danger.

Stay back and play to your strengths.

ADVANCEMENT

You might have been a warlock first, one who pursued the arcane arts as a means of better understanding magic in general, and your own powers in particular.

Alternatively, you might have been a spellcaster who abruptly discovered your innate abilities.

Whatever the case, you ultimately reached the only conclusion available to you: that there must be some means of combining these two forces that flow through your body and soul.

You set out on a path of study and self-discovery and haven't looked back.

You constantly work to increase your understanding of both forms of magic.

Adventuring is one way to do that, for few other careers offer the same opportunities to practice your arts, but you can also hire yourself out as a spellcaster or study writings and philosophy on magic, faith, and the planes.

You have few places you can call home and fewer places you truly belong, but that's acceptable.

You have your powers, far beyond those of other arcanists, and if lucky you have a few close friends you can trust as well.

Focus on skills that increase your knowledge and abilities in all types of magic, particularly Knowledge and Spellcraft. Your feat selection might be among the hardest choices you have to make; try to select feats that benefit both types of casting, or at least attempt to advance both relatively equally.

The majority of metamagic feats, for example, are likely poor choices for you; on the other hand, Spell Penetration and sudden metamagic feats (Complete Arcane) are good options.

RESOURCES

Although a very few organizations include eldritch theurges, the vast majority of these dual casters are utterly on their own.

You won't find many communities willing to take you in due to your unusual ancestry, and arcanist guilds do not trust you for the same reason.

You seek to combine your unique magic with theirs, and this both angers and frightens them.

You might find allies among cadres of warlocks, if such groups exist in your region, but even they might look askance at your attempts to combine disparate magic talents.

For the most part, you have to get by with whatever you can earn on your own.

ELDRITCH THEURGES IN THE WORLD

"These arcane dilettantes not only refuse to fight their fiendish natures, they augment that nature with other magic. Surely, they are the worst kind of villains"

—Confessor Ruprecht Varsuun, vindicator of the Immaculate Cabal

Eldritch theurges are few in number and scattered across the world.

Though rare, they provide a means for PC and NPCs alike to study the borders between different types of magic, and they serve to answer some basic questions.

Might not a warlock seek to augment his power through traditional spellcasting means?

Would not wizards seek to better understand the nature of the warlock's truly spontaneous magic?

The eldritch theurge answers those questions—or at least proves that some are trying to answer them—without greatly tipping the balance of power in a campaign setting.

ORGANIZATION

Eldritch theurges have no organizations to call their own. Some broad-minded (or power-hungry) arcanist guilds, cults, and orders permit them membership, but these groups are few and far between, and eldritch theurges never account for more than a tiny minority of their membership.

Their numbers are simply too low to form their own groups, and even if they tried, other guilds, as well as churches, would see to it they didn't last long.

NPC REACTIONS

Many people understand magic only poorly at best, and all have reason to fear those with fiendish or fey blood.

In most regions, an eldritch theurge can expect the common folk to be unfriendly if they learn who—and what—he is.

Arcanist groups and churches are downright hostile, at least until the eldritch theurge proves himself an ally.

Other warlocks normally react indifferently.

They aren't necessarily aggressive, but neither are they friendly, since they, too, fail to fully understand the eldritch theurge's ways and desires.

ELDRITCH THEURGE LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research eldritch theurges to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: A fancy name for bizarre witches who combine arcane magic with hell-spawned tricks.

DC 15: An eldritch theurge works both arcane and innate magic.

DC 20: Eldritch theurges can cast spells straight through those strange mystic bolts they throw.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific eldritch theurge in your campaign, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Finding an eldritch theurge is a quest unto itself.

Rare as they are, PCs must investigate rumors of warlocks or casters with strange powers, or tales of witches descended from fiends or faerie kings who cast a wide variety of spells.

How successful the PCs are, and where they finally find their quarry, depends on the success of their methods and the needs of the campaign.

ELDRITCH THEURGES IN THE GAME

The DM can introduce an eldritch theurge wherever and whenever seem the most appropriate.

A previously encountered wizard, sorcerer, or warlock might instead turn out to be a member of this rare class. Alternatively, the PCs might never have met an eldritch theurge, but one day hear legends of a mysterious caster who shows abilities beyond the ken of any “normal” character class.

This prestige class should appeal to players who enjoy portraying a mysterious, frightening, and enigmatic caster, warlock players who'd like to gain a little extra punch or variety, or arcanist players who want to branch out in new directions or acquire “backup” magic that never runs out.

ADAPTATION

Just as the warlock can come from something other than a fiendish origin, so too can the eldritch theurge.

Perhaps warlocks gain their powers from draconic ancestors and simply manifest differently from sorcerers. In such cases, the eldritch theurge might be limited to warlock/sorcerer combinations, allowing the character to master all aspects of his heritage.

Alternatively, the blood running through the warlock might be fey, and his desire to learn wizardly magic is an extension of the curiosity innate to many of those creatures; the class for this character might focus more on tweaking prepared spells or applying metamagic effects to his eldritch blast.

ENLIGHTENED SPIRIT

“People change.”

—Torgar Coalhair, enlightened spirit

Although the fiendish origins of the warlock’s power can’t be denied, he need not fully embrace the darkness.

Some warlocks start down the fiendish path, then repent and turn toward the light.

Such rare individuals are called enlightened spirits.

BECOMING AN ENLIGHTENED SPIRIT

Only good-aligned warlocks can take this prestige class.

Enlightened spirits lose the flexibility to choose invocations but instead gain specific, powerful invocations to use in the fight against evil.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks.

Special: Eldritch blast 3d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Disguise, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

You acquire celestial abilities as advance in this prestige class, gradually leaving behind your fiendish legacy as you rise to a higher spiritual state.

Your new abilities make you an able combatant and aid your allies as well.

Aura of Courage (Su): You are immune to fear, and each ally within 10 feet of you gains a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects (PH 44).

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds you whenever you fight or get angry.

Any hostile creature within a 5-foot radius of you takes a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until it successfully hits you.

A creature that has resisted or broken the effect can’t be affected again by your aura for 24 hours.

Spirit Blast (Sp): This invocation (Lesser; 4th; Eldritch Essence) allows you to change your eldritch blast into a spirit blast.

The blast deals an extra 1 point of damage per die to undead.

Your spirit blast also affects incorporeal creatures without the normal miss chance.

Eldritch Blast (Sp): At 2nd level and every even-numbered level thereafter, the damage of your eldritch blast improves by 1d6 points.

Spirit Armor (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you gain a +1 sacred bonus to Armor Class.

The bonus improves to +2 at 6th level and +3 at 10th level.

Celestial Flight (Sp): At 3rd level, you gain the celestial flight invocation (Lesser; 3rd).

The powers of light bear you aloft as you sprout shimmering spirit wings.

You can fly at a speed equal to your land speed with good maneuverability for 24 hours.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 4th level, you can speak any language.

This ability works as the tongues spell does, except that it is continuously active.

You can suppress or resume the effect as a free action.

Shape Invocation (Sp): At 5th level, you learn any one lesser, or greater blast shape invocation.

Energy Resistance 5 (Su): At 5th level, you gain resistance 5 to any two of the following energy types: acid, cold, electricity, and fire.

Holy Blast (Sp): At 7th level, you gain an invocation (Greater; 6th; Eldritch Essence) that allows you to change your eldritch blast into a holy blast.

The blast deals an extra 1 point of damage per die to evil outsiders.

The blast also affects any evil outsider as if you had cast a dimensional anchor spell on it.

Transform Magic (Sp): Gained at 9th level, this invocation (Greater; 6th) allows you to deliver a targeted greater dispel magic with your touch.

You or any ally within 30 feet of you can heal 5 points of damage for each spell level dispelled by this touch (the spell level is determined by its caster's class).

For example, if you successfully dispel a wall of ice, you or an ally can heal up to 20 points of damage.

You can't transform your own invocations.

Death Ward (Su): At 10th level, you become immune to death spells, magical death effects, energy drain, and negative energy effects as the death ward spell.

EX-ENLIGHTENED SPIRITS

An enlightened spirit who becomes non-good loses all class features granted by this prestige class and can't gain any further levels of enlightened spirit.

You regain your abilities and advancement potential if you once again become good and atone for your violations (see atonement, PH 201).

PLAYING AN ENLIGHTENED SPIRIT

You're living proof that anyone can change, regardless of where he begins.

You began as an arcane magician with a fiendish heritage, but you had a change of heart and chose the path of good over evil.

Your new life is rewarding, but you still walk a difficult path.

Good people sometimes have trouble trusting you if they realize what you once were, and evil folk consider you a traitor to your former ideals.

Temptation to return to your old ways is everywhere, and will be until you die.

But you have come this far, and you know you can overcome your past.

COMBAT

Your eldritch blast is your best weapon in combat, so use it as much as you can.

Your invocations can also prove useful for confounding enemies and altering the effects of your blasts.

You need to stay reasonably close to the action so that your auras can scare away enemies and aid allies.

Still, you're not as tough as a fighter or even a cleric, so you can stay in the front line for only a short time.

You should be sure that you have a good position to which you can retreat and fire your eldritch blasts while your comrades cover you.

ADVANCEMENT

You were born with a fiendish legacy that gave you eldritch powers, which you exploited for personal gain.

As you became more powerful, you wholeheartedly embraced your heritage further, using your warlock's powers as you saw fit.

But at some point, you realized the error of your ways.

You saw the harm your actions caused, and you decided to abandon your fiendish legacy and turn over a new leaf.

Since then, you have used your powers to help others and to fight for the cause of good.

Your change of heart has paid off in new powers that help you stay on the path of righteousness.

No special organization exists to support you, since so few other warlocks ever see the light.

But you stick close to good churches and avoid evil companions.

Keep your Charisma score high to ensure that you can use your special abilities to best effect.

Sense Motive is a good skill to keep maximized, as is Knowledge (the planes), since you have your sights fixed on a celestial goal.

You can still benefit from all the feats that improve your eldritch blast, plus any combat-oriented feats focusing on weapons that you can use.

RESOURCES

Since you have no organization of like-minded individuals to support you, you must depend on those to whom you provide aid for return favors.

Good-aligned churches are your best resources—you can ask them for healing, references, aid against your detractors, and even the loan of the occasional magic item. Paladins can also be helpful, especially for convincing others of your innate goodness.

Finally, communities to which you have rendered aid can provide you with food and shelter, aid in defense, and a variety of services.

ENLIGHTENED SPIRITS IN THE WORLD

"He says he's seen the light.

But once a hellspawn, always a hellspawn, I say."

—Arilus Gendor, innkeeper

An enlightened spirit can add plenty of interest to a campaign focused on arcane magic, especially if your PCs are already familiar with warlocks.

The concept that a warlock can transcend his innate fiendish nature and gain celestial powers should make characters a bit more cautious about painting every warlock with the same brush.

The classic misdirection in which the PCs are sent after a known warlock and discover instead a force for the cause of good is an excellent turnabout and one that should make them cautious about being overly trusting of employers.

Alternatively, an enlightened spirit can be presented as an ally for one of the PCs' missions, or someone who needs help from the PCs to prove his own beneficent nature.

ORGANIZATION

Enlightened spirits have no organization of their own, primarily because few warlocks choose to pursue the path of light.

Thus, they walk their paths alone, except for the friends and allies they make along the way.

However, an enlightened spirit might attach himself for a time to a temple or an organization of good-aligned individuals.

Such an association is usually quite productive, since the organization gains the incredible powers of the enlightened spirit, and he gains the support and public backing of an organization of like-minded individuals. An enlightened spirit spends much of his time in the study of other planes, in pursuit of his celestial goal.

He also trains with weapons and practices combat tactics that he can use to stay close enough to his allies to protect them while still avoiding as much damage as possible.

The church or other organization with which an enlightened spirit is affiliated might send him on missions to aid towns under siege, assist those battling the forces of darkness, or retrieve sacred items that have been lost for centuries.

As he progresses in the class, he might go out on his own in search of causes worthy of his aid.

He spends much of this period adventuring in the company of good-aligned characters.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people have little knowledge of the differences between arcane casters and treat them all with either indifference or hostility, depending on their past experiences.

Those who know what warlocks are and have a chance to see an enlightened spirit use his eldritch blast treat him as they would a warlock—with an unfriendly or even hostile attitude if they are good, or with a friendly or helpful attitude if they are evil.

The attitude of an evil person shifts rapidly to unfriendly or hostile as soon as the enlightened spirit's true nature is revealed, but a good-aligned person takes longer to accept the enlightened spirit's good heart.

Some proof—how much depends on the person—is usually required, and even then the attitude shifts only one step for each piece of evidence.

ENLIGHTENED SPIRIT LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research enlightened spirits to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some spellcasters who gain their powers from fiendish sources manage to turn to the light.

DC 15: An enlightened spirit is a warlock who has turned his back on his fiendish legacy and embraced the path of good.

DC 20: An enlightened spirit uses his eldritch blast to combat evil.

He can even grow wings!

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific enlightened spirit in your campaign, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

A PC looking for an enlightened spirit can attempt a DC 30 Gather Information check in any area where warlocks are active, or at large, good-aligned churches, to gain contact information.

Even so, it might be necessary to travel a fair distance to actually find an enlightened spirit, because they are so rare.

ENLIGHTENED SPIRITS IN THE GAME

Enlightened spirits are uncommon enough that they can be introduced at any time as though they had always existed. Alternatively, the enlightened spirit you introduce might very well be the first your campaign world has seen.

An enlightened spirit is likely to be an ally to a PC party, but he could also be an adversary if the PCs tend toward evil or are engaged in a mission on behalf of evil forces—knowingly or not.

An enlightened spirit is a great choice for players who are intrigued by the warlock but unwilling to embrace his fiendish legacy.

Because these characters are likely to draw suspicion from both good and evil NPCs, they can generate a number of roleplaying opportunities.

However, be sure the enlightened spirit character has some support in the game, since constantly justifying himself can get old fast.

Also, make sure you provide opportunities for the PC enlightened spirit to vanquish evil so that he can earn the trust of other important NPCs—and possibly his own party, too.

ADAPTATION

Although an enlightened spirit is designed as a good version of a warlock, it could also be used in the opposite way—as a prestige class for good characters who fall into evil ways.

Simply reverse the alignment-specific features of the entry requirements and class features and recast the character according to the blackguard model.

HOLY SCOURGE

“As magic is responsible for so many of the world’s greatest evils, so too is magic the greatest tool against evil.”

—Confessor Ruprecht Varsuun, vindicator of the Immaculate Cabal

The holy scourge is a multitasking soldier in the endless war against evil, an arcane caster who instills within his magic the power to cleanse the world of wickedness and depravity.

Although he lacks actual divine spellcasting power, he makes up for this shortfall by infusing his evocations with holy power and developing abilities that help him smite evil wherever it appears.

BECOMING A HOLY SCOURGE

Almost any arcane spellcaster can become a holy scourge, but the class is most popular among sorcerers and warmages (Complete Arcane).

Wizards, particularly those who specialize in evocation or conjuration, also find much to like in this prestige class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks.

Spellcasting: Able to cast three evocation spells, able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a holy scourge, your abilities are geared toward scouring evil from the world, primarily through the use of evocation magic.

Although you are certainly capable of casting other spells, offensive magic is where your strength truly lies.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a holy scourge, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Code of Conduct: You must devote yourself to the destruction of evil, particularly those who use evil magic and innately evil creatures.

You must not resort to evil methods to achieve these goals. You might briefly ignore a lesser evil for the sake of defeating a greater one, but otherwise you must make every reasonable effort to obliterate evil wherever you find it.

Should you ever violate this code or step outside the boundaries of what is considered acceptable good-aligned behavior, you lose your holy scourge class features.

Dedicated Spellcaster (Ex): You gain a +1 bonus to your caster level when casting good spells.

You may not cast evil spells.

Righteous Evocation (Su): Your evocation spells are infused with a small amount of good-aligned divine energy.

Against evil creatures, your evocation spells deal an extra 1 point of damage per spell level.

This extra damage applies to all creatures damaged by the spell.

This extra damage consists of pure divine energy and is not subject to being reduced by resistance or immunity.

At 5th level, this extra damage increases to 2 points per spell level.

Arcane Smite (Su): At 2nd level, you can smite evil once per day.

This ability functions like the paladin class feature (PH 44), except that you can apply the effect only to an arcane spell that requires a melee or ranged attack roll (such as shocking grasp or scorching ray).

In addition to the bonus on the spell’s attack rolls and damage rolls, this adds the good descriptor to the spell.

At 4th level, you can use this class feature twice per day.

Devoted Arcanist (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you can add your class level on caster level checks made to overcome the spell resistance of evil creatures with your arcane spells.

EX-HOLY SCOURGES

If you violate the code of conduct or step outside the bounds of the class’s acceptable alignments, you lose all spells and class features.

You may not progress any further in levels as a holy scourge.

You retain your abilities and advancement potential if you atone for your violations (see atonement, PH 201), as appropriate.

PLAYING A HOLY SCOURGE

You are a fanatical believer in your cause, with the power to back up your convictions.

Thankfully for many others, that cause is an agreeable one: the destruction of evil.

You believe that arcane magic is the greatest of weapons, and you intend not to stop until you have gained enough power to scourge the world around you clean of wickedness.

Many fear you, failing to understand your purpose, but you never waver in your devotion.

The largest and primary organization of holy scourges, the Immaculate Cabal of the Church of Heironeous, is said to have invented the techniques of the holy scourge.

Various orders now exist, however, devoted to Pelor, St. Cuthbert, and other deities.

These orders serve as roving enforcers and soldiers of their church, striving to rid the world of evil—starting with the enemies of their own faith.

To at least some extent, your organization shapes your adventuring career, since it likely influences your choice of enemies (or at least the order in which you prioritize your foes) and might go so far as to assign you specific quests.

COMBAT

It practically goes without saying that your spells—particularly of the evocation school—are by far your greatest assets.

Everything you are, every ability you gain as a holy scourge, improves their functionality against the evils of the world.

Use your spells tactically, and don't be afraid to position yourself for optimum effect.

You are slightly more durable than most arcane casters, so you have the option of strategic positioning that other casters might not.

ADVANCEMENT

You were most likely a typical arcane spellcaster before you “saw the light” and took up the righteous mantle of the holy scourge.

Whether you've devoted yourself to a particular faith or are just committed to turning back darkness, you're now engaged in the eternal fight against evil in all its forms.

You might go where the church directs, or you might be trusted to find your own adventure as long as it serves the cause.

In either case, your life is one of great conflict and hardship—but also great accomplishment.

Put as many skill points as you can spare into your various Knowledge skills, the better to understand the terrible monsters you must face.

Focus on feats that boost your prodigious offensive arcane talents, including Spell Focus (evocation), Piercing Evocation*, and Energy Gestalt*.

Feats that increase your survivability, such as Battle Caster (Complete Arcane) and Great Fortitude, also represent reasonable choices.

Obviously, your spell selection should center on evocation spells, but you shouldn't ignore the many excellent options in abjuration and conjuration.

Don't let your focus on offense neglect your own (or your allies') protection.

Seeding the battlefield with a few summoned allies can give you valuable rounds of spellcasting time before the enemy closes.

RESOURCES

Your church supports your efforts in whatever way it can.

While you should not expect substantial funds or many magic items, it provides mundane equipment and healing where necessary and might make efforts to provide you with magic items at a reduced—or at least a fair—price.

The church also serves as a last-ditch sanctuary, a place to recuperate before you set out once more.

HOLY SCOURGES IN THE WORLD

“Bah!

Face one 'holier than thou' spellcaster, you've faced them all!
This so-called scourge doesn't worry me at—”

—Count Lucius Darvold, vampire lord, twice deceased

The holy scourge fits into any setting in which churches of light seek to banish the dark and rid the world of evil monsters.

Although some such organizations disdain arcane magic as less pure than that granted by the gods, or even as witchcraft, many have come to realize the tactical advantage such magic offers the cause.

Because their orders and goals usually prohibit holy scourges from holding a great deal of power within the church, PCs should either encounter them “in the field” or not at all, making it very easy to explain their presence, or absence, almost anywhere.

ORGANIZATION

Holy scourges are members of specific orders, the subsets of various churches.

The largest and most well-known is the Immaculate Cabal, an order within the ranks of the Church of Heironeous.

The followers of the god of valor were not the first to embrace arcanists within their ranks, but they were the first to develop the talents now employed by the holy scourge.

Although differences exist between the various orders and churches, the Immaculate Cabal serves as a solid example.

The Immaculate Cabal is organized like a combination of academic circle and military order.

Its members are considered soldiers for the cause, but advancement through the ranks by service in the field is limited.

To become a true leader of the cabal—called a doyen—a holy scourge must demonstrate an advanced understanding of religious and arcane principles.

Most doyens are clerics with only a level or two of holy scourge; those more focused on the prestige class fulfill their divine duty by questing to destroy evil.

(A few retired scourges also serve as doyens, but few scourges survive long enough to retire and learn what they need learn to fulfill the role).

Through this dichotomy, the church manages to maintain a skilled and competent oversight of the Immaculate Cabal, without wasting the capabilities of its members.

The majority of the cabal's members are divided into three basic ranks: seekers (newly recruited scourges who have yet to prove themselves), requiters (those who have proven their abilities and convictions), and vindicators (the best of the best, the most powerful and loyal scourges).

Members also hold a rank in the church proper, and might be referred to as father, reverend, confessor, or whatever title is appropriate.

Members of the Immaculate Cabal are not permitted to rise to the rank of bishop or higher, since it is believed that holding a position of true authority within the church would conflict with the duties and requirements of the scourge's mission.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people consider the holy scourge a champion of light and a protector of the weak.

Good-aligned individuals begin one step nearer to helpful than normal while dealing with a holy scourge, while evil-aligned individuals begin one step closer to hostile.

In some circumstances, however, the zealotry of a holy scourge might cause others to fear him.

If a particular holy scourge is known for his merciless behavior, his single-minded devotion to the cause, or even a willingness to sacrifice for “the greater good”, all reactions to him begin one step nearer to hostile.

HOLY SCOURGE LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (religion) or the bardic knowledge ability can research holy scourges to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Holy scourges?

Aren't they church soldiers who cast arcane spells?

DC 15: Saw one of those in action once.

He was throwing a lot of flashy spells.

I know my arcane magic, but this guy was packing something special in those lightning bolts.

DC 20: They're more than just casters.

They can smite their foes like a paladin, pierce the defenses of evil foes, and empower their most deadly spells to hurt evil creatures even worse than others.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific holy scourges in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake. PCs should have little trouble finding a holy scourge if they need to.

They merely travel to a church of Heironeous or one of the other priesthoods that utilizes them.

Even if none are assigned locally, the priests can tell the PCs where to look.

HOLY SCOURGES IN THE GAME

The holy scourge's mission—to use arcane magic to destroy evil—is tailor-made for most campaigns.

Holy scourges participate in adventures, explore ancient strongholds of depravity, seek to rid governments of corruption; in short, they have a place in the vast majority of D&D adventure plots.

As long as your setting involves even a single good deity of a somewhat martial or mystical bent, the holy scourge is easy to integrate.

This prestige class should appeal to players who enjoy arcane casters but wish for a bit more flavor, or those who simply have reason to devote themselves to the eradication of evil.

ADAPTATION

The holy scourge need not be linked to the Church of Heironeous.

You might attach to a deity of your own setting (in the EBERRON setting, for instance, they are very likely servants of the Silver Flame), or disconnect them from the hierarchy entirely, portraying them as independent operatives.

You might decide that the divine component of the class doesn't come from worship at all, but simply a branch of mystical study that allows the scourge to tap into positive energy.

With relatively little work, you could replace the arcane requirements of the class with a psionic equivalent, creating a wilder/holy scourge.

LYRIC THAUMATURGE

“Music is life...and death.”

—Lalage Amatifa, lyric thaumaturge

The lyric thaumaturge understands better than most how the natural harmonics of the universe pervade all things. Music might be its most pleasing form, but magical energy has harmonics of its own.

The lyric thaumaturge has learned to make her magic and her music resonate into harmonic chords that enhance the effects of both.

BECOMING A LYRIC THAUMATURGE

Bards are specialists in combining magic and music into a symphony of power.

However, levels in other arcane spellcasting classes can enhance the lyric thaumaturge's spell selection immensely. Though bard/wizard and bard/sorcerer are the most likely combinations, a bard/warmage can make good use of her lyric thaumaturge abilities on the battlefield, and a bard/warlock can add eldritch blasts to her combat repertoire.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Perform (any) 9 ranks, Spellcraft 6 ranks.

Feat: Melodic Casting*.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Special: Bardic music 5/day.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Perform, Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

As a lyric thaumaturge, you focus on spells and magical effects that harmonize with your bardic music ability. You have a wider array of spells available than bards do, and your bardic music makes your spellcasting more potent.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known) as if you had also gained a level in the bard class.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit the bard class gives you.

Bardic Music: You gain one extra daily use of your bardic music ability per lyric thaumaturge level.

You can use bardic music from this class to create any effect you know as a bard.

Bonus Spell: Your knowledge of magic grants you the ability to cast more spells than the average bard.

At 1st level, you gain one additional 1st-level and 2nd-level bard spell slot.

At 4th level, you gain one additional 3rd-level and 4th-level bard spell slot.

At 7th level, you gain one additional 5th-level spell slot.

At 10th level, you gain one additional 6th-level spell slot.

If you aren't currently capable of casting the noted level of spell, you gain the extra spell slot when that spell level becomes available to you.

Captivating Melody: At 2nd level, you gain Captivating Melody* as a bonus feat.

Spell Secret: Thanks to your facility for blending music and magic, you gain additional spells known for each spell level as you gain levels.

These spells must be drawn from the sorcerer/wizard list and are thereafter treated as part of your class spell list.

At 3rd level, you gain one additional 1st- and one 2nd-level spell known.

At 6th level, you gain one additional 3rd- and one 4th-level spell known.

At 9th level, you gain one additional 5th- and one 6th-level spell known.

If you aren't currently capable of casting a certain level of spell, you gain access to the spell secret when that spell level becomes available to you.

Sonic Might (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, you can expend a use of bardic music to add 1d6 points of sonic damage per spell level to any spell with the sonic descriptor.

PLAYING A LYRIC THAUMATURGE

Music is more than an expression of emotion—it is the life blood of the universe.

Reality has a rhythm that forms the foundation for countless melodies, each of which is unique.

You have discovered how to combine the harmonics of music and magic so that they resonate together, granting you additional spell power and the ability to deal damage with your music.

COMBAT

Your combat tactics remain much the same as they were before you adopted this prestige class, but now you can deal damage with your songs as well as your weapons.

Use your sonic might to soften up your foes, or apply the Captivating Melody feat to ensure that enemies fall prey to your targeted enchantments or illusions.

If foes are still standing once you have exhausted those options, drop back to a support role and use your remaining spells and your bardic music to boost your allies' combat prowess.

ADVANCEMENT

You first realized the harmonic relation of magic to music when you cast a spell while the notes of a song you had just played still hung in the air.

On some inaudible level, the two merged, creating an incredibly beautiful chord that you could feel rather than hear.

Thereafter, you continued to experiment with spells and songs, and you found even more such harmonizing combinations.

Eventually, another bard heard your song at a performance hall in a large city and joined in as though he too knew the harmonic chords.

The audience called your joint performance magical, but you knew it was more.

Your new friend suggested that you further your studies at the little-known bardic college called the Arcane Chord, where he had honed his technique. You applied and were accepted, and then your training began in earnest.

You learned to use the resonating chords of magic to open your mind to new spells and to weave music and magic together to make your spellcasting more potent.

As you gain more experience as a lyric thaumaturge, be sure to maximize your Perform ranks to keep all your options open.

Any feats that improve your bardic music are appropriate options, as is Combat Casting.

RESOURCES

The Arcane Chord bardic college can provide you with needed training and access to its music archives and library at any time.

You can stay as long as you wish at the college, as long as you are willing to give at least one performance a day for the junior students.

Once every two years, you are also asked to teach a six-week course at the school.

The college maintains a store of magic items that alumni can borrow for adventuring.

Borrowed items must be returned within one year.

You must reimburse the college at full value for any items you can't return before the deadline.

LYRIC THAUMATURGES IN THE WORLD

"I had never heard such a melody before.

It seemed to reach inside me and resonate with my heartbeat.

Had it continued longer, I think I might have died."

—Jendrak Lerin, theatre owner

Lyric thaumaturges make excellent allies for PC parties thanks to their wide spell selection and enhanced damage-dealing capability.

Alternatively, an evil lyric thaumaturge can prove a potent challenge for a PC party, especially if he has allies whose abilities he can boost with bardic music.

ORGANIZATION

The College of the Arcane Chord is quite small as bardic colleges go and has only one campus located in a remote part of the world.

All the faculty members and most of the students live on campus throughout each three-month term.

Alumni rotate in and out to serve as teachers and administrators, and they use their on-campus time to conduct their own research into arcane harmonies.

Alumni are provided with meals at half the normal rate charged at an inn.

The head of the college is the Dean of Arcane Melody.

Below her are three melodious scribes, who transcribe the songs that alumni have written for the music library, and two counselors, who advise students on course selection and development of their performance skills.

The college boasts a specially reinforced outbuilding in which students can practice their spellcasting. Any alumnus who serves with distinction as a teacher for at least two terms might be asked to join the permanent staff as an instructor, counselor, or scribe.

Even permanent staff members sometimes take sabbaticals to go adventuring, though, since traveling provides a great deal of grist for the songwriting mill.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people can't tell the difference between a lyric thaumaturge and a bard, so their receptions are generally the same.

Communities appreciate bards, both for the entertainment they can provide and for their supportive music and magic. Thus, attitudes are usually friendly toward a lyric thaumaturge as well.

Those few who do know the power that a lyric thaumaturge can wield tend to be a bit more wary about welcoming one into their midst.

Attitudes in this case might range from indifferent to friendly.

LYRIC THAUMATURGE LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research lyric thaumaturges to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some bards learn to enhance their magical ability by using music.

DC 15: Lyric thaumaturges can wreak terrible destruction with their enhanced spell selections and their unusual musical effects.

DC 20: A lyric thaumaturge knows how to combine music with magic to empower her arcane spells and make them difficult to resist.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific lyric thaumaturges in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake.

Characters wishing to locate a lyric thaumaturge or the College of the Arcane Chord can ask in any city where bards perform.

A successful DC 20 Gather Information check produces someone who knows where to find a lyric thaumaturge, and a successful DC 25 check locates someone who can give directions to the college.

LYRIC THAUMATURGES IN THE GAME

Lyric thaumaturges are as easy to introduce into a campaign as any other bards.

Since bards spend a great deal of time traveling, even an NPC bard with whom the PCs are acquainted can easily show up with new powers after a few months' absence.

Alternatively, allowing the PCs to encounter an evil lyric thaumaturge can demonstrate the abilities of this prestige class quite dramatically.

Anyone who enjoys the supportive abilities of the bard but chafes at the abbreviated spell list or longs for more damage potential in combat should appreciate a chance to play this prestige class.

If you have a lyric thaumaturge in your group, she should find even ordinary combat encounters more interesting with her expanded abilities.

ADAPTATION

Although the lyric thaumaturge is designed specifically to augment the bard class, you could drop the bardic music prerequisite and allow characters other than arcane spellcasters to pick up some spells and special abilities.

To use this option, simply replace the bardic music cost in the special ability descriptions with a daily use of another class feature.

MASTER SPECIALIST

"Study the categories in which you see magic and the limits they place upon you.

Only by knowing the rules can you learn how best to beat them."

—Caphodel Berrandar, Mistress of Enchantment

Many wizards choose to specialize in a specific school, focusing on a particular branch of magic.

The master specialist studies the very notion of specialization.

Though she, too, focuses on one school above all others, she so thoroughly devotes her attention to mastering her chosen discipline that she gains insight beyond the reach of any mere specialist.

If a specialist is a student of a school of magic, the master specialist is that school's teacher.

BECOMING A MASTER SPECIALIST

The path of the master specialist requires the kind of dedicated and studious mind that only a wizard can provide—other arcane casters simply don't have the capability to meet this class's needs.

The best way to become a master specialist is to be a specialist wizard and take 1st level in the prestige class as your 4th character level.

Then you can advance through all ten levels of the class and, after completing it at 13th level, either return to wizard or move on to another prestige class such as archmage.

Elements of this prestige class use the term “chosen school”.

This term refers to the school in which you are specialized.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Spellcraft 5 ranks.

Feat: Spell Focus (school of specialization).

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Special: Must be a specialist wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

You are a true master of the magic of your chosen school.

What you lack in versatility, you make up through incredible ability within your specialty.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in the wizard class.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

Skill Focus (Spellcraft): At 1st level, you gain Skill Focus (Spellcraft) as a bonus feat.

Expanded Spellbook: When you reach 2nd level, you can add one spell of your chosen school to your spellbook.

The spell can be of any level that you can cast, and it is in addition to the normal spells gained when increasing your level.

You can add another spell of your chosen school to your spellbook at 5th and at 8th level.

Greater Spell Focus: At 3rd level, you gain Greater Spell Focus as a bonus feat.

You must apply this feat to your chosen school.

Minor School Esoterica (Ex): At 4th level, your unflagging focus on your chosen school opens your mind to new possibilities and grants you the first taste of the unique skills of a master specialist.

You gain an ability from those below based on your chosen school.

Abjuration: You gain a competence bonus on dispel checks equal to 1/2 your master specialist level.

Conjuration: Any creature you summon or call appears with extra hit points equal to your caster level.

Divination: Divination spells you cast that have a duration of concentration remain in effect for a number of extra rounds equal to 1/2 your master specialist level after you cease concentrating.

You can cast other spells and otherwise act normally during this duration.

Enchantment: Targets of your charm spells do not gain a bonus on their saves due to being currently threatened or attacked by you or your allies.

In addition, subjects of your compulsion spells do not get a bonus on saves due to being forced to take an action against their natures.

Evocation: When casting an evocation spell, you gain a bonus on Concentration checks equal to 1/2 your master specialist level.

Illusion: The save DCs of your illusion spells that have a saving throw entry of “Will disbelief” increase by 2.

Necromancy: When you cast a necromancy spell, undead allies within 60 feet gain turn resistance and a bonus on saves equal to your master specialist level for a number of rounds equal to your master specialist level.

Transmutation: When a transmutation spell you have cast is successfully dispelled, it remains in effect for 1 round and then ends as normal for dispelling.

If a creature is responsible for the dispelling effect, it knows that the spell has been dispelled but is functioning for another round.

Caster Level Increase (Ex): Upon reaching 6th level, add 1 to your caster level whenever you cast a spell of your chosen school.

At 9th level, you instead add 2 to your caster level.

Moderate School Esoterica (Ex): At 7th level, your long study of your chosen school leads to a breakthrough.

You gain an ability from those below based on your chosen school.

Each ability is triggered automatically when you cast a spell from your chosen school and lasts for a number of rounds equal to the spell's level.

Abjuration: If you are subject to a spell that has a partial or half effect on a successful save, you suffer no adverse effect if you successfully save.

Conjuration: Dispel checks made against your conjuration spells treat your caster level as if it were 5 higher than normal.

Divination: You gain uncanny dodge (PH 50) for the duration of the spell.

Enchantment: You can immediately reroll any failed Will save against an enchantment or mind-affecting spell or ability; you must accept the result of the second roll.

Evocation: You gain resistance 20 to any one energy type that matches a descriptor used by the spell you just cast.

Illusion: You gain concealment.

Necromancy: You are immune to ability damage, ability drain, energy drain, and negative levels.

Transmutation: You can immediately reroll any failed Fortitude save against a transmutation spell or ability; you must accept the result of the second roll.

Major School Esoterica (Ex): At 10th level, your knowledge of your chosen school reaches its peak.

You gain an ability from those below based on your chosen school; each one can be used three times per day.

Abjuration: When casting an abjuration spell that normally has a range of personal, you can instead choose to cast it as a touch spell that affects a single creature.

When casting an abjuration spell that is an emanation centered on you, you can instead choose to cast it as a touch spell that emanates from the touched creature.

Conjuration: You can cast a conjuration spell with a casting time of 1 standard action as a swift action.

Divination: When you cast a divination spell, you also gain true seeing (as the spell) for 5 rounds.

Enchantment: Any creature that successfully saves against one of your enchantment spells must save again 1 round later (as if you had cast the spell again) with a +5 bonus on the save.

Evocation: Any creature that fails its save against one of your evocation spells takes damage again 1 round later equal to half the damage it took when you cast the spell.

Illusion: You can cast any illusion spell as a stilled and silent spell and eschew the materials (per the Still Spell, Silent Spell, and Eschew Materials feats) without an increase in caster level or casting time.

Necromancy: When you cast a necromancy spell, undead allies within 60 feet gain fast healing 10 for 5 rounds.

Transmutation: When a creature successfully saves against a transmutation spell you cast, it takes damage equal to the level of the spell.

PLAYING A MASTER SPECIALIST

You might appear very similar to an average wizard or specialist, but beneath that veneer of normality exists a piercing understanding of your chosen school and a mastery of it that none but another master specialist can match.

Your knowledge of the intricacies of your school and of magic in general gives you tremendous confidence even in the face of overwhelming odds.

Every spell of your chosen school is another chance to enhance your effectiveness and expand your mastery of the school.

You hunger for knowledge and are interested in anything to do with your favored form of magic.

Master specialists have no organization of their own, but they are common among more general arcanist guilds, wizard colleges, and academies devoted to a single school of magic.

COMBAT

For the most part, your techniques in combat should match those of other specialists in your field.

Evokers attempt to destroy the foe, enchanters to win them over, conjurers to send both energy effects and summoned creatures against them, and so forth.

Your school esoterica grant you special benefits, and you should use them to your best advantage by preparing multiple combat spells from your specialist school.

ADVANCEMENT

You stepped onto the path of the master specialist almost as soon as you took up the practice of magic.

Your chosen school called to you like nothing else, and you answered that call with fervor.

You have reached the point where you are an acknowledged expert in your field, but you have quite a way to go before you have gained the level of power and understanding you require.

You spend much of your time in study and research, but nothing teaches like real experience, so you are as likely to adventure as a more traditional wizard.

As you advance as a master specialist, consider feats that expand the abilities of your chosen school but also those—such as metamagic feats—that augment your magic in general.

Keep Knowledge (arcana) and Spellcraft high.

If you advance fully through the class and continue to devote 1 skill point at each level to each skill, you need only take Spell Focus in another school to become an archmage at 13th level (DMG 178).

RESOURCES

Most master specialists are members of, or at least have ties to, arcanist organizations, guilds, colleges, and similar groups.

Although these organizations aren't likely to simply hand you equipment, they are useful places to trade resources.

You can find other wizards willing to exchange spells or sell access to their spellbooks, and if magic items are available in the area, this is the place to find them.

You might even be able to purchase them at a small discount (5% to 10%), in exchange for access to your spells or an agreement to perform some service for the guild.

MASTER SPECIALISTS IN THE WORLD

“Generalist wizards have a broad range but less focus; specialists have a narrow range, but great power in one field.

These ‘master specialists’ somehow gain even greater skill in a single school.

I’d love to know how they manage it.”

—Naull, an evoker

The master specialist fits into almost any D&D setting. Wherever specialist wizards exist, some seek to more thoroughly understand each school.

Master specialists are most often found in areas where wizardly study is highly formalized, such as large cities or other communities that have guilds and colleges.

Because a master specialist might well not appear any different to casual observation than any other specialist, DMs can easily assign this prestige class to established NPCs after the fact.

ORGANIZATION

Master specialists hold the same sorts of positions in guilds and organizations as other casters of their level.

Although the path of the master specialist is one of interest to many casters, it doesn't innately grant a greater degree of knowledge or power—or, by extension, rank and influence—than other areas of arcane practice.

NPC REACTIONS

To the layman, nothing about a master specialist differentiates her from any other specialist wizard (or, in some cases, any other wizard at all).

Thus, most people react to a master specialist exactly as they would to any other wizard in their community.

A specialist wizard that has not adopted the master specialist path might look to master specialists with envy, derision, or awe, depending on how confident the specialist is in his own skills as a spellcaster.

MASTER SPECIALIST LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research master specialists to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 15: Master specialists study the techniques of specialization, and through that gain abilities beyond the reach of mere specialists.

DC 20: This result reveals the details of a master specialist's school esoterica (the abilities gained at 4th, 7th, and 10th level).

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific master specialists in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake.

Any community large enough to have a wizards guild or an arcane college most likely contains at least a handful of master specialists as members, and even if none of them have the specialty the PCs seek, they likely know where to look.

PCs are far more likely to pique the interest of a master specialist if they have some new tidbit of arcane lore to share.

MASTER SPECIALISTS IN THE GAME

The master specialist is no more difficult to integrate into a campaign than a standard specialist wizard.

Abjurers and evokers are exceptionally useful on the battlefield, conjurers and necromancers can provide powerful allies and serve as backup combat casters, enchanters and illusionists can mislead or deceive the foe, diviners provide early warning and intelligence, and transmuters are useful in a variety of circumstances.

As such, they easily slip into almost any caster-appropriate role in a party and campaign.

The master specialist prestige class should appeal to players who enjoy portraying specialists but desire better representation of the flavor of the schools, or new powers relating to their focus that they can't achieve through more traditional means.

ADAPTATION

Although this prestige class is presented as essentially eight classes in one, you could divide the master specialist into separate prestige classes for each school.

Each could have its own entry requirements and an organization that provides access to its special techniques. The master specialist prestige class is designed for early entry.

In this way a player who wants to play a specialist that feels more like a specialist can do so very early on.

If you want to delay entry, consider increasing the skill requirements and requiring the Skill Focus (Knowledge [arcana]) feat.

Should you do so, consider adding an additional benefit to the class advancement table, such as a bonus on saves against spells of the chosen school.

TABLE 3-7: THE MASTER SPECIALIST HIT DIE: D4

NIGHTMARE SPINNER

"I am your worst nightmare.

Sleep no more, for I await you in your dreams."

—Lukaas Duskwhisper, nightmare spinner

Dreams come to all sentient creatures, and some of those dreams are dark enough to frighten the heartiest of souls. The nightmare spinner can reach into the darkest recesses of the mind, draw forth his victim's nightmares, and make them seem all too real.

He wields fear as his weapon and uses it to cut down even the mightiest opponents.

It is irrelevant whether his magic produces real threats or not; they are real enough to his victims.

BECOMING A NIGHTMARE SPINNER

Because the nightmare spinner relies heavily on illusion magic, illusionists are drawn to this prestige class.

Sorcerers are also excellent candidates, since a high Charisma score keeps the save DCs high for many of the class features.

However, generalist wizards, wu jen, and even some bards find the path of the nightmare spinner attractive.

Taking a few levels of rogue or bard can help a character meet the skill requirements more easily, but doing so tends to delay entry into the class because it takes longer to achieve the spellcasting requirements.

Assassins can make good use of the class, but their spell lists are too restrictive to meet the prerequisites without a few levels of some other arcane spellcasting class.

Because of its extensive use of fear, most good-aligned spellcasters shy away from it, but neutral and evil characters see great value in playing on the fears of their victims.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Intimidate 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells; ability to cast at least one fear spell and at least one mind-affecting illusion spell.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

You study the depths of the mind, placing particular emphasis on fear and perception.

You understand how fear can paralyze the mind and how thinking creatures often deceive themselves, even when their senses and instincts would otherwise serve them well.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a nightmare spinner, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Bonus Spells (Ex): If you normally prepare spells, you can prepare and cast one additional illusion spell per spell level each day.

This ability works just like (and stacks with) a specialist wizard's extra school spell.

If you don't need to prepare spells, you gain one extra spell slot per spell level, which can be used only to cast an illusion spell.

Immunity to Fear (Su): Beginning at 1st level, you gain immunity to all fear effects.

Inspire Fear (Su): As a standard action, you can create a mind-affecting fear effect that makes a living creature within 30 feet ill at ease.

The target becomes shaken for a number of rounds equal to your nightmare spinner class level; a successful Will save (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) halves this duration.

You can use this power a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier.

Multiple uses of this ability on the same creature don't stack.

Nightmare Phantasm (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, when you cast a figment or glammer spell, you can choose to weave a thread of nightmare phantasm into it as a free action.

The spell gains the phantasm descriptor.

Each time any enemy attempts a Will save to disbelieve the affected illusion spell, a tiny portion of the spell transforms into a phantasm effect that targets that enemy.

The enemy becomes shaken for 1 round (no save).

This ability has no other effect on the original spell's duration or effectiveness.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier.

No creature can be affected by your nightmare phantasm ability more than once in a 24-hour period.

This is a mind-affecting fear effect.

Spirit Chill (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, creatures affected by a fear effect you cause (whether by a spell, class feature, or other effect) take nonlethal damage as well, depending on the potency of the fear created.

Any creature that is shaken takes 1d6 points of nonlethal damage.

A creature that becomes frightened takes 2d6 points of nonlethal damage, while a creature that becomes panicked takes 3d6 points of nonlethal damage.

Deadly Nightmare (Su): At 5th level, you can create a mind-affecting fear effect that can make a living creature literally drop dead.

You can target one living creature within 30 feet of you, which must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) or literally die of fright. Even if the save succeeds, the subject is panicked for 1 round.

Any creature whose Hit Dice exceed twice your character level is unaffected by this power.

This is a mind-affecting fear death effect.

You can use this power three times per day.

PLAYING A NIGHTMARE SPINNER

You have plumbed the mind's darkest recesses and learned to manipulate the fears that reside there.

This experience taught you that all thinking creatures can know fear.

All you have to do is find the right trigger, and you can stop nearly any intelligent creature in its tracks or even slay it outright, whether the threat you create is real or not.

People shun you because of the tales your previous victims have spread about your power, but you do not care.

Fear is just as good as respect and much easier to obtain.

Those who know how to manipulate the stuff of nightmares band together in a secret organization known as the Dark Dreamers.

Your association with this organization aided you in discovering new ways to use your powers both in and out of combat and provided you with invaluable training.

Few people even know that such an organization exists, and its members prefer to keep it that way.

Thus, you never speak of the Dark Dreamers except to others you know to be members.

COMBAT

Your best tactic in combat is to hit hard and early.

Try to use spells that affect a large number of creatures—such as color spray, scare, and fear—first.

You can also use your inspire fear ability to impair the combat ability of multiple opponents.

Once you have disabled the less threatening foes, you can go after the survivors with higher-level spells such as phantasmal strangler, eyebite, and phantasmal killer.

ADVANCEMENT

Your interest in the darker kinds of illusions eventually led you to speculate on the nature of fear and its effect on both the mind and the body.

Eventually, you realized that fear is most effective when drawn from the blackest recesses of the victim's mind—the part that spawns nightmares when the conscious mind is resting.

Your experimentation with the portion of the mind where fear resides eventually caught the eye of an experienced nightmare spinner, who challenged your power.

It was then that you first knew fear yourself and realized even more profoundly how great a weapon it could be.

So you sought out your attacker and asked for his secrets, and he led you to the secret place where the Dark Dreamers meet.

Your attacker became your mentor and taught you how to vanquish your own fear and walk unhindered in the land of nightmares.

Your excursions there brought you face to face with horrific images from people's minds.

This experience taught you how to pull such images from your foes' innermost thoughts and turn them to your advantage.

The organization requires little from you, except your promise to maintain its secrecy and your contributions to its library of dream lore.

As you progress in your studies of the nightmare world, be sure to maintain maximum ranks in Concentration and keep your Charisma score as high as possible so that you gain the greatest benefit from your class features as well as your Bluff and Intimidate skills.

Dodge and Mobility are excellent feat choices if your Dexterity score is high enough, since your combat skills are relatively poor.

Spell Focus (enchantment) is a good choice as well, since enchantment spells are useful for further blurring a victim's perceptions.

RESOURCES

The Dark Dreamers are your best resource for advice and nightmare lore.

As a member, you're entitled to reside in any of the secret hideaways the Dark Dreamers maintain for as long as you wish, provided that you help to advance the organization's agenda by taking on special missions during your stay.

The organization also makes illusion-related magic items available to its members at 75% of normal cost.

NIGHTMARE SPINNERS IN THE WORLD

"Just looking at him made my skin crawl.

I could see my worst nightmares in his cold, dark eyes."

—Jendra Zorbell, paladin of St. Cuthbert

A nightmare spinner makes an excellent foe for PCs.

He can appear as a lone villain, or he can be encountered while on a mission to extract information or promises from an important political figure by threats and torment.

Alternatively, a nightmare spinner could be an interesting ally for a PC party involved in a covert mission of any sort, since his illusion power coupled with his ability to inspire fear can help a party penetrate a fortress or other fortified location.

ORGANIZATION

The organization known as the Dark Dreamers was founded by Ranseul Vaadri, an enigmatic illusionist who first delved into the power of illusions drawn from nightmares.

Ranseul eventually disappeared, leaving no trace—except that his followers occasionally claim to see him in their own nightmares, horribly twisted and melded into the forms of their own private fears.

This anecdotal evidence led sages to speculate that he was eventually drawn bodily into the nightmare realm he visited so frequently.

No one knows his fate for certain.

After Ranseul disappeared, the Dark Dreamers fragmented into small cells in various cities.

Each of these cells developed a separate identity over the years, and they are now only loosely connected with one another.

The cells operate much like a terrorist organization—individual members know only their own immediate superiors, and those in the higher echelons know only one or two other leaders.

The organization might be small in numbers, but it is vast in scope.

The leader of the Dark Dreamers is known as the nightmare master.

No single cell claims him as a member, and he does not physically visit any of the organization's hideaways.

He communicates with his underlings only through dreams.

Below the nightmare master are six dream stalkers, who visit the leaders of the various cells both in person and through the dream world.

The leader of an individual cell, known as its night mage, manages all the cell's operations in the local area, acting on orders from above and pursuing his own agenda as well. Should those two goals ever conflict, the orders from above must prevail, or the night mage mysteriously disappears.

Conflicts are rare, since night mages do not receive specific instructions from the dream stalkers.

Evidently, the nightmare master is content to allow the organization to operate in a fragmented manner.

Below the night mage are several phantasms, who pass along orders to individual members.

Each phantasm oversees no more than five nightmare spinners, and no more than six phantasms ever operate in a single cell.

Typically, nightmare spinners are encouraged to do as they will and adventure as much as they please.

Occasionally, however, the phantasms ask them to use their powers against a specific individual to coerce him or her into certain actions.

The fear that a nightmare spinner can inspire is usually sufficient to ensure compliance, but he can also threaten his victims with death from phantasmal killer and phantasmal strangler spells if spirited resistance is encountered.

Promotion within a cell is based on merit.

No one is certain of the method used to choose new dream stalkers, phantasms, or night mages.

Rumors persist of such authority being granted through dreams.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people have never encountered a nightmare spinner and don't even know they exist.

The uninformed treat nightmare spinners with indifference, although their general attitude and demeanor can arouse suspicion.

Those who know the power of a nightmare spinner are hostile to members of the class.

NIGHTMARE SPINNER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research nightmare spinners to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some spellcasters can reach into your mind and pull out your worst nightmares.

DC 15: A nightmare spinner is a specialist in illusion and fear magic.

DC 20: Nightmare spinners know no fear and can inspire terror in others.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific nightmare spinner in your campaign, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

PCs in search of a nightmare spinner have a difficult task.

Some wizards and sorcerers know of these spellcasters, but most are hostile toward anyone asking for them.

However, a character who asks a neutral or evil spellcaster for information and makes a successful DC 20 Gather Information check will be contacted by a member of the nearest Dark Dreamers cell within 1d4 days.

NIGHTMARE SPINNERS IN THE GAME

Nightmare spinners are relatively easy to incorporate into a campaign.

Since they operate covertly, a lack of prior contact between them and the PCs is not unusual.

Nightmare spinners are great choices for players who enjoy characters with a darker edge.

Because this character operates more or less on the fringes of society and interacts with others through threats and illusions, he makes an interesting addition to a party—rather like a magic enforcer.

If you have a nightmare spinner among your PCs, be sure to give him plenty of intelligent foes against which he can use his signature abilities.

ADAPTATION

The nightmare spinner class is designed as an illusion specialist, but it could work just as well with an enchantment specialty, since most spells from that school are also mindaffecting.

Such a character probably would not have an evil bent, and the class abilities could be modified to allow him to charm or dominate creatures that are usually immune to such spells.

TABLE 3-8: THE NIGHTMARE SPINNER HIT DIE: D4

ULTIMATE MAGUS

"You insist on attempting to master magic, but magic is no one's slave.

Treat the magic as your partner, as I have, and you too may reach enlightenment."

—Kalind Leschay, an ultimate magus

Sorcerers channel unknowable powers, and wizards are expert in ancient lore, but few individuals have as thorough an understanding and mastery of arcane magic as the ultimate magus.

By combining both sorcerous and wizardly abilities into a unified whole, the magus empowers herself in ways even the greatest archmage can't duplicate.

BECOMING AN ULTIMATE MAGUS

Due to the specific requirements of the ultimate magus, levels in both sorcerer and wizard are the most common method of gaining entry into this class.

It might be possible for members of other spellcasting classes to do so under specific conditions, but such an occurrence is as rare as cockatrice teeth.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Any metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Able to spontaneously cast 1st-level arcane spells, able to prepare and cast 2nd-level arcane spells from a spellbook.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

As an ultimate magus, you are a connoisseur of both prepared and spontaneous magic.

You not only learn to cast both types of spells, but to use one art to augment the other—particularly in the realm of metamagic effects.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st, 4th, and 7th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in both a prepared arcane casting class and a spontaneous arcane casting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of those classes would have gained.

At 1st, 4th, and 7th level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in your arcane spellcasting class with the lowest caster level.

For example, a 4th-level wizard/1st-level sorcerer who gained one level of ultimate magus would gain increased spellcasting ability as if he had gained a level of sorcerer (since that class's caster level is lower than his wizard caster level).

If all your arcane spellcasting classes have equal caster levels, you can apply this benefit to any of your existing arcane spellcasting classes.

Arcane Spell Power (Ex): At 1st level, your caster level for all arcane spells increases by 1.

It increases again at 4th level, 7th level, and 10th level (to a maximum of +4).

Expanded Spell Knowledge (Ex): At 2nd level, you can select one 0- or 1st-level arcane spell from your spellbook and add it to the list of arcane spells known for a spontaneous casting class, even if you can't yet spontaneously cast spells of that level.

(In this case, you would know the spell but wouldn't be able to cast it until you had spell slots of the appropriate level).

You can add another spell from your spellbook to your list of spells known every two levels thereafter.

At 4th level, this can be a 0-, 1st-, or 2nd-level spell.

At 6th level, this can be any spell of 3rd level or lower.

At 8th level, this spell can be of 4th level or lower, and at 10th level it can be of 5th level or lower.

Augmented Casting (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you can choose to sacrifice a spell or spell slot from one of your classes to apply the effect of a metamagic feat that you know to a spell cast using another arcane class.

(For instance, you could sacrifice a sorcerer slot to apply a metamagic effect to a wizard spell).

This sacrificed spell or slot is lost (just as if you had cast the spell) in addition to the spell you are actually casting.

The level of the spell to be augmented can't exceed 1/2 your class level.

For example, when you first gain this ability, you can only apply a metamagic effect to 1st-level spells.

A 10th-level ultimate magus can affect spells of 5th level or lower.

The level of the spell slot sacrificed must equal or exceed the spell level adjustment of the metamagic feat. To empower a spell, for example, you would have to spend a 2nd-level or higher spell.

You can't use this ability to augment a spell already affected by a metamagic feat.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to $3 + \frac{1}{2}$ your class level.

Bonus Feat: At 5th level, and again at 9th level, you can select a bonus metamagic feat for which you meet the prerequisites.

PLAYING AN ULTIMATE MAGUS

You possess a fascination with magic and lore greater than that of most wizards.

You see magic not as a tool, but as a natural part of who and what you are.

It is a part of the world in which you live, not an implement to be exploited when necessary and discarded.

Everything you do, everything you see, and everything you learn is examined and analyzed as it relates to magic first, and to all other concerns second.

You know that you possess great power, but you feel certain that secrets and understanding yet elude your grasp.

This doesn't mean that you have no other goals or other loves.

You might adventure alongside your friends, serve your king as advisor, or fight on the battlefield for a cause in which you believe, just like any other character might. Even in the midst of all this, however, you learn and study constantly, seeking to understand how magic fits into the events around you and what insight those events can grant you that apply to your magic.

You are, if anything, even less of a melee fighter than other arcane casters.

Your levels in multiple casting classes do little to improve your base attack bonus to say nothing of your hit points. Stay back out of the fray and take advantage of the vast array of spells to which you have access.

You are best served by area spells or spells that prevent enemies from getting too close to you.

Where possible, focus on groups of enemies, letting the fighters in the group tackle the single foes.

When you must focus on a specific opponent, do what you can to take him out as fast as possible, before he recognizes you for the threat you pose and does the same to you.

Particularly at early levels, use the spells from your higher-level arcane class for offensive effects.

This strategy maximizes both the spells' likelihood of success (due to a higher save DC) and the overall effect (due to a higher caster level).

Later on, your two classes likely balance out, so this becomes less of an issue.

Although you'll always lag behind a single-classed arcane caster in terms of sheer power—your highest-level spells are a level or two lower than those of such a character—your caster level keeps up reasonably well (meaning your fireball is just about as good as his).

Also, your array of spells can last up to twice as long in an adventure as that of a single-classed character, and you have a few tricks up your sleeve that he can't easily match.

ADVANCEMENT

You were heavily devoted to the study and mastery of magic even before you entered this class.

Perhaps you were a born sorcerer, and wished to better understand the nature of your powers.

Perhaps you were a wizard, and the discovery of your spontaneous abilities led you to question the knowledge you had already gained.

Whatever the case, you are a driven soul with no goal outside a true understanding of arcane magic in all its forms.

You spend all your available time advancing your skills and knowledge.

Whether this means battling monsters in the dungeon, unearthing ancient lore, or simply reading books at the university, nothing is more important to you.

You'll want to keep skills such as Knowledge (arcana) and Spellcraft high, if not maxed out.

Choose feats that benefit both your casting styles, such as Spell Penetration and Spell Focus.

Even with your extra metamagic feats, it pays to learn as many as you can (particularly those with low level adjustments).

You'll face the complex conundrum of where to assign newly learned spells.

Adding a spell to your spellbook means you're not necessarily stuck with it when you don't need it, but adding it to your list of spells known means you can cast it more frequently.

It's probably best to focus on spells you need only occasionally for the bulk of your spellbook, such as identify, disguise self, resist energy, see invisibility, and the like.

That frees up your sorcerer spell slots for always useful spells such as magic missile, shield, ray of enfeeblement, web, and so on.

Always keep your caster level in the two classes in mind—spells that don't benefit from a high caster level are good choices for your "weaker" class.

RESOURCES

Although no organization is devoted exclusively to your particular mix of talents, you might well hold a position, or at least possess contacts, within a wizards guild or similar organization.

Such cabals are fascinated by your abilities and eager to learn whatever mystic secrets you have uncovered.

While they aren't likely to support you with finances or magic items, they might aid you in researching specific topics, or offer you the opportunity to trade spells with wizards, wu jen, or other preparation casters.

ULTIMATE MAGI IN THE WORLD

"I find them both fascinating and worrying, these so-called ultimate magi.

Fascinating because they suggest that we have so much more to learn about magic, and worrying because they suggest that so much of what we do know may be wrong."

—Miale, elf wizard

Ultimate magi, though rare, are found either in greater metropolises or in complete isolation.

In this regard, at least, they fit the stereotype of the obsessed wizard.

They might be part of a guild or a government or they might seek complete seclusion, but in either case their purpose is the same—study and knowledge.

The development of ultimate magi is a logical result of the existence of both wizards and sorcerers, so DMs should have little trouble justifying their existence.

ORGANIZATION

Ultimate magi have no organizations of their own. That said, many hold positions of high esteem in various arcanist guilds, or in other groups that normally allow wizards or sorcerers.

NPC REACTIONS

Most individuals have difficulty telling a sorcerer from a wizard, let alone recognizing an ultimate magus, and thus react to a member of this class as they would any other arcane caster.

Sorcerers and wizards, however, recognize that the magi are privy to secrets they themselves lack.

Arcane casters who seek knowledge and a better understanding of their powers (often, but not always, the good-aligned ones) begin one step nearer to helpful than they otherwise would.

Arcane casters who master magic to gain power over others (often, but not always, the evil-aligned ones) begin one step nearer to hostile.

ULTIMATE MAGUS LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research ultimate magi to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Ultimate magi are individuals able to progress in both prepared and spontaneous varieties of arcane magic.

DC 15: I heard of one magus who claimed to be able to apply the tricks learned as a wizard to her sorcerer spellcasting prowess.

DC 20: I once watched a magus decimate a whole horde with spells far more powerful than she should have been able to cast.

It wore her down, though, like she was burning magic to empower magic.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific ultimate magus in your campaign, the areas where she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

PCs who wish to meet with an ultimate magus should make every effort to contact the nearest arcanist guild.

Even if the organization boasts no such member, odds are good that its members can suggest the next place to search.

ULTIMATE MAGI IN THE GAME

An ultimate magus can appear anywhere a wizard or other studious caster would fit in.

She might hold a high position in a city or wander the world like any adventurer.

It is entirely possible that the PCs have met or heard of one before without even realizing it, having mistaken a magus for a traditional wizard or sorcerer.

Players who enjoy playing arcane spellcasters should find the ultimate magus an absolute delight.

Although the class costs them some power, it opens up an enormous variety of options that no other single arcane casting class can provide.

ADAPTATION

The ultimate magus requires little adaptation, since the prestige class fits into any setting with both wizards and sorcerers, or any similar classes.

That said, it would not be inappropriate to make the magi members of an elite order, rather than lone individuals.

Perhaps only a select few have learned these techniques, and these masters are highly selective about whom they teach.

Alternatively, in a setting in which either sorcerers or wizards are persecuted, the arts of the magi might have been developed to allow one such class to masquerade as the other.

Another variant might be one that melds two spontaneous casting arcane characters, such as a sorcerer and a warmage, allowing the two to blend their spell lists in a manner similar to the benefit of the expanded spell knowledge class feature.

—Kory Stargazer, unseen seer

Mysterious and elusive, the unseen seer trades in secrets.

UNSEEN SEER

“There is no such thing as a secret.”

Subterfuge is her business in the same way that death is the assassin's business, and she uses her magic to help her gather other people's secrets while keeping her own.

BECOMING AN UNSEEN SEER

Because an unseen seer specializes in stealthy information gathering, this prestige class is especially attractive to rogues.

Ninjas, scouts, and spellthieves (all from Complete Adventurer) might find it equally beneficial.

Regardless, these characters must master the basics of arcane divination magic before entering, whether by multiclassing as a wizard (typically a diviner), sorcerer, or other arcane caster.

The beguiler (Player's Handbook II) can qualify as an unseen seer without multiclassing, and though bards make good unseen seers, they typically must multiclass to meet the skill requirements.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Search 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks, Spot 8 ranks.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells, including at least two divination spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disguise, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As an unseen seer, you excel at surreptitious information-gathering.

No secret is safe from you because you can ferret out information through spells or even by mundane means when necessary.

You are adept at revealing falsehoods and unraveling even the most skillful deception, all the while keeping your own motives and activities hidden.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an unseen seer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Damage Bonus: At 1st level, the extra damage you deal with your sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike ability increases by 1d6.

If you have more than one of these abilities, only one ability gains this increase (choose each time you gain this benefit).

Your sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike damage increases by another 1d6 at 4th level, 7th level, and 10th level.

Advanced Learning (Ex): At 2nd, 5th, and 8th level, you can add a new spell to your spellbook or list of spells known, representing the result of personal study and experimentation.

The spell must be a divination spell of a level no higher than that of the highest-level arcane spell you already know.

The spell can be from any class's spell list (arcane or divine). Once a new spell is selected, it is forever added to your spell list and can be cast just like any other spell on your list.

Silent Spell: At 2nd level, you gain Silent Spell as a bonus feat.

Divination Spell Power (Ex): At 3rd level, you gain a +1 bonus to your caster level when casting an arcane divination spell.

This bonus improves to +2 at 6th level, and to +3 at 9th level.

This benefit comes at a cost: Your caster level for all other arcane spells is reduced by 1 at 3rd level.

This reduction becomes 2 at 6th level and becomes 3 at 9th level.

For example, a 4th-level rogue/1st-level sorcerer/6th-level unseen seer would have a caster level of 9th for her arcane divination spells, but only 5th for her nondivination arcane spells.

Guarded Mind (Su): Any successful unseen seer must learn to protect herself from magic that would reveal her identity.

At 5th level, you become protected by nondetection (as the spell, but with a permanent duration).

For the purpose of divinations attempted against you, your caster level equals your character level.

PLAYING AN UNSEEN SEER

You move silently through the world in search of the truth, and no one is better than you at finding it.

You were in the shadows when the queen's lover declared his undying devotion, and you eavesdropped on meetings of secret societies dedicated to dark entities.

You saw an assassin's knife end the career of a promising young artist, and a forger's pen create the letter that started a war.

The potent combination of your divination abilities and your stealth skills can strip away pretense and reveal the twisted truth behind society's polite facade.

In your travels, you learned that everyone has at least one dark secret—even the paladin carrying out his deity's will. And those secrets can bring both power and wealth to the one who knows them and isn't afraid to exploit them.

For the most part, you work alone, though you might profess membership in the Seekers of Truth, an organization dedicated to discovering the truth behind all the lies.

Its membership is diverse and includes paladins and clerics, as well as unseen seers such as yourself.

All who value the truth, for whatever reason, are welcome in its ranks.

Rumor holds that even a few assassins have made themselves at home within its ranks, building cells of members whose moral viewpoints align with their own. Nominally, the organization claims neither a good nor evil bias, but the presence of more than a few paladins in its upper ranks causes it to lean more toward the side of good.

COMBAT

Sometimes your best option for combat is to avoid it altogether.

To that end, use your skills to put strangers at ease whenever possible, and stay unseen as much as you can. When combat is inevitable, it's best to be forewarned.

Use detect thoughts or clairvoyance/clairaudience to gain information about your opposition just before a battle begins.

Just because you specialize in divination doesn't mean you can't make good use of illusions and abjurations to keep yourself safe.

If you have ranks in the Hide skill, you can slink to the fringes of a battlefield and slip out of sight before any enemy can target you.

If necessary, you can use Bluff to create a distraction that makes it easier for you to get out of danger.

When you finally do attack, be prepared to move quickly to a new hiding place.

ADVANCEMENT

Your insatiable curiosity led you to divination magic in the first place, and from there to becoming an unseen seer.

It gives you a heady feeling of power to magically know what's happening elsewhere or glimpse the possible outcomes of your actions before committing to them.

But when you began to amass information about others simply for its own sake, a representative of the Seekers of Truth sought you out and invited you to join the organization.

As a new member, you studied stealth skills to complement your divination abilities, and you learned how to make the most of your scrying spells.

Thereafter, you accompanied a senior member of the organization a few times on missions to ferret out the truth from king's courts, military command centers, and other places where secrets abound.

Since your initial training, you have operated largely on your own, gathering secret information to enter in the guild's archives through your adventures.

No piece of information is too small or too volatile.

Though you must have permission to draw information directly from the guild's archives, no rule says that you can't use the information you gain by the exercise of your abilities before turning it over for archiving.

Thus, you can operate as a king's advisor, an information broker, or a blackmailer, according to your wishes.

To function as an unseen seer, you need a good Dexterity to take full advantage of your Dexterity-based skills, and a decent Charisma for wheedling information out of unwilling parties when your divination spells fail you. Keep your Diplomacy, Bluff, and Sense Motive skills maxed out, and collect plenty of divinations for your repertoire.

RESOURCES

The library of information to which all seekers contribute is your most important resource.

The information contained in the organization's archives could bring down kingdoms and plunge whole societies into chaos, and for that reason, no single member can withdraw more than a small amount of it for personal use.

But the right piece of information can make an excellent bargaining chip for use in gaining even more secrets.

Your fellow unseen seers can also provide valuable assistance to you, both in terms of training and as comrades in the search for truth.

Small groups of unseen seers working together can unmask a conspiracy against a throne or stop a revolution before it starts.

Finally, you can borrow magic items from the cell to which you belong for periods up to one year.

Scrying items are the most commonly borrowed, but the Seekers of Truth also stockpile scrolls and wands with divination spells on them, as well as items that provide help in keeping out of sight.

UNSEEN SEERS IN THE WORLD

"I told no one, I swear.

And yet she knew.

She knew everything!"

—Jovan Ismul, Grand Vizier of Jelumal

Unseen seers introduce an element of mystery into a campaign.

As NPCs, they are best used as advisors to important persons and as information brokers.

They can provide missions for PCs based on secret information they have learned, or they can serve as mentors for PC diviners wishing to pursue the prestige class.

Alternatively, they can make formidable foes for characters who have a stake in keeping a secret—either their own or an employer's.

ORGANIZATION

The Seekers of Truth have a strict hierarchy.

At the top is a mysterious figure known only as the omniscient one.

Below him are three eyes of seeing, who manage the archives and sort out information.

Roughly equivalent in rank are six knowledge sealers, who maintain the security of the archives.

In the next rank are all the unseen seers and other members responsible for gaining secrets, and at the bottom are the remaining paladins, clerics, and other members of the organization who perform most of its legwork.

Individual cells of the organization, usually headed by unseen seers, are located throughout the civilized world, usually in large cities and near strategically important locations.

The Seekers of Truth are dedicated only to obtaining the truth, not to using it.

However, the eyes of seeing examine all the material that comes in and connect bits of information to determine plots and trends, then advise the omniscient one about issues that seem to be of major social and political importance.

Occasionally, the omniscient one decides to leak information to influence the outcome one way or another. Promotion is based on the information-gathering prowess of the individual.

In particular, an unseen seer might be promoted to a higher position only when she has learned the secrets of her superior.

An unseen seer can leave the organization at any time without repercussions, but anyone who does so and then reveals group secrets to nonmembers is likely to find out for certain that assassins exist within its ranks.

NPC REACTIONS

Few people know that unseen seers exist.

Those who do universally mistrust them, if only because knowing all sorts of secrets gives the seers an unfair advantage.

Thus, the attitude of ordinary people toward unseen seers is usually either indifferent or unfriendly.

However, rulers and other persons of importance who employ unseen seers place great faith in their abilities and integrity.

Such people are usually friendly toward any unseen seer.

UNSEEN SEER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research unseen seers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some spies who can magically see into the lives and minds of others are called unseen seers.

DC 15: Unseen seers blend stealth and arcane spells to become master information-gatherers.

DC 20: Unseen seers specialize in avoiding detection themselves and shun anything resembling a fair fight. If you spot one, don't expect her to stick around for long.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific unseen seers in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake. PCs wishing to contact an unseen seer or the Seekers of Truth must attempt a DC 20 Gather Information check. Success gains the character an interview, after scrying verifies that no threat exists.

UNSEEN SEERS IN THE GAME

Unseen seers operate from the shadows and usually leave no trace of their presence.

Thus, they are relatively easy to incorporate into a campaign—some have probably always been there, witnessing all but undetected until now.

They can provide plenty of plot hooks for PCs to pursue because of their detailed but fragmented knowledge of secret information.

This prestige class appeals to players who enjoy missions involving subterfuge and intrigue.

Any character who enjoys operating from the shadows and dabbling in arcane magic is a good candidate for this class. She can be of significant aid to her party by spying on enemies prior to major encounters and gaining information that can be used for bargaining.

ADAPTATION

Though the unseen seer is presented as a divination specialist, the class could also be used for an illusion-based spy by simply changing the prerequisites and spell power class feature.

In a campaign with a darker theme, the Seekers of Truth could be actively using gathered information to influence political leaders.

WILD SOUL

"Magic is a wild force, and in the wild it finds its greatest strength. It can perhaps be harnessed, but it can never be tamed."

—Jerarra of the Hunted Steppes

For all that magic appears to be an unnatural force to those who misunderstand it, it is a fundamental part of the world, a current that flows naturally through all places and all creatures.

Like the waters of a stream, its flow never ceases, but it does congregate in reservoirs of natural magic.

These "pools" of magic are the fey, certain magical beasts, and other creatures of both innate magic and strong natural bonds.

So-called wild souls are arcanists who have tapped into this natural flow of energy.

As druids are divine casters who share a link with the animals of nature, wild souls develop a similar link to the world's fey.

And like the fey themselves, wild souls swear allegiance—or at least an alliance—with one of the two great courts.

The Seelie Court are fey of grace, beauty, and natural purity, while the Unseelie are vicious, impure, and often ugly.

Both courts are intrinsically linked to the world of nature and the flow of magic.

Titania and Oberon rule the Seelie Court; the Queen of Air and Darkness rules the Unseelie Court.

The seelie tend toward neutrality, though many are good or evil; the unseelie tend toward evil, and while neutrality is found among them, good never is.

The vast majority of these fey are chaotic, and none are lawful.

Wild souls—also called primal mages or, in the more poetic language of the Seelie Court, mystic mavens—are mortal, and thus not truly a part of these fey courts.

They are, however, respected ambassadors of the mortal world, honored above other mortals due to the strong connection to the arcane magic that fey feel flowing through their veins.

Other mortals fear them, sensing on an instinctive level the touch of the otherworld upon them.

BECOMING A WILD SOUL

Sorcerers feel the pull of the wild soul most frequently, since their innate ability to cast spells mirrors the natural magic of the fey.

Certain wizards and wu jen, however, also feel the pull of this primal magic, and in fact might—due to their higher average intelligence—be better able to meet its requirements.

A significant minority of wild souls began as multiclass arcane casters/druids.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks.

Special: Must be able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells, must make peaceful contact with a fey creature and peacefully spend at least a day among fey.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (the planes), Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Your class features are all influenced by your bond with the mystical creatures of the world.

You gain several of their abilities, channel their magic, and can even call upon them for aid.

Spellcasting: At every wild soul level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class you belonged to before you added the prestige class.

You do not, however, gain any other class benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a wild soul, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Seelie Courtier (Ex): At 1st level, you must choose either the seelie or the unseelie path.

Good-aligned characters can't choose the unseelie path, while evil-aligned characters are barred from the seelie path.

This choice determines certain benefits you gain from this prestige class.

If your alignment later changes to make your choice illegal, you automatically exchange all seelie- or unseelie-related class features for their opposites.

In addition, you gain a bonus equal to your wild soul level on Bluff, Diplomacy, and Intimidate checks made in to influence fey and magical beasts.

Spontaneous Spells: A wild soul can tap into the magic that naturally infuses fey and magical beasts to cast spells that were not prepared ahead of time.

You can sacrifice any prepared arcane spell (or, for a spontaneous caster, an arcane spell slot) to cast a particular spell of the same spell level or lower.

Depending on whether you have chosen the seelie or unseelie path, you choose from different specific spells as specified on the table below.

You gain access to these spontaneous spell options by level as shown on Table 3-11: The Wild Soul.

Access to a spontaneous spell does not grant the ability to cast it if you do not have a prepared spell or spell slot of appropriately high level to lose in exchange.

For example, a 5th-level wizard/4th-level wild soul who chose the seelie path could lose a prepared ice storm to cast break enchantment or a lower-level option (invisibility sphere, Tasha's hideous laughter, or remove fear).

A 6th-level sorcerer/1st-level wild soul who chose the unseelie path can spontaneously cast lesser confusion, detect thoughts, or poison.

These spells are not considered to be part of your class spell list, so this feature doesn't grant you the ability to activate spell trigger or spell completion items using these spells.

SPONTANEOUS SPELLS OPTIONS

Spell Level	Seelie	Unseelie
1st	remove fear	lesser confusion
2nd	Tasha's hideous laughter	detect thoughts
3rd	invisibility	sphere poison
4th	break enchantment	bestow curse
5th	baleful polymorph	endless slumber [†]
6th	true seeing	mass suggestion
7th	prismatic spray	waves of exhaustion
8th	sympathy	horrid wilting
9th	time stop	wail of the banshee

Seelie Bond (Su): When you cast summon seelie ally or a summon monster spell to bring forth a creature from the summon seelie ally list, your connection to the seelie increases, granting you benefits.

These benefits remain as long as one of the seelie or unseelie creatures you summoned is alive and the duration of the spell has not expired.

The benefits described below are cumulative.

Thus, a 10th-level wild soul would gain all of them upon summoning a seelie or unseelie ally.

At 2nd level, you gain immunity to magic and nonmagical sleep effects.

This ability grants elves immunity to nonmagical sleep effects, to which they are normally vulnerable.

At 4th level, you gain a +2 bonus on saves against enchantment spells or effects.

The bonus against enchantment effects is untyped and thus stacks with an elf's or half-elf's +2 racial bonus against enchantment spells and effects.

At 6th level, your base land speed increases by 10 feet.

At 8th level, add 1 to the Difficulty Class of saving throws against illusion spells you cast.

At 10th level, add 1 to the Difficulty Class of saving throws against enchantment spells you cast.

Summon Seelie Ally (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, a wild soul can summon a seelie ally three times per day.

This ability functions like summon monster I except that you choose a creature from a list of options, as detailed on the table below, based on your wild soul level and path.

SUMMON SEELIE ALLY

2nd (Summon Monster IV)

Seelie: Blink dog
Pegasus
Senmurv (Fiend Folio)
Unicorn

Unseelie: Aranea
Howler
Redcap, young (Monster Manual III)
Shadar-kai (Fiend Folio)

4th (Summon Monster V)

Seelie: Nixie
Satyr (with pipes)

Unseelie: Joy stealer (Monster Manual IV)
Shadow mastiff

6th (Summon Monster VI)

Seelie: Pixie (can't cast Otto's irresistible dance; with sleep arrows, but not memory loss arrows)
Shimmering swarm (Monster Manual III)

Unseelie: Displacer beast
Winter wolf

8th (Summon Monster VII)

Seelie: Lillend
Leskylor (Book of Exalted Deeds)

Unseelie: Annis
Will-o'-wisp

10th (Summon Monster VIII)

Seelie: Bearhound (Monster Manual III)
Leskylor, three-headed (Book of Exalted Deeds)

Unseelie: Redcap, elder (Monster Manual III)
Rejkar (Monster Manual III)

You can use this ability to summon one creature from the highest-level list available to you, 1d3 creatures of the same kind from the next highest-level list, or 1d4 +1 creatures of the same kind from any lower-level list.

Your caster level is equal to your character level.

In addition, whenever you cast a summon monster spell of 4th to 8th level, you can choose a creature from the appropriate list below in place of one of the normal options.

PLAYING A WILD SOUL

You understand that magic is a primal part of the world, and you seek to embody it as thoroughly as those creatures that are innately mystical in their own right.

Others might mistake you for a religious totemic, but clearly they misunderstand you.

You don't worship fey, magical beasts, or the otherworldly courts as deities.

You simply revere them for their magical nature, and for what they represent.

You seek a fusion between the arcane and the mundane, and power over all creatures of magic.

COMBAT

Your ability to summon fey and creatures of magic is your primary weapon.

Consider using them to aid your companions in flanking maneuvers, or better yet to harass enemy spellcasters (many of whom are easy to hit).

Few foes are prepared for an opponent who can call such potent beings to service, so you've also got the advantage of surprise.

Don't ignore the fact that, as a spellcaster, you have plenty of other spells and techniques on which to draw, but consider conserving your nonsummoning spells until they're needed most.

Your ability to spontaneously cast spells not otherwise available to you provides yet another means of surprising your foes.

Like the fey themselves, you never hesitate to use deceit and trickery where necessary.

ADVANCEMENT

It's unclear how or why certain individuals become wild souls.

You always had something of a wild streak, or at least thought of magic as a primal force that could be only partially tamed.

No organization found and trained you.

You might have discovered the art of the wild soul mentioned in ancient texts, or you might simply have developed this connection with the fey the first time you encountered one of them.

Whatever the case, you came to see yourself as merely one part of the primal whole that is magic, and a part of your soul filled with a longing for the strange world of the fey. They, in turn, reacted more positively to you, recognizing in you a potential lacking in most mortals.

You adventure now, seeking ever-closer communion with the fey.

You might certainly have other goals, but the understanding of "natural magic" remains one of your priorities.

When advancing as a wild soul, consider feats such as Augment Summoning to increase the power of your fey allies further still.

Although you'll doubtless want to focus your skill points on traditional arcanist skills such as Spellcraft, consider spending a few points on Knowledge (nature) and Knowledge (the planes) the better to understand the fey and the environments in which they dwell.

RESOURCES

Wild souls are loners or at least have no greater community affiliation than the average adventurer.

They must acquire any resources they wish to gain from organizations or communities on their own, through payment or trade as usual.

Interestingly enough, wild souls can, on occasion, request aid from local druids.

Their interests in creatures of nature such as fey and magical beasts overlap, and the two classes sometimes cooperate to put down threats to an area of natural magic.

WILD SOULS IN THE WORLD

"Wild souls are similar to the fey they revere.

I find that I can almost understand them, but every time I think I've got them figured, they prove me wrong."

—Vadania, a druid

Although the term "wild soul", and the class's affiliation with fey and magical beasts, might lead some to believe that they hail solely from savage or primitive regions, nothing could be further from the truth.

Wild souls are like other arcanists; some might indeed come from regions beyond civilization, but others hail from the greatest of urban metropolises.

All a region need have to produce its own wild souls is an arcane tradition and some population (even a small one) of fey or other naturally mystical creatures.

ORGANIZATION

Even though many wild souls belong to arcanist guilds, adventuring parties, and the like, no specific wild soul organization exists.

NPC REACTIONS

Something about the touch of the fey on the wild soul makes normal people uncomfortable around them. Members of any magic-using class, from adepts to druids to wizards, react to the wild soul just as they would any other spellcasting stranger.

Non-spellcasting individuals, however, are reluctant to spend much time around the wild soul unless they have to. Although they are not necessarily hostile, individuals who would normally be helpful are instead merely friendly, and those who would be friendly are indifferent.

Warlocks and eldritch initiates who gain their power from the courts of the fey feel a strong connection to wild souls if they share a patron, and great rivalry if they serve different courts.

An allied warlock or initiate begins one step nearer helpful, while an opposed one begins one step nearer hostile.

WILD SOUL LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research wild souls to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Wild souls are spellcasters with links to the fey.

DC 15: They have some mystical connection to one of the two great fey courts, either the Seelie or the Unseelie, and their personalities match.

They can cast spells they otherwise could not and gain several feylike abilities and resistances.

DC 20: At higher levels, wild souls can summon fey allies to them—often without casting a spell at all—though they must sacrifice a bit of spellcasting ability to reach this point.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific wild soul in your campaign, including the areas where she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

Due to their lack of any central organization, finding a wild soul is no small feat.

The best PCs might manage is to leave word of their search with arcanist and adventuring guilds in or near areas known to have fey populations and hope that a wild soul hears of their interest.

WILD SOULS IN THE GAME

Wild souls can fit into any adventuring party, but they are particularly well suited to those that expect to do a great deal of wilderness exploration and dungeon delving. (Although fey and magical beasts exist in urban environments, they are somewhat less common in such places).

Because one level is not too severe a hit to spellcasting ability, the wild soul can serve as a group's primary arcanist, or even pass herself off as an arcane caster of some other sort.

This class should appeal most to players who enjoy conjurers but who seek a little more "bang for their buck" when it comes to the potency of their summoned minions. It is also a good choice for players who like to explore the sources and philosophies of their character's magic, seek an in-character excuse to wander both this world and others, and are interested in strange new monsters.

ADAPTATION

The wild soul could be transformed into a divine class with relatively little effort.

Perhaps the campaign world is one in which the Seelie and Unseelie Courts are worshiped as divine powers.

The fey listed above are added to the Summon Nature's Ally list rather than the Summon Monster list.

In this case, consider replacing Knowledge (arcana) with Knowledge (religion) in the entry requirements.

With a bit of work, the class might also be modified to summon creatures other than those listed above.

The DM might create a bestial list for wild soul variants who summon aberrations or outsiders.

Be extremely careful, however, since such creatures possess a lot of mystical abilities that can seriously distort game balance.

Use the CRs of the fey and magical beasts above as a guideline, but do not assume that just because CR matches, a creature is necessarily a good choice.

COMPLETE PSIONIC (3.5)

ANARCHIC INITIATE

"Despite its fervent, biting nature, raw emotion is nothing compared to the raw chaos of real, physical anarchy!"

—Embersage Fenwillow

The anarchic initiate is more than a wilder, he is an initiate to the truth that underlies the wildness in the depth of his being.

Wildness is not merely a psychological trait—rather, it is an aspect of cosmology itself, characterized by the entropic realm of Limbo, a realm of utter randomness.

By recognizing this link, an initiate slowly learns to synchronize the wild outbursts of his own mind with natural swells of anarchy, thereby achieving even greater heights of psionic mastery according to the tides of chance and uncertainty.

By coupling his psionic efforts with the swells of planar movement, an anarchic initiate cannot only touch chaos, but draw it through into the real world.

A true master can even learn to puncture a hole directly into Limbo.

BECOMING AN ANARCHIC INITIATE

The wilder class provides characters both the proper frame of mind and the wild surge class feature, and thus is the most standard beginning for anarchic initiates.

The prestige class also draws those who, through natural talent or a desire to live on the edge, have learned to channel psionic power to great effect at a cost to their own bodies.

Since anarchic initiates are still concerned with manifesting powers, very few initiates multiclass (aside from the levels they take in their original class), because few desire to lose any levels of manifesting ability.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Skills: Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks.

Special: Wild surge class feature or Overchannel feat.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Autohypnosis, Bluff, Concentration, Diplomacy, Intimidate, Knowledge (the planes) Knowledge (psionics), Listen, Psicraft, Sense Motive, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

Anarchic initiates devote themselves not to conquering the chaos within their minds, but to subsuming themselves within it and, by doing so, enhancing their connection to the anarchy within the universe as a whole until they can bring forth primal chaos at will.

All of the following are class features of the anarchic initiate prestige class.

Powers Known: At every level, you gain additional power points per day, an increase in manifester level, and access to new powers as if you had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming an anarchic initiate, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifester level. Chaotic Surge (Su): You embrace the chaos that underlies both your own turbulent mind and that of reality itself. Whenever you attempt a wild surge, you can instead choose to attempt a chaotic surge.

When you attempt a chaotic surge, the benefit (and potential enervation) of a standard wild surge is unchanged. In addition to these effects, whenever you attempt a wild surge, you can choose to infuse the surge with the boiling possibility of real chaos.

All variable numeric effects of a power successfully manifested with a chaotic surge are altered by a variable amount.

A character with the Overchannel feat instead of the wild surge ability can also benefit from chaotic surge.

The ability functions as described above, except you can activate it when using Overchannel.

The benefits of Overchannel (and the damage you take from it) are unchanged.

Roll d% to determine the result, according to the following table.

d%	Result
01–25	None
26–50	Minus 50%
51–75	Plus 50%
76–100	Double

The variable numeric change from the chaotic surge is calculated after the power's level is adjusted for the base effect of the wild surge or Overchannel.

Once the effective level of the power is determined, it is modified according to the table.

A result of none means the power manifests normally (but taking into account the wild surge or Overchannel).

A result of minus 50% means all variable numeric effects of the power function at half normal level, rounding down.

A result of plus 50% means that all variable numeric effects of the power are increased by one-half (much as if the power had been altered with the Empower Power feat).

A result of double means all variable numeric effects of the power are maximized, as if by the Maximize Power feat.

For the purposes of feats that modify potential downsides of psychic enervation, a chaotic surge counts as a wild surge.

Anarchic Grace (Su): At 2nd level, you more fully accept the random nature of reality.

Once per day, you can tap into this randomness to make your movements and posture unpredictable.

This effect results in attackers having a 20% miss chance on all their attacks.

Even true seeing and similar effects can't offset this ability. Activating the effect is a free action, and it lasts for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

When it ends, you are automatically treated as if enervated.

Wild Surge (Su): As you continue to gain levels, you improve your wild surge ability.

Your wild surge improves at 3rd level and again at 7th level.

The number indicated on Table 2–1 is added to your current wild surge ability rating to determine the boost given to your manifester level.

If you do not already have the wild surge ability, you gain it at 3rd level.

This ability functions as the wilder class feature (EPH 31).

Psychic Enervation (Ex): At 3rd level, you gain the psychic enervation class feature (EPH 31) if you do not already have it.

Clarity of Confusion (Su): Starting at 4th level, you gain a +2 insight bonus on saves against compulsion effects and effects with the lawful descriptor.

Chaotic Breach, Minor (Su): At 6th level, you can breach reality itself, allowing the chaotic influence of Limbo to seep into reality.

You can trigger a breach a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Once a breach comes fully into being, it has a duration of 1 round per class level (you can dismiss it early as a free action).

As a standard action, you can trigger a chaotic breach that takes 1d4 rounds to fully come into being, accompanied by discharges of multicolored light, wild gusts, and deep rumbling sounds.

The breach occurs in a 20-foot-radius spread, the center of which you can place up to 100 feet away.

Once it is placed, the spread is fixed.

Once the breach is fully realized, all powers, psi-like abilities, spells, and spell-like abilities manifested, cast, or used in the affected radius are impeded by the chaotic energies of Limbo and have a chance to go awry.

Your ability to manifest powers or use psi-like abilities is unimpeded.

All other manifesters, spellcasters, or creatures must make a manifester level check or caster level check against a DC of $10 + 1/2$ your class level + the level of the attempted power or spell.

If the check fails, roll on the table in the Wild Magic section (DMG 149) to determine the outcome of the effect. The table only references spells, but powers are affected in the same way.

Exceptions include references to a spell not being expended (power points are not expended, instead) or to material components not being expended (since powers do not have components).

Postpone Enervation: At 8th level, you discover that cause and effect are bound less tightly than you had realized.

You gain the Postpone Enervation feat (page 57) as a bonus feat.

Chaotic Breach, Complete (Su): At 10th level, you can completely pierce reality and punch a hole into the outer plane of Limbo once per day.

As with a minor chaotic breach, you can trigger the breach as a standard action; it takes 1d4 rounds to fully come into being.

Once a breach comes fully into being, it has a duration of 1 round per class level (you can dismiss it early as a free action).

When a complete breach occurs, it rips a hole in reality. The hole takes the shape of a 10-foot-radius sphere in the center of a 50-foot-radius spread (the same radius as a minor breach) on both affected planes.

This larger area exists on both affected planes and contains the traits of both affected planes.

The hole at the center is an open portal between the planes, where creatures from either plane can move through the breach at will.

If you choose to form the breach directly on a creature, the creature must make a Will save (DC $10 + 1/2$ your class level + your Cha modifier).

On a successful save, the breach forms normally 1d4 rounds later (and with enough warning for the creature to move away from the rift).

On a failed save, the breach doesn't form at all; instead, the subject is pushed bodily through into Limbo.

Unless the creature has a method of returning, it is marooned in the chaotic realm of Limbo.

PLAYING AN ANARCHIC INITIATE

As an anarchic initiate, you adventure to practice your abilities and gain further understanding and mastery of the linkage of chaos with the material world, where all the various elements of cosmology intersect.

During your constant exploration, you can offer assistance to those who suffer under the tyranny of laws too narrowly interpreted (and might in fact delight in undertaking such causes).

You are living proof that the universe is formed of anarchy and chaos, and you delight in bringing aspects of this truth to the attention of those who cling to the illusion of order and security, especially when those false ideals threaten the well-being of others.

There is an organization known as the Scofflaws that draws initiates into its fold.

Its mandate is to fight oppressive authority and foster a sense of independence from senseless rules.

However, anarchic initiates are always suspicious of doctrine and organized groups, even among their own number.

You must overcome a basic prejudice in order to associate with movements or causes of any sort (though adventuring groups are typically too small to trigger this prejudice).

Sometimes a would-be wilder seeks to study with an anarchic initiate for a period, because the initiate understands the basic passions, triggers, and psychological techniques required to trigger a wild surge.

Initiates have a distaste for indoctrination, and they typically refrain from evangelizing even to wilders.

If properly petitioned, however, you need not be shy in explaining your philosophy and offering further instruction on the topic.

COMBAT

In combat, you use your impressive array of psionic powers for both attack and defense against your enemies and opponents, just as any other psionic character would.

Of course, as a wilder and an anarchic initiate, you can call upon swells of psionic potential that regular psionic characters cannot access (in the form of wild and chaotic surges). When you reach 6th level, you can attempt to neutralize the abilities of spellcasting or manifesting foes with your minor chaotic breach ability—if you're working alone, be sure to center the breach on yourself to have the optimal effect.

Once you gain the complete chaotic breach ability at 10th level, you might want to save the use of this ability until you fight against a particularly potent foe.

Use it by forming the breach directly on your opponent and try to push it into Limbo.

If successful, you have put an end to your difficulties, and your opponent will probably not trouble you again.

ADVANCEMENT

Prior to your becoming an anarchic initiate, chaos and the nature of reality likely held some significant degree of fascination for you.

Since you devoted yourself to studying the effects of these forces and attuning yourself with them, you have likely continued with research into psionics, wild surges, and the planes (particularly Limbo).

The rest of your time is spent in practical application of your research—after all, psionic characters are a cerebral bunch who learn the truths of their abilities through self-contemplation, at least in part.

Your path is your own, since no overarching organization of anarchic initiates exists to recruit you into its ranks.

The very idea is comical, as individualistic as you and the few other initiates you have met are.

While you are happy to discuss your research and beliefs with other initiates or wilders, you don't particularly have a need to seek them out.

In many ways, the anarchic initiate prestige class can be viewed as the natural continuation of the wilder class.

As with regular wilders, it isn't a bad idea for an initiate to pick up the Enervation Endurance feat (page 53).

As you increase in level, the powers you choose should include ones that have variable numeric effects, since the chaotic surge is dependent on this quality.

Of course, any time you can discover some method through which to learn or add the chaos descriptor to a power, you should do so.

RESOURCES

Anarchic initiates can attempt to make contacts with the Scofflaws or similar splinter groups for information or temporary aid, if they can overcome their own prejudice against asking an organization for anything.

ANARCHIC INITIATES IN THE WORLD

"Most initiates have nothing but disdain for kings, governors, dukes, ruling councils, and other authorities.

While this isn't necessarily a bad trait, open, public scorn of Officialdom tends to create powerful enemies.

Subtle, anarchists are not."

—Ialdabode, warning his pupil against the path of the anarchic initiate

Anarchic initiates can be present in any world that is widely populated with psionic creatures and characters.

They represent a random element, change for change's own sake.

They are the quintessential activists, always looking to overturn the rule of bad laws (if they are good-aligned), or overthrowing well-governed republics (if evil).

Neutral initiates are rare, but such characters often become legendary within the ranks of their comrades, since their vision is unclouded by moral concerns.

Anarchic initiates spend their days in travel and contemplation, with an occasional rant and wild outburst (usually against the foes an adventurer comes across).

Anarchic initiates enjoy speaking about their philosophy, both the cosmological implications of chaos underlying reality and the role of anarchy in the power structures of sentient creatures.

ORGANIZATION

While the vast majority of anarchic initiates avoid large organizations, a few loosely knit groups exist.

One such group is the Scofflaws, made up primarily of anarchic initiates.

The Scofflaws is only an organization in the loosest sense. It is almost more a concept than a group, in that it is made up of small cells that come together to accomplish specific tasks and then disband.

The cells have no hierarchy to answer to and act independently of any other existing cells.

Its members are expected to find their own problems to solve and recruit others to help complete the cell as necessary.

A normal Scofflaws cell consists of characters with different abilities, including those with martial, spellcasting, divine, or psionic training.

No cell is allowed to exist for longer than it takes to achieve a particular goal.

While many of those who made up a previous cell might also make up the next cell, the Scofflaws believe that the continuous, unbroken existence of a cell would lead to doctrine, laws, and loss of random uncertainty.

Because the group has no headquarters or centralized location for meetings, it is difficult for people to petition the Scofflaws for aid, or to take vengeance against a Scofflaw cell for its actions.

The founder of the Scofflaw concept, a halfling named Embersage Fenwillow, is herself an anarchic initiate.

In crafting the organization, such as it is, she attempted to balance the good that an organized body can accomplish against the evil an organized body can do if it is burdened with bylaws and founded on unchanging principles. She also enjoyed the inherent chaos of breaking apart and putting together a group of people over an uncertain time interval.

To form a cell on your own, you must have previously been a part of a Scofflaw cell and successfully completed its mission.

Once someone fits the above criteria, that person is free to organize a cell of his or her own, pulling people together for the purpose at hand and then dissolving the group once the goal has been achieved.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people are not aware that anarchic initiates draw their power from a mental connection with the plane of Limbo. Chaos and anarchy are viewed as more dangerous than law, however, so general NPC attitudes toward someone calling himself an anarchic initiate range from indifferent to unfriendly.

If an NPC actually witnesses an anarchic initiate breaching reality with leakage from the plane of Limbo, the resultant fear shifts the NPC's attitude toward hostile.

Groups in power (especially those who abuse their power) sometimes pass rules to ban (or take into custody) anarchic initiates, if they know of the profession.

ANARCHIC INITIATE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (psionics) or Knowledge (the planes) can research anarchic initiates to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: An anarchic initiate can trigger a type of fit that can supercharge his psionic abilities—unless it knocks him for a loop instead.

DC 15: An anarchic initiate is a kind of psionic wilder, one who embraces the chaos that he says underlies all of reality.

DC 20: Anarchic initiates can tap into Limbo, the plane of chaos itself.

Finding an anarchic initiate is a hit-or-miss proposition at best, unless you happen to be a wilder.

Wilders more commonly become anarchic initiates than any other class in the game, and thus have more connections to anarchic initiates than any other group. Should a character wish to find an anarchic initiate, add a +2 circumstance bonus on the check if he or she is asking a wilder for information.

ANARCHIC INITIATES IN THE GAME

Players who take on the role of anarchic initiates should be reminded that it is only large power structures and ridiculous rules that are anathema to the class—the interpersonal interactions of a small group of adventures is the sort of chaotic interaction that anarchic initiates prefer. Players who enjoy challenging the status quo will likely enjoy playing anarchic initiate characters.

Characters who embrace the chaotic side of life also make good initiates, as do those who enjoy taking on injustice or larger-than-life quests.

ADAPTATION

If an anarchic initiate wants to play in a campaign cosmology that doesn't include Limbo, it is easy enough to change the focus of the character to a different chaotic realm, chaotic deity, or powerful item that encompasses uncertainty.

For instance, in a FORGOTTEN REALMS campaign, an anarchic initiate might draw her chaotic inspiration from the outer plane of Fury's Heart, or even from an aspect of Talos himself.

In an EBERRON campaign, an anarchic initiate could be inspired by the plane of Kythri, the Churning Chaos.

ANARCHIC INITIATE TRAINING GROUNDS: THE ETERNAL CIRCLE

Drawn to this remote citadel, wilders travel from around the world to expunge every last element of order from their minds, embracing chaos and becoming an anarchic initiate. The building's structure mirrors the eternal cosmos, providing endless challenges for potential anarchic initiates to focus their minds and hone their skills.

The master of the school is Ven'Do (male human wilder 10/anarchic initiate 10), a legend among wilders dedicated to their craft.

The school is built into the side of a rocky outcropping in the middle of a remote mountain range.

Once a visitor is inside, the halls of the school seem to circle endlessly downward.

As students master each new challenge, they are allowed to move deeper into the school.

Each circle and challenge they overcome strips another orderly, doctrinal constraint from their minds.

In the end, they must pass a test against Ven'Do himself.

It is rumored that Ven'Do possesses the highest status among anarchic initiates, in that he is capable of completely breaching reality, and thereby allowing into the world the undiluted chaos of Limbo.

The Eternal Circle was founded a century ago.

Some stories hint that the original master was a mind flayer.

Graduates of its halls are sworn to secrecy regarding all they see and learn while enrolled.

This is especially true for their encounter with Ven'Do, which no graduate can recall once he or she leaves the Eternal Circle.

The memory is so thoroughly blocked that no subsequent mental probe has ever successfully recalled or revealed this encounter.

All questions about the nature of the challenges, or anything about Ven'Do, are answered with silence.

Powerful anarchic initiates live permanently at the site.

They guard the structure with their psionic might, and also prepare initiates who wish to enter the Eternal Circle.

A multicolored crystal shard is given to each would-be initiate who wishes to try the circle, along with instructions for the crystal's use: "When the challenge of the Eternal Circle becomes too great, break the crystal.

You will instantly be plucked from danger and brought back here.

Do not use the crystal except in dire need, however; those who use the crystal are forbidden from reentering the Eternal Circle for a year's duration.

Only break the crystal if you have no other choice".

EBON SAINT

"Generally speaking, if I'm involved, things have gone too far already."

—Jaed Catt

The ebon saint lives in the darkness, but seeks to expose his enemies to the light.

Flitting from the shadows to learn the secrets of his enemies and dispatch them quickly, the ebon saint seeks to further his personal agenda by gathering and exploiting information on those who oppose him.

The goal of these dark infiltrators is to sneak into the lairs of their enemies, uncover their dark secrets, and expose them to the world.

Whether an ebon saint seeks to right the wrongs of the world, maintain the status quo, or strike tyrannical fear into the hearts of the oppressed, he does so from the cold, unchanging certainty of the darkness in which he resides.

BECOMING AN EBON SAINT

Ebon saints nearly all begin their careers as lurks, since that class provides the necessary foundation for ebon saint abilities.

A fair number, however, are rogues with the Wild Talent feat.

Whereas a lurk might use the shadows to achieve his ends, an ebon saint lives in them, seeking to master the art and discipline of the dire strike in the service of an ideology that is greater than any one person.

The nature of that ideology is determined by each ebon saint, and is molded by his alignment and life experiences.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Disguise 8 ranks.

Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Improved Feint.

Psionics: Must have a power point reserve of at least 1 power point.

Special: Sneak attack +1d6 or psionic sneak attack +1d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Disguise, Escape Artist, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Psicraft, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Swim, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

Unlocking secrets is an ebon saint's stock in trade.

The class focuses somewhat on stealth, but mostly on the acquisition of information.

Ebon saints' abilities allow them to steal what they seek from the minds of their foes.

Powers Known: At every level above 1st level, you gain additional power points per day, an increase in manifester level, and access to new powers as if you had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming an ebon saint, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifester level.

Dire Strike (Ex): Ebon saints are trained at infiltration and gathering of information through subversive means.

If you study a creature for 1 round and then make a successful sneak attack against that creature, you gain an insight into that creature's abilities.

For the rest of that encounter, you gain a bonus on attack rolls made against that creature equal to your ebon saint level.

You also gain a dodge bonus to AC against that creature's attacks equal to one-half your class level, rounding down (minimum 1).

In addition, a creature you have used dire strike against is subject to dire augments that are unique to the ebon saint class.

Once you have completed your round of study, you must make your dire strike attempt within the next 3 rounds. If you do not, you must spend another round studying your target before you can attempt a dire strike.

You cannot use a dire strike against an unconscious opponent.

As with a sneak attack, you can deal nonlethal damage with a dire strike, which becomes important when you master the disappear from the mind ability.

Shadowfriend (Ex): While you are psionically focused, you gain an enhancement bonus on Hide checks and Move Silently checks equal to your class level.

Dire Augments: An ebon saint gains dire augments that function much as the lurk class feature does (see page 14).

While a lurk's abilities cover a spread of options, however, you have dedicated yourself to the art of infiltration and espionage.

Using a dire augment is a swift action.

You can spend a number of power points less than or equal to your character level on a single attack.

You can use your dire augments a number of times per day equal to 3 + your ebon saint level.

In addition, you can only use your dire augments to modify a dire strike attack, not a normal sneak attack.

At 3rd level, you can combine any two of your dire augments in a single dire strike (as a single swift action), provided you can pay the power point cost of each ability.

At 5th level, you can combine any three of your dire augments in a single dire strike, provided you can pay the power point cost of each ability.

Thought Theft (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can gain insight into any hazards you will encounter in the near future that your victim is aware of.

If your dire strike is successful, you can access the creature's mind in a manner similar to the read thoughts power (EPH 128).

The information you ascertain is the nature of any hazards the creature is aware of within 50 feet.

Hazards include traps, enemies, and other obstacles intended to impede you or cause you harm.

You become aware of these hazards in only the most general sense.

You might learn, for example, that a trap lies 30 feet down a corridor from your victim, but not the nature of the trap or how to bypass it.

You might also learn that a patrol of four guards comes down the corridor every few minutes, but not the race or weaponry of each of the guards.

The creature can attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Int modifier) to resist the thought theft.

Using this augment costs 3 power points.

For every 2 additional power points you spend, the save DC of the ability increases by 1.

Mind Interrogation (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you gain the ability to steal specific important information directly from the mind of the victim of one of your dire strikes.

When you make a successful dire strike against a foe that deals damage, you can visualize one question in your mind and spend 4 power points.

If your victim knows the answer to the question, you immediately know the answer as well.

Steal Form (Su): At 4th level, you learn the pinnacle of successful infiltration: You can become the victims of your dire strikes.

If you make a successful dire strike attack and spend 5 power points, you can shift your form into that of your victim as a full-round action, as if using an alter self spell (PH 197) cast by a spellcaster of your ebon saint level.

You can shift back into your own form with another full-round action; doing so does not require an expenditure of power points.

You can also shift back into the form of your victim again at any time during the next 24 hours by spending 5 more power points.

You only have a total time of 50 minutes to use your victim's form, but you can spread that time out over the 24-hour period.

Once 24 hours have elapsed, you can no longer access the victim's form unless you seek out that creature and perform another successful dire strike against it (if it is still alive).

You are subject to the same limitations as described in the alter self spell when using this ability.

You can "collect" a total number of five forms in a given 24-hour period that you can use, although you must pay power points separately for each one and you must still successfully use dire strike against each victim.

Disappear from the Mind (Su): At 5th level, you master the art of disappearing right in front of your victim.

When you make a successful dire strike attack that deals nonlethal damage, you can spend 5 power points to erase your presence from the victim's mind.

This works as the cloud mind power.

Your victim can attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Int modifier) to resist the effect.

If you have dealt lethal damage to your victim within the previous 24 hours, you cannot use this ability against that target.

If you deal lethal damage to the target at any point after using this ability successfully, it remembers everything about this encounter.

You must remove yourself from the victim's line of sight within 1 round of using this power, or the creature remembers everything.

You must remain out of sight for at least 1 minute; once this time has passed, the creature treats you as if the previous encounter never happened if you again expose yourself to its line of sight.

Sneak Attack (Ex): At 3rd level, the damage you deal on a sneak attack improves by 1d6 points.

If you have the psionic sneak attack class feature, that ability improves instead.

If you have both sneak attack and psionic sneak attack, choose one or the other to improve.

PLAYING AN EBON SAINT

You adventure to further your personal ideology.

One ebon saint might be concerned with religious matters, another with philosophical issues, and yet another with something else entirely.

The one sure thread that ties you to all other ebon saints is your belief that those who oppose your goals should be exposed and removed, or as the saints say, "rendered unto the Ebon Dawn".

Having a differing viewpoint alone isn't enough to qualify someone to become an ebon saint's target.

To be marked for the Ebon Dawn, a creature's entire philosophical axis must be opposed to yours.

For example, an ebon saint might be convinced that slavery is the greatest injustice and seek to destroy all slave traders. Another might believe that only through complete acceptance of servitude will the populace at large be truly productive, and thus might seek to make a living in the service of a terrible tyrant.

Still another might believe that a specific religion is the true path to enlightenment, and seek to expose another church (or churches) as a group of charlatans or corrupt bureaucrats.

Whatever the cause he espouses, an ebon saint holds an unshakable conviction to his personal ideology.

COMBAT

You should try to begin every fight from the shadows, studying your opponent to set up a dire strike attempt. This establishes a combat advantage that eventually allows you to make use of a host of abilities, enabling you to further your cause by obtaining key information.

Unlike some who strike from the shadows, you are not averse to relying on the assistance of your companions. Indeed, without allies, you are hard-pressed to use your abilities to their full effect.

You can move fluidly within melee, looking for an opponent that is already distracted by one of your companions.

Seek out flanking or near-flanking positions from which to strike, or else find shadowed areas from which you can set up a dire strike.

Eventually, you can use your abilities to take on the appearance of your foes, enabling you to move through enemy strongholds more easily and find the highest-ranking opponents.

At the highest levels, you can make surgical strikes, gaining information and then erasing your presence from your victim's mind.

ADVANCEMENT

This path is chosen by a lurk or rogue whose ability to bring down his foes has evolved into a sort of personal code, or even a pseudo-religion.

These dedicated individuals often end up gaining a reputation for their single-minded pursuit of a goal. Ebon saints look for individuals with that drive and conviction and set out to recruit them into the organization, making the group stronger as a whole. After becoming an ebon saint, you are encouraged to pursue your cause through whatever means you find worthwhile.

The organization is a loose one, more a brotherhood of ideologues than a physical collection of resources and individuals.

You are largely left to your own devices as far as training and acquiring resources are concerned.

As the other saints look at it, if you are devoted enough to a truly worthy core of beliefs, you will find your own way to power.

As you progress in power, it is important to choose powers that aid in mobility (such as psionic dimension door and psionic freedom of movement) or that give you a combat advantage (such as psychofeedback and temporal acceleration).

Nonpsionic feats such as Dodge, Mobility, and Spring Attack can be a great help as well. Any magic item or psionic item that enhances your Hide and Move Silently checks (boots and cloak of elvenkind) or that makes you more agile (gloves of Dexterity) is desirable.

Any item that increases the DCs for the saving throws against a saint's special abilities (headband of intellect) is desirable as well.

RESOURCES

You were initially recruited into the ebon saints by an existing member of the class, who sought you out because of your strong convictions.

He trained you and taught you the basics of being a saint, and how to turn your abilities to even greater advantage in pursuit of your cause.

Once initial training is done, you are turned loose in the world to pursue your own philosophy.

Like-minded saints sometimes join forces on a particularly difficult task, but most work alone or in small groups with individuals of other classes.

EBON SAINTS IN THE WORLD

"Ebon saint?"

Ebon slayer is more like it.

On the other hand, that Jaed Catt feller keeps the crime lords in the merchant district on their toes, so I'm not one to complain."

—Zachary Druthers, blacksmith

Ebon saints are a great source of adventure.

They are almost completely self-motivated, and one is always looking for ways to further his personal ideology.

As a PC, a saint adds spice to any group of characters because of his dedication to his ideology.

As an allied NPC, a saint makes a PC group all the stronger.

A saint is excellent at uncovering secrets, so such a character makes an excellent vehicle for advancing a plot.

As an enemy NPC, an ebon saint can make a great recurring villain as he attempts to slay or stop the members of an adventuring group.

An evil ebon saint, with his enhanced ability to hide, his acceptance of the dark, and his strong conviction about the way the world should be, could be set up in direct opposition to the PCs' pursuits, embodying a philosophy that directly contradicts that of the PCs.

ORGANIZATION

Each ebon saint is governed by his own chosen system of beliefs.

Where those beliefs are challenged by civic authority, an ebon saint is viewed as a rebel, or in some instances, a vigilante.

Where they are supported by the community, he is regarded as a hero.

In almost all cases, however, an ebon saint and his allies operate outside the bounds of established organization structures.

Some ebon saints share beliefs with larger groups and latch on to those organizations to further their own ends.

An ebon saint with particular spiritual convictions might become an agent of a particular church, for example.

Some saints become convinced that the best way to pursue their personal ideology is to recruit like-minded individuals, so they form their own organizations dedicated to those convictions.

NPC REACTIONS

Ebon saints take pride in remaining unnoticed in the shadows.

An individual ebon saint is far more likely to be judged on his own reputation than his membership in such a nebulous organization.

Those NPCs who do know of the ebon saints have an initial attitude of indifferent toward such a character.

If they are among the target of the character's beliefs, however, their attitude shifts to unfriendly or even hostile.

Other ebon saints are typically friendly toward such a character based solely on his status as an ebon saint.

However, if the two characters' ideologies are at odds, the attitude of each one toward the other varies according to the extent of the difference.

EBON SAINT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research an individual ebon saint to learn more about him.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: [Name of NPC] strikes from the darkness.

If he reveals himself, it's likely the last thing you'll see.

DC 15: [Name of NPC] has been disrupting the efforts of [name of organization or group].

He seems to have a real vendetta going, or someone is paying him well to keep the pressure on.

DC 20: [Name of NPC] is an ebon saint.

Each ebon saint is dedicated strongly to his own personal convictions, and will do everything he can to reveal his enemies and expose their weaknesses for the world to see.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable ebon saint, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

EBON SAINTS IN THE GAME

An ebon saint PC might be the catalyst for events in your game, or he might simply follow the rest of the group, attempting to enforce his ideology wherever he goes.

His fervent adherence to a cause can provide a handy way to involve characters in an adventure, though it can lead to conflict within the group if it is relied on too often, or if the ebon saint's player decides his goals take precedence over everything else.

People who enjoy playing ebon saints are often attracted to the strong sense of purpose these characters have, combined with the freedom to set their own goals (as opposed to having to exemplify an alignment, for example). Players who enjoy creating self-professed vigilantes will find this class attractive as well.

Ideally, an ebon saint PC has aims and goals that are generally aligned with those of the other characters.

In this role, the ebon saint is a friend, if one with potential thorns.

ADAPTATION

Whether the ebon saint in your game has the spotlight or waits in the wings, you'll want to be sure to work with the player to make sure that the ideology his character pursues doesn't conflict too strongly with other members of the party.

Next, devise an NPC or an NPC organization whose ideology directly conflicts with the ebon saint's.

This gives the character a great deal to worry about and plan for.

The open-ended nature of the prestige class leaves plenty of room for working the class into your game.

ECTOPIC ADEPT

“Ectoplasm is the clay that I turn upon the potter’s wheel of my mind.

When I’m finished, like all art, it takes on a life of its own”

—Giles Stoneforge

Ectoplasm is the preferred medium of creation for the ectopic adept, and his mind serves as the mold, kiln, and wheel upon which his works are turned.

An adept sees each new astral construct he creates as a unique work of art, an exquisite sculpture serving a specific purpose in the arsenal of this most dangerous crafter.

Other psionic characters seek to perfect mind and body in the fire of their own will.

An ectopic adept is more concerned with achieving perfection by creating the ideal astral construct, regardless of the transitory nature of his creations.

An adept seeks any opportunity, martial or otherwise, to demonstrate his skills in sculpting the changeable astral medium of ectoplasm.

BECOMING AN ECTOPIC ADEPT

While any psionic character with the astral construct power might be eligible for this prestige class, the truest potential adept is a shaper, who begins and ends each day considering all the uses and permutations that can be achieved with ectoplasm.

Constantly looking for new ways to sculpt ectoplasm, an ectopic adept is largely unconcerned with developing his mental abilities except so far as such development advances his psionic sculpting craft.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skill: Psicraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Skill Focus (Craft [sculpting]), Ectopic Form (any).

Powers: Must be able to manifest the astral construct power.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft (sculpting), Disguise, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Psicraft, Use Psionic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

An ectopic adept specializes in manipulating and altering the already powerful astral constructs.

His abilities let him more fully customize his creations.

Manifesting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new power points per day and an increase in manifester level (and powers known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming an ectopic adept, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining power points per day, manifester level, and powers known.

Resilient Construct (Su): Calling on your knowledge of sculpture and form, you can craft more resilient astral constructs.

Any construct you create with the astral construct power has 2d6 temporary hit points that last for the duration of the astral construct power.

Your astral constructs no longer gain the benefit of this ability if you do not have a number of ranks in Craft (sculpting) equal to or greater than your manifester level.

Ectopic Form: At 2nd level and 4th level, you gain Ectopic Form (page 50) as a bonus feat.

Rapid Creation (Ex): Calling on your knowledge of sculpture and form, at 3rd level you can manifest astral construct as a standard action once per day for every class level you have.

You lose access to this ability if you do not have a number of ranks in Craft (sculpting) equal to or greater than your manifester level.

Double Creation (Su): At 5th level, you become able to better manipulate the complex strands of ectoplasm that comprise your astral constructs.

Once per day, you can manifest astral construct a second time while a construct you have created still exists.

(Before you attain 5th level, you can have only one astral construct created at a time).

You lose access to this ability if you do not have a number of ranks in Craft (sculpting) equal to or greater than your manifester level.

PLAYING AN ECTOPIC ADEPT

You seek adventure to test your creations against all the dangers the world can offer.

You purposely seek out conflicts that allow you to create progressively more lethal astral constructs.

Other adventurers might be alarmed by the zeal with which you approach the battlefield—an adept rarely retreats from a fight.

You frequently enjoy taunting your opponents as they are being pummeled into submission by your latest creation.

To your mind, overkill is impossible where your constructs are concerned.

You delight in using the biggest, nastiest astral construct capable of getting the job done.

It’s important to note, however, that you value your constructs as much for their beauty as for their ability to trounce your enemies.

COMBAT

If you have more than one Ectopic Form feat, you have access to a variety of specialized astral constructs to use in combat.

You typically begin combat by creating an astral construct suitable for the conflict at hand.

Many adepts would prefer to never personally enter a conflict, instead choosing to manifest powers that aid their constructs in melee.

Whether you act alone or as a member of an adventuring company, your tactics are the same.

You create astral constructs to absorb the worst your opponents have to offer, and you offer support and help for your construct as needed during a battle.

Once in a while, after you have created an astral construct, you might use your secondary powers to support your comrades (especially if that support allows your comrade to flank an enemy with one of your constructs).

ADVANCEMENT

Among ectopic adepts, it's a common thought that adepts are born, not made.

No one comes and asks you if you'd like to be an ectopic adept; you can seek out training, but it is your choice to do so.

Training to become an ectopic adept is like training to become a master artiste.

You practice your art as part of an eternal search for perfection.

Apprenticeships among existing ectopic adepts are common, as young adepts work to master the skills necessary for advancement.

Each ectopic adept has his own style and indeed preferred forms for astral constructs.

It is the perfection of these forms that gives an ectopic adept true fulfillment.

Once you become an ectopic adept, you spend years testing and honing your skills.

The search for the perfect astral construct form drives adepts to greatness (or ultimate failure).

Some small groups of ectopic adepts occasionally come together to study and discuss their work together, but without forming any overarching organization to which they owe allegiance.

The path that an ectopic adept must follow to succeed at his craft is relatively straightforward—learn as much about the construction and enhancement of astral constructs as possible.

Feats such as Boost Construct (EPH 43) are mainstays to an adept.

RESOURCES

Once you leave your adept apprenticeship, you are largely on your own.

A good relationship with your former master might give you some resources you can call on in a time of need, but no other adept is beholden to help you.

Of course, many ectopic adepts feels a sort of kinship with one another, and one might be prevailed upon for some limited assistance in a troubled time.

What resources does an ectopic adept need, however, other than his mind and skill?

After all, the Astral Plane is a limitless resource, filled with all the ectoplasm an adept could ever hope to shape.

ECTOPIC ADEPTS IN THE WORLD

“As long as he keeps makin’ them big green spinnin’ critters, Giles is okay in my book.”

—Kressus the Gray, dwarf fighter

In regions where war is common, an ectopic adept always finds employment.

Whether he joins an adventuring party, becomes a freelance “cleaner”, or slides into a virtueless career as a bounty hunter, an ectopic adept has talents that are useful in a wide variety of situations.

Moreover, the sculpted astral constructs created by an adept are artistic marvels.

Those being thrashed by an emerald gyre astral construct are hard pressed to find anything of beauty or subtlety in the adept's craft, but an adept finds both subtlety and beauty in bringing his deadly, short-lived sculptures into the world.

When conflict doesn't beckon, an ectopic adept spends his day in study and practice, crafting astral constructs for the sheer joy of doing so.

Perfection isn't always found in the function of the construct, but in its appearance and grace of form.

ORGANIZATION

The Astral Sculptor's Academy is a private organization of psionic characters consisting primarily of psion shapers. A special place in the organization is reserved for ectopic adepts, who are the acknowledged masters of form manipulation and invention.

The academy has few, if any, open adversaries.

No one in his right mind is willing to directly oppose a group of astral construct—creating psions, whose worst nightmares can be sculpted into reality and sent after a transgressor.

In addition to providing training to members in the arts of metacreativity and sculpture, one arm of the academy promotes the use of its more militaristic members in the armies of rich city states, powerful adventuring companies, and other groups seeking to beef up their strength.

Any contracts arranged by the academy for individual members always pays a better than average wage, though the academy extracts a percentage for its own coffers.

The academy is governed by a board of experienced shapers, including several ectopic adepts.

The chairperson, Alliyon Dak'aris, sits at the head of the board through an elective process that occurs every other year, though Dak'aris (an ectopic adept herself) has served for more than a decade.

The board sets syllabi for the various courses it provides, arranges finances so that the base materials required for all the sculpting classes can be obtained, keeps track of membership rolls, establishes policy, and negotiates with other organizations with whom the academy deals.

Membership in the academy is broken down into novitiate, journeyman, and elder ranks.

Novitiates are those new to the academy who have yet to complete a full year of membership in good standing.

They are considered to be on probationary status and can be dismissed from the academy should they refuse to apply themselves.

Upon completion of their first year, novitiates become journeymen.

Journeyman is the most common rank.

Unless a member wishes to take up some manner of administrative task, he usually remain at that rank.

Elders, all of whom have been part of the organization for at least a decade, handle the academy's administrative tasks.

NPC REACTIONS

Anyone who knows about psionics or has seen ectopic adepts fight is likely to know at least a little about the prestige class.

The ability that ectopic adepts have to casually create beautiful, lethal pawns to send against their enemies guarantees that the class's reputation precedes it wherever it is known.

NPCs who are aware of the class typically have a starting attitude of friendly toward an adept, if only to avoid angering the character.

The exception to this is if the NPC is involved in a conflict and knows the opposition is using ectopic adepts, in which case his initial reaction is unfriendly at best.

ECTOPIC ADEPT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (psionics) can research ectopic adepts to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Ectopic adepts are some kind of psionic character.

DC 15: Ectopic adepts are psionic shapers who specialize in creating astral constructs.

DC 20: Ectopic adepts can usually be found at the Astral Sculptor's Academy, but don't cross anyone you meet there. They're touchy, and always looking for a reason to call up one of their ectoplasmic horrors.

ECTOPIC ADEPTS IN THE GAME

Whether as a valuable member of an adventuring company, or as part of an enemy mercenary group, an ectopic adept is easy to fit into any campaign where psionic rules are used. Ectopic adepts can be doughty heroes just as easily as they can be dangerous enemies.

Psionic characters who truly want to focus on astral constructs, their creation and use in combat, are likely to find this prestige class a welcome occupation.

Since ectopic adepts live for battle, too much intrigue and maneuvering can spoil their fun.

To them, direct conflict is the spice of life.

ADAPTATION

The ectopic adept is a well-contained class.

In any game that allows psionic rules, ectopic adepts should work well.

The organization associated with the class, the Astral Sculptor's Academy, is completely dispensable.

It could be either eliminated or replaced with an organization better suited to the campaign.

ASTRAL SCULPTORS ACADEMY: THE GUILD HALL ECTOPIC

The most unique feature of this large opaque dome is that its outer walls are composed entirely of stabilized ectoplasm, which is as hard as stone.

The dome of this large guild hall gives the appearance of a gargantuan pearl imbedded in the ground in the middle of the city.

The ectoplasm does a perfect job of keeping the interior of the structure warm during the winter, providing more than adequate insulation.

By the same token, it also remains relatively cool inside during the summer.

There are normally eight doors (one facing each of the directions N, S, E, W, NE, NW, SE, and SW) that allow access to the interior, but these can be sealed by the chairperson, who can create a seamless structure with 3-foot-thick ectoplasmic walls (possessing the same toughness and hit points as stone) that can withstand most standard attacks.

Each room of the guild hall houses an extradimensional room with far vaster dimensions than apparent from the outside of the structure.

Most of these extradimensional spaces are given over to instruction in the art of sculpture, beginning with such simple substances as wax and soap, moving up through wood and stone, then to the difficult process of bronze casting.

Only those who can sculpt ectoplasm as well as they can sculpt more mundane substances can become novitiates of the guild.

The guild hall houses the academy's board and many of the elders.

In addition to these august personages, the guild hall maintains a standing guard of eight adept guards (shaper 5/ectopic adept 3), each of whom is charged with protecting the Guild Hall Ectopic.

The current chairperson is Alliyon Dak'aris (LN female human shaper 7/ectopic adept 8).

FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHIC

"For great power, you must sometimes pay a great price, even as you avoid temptations that would turn a less hardened psychic's stomach."

—Zeth'Rin, a flayerspawn psychic

Willing to sacrifice her life, appearance, and even her sanity, the flayerspawn psychic walks a dangerous road, growing in psionic power as she slowly embraces her secret mind flayer heritage.

Some psionic characters take up this class to gain more power, while others do so to gain greater understanding of the illithids.

A few do so because they secretly believe mind flayers to be a superior psionic organism.

BECOMING A FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHIC

Potential flayerspawn psychics, whether multiclass or single-classed, must possess psionic ability.

Potential flayerspawns are restricted in how they obtain this psionic power—only psions and erudites (page 153) possess the proper frame of mind.

From this beginning, potential flayerspawns undergo a slow process, transforming mind and body as they gain and practice abilities common to mind flayers.

Unfortunately, this power comes along with the temptation to embrace portions of their heritage that are truly evil (such as the Illithid Extraction feat, page 61). Those who resist the hunger are capable of maintaining their moral and personal attitudes.

Those who give in and indulge the hunger find their personalities changing to more closely match the creature they are becoming.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Powers: Ability to manifest psionic charm.

Skills: Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks.

Feats: Illithid Heritage.

Language: Undercommon.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Disguise, Hide.

Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Listen, Move Silently, Psicraft, Sense Motive, Spot, Use Psionic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the flayerspawn psychic prestige class.

The main focus is on duplicating the abilities of an illithid, to either become one (in effect) or to gain a greater understanding of the race in general.

Manifesting: At each level indicated on the table, you gain additional power points per day, an increase in manifester level, and access to new powers as if you had also gained a level in a manifesting class to which you belonged before you added the prestige class.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming a flayerspawn psychic, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining power points per day, manifester level, and powers known. Illithid Blast (Su): At 1st level, you gain the Illithid Blast feat.

As a flayerspawn psychic, you gain some additional benefits from taking this feat.

As described on page 61, you can channel power points into a mind blast as a standard action.

The blast stuns everyone who fails a Will save within a 15-foot cone for 1d4 rounds.

As you gain levels in this prestige class, the uses per day, size of the cone, and the number of rounds for which you can stun foes increases.

At 6th level, your mind blast produces a 30-foot cone that stuns foes for 2d4 rounds.

At 10th level, your mind blast produces a 60-foot cone that stuns foes for 3d4 rounds.

Illithid Feat: At 2nd, 4th, and 8th level, you gain a bonus illithid feat.

Choose any illithid feat for which you qualify.

Illithid feats are described on page 61 of this book.

PLAYING A FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHIC

By every race that is aware of their existence mind flayers are considered to be the most powerful and dangerous psionic creatures.

The temptation to take on some of an illithid's power is thus extremely attractive to those who seek power above all else, such as yourself.

Of course, this temptation is particularly strong in characters that are already evil, or among those with a domineering personality trait.

There is no organization of flayerspawn psychics, though those of evil bent who have progressed through all the levels of the class might attempt to join a mind flayer community.

Lawful mind flayers are known for their xenophobia and would probably reject you if they knew your true origin.

If you have undergone substantial physical modification in the acceptance of your heritage, though, you might look so much like an illithid and possess such a similar mindset that you can probably fool other illithids into accepting you into the lower rungs of mind flayer society.

COMBAT

In combat, you can draw upon an arsenal of powers.

You might want to avoid melee combat at lower levels, using your tentacles to attack only as a last resort (if you have taken the Illithid Grapple feat, page 61).

You begin most combats with a mind blast (granted by the illithid Blast feat, page 61).

Unlike a true mind flayer, you can adjust the DC of the mind blast according to the number of power points you are willing to spend on the attack.

With a few rare exceptions, it's best to put as many power points into your mind blast as your manifester level limit allows.

Within an adventuring group, you should try to get off an initial mind blast that won't affect your allies before fading to the rear of the group.

Once the battle is in full swing, you can support your allies with your psionic powers.

ADVANCEMENT

It isn't uncommon for established flayerspawn psychics to recruit impressionable psions and erudites to join them.

It is equally likely that you learned of the process while studying mind flayer lore.

However the knowledge becomes available, once you pick up the Illithid Heritage feat, it is difficult to turn back.

The lure of greater power is too attractive to disregard.

The secondary advantage of the class is the bonus illithid feats it grants.

Because the offensive power of the class is so well assured, you might be best served by picking up illithid feats of a defensive nature, such as Illithid Skin, and feats that provide greater options in all circumstances, such as Illithid Speech.

Of course, you continue to gain manifester levels in your previous manifesting class.

Power choices that enhance your overall versatility are ideal, including (for instance) biofeedback, mental barrier, and psionic dimension door.

RESOURCES

Flayerspawn psychics generally compete rather than support each other.

You should always distrust the agenda of another flayerspawn psychic, assuming the worst—where other such characters are concerned, you are right more often than not.

Because of this tendency, you cannot call on any resources associated with this prestige class (though of course you might have affiliations unrelated to being a flayerspawn).

FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHICS IN THE WORLD

“Aaaaauuggghh!”

Mind flayer!"

—Phendylin, an elf minstrel in a chance encounter
Any game with both psionics and mind flayers can benefit from this prestige class.

It can be of great use to DMs and players alike, allowing an opportunity to roleplay a transformation that, while considered positively from the player's point of view (merely a means to an end), is thought of as a degeneration to those around them.

Flayerspawn psychics are equally useful in campaigns that focus on tragedy (with respect to the characters), or even large-scale quests for power.

ORGANIZATION

A flayerspawn psychic spends her days much like any other psionic character would.

She enjoys quiet meditation and taking the time to work through the mental exercises necessary to train her mind deeper in psionic art.

As the leader of a group, a flayerspawn psychic might direct her allies toward jobs and quests that bring the group closer and closer to encounters with real mind flayers.

If she is questioned about her undue interest in mind flayers, the rationale of "Know thy enemy" is given as her strategy: It might even be true.

NPC REACTIONS

Flayerspawn psychics have no organization to speak of; thus, it is unlikely that an NPC has heard of them in the sense of any organized group.

A character who has no obvious physical illithid traits is met with a starting attitude of indifferent.

Particularly xenophobic NPCs might have a starting attitude of unfriendly, simply due to a flayerspawn's odd or unwell appearance.

In the later stages of the prestige class, the character might begin to appear like some kind of humanoid—mind flayer hybrid, depending on her illithid feat choices.

NPCs who meet her at this stage (if she is not using some form of camouflage to hide her features) have a starting attitude of hostile and might try to attack the character.

Even if the flayerspawn psychic has a good alignment, they might attempt to hunt down both her and all her allies.

Flayerspawn psychics who have allowed their heritage to significantly change their features typically resort to covering themselves or otherwise disguising their appearance to get around this reaction.

FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHIC LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (psionics) or Knowledge (dungeoneering) can research flayerspawn psychics to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Flayer-what's?

Sounds like something related to mind flayers.

I'd stay away from them.

DC 15: Some who develop the powers of their mind discover the reason they're so talented in that area—they have an ancient bloodline connection to illithids!

It's more common than most people would like to think.

DC 20: A flayerspawn psychic quickly learns the power of mind blast.

Because of the flayerspawn's hybrid nature, a powerful character of this sort can enhance her mental blast ability beyond even the power of a mind flayer.

FLAYERSPAWN PSYCHICS IN THE GAME

A flayerspawn psychic might be a psion who is studying mind flayers and is willing to undergo transformation for academic reasons.

A character might also be a tragic hero, someone who must undergo the transformation to assure some desired end—or merely for survival.

A third, more likely possibility, however, is that a psionic character is simply power-hungry.

Flayerspawn psychics are particularly useful for the DM who enjoys injecting mind flayer-related themes into his adventures.

The flayerspawn psychic's continuing transformation and possible degeneration can provide ongoing conflict and interest, both within the PC group and with NPCs.

The class fits especially well in a game where aberrations are a common enemy.

ADAPTATION

This class could cause problems at the table and in the campaign, mostly due to its name and the names of the feats to which the flayerspawn has access (beginning with Illithid Heritage).

If problems are foreseen, changing the name of the class to something such as Legacy Psychic and changing the name of all the feats to something such as Legacy Heritage, Legacy Blast, and so forth with the idea that no one knows the psychic legacy behind the character, even the character himself—until some later point when the character is already incorporated into the game.

ILLUMINE SOUL

"Know what you want, focus on that desire, reach out to the Positive as well as within to your power, and forge a thing of pure beauty."

—Din'elen Tiriandara, an illumine soul

The illumine soul is a living conduit of positive energy. He is able to forge a blade of semisolid psychic energy and infuse it with the essence of the Positive Energy Plane to deal lethal strikes to undead opponents.

As an illumine soul practices this unique talent, he learns to fill up his being with the power of the Positive Energy Plane, becoming a light in the darkness and turning undead away from his radiance.

Desirous of something more than raw psychic energy, an illumine soul learns to reach behind the sky and form a mental link with the Positive Energy Plane.

He entwines this energy with that of his own psionic mastery to create a formidable weapon of brilliance that extinguishes all shadows.

BECOMING AN ILLUMINE SOUL

Whether multiclass or single-classed, illumine souls must have some levels in the soulknife class, since it is that class from which they gain some of their necessary requirements.

However, while soulknives focus on working with pure psychic energy, illumine souls infuse their mind blade (and mind and body as well) with positive energy.

While not necessarily interested in or beholden to divine agencies, illumine souls focus a portion of their studies on religious matters to better understand the source of power drawn upon by clerics and paladins.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any non-evil.

Skills: Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

Special: Mind blade, psychic strike +1d8.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Autohypnosis, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Heal, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (psionics), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the illumine soul prestige class.

An illumine soul focuses mainly on his ability to channel positive energy through his mind blade as well as his body.

Positive Energy Conduit (Su): At 1st level, you forge a permanent link with the Positive Energy Plane that charges your psychic strike with positive energy.

This link allows you to deal damage to undead (both intelligent and mindless) using your psychic strike.

Improved Mind Blade (Ex): You add your illumine soul levels to your levels in the soulknife class to determine your mind blade's enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls and the mind blade enhancement class feature you have as a soulknife.

In addition, you can add ghost touch to the list of weapon special abilities you can choose from (EPH 29).

Psychic Strike (Su): This ability functions like the soulknife ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by 1d8 points at 1st and 4th levels.

The bonuses on damage stack with psychic strike bonuses from your soulknife class levels.

Positive Energy Ray (Ps): At 2nd level, you can project a ray of positive energy from your mind blade that deals damage (on a successful ranged touch attack) to any undead creature within 60 feet that it strikes.

It takes a standard action to project a positive energy ray, and the ray deals 2d6 points of damage for every class level you have.

You can project such a ray a number of times per day equal to your illumine soul class level.

Death Ward (Ps): When you expend your psionic focus, you gain protection against the powers of undeath for 1 minute. While enjoying this protection, you are immune to all magical and psionic death effects, energy drain, and any negative energy effects.

This ability doesn't remove negative levels that you have already gained, nor does it affect the saving throw you must make 24 hours after gaining a negative level.

Undead Mind Bane (Su): At 3rd level, your mind blade becomes permanently enhanced with the undead bane weapon special ability (DMG 224).

This weapon enhancement remains constant, despite any other changes or modifications you might make to your mind blade (for instance, using the mind blade enhancement ability of the soulknife).

Positive Energy Healing (Su): When you reach 4th level, your connection with the Positive Energy Plane provides you with a healing ability that you can use on yourself once per day.

This healing kicks in automatically (without any action on your part) on the first occasion in a 24-hour span when your hit points drop to 0 or lower.

When this occurs, a flood of positive energy discharges through the conduit you maintain with the Positive Energy Plane and instantly heals 5d8+5 points of damage.

This healing is timely enough to keep you alive if the amount of damage you just took was otherwise enough to kill you, assuming that the healing you receive leaves your current hit points at -9 or higher.

Positive Energy Flare (Ps): Upon reaching 5th level, you can take a standard action and expend your psionic focus to radiate positive energy that deals damage to all undead within 30 feet of you.

You deal 2d6 points of damage for every class level you have to all undead within range.

The affected undead get a Will save (DC 10 + your illumine soul level + Cha modifier) for half damage.

PLAYING AN ILLUMINE SOUL

Forging a link with the Positive Energy Plane is only the first step of your mission.

Once that link is complete, your goal is to actively seek out and destroy undead every chance you get.

Past deeds and honors are of little consideration when it comes to combating these horrible creatures.

Just as you don't rest on your past achievements in bringing undead to their final rest, you aren't concerned with an undead creature's accomplishments while it was still breathing.

Neither are you worried about an undead's current activities or philosophical bent.

When it comes to undead, there can be no middle ground—they must all be destroyed.

Becoming an illumine soul is a personal decision.

There might exist small groups here and there of illumine souls who feel their goals are best served by organizing their activities instead of working individually, but they are the exception rather than the rule.

Where such groups exist, their primary goal is typically eradicating undead, not recruiting and training new members.

COMBAT

In combat, use your mind blade to attack opponents, charging it up with a psychic strike once they have closed to melee range.

As with a soulknife, you should attack with a psychic strike each round if possible.

You make a great ally for a fighter, rogue, or lurk—with your enhanced maneuverability (if you have taken ranks in the Tumble skill), you can make a point to set up flanking positions for additional attack bonuses.

When undead are encountered at a distance not easily bridged, you can attack using your positive energy ray.

If you come upon undead in a concentrated area, you can first use your positive energy flare to soften up the rotting opposition before you bring your mind blade to bear.

It isn't uncommon for you to join a group of adventurers on your quest.

There is safety in numbers, and undead can be crafty in combat.

The companions who suit you best are typically like-minded individuals: clerics, paladins, and ardens (page 5) all make good adventuring companions.

Beyond that, any good-aligned character can be helpful in combating undead (particularly intelligent ones).

ADVANCEMENT

As you continue to progress, feats such as Psionic Weapon (EPH 50), Greater Psionic Weapon (EPH 47), and Deep Impact (EPH 45) enhance your ability to deal massive damage in a single blow.

You should also consider the feats that work specifically with the mind blade, such as Mind Cleave and Mind Empowerment (page 56).

While these feats are less effective against undead, they can prove useful against any other foes you face.

It is important to remember that, even though much of your energy is devoted to fighting undead, other challenges will materialize, some of which might be the living stooges of hidden undead masters.

It is best to be prepared for a wide range of possibilities.

RESOURCES

Illumine souls frequently find themselves welcome in the churches of various religions that are devoted to the destruction of undead (which is most every good-aligned religion).

It isn't uncommon for you to expect free room and board from these groups, and possibly even a small discount on healing services or the purchase of holy water.

ILLUMINE SOULS IN THE WORLD

"Next time that Din'elen what's-his-name comes snooping around my bonefield, he'll discover a few changes I've implemented, to his peril."

—Dagnarth Vellanium, disgruntled necromancer

Any campaign in which undead are an important element is one that would benefit from the inclusion of an illumine soul.

An illumine soul meshes well in a group that contains strongly aligned good characters.

On the other hand, ardens, clerics, and paladins have their own ideas about where their powers originate that can be at odds with an illumine soul's understanding.

Except for a burning curiosity about the order of the planes, particularly the Positive Energy Plane, illumine souls are not particularly religious folk.

They tend to take an explanatory, atheistic view of how clerics are granted their powers.

They do know that it isn't always healthy to be particularly vocal regarding these beliefs, and they have enough respect for the religiously inclined to keep the commentary to a minimum.

Despite discretion, however, an illumine soul's beliefs on a philosophical level can still ignite occasional arguments on the nature of divinity, life, and the role of the Positive Energy Plane.

ORGANIZATION

Illumine souls are usually ambivalent about the idea of joining an organization.

They assert that deities are merely powerful beings who have better conduits to the Positive Energy Plane than an illumine soul does—which doesn't win them too many votes for entry into religious establishments.

However, several organizations exist whose charter is concerned only with cleansing undead from the world. Illumine souls are welcome in such places.

They are particularly welcome in the organization known as the Hall of the Illumine, which vaguely resembles a secular knighthood.

Members are recruited from among like-minded soulknives and trained in the hall.

The training performed by the hall is governed by a headmaster and several knights.

Once his training is complete, an illumine soul is free to leave (and in fact, is encouraged to do so) and begin destroying undead.

NPC REACTIONS

Both those affiliated with good-aligned religious organizations and dedicated scholars of psionics are familiar with the existence of illumine souls.

Good-aligned NPCs who know of the prestige class and its fight against undead have a starting attitude of friendly toward such a character and his allies, especially if he or his friends are currently being afflicted by the undead.

At the same time, necromancers and evil-aligned religious organizations who specialize in death (or undeath directly) are hostile toward any illumine soul they encounter, and can be expected to attack at the first opportunity.

ILLUMINE SOUL LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) or Knowledge (psionics) can research illumine souls to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Illumine souls—I think they have blades made of pure mental energy.

They hate undead, too.

DC 15: Illumine souls have a blade composed both of their own mental energy and energy drawn from the Positive Energy Plane.

DC 20: Illumine souls have forged personal links to the Positive Energy Plane.

Besides enhancing their mind blades with the energy, they can fire rays, heal themselves, and protect themselves from the powers of undead foes.

ILLUMINE SOULS IN YOUR GAME

It shouldn't be difficult to find a place for illumine souls in a campaign world, given their penchant for destroying undead.

Players who want to play a soulknife with a pseudo-religious bent might find the illumine soul prestige class to their liking.

ADAPTATION

As with the anarchic initiate (page 17), if a player wants to play an illumine soul in a campaign whose cosmology doesn't include the Positive Energy Plane, it is easy enough to change the focus of the character to a similar realm, life-affirming deity, or powerful item that encompasses light or life.

For instance, in an EBERRON campaign, an illumine soul could be inspired by the plane of Irian, the Eternal Day.

SOULBOW

"The bolts fell like a shower of stars, scything through the duergar raiders with lethal accuracy.

The War of Reclamation had begun, and we led the way in a rain of glory."

—Nathara Teng, a soulbow

In the tradition of the soulknife, a soulbow realizes the direct capacity of her own mind to give shape to weapons of psionic perfection.

Through desire alone, a soulbow creates a semisolid blade composed of psychic energy, just as any soulknife can.

Unlike a soulknife, however, a soulbow can also produce dazzling shafts of deadly grace that she can project with all the force of a composite longbow—using nothing but her mind.

The soulbow relishes her ability to attack foes at a distance. Accuracy, speed, distance, and lethality are all skills a soulbow pursues and perfects—and in so doing, discovers serenity in lethal mastery.

BECOMING A SOULBOW

Any character with a desire to become a master of mental archery might be drawn to train as a soulbow.

In practice, however, becoming a soulbow requires a character to take at least two levels of the soulknife class to gain the throw mind blade prerequisite.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Autohypnosis 8 ranks.

Feats: Point Blank Shot.

Special: Throw mind blade class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Autohypnosis, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (psionics), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the soulbow.

The abilities described here turn a soulknife into someone who is proficient at ranged combat using a manifestation of the mind blade more akin to an arrow.

In addition to that, the class generously hands out bonus feats ideal for making ranged attacks, and grants a few class-specific abilities.

Mind Arrow (Su): As a free action, you can create a semisolid arrow composed of psychic energy distilled from your mind.

If your base attack bonus is high enough to grant you multiple attacks, you can create multiple mind arrows as part of an attack.

You must have one hand free to create and project a mind arrow.

The bolt is identical in all ways (except visually) to an arrow shot from a composite longbow.

For instance, a Medium soulbow materializes an arrow that speeds toward the specified target, and if it hits, deals 1d8 points of damage (crit $\times 3$) plus extra damage equal to the soulbow's Wisdom modifier.

Soulbows who are smaller or larger than Medium create mind arrows identical to arrows shot from composite longbows appropriate for their size, with a corresponding change to the arrow's damage (see Table 7-4 and Table 7-5 in the Player's Handbook).

You gain the usual benefit to your attack roll from a high Dexterity bonus.

Whether a mind arrow hits or misses, it dissipates 1 round after being shot.

A mind arrow is considered a magic weapon for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

A mind arrow can be charged with a psychic strike as if it were a mind blade.

If a soulbow has enough soulknife levels to have the knife to the soul ability, that ability also applies to her mind arrows.

You can use feats such as Point Blank Shot or Precise Shot in conjunction with a mind arrow (see bonus feats provided by the class for further guidance).

You can also choose mind arrow for feats requiring a specific weapon choice, such as Weapon Specialization. Powers or spells that upgrade weapons can be used on a mind blade.

Any feats previously requiring specific weapon choice (such as Weapon Specialization) for your mind blade also apply to your mind arrow, if applicable.

Your mind arrows improve as you gain higher levels.

At 3rd level, a mind arrow gains a +1 enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls, and at 7th level the bonus improves to +2.

These enhancement bonuses stack with previous enhancement bonuses gained earlier for your soulknife class levels.

Likewise, these enhancement bonuses also improve your soulknife base attack bonus.

If you return to your soulknife class progression, these mind arrow enhancement bonuses on attack and damage are cumulative bonuses on top of any new enhancement bonuses gained, and they benefit both your mind blade and mind arrows.

Even in places where psionic effects do not normally function (such as within a null psionics field), you can attempt to attack foes with mind arrows by making a DC 20 Will save.

On a successful save, you can freely produce mind arrows for a number of rounds equal to your class level before you need to check again.

On an unsuccessful attempt, you must wait 1 round before trying again while you remain within the psionics-negating effect.

Bonus Feat: At 1st level, you can choose a bonus feat from the following list: Far Shot, Precise Shot, Psionic Shot, Greater Psionic Shot, Fell Shot, Rapid Shot, Manyshot, Greater Manyshot, Shot on the Run, Improved Precise Shot, and Mounted Archery.

You must meet the prerequisites for the feat as normal. Feats that grant additional attacks, such as Rapid Shot, allow you to create additional semisolid arrows of psychic energy as needed to make additional attacks.

The list of potential bonus feats can be expanded by the DM to include any feats from other supplements that improved ranged attacks.

For instance, if your game makes use of Complete Warrior, this list might also include Improved Mounted Archer, Improved Rapid Shot, Ranged Disarm, Ranged Pin (in which case the mind arrow persists until the pinned character breaks the pin), Ranged Sunder, Sharp Shooting, and Zen Archery.

Choose another bonus feat from the list at 3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th level.

Mind Arrow Enhancement (Su): At 2nd level, you can enhance your mind arrows with ranged special abilities. Choose any one of the weapon special abilities on the table below that has an enhancement bonus value of +1.

From now on, mind arrows you produce as part of an attack possess that special ability.

At every four levels beyond 2nd (6th and 10th), the value of the enhancement you can add to your mind arrow improves to +2 and +3, respectively.

You can choose any combination of weapon special abilities that does not exceed the total allowed by your soulbow level.

The special ability provided by this class feature does not stack with the soulknife's mind blade enhancement ability. You can reassign the ability or abilities you have chosen for your mind arrows.

To do so, you must spend 8 hours in concentration.

After that period, all subsequent mind arrows you produce as part of an attack action possess the new ability or abilities selected by you.

Ranged Weapon Special Ability	Bonus Value	Ranged Weapon Special Ability	Bonus Value
Bane	+1	Axiomatic	+2
Distance	+1	Collision*	+2
Flaming	+1	Flaming burst	+2
Frost	+1	Psychokinetic burst*	+2
Lucky*	+1	Psibane*	+2
Merciful	+1	Shocking burst	+2
Psychokinetic*	+1	Suppression*	+2
Returning	+1	Wounding	+2
Seeking	+1	Dislocator*	+3
Shock	+1	Speed	+3
Anarchic	+2

*These abilities are described in Expanded Psionics Handbook beginning on page 165. All other ranged weapon special abilities are described in the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Close Combat Shot: At 4th level, you can attack with your mind arrow while in a threatened square and not provoke attacks of opportunity.

Phase Arrow (Ps): At 8th level, you can take a full attack action (in lieu of your regular attacks) to expend your psionic focus and launch a mind arrow at a target known to you within range.

The mind arrow travels to the target in a straight path, passing through any nonmagical or nonpsionic barrier or wall on its way.

(A wall of force, wall of fire, wall of ectoplasm, or the like stops a mind arrow).

This ability negates cover, concealment, and even armor modifiers, but otherwise the attack is rolled normally.

PLAYING A SOULBOW

As a soulbow, you have learned to turn your mind blade into a deadly arrow of psychic energy, striking swiftly and with legendary accuracy.

However, you don't require the base materials of either bow or wooden arrow—your mind is the bow, and it provides the psychic ammunition in endless quantity.

With the power of your mind, you can pierce your enemies at will.

Other soulknives look upon your specialization with some envy, and might even ask you to train them in your methods.

The ability to produce both a mind blade and a mind arrow is yours; however, you have decided to forego further development of your mind blade to concentrate your mental resources on psychic archery.

This is the same promise you extract from other soulknives before helping them find the mental key necessary to produce mind arrows of their own.

COMBAT

It isn't surprising that as a ranged attack specialist, you should consider positioning yourself away from the direct threat of melee, at least until you have gained your close combat shot ability.

Still, you have the ability to damage your enemies from a distance, so you should take advantage of it as much as possible to preserve your health.

Stay clear of melee combat and pepper your foes with mind arrows from a safe distance.

Because you have the ability to swap out the ranged special ability of your mind arrow, intelligence regarding possible foes is very valuable to you.

If you can learn that you'll likely be up against giants in the next little while, for example, spend 8 hours (if you can) changing the special abilities of the mind arrows you create to resonate with the giant bane quality.

ADVANCEMENT

Taken in by the power of your own psyche, you trained as a soulknife and quickly learned the art of producing a mind blade.

Not satisfied with that accomplishment, you learned how to project mind arrows.

While some soulbows learn the key to producing mind arrows through unflagging study on their own, most learn after getting training from a group called the Reclaimers. The Reclaimers are a secretive organization that seeks out those with the ability to manifest a mind blade and offers them training.

In return, the group lays some claim to the newly trained soulbow's affiliations.

The Reclaimers take a dim view of self-trained soulbows who have no ties to their organization.

Presuming you are not going it alone in your advancement, your tie to the Reclaimers essentially means that you are on call.

The Reclaimers are a mercenary company whose members offers their services to organizations of commoners, druidic councils, psionic conclaves, and other organizations that they might be inclined to support (they have never taken a commission from any king, temple, church, or merchant guild—their philosophy is more in line with enlightenment than with the enforcement of jurisdiction). On rare occasions, you might be called upon to play a part in a short-term mission. More rarely, you might be asked to take part in a longer-term mission that could involve travel to distant areas.

You can pass on the longer-term missions, but if you pass on more than one short-term mission in a row, your training by Reclaimer mentors is suspended.

(This doesn't necessarily mean that you can no longer advance as a soulbow—it merely means that you are on your own in developing your abilities).

As you advance in your training, one of the first feats you take should be Precise Shot, which offsets your penalty for firing mind arrows into melee.

Rapid Shot should also be high on your list—the more shots you make in a round, the greater the chance you'll score a strike.

As far as skills go, continue to buy ranks in Move Silently, since this skill is important for getting into a good position from which to launch your mind arrow volleys.

Concentration is also an important skill for you—having a high Concentration modifier means you'll be better able to regain your psionic focus.

RESOURCES

As a soulbow, you can expect resources according to your persuasive ability, like any other character, if you represent yourself as a Reclaimer, however, you can expect aid from commoners and downtrodden in the form of a place to sleep, simple fare shared with a family, and—from, particularly brave souls—a place to hide from authorities (should you require it).

Reclaimers wear an amulet or shoulder patch featuring a silvery astral arrow.

Authority figures of various cities, city-states, and countries are beginning to take a dim view of the Reclaimers and the soulbows and regular archers who make up the group's membership.

If you are identified as a Reclaimer by an official of a particular city, even basic services might be denied to you. Reclaimers who wear their symbol openly also have taken to wearing a black bandanna or mask at the same time, so that once they finish a particular mission, they can remove mask and symbol to return to anonymity.

SOULBOWS IN THE WORLD

"When you see the silvery arrow on a masked man's shoulders in the street, you'd best hit the dirt.

There's about to be a fight, and sooner or later the city watch will arrive, hell-bent on taking the soulbow down."

—Willem Mott, shopkeeper

Alone soulbow is like any other adventurer—someone with above-average abilities seeking to make her own way in the world, seeking fortune, fulfillment of quests, and the serenity that accompanies an adventure concluded.

Few soulbows go through an entire career, however, without being approached by a recruiter from the secretive organization known as the Reclaimers.

ORGANIZATION

Soulbows are free to join any organization, but the organization that is most closely associated with the prestige class is the Order of Reclamation, more commonly referred to as the Reclaimers.

The Reclaimers are devoted to ending tyranny in all its forms.

The organization accepts commissions from supplicants it finds worthy, but also launches its own interventions on occasion.

Joining the Order: The Reclaimers accept soulknives who meet the minimum requirements of the soulbow prestige class (because these soulknives can be trained as soulbows), soulbows, and archers who use physical bows and arrows but can demonstrate supernatural, psionic, or magical prowess with their bows.

Benefits: The main benefit a PC can expect from being a member of the Reclaimers is the knowledge that he or she will continue to be trained in the soulbow class.

At least as important to some characters is the feeling that they are fighting the good fight; such characters revel in the idea that they are agents working against oppression.

Headquarters: Because of the underground nature of the Reclaimers, the location of the order's headquarters, the identity of its top members, and the structure the defines the group are well-kept secrets.

In fact, the group has a central location out of which it operates—a fortress located in an uncivilized waste.

Three ancient psionic portals allow the Reclaimers (in their Fortress of Reclamation) to rapidly move to and from three important cities around the world.

From those cities, they can mount missions or activate soulbow Reclaimers who are otherwise engaged.

Missions: Itinerant Reclaimers (as the majority of soulbows tend to be who are part of the group in the first place—including player characters) usually discover their next mission in the form of a message engraved on a wooden arrow delivered in a cloth-wrapped parcel from some unknown source.

Except in extraordinary cases, only a single itinerant soulbow is activated for each particular mission, according to the character's ability and proximity to a given problem.

It is up to the activated soulbow to gather what resources she believes are necessary to get the job done. This might mean finding hirelings, or asking for the help of other PCs.

Sample missions might include freeing a wrongfully accused prisoner from a king's dungeon, breaking the iron grip of a group of half-orc racketeers down on the docks, or infiltrating a temple that is suspected of hiding an unsavory, evil secret.

An itinerant Reclaimer is activated at most two or three times during her career, unless she requests more missions.

NPC REACTIONS

The general populace looks upon both lone soulbows and those who are openly tied to Reclaimers with respect and perhaps some affection, especially if people have been personally aided or know the story of someone aided by a soulbow Reclaimer.

NPCs who know of the prestige class have a starting attitude of friendly toward such a character.

On the other hand, some city watches know to bring in any person they see wearing the silver arrow and black mask for questioning at least, and perhaps worse.

In cities with a reputation for tyranny or harsh rule, PCs can expect a starting attitude of unfriendly from members of the city guard or other government officials.

SOULBOW LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) or Knowledge (psionics) can research soulbows to learn more about them. When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Soulbows?

I think they've got mind powers of some sort.

DC 15: Soulbows can project arrows straight from their minds—they don't need bows for their archery.

DC 20: Many soulbows belong to the Reclaimers—that's a group that supposedly exists to right wrongs and help the little guy.

But if that's so, why do they wear black masks?

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific soulbows in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake. PCs who are interested in finding or setting up a meeting with a soulbow should first check with any local psionic guild or college.

Next, investigate archery ranges or other similar places—soulbows like to hone their accuracy as much as the next archer.

Finally, PCs should try to use Gather Information to learn who has seen the symbol of the silver arrow, when, and in what location—finding active Reclaimers will likely lead the PCs to a soulbow.

SOULBOWS IN THE GAME

Soulbows give mind blade throwers an offensive ability on par with expert archers, but without the need to rely on anything other than their own minds.

As with other psionic prestige classes, soulbows are great additions to any game that uses psionic rules.

Soulknives might take only a few levels in this class to upgrade their ability to affect foes at a distance, though they might find that continuing the progression is a worthwhile endeavor—the ability to defeat foes at range is always a tactical advantage.

ADAPTATION

In the EBERRON campaign setting, kalashtar characters should take to the soulbow prestige class as willingly as they take levels in the underlying soulknife class.

The concept of the Reclaimers is one that can fit into most campaigns, though it is also easily jettisoned if the concept of a secret freedom-fighter group doesn't fit well with your concept of the soulbow or the kind of organization you'd like to add to your game.

STORM DISCIPLE

"My blade is the pure embodiment of the storm.

I am but a vessel for its glorious discharge."

—Danre, storm disciple

A storm disciple is a character who decides that the best, most glorious way to serve his ideals is through the natural power, fury, and splendor of the storm.

While he retains knowledge of mantles, he might have come to feel that those mantles are of lesser value than his connection to the storm.

A disciple delights in singing the song of the raging storm, of blackened skies where the thunder is born.

He seeks to master the flow of electrical energy that infuses his chosen weapon with power, becoming a conduit for that astonishing energy.

BECOMING A STORM DISCIPLE

Almost all storm disciples, whether multiclass or single-classed, begin as divine minds or ardens.

Ardents are often drawn to the universal truth embodied by the natural world and its energies.

For them, becoming a storm disciple is a natural extension of their powers.

Most divine minds who become storm disciples, on the other hand, are confident in their ability to serve their deity however they deem most fit, taking on the fury of the storm and their training in its use all on their own.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Special: Energy mantle or Natural World mantle.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (religion), Psicraft, Sense Motive.

CLASS FEATURES

Storm disciples take the power and fury of the storm and direct it in combat against their enemies.

They can use this power to take an active role in combat, using their resistance and damage-dealing abilities to cut a swath through the field of battle.

All the following are class features of the storm disciple prestige class.

Manifesting: At 2nd, 3rd, and 4th levels, you gain additional power points per day, an increase in manifester level, and access to new powers as if you had also gained a level in a manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming a storm disciple, you must decide to which class to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining power points per day, manifester level, and powers known.

Shocking Aura (Ex): At 1st level, you gain a special aura that is always active.

You and allies within your aura deal an extra 1 point of electricity damage on weapon damage rolls.

The area affected by this aura increases as you gain levels as shown on Table 2–7.

Resistance to Electricity (Ex): As you gain levels in this prestige class, you become increasingly resistant to electrical energy, gaining resistance to electricity in the amount shown on Table 2–7.

Stormwalker (Ex): At 3rd level, you and your mount (if any) can walk or ride through natural or magical storms at your regular speed, completely unaffected by high winds (including magically or psionically created high winds), pounding precipitation or waves, objects driven by the wind (which always seem to miss you), great claps of thunder, natural bolts of lightning, or any other natural storm phenomena.

Thunderblade (Su): At 5th level, your weapon gains the thundering special ability (DMG 225).

PLAYING A STORM DISCIPLE

You are a constant advocate for your beliefs through the power of storm, traveling the land and destroying any opposite-aligned cause that crosses your path with electrical fury.

If you are part of an organized church, you are likely at the service of higher-level clergy, typically clerics.

You might serve alongside paladins, whom you consider almost equal in divine favor.

COMBAT

You rely on a combination of martial prowess combined with a connection to the power of storms to defeat your enemies.

As you gain levels, you unlock additional psionic abilities, though your manifesting abilities will not be as developed as if you had not followed the call of the storm.

The abilities your focused study has granted you, however, more than make up for the lack of psionic advancement.

As with any martial psionic character, psionic powers with a manifesting time of 1 swift action or 1 immediate action are great choices, because they don't force you to choose between an action and a desired effect.

Good choices include burst, catfall, empty mind, evade burst, hustle, and psionic lion's charge.

When fighting with allies, you'll serve as a front-line combatant, allowing other, less martial characters some measure of safety while they employ their own combat skills, abilities, spells, or powers.

ADVANCEMENT

You always love it when it storms.

As you train to become a storm disciple, you find yourself meditating out among the elements.

Observers might think you insane, sitting out peacefully in furious thunderstorms that seem to rage all the fiercer for your presence.

To you, though, these moments of connection are sublime.

RESOURCES

If you are in the service of a deity, that is your greatest resource.

As with most clerics and ardens, you can usually count on your temple or sanctuary, food and shelter, as well as time for study, training, and meditation.

Beyond the temple of their particular deity, all disciples eventually hear of a place called the Storm Citadel—a place where all storm disciples are welcome, no matter their particular divine affiliation (or lack thereof).

STORM DISCIPLES IN THE WORLD

"Say what ya waul about yet own priests and such, but I'm telling ya that Dante serves his god with th' crashing thunder an' blindin' lighting!"

—Geni Dogwaddle, half-orc ranger and barstool philosopher

A storm disciple need not be directly tied to a religious organization.

One might be unaffiliated with any such group, and instead follow the power of the storm.

In the EBERRON campaign setting, storm disciples could work with the mysterious blue dragon enclave rumored to be the source of lightning storms in the mountains of Adar, in southern Sarlona.

These storm disciples are followers of the Path of Light, but choose a more active role in the defense of their alpine refuge.

The Storm Citadel could be added near a mountain range where storms are frequent, such as the Adar mountains in Eberron, or could be placed atop an island near a major coastline or waterway, since lords of the storm are typically revered in coastal regions.

A storm-shrouded peak amid the Nelanther Isles in the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting would be a perfect place to set a citadel full of worshipers of Talos and Umberlee who revere the power of the storm.

ORGANIZATION

Some storm disciples choose to be part of a hierarchy of a church or priesthood that accepts them.

Given the martial nature of storm disciples, these characters always serve the church in a military capacity. Some doctrines do not accept the devotion of a storm disciple, so these disciples are forced outside the hierarchy, where they continue to serve their deity as rogue operatives.

Those who have no church affiliation often eschew organizations altogether, choosing a small band of companions to help them proceed in their chosen quests. The most notable organization that includes storm disciples is located in the legendary Storm Citadel.

The Storm Citadel is a black iron and stone fortress built atop a high peak thrust up into the belly of a permanent flashing thunderstorm.

Open parapets and balconies are subject to a constant stream of lightning strikes, howling winds, drenching rains, icy hail, and deafening thunder.

Inside the many-roomed fortress, the elements are muted, but the shaking thunder, reflected flashes of exterior lightning, and strong, cool breezes find their way into every chamber.

The Storm Citadel's reputation isn't sterling, however—it is whispered among those who know of it that those who reside there have completely severed their ties with their former deity (if they ever had one in the first place) and instead worship only the howling madness of the thunderstorm.

Despite what these stories describe, however, those who live in the Storm Citadel are not required to give up any previous affiliation or belief.

All that is required is an ability to appreciate (and survive!) the wild fury of a thunderstorm.

The Storm Citadel is under the authority of a storm disciple called White Mary, who is happy to let anyone come and stay who can survive the ascent to the fortress.

Those who wish to become affiliated with the Storm Citadel gain some advantages of being a part of an organization, including contacts, inside information, a place to stay, and the camaraderie of fellow storm addicts. Storm disciples who aspire to join also agree to take on tasks assigned by Storm Citadel elders from time to time.

NPC REACTIONS

Among those NPCs who know of storm disciples, the starting attitude toward such characters is likely to be indifferent.

There are simply too many varied goals to characterize the group as a whole as friend or foe to NPCs they might meet. Their unhealthy (to the average NPC) fascination with storms is also something that might prevent an NPC from wanting to be too close to a storm disciple—after all, just because the lightning doesn't strike the disciple doesn't mean the NPC is similarly blessed.

STORM DISCIPLE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) or Knowledge (psionics) can research storm disciples to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Storm disciples are some kind of paladins who fight with blades of lightning.

DC 15: Actually, storm disciples have focused completely on their connection to storms.

DC 20: Storm disciples sometimes disappear for a year or more.

When they reappear, if they do at all, they are circumspect about their past whereabouts, saying only that they had received a summons from some group or place called the Storm Citadel.

STORM DISCIPLES IN YOUR GAME

Because storm disciples are essentially martial characters, it should be easy enough to fit player character disciples into your game.

Your player characters might also meet a storm disciple as either an ally or enemy.

ADAPTATION

The storm disciple is a well-contained class, and should work well in any game that allows psionic rules.

The organization associated with the class, the Storm Citadel, is described as legendary and distant.

The class's tie to the organization could be strengthened to give storm disciples more of a footprint in the world.

ZERTH CENOBITE

"Time is an illusion that the mind can learn to ignore."

—Zerth cenobite saying

The core of a zerth cenobites studies involve strict meditation on the nature of time and the body's movements through it, culminating in a martial art known as zerthin.

Zerthin was first used at a special githzerai monastery called Zerth'Ad'Lun, located deep in the chaos-boil of Limbo.

The chroal art has since been disseminated more widely, however.

Zerthin teaches that though the passage of time allows events to become chaotic and uncontrolled, a disciplined mind filled with a reservoir of psionic power can view the time stream as just one more dimension of space.

This privileged point of view allows a zerth cenobite to see a moment or two into the past and future, thereby gaining insight as to where to place her next blow and how to best dodge the next blow of her foe.

Practitioners of zerthin claim to be able to peer into the future, enhancing their martial expertise to unmatched heights.

BECOMING A ZERTH CENOBITE

Almost all zerth cenobites are monks who have gained the knowledge necessary to begin studying the rarefied art of zerthin.

Many are githzerai, since zerthin was developed first in Zerth'Ad'Lun on Limbo, but after the first zerth cenobite broke the stricture and began teaching zerthin to nongithzerai, all the censure and displeasure of Limbo couldn't keep zerthin a purely githzerai psionic ability.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Concentration 9 ranks.

Manifesting: Power point reserve of at least 2.

Special: Still mind class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Autohypnosis, Concentration, Craft, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (psionics), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Move Silently, Psicraft, Sense Motive, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in level, zerth cenobites gain abilities that allow them to manipulate time.

They also gain a measure of psionic power, though not as much as a character who focuses on psionics.

Power Points/Day: You can manifest powers.

Your ability to manifest powers is limited by the power points you have available.

Your base daily allotment of power points is given on Table 2–8.

In addition, you receive bonus power points per day if you have a high Wisdom score (see Table 2–1: Ability Modifiers and Bonus Power Points, EPH 18).

Your race might provide bonus power points per day, as might certain feats and items.

If you have power points from a different class, those points are pooled and can be used to manifest powers from either class.

Powers Known: You choose your powers from the psychic warrior power list.

At 1st level, you know one psychic warrior power of your choice.

Each time you attain a new level, you learn one new power.

You can manifest any power that has a power point cost equal to or lower than your manifester level.

The total number of powers you can manifest per day is limited only by your daily power points.

You simply know your powers; they are ingrained in your mind.

You do not need to prepare them (in the way that some spellcasters prepare their spells), though you must get a good night's sleep each day to regain all your spent power points.

The Difficulty Class for saving throws against zerth cenobite powers is 10 + the power's level + the zerth cenobite's Wis modifier.

For example, the saving throw against a 2nd-level power has a DC of 12 + Wis modifier.

Maximum Power Level Known: You gain the ability to learn one 1st-level power when you take your first level in the prestige class.

You attain the ability to master more complex powers at 4th, 7th, and 10th level.

To learn or manifest a power, you must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the power's level.

For example, a zerth cenobite with a Wisdom score of 13 can manifest powers of 3rd level or lower.

Monk Abilities: Your zerth cenobite class levels stack with your monk levels for the purpose of determining your unarmed damage, bonus to Armor Class, and unarmored speed.

Your class levels do not apply to other monk abilities, such as flurry of blows, slow fall, and so on.

A monk who becomes a zerth cenobite can continue advancing as a monk.

Temporal Distillation (Su): Once per day, you are able to enter another time frame, moving much more quickly than other creatures around you.

This concentrated burst of time essence allows you to take an additional move action during your turn.

At 5th level, you are able to accomplish even more during the accelerated period, and can instead take an additional standard action (or move action) during your turn.

At 10th level, you have gained further mastery of that moment in time, and can take an additional full-round action (or a move action and a standard action) during your turn.

Backslip (Ps): At 2nd level, your mental mastery of temporal flow grows sufficiently large that you can gaze a few instants into the past.

Using that knowledge, you can then slightly alter events that have just occurred.

Once per day as an immediate action, you can reroll one roll that you have made before the DM declares whether the roll results in success or failure.

You must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

At 6th level, you can use backslip twice per day.

Timeless Step (Ps): Once per day as a standard action at 3rd level and higher, you can step forward in time a number of rounds equal to or less than your Wisdom modifier (always into the future, never into the past).

In effect, you seem to disappear, then reappear the appropriate number of rounds later.

You reappear in the same orientation and condition as before.

For you, no time has passed at all.

If the space from which you departed is occupied upon your return to the time stream, you appear in the closest unoccupied space, still in your original orientation.

Determine the closest space randomly if necessary.

Precognition (Ps): Once per day at 4th level and higher, you can glimpse fragments of potential future events.

This imperfect foreknowledge is good enough to grant you a +2 insight bonus that you can apply to an attack roll, a damage roll, a saving throw, or a skill check.

You can elect to apply the bonus to the roll after you determine that your unmodified roll is lower than desired.

At 7th level, you can trigger your precognitive ability twice per day.

Temporal Strike (Ps): At 8th level and higher, once per day, when you damage a foe with your unarmed attack, you can attempt to send that foe reeling through the continuum of time.

Declaring a temporal strike is a swift action that follows a successful melee attack.

The target of the strike must make a Will saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Wis modifier).

If your foe fails his saving throw, he is hurled forward in time in addition to taking damage normally. The subject is propelled 10 rounds forward in time by the violence of the strike.

In effect, the subject seems to disappear through a hole punched in space, then reappears 10 rounds later. The subject reappears in the same orientation and condition as before.

From the subject's point of view, no time has passed at all. In each round following the strike before the subject falls back into the time stream, on what would have been the subject's turn, it can attempt a DC 15 Wisdom check. Success allows the subject to return.

The subject can act normally on its next turn after returning to the time stream.

If the space from which the subject departed is occupied upon its return to the time stream, it appears in the closest unoccupied space, still in his original orientation. Determine the closest space randomly if necessary.

Precognitive Surge (Ps): At 9th level, you gain a powerful sixth sense that can be called upon once per day.

This extraordinary precognition grants an insight bonus equal to your combined monk and zerth cenobite levels (maximum +25) on any single attack roll, opposed ability check or skill check, or saving throw.

Alternatively, you can apply the insight bonus to your AC against a single attack (even if you are flat-footed).

Activating this ability is an immediate action.

You must choose to use a precognitive surge before you make the roll it is to modify.

Timeless Body (Ps): When you reach 10th level, once per day as a standard action your body can shift its biological processes to a static time stream where no time passes.

While timeless body is active, you ignore all harmful (and helpful) effects, beginning when you trigger this power and ending at the end of your next turn.

While in this state, you are invulnerable to all attacks and powers.

PLAYING A ZERTH CENOBITE

Understanding that the flow of time is just one more dimension to be conquered and moved through by volition, just as one can take a step forward or back, is a central tenet of reality for you.

In day-to-day life, you might choose to set aside your more theoretical pursuits in favor of practical applications, especially if you have chosen to expand your experiences through adventuring.

Some zerth cenobites strike out alone, seeming to be merely monks of a particularly austere monastery.

Most recognize the value of a team, however, for even a student of time can't be everywhere at once or fill every need.

COMBAT

You use your ability to affect time to defeat your foes, as well as the limited access you have to manifest melee-oriented psionic powers.

As with any combatant, speed and precision are important ingredients in winning a fight.

Taking feats and powers that decrease your chance of being hit (such as the Dodge feat and the inertial armor power) are good choices at any level, presuming you do not have a magic item or psionic item that duplicates the effect of inertial armor.

When you reach 4th level and have access to precognition, it is important to utilize the bonus early in a conflict, lest the melee end too soon (or worse, you become incapacitated) without the bonus being utilized.

At 8th level, when you gain the temporal strike ability, you have a choice: Try to weaken a group of attackers by attacking the weakest opponent and knocking him into the future, or try to punch a tougher opponent into the future so that the weaker opposition can be mopped up first. Generally, it is better to knock a weaker foe into the future—when the foe drops back into the time stream several rounds later, you and your allies will not be too debilitated to deal with the threat and can concentrate your efforts on him.

ADVANCEMENT

Presuming you enter the class as a 7th-level character (6th-level monk/1st-level zerth cenobite), your opportunities to take additional character feats present themselves at cenobite levels 3rd, 6th and 9th.

If you haven't previously taken psionic feats, these might be good opportunities to take the feat chain that includes Psionic Fist, Greater Psionic Fist, and Unavoidable Strike. On the power side of the equation, you only have a limited number of powers that you'll ever be able to know.

As taught by the philosophy of Zerthin, a good offence is a good defense—that is, avoiding taking damage allows you more time to deal it out.

This philosophy is borne out in the following suggestions: A 1st-level cenobite should consider learning inertial armor.

At 2nd level, dissipating touch.

At 4th level, psionic lion's charge is excellent.

At 7th level, mental barrier is an excellent defensive power.

Finally, at 10th level, inertial barrier is a solid choice.

RESOURCES

One of the best resources available to you is the monastery where you received your training.

A zerth monastery, at the least, provides every zerth cenobite with a place to sleep and basic shelter.

Where cenobites have some standing and in turn take on some of the duties and quests handed out by a monastery, you can expect aid in the form of information.

On some occasions, monks in training to be cenobites provide aid on short-term missions.

ZERTH CENOBITES IN THE WORLD

"She never spoke, but there was an eerie glint in her eye, as though she could see more than you were wantin' her to."

—Gunther Darkmetal, dwarven adventurer

If psionics play a part in a particular world, sooner or later a zerth cenobite will appear on the scene, hunting illithids or set on accomplishing some other austere task.

PCs who treat a cenobite kindly might discover a whole new dimension to time and psionics.

ORGANIZATION

Zerth cenobites are trained in monasteries that teach zerthin, the philosophy of time-like consciousness first developed and taught in a githzerai monastery called Zerth'Ad'Lun.

Luckily for martial artists who are not native to Limbo, that knowledge has been disseminated, and several monasteries have sprung up in the material world.

Cenobites who received their training in the original monastery have come to treat members of nongithzerai monasteries with respect, seeing them as sibling followers of zerthin.

A monk who joins a zerth monastery separates himself from the ordinary study of martial arts training and meditation to embrace fully the study of time.

This is represented by the prerequisite necessity of Concentration ranks, as well as the Wild Talent feat.

A character must also petition the monastery masters for membership.

Depending on the monastery in question, the trial to determine suitability can be as simple as living within the monastery for a period of up to one month under a vow of silence, or as difficult as accepting a quest to slay a terrible marauding beast.

If the trial is successful, the supplicant is allowed to join the order.

After a period of training, she is initiated into the order in a formal ceremony, called the Awakening, the rites of which are secret.

NPC REACTIONS

Most NPCs already suspect the average monk of following strict philosophical paths to enlightenment and martial mastery.

NPCs who know of zerth cenobites specifically are still of a similar opinion, thus holding a starting attitude of indifferent toward characters of this prestige class.

ZERTH CENOBITE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research zerth cenobites to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some monks, called zerths, study a philosophy of martial art that focuses on the passage of time.

DC 15: Zerth cenobites are skilled warriors, capable of timing their kicks and punches just right because of their intimate knowledge of what is about to happen.

DC 20: Zerth cenobites originally hail from one monastery in Limbo called Zerth'Ad'Lun, which is a cloister populated almost completely by those of the githzerai race.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific zerth cenobites in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kind of activities they undertake.

ZERTH CENOBITES IN THE GAME

Because zerth cenobites are essentially monks, it's easy to add them to most games as NPCs.

For players, the prestige class appeals to monks who want to open their mind to psionic power while at the same time using that openness to enhance their combat ability through temporal adjustments.

ADAPTATION

In some ways, the zerth cenobite prestige class is closely tied to the existence of githzerai, it not concurrently, then at least their existence at some time in the past.

Githzerai have become enough a part of general campaign lore that their existence in some shape or form is likely.

However, in those games where githzerai do not exist, or where they are considered irrevocably evil, the focus of this class can be shifted away from githzerai.

The new focus could be some entity or deity (or item) that deals in time, or merely a single monastery (such as Zerth'Ad'Lun, sans githzerai) where temporal arts are taught.

MONASTERY OF ZERTH'AD'LUN

Sensei Belthomais is the revered leader of Zerth'Ad'Lun, a relatively well-known monastery in Limbo that enjoys great respect among githzerai.

The rule of Zerth'Ad'Lun, called zerthin, is taught in the cloister's halls.

The monastery is built with the subjective gravity of Limbo in mind (any direction you decide is down, is down).

A forest of towers protrudes from the spherical chunk of matter on which a city (also called Zerth'Ad'Lun) is built.

The city surrounds the monastery, which exists inside, at the core of the sphere.

Within, winding stairs connect "floors" with "walls" and with "ceilings", though really, all the surfaces are floors for those who don't mind adjusting their own subjective orientation.

The place has three great halls that are used for various aspects of zerthin training.

At any given time, at least one of the halls contains a mentor and a class of several githzerai students going through the forms of their martial discipline.

In more recent times, the monastery has also begun to accept nongithzerai students.

Another important aspect of zerthin is meditation.

Hundreds of tiny cells can be found almost everywhere in the halls of the monastery, each lit by dim candles and draped in sound-foiling fabrics.

Here the cenobites take advantage of quiet and solitude, perfecting their mastery of the time stream.

COMPLETE SCOUNDREL

SKIRMISH AND SUDDEN STRIKE

Many of the prestige class examples presented in this chapter, as well as new feats presented in Chapter 3, refer to the ninja and scout from the Complete Adventurer supplement. Each of those classes has a signature special attack (sudden strike and skirmish, respectively). For ease of reference, these class features are summarized here.

SUDDEN STRIKE (EX)

If a ninja can catch an opponent when it is unable to defend itself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage. Whenever a ninja's target is denied a Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the ninja deals an extra 1d6 points of damage with her attack. This extra damage increases by 1d6 points for every two ninja levels after 1st (to a maximum of 10d6 at 19th level). A ninja can't use sudden strike when flanking an opponent unless that opponent is denied its Dexterity bonus to AC.

This damage also applies to ranged attacks against targets up to 30 feet away. Creatures with concealment, creatures without discernible anatomies, and creatures immune to extra damage from critical hits are all immune to sudden strikes. A ninja can't make a sudden strike while attacking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are out of reach.

A ninja can't use sudden strike to deliver nonlethal damage. Weapons capable of dealing only nonlethal damage don't deal extra damage when used as part of a sudden strike.

The extra damage from the sudden strike ability stacks with the extra damage from sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target. For the purpose of qualifying for feats, prestige classes, and similar options that require a minimum number of extra damage dice, treat the ninja's sudden strike ability as the equivalent of sneak attack.

SKIRMISH (EX)

A scout relies on mobility to deal extra damage and improve her defense. She deals an extra 1d6 points of damage on all attacks she makes during any round in which she moves at least 10 feet. The extra damage applies only to attacks taken during the scout's turn. This extra damage increases by 1d6 for every four levels gained above 1st (2d6 at 5th, 3d6 at 9th, 4d6 at 13th, and 5d6 at 17th level).

The extra damage applies only against living creatures that have a discernible anatomy. Undead, constructs, oozes, plants, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to extra damage from critical hits are not vulnerable to this additional damage. The scout must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot. Scouts can apply this extra damage to ranged attacks made while skirmishing, but only if the target is within 30 feet.

At 3rd level, a scout gains a +1 competence bonus to Armor Class during any round in which she moves at least 10 feet. The bonus applies as soon as the scout has moved 10 feet and lasts until the start of her next turn. This bonus improves by 1 for every four levels gained above 3rd (+2 at 7th, +3 at 11th, +4 at 15th, and +5 at 19th level).

A scout loses this ability when wearing medium or heavy armor or when carrying a medium or heavy load. If she gains the skirmish ability from another class, the bonuses stack.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Intimidate 6 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks.

Special: Must have been tragically wronged in some manner.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Disguise, Escape Artist, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession, Spot, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

Hardened and tenacious, you use surprise and dread to weaken the subjects of your hatred.

Bloody Blade (Ex): The fury of your attack is terrifying to see.

Whenever you deal sudden strike damage (see below) with a melee weapon, the target of the sudden strike and all opponents within 30 feet of you who can see the target are shaken for a number of rounds equal to your avenging executioner level.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + your avenging executioner level + your Cha modifier) negates this effect.

Creatures whose HD exceed your character level are not affected.

Bloody blade is a mind-affecting fear ability.

Sudden Strike (Ex): If you can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from your attack, you can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

See the ninja's sudden strike class feature in the sidebar below.

AVENGING EXECUTIONER

"Scream.

Scream like you made me scream."

—Peck, the Swan Street Slicer

In the broken hearts and shattered dreams of the tragically wronged, seeds of vengeance take root.

Avenging executioners are victims pushed past the limits of endurance who hunt sentient creatures out of a need for justice.

Relentless and inventive, these stalkers wield psychology as deftly as their weapons.

The fear they inspire can be even more deadly than their rusted blades.

BECOMING AN AVENGING EXECUTIONER

Hatred so intense as to be obsession inspires an avenging executioner to take up his bloody path.

Rangers who have suffered mind-shattering tragedies might be compelled to choose fellow humanoids as their favored enemies.

Rogues who turn to the path of vengeance use their lethal precision to dreadful effect.

Druids who have seen their lands despoiled and sorcerers or wizards who have been victims of witch hunts might turn their spells toward revenge.

Any individual so driven can excel as an avenging executioner, regardless of class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Rapid Intimidation (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you can attempt to demoralize an opponent as a move action instead of a standard action.

See the Intimidate skill (PH 77) for details.

If you have the favored enemy class feature, you can add your favored enemy bonus to Intimidate checks made to demoralize foes of the chosen type (and subtype, if applicable).

Dread Blade (Ex): Starting at 4th level, you can exploit the terror you inspire to further brutalize your target.

You treat shaken, frightened, or panicked creatures as flat-footed for the purpose of dealing sudden strike damage.

Bloody Murder (Ex): Starting at 5th level, if you deal enough damage with a melee attack to drop a creature (typically by reducing it to below 0 hit points or killing it), all enemies within 30 feet of you who can see the target become frightened for 1 round.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + your avenging executioner level + your Cha modifier) lessens the effect to shaken.

Creatures whose HD exceed your character level are not affected.

Bloody murder is a mind-affecting fear ability.

PLAYING AN AVENGING EXECUTIONER

You are a warrior of dark passions and an agent of your own brand of justice.

Your path is not one of wanton bloodletting, but a search for righteousness where none exists, a measure of punishment no court would dare impose, and a way to finally silence screams that long have gone unanswered. By your blade you are judge and executioner in a world where innocence is yours alone to decide and forgiveness is weakness.

And for your prey there can never be restitution.

As an avenging executioner, you are driven by a thirst for revenge, whether against a person, a group, or even a whole race.

You seek to share your fear and suffering with those you perceive as responsible.

You are often alone in your quest—few understand your obsession.

Occasionally you find others as impassioned as you and together strive for vengeance against a common enemy, but such kindred spirits are rare.

Your past is gone, and many fear you.

You operate on the fringes of society.

In darkened alleys, dank sewers, and lonely moors, you build your reputation and grow in strength.

COMBAT

The aspects of fear—surprise, intimidation, and hopelessness—are vital weapons in your arsenal.

Given the opportunity, you should always attack unexpectedly to cripple your prey with terror.

Those who stand their ground must face your blade and the dread you wield along with it.

Retreat and strike again from hiding against more powerful opponents or those unaffected by fear.

When your prey flees, hunt it down and ambush it repeatedly, inspiring ever greater dread and panic with which to slowly tear it apart.

ADVANCEMENT

Tragedy led you to your current life.

The loss of a friend to a savage raid, betrayal by a church that promised sanctuary, abandonment by friends who swore their support—any such great wrong might have caused you to break from those you once trusted.

Your hunger for revenge is insatiable.

You are constantly on the move, pursuing quarry gone to ground or members of the group that wronged you, or striving to wipe out every last one of a hated people.

Stealth and intimidation are your favored tools, so improving related skills is key to both your hunt and your survival.

Choose feats such as Combat Reflexes and Mobility, or movement skill tricks such as Twisted Charge or Dismount Attack, that allow you to get past obstacles to reach even the best-guarded target.

RESOURCES

Most of what you have you took, whether out of necessity or as possessions “reclaimed” from defeated prey.

The laws of the world no longer serve you, so you take what you see as yours by right.

You don't seek to harm innocents, but the ignorant and complacent cannot be allowed to impede your mighty work.

AVENGING EXECUTIONERS IN THE WORLD

“If she didn't wake up screaming, she wouldn't wake up at all.”

—Lieutenant Nanci Tomason, discussing an avenging executioner

Avenging executioners fall into a gray (perhaps dark gray) area between heroes and villains.

One might slaughter priests of St. Cuthbert because he believes the deity forsook him at a vital moment, while another remorselessly hunts yuan-ti to exact vengeance from the creatures who slaughtered his children.

The former could be a fearsome enemy, but the latter might share the same goals as the party and be a formidable ally—at least until he has taken his revenge.

ORGANIZATION

The life of an avenging executioner is often lonely.

His single-minded determination sets him on a path few can follow, and he distances himself from those he might care for, realizing that any who share his life also risk sharing his death.

Having lost so much, an avenging executioner grows accustomed to the bitter freedom of an outcast.

Loneliness is not the way of all avenging executioners, however.

Those who did not face their tragedies alone take up arms with their fellow victims.

The survivors of a tribe wiped out by gnolls or of a mercenary party betrayed by its cold-hearted employer might band together for retribution.

The most intelligent and cool-headed avenging executioners master their hatred and control their thirst for justice.

These individuals see the need for and benefits of companionship just as others do, although they have a more calculating perspective that takes into account who might aid them in their bloody work.

Such a mastermind might create an entire organization, turning a thieves' guild into an army of assassins, a band of barbarians into a berserker horde, or an adventuring company into a lethal strike force.

NPC REACTIONS

Fear not only empowers an avenging executioner, but also shackles him like a chain.

Reports of murders move swiftly through an area as the corpses pile up.

Avenging executioners earn frightening appellations, such as Jack-in-Irons, the Lantern Man, or the Swan Street Slicer, inspired by their methods or hunting grounds.

As the body count increases, so do the rumors grow from murmured warnings to fearsome legends.

Few stop to consider whether an avenging executioner might have an agenda beyond wanton slaughter.

Fear is never rational, and terrorized bystanders are quick to imagine themselves in the place of the hunted, even if the killer's victims are related in a way that does not apply to them (such as belonging to a powerful thieves' guild).

However, exceptions do exist.

Those wronged who cannot or will not take matters into their own hands might adopt an avenging executioner as their personal champion.

Some in power see avenging executioners as useful vigilantes and might step outside the bounds of their offices to support—or, far less ethically, create—such desperate hunters.

AVENGING EXECUTIONER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research avenging executioners to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Avenging executioners are serial killers who haunt the alleys and lonely places beneath the surface of society.

DC 15: Avenging executioners make deft use of fear to incapacitate and control those they hunt.

They are remorseless and single-minded in their pursuit of prey.

DC 20: While often unhinged, avenging executioners are not random murderers.

A great wrong or tragedy leads them to hunt down those they hold responsible.

Only those who guard an avenging executioner's prey or who hinder his pursuit need fear his blade.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific avenging executioners in your campaign, including notable individuals currently operating in specific areas, possible reasons for their actions, and theories about their targets.

Avenging executioners are notoriously difficult to find.

Some set up trophy-laden hideouts, while others range abroad to track down their prey and might be encountered nearly anywhere.

The most likely way to encounter an avenging executioner is to determine the location of his next target and wait there.

Even then, attempting conversation might have to wait until after he completes his grisly work, lest the PCs become mere obstacles to be dealt with.

Even then, attempting conversation might have to wait until after he completes his grisly work, lest the PCs become mere obstacles to be dealt with.

Thus, integrating a heroic avenging executioner requires only that both he and the party fight the same enemy.

As an antagonist, an avenging executioner can be an ongoing dark legend.

His career begins with a single murder, then another, and another, each with the same hallmarks.

Perhaps a witness gets a glimpse of the killer.

Such a chain of events should interest PCs in the slayings, leading them to learn what connected the victims and figure out who might be next.

Their investigations lead them to confront the avenging executioner, either to end the killings or, depending on the nature of his targets, aid in his fearsome hunt.

ADAPTATION

An avenging executioner can fit into any campaign setting.

In worlds where a specific nation or race faces prejudice, some members of that people might fight back as avenging executioners.

Campaigns that take place far from the intrigues of the city might see avenging executioners as dark woodland hunters, radical allies of druids and rangers and punishers of those who despoil nature.

BATTLE TRICKSTER

"Oh, I'm terribly sorry.

Is that my blade in your gut?"

—Elibor Gunter, battle trickster

The battle trickster engages in combat not only to defeat enemies but to impress them with martial and acrobatic prowess.

He amazes onlookers with daring and death-defying stunts, making a spectacle of war.

BECOMING A BATTLE TRICKSTER

Swashbucklers make up the majority of battle tricksters, since their abilities already so closely mimic those of the prestige class.

Most of the rest are rangers, along with the occasional fighter whose high Intelligence provides extra skill points.

Bards or rogues sometimes pick up a few levels of battle trickster, though such characters prefer the uncanny trickster prestige class (page 67).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Any three skills 6 ranks each.

Skill Tricks: Any two.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Handle Animal, Jump, Profession, Ride, Swim, Tumble, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

The battle trickster excels at combining skill tricks with normal combat.

Bonus Trick: At 1st level, and again at 3rd level, you gain a bonus skill trick for which you meet the prerequisite.

These bonus tricks do not cost skill points and do not count against your maximum number of skill tricks available.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level, you gain a bonus feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

This feat must be selected from the list of fighter bonus feats.

Tricky Fighting (Ex): At 3rd level, you have mastered incorporating skill tricks into your combat routines.

In any round when you perform a skill trick, you gain a +1 competence bonus on the next attack roll you make that round.

PLAYING A BATTLE TRICKSTER

Whereas magical tricksters (page 45) and uncanny tricksters (page 67) can be show-offs, you never use your tricks to get attention, no matter how flashy they are.

You might not be quiet about your abilities, but you don't flaunt them.

When combat begins, they speak for themselves.

You work well with both combat specialists and other kinds of tricksters.

Becoming a skill trick expert instantly affiliates you with a very loose fellowship of tricksters (magical, uncanny, and battle).

You don't get along with every trickster you meet, though: Some jealously guard their secrets and view others of their kind as rivals.

COMBAT

Whereas other tricksters might flit about the battlefield, looking for just the right opportunity to perform a spectacular combat-ending strike, you stand near the front lines.

Your fighting experience, solid hit points, and repertoire of feats and skill tricks offer you the flexibility to serve as a front-line battler or in a supporting role.

You don't see your tricks as ways to impress onlookers or intimidate foes, but rather as additional weapons in your arsenal.

ADVANCEMENT

You don't become a battle trickster in a vacuum.

You probably had a mentor at some point, someone who sensed your boredom with traditional fighting techniques.

Or you might be self-taught, watching other unconventional combatants and endlessly repeating the movements you saw.

Once you learned the basics, you decided to move on to more advanced battle techniques.

Through self-sacrifice and hard work, you managed to learn enough basic skill tricks that picking up more has become easy.

You know some skills, perhaps a wider array than most who pursue your profession, but you are not necessarily a master of any one of them.

Just as you spent so much time learning basic skill tricks, you must continue to practice the more advanced techniques.

Fortunately, this prestige class offers strong support in skill points and access to bonus tricks.

Your feat selection should support your skill tricks as well as your preferred mode of combat.

If you focus on movement tricks, choose feats that allow you to move faster or traverse difficult obstacles more easily; if you rely on Combat Expertise to thwart attackers, you'll get more punch by focusing on that feat tree.

RESOURCES

Although you might not have realized it when you became a battle trickster, you are part of a larger (albeit very loosely organized) group.

The benefits and requirements of this group are few, but it does offer the camaraderie of shared experiences as well as the chance to learn new tricks.

Nevertheless, tricksters owe no more to one another than do any other people with similar, nonbinding interests.

BATTLE TRICKSTERS IN THE WORLD

"He came at me from out of nowhere.

One moment he's not there, and the next he is.

I don't know what he did to me, but it hurt."

—Theta Sunglory, survivor

The battle trickster makes an excellent irregular soldier operating in a small group of specialists, such as an adventuring party.

Whether scrumming toe to toe in the front line or engaging a distant foe, the battle trickster holds his own in any combat situation.

He usually continues to specialize in whatever role he held before joining the prestige class, albeit with unusual techniques.

ORGANIZATION

Battle tricksters congregate only on an occasional basis, usually along with magical tricksters and uncanny tricksters (although they make up the smallest number in such a mixed group).

They swap techniques, introduce newly developed tricks and trick-supporting equipment and magic, and share experiences.

Outside observers might assume such a meeting is part of a circus or carnival, with tricksters springing about performing for the enjoyment and education of onlookers. These gatherings, though enjoyable, do not represent a structured organization.

Battle tricksters looking to become part of something more permanent usually join groups that appreciate both their abilities and their moral choices: police forces, thieves' guilds, and military or guard units.

NPC REACTIONS

Battle tricksters are impressive and terrifying in combat. People who have witnessed them in action treat them with respect, even awe.

Most strangers have a friendly attitude, or at least a false warmth brought on by intimidation (whether intended or not).

Some are jealous of battle tricksters and their abilities, or covet such prowess for themselves.

They treat battle tricksters with calculated indifference, and the most petty of such people are unfriendly.

Because tricksters run the entire gamut of morality, some use their abilities to take advantage of less talented folk.

A victim of such exploitation has a negative view of all tricksters and is unfriendly at best.

BATTLE TRICKSTER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (history) or Knowledge (local) can research battle tricksters to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Battle tricksters employ unusual talents in combat.

DC 15: Battle tricksters don't stop practicing other abilities just because they start to learn tricks.

DC 20: Not every battle trickster is a swashbuckling acrobat—some of them are also raging barbarians or righteous paladins.

They use skill tricks to enhance their existing talents.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific battle tricksters in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Because battle tricksters operate in small groups of mixed abilities or in connection with military units, the easiest way to find one is to contact the local garrison or sheriff and inquire about individuals with unique fighting talents.

BATTLE TRICKSTERS IN THE GAME

Battle tricksters are frighteningly effective opponents with a few surprises in store.

A single one in a group of standard combatants makes an excellent leader.

The majority of battle tricksters are not villains, but they can be entertaining bodyguards for the party's antagonist. Anyone who enjoys playing swashbucklers and similar characters who perform over-the-top, cinematic acts of daring should find the battle trickster an interesting PC choice.

The prestige class does not hamper a fighting class's abilities, so even someone who prefers the role of frontline combatant might enjoy the slight change of pace and increased flexibility offered by the prestige class.

ADAPTATION

The battle trickster is already a very generalized prestige class that can easily fit into any campaign setting.

It does rely on the new rules for skill tricks, however, so it is not suitable for a campaign that does not incorporate them.

Replacing bonus tricks with extra feats from the fighter list can repurpose the character as a combat specialist with a more generalized approach to skills.

CLOAKED DANCER

"Watch me.

Watch my dance.

Ignore my hands.

Ignore your death."

—Mina Longacre, reciting the cloaked dancer's mantra
The cloaked dancer dances into the hearts and minds of her audience, beguiling those around her with boundless charm and careful dance moves, leaving her victims in a state of ecstasy even as she kills them.

BECOMING A CLOAKED DANCER

Bards most often and most easily become cloaked dancers, although a substantial number of rogues and some monks also enter the prestige class.

Ninjas and spellthieves occasionally travel the path of the cloaked dancer, although they have difficulty qualifying unless they multiclass, usually with a few levels of bard.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Perform (dance) 10 ranks, Sleight of Hand 5 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Disguise, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Jump, Perform, Profession, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Speak Language, Swim, Tumble, Use Magic Device, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

The cloaked dancer distracts and fascinates her enemies, allowing her to strike unexpectedly...and with deadly effect.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a cloaked dancer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Enchanting Dance (Su): Once per day per cloaked dancer level, you can use your dance to produce supernatural effects on those who observe you.

Each ability requires both a minimum cloaked dancer level and a minimum number of ranks in the Perform (dance) skill to qualify; if you do not have the required number of ranks, you do not gain the enchanting dance ability until you acquire them.

This ability can be used only if you are wearing light armor or no armor and carrying no more than a light load.

Enchanting dance is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Starting an enchanting dance effect is a standard action. You must concentrate each round to maintain the dance; no dance can be maintained for more rounds than your cloaked dancer level + your Con modifier (minimum 1 round).

The save DC for your enchanting dance effects is 10 + your cloaked dancer level + your Cha modifier.

A creature can't be affected again by your enchanting dance effect for 24 hours whether or not it succeeds on the saving throw.

Beguiling Dance: A cloaked dancer with 10 or more ranks in Perform (dance) can use her enchanting dance to distract her enemies.

Whenever you start or maintain a beguiling dance, all enemies within 30 feet who can see you must succeed on a Will save or be dazed for 1 round.

Creatures that fail this save also have their attitude improved by one step for as long as you maintain the dance (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, PH 74).

This attitude adjustment does not prevent any subsequent attitude changes.

For example, an enemy that becomes indifferent toward you as a result of this effect still turns hostile if you then attack it.

Wearying Dance: A 3rd-level cloaked dancer with 12 or more ranks in Perform (dance) can use her enchanting dance to tire her enemies.

Whenever you start or maintain a wearying dance, all enemies within 30 feet who can see you must succeed on a Will save or be fatigued for as long as you maintain the dance.

Creatures failing this save that are already fatigued become exhausted.

Frightful Dance: A 5th-level cloaked dancer with 14 or more ranks in Perform (dance) can use her enchanting dance to scare her enemies.

Whenever you start or maintain a frightful dance, all enemies within 30 feet who can see you must succeed on a Will save or be shaken for as long as you maintain the dance.

Creatures failing this save that are already shaken become frightened, and those that are already frightened become panicked.

Surprise Strike (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you can make a particularly effective attack against creatures distracted by your dance.

As a full-round action, you can maintain your enchanting dance and make a melee attack with a light weapon, dealing an extra 1d6 points of damage.

At 4th level, the extra damage you deal increases to 2d6.

The extra damage from the surprise strike ability stacks with the extra damage from sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target.

A target under the effect of your enchanting dance is considered flat-footed against the attack.

Any creature that is not vulnerable to extra damage from sneak attacks is immune to this effect.

This ability counts as sudden strike for the purpose of meeting prerequisites or using ambush feats (page 71).

PLAYING A CLOAKED DANCER

You are the center of attention, the person everyone wants to talk to, the “face” of the party.

Even if you aren’t the most attractive or charismatic member of your group, your unequalled skill at dance creates an irresistible appeal born of justified confidence and supernatural influence.

You are more than just an eye-catching butterfly, though. Your mark rarely survives the encounter if you don’t want him to.

COMBAT

You have two roles in combat: distracter and killer.

When your group’s plan calls for a diversion, you shine.

You draw the attention of opponents, allowing your allies to position themselves for their most devastating attacks.

You can perform this role near the front lines of battle, but you have a better chance of survival if you stay near the back.

As the killer you move in close, drawing the enemy’s eye, and deliver one debilitating or deadly blow that turns the tide of battle.

None of your enchanting dance effects can influence creatures immune to enchantments or mind-affecting abilities, so against those foes you’ll need to fall back on the abilities of your other class or classes.

ADVANCEMENT

An exquisite physical specimen, you drew the attention of patrons and audiences as often with your unquestionable attractiveness as with your extraordinary artistic talents.

Perhaps you sought to give your art a more practical use, or perhaps you grew disgusted with the unhidden lust of those who watched you, but eventually you brought together your love of dance with your martial abilities. Since the first killing from your enchanting dance—by your own hand or that of a partner—you have grown steadily in both fame and notoriety.

You are beloved for your talents but feared for the death that follows you.

You must walk a fine line, never letting the dread of the latter outweigh the appeal of the former.

Obviously, you must continue to max out your ranks in Perform (dance), but don’t forget other useful skills such as Bluff, Hide, and Diplomacy.

The new ambush feats in Chapter 3 present additional options for your surprising strike ability, particularly if you already have sneak attack or sudden strike from another class.

Weapon Finesse and Weapon Focus greatly enhance a mission’s chance of success.

Interaction skill tricks are an excellent choice as well.

RESOURCES

You rarely work alone, yet your involvement with an organization is transitory at best.

As your needs or whims dictate you flit from town to town, dance troupe to dance troupe, and are sought out by thieves and assassins’ guilds.

For the short time you join such groups, you can rely on whatever resources they provide.

Most of the time, however, you are on your own.

CLOAKED DANCERS IN THE WORLD

“She was a rare beauty: charming, graceful, talented. It’s too bad she killed the king.”

—Tessa Senchan, spellwarp sniper and royal guard officer

In any setting that includes assassins and bards, cloaked dancers slip comfortably into the space between the two.

They can act as alternative assassins or as especially influential bards who focus on their love of dance.

ORGANIZATION

Cloaked dancers typically work with trusted partners or small groups, making them well suited to adventuring parties.

In rare circumstances they work alone, but such cloaked dancers often have short careers.

On entering a new town or city, a cloaked dancer who expects to stay for more than a few days usually joins a dance troupe or thieves’ guild (or both).

These alliances are rarely permanent, lasting just long enough to benefit both parties.

A cloaked dancer who travels regularly between a small number of cities might have membership in several organizations but no loyalty to any of them.

NPC REACTIONS

Reactions to a known cloaked dancer vary widely. The nobility both prize and fear cloaked dancers, welcoming them cautiously, since having one perform brings much prestige but also the risk of death. Bodyguards and law enforcers despise them for the murders that inevitably follow their performances. Common folk strain to catch glimpses of cloaked dancers, treating them with the awe and jealousy that accompany celebrity.

CLOAKED DANCER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (nobility and royalty) or Perform (dance) can research cloaked dancers to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: A cloaked dancer can charm watchers with her dance.

DC 15: A cloaked dancer creates an effective diversion while her comrades rob or murder with ease.

DC 20: A cloaked dancer can slide a dagger between your ribs and still leave you happy.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific cloaked dancers in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which she operates, and the kinds of performances in which she specializes.

Finding a cloaked dancer is rarely difficult if the PCs have a connection to the criminal underworld.

A thieves' guild can usually set up a meeting.

If the PCs know of a specific cloaked dancer, they can also inquire of a dance troupe operating in that city.

CLOAKED DANCERS IN THE GAME

A cloaked dancer can be attractive to the player who enjoys the role of a specialized killer but does not want to play an evil character.

For players who are interested more in social interaction than in assassination, the prestige class ensures that they are the center of attention in any encounter involving intrigue and diplomacy.

Introducing cloaked dancers into your campaign should not be difficult.

Famous dancers might already exist, perhaps as part of a traveling show or as members of an exclusive school of dance—their extra talents can be revealed at an opportune time.

ADAPTATION

Cloaked dancers are most appropriate for campaigns that focus on urban adventures and social encounters.

In campaigns involving large combats, exploration, or dungeon delving, they are as out of place as songbirds on the battlefield.

Against intelligent humanoid enemies they can hold their own in any campaign, though, with abilities resembling those of enchanters and bards.

If your campaign's main antagonists are creatures immune to enchantments or mind-affecting abilities, such as undead, you might need to adjust the enchanting dance to affect such beings.

Consider changing the entry requirements to include ranks in the Knowledge skill appropriate to that type of creature.

COMBAT TRAPSMITH

"Go on ahead.

I've got a surprise for those guys."

—Alexan, combat trapsmith

Combat trapsmiths can litter a battlefield or dungeon with devices of their own cunning design.

They can put together a variety of traps, ranging from annoying to deadly, in mere seconds.

With a bit of preparation, a combat trapsmith can turn a difficult battle into an easy exercise or vice versa.

BECOMING A COMBAT TRAPSMITH

Rogues and scouts make up the majority of combat trapsmiths, with ninjas and multiclass rangers forming the bulk of the rest.

These four classes rely most often on traps and (except for the ranger) are also the best able to find and disarm them.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Craft (trapmaking) 8 ranks, Disable Device 6 ranks, Search 6 ranks.

Special: Trapfinding.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Disable Device, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession, Search, Spot, Tumble, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

The combat trapsmith takes trapmaking to new heights, rapidly installing temporary devices for use on the battlefield.

Combat Trapping (Ex): You know how to create combat traps to aid your allies.

At 1st level, you can learn two traps from the list in Table 2-6: Combat Traps, provided you meet the prerequisites.

TABLE 2–6: COMBAT TRAPS

Trap Name (Craft DC)	Prerequisites	Effect
Befuddler (15)	—	–2 penalty on Concentration, Int-, Wis-, Cha-based checks
Enfeebler (15)	Craft (alchemy) 1 rank	Fatigues target
Entangler (17)	Class level 2nd	Entangles target
Equalizer (17)	Class level 2nd	Target falls prone
Flashbang (19)	Craft (alchemy) 3 ranks, class level 3rd	Blinds and deafens target
Footspiker (15)	—	Halves target's speed
Glitterburst (15)	Craft (alchemy) 1 rank	Makes invisible target visible
Scorcher (15)	Craft (alchemy) 1 rank	Deals 2d6 fire damage
Scorcher, great (23)	Craft (alchemy) 5 ranks, class level 5th	Deals 5d6 fire damage in larger area
Sleeper (21)	Craft (alchemy) 4 ranks, class level 4th	Target falls asleep
Spiderweb (19)	Craft (alchemy) 3 ranks, class level 3rd	Web fills small area
Stinkburst (21)	Craft (alchemy) 4 ranks, class level 4th	Stinking cloud fills trapped square

At each level thereafter, you add one additional trap to your repertoire, to a maximum of six traps known.

Whenever you attain a new level in this class, you can choose to replace any one previously learned trap with a new trap.

A combat trap is triggered by any Tiny or larger creature entering the trapped square.

Flying or incorporeal creatures don't trigger combat traps.

You can build a combat trap only on solid ground—you can't place it on a wall or ceiling, in the air, or floating in the water.

A combat trap functions only once.

Once set, it lasts for 1 hour or until triggered, whichever comes first.

Crafting a combat trap requires a full-round action (which provokes attacks of opportunity) and a Craft (trapmaking) check.

Each trap's entry lists the required Craft check DC.

If the check is successful, you can place the trap in any square adjacent to your space.

A failed check means that the action and materials are wasted to no effect, but you can try to set the same trap again later.

Some combat traps allow a saving throw, as noted in a trap's entry.

The save DC is 10 + your combat trapsmith level + your Int modifier.

Locating or disabling a combat trap requires a successful Search or Disable Device check with a DC equal to 20 + your combat trapsmith level + your Int modifier.

You can automatically find and disable your own combat traps.

Because a combat trap is built quickly and crudely, it is also possible to discern with a successful Spot check (using the same DC as given above), whether or not the observer has the trapfinding class feature.

All combat traps produce extraordinary effects, so dispel magic or spell resistance cannot interfere with them.

Unless otherwise noted, an ongoing effect from a combat trap lasts for a number of rounds equal to your combat trapsmith level.

Multiple effects from the same kind of combat trap don't stack; use only the longer duration.

Creating combat traps requires a special kit containing raw materials and tools.

A combat trapsmith's kit costs 100 gp, weighs 10 pounds, and provides components sufficient to create ten traps.

A combat trap can't be cannibalized for raw materials, nor can its materials be retrieved if the trap isn't triggered.

Trap Sense (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, you become more adept at evading the effects of traps.

See the barbarian class feature, PH 26.

If you already have trap sense, this class feature provides no additional benefit.

Skill Focus: At 2nd level, you gain Skill Focus (Craft [trapmaking]) as a bonus feat.

If you already have this feat, you can instead select any other feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Improvised Materials (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you can craft combat traps from raw materials at hand instead of relying on your combat trapsmith's kit.

Doing so increases the Craft (trapmaking) check DC by 5 but otherwise has no effect on the trap's potency.

Expert Trapsetter (Ex): At 5th level, you can set a combat trap as a standard action without provoking attacks of opportunity.

COMBAT TRAP DESCRIPTIONS

Entering the trapped square produces the stated effect.

Befuddler: A pungent spray applies a –2 penalty on Concentration checks, as well as ability checks and skill checks based on Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma (Will negates).

Enfeebler: A puff of acrid powder renders the target fatigued (Fortitude negates).

Entangler: A hidden cord loops around the target, holding it in place as a tanglefoot bag does.

A successful Reflex save negates the effect; alternatively, a DC 20 Strength or Escape Artist check (made as a full-round action) allows the stuck creature to break free.

Equalizer: The first creature entering the trapped square must succeed on a Reflex save or fall prone.

The trap reputedly gets its name from its gnome inventor, who used it to bring taller foes down to his level.

Flashbang: The trapped square emits a blinding burst of light accompanied by a loud thunderclap.

Any creature in the trapped square or any adjacent square becomes blinded and deafened; a successful Fortitude save lessens the effect to dazzled.

Footspiker: This trap effectively fills the designated square with caltrops, potentially slowing the target's movement (PH 126).

Glitterburst: A fine cloud of silver dust clings to any creature within the trapped square (no save).

Any creature affected by a glitterburst trap takes a –20 penalty on Hide checks and, if invisible, is visibly outlined for the duration of the effect.

Scorcher: The trapped square releases a cloud of fine dust followed by a spark, setting off a small explosion that deals 2d6 points of fire damage to each creature in that square (Reflex half).

Scorcher, Great: This works like a scorcher trap (see above), except that it deals 5d6 points of fire damage to each creature in the trapped square and in all adjacent squares (Reflex half).

Sleeper: A slumber-inducing vapor makes the target fall asleep.

A successful Fortitude save lessens the effect to fatigued.

Spiderweb: The trapped square releases a burst of sticky tendrils that toughen when they contact air.

This trap duplicates the effect of a web spell, except that the strands fill only the trapped square and all adjacent squares.

Stinkburst: A cloud of noxious vapors duplicates the effect of a stinking cloud spell, except that the effect fills only the trapped square.

A successful Fortitude save negates the effect, but a creature must make a new saving throw each round it remains within the cloud.

PLAYING A COMBAT TRAPSMITH

From an early age you were fascinated by all aspects of traps, from their elegant engineering to their ingenious lethality.

Perhaps you fell victim to a particularly innovative device, or witnessed the effectiveness of one.

You might have had a teacher, but just as likely you learned from studying the mechanisms of sprung or disabled traps. You have dedicated yourself to the ultimate expression of the trapmaker's craft.

Preparation and care are the keys to your survival.

You have great respect for traps and what they can do, so you never rush headlong into anyplace new and unfamiliar. Your role in the party depends on its needs: You might take point, searching for the handiwork of other trapmakers, or follow up the rear, rigging nasty surprises to cover the group's withdrawal.

In either case you take your responsibility, like everything else in life, very seriously.

COMBAT

You can hold your own in combat, thanks to the training you received before becoming a combat trapsmith, but you should stay out of melee as long as you can.

Try not to draw attention to yourself while "enhancing" the battlefield with your special creations.

Only after you've given yourself and your party the edge with your expert skills should you get involved in the fight.

ADVANCEMENT

Even though you have reached a high degree of proficiency, you must continue to hone your craft.

Max out your ranks in Craft (trapmaking), as well as in Disable Device and Search.

If you have the skill points to spare, consider investing in Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Knowledge (dungeoneering), if your journeys take you into appropriate environments.

Choose feats that help you keep out of enemies' reach, or that let you move easily around the battlefield, such as Dodge (and related feats), Improved Initiative, and Dash (from Complete Warrior).

Luck feats (page 72) are useful for those times when even your impressive skills fail you.

Taking a level in a spellcasting class (likely wizard, with your high Intelligence) can be a smart choice.

Having even a few extra magical tricks up your sleeve gives you an edge against foes who think they know all your secrets.

RESOURCES

Popular with thieves' guilds, hunting lodges, and nobles looking for added protection, you never want for work or opportunity.

Whether employed by an organization or an individual, you can name your own price—and only the wealthy can afford you.

You can expect to receive assistance from an employer to help you do what you do best, usually in the form of extra combat trapsmith's kits.

The amount of aid depends on your employer's wealth and needs, as well as the project for which you were hired.

When not employed or when plying your trade on the side, you expect and require no support—you can manage quite well on your own.

COMBAT TRAPSMITHS IN THE WORLD

"We spent the day in town shopping.

By the time we returned, he'd rigged our rooms top to bottom!"

—Elibor Gunter, battle trickster and friend of Alexan
Combat trapsmiths turn traps from elaborate set pieces into tactical battlefield additions, but otherwise don't have much overall impact on the world.

Thus, you can easily incorporate a combat trapsmith into a campaign.

For example, if the party raids the headquarters of a thieves' guild but cannot complete the mission, place a combat trapsmith among the surviving guild members.

Even as the PCs try to make their escape, they might fall victim to devilish traps in previously cleared hallways and rooms.

ORGANIZATION

Each combat trapsmith comes to his trade in his own way. No guild or organization links these staunch individualists, who freely join or leave an employer as their interests and values dictate.

A combat trapsmith joins a larger group only if doing so makes sense to him; another might reject the same organization as offending his ideals or technical sensibilities.

A group honored by the company of such an insidious and deadly specialist treats him with honor and respect.

NPC REACTIONS

The combat trapsmith's trade is of questionable legality in some places, and highly illicit in others.

Those who care about such things and who know a character to be a combat trapsmith treat him with scorn, usually having an initial reaction of indifferent at best.

Dwarves, gnomes, and others who appreciate skilled craftsmanship look upon his abilities with a bit of awe, and are usually at least friendly to a combat trapsmith.

COMBAT TRAPSMITH LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research combat trapsmiths to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.
DC 10: Combat trapsmiths are equally skilled at creating and disabling nasty traps.

DC 15: A skilled combat trapsmith can whip up a trap in a few moments that might take an ordinary person hours or days.

DC 20: Some combat trapsmiths can make traps seemingly out of almost nothing.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific combat trapsmiths in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which he operates, and the kinds of traps in which he specializes.

Members of a local thieves' guild always know who the combat trapsmiths are within their city, even if none are currently working for the guild.

PCs wishing to meet a specific combat trapsmith should contact his employer (if he has one) or the guildmaster. This information never comes cheap.

COMBAT TRAPSMITHS IN THE GAME

Combat trapsmiths work best in campaigns set within an urban environment, particularly if the PCs have a home base to protect.

Some wilderness-based campaigns might also provide enough opportunities to keep combat trapsmiths busy. Players who enjoy establishing and protecting a home base for their characters, or who are looking for a new direction for their rogues, might enjoy playing combat trapsmiths. Engineering-focused dwarves and gnomes find the class especially appealing.

Even a single combat trapsmith NPC can make an interesting series of encounters, harassing the PCs with infuriating new traps in areas they thought were clear. The party faces a substantial challenge in tracking down and putting a stop to the interference, especially if the combat trapsmith has an influential employer.

ADAPTATION

The combat trapsmith prestige class requires no special rules sets and can fit into any campaign.

Additional trap effects are easy to design, following the trapmaking guidelines in the Dungeon Master's Guide and the examples in the above list.

For a stronger magical theme, consider adding a level of spellcaster to the prerequisite and expanding the range of traps to encompass low-level spell-like effects (such as hypnotism, daze monster, shatter, or cause fear).

FORTUNE'S FRIEND

"Don't worry about it.

I have a feeling our luck is about to change."

—Sar Pios, layabout and fortune's friend

The fortune's friend lives by his luck.

He doesn't worry about much of anything, including where his next meal comes from, and trusts to luck—perhaps more than he should.

BECOMING A FORTUNE'S FRIEND

Clerics of Olidammara, monks, and rogues qualify most easily for this prestige class and make up the largest group within it, though every class finds representation.

To adopt the ways of the fortune's friend, a character need only embrace his luck.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Any skill 8 ranks.

Feats: Any luck feat.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Hide, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Perform, Profession, Search, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Swim, Tumble, Use Magic Device, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

A fortune's friend survives by and trusts to his luck.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a fortune's friend, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Easy Luck (Ex): Luck comes to you naturally.

The swift or immediate action to use a luck feat (page 72) does not count against your limit of one swift action per turn.

However, you still can't expend a luck reroll more than once per turn to influence the same result.

Extra Fortune (Ex): At each odd-numbered level, you gain one extra luck reroll per day.

This reroll is in addition to those granted by luck feats.

More Luck than Skill (Ex): Even if you have some talent in a particular area, you still depend on your luck to see you through.

Once per day as a swift action, you can add your class level as a luck bonus on all skill checks you make until the start of your next turn.

Bonus Luck Feat: At 2nd and 4th level, you gain a bonus luck feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

See page 75 for a complete list of luck feats.

Fortune's Favorite (Ex): By 3rd level, you have learned to rely on your luck to stay alive.

Once per day as an immediate action, you can add your class level as a luck bonus on all saving throws you make until the start of your next turn.

Lucky Strike (Ex): Even the greatest warriors, those who train and drill constantly, occasionally win through sheer luck, so why shouldn't you?

Beginning at 5th level, once per day as a swift action, you can add your class level as a luck bonus on all attack rolls you make until the start of your next turn.

PLAYING A FORTUNE'S FRIEND

Who needs skill?

You've got luck on your side!

Even in the heat of battle, when your very life is at stake, you remain calm and cheerful, confident that something will give you and your comrades the upper hand. Your carefree attitude is uplifting to some and grating to others.

To the latter you say, "Sour grapes!" They are envious of your ability to slide through life without a care, easily finding food, gold, lodging, and love.

In your rare contemplative moments, you feel sorry for those who have to work so hard to make ends meet.

COMBAT

As a fortune's friend, you are an unusual combatant, often jumping in over your head and relying on luck to get you out of a jam.

Your talent isn't a license to be stupid, though.

You're lucky, not invulnerable, and your good fortune doesn't necessarily protect your allies.

ADVANCEMENT

You don't become a fortune's friend so much as realize you've always been one.

From your earliest days, good things happened to you, and others would comment on how lucky you were.

As you grew older you trusted more and more to your luck, and it never let you down.

Eventually you forswore practice and discipline, relying entirely on your luck to get by.

On that day you truly became a fortune's friend.

You pick up bits of know-how here and there, which translate into a smattering of skills: some generally useful (such as Spot) and some of narrower utility (such as Use Rope).

Having a varied repertoire of skills comes in handy, even if you don't practice them often.

Of course, you can't go wrong selecting even more luck feats.

Each one not only gives you a new avenue of luck to explore, but another crucial luck reroll.

RESOURCES

As in everything else, you've been fortunate in finding the right people to know.

Many enjoy your company and marvel at your incredible string of luck.

However, since most people secretly envy your good fortune, these contacts are at best helpful acquaintances.

Most such so-called friends are quick to abandon you when the going gets tough.

For the most part, your luck is all you have.

FORTUNE'S FRIENDS IN THE WORLD

"I used to want to be that guy.

Good things always seem to happen to him.

But you know what?

That life is too unpredictable even for me, never knowing where your next meal is going to come from."

—Dram Cicaeda, man on the street

Individualistic and free-wheeling, fortune's friends fit easily into any campaign that uses the luck rules.

ORGANIZATION

Though a fortune's friend belongs to no one but himself, he seeks out companionship wherever he can find it.

He isn't picky about his comrades, as long as they aren't judgmental about him.

This arrangement does not always work out well, however.

Some who recognize his abilities keep a fortune's friend around simply as a good-luck charm.

More unscrupulous groups take advantage of his good fortune, making him the fall guy for their crimes or sending him on suicide missions.

NPC REACTIONS

A fortune's friend doesn't consider himself lazy: He works just hard enough for his luck to carry him the rest of the way.

This apparent tendency toward laziness causes many people to turn against a fortune's friend.

Dwarves in particular despise those who benefit without hard work.

A dwarf who recognizes a fortune's friend has an initial unfriendly attitude toward him, and Diplomacy checks to influence that attitude have a -10 penalty.

Even the luckiest fortune's friend is unlikely to convince a dwarf to be helpful toward him.

Other characters treat a fortune's friend with a mixture of envy and awe.

Most are neutral overall: They appreciate his abilities but resent his easy life.

Two fortune's friends, should they meet, repel one another like similar magnetic poles.

FORTUNE'S FRIEND LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (local) can research fortune's friends to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: A fortune's friend is lucky.

Almost too lucky.

DC 15: A fortune's friend lives by luck alone.

Nothing ever seems to get him down because—for him at least—everything works out in the end.

DC 20: A fortune's friend can sometimes cheat death.

PCs rarely go looking for a fortune's friend.

A meeting just happens, as long as that would be lucky for him.

FORTUNE'S FRIENDS IN THE GAME

Fortune's friends can be fascinating if frustrating antagonists, but they work better as allies, cohorts, or minions of more powerful foes.

They make great comedic foils, bringing their brash personalities to bear against the PCs in over-the-top, melodramatic ways.

Players who like to have some control over their characters' luck should enjoy this prestige class, which can work easily with any character type.

It might also appeal to those playing clerics or worshipers of a deity of fortune, particularly if they have access to the Luck domain.

One fortune's friend can join a party without endangering the overall scheme of things.

ADAPTATION

A fortune's friend fits easily into almost any campaign world.

You can customize the prestige class by specifying his source of luck as a deity: Olidammara in the core setting, Tymora in Faerûn, the Traveler in the world of Eberron, or an equivalent deity of your campaign.

To strengthen this divine theme, you could adjust the entry requirements to include 4 ranks in Knowledge (religion) and perhaps being a worshiper of the appropriate deity.

GRAY GUARD

"Does your stout armor give you peace of mind?
Does your holy sword help you sleep at night?
Mine do not."

—Ambros Brasmere, gray guard

The typical image of a paladin is a proud knight of noble bearing, resplendent in armor bright as sunlight and bearing a sword shining with the purity of his cause. This archetype, upheld by both idealistic knights and their enemies, has killed countless honorable warriors. Taking a cue from the enemies of their faith, many good-aligned religions have established secretive orders of the most dedicated and hardened soldiers.

These gray guards are less restrained by their knightly vows, doing what must be done, no matter how unpleasant.

BECOMING A GRAY GUARD

Only the most realistic and battleworn paladins become gray guards.

They know the cruelties of the world cannot be expunged merely by good example and kind words.

Though no less virtuous than other paladins, they join the order's bloodstained ranks out of a sense of necessity.

Those who seek membership merely because they resent the yoke of their code of conduct are unfit to be gray guards or paladins; such weak-willed individuals are swiftly excommunicated from both orders.

Gray guards most commonly follow deities concerned with justice, such as Heironeous, Tyr, or St. Cuthbert.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful good.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Special: Lay on hands class feature.

Special: Must adhere to a code of conduct that prevents the character from performing evil acts.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Disguise, Forgery, Handle Animal, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (local), Knowledge (nobility and royalty), Knowledge (religion), Ride, Sense Motive.

CLASS FEATURES

You do what needs to be done for the betterment of your cause.

Your freedom to act increases as you progress in level, letting you deal with evil as few pure paladins can, yet at the same time attracting the suspicion of those you are sworn to aid and protect.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a gray guard, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Sacrament of Trust: Upon entering this prestige class, you take a vow of allegiance to your faith beyond that of any ordinary paladin.

This vow grants you a measure of freedom to act on your cause's behalf without fear of retribution should your duties require you to break your code of conduct.

Dishonorable acts still cause you to lose both gray guard and paladin class features until you atone, but this infraction is considered much less severe than it would be for a paladin.

Thus, whenever you seek to atone for deeds that you willingly commit in the name of your faith but that break your code of conduct, a cleric casting an atonement spell on your behalf does not expend 500 XP as is normally required.

This reprieve applies only to acts intended to further the cause of righteousness and the gray guard's faith.

No XP cost applies to a gray guard atoning after beating a confession from a heretic, for example, but the cost would have to be paid for one who started a barroom brawl.

Lay on Hands (Su): This ability is identical to the paladin class feature of the same name (PH 44).

Levels of gray guard stack with other class levels that grant lay on hands to determine the ability's total healing capacity.

Debilitating Touch (Su): At 2nd level, you learn to channel your lay on hands ability into a painful touch attack.

Many gray guards use debilitating touch during interrogation, since it reduces the target's ability to successfully bluff or resist magical effects.

Using debilitating touch does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

An opponent hit by this attack is sickened for 5 rounds.

Using this ability costs 5 points of your daily healing allotment.

A successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + your gray guard level + your Cha modifier) negates the effect.

Smite Evil (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can smite evil once per day.

See the paladin class feature (PH 44).

At 8th level, you can smite evil one additional time per day.

Levels of other classes that grant the smite evil class feature stack for the purpose of determining the extra damage dealt.

For example, a 5th-level paladin/5th-level gray guard delivering a smite evil attack adds 10 points of damage to the attack.

Justice Blade (Su): By 4th level, you have learned that suffering and injustice are not the exclusive province of evil.

You can use your smite evil ability to instead punish creatures of chaotic alignment.

Using this ability expends one daily use of your smite evil class feature and works identically in all other ways, but its effect applies only to chaotic targets.

Whenever you choose to smite an opponent, you must declare whether you are using this ability to smite evil or chaos.

If you accidentally smite a creature of an alignment other than that declared, the smite has no effect but the ability is still used up.

Beginning at 9th level, you can use justice blade to smite creatures of any alignment.

You need not declare an alignment before making the smite attack, although if the attack misses, that use of smite is still used up for the day.

Devastating Touch (Su): When you attain 5th level, your deity shows its approval of your grim work.

From this point on, you can use your lay on hands ability to make a touch attack that harms your enemies.

Using devastating touch does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

You decide how many points of your daily healing allotment to expend after successfully touching a creature: Each point expended deals 1 point of damage to the target. A nonevil creature is allowed a Will save (DC 10 + your gray guard level + your Cha modifier) to halve the amount of damage dealt.

Unbound Justice (Ex): At 7th level, unrestricted by your code of honor, you can employ unorthodox methods that are all the more effective because they're unexpected. You add half your gray guard level (round down) as a competence bonus on Bluff, Disguise, and Intimidate skill checks.

Sacrament of the True Faith: At 10th level, you gain your order's full confidence.

You are granted the freedom to act on behalf of your faith as you deem necessary.

Thus, you never risk losing your class abilities in the pursuit of a just cause and never need to atone for violating your code of conduct.

This trust does not grant you the freedom to act as violently or immorally as you wish, however.

Release from your code of conduct depends on your acting as an exemplar of your order's ideals.

If you violate this trust by habitually acting in an immoral or corrupt manner, the leaders or deity of your faith might revoke their blessing and banish you from the ranks of the faithful (see Ex-Gray Guards, below).

Code of Conduct: As a gray guard, you are held to the same code of conduct as a paladin.

You must be of lawful good alignment and must never willingly commit an evil act.

You must also pledge to respect legitimate authority, act with honor (not lying, cheating, using poison, and the like), aid the needy, and punish those who harm the innocent.

If you contravene your code of conduct, you must atone for the transgression or lose all class abilities from both gray guard and paladin levels.

As you advance in the prestige class, this code becomes more flexible.

However, its tenets still apply: You can never break your code without good reason.

Gray guards can freely multiclass between paladin and gray guard.

EX-GRAY GUARDS

As a gray guard, you are less at risk of permanently losing your abilities than a paladin is.

You might lose them temporarily for committing dishonorable acts, but you are granted clemency for performing such deeds in the name of your faith and can atone more easily.

Nevertheless, if you commit unforgivably evil acts (such as slaughtering innocents or despoiling a temple of your faith), take action that opposes your faith's tenets, or habitually violate your code of conduct, you risk permanent expulsion from the holy order.

If at any time your deity or a jury of your faith's leaders finds you guilty of grossly abusing the freedom of the order, you permanently lose both gray guard and paladin class abilities (including the service of your special mount, but not weapon, armor, and shield proficiencies) and can never again advance in either class.

Even the atonement spell cannot restore a fallen gray guard's abilities after he is exiled.

Before a character enters this prestige class, his player and the DM should discuss and agree on what acts constitute gross abuse.

Levels of gray guard are treated as levels of paladin for the purpose of advancing in the blackguard prestige class.

PLAYING A GRAY GUARD

You have seen the horrible reality of the world: Children dying in the gutter as the rich feast a hedge-wall away; law used to imprison and terrify those it was created to protect; the supposedly devout ignoring and abusing those they deem beneath their interest or contrary to their faith.

The most insidious evil wears a cloak of righteousness and seduces with honeyed words.

Your faith's leadership realizes that many paladins' inflexible interpretation of their code of conduct not only allows such foulness to remain hidden but even aids its spread.

As a gray guard, you have earned the freedom to seek out and destroy corruption through any means necessary.

Although you work toward the same goals as other members of your faith, many within it do not trust you.

They believe that you and your fellows at best flirt with corruption and at worst embrace it.

Paladins see freedom from their code of conduct as weakness, an inability to mete out justice through honorable means, and do not consider you to be their equal.

You are not proud of your role, but you accept that one must sometimes embrace a lesser evil to combat greater injustice.

Your freedom is not a boon but a loss of innocence, a permanent tarnish on a once-pristine soul.

Solidifying your resolve, you face the world of cruel reality, ready to do battle just as valiantly as any paladin but also just as brutally as the monstrosities you oppose.

COMBAT

In battle you are not just a warrior, but also a judge. If you can, you engage your opponent in honorable combat to prove the valor of your cause.

However, you are no fool.

If the only sure way to finish the high priest of a cult of Vecna is to stab him as he sleeps or lie in wait and attack from the shadows, you make such sacrifices of character to put a permanent end to the threat.

Thus, your tactics must change to suit the enemy and the conditions of battle.

Your mercy also must conform to the necessities of the moment.

Ideally you would bring defeated enemies before the proper authorities for righteous judgment, but the reality of your situation might prevent you from taking prisoners, especially if they are likely to escape or impede your greater aims.

Some powerful threats simply cannot be permitted to live and potentially rise again.

A momentary prayer and a coup de grace end the lives of many of your foes.

ADVANCEMENT

As a paladin, you were frustrated by members of that noble order who seemed oblivious to the greater good, righting specific wrongs while ignoring others.

You repeatedly came into conflict with your peers, even violating your code of conduct to satisfy your sense of justice.

You were finally approached by leaders of your church or a stern knight in tarnished armor, who asked how much you would sacrifice for your faith and a clean conscience.

As a gray guard, you understand that your enemies' tactics might aid you as well.

Skills that you might have disdained before, such as Bluff, Disguise, Intimidate, or even Move Silently, Hide, and Open Lock can be invaluable in your work.

Feats such as Mobility, Spring Attack, and Stealthy help you get at the greatest threat and bring it down.

In addition, you are ever on the hunt for items that cloak your aura of good and any other ties to your faith that your enemies' magic might reveal.

RESOURCES

Although your order sometimes points you toward suspected evils, you are primarily a knight-errant, doing what you can wherever you are needed.

The grim few who make up your order aid you as much as they can, but their ranks are small.

Primarily you can depend only on your rare allies.

As a member of an organized religion, you might be able to draw upon the resources of your church.

However, you often face prejudice from those within your own order: Instead of being helpful, they treat you indifferently or worse.

Those who understand and recognize your service provide spellcasting and equipment for half the normal cost, but those who distrust you might not offer aid even at standard prices.

GRAY GUARDS IN THE WORLD

"How're we supposed to see the pally comin' when 'e wears armor blacker than ours?"

—Griv "Goblin Father" Chos, unfortunate cultist guard
In any campaign featuring less than black-and-white morality, gray guards might rise from the ranks of the most devout warriors to challenge hidden evils and work toward sweeping change.

Such orders give paladins the opportunity to wage war against injustice without undue worry about getting their hands dirty.

ORGANIZATION

Orders of gray guards might be created as part of any lawful- or good-aligned religion that sponsors paladins. The organization of such an order might vary dramatically from faith to faith, as well as how others within their church perceive them.

Some gray guards might form covert cells that parallel their church's "legitimate" paladin orders.

A typical order of gray guards works separately from a church's hierarchy of paladins.

Though rarely hidden, the order is not discussed openly by officials of the faith.

Much like inquisitors or witch hunters, gray guards are a feared aspect of the church that few care to acknowledge. Only a few among the faith's paladins have what it takes to become gray guards.

Once chosen, they are free of the paladin's rigid code but are still carefully watched.

Churches monitor their work, knowing that such proximity to the wicked can endanger their faith.

Gray guards often seek out a place of worship to confess the burdens on their souls, which they see as a sacred duty.

Gray guards have no holdings, no halls of triumph, and only the most limited rosters of duty.

Among them only two ranks exist: gray guard and captain (usually a veteran of the order's cause).

The order has an unofficial hierarchy based on experience and seniority, but only a captain has direct authority over members.

In such a small organization, the captain knows every knight and assigns direction as suits the personality and abilities of each.

Other interests within the church (such as concerned priests and rival paladins) frequently try to influence or hinder the work of the gray guards.

In order to shield them from such internal politics, gray guards are often sent far afield, with instructions to report for orders only infrequently.

NPC REACTIONS

Most folk assume gray guards are typical warriors or mercenaries and treat them as such.

The members of a gray guard's own faith treat him with widely differing attitudes.

Many within the church see the very existence of the order as conceding to evil, the first step to becoming no better than those the faith would oppose.

Those whom you would protect abhor your very existence and might even hinder you.

Others understand the need for distasteful action to root out evil and can be helpful toward the order.

Paladins disdain gray guards, rarely having attitudes warmer than indifferent toward them.

GRAY GUARD LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research gray guards to learn more about them.

DC 15: Gray guards seek out injustice in all its forms, often using the tools and methods of their enemies against them.

DC 20: Paladins often distrust them, but gray guards take their code of conduct just as seriously as other holy warriors do and violate its tenets only in the best interest of their faith.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about gray guards in your campaign, including faiths that sponsor such orders, notable members, the areas where they currently operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake.

Servants of religions that support orders of gray guards should have little problem contacting members through church officials.

Characters without such connections might be able to leave messages for gray guards in care of members of the same faith.

GRAY GUARDS IN THE GAME

Gray guards are relatively easy to integrate into any campaign featuring powerful religions.

The notion that such devout organizations have semisecret agents working toward their diverse causes probably doesn't stretch the imagination.

Nor does the concept that such powerful groups—no matter how pure they might appear—might resort to less than ethical means of dealing with their hated opponents. The easiest way to introduce gray guards into your campaign is to have the PCs encounter one working toward a parallel goal.

Presenting a gray guard as a potential ally gives the PCs a chance to ask questions and learn more about the order. After such an encounter, a devoted but frustrated paladin within the party might pursue membership. Alternatively, an NPC gray guard might be a rival to a PC paladin, producing interesting tension.

ADAPTATION

If gray guards don't appeal to you as presented, you can readily convert their order to fill other niches.

With their freedom to exact justice on those of any alignment, gray guards make excellent inquisitors. Such church investigators might openly enforce their faith's beliefs, hunting down heretics, witches, or any others viewed as violating holy law.

Alternatively, they might serve as church police, with the authority to seek out injustices among the devout or monitor paladins' adherence to their code of conduct. Instead of making the gray guard a prestige class, you can adjust the paladin class to grant its features at advanced levels, representing a higher order free to right wrongs as it sees fit.

MAGICAL TRICKSTER

“Don't make the mistake of assuming that spells are the only trick up my sleeve.”

—Sorilae Hartsel, magical trickster

Relying as much on her wits as on her spellcasting prowess, the magical trickster can sacrifice her spellcasting ability to gain even greater access to skill tricks.

BECOMING A MAGICAL TRICKSTER

Although this prestige class supports spellcasting, it appeals mainly to casters with low hit points and few other class features, such as sorcerers and wizards.

Sorcerers excel as magical tricksters, since they have plentiful spell uses with which to power skill tricks.

On the divine side, the prestige class most appeals to favored souls, shugenjas, and spirit shamans (all described in Complete Divine), all of whom also have a large number of daily spell uses.

Clerics and druids rarely bother with the class, except for worshippers of trickster deities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Feats: Any one metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level spells.

Skill Tricks: Any two.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Spellcraft, Tumble, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

A magical trickster focuses on skill tricks, even sacrificing spells for greater access to them.

Spellcasting: At each level after 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a magical trickster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Bonus Trick: At 1st level, and again at 3rd level, you gain a bonus skill trick for which you meet the prerequisite. These bonus tricks do not cost skill points and do not count against your maximum number of skill tricks available.

Spontaneous Trickster (Su): You can channel magical potential into using skill tricks more often, effectively “recharging” them.

As a swift action, you can “lose” any spell slot or prepared spell of 1st level or higher to perform a trick that you have already used in the encounter.

Bonus Metamagic Feat: At 2nd level, you gain a bonus metamagic feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Metamagic Trick (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you understand how to apply the principle of tricks to your spellcasting.

Once per day you can apply the effect of any one metamagic feat you know to a spell as you cast it without altering the spell’s effective level.

The spell slot adjustment of the metamagic feat can’t exceed four.

Tricky Magic (Ex): At 3rd level, you have mastered incorporating tricks into your spellcasting routines.

On any round that you perform a skill trick, the save DC of the next spell you cast that round is increased by 1.

PLAYING A MAGICAL TRICKSTER

You are unpredictable and extremely adaptable.

As long as you still have spells available to cast, your bag of skill tricks is nearly unlimited, giving you an opportunity to overcome most challenges.

You are drawn to others who can perform skill tricks, and from them you learn yet more.

Becoming a trick expert instantly affiliates you with a very loose fellowship of tricksters (battle, uncanny, and magical).

You don’t get along with every trickster you meet, though: Some jealously guard their secrets and view others of their kind as rivals.

COMBAT

Your spells are even more valuable to you than a typical caster’s, and you should use them judiciously.

You walk a narrow line: On the one hand, you can enhance your combat effectiveness with your spontaneous tricks, but on the other, your allies depend on your spellcasting support.

Such decisions depend on the structure of the party and the opponent you face.

In a party with multiple casters, you have more freedom to use your tricks, while a party with several tricky characters needs your spells more.

ADVANCEMENT

Whether you received a divine gift or extended your arcane knowledge, you discovered you had a natural talent for skill tricks and put yourself on the path to learning more.

A mentor might have shown you how to tap into your magical ability to fuel your repertoire, or you might have learned it on your own through hours of meditation.

As a magical trickster, you readily adapt to any situation.

No longer are you bound only by what spells you know or prepare.

Your allies probably appreciate this flexibility—unless they have also focused their careers on learning tricks and resent your freedom and flexibility.

Even though you gain bonus skill tricks from this prestige class, you should continue to invest skill points in learning new tricks.

The more you have, the more potent and unpredictable you become.

Feats that grant bonus skill tricks, such as Freerunner (page 77), are good options, as are metamagic feats, which you can apply more easily to your spells than others can.

RESOURCES

Although you might not have realized it when you became a magical trickster, you are part of a larger (albeit very loosely organized) group.

The benefits and requirements of this group are few, but it does offer the camaraderie of shared experiences as well as the chance to learn new tricks.

Nevertheless, tricksters owe no more to one another than do any other people with similar, nonbinding interests.

MAGICAL TRICKSTERS IN THE WORLD

“She mastered the difficult trick I’d just shown her, then suddenly pulled it off again without a thought.

Why can’t I do that?”

—Ameslan Trag, uncanny trickster

The magical trickster is relatively easy to integrate into a campaign that employs the skill trick rules.

She works much like any other trickster character, except that her talent is powered by magic.

Whether through divine favor or some lost arcane secret, her ability to flawlessly perform tricks again and again can be explained away by the source of her spellcasting ability.

ORGANIZATION

Magical tricksters congregate with uncanny and battle tricksters when possible.

Having come to the prestige class from different backgrounds, they have less in common with one another than they do with other tricksters.

They swap techniques, introduce newly developed tricks and trick-supporting equipment and magic, and share experiences.

Outside observers might assume such a meeting is part of a circus or carnival, with tricksters springing about performing for the enjoyment and education of onlookers. These gatherings, though enjoyable, do not represent a structured organization.

Magical tricksters looking to become part of something more permanent usually join groups that appreciate both their abilities and their moral choices: churches, arcane guilds, or druid circles.

NPC REACTIONS

A magical trickster can make other people frustrated or concerned.

She can perform skill tricks over and over that others cannot easily repeat, even after years of practice.

Other sorts of tricksters treat a known magical trickster with contempt and silence, and are almost always unfriendly.

If she belonged to an organization before entering the prestige class, a magical trickster might be the subject of concern or quiet whispers among her colleagues and superiors.

Although other members of the organization still respect her, their attitudes usually slip a step, such as from helpful to friendly or friendly to indifferent.

Common folk do not understand the difference between magical tricksters and other trickster classes, so their attitudes span the spectrum.

However, because some tricksters use their abilities to take advantage of less talented folk, a victim of such exploitation has a negative view of all tricksters, magical or otherwise, and is unfriendly at best.

MAGICAL TRICKSTER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research magical tricksters to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Magical tricksters combine magical talent with odd stunts relying on trained skill.

DC 15: Magical tricksters learn to pull off surprises with their magic just as they can with their skills.

DC 20: Magical tricksters can give up some of their magical power to perform stunts again and again.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific magical tricksters in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

PCs searching for a magical trickster who belongs to an organization can contact her through it.

A magical trickster affiliated with no group is more difficult to track down, although other tricksters in the area probably know of her.

MAGICAL TRICKSTERS IN THE GAME

An NPC magical trickster makes an interesting and unpredictable opponent.

She seems to be a typical spellcaster until she suddenly performs a powerful and difficult trick—then repeats it a moment later.

Magical tricksters tend to avoid one another unless of the same faith, guild, or school, so you should probably avoid introducing more than one per encounter.

Players who like flexibility and variety should find the prestige class appealing.

A magical trickster can serve the party with either her spells or her tricks, adapting as needed to a given encounter.

ADAPTATION

You can easily change this prestige class into a psionic trickster by replacing spells with psionic power points as the “currency” for reusing tricks.

Rather than sacrificing a spell slot or prepared spell to recharge a trick, a psionic trickster expends 2 power points.

MALCONVOKER

“Take him, my slaves!”

Drag his soul back to your dark masters!”

—Argyll Te’Shea, servant of Pelor and malconvoker

The standard concept of the perpetual war between good and evil is clichéd to some: a black-and-white vision of reality, suitable only for religious sermonizing.

A few who understand the complexity of the battles that rage throughout the planes have taken up a dangerous path, entering into powerful pacts with the foulest abominations of the Lower Planes to turn evil against evil.

These daring summoners are malconvokers, and they bargain with their lives.

BECOMING A MALCONVOKER

The vast majority of malconvokers are sorcerers and wizards (typically conjurers) who focus on summoning creatures.

A few clerics find the class interesting, but most have difficulty accepting the idea of using evil creatures to accomplish good acts.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any non-evil.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks.

Languages: Celestial, Infernal.

Feats: Augment Summoning, Spell Focus (conjunction).

Special: Ability to cast summon monster III.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Disguise, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a malconvoker, you turn the powers of your enemies back upon them, deceiving creatures into opposing those they might typically ally with.

Your evil foes are least prepared to deal with the same arsenal of abilities and tactics they employ themselves.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a malconvoker, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Deceptive Summons (Su): At 1st level, you can attempt to trick evil creatures you conjure into serving you for longer than they normally would.

When casting a summon monster spell to summon an evil-aligned creature, you can attempt a Bluff check as a free action, opposed by the creature’s Sense Motive check.

If your check succeeds, the duration of the effect is doubled (as if by the Extend Spell feat), and the summoned creature might be subject to additional effects as described below.

If it fails, the duration remains as normal and no additional effects can be applied.

If you fail the check by 5 or more, the creature breaks free of your control and is hostile toward you (though it still disappears as normal when the spell's duration ends).

If you use this ability when summoning multiple creatures, you must attempt an opposed skill check separately against each creature you wish to affect.

Beginning at 4th level, you can whip the deceived creatures into an infernal fury.

If your Bluff check to extend the duration of summoning succeeds, the creatures get a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls and 2 extra hit points per Hit Die (in addition to the bonuses conferred by Augment Summoning).

Beginning at 7th level, you can instill the deceived creatures with exceptional resistance to your enemies' attempts to control or dismiss them.

If your Bluff check to extend the duration of summoning succeeds, the creatures get a +2 bonus on Will saves, and your effective caster level is increased by 2 for the purpose of resisting dispel magic and similar effects against those creatures.

Unrestricted Conjunction: For the purpose only of casting conjunction spells, you can ignore any restrictions that forbid you from casting spells of certain alignments.

In addition, regular use of conjunction spells with the evil descriptor does not threaten to change your alignment.

For example, a good cleric who becomes a malconvoker could cast summon monster I to summon a fiendish raven (whose alignment gives the spell the evil descriptor).

The cleric could not cast death knell, though, which has the evil descriptor but is not of the conjunction school.

Planar Binding: Beginning at 2nd level, you can add the following spells to your class spell list and your list of known spells (or your spellbook) at the indicated levels.

If you already have one or more of these spells on your class list at a different level, treat it as being of the lower level.

5th: lesser planar binding.

6th: planar binding.

8th: greater planar binding.

Skill Focus (Bluff): At 3rd level, you gain Skill Focus (Bluff) as a bonus feat.

If you already have this feat, you can select any other feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Fiendish Legion (Ex): Once you attain 5th level, whenever you use a summon monster spell to summon one or more evil-aligned creatures, you summon one extra creature of the same kind.

Deceitful Bargaining (Ex): Starting at 6th level, you become exceptionally adept at convincing evil creatures you call that your intentions parallel their own.

Upon calling an evil outsider using a planar binding spell, you can make a Bluff check opposed by the creature's Sense Motive skill check.

If you succeed on this check, the called creature becomes more amenable to your cause, taking a -5 penalty on the opposed Charisma check made to refuse serving you.

If you fail, the creature immediately makes a new Will saving throw against your spell.

On a failure, the spell functions as normal.

If it succeeds on this save, the creature breaks free of your control and can either flee or attack you.

Improved Calling (Su): At 8th level, your understanding of the ways of fiends shows you how to tempt even more powerful beings into your service.

The normal HD limit for your planar ally and planar binding spells (including lesser and greater versions) increases by 2.

Safe Summoning (Ex): At 9th level, you can dismiss any evil creature that you have summoned as an immediate action rather than as a standard action.

PLAYING A MALCONVOKER

You have always honed your conjuration magic beyond that of your other spells, even flirting with the idea of summoning powerful fiends to do your bidding, but you never actually carried through with such a disreputable act. At least, not until that book appeared.

Many malconvokers—too many for pure coincidence—were set upon their path by a seemingly serendipitous event: the appearance of a thin folio bound in black scales entitled the Vital Pact.

This thesis, written in Celestial, discusses the limited ranks and resources of the extraplanar forces of good as opposed to the endless armies of the Lower Planes.

It calls for vague new allies from realms only hinted at but also posits that, for the armies of light to survive, evil must be made to combat itself.

Such a philosophical treatise would normally inspire few, were it not for the last page.

Each copy of the work bears a name—a truename—handwritten in red ink along with notations to aid in summoning a specific fiend.

(See the Tome of Magic supplement for more about truename magic).

With the essay's radical ideas fresh in the reader's mind, often echoing similar personal thoughts, the temptation to investigate the darker side of conjuration is usually too strong to resist.

None can say who penned the Vital Pact, how the work mysteriously enters the possession of certain spellcasters, and where the unique closing notations come from.

Even the fiends first summoned using the text seem wholly ignorant of its contents or how they became involved.

Although many malconvokers accept the Vital Pact as a boon from some hidden patron or celestial power, some scholars fear a more sinister underlying motive.

Whatever the truth, you have been chosen.

Someone or something wanted you to receive a copy of the Vital Pact and take up the challenge it proposes, even if you never actually hold the book in your hands.

Whether you willingly accept this mandate or seek to discover its source, you cannot deny the effectiveness of its teachings and the good you could put them to.

As you grow in power, your involvement in the planar battle between good and evil also increases.

You might begin seeking out places where fiendish influence has leaked into the world, seeking to scour such taints from your home plane.

Alternatively, you might travel to other planes, seeking out celestial forces or infiltrating oft-contested infernal battlegrounds such as Acheron, Pazunia on the Abyss's Plain of Infinite Portals, and Hell's first layer, Avernus.

COMBAT

As a malconvoker, you rarely fight alone.

The versatility of the summon monster spells allows you to conjure many allies, whether you are a solitary traveler or part of a group.

With enough such spells and your fiendish legion class feature, you can become the general of a small infernal army.

Your other powers, although sometimes risky, also ensure that the creatures you summon stay longer and are more powerful than those summoned by your enemies.

ADVANCEMENT

You come to understand the ways of fiends, honing your words to offer the proper mix of compliments, threats, and promises to whet their infernal desires.

As you grow in power, so do the beings you deal with, increasing the forces you can bring to bear but also the risks in bargaining with such corrupt abominations.

Tricking powerful fiends is much more difficult than manipulating lowly minions.

Thus, you should max out your Bluff skill to get the most out of your deceptive bargaining; increasing your Charisma score is also important for planar binding negotiations.

Put ranks into Knowledge (the planes) to learn the strengths and weaknesses of the creatures you summon, so you can choose the best allies for a given situation.

Feats that aid your summoning are also helpful, such as Cloudy Conjuration (Complete Mage) or Complete Divine's Rapid Spell (which reduces the casting time of your summon monster spells to a standard action).

RESOURCES

While advancing as a malconvoker, you continue to strengthen your spellcasting ability, though if you are a divine caster affiliated with a church, your peers might have reservations about your methods.

Nevertheless, you might be able to discover and contact other malconvokers (by succeeding on a reasonably difficult Knowledge [arcana] check).

These peers welcome the rare fellows they encounter and might be convinced to share their research and even magic items related to summoning.

At the very least, together you can plumb the often cryptic passages of the Vital Pact to gain further insights into your art.

MALCONVOKERS IN THE WORLD

"I have dwelt in darkness for eighty thousand years, seen the deaths of gods, and feasted on the souls of worlds.

I would not be tricked by a mortal wizard."

—Cvol Visok, nalfeshnee dupe

The malconvoker prestige class gives non-evil player characters a chance to use some of the most powerful creatures in the game—and the most dangerous.

Malconvokers run terrible risks in attempting to turn pure evil to the service of good.

Moreover, they might alienate righteous allies in exchange for tenuous pacts with fiendish servants.

The Vital Pact, that peculiar text that indoctrinates so many malconvokers, also sets up a dark mystery with possible celestial or infernal ties.

ORGANIZATION

Nearly all malconvokers have studied the Vital Pact, whether or not they possess a copy of the book.

Some are fanatics devoted to its radical call to arms, others are researchers hoping to reveal its shadowed origins, and still others are conjurers who seek more versatility in their spellcasting.

This shared knowledge puts malconvokers into a strange sort of group, if not an especially organized one.

No obvious thread links those who come across that strange text, beyond their affinity for summoning magic. Malconvokers quietly share their knowledge of extraplanar beings, methods of deceiving those they summon, and, in rare circumstances, the truenames of potent or easily duped fiends.

They secretly correspond with one another through mundane letters or spells to protect their own identities and those of their peers, understanding that people in powerful positions abhor their methods.

A malconvoker or his agent often leaves a letter in a well-used cache, where another can check for correspondence without drawing attention.

Favored spots include statues in crowded public places, especially those with angelic or religious themes.

Every malconvoker risks having his true identity revealed to a fiend he once tricked into his service, which might then track him down and exact horrific retribution.

For most, this dreadful prospect never becomes reality.

But when the unthinkable happens, malconvokers can turn only to their peers for help.

Some see it as their duty to aid a colleague, but many shun such an individual, terrified of being exposed to the same fate.

NPC REACTIONS

Malconvokers elicit strong opinions.

Authorities within lawful- or good-aligned religions see them as self-deluded demonologists.

These critics hold that summoning fundamentally wicked creatures into the world is evil regardless of the end.

True, a malconvoker cheats these beings to serve good aims, but two wrongs still don't make a right.

Thus, malconvokers have been expelled from religious orders and, in extreme cases, executed as heretics.

Followers of other religions, though, welcome malconvokers, primarily those who revere trickster gods and other less lawful deities.

They savor the delicious irony of turning demons loose against a cult of demon-worshippers.

Most ordinary folk cannot distinguish malconvokers from other spellcasters and treat them according to their apparent station.

Summoning fiends in a public area, however, is likely to produce a hostile reaction.

Most people don't care why a spellcaster can so adeptly command demons and devils, only that he does.

MALCONVOKER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research malconvokers to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Malconvokers are conjurers who summon demons, devils, and other fiends and trick them into aiding the cause of good.

DC 15: Malconvokers are feared by many, despite their good intentions.

The creatures they summon are often more powerful than other summoned monsters of their kind.

DC 20: Many malconvokers begin summoning fiends at the suggestion of a strange book called the Vital Pact.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific malconvokers in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which he operates, and how to contact him.

Contacting a malconvoker depends on his social status and how greatly he fears oppression or pursuit. Correspondence might take place through letters left at prearranged drop points.

MALCONVOKERS IN THE GAME

Malconvokers can fill a number of roles in your campaign. They might be reckless summoners who call on forces they don't fully understand, their judgment clouded by their zeal to combat evil.

Particularly power-hungry individuals might wage personal wars against fiends and their influences.

More thoughtful, conflicted malconvokers believe in the necessity of sacrificing innocence to gain powerful allies. Malconvokers make challenging player characters.

On the one hand, they can aid their colleagues with their command over terrible creatures.

Their research into the truenames of useful or powerful fiends, and their deep knowledge of planar matters, also make them helpful to their comrades.

On the other hand, clerics, druids, and paladins often oppose a malconvoker's methods, fearful of not only the dark creatures he controls but also his intentions.

Such fear might also mean a malconvoker and his associates are pursued by members of demon-hunting religions or fearful locals.

ADAPTATION

The origin and purpose of the Vital Pact are deliberately left open so that you can create a background appropriate to your campaign.

Depending on your taste, the mysterious text can be benevolent, subtly corruptive, or even nonexistent.

If your campaign doesn't focus on cultic tomes and monstrosities of the Lower Planes, you can easily adapt the malconvoker to fulfill more obviously benevolent roles. Change the summoned creatures from evil-aligned to good-aligned to have him command a celestial strike force as powerful as fiends.

Doing so also removes the moral and intraparty conflicts members of this class might otherwise face.

Alternatively, a malconvoker can summon a different kind of creature in the fight against evil.

Such powerful beings can still be dangerous to deal with.

MASTER OF MASKS

“Every creature is but a role.”

—Beriell, Comedian of Calamity and Tragedian of Triumph
Belief and perception shape reality.

In worlds where religions derive might from the faith of believers and where amazing magic sways the mind, those who command the senses hold great power.

In such an environment, the master of masks takes center stage.

Wearer of a thousand faces, with an identity as fluid as that of a crowd of strangers, this thespian of possibilities decides what is real and what can be.

BECOMING A MASTER OF MASKS

A master of masks must be a consummate actor.

Anyone capable of shifting from role to role convincingly might enter the prestige class.

Many are bards, who are the most obviously talented in the performing arts.

Particularly theatrical rogues or those who specialize in disguise also sometimes become masters of masks, as do some multiclass sorcerers or wizards—especially those with a fondness for illusions.

Characters of a more martial bent or serious personality usually see acting as frivolous and do not pursue the class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skill: Bluff 8 ranks, Disguise 8 ranks, Perform (act) 8 ranks.

Languages: Any four.

Special: Must have successfully impersonated an individual, fooling even that person's friends and associates.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Craft, Disguise, Forgery, Perform, Sleight of Hand, Speak Language.

CLASS FEATURES

You take on roles as befits your situation.

Whether donning the mask of the jester to entertain a crowd or the mask of the gladiator and joining battle, your greatest talent is your versatility.

Spellcasting: At 2nd, 4th, 7th, and 9th level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a master of masks, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Persona Masks (Su): You gain the ability to craft potent magical masks, each of which allows you to take on a different persona and gain some aspect of that creature or archetypal character.

At 1st level, you learn to create and use two masks selected from those described below.

At 2nd level, and at every odd-numbered level thereafter, you can create and use one more mask from the list.

Creating a new persona mask requires 8 hours of work and costs 100 gp.

You can use only persona masks that you have crafted.

No one else (not even another master of masks) can benefit from a persona mask that you create.

To gain the benefit of a mask, you merely wear it.

Putting on a mask is a standard action, and removing one is a move action.

Once it is worn, the mask's benefit immediately applies.

Your master of masks level is your caster level for any spell-like abilities produced by a mask.

In addition to its other benefits, a mask conceals your alignment, replacing it (for the purpose of detection spells or abilities) with an alignment appropriate to the mask.

You still retain your normal alignment for all other purposes (such as if a paladin uses smite evil against you).

One or more persona masks can be worn at the same time, occupying the eye lenses/goggles body slot.

Angel: The image of an androgynous face with eyes serenely upturned to the heavens forms this mask, carved from flawless alabaster.

Cultic runes adorn the forehead and cheeks, and its edges are ringed by downy feathers.

As an immediate action, you can use feather fall as a spell-like ability any number of times per day, but only on yourself.

Once per day as a swift action, you can use fly as a spell-like ability; the effect lasts for 5 rounds.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can use this ability more often: twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be lawful good while you wear an angel mask.

Archange: This mask of deep purple fluorite is sculpted in the image of a heavily wrinkled old man.

A roughly circular tangle of arcane runes appears where the visage's mouth should be.

You can use each of these spell-like abilities once per day: charm person, dancing lights, detect magic, and magic missile.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can use additional spell-like abilities, each once per day: 4th level, invisibility and scorching ray; 7th level, lightning bolt and slow; and 10th level, dimension door and ice storm.

Your caster level is treated as two higher for the purpose of casting arcane spells (up to a maximum of your character level).

If you have no arcane spellcasting ability, this effect grants you no benefit.

Your alignment appears to be chaotic good while you wear an archmage mask.

Assassin: Hardened black leather and metal clasps create the disturbing aspect of the assassin.

A jagged, cruel slit forms the opening for the mouth, and the mask's edges are worn and stained.

You can deliver a sneak attack that deals an extra 1d6 points of damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus (see the rogue class feature, PH 50).

As you advance in the master of masks class, your sneak attack becomes more devastating: This extra damage improves to 2d6 points at 4th level, 3d6 at 7th level, and 4d6 at 10th level.

If you get a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

In addition, you gain a +2 competence bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks.

This bonus improves to +4 at 4th level, +6 at 7th level, and +8 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be lawful evil while you wear an assassin mask.

Demon: This obsidian mask bears the visage of a darkly handsome fiend.

Small, black horns adorn the demon's forehead, and its black ears rise to points.

Its smiling mouth shows rows of sharp teeth.

Once per day, you can use summon monster III as a spell-like ability, only to summon creatures of chaotic evil alignment.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can summon increasingly powerful creatures: At 4th level, you can instead use summon monster IV; at 7th level, summon monster V; and at 10th level, summon monster VI.

Your alignment appears to be chaotic evil while you wear a demon mask.

Dragon: This multihued mask of precious metals and scintillating gemstones forms the terrible visage of a snarling wyrm.

A sunburst of metallic and bejeweled scales flares out around the reptilian face.

Three times per day you can breathe a cone of fire as a standard action.

The cone is 30 feet long and deals 2d8 points of fire damage.

A successful Reflex save (DC 10 + your master of masks level + your Cha modifier) halves the damage dealt.

Once you use this ability, you can't use it again for 1d4 rounds.

As you advance in the class, you can deal additional damage with this ability: 4d8 points at 4th level, 6d8 at 7th level, and 10d8 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be neutral evil while you wear a dragon mask.

Faceless: Only a pair of empty eyeholes break this otherwise featureless oval, porcelain mask.

You gain a +5 competence bonus on saves against mindaffecting spells and abilities.

You are protected from divination effects as if by a nondetection spell; the DC of the caster level check is 15 + your master of masks level.

Even if the nondetection effect is overcome, your alignment appears to be neutral while you wear a faceless mask.

Gladiator: This wyvern-hide mask is shaped like the face of a grim warrior.

Scars cover its surface, and silver chainmail rings surround its outer edge.

You gain proficiency with all martial and exotic weapons. You also gain a +1 competence bonus on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you become more expert in weapon use: This bonus improves to +2 at 4th level, +3 at 7th level, and +4 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be neutral while you wear a gladiator mask.

High Priest: This mask of rose porphyry has a wide mouth open in song, but instead of eyes it has slits twisted into runes (these do not restrict your vision).

You can use each of the following spell-like abilities once per day: bless, cure light wounds, protection from evil, and sanctuary.

As you advance in the class, you can use additional spell-like abilities, each once per day: At 4th level, you can use aid and lesser restoration; at 7th level, cure serious wounds and remove curse; and at 10th level, death ward and neutralize poison.

Your caster level is treated as two higher for the purpose of casting divine spells (up to a maximum of your character level).

If you have no divine spellcasting ability, this effect grants you no benefit.

Your alignment appears to be neutral good while you wear a high priest mask.

Jester: Gaudy ribbons, tinkling bells, and a bobbing cockscomb adorn this leather mask.

Brightly hued eyeshadow, lipstick, and alternating red, black, and white diamonds flamboyantly paint the form's angular features.

You gain a +2 competence bonus on Balance, Perform, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble checks.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you become more proficient with these skills: This bonus improves to +4 at 4th level, +6 at 7th level, and +8 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be chaotic neutral while you wear a jester mask.

Lich: This mask is made of poorly cured, purplish skin stretched over yellowed bone.

Bloodless cuts and old bruises mar its surface, and tufts of long, white hair sprout from its wrinkled brow.

Once per day you can use cause fear and detect undead as spell-like abilities.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can use additional spell-like abilities, each once per day: At 4th level, you can use false life; at 7th level, halt undead; and at 10th level, fear.

Additionally, you gain resistance to cold 10.

Your alignment appears to be neutral evil while you wear a lich mask.

Furthermore, you register as an undead creature with Hit Dice equal to your character level to any form of magical divination (such as detect undead).

Lord: A swirling mixture of gleaming copper and silver forms the regal countenance of a smiling man.

A gem-studded diadem adorns its brow, and stamped across its surface are layered images of coins.

Once per day, you can use remove fear as a spell-like ability.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can use additional spell-like abilities, each once per day: At 4th level, you can use eagle's splendor; at 7th level, heroism; and at 10th level, dispel chaos.

In addition, you gain a +2 competence bonus on Diplomacy and Gather Information checks.

This bonus improves to +4 at 4th level, +6 at 7th level, and +8 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be lawful neutral while you wear a lord mask.

Savage: Bright, flaking warpaint streaks this battered wooden image of a snarling, fang-toothed wild man.

Your hands transform into claws, granting you two primary natural weapon attacks, each dealing 1d4 points of damage (assuming you are Medium), plus your Strength modifier. You are considered to be proficient with your natural weapons.

Your claws overcome damage reduction as if they were magic weapons.

As you advance in the master of masks class, you can deal more damage with your claws: 1d6 points at 4th level, 1d8 at 7th level, and 2d6 at 10th level.

Your alignment appears to be chaotic neutral while you wear a savage mask.

Mask Specialist (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you innately enhance the abilities of any magic mask you wear (such as the mask of the skull, DMG 262).

If the mask creates an effect that requires a saving throw, the save DC increases by 2.

If the mask grants a bonus on skill checks, that bonus is increased by 2.

Otherwise, the mask's caster level is treated as two higher. This ability has no effect on the persona masks you create and use.

Many Faces (Ex): At 5th level, you can wear more than one persona mask simultaneously.

You can use the abilities of only one mask at a time, but you can switch between masks more quickly.

While wearing a persona mask, you can don a second without taking off the first.

The appearance and benefit of the second replace those of the first.

As a move action, you can have the first mask appear instead, granting its effect in place of the other's.

At 8th level, you can wear up to three masks simultaneously and can switch masks as a swift action.

At 10th level, you can wear up to four masks simultaneously and can switch masks as an immediate action.

While wearing multiple persona masks in this way, you can remove any worn mask as a move action (regardless of which one is active).

Hidden Mask (Su): Beginning at 6th level, you can make any mask you wear become invisible (or return an invisible mask to visibility).

Activating or deactivating this ability requires a swift action.

The mask's benefit applies regardless of whether it is visible.

PLAYING A MASTER OF MASKS

Your power lies in your talent at manipulating reality through the secret knowledge of those who have come before.

You are secure in the perfection of your artistry; masters of masks often adopt grandiose titles.

When not in character—a rare occasion—your own personality might reflect either inner confidence or the aloofness and lack of direction that come from being without a role.

Few others share your consummate skill in the performing arts.

Some are teachers, others are rivals, and the rest to you are mere hacks, but all participate in an old and little-understood tradition.

This loose guild of like-minded thespians helps you refine your abilities, creating new personas and new powers, though mastery depends on intense practice and personal epiphanies.

Nonperformers could never understand how your craft submerges you in a role so completely that the role becomes reality.

COMBAT

Your role on the battlefield depends on your character background and the masks you have created and mastered. If you prefer stealth, you likely avoid detection behind the faceless mask and don the mask of the assassin to surprise your opponents.

On the other hand, if you are a front-line combatant, you might wear the mask of the gladiator or the savage. The masks of the high priest and the lord help you bolster allies, while the mask of the demon brings allies to your side.

Those of the archmage and the dragon give you magical offensive power.

Your versatility is your greatest strength.

ADVANCEMENT

You have always been intrigued by the malleability of perceived truth: The most subtle hint, emphasis, or rearrangement of facts can lead others to think and act exactly as you wish.

You grew adept at becoming what you weren't, either onstage or in the employ of those who had uses for such a talent.

Eventually you discovered the fellowship of like artists who had been sculpting truth for seemingly as long as civilization has existed.

You either sought them out yourself or were introduced by another who recognized your talents, and now you perfect the method of the masters of masks.

Since you manipulate belief and perception, you must continue to improve skills related to this expertise, such as Bluff, Disguise, Perform (act), and Sense Motive.

Interaction skill tricks (page 82) give you more options to exploit your talents.

Your abilities range widely, depending on the masks you've constructed, so you might also take ranks in other skills that work with them.

Feat choices likewise should improve your mastery of deception or amplify the benefits of your masks.

RESOURCES

You receive no material aid from others who share your talents, but a measure of professional respect exists among peers dedicated to upholding the secrets of your art.

Rather than a formal organization, fellowship in the acting profession is acknowledged among its members.

A mentor might have trained you, or you are friendly with other masters of masks.

Such allies can help you practice and refine your skills or suggest new masks.

A single rule binds masters of masks: One cannot use his abilities against another.

Violation of this principle results in no physical or material penalty, but the offender is forever cut off from his fellows.

His ill reputation precedes him throughout the acting community, which can result in financial hardship.

Most adhere strictly to this injunction, but in a profession that depends on warping reality, morality is flexible as well, and a few masters of masks pay this warning no heed.

MASTERS OF MASKS IN THE WORLD

"How can both an angel and a demon exist in one body?"

—Apatura Iris, critic at the Free City's Grand Theatre
Thieves, spies, truth-benders, and mysterious figures, masters of masks cloak themselves within their roles and hide behind their elegant personas.

Those who do not belong to their shrouded and ancient tradition have tremendous difficulty learning anything about their ranks or true powers.

Thus, these master impersonators add new layers of intrigue to any campaign, as well as a strange new kind of magic.

ORGANIZATION

Masters of masks rarely form substantial organizations: Disputes over personal expression and technique, as well as clashes between egos, are barriers to cooperation.

Those initiated into the class's secrets acknowledge a loose fellowship defined by their shared abilities.

Still, many masters of masks see others as threats, rivals who could reveal their complex subterfuges to further their own ends.

Maesters of masks usually ingratiate themselves with groups of wandering performers, con artists, or adventuring parties that need their duplicitous abilities.

NPC REACTIONS

Few know that masters of masks even exist, so the average person has no preexisting attitude toward them, even if one declares himself openly.

Those who are aware of these truth-shapers treat them as exceptionally skilled actors, or perhaps as spies or assassins, and react accordingly.

Bards usually know of masters of masks and see them as incredibly talented performers.

Their admiration borders on awe, so their attitude toward members of this class is typically friendly.

Other spellcasters usually treat masters of masks with respect, out of interest in the strange magic these roguish actors possess, and seek interviews and demonstrations at every opportunity.

Their attitudes too tend toward friendly, though out of personal interest and curiosity.

Those who hold positions of political or military authority consider masters of masks to be dangerous spies.

Any member of a lawful organization or of a secretive group fears and distrusts them, with a starting attitude no better than unfriendly.

MASTER OF MASKS LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research masters of masks to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Masters of masks are actors and disguise artists who use masks in their performances and deceptions.

DC 15: Masters of masks are spies just as often as they are entertainers.

DC 20: A master of masks relies on different personas to use a wide repertoire of abilities, including many potent magical effects.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific masters of masks in your campaign, including a notable individual and the title he goes by, the area in which he operates, and what masks he wears.

Masters of masks are difficult to find.

PCs wishing to make contact might inquire through the criminal underworld or at local playhouses. A master of masks follows up if he is interested, or remains elusive otherwise.

MASTERS OF MASKS IN THE GAME

The master of masks is perfect for players who are not satisfied with just one party role. Since each mask bestows a different ability, the prestige class is as versatile and varied as the player customizes it to be.

As an NPC, a master of masks might be a consummate impersonator who is nearly impossible to pin down, or an expert agent in the employ of rivals.

ADAPTATION

The master of masks is flexible enough to fit a variety of roles in nearly any campaign setting. One interpretation of the class might have a more sinister nature, with each mask drawing its abilities from trapped outsiders bound within.

Masters of masks might be members of an organized group of spies or assassins in the service of an unscrupulous government, arcane organization, or deceptive religion. Alternatively, masters of masks and their signature disguises might be far rarer than suggested above. Perhaps each mask is unique, and a handful of masters compete to find a legendary mask, each hoping to make its powers his alone.

MOUNTEBANK

“The best defense is to never let an enemy see your true self.”

—Laughing Cedric, mountebank

Mountebanks are frauds and con artists, capable of slipping into new identities as others change clothing.

While they can fit in just about anywhere they go, they are also adept at getting out of tight situations.

BECOMING A MOUNTEBANK

Bards are the most likely to branch into the mountebank prestige class.

Their versatile skill selection enables them to meet the class's Knowledge and Spellcraft requirements and to develop other skills.

In addition, the bard's spellcasting ability enhances the mountebank's class features.

Rogues, sorcerers, and spellthieves sometimes become mountebanks to improve their battlefield mobility or to enhance existing talents of deception.

Spellthief plus mountebank makes an excellent class combination for characters who fight creatures that use spell-like abilities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana), (local), or (psionics) 4 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Deceitful.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Concentration, Diplomacy, Disguise, Escape Artist, Forgery, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (psionics), Listen, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spellcraft, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

This prestige class is all about deception in combat.

As you advance, you develop sneak attack in addition to enhancing your Bluff skill, which keeps your opponents flat-footed.

By the time you reach the apex of the class, you can transport yourself about the battlefield as you please, preventing your opponents from effectively fighting you. Tongue of the Devil (Ex): Your cunning misdirection leaves others at your mercy.

You add your Intelligence bonus (if any) to Bluff checks. Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

See the rogue class feature, PH 50.

The extra damage dealt by your sneak attack increases to 2d6 at 5th level and to 3d6 at 8th level.

If you get a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

Alter Ego (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, you establish an alternate identity.

This alter ego has its own distinct physical characteristics, quirks, preferred clothing, and so on.

At will, you can switch your form between that of your normal identity and that of your alter ego.

This ability works like the alter self spell, except that you can assume only the appearance of your alternate identity.

Your caster level for this ability is equal to your mountebank class level.

As you advance in this prestige class, you develop additional alter egos, gaining a new one every three levels beyond 1st (two at 6th and three at 9th).

Sideslip (Su): Beginning at 4th level, you become supernaturally elusive.

Once per day as an immediate action, you can transfer yourself from your current space to another up to 20 feet away.

This ability otherwise works like the dimension door spell, except that you cannot transport other creatures with you. At 6th level, and at every two levels thereafter, you gain an additional daily use of sideslip.

Slippery Mind (Ex): Starting at 7th level, whenever you are affected by an enchantment spell or effect and you fail your saving throw, you can attempt it again 1 round later at the same DC.

You get only one extra chance to succeed on your save using this ability.

Sudden Escape (Sp): Beginning at 10th level, you can expend two daily uses of your sideslip ability as a swift action to use dimension door, as the spell.

Your caster level is equal to your character level.

PLAYING A MOUNTEBANK

Shrewd and quick-witted, you construct numerous false identities to keep your enemies off balance and do whatever it takes to complete your mission.

With your ability to assume a flawless disguise and to slip away if the situation sours, you are nearly impossible to pin down.

You are confident, irreverent, even insolent.

COMBAT

You're certainly no front-line fighter, but you have the potential to deal considerable damage against enemies who never see it coming.

Your work best with teammates, maneuvering to get flanks and help bring down opponents with your sneak attacks.

Use your sideslip ability to pop around the battlefield, slipping in and out to distract opponents while the real heavy hitters in your group mop them up.

ADVANCEMENT

You were born to become a mountebank.

Prior to entering the prestige class, you were probably a ne'er-do-well, a daring rogue and adventurer.

The mountebank's deceit and elusiveness let you express yourself fully in the only way you know.

Now you have at least one alternate identity to maintain cover and to put distance between who you really are and how you want others to perceive you.

An alter ego is especially useful for brokering secret deals with unsavory types, letting you keep "your" hands clean.

As you advance in the class, continue to max out your ranks in Bluff, and invest skill points in Disguise and Sleight of Hand.

Ambush feats (page 71) and many feats in the Complete Adventurer supplement make the most of your sneak attacks.

Improved Feint is an excellent choice with your expertise in Bluff, and Combat Reflexes lets you take advantage of your battlefield repositioning to land unexpected attacks.

Deft Strike and Expert Tactician, both from Complete Adventurer, are good choices.

If you play up the infiltrator aspect of this class, consider magic (or psionic) items that help you cloak your true intentions, such as an amulet of proof against detection and location.

RESOURCES

Under your various identities, you could belong to several organizations, taking advantage of the benefits derived from each.

You might even join opposing groups, selling information from one side to the other, whether for noble or selfish ends.

At heart, though, you are a loner.

You exploit an organization only for as long as it offers you some benefit, then abandon it when it ceases to be useful.

MOUNTEBANKS IN THE WORLD

"It's all smiles and pleasantries until a knife ends up in your back."

—Cralbus, high priest of Dispaten

A mountebank's chaotic tendencies and ability to mask his appearance enables him to infiltrate cults and other secretive organizations, to learn more about them and ultimately find their weak points.

Those who serve the cause of good are invaluable in the fight against evil.

On the other hand, wicked mountebanks use their deceptive abilities to spread discord and suffering.

ORGANIZATION

Mountebanks are not attached to any particular organization.

Many operate in several, often contradictory groups, working to bring them down from inside.

Good mountebanks infiltrate cults devoted to devils and demons, while evil ones slip inside good-aligned religious organizations, working to dissolve the clergy from within.

NPC REACTIONS

Since mountebanks develop multiple personalities to move freely within communities, reactions to a given individual depend on the nature of the persona he assumes.

Those within an infiltrated group see him as an ally and colleague, and react positively as long as he maintains his cover.

If the mountebank's true nature is revealed, he finds less than a warm welcome.

People do not like to be deceived, and NPCs who discover they have been fooled by a mountebank are unfriendly or hostile.

Indeed, an evil or overzealous organization might kill the unmasked infiltrator.

MOUNTEBANK LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research mountebanks to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Mountebanks are con artists and varlets, a thoroughly untrustworthy lot.

DC 15: What separates a mountebank from a common charlatan is his ability to switch personas.

A mountebank can have several alter egos.

DC 20: Mountebanks are hard to capture.

Not only do they avoid being connected to anything, they also have a knack for slipping out of impossible situations.

Player characters trying to locate a mountebank must succeed on a DC 20 Gather Information check to locate someone who can set up a meeting.

It's entirely possible that the contact is the mountebank himself, though he might never reveal his true identity.

MOUNTEBANKS IN THE GAME

Mountebanks can easily fit into an ongoing campaign, since they can pass for anyone—even established NPCs.

A long-standing ally could secretly be a mountebank who works against his own or another organization, using the PCs as a source of information.

Alternatively, a character whom the PCs regard as a villain might be in fact a double agent who has infiltrated an evil organization.

The mountebank prestige class is a great non-evil alternative to the assassin.

It is particularly attractive to players who like versatility and adaptability.

In game terms, the prestige class offers a mechanical advantage when interacting with NPCs.

In roleplaying terms, the class's toolkit is tailor-made for fighting insidious evil.

In a campaign that centers on foiling a dastardly plot, the mountebank gives rogues specialized abilities to fight hidden masterminds.

If a campaign includes a mountebank PC, the DM should provide opportunities for him to use his alter ego ability.

Perhaps someone he crossed in the past has learned of his true identity, forcing him to spend more and more time in his alternate personas.

Challenge the PCs with dangerous plots requiring subterfuge and deception; mountebanks can come up with plans that can get the party in the door without resorting to hack-and-slash combat.

ADAPTATION

The mountebank class has the strongest appeal to rogues and similar characters with social expertise, but it offers little to spellcasting characters.

To make this class appeal to intrigue-loving spellcasters, remove its sneak attack class feature.

Instead, the character gains one level of an existing spellcasting class at each level that ordinarily grants sneak attack damage.

In this way, he can load up on more enchantment, illusion, and transformation magic to enhance the class's misdirection talents.

PSIBOND AGENT

"Now I see you, now I see through you."

—Dieste Karisa, psibond agent

A psibond agent sees through the eyes of others, gently guiding (or in some cases forcefully commanding) her puppet to go places she could never enter herself.

BECOMING A PSIBOND AGENT

Most psibond agents begin as rogues, though a few ninjas and bards also enter the prestige class.

Such individuals commonly draw the needed psionic power from the Wild Talent feat, but some psibond agents belong to naturally psionic races (such as the kalashtar from the Eberron campaign setting), and others take some levels in a psionic class, usually lurk or telepath psion.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Gather Information 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Languages: Any three.

Psionics: Power point reserve of at least 1.

Special: Sneak attack +1d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Perform, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Speak Language, Spot, Swim, Tumble, Use Psionic Device, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

A psibond agent starts as an effective spy but eventually can influence or even control the minds of others through a powerful telepathic link.

Psibond (Su): As a member of this class, you know how to create a mental link between yourself and a subject.

You must be psionically focused to forge the psibond, but afterward you can expend your focus as needed to use other abilities.

Establishing a psibond requires a standard action, and an unwilling subject is allowed a Will save (DC 10 + your psibond agent level + your Cha modifier) to resist.

Once established, a psibond lasts as long as you concentrate, up to a maximum of 1 minute per class level. The maximum range at which a psibond can be established is 100 feet, but once in place it persists even if the subject moves out of this range (the psibond is suppressed, but not broken, while the subject is on a different plane).

A psibond grants you various options for gathering information or controlling the subject, based on your class level.

Forced Sense Link: At 1st level, you can use a swift action to perceive what the subject perceives using its sight, hearing, taste, or smell.

This sense link lasts until you take another swift action to end it, or until the psibond's duration ends.

Only one sense is linked, and you cannot switch between senses with the same psibond.

You make any skill checks involving senses, such as Spot or Listen, as if you were the subject (using that individual's skill modifiers), and as if you were in the subject's location. You lose your Dexterity bonus to AC while directly sensing what the subject senses.

This ability otherwise works like the forced sense link power (Expanded Psionics Handbook 131).

Nudge: Beginning at 2nd level, you can subtly influence the subject of your psibond.

As an immediate action, you can implant a subtle suggestion about which course of action the subject takes if presented with a choice.

You cannot communicate any specific action to your subject; you can only nudge it toward a specific choice.

For example, if your subject is offered a choice of shifts for the night watch, you can suggest which one to take. No saving throw applies against this effect, but if the suggested action presents any obvious danger to the subject, your nudge fails; the psibond isn't broken.

You can't implant the same nonverbal suggestion more than once during the same psibond.

Empathy: At 4th level, you can detect the surface emotions of the subject of your psibond as a free action.

You also gain a +2 insight bonus on any Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate, or Sense Motive check made against that subject as long as the psibond is in place.

Suggestion: Beginning at 6th level, you can use a swift action to use suggestion (as the spell) on the subject of your psibond.

The subject is allowed a Will save (DC 13 + your Cha modifier) to resist the effect.

You can't use this ability more than once during the same psibond.

False Sensory Input: At 8th level, you gain a limited ability to falsify one of the senses of your psibond's subject.

This requires a swift action to activate or maintain each round, and otherwise works like the false sensory input power (Expanded Psionics Handbook 106), though no save is allowed.

Dominate: At 10th level, you gain the ability to fully control the subject of your psibond.

This works like the dominate monster spell (PH 224) and requires a standard action to activate.

The subject is allowed a Will save (DC 19 + your Cha modifier) to resist the effect.

If you successfully dominate the subject, the effect lasts for 1 hour.

Using this ability automatically ends your psibond with the subject, regardless of whether it succeeds on the save.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage when flanking an opponent or any time the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

See the rogue class feature, PH 50.

The extra damage dealt increases to 2d6 at 6th level and to 3d6 at 9th level.

If you get a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

Lingering Psibond (Su): When you attain 5th level, your psibond becomes more powerful.

Your psibond remains in place for 1 round after you cease concentrating.

If you resume concentration in the next round, you retain the psibond's effect as if you had never stopped concentrating.

Double Psibond (Su): At 7th level, you learn the secret of maintaining two psibonds simultaneously.

Each psibond must be established separately against a different subject, but your concentration maintains both links equally well.

Using any special abilities through the links must be done separately (for example, establishing a forced sense link requires a separate swift action for each subject).

PLAYING A PSIBOND AGENT

Others exist to be your pawns.

Strangers (and sometimes acquaintances) serve best as puppets through whom you can observe and manipulate the world.

Even friends—if you have any—might benefit from the occasional nudge.

Take care, however, not to use your abilities on your traveling companions too often, lest they lose their trust and leave you helpless.

Although you work well on your own and make no apologies for your actions, you appreciate the company of psions and rogues and tolerate the presence of others. Indeed, exploiting the skills of your companions keeps you protected in dangerous situations.

COMBAT

You serve two distinct roles in combat.

You gather information before the actual outbreak of conflict, and in the early rounds of battle you try to manipulate your pawn into a position that is advantageous to you and your comrades.

Once you have set up the battle to your liking, you try to deliver your sneak attack, as any rogue would.

ADVANCEMENT

You've needed to take control from an early age.

In your youth, you tried to manipulate friends into giving you gifts or acceding to your wishes.

As you matured, your manipulations grew more deft, and you learned to tap more deeply into your psionic abilities. You excel in subtly taking charge of a situation.

As you advance in this prestige class, focus on enhancing the talents that make you most effective.

Add ranks to Bluff, Hide, and Move Silently to help you get out of trouble should your psibond fail you.

Consider picking up a psionic feat or two, such as Psionic Weapon or Speed of Thought (both from Expanded Psionics Handbook), to enhance your combat prowess.

The new ambush feats in Chapter 3 also provide a variety of interesting twists on your normal sneak attack, especially Mind Drain for dealing with other psionic characters.

RESOURCES

Outside of your very small circle of adventuring companions, you belong to no organization.

In times of need, you can acquire resources from your pawns, although you rarely do so.

You are self-sufficient and independent: Receiving aid from someone, even if you know it was not his own idea, gives him power over you.

PSIBOND AGENTS IN THE WORLD

"I don't know how she knew that.

It's almost as if she was listening to my conversation."

—Argus Coopson, bewildered pawn

Consummate loners and master manipulators, psibond agents fit smoothly into any campaign that includes psionics.

You can easily introduce a psibond agent as the power behind the throne: a trusted advisor who actually controls a tribe, city, or nation through her puppet.

Less sinister examples include a mysterious wanderer who always seems to get the best of any situation, a quiet tavern regular who receives every meal on the house, or an obnoxious tagalong who always seems to know what you're up to.

ORGANIZATION

Psibond agents do not form organizations and chafe at the notion of joining them, confident in their own abilities and the exploitation of others'.

A psibond agent whose talents are known, even to only a few, is inundated with requests to join guilds, schools, or conclaves competing to put her talents to use.

She acquiesces to such offers only to gain control of an organization through direct manipulation of its leaders, even as they believe she serves them.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people never realize they have met a psibond agent, nor do they know that they have been manipulated by one (even if they take actions that are out of character).

Nobody likes to be controlled, so when a psibond agent is revealed she can expect violent hostility, regardless of whether she actually used her abilities on the people who uncover her.

More enlightened and experienced members of society temper their fear with reason, but they are still unfriendly toward a known psibond agent.

Other psionic characters (especially telepaths) treat a psibond agent with indifference, seeing her abilities as no more dangerous than their own.

Only members of the criminal underground and those who wish to exploit her talents extend a friendly greeting—even if it is feigned.

PSIBOND AGENT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (psionics) can research psibond agents to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Psibond agents combine psychic powers with stealth and secrecy.

DC 15: Psibond agents can hear what you hear and see what you see.

DC 20: Psibond agents can manipulate you with suggestions and hints.

The most powerful ones can actually control your body.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific psibond agents in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

As a rule, psibond agents don't want to be found.

Uncovering one requires following up on rumors of people acting strangely, as well as a successful Gather Information check (DC 20 + target's psibond agent level).

PSIBOND AGENTS IN THE GAME

Since psibond agents are independent operators, introducing them does not require adding a new organization to your campaign or even a new character archetype.

In a campaign featuring psionics, telepaths already manipulate the minds of others; the psibond agent merely adds some of those abilities to a rogue.

Psibond agents could form an extremist faction of mind-controlling telepaths or work to hunt other psionic characters.

Players who enjoy the role of the mysterious loner or who like taking control should enjoy playing psibond agents.

Telepaths, obviously, are drawn to the prestige class, as are psionic characters who seek new ways to attacking other psionics-using creatures.

Such independent characters can clash with a party's group goals, however, so be sure to provide opportunities to encourage cooperation.

ADAPTATION

If your campaign doesn't include psionics, you can readily adapt this prestige class to arcane magic.

A group of enchanters can easily take the role of psibond agents, which requires only replacing the power point requirement with the ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

TABLE 2-13: THE PSIBOND AGENT HIT DIE: D6

SPELLWARP SNIPER

"Oppose me, and I shall show you whole new universes of pain."

—Tessa Senchan, master spellwarp sniper

The spellwarp sniper contorts spells, changing area effects into rays that deliver precise, devastating attacks.

BECOMING A SPELLWARP SNIPER

Every spellwarp sniper has at least one level of rogue, ninja, spellthief, or some other class that grants the sneak attack or sudden strike class feature, which is a prerequisite for the prestige class.

At her heart, however, a spellwarp sniper is a spellcaster of respectable skill, usually of arcane origin.

Occasionally a divine caster (such as a cleric dedicated to a deity of destruction) enters this class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feat: Point Blank Shot.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level spells.

Special: Sneak attack or sudden strike +1d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Move Silently, Profession, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

A spellwarp sniper can alter the way certain spells work, turning them into precision weapons that target vital locations.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a spellwarp sniper, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Spellwarp (Ex): You can alter the form of certain area spells into rays as you cast them.

As a free action, you can warp a 1st-level area spell with instantaneous duration and a range greater than touch. The spell's level, components, range, and damage (if any) remain unchanged.

However, the spell's area entry is replaced by an effect entry of "ray".

The spell acts in all ways as a ray, and is considered a ray for the purpose of effects that modify or depend on rays (such as the other abilities of this prestige class).

You must succeed on a ranged touch attack to affect an opponent with the spell.

Even if the original spell allowed a Reflex save to reduce or negate its effect, the ray does not.

However, if the original spell allowed a Fortitude or Will save to reduce or negate the spell's effect, the save still applies.

You must decide to warp the spell as you cast it.

You do not need to prepare it as a warped spell.

You can apply metamagic feats as normal to the spell, as long as they can affect ray spells.

Each time you advance a level in this class, the maximum level of spell that you can affect increases by one.

For example, a 3rd-level spellwarp sniper can warp spells of up to 3rd level.

Sudden Raystrike (Ex): If you can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from your ray attack, you can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Whenever the target of one of your ray spells is denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage with your ray spell.

(If your ray spell doesn't deal hit point damage, this extra damage doesn't apply).

At 4th level, the extra damage increases to 2d6.

If you get a sneak attack or sudden strike bonus from another source (such as rogue or ninja levels), the bonuses on damage stack whenever both abilities would apply to the same target.

This damage applies only to targets within 30 feet.

Creatures with concealment, creatures without discernible anatomies, and creatures immune to extra damage from critical hits are all immune to your sudden raystrikes.

Precise Shot: At 3rd level, you gain Precise Shot as a bonus feat.

If you already have Precise Shot, you can select any other feat that has Point Blank Shot as a prerequisite, as long as you meet the prerequisite for the chosen feat.

Ray Mastery (Ex): At 5th level, you attain unequalled control over your ray spells.

This control manifests in three ways.

- You can apply the extra damage from the sudden raystrike ability (as well as any additional sneak attack or sudden strike damage from other sources) to ray attacks against a target within 60 feet, instead of 30 feet.

- You can deliver a coup de grace with a ray spell that deals hit point damage.

You must be adjacent to your target to deliver the coup de grace.

- Once per day, you can empower a single ray spell, as though with the Empower Spell feat, without any adjustment to the spell's level or casting time.

This effect applies equally to spells that are already rays and those you warp into rays.

PLAYING A SPELLWARP SNIPER

You value precision and control.

Not comfortable with the flashy and clumsy style of most destructive spells, you have learned to focus them into tight, manageable beams.

This desire for exacting detail colors every aspect of your life, from your dealings with others to your personal work ethic.

You do not speak in generalizations, preferring specific facts.

Until experience teaches you better, you take information, people, and events at face value.

COMBAT

You excel at fighting isolated creatures, focusing your attention and your precise spellcasting on one target at a time.

When faced with a group of foes, though, you are less effective.

Although you can cast area spells, they lack your specialized destructive power when not in ray form.

For this reason you should focus on a single foe in an opposing group, preferably one that seems not particularly agile.

ADVANCEMENT

You likely learned your trade from a mentor, also a spellwarp sniper, whose attention was drawn by your discipline and focus.

You were encouraged by your mentor to join an organization that befits your morals and beliefs.

Some guilds and other magical organizations recruit precise, dedicated individuals who show promise, whether they run in street gangs or walk the grandest halls of wizardry.

The best candidate is someone already devoted to the study of magic who can then learn the ways of trickery and stealth; such individuals are easier to find than pocket-picking street urchins with the potential to wield magic. Once you become a spellwarp sniper, you must maintain your discipline and focus.

Concentration and Spellcraft remain vital skills for you, and Hide, Move Silently, and Spot become increasingly important.

Your feat selection should continue to support your use of ray spells: Good choices include Improved Precise Shot, and Split Ray and Ranged Spell Specialization (both from Complete Arcane).

Weapon Focus (ray) is an acceptable choice, though since rays require only ranged touch attacks to hit, the additional accuracy might not be necessary.

Reach Spell (Complete Divine) might also be a good choice, depending on your available array of touch spells.

RESOURCES

Most spellwarp snipers belong to some kind of organization.

If you do not already, you are likely to endure continual recruitment offers.

When you are attached to an organization, you can expect to find support both from the leaders of the group and from those with whom you actively serve.

Such support includes training and any needed supplies for your studies.

Snipers are invaluable to a team, and you make one of the best.

In turn, you are expected to aid your colleagues within the organization, typically by joining teams that require fire support.

SPELLWARP SNIPERS IN THE WORLD

"We figured we could take 'em.

We got the jump on those guards in the square, but then the fire started shootin' into us.

Beams o' fire like flaming yellow needles.

I don't know where they were coming from, and I didn't wait around long enough to find out!"

—Stecky "the Clutch" Rockwater, Red Knives Gang

Since spellwarp snipers usually belong to organizations, you can readily introduce one into your campaign through a group affiliated with the PCs.

ORGANIZATION

A spellwarp sniper is particularly effective in the role of ranged support, having greater accuracy than others who rely on traditional weapons.

Assassins' guilds and thieves' guilds openly welcome spellwarp snipers.

City and royal guards also actively recruit them.

In addition, organizations that focus on the study of magic recruit spellwarp snipers for their surgical precision.

The ability to hone devastating evocations into pinpoint attacks greatly reduces the chance of accidental damage to the surroundings, especially in libraries and universities. Sometimes a spellwarp sniper occupies a different role, that of executioner.

A spellwarped fireball ray to the back of the head is more deadly than a crossbow bolt and sends a more terrifying message.

NPC REACTIONS

Popular among allies, respected by rivals, and feared by enemies, spellwarp snipers elicit a wide range of reactions from those they meet.

Those fighting on the same side as one are typically friendly, welcoming such a powerful ally.

Spellwarp snipers acknowledge one another as belonging to an elite group of spellcasters, but they tread carefully among their own kind.

Overall, they are indifferent toward one another.

Those who have suffered at the hands of a spellwarp sniper offer no quarter and begin as openly hostile.

SPELLWARP SNIPER LORE

Characters with ranks in the appropriate Knowledge skill (arcana for arcane casters or religion for divine casters) can research spellwarp snipers to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.
DC 10: A spellwarp sniper can hit a vital spot with a spell just as a rogue can with a crossbow bolt, and usually far more accurately.

DC 15: Spellwarp snipers can manipulate area spells to make them into precise beams of destructive magic.

DC 20: If you see someone who looks like a spellcaster watching you intently, take cover.

She's probably looking for just the right time to blast you with a ray.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific spellwarp snipers in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

A PC who wishes to enter this prestige class usually seeks out a mentor.

The easiest method is to contact an organization with which the character is friendly: a thieves' guild, the city or royal guard, a temple, or a wizard's university, depending on the PC's affiliations.

SPELLWARP SNIPERS IN THE GAME

Spellwarp snipers can bring great power to bear in a small space.

At lower levels they serve as magical assassins or sharpshooters, particularly as part of an ambush or group raid.

Higher-level spellwarp snipers make effective leaders, particularly if they command a number of other spellwarp snipers.

At any level, they are interesting and surprising spellcasting opponents.

The prestige class appeals to evokers for obvious reasons. Players who like the role of long-ranged support combatant or who prefer characters with precision-based attacks should enjoy the change of pace offered by the spellwarp sniper.

ADAPTATION

As a prestige class, the spellwarp sniper is already fairly generic in the way it interacts with a campaign setting.

It doesn't require new rules or different sources of power.

For an interesting take on spellwarp snipers, try changing the types of spells they can warp.

Perhaps they can transform touch spells rather than area spells, or they focus their abilities only on nondamaging area spells.

Depending on the needs of your campaign, you might change the class's role in a group, or create a separate organization of spellwarp snipers that is not affiliated with another group.

UNCANNY TRICKSTER

"If you liked that, just wait'll you see what's next!"

—Ameslan Trag, uncanny trickster

The uncanny trickster combines the features of his primary class with a wider range of skill tricks than any other character can achieve.

BECOMING AN UNCANNY TRICKSTER

Because of the simple requirements for entry, the uncanny trickster appeals to a wide range of characters.

Rogues, bards, rangers, and other skill-focused characters are the most likely to enter the prestige class, but the entry requirements are well within the reach of intelligent members of any class.

Pure spellcasters prefer the magical trickster prestige class (page 45), while warriors find the battle trickster (page 28) more to their liking.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Any four skills 8 ranks each.

Skill Tricks: Any four.

CLASS SKILLS

(8 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Perform, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Swim, Tumble, Use Magic Device, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

The uncanny trickster excels at using skill tricks.

He can use more tricks than any other character.

Class Features: At each level after 1st, you gain class features (including spellcasting ability) and an increase in effective level as if you had also gained a level in a class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain the benefit of your previous class's Hit Dice, attack progression, skill points, or saving throws.

If you had more than one class before becoming an uncanny trickster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining class features.

Bonus Trick (Ex): At each level, you gain a bonus skill trick for which you meet the prerequisite.

These bonus tricks do not cost skill points and do not count against your maximum number of skill tricks available.

Favorite Trick (Ex): You have a limited repertoire of signature stunts.

At each level, choose one skill trick you know that you can perform only once per encounter.

You can now use that trick one additional time per encounter.

You can't choose the same skill trick more than once.

Tricky Defense (Ex): At 3rd level, you have mastered incorporating tricks into your personal defenses.

In any round when you perform a skill trick, you gain a +1 competence bonus on saving throws until the start of your next turn.

PLAYING AN UNCANNY TRICKSTER

You know more tricks than anyone else, and you can use your tricks more frequently.

Many scoundrels use tricks to augment their other abilities, but you take the opposite outlook: You rely on your tricks and use your other abilities in support of them.

You work well with others, especially those who can perform skill tricks or have abilities that emulate tricks. Becoming a trick expert instantly affiliates you with a very loose fellowship of tricksters (battle, magical, and uncanny).

You don't get along with every trickster you meet, though: Some jealously guard their secrets and view others of their kind as rivals.

COMBAT

"Full of surprises" best describes your fighting style.

You enter combat cautiously, setting the tone of your contribution.

While the fighters slug it out and the casters stay in the back slinging spells, you move around unpredictably, always looking for an opportunity to deliver a sudden finishing blow.

If you prefer fighting from range, use movement tricks to get yourself somewhere safe on the battlefield, as far from the main engagement as possible.

From this more secure vantage point, you can use your ranged attacks (including appropriate skill tricks) to support your allies.

ADVANCEMENT

Becoming an uncanny trickster requires hard work and sacrifice.

While others devote their training to learning only skills, you seek a balance between skills and tricks.

You need to invest in skills, since you need a minimum level of competence in a skill before attempting new and spectacular applications of it, but you devote as many skill points as you can to tricks.

Thus, you know many skills but have mastered few (if any). Interaction and mental tricks can be very useful in combat, but you should focus on movement tricks to get yourself safely around the battlefield.

The prestige class offers both plentiful skill points and more bonus skill tricks than any other, so buy as many tricks as you can afford.

Maximize your potential by picking up feats that grant bonus skill tricks as well (see Chapter 3).

RESOURCES

Although you might not have realized it when you became an uncanny trickster, you are part of a larger (albeit very loosely organized) group.

The benefits and requirements of this group are few, but it does offer the camaraderie of shared experiences as well as the chance to learn new tricks.

Nevertheless, tricksters owe no more to one another than do any other people with similar, nonbinding interests.

UNCANNY TRICKSTERS IN THE WORLD

"I've seen his kind before.

Just when you think you've seen everything he has to offer, he surprises you."

—Guled Conu, retired adventurer

Depending on their moral fiber, uncanny tricksters can be anything from tumbling entertainers to second-story burglars.

Adventuring characters simply continue their previous careers but use their many tricks to improve their own and their allies' chances of survival.

ORGANIZATION

Uncanny tricksters congregate with magical tricksters and battle tricksters when possible.

Having come to the prestige class from different backgrounds, they have less in common with one another than they do with other tricksters.

They swap techniques, introduce newly developed tricks and trick-supporting equipment and magic, and share experiences.

Outside observers might assume such a meeting is part of a circus or carnival, with tricksters springing about performing for the enjoyment and education of onlookers. These gatherings, though enjoyable, do not represent a structured organization.

Uncanny tricksters looking to become part of something more permanent usually join groups that appreciate both their abilities and their moral choices: thieves' guilds, carnivals, monasteries, ninja clans, adventuring groups, and so on.

Within an organization, an uncanny trickster performs the role of his former adventuring class, enhanced with unusual techniques.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people look on uncanny tricksters with awe. A few conceited individuals view them with contempt and try to belittle their abilities, generally displaying indifferent to unfriendly attitudes.

Adventurers respect uncanny tricksters for their discipline and training, and are generally friendly toward them.

Common folk do not understand the difference between uncanny tricksters and other trickster classes, so their attitudes span the spectrum.

However, because some tricksters use their abilities to take advantage of less talented folk, a victim of such exploitation has a negative view of all tricksters, magical or otherwise, and is unfriendly at best.

UNCANNY TRICKSTER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research uncanny tricksters to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Uncanny tricksters know more skill tricks than anyone else.

DC 15: An uncanny trickster continues to practice his other abilities even as he masters tricks, so he's capable of much more than just a few stunts.

DC 20: Uncanny tricksters don't have a formal organization, but they do occasionally gather with others who respect their talents.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific uncanny tricksters in your campaign, including a notable individual, the area in which he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

The easiest way to find an uncanny trickster is at a trickster gathering.

Because such events are rare, however, PCs seeking out an uncanny trickster should contact groups that are likely to seek out their talents, as described above.

UNCANNY TRICKSTERS IN THE GAME

Uncanny tricksters make interesting opponents. They have such a wide variety of abilities available to them that no two are ever the same.

Their abilities, particularly those that allow for escape and evasion, can make them particularly frustrating opponents and set them up well as recurring villains.

A player who likes to surprise the DM or other players or who wants to bring cinematic action into a campaign would probably enjoy playing an uncanny trickster.

The prestige class offers opportunities to perform actions otherwise not covered in the rules.

An uncanny trickster character can fill any number of roles in a party, depending on his other class or classes.

ADAPTATION

The uncanny trickster is already a very generalized prestige class that can easily fit into any campaign setting.

It does rely on the new rules for skill tricks, however, so it is not suitable for a campaign that does not incorporate them.

Replacing bonus tricks with extra feats that enhance movement and defense can repurpose the character as a sneaky combatant with a more generalized approach to skills.

COMPLETE WARRIOR (3.5)

BEHIND THE CURTAIN: WORLD-SPECIFIC PRESTIGE CLASSES

Creating prestige classes specific to your campaign setting is an excellent way to give depth to the world and flavor to the prestige class. Virtually all the prestige classes in this book come from world-specific backgrounds but the designers made them more generic to the implicit world of the DUNGEONS & DRAGONS game so that you could fit them into your chosen campaign setting with as little difficulty as possible. Prestige classes such as the bear warrior and the tattooed monk, for example, were originally part of the Oriental Adventures campaign sourcebook but have been integrated into the core D&D experience.

The Thayan knight, however, is an example of a world-specific prestige class the designers chose not to make generic. It is a prestige class taken from the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign

BEAR WARRIOR

Many people, particularly those in “uncivilized” regions of the world, revere bears as symbols of the warrior’s strength and battle prowess.

By adopting the bear as a totem anima, warriors of these people hope to tap into some of the bear’s strength. Bear warriors, through a special relationship with bear spirits, literally adopt a bear’s strength in the rage of battle, actually transforming into bears while they fight.

Only characters who can already tap into a spiritual power of rage can heighten that power to become bear warriors.

Most bear warriors are barbarians, but other multiclass characters sometimes become bear warriors.

Characters with another prestige class that grants a rage or frenzy ability occasionally adopt this class.

NPC bear warriors are usually the champions of barbarian tribes, rustic villages, or warlike temples.

They lead other warriors not through discipline and order, but by the inspiring example they present.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bear warrior, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Power Attack.

Special: Rage or frenzy ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The bear warrior’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bear warrior prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bear warriors gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Bear Form (Su): A bear warrior can transform into a bear (similar to the polymorph spell) while in a rage or frenzy. His only limit on the number of times per day he can assume a bear form is the number of times per day he enters a rage or frenzy, and the bear warrior returns to his own form once the rage or frenzy ends.

The bear warrior retains the normal +2 bonus on Will saves and –2 penalty to Armor Class while raging, but the ability score bonuses granted by rage or frenzy are replaced by Setting and shows its roots clearly. The reason the designers chose not to strip out this world flavor is twofold. First, it provides an excellent example of how a prestige class can reflect the world and culture it belongs to; second, the Thayan knight represents a classic fantasy archetype—the warrior-henchman of a powerful wizardly cabal. Most D&D campaign settings have cultures or organizations similar to the Red Wizards of Thay, so even if you do not play in the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting, you should have no difficulty customizing the Thayan knight to your own game setting. To do so, look first at the requirements (the Red Wizards are xenophobic, hence the racial requirement) and then work your way down. While the Thayan knight’s special abilities have specific names, you should have no difficulty establishing equivalents in your own campaign world.

Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution bonuses appropriate to the bear form taken (see below).

As normal for polymorph, the bear warrior gains the bear form’s physical qualities (including size, movement, natural armor bonus, natural weapons, space, and reach), as well as any extraordinary special attacks possessed by the form (such as improved grab in the brown bear or dire bear form).

The transformation lasts for the duration of the rage or frenzy.

Unlike with the polymorph spell, a bear warrior doesn’t gain the bear’s Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution scores when he takes bear form, nor does he regain any hit points when he transforms.

However, his current hit points increase due to his new Constitution, as normal for a rage ability.

Any bear warrior can assume the form of a black bear once per day.

While in black bear form, he gains a +8 bonus to Strength, a +2 bonus to Dexterity, and a +4 bonus to Constitution.

At 5th level, a bear warrior can assume bear form twice per day and can choose between black and brown bear forms.

While in brown bear form, he gains a +16 bonus to Strength, a +2 bonus to Dexterity, and a +8 bonus to Constitution.

At 10th level, a bear warrior can assume bear form three times per day and can choose between black, brown, and dire bear forms.

While in dire bear form, he gains a +20 bonus to Strength, a +2 bonus to Dexterity, and a +8 bonus to Constitution.

Scent (Ex): At 3rd level, a bear warrior gains the scent special ability (see page 314 of the Monster Manual) while in bear or nonbear form.

Rage +1/Day (Ex): When a bear warrior attains 7th level, the number of times per day that he can enter a state of rage or frenzy increases by one.

For example, a 7th-level barbarian/7th-level bear warrior can rage three times per day.

If that character were to gain one more barbarian level, he could rage four times per day.

BLADESINGER

Bladesingers are elves who have blended art, swordplay, and arcane magic into a harmonious whole.

In battle, a bladesinger's lithe movements and subtle tactics are beautiful, belying their deadly martial efficiency.

Multiclass fighter/wizards are the most obvious candidates for the prestige class, although any elf who can wield a martial weapon and cast arcane spells can become a bladesinger.

Bladesinger ranger/wizards, rogue/wizards, and even bards are not unknown.

Bladesingers command great respect in most elf communities, and NPC bladesingers usually serve as itinerant guardians and champions of the elf community at large.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bladesinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Balance 2 ranks, Concentration 4 ranks, Perform (dance) 2 ranks, Perform (sing) 2 ranks, Tumble 2 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Combat Expertise, Dodge, Weapon Focus (longsword or rapier).

Spells: Able to cast arcane spells of 1st level.

CLASS SKILLS

The bladesinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Spellcraft (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bladesinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bladesingers gain no proficiency with any weapon.

They gain proficiency with light armor but not with shields.

Spells per Day: At every odd-numbered level gained in the bladesinger class, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained, except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a bladesinger, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Bladesong Style (Ex): When wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other), a bladesinger gains a dodge bonus to Armor Class equal to his class level, up to a maximum of her Intelligence bonus.

If the bladesinger wears medium or heavy armor, she loses all benefits of the bladesong style.

Lesser Spell song (Ex): When wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other), a bladesinger of 2nd level or higher can take 10 when making a Concentration check to cast defensively.

Song of Celerity (Ex): Once per day, a bladesinger of 4th level or higher may quicken a single spell of up to 2nd level, as if she had used the Quicken Spell feat, but without any adjustment to the spell's effective level or casting time. She may only use this ability when wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other).

At 8th level and higher, she can quicken a single spell of up to 4th level.

Greater Spell song (Ex): A bladesinger of 6th level or higher ignores arcane spell failure chances when wearing light armor.

Song of Fury (Ex): When a 10th-level bladesinger makes a full attack with a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other), she can make one extra attack in a round at her highest base attack bonus, but this attack and each other attack made in that round take a -2 penalty.

This penalty applies for 1 round, so it also affects attacks of opportunity the bladesinger might make before her next action.

CAVALIER

Representing the ultimate in mounted warfare, the cavalier is the quintessential knight in shining armor.

The charge of the cavalier is among the most devastating offensive weapons any culture can hope to field.

Most cavaliers belong to the upper social class or nobility of a society.

The cavalier dedicates his life to the service of a higher authority, such as a noble or sovereign, deity, military or religious order, or a special cause.

His is a hereditary honor that comes with the price of lifelong service to his monarch, country, or other object or entity.

The cavalier is expected to participate in any wars or other armed conflict in which his lord or cause is engaged.

Cavaliers in service to other nobles often serve their master beyond the battlefield as well, performing such duties as their skills, and their noble lord, see fit.

The cavalier often pursues such selfless goals as the eradication of evil and chaos from the world, and justice for all the subjects of his land.

He can also be a bully and a braggart who uses his status and privileges to pursue only his own self-aggrandizement.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cavalier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +8.

Skills: Handle Animal 4 ranks, Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 4 ranks, Ride 6 ranks.

Feats: Spirited Charge, Weapon Focus (lance), Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The cavalier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Profession (Int), and Ride (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the cavalier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cavaliers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Special Mount (Sp): A cavalier's class levels stack with any paladin levels the character may have for determining the characteristics of a paladin's mount.

Mounted Weapon Bonus (Ex): A cavalier gains a competence bonus on his attack roll when using the indicated weapon while mounted.

For the lance, this bonus starts out at +1 at 1st level and increases by +1 every four levels thereafter.

For the sword, this bonus starts out at +1 at 2nd level and increases by +1 every four levels thereafter.

Ride Bonus (Ex): A cavalier gains a competence bonus on Ride checks.

This bonus starts out at +2 and improves to +4 at 4th level, +6 at 7th level, and +8 at 9th level.

Courtly Knowledge (Ex): A cavalier adds his class level to his Knowledge (nobility and royalty) checks as a competence bonus.

Deadly Charge (Ex): When mounted and using the charge action, a cavalier of 2nd level or higher may declare a "deadly charge" before making his attack roll (thus, a failed attack ruins the attempt).

If he hits, he deals triple damage with a melee weapon (or quadruple damage with a lance).

This ability does not stack with the benefit of the Spirited Charge feat.

Burst of Speed (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a cavalier can urge his mount to greater than normal speed when charging.

This ability doubles the maximum distance the mount can travel when making a charge, up to four times its speed.

This ability can be used once per day without penalty to the mount.

Each additional use of the ability in a single day requires the mount to make a DC 20 Will save immediately after the conclusion of the charge; failure results in the mount taking 2d6 points of damage.

Full Mounted Attack (Ex): At 6th level and higher, a mounted cavalier can make a full attack when his mount moves more than 5 feet but no farther than a single move action would carry it.

The cavalier cannot combine this full attack with a charge. Unstoppable Charge (Ex): When making a deadly charge, a 10th-level cavalier deals quadruple damage with a melee weapon (or quintuple damage with a lance).

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a cavalier may continue advancing as a paladin.

TABLE 2-4: THE CAVALIER

Level*	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+2	Special mount, mounted weapon bonus (lance) +1, Ride bonus +2, courtly knowledge

*Special: Cavalier class levels stack with paladin levels for determining the characteristics of a paladin's mount.

DARK HUNTER

Dark hunters specialize in hunting down and eliminating creatures in the dark, twisting caves of the Underdark, often protecting underground communities or those people who make their living under the earth (such as miners or hunters).

They use stealth, ambush, and deception to single out foes and remove them one by one.

A typical strategy is to locate the enemy, then hide against a nearby wall of earth or stone.

The dark hunter then waits for her enemy to pass by, leaping out to attack when the target least expects it.

A dark hunter uses her knowledge of underground terrain to find the best areas to create pits, cave-ins, and rockslides, often enabling her to eliminate the enemy without drawing her axe.

If a dark hunter is outnumbered, she retreats into the darkness, hiding until she can pick off individual targets. Because they spend so much time in the stark wilderness of caves and caverns, dark hunters are slightly ostracized by other members of society.

Most individuals live among others of their own kind, so the rootless existence of the dark hunter seems like a social aberration.

Still, great honor is to be found in protecting the clan from attack, so dark hunters are given respect.

None of this concerns the individual, who cares little for what others think; she finds purpose in what she does every time she brings down another one of her enemies.

She prefers to work alone, but also knows that cooperation with others has its advantages.

Rangers are the most likely characters to become dark hunters.

Druids, rogues, and fighters are also common.

Feral tribes of barbaric dwarves sometimes produce dark hunters, who track down their foes in silence and then explode into action once they ambush their prey.

Half-ores make excellent dark hunters, since they are often found on the fringes of society anyway.

Elves, with their abiding hatred of the drow, sometimes follow this path.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dark hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Craft (trapmaking) 5 ranks, Knowledge (dungeoneering) 2 ranks, Move Silently 2 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feats: Blind-Fight, Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The dark hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dark hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dark hunters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Improved Stonecunning (Ex): A dark hunter gains the stonecunning ability possessed by dwarves (see page 15 of the Player's Handbook), or, if the character already has the ability, she increases her bonus from +2 to +4 on checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework traps, new construction, unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and the like.

This bonus also applies on Search checks made to detect stonework traps.

Enhanced Darkvision (Ex): Dark hunters spend most of their lives in the darkest caverns they can find.

As a dark hunter's skills improve, her almost mystical understanding of the deep caverns sharpens her inborn visual acuity.

If a dark hunter does not already have darkvision when she attains 2nd level, she gains it at a range of 30 feet.

If she already had darkvision, she adds 30 feet to the range. Once a dark hunter attains 4th level, her darkvision range increases by an extra 30 feet.

This bonus stacks with other natural or extraordinary abilities that improve darkvision, but it does nothing to improve magically granted darkvision.

Any condition that causes the character to lose her normal darkvision also causes the enhanced darkvision to fail.

Sneak Attack (Ex): If a dark hunter can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Any time the dark hunter's target would be denied his Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the dark hunter's attack deals an extra 1d6 points of damage.

Should a dark hunter score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, a dark hunter can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage.

She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual -4 penalty, because she must make optimal use of her weapon in order to execute the sneak attack.

A dark hunter can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks.

The dark hunter must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

A dark hunter cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a dark hunter gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the extra damage stacks.

Stone's Hue (Su): When within 5 feet of a stone or earth wall, a dark hunter can take on the coloration of the stone and may seem to blend into the surface of the wall.

As long as the dark hunter is within 5 feet of the wall, she gains a +10 circumstance bonus on Hide checks and can successfully hide herself from view in the open without having anything to actually hide behind.

Death Attack (Ex): If a dark hunter studies her victim for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of possibly either paralyzing or killing the target (dark hunter's choice).

While studying the target, the dark hunter can undertake other actions as long as her attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the dark hunter or recognize the dark hunter as an enemy.

If the victim of such an attack fails a Fortitude save (DC 10 + the dark hunter's class level + the dark hunter's Int modifier) against the kill effect, he dies.

If the saving throw fails against the paralysis effect, the victim's mind and body become enervated, rendering him helpless and unable to act for 1d6 rounds plus 1 round per level of the dark hunter.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once the dark hunter has completed the 3 rounds of study, she must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a death attack is attempted and fails (the victim makes his save) or if the dark hunter does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before she can attempt another death attack.

DARKWOOD STALKER

Elves and orcs are ancient foes, their enmity dating back to times before humans walked the land.

Some elves train as elite hunters of the hated orcs.

These hunters, called darkwood stalkers among the elves, pursue their age-old enemies with grim determination.

Darkwood stalkers usually come from the ranks of elf (or half-elf) rangers or rogues, although the rare elf barbarian can follow this path as well.

Fighters and paladins make poor darkwood stalkers without gaining at least one level in ranger or rogue.

Spellcasters rarely take up the mantle of the darkwood stalker, although druids willing to forego spellcasting can fit well into the order.

Most darkwood stalkers are affiliated with elven military units, although some are lone scouts or field agents.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a darkwood stalker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Listen 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Speak Language (Orc), Spot 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The darkwood stalker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Additional Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the darkwood stalker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Darkwood stalkers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Ancient Foe (Ex): Due to his extensive study of orcs and training in the proper techniques for combating them, a darkwood stalker gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against orcs.

He gets the same bonus on weapon damage rolls against these creatures.

A darkwood stalker also gets the bonus on damage with ranged weapons, but only against targets within 30 feet (the darkwood stalker cannot strike with deadly accuracy beyond that range).

The bonus on damage does not apply against creatures that are immune to critical hits.

At 4th, 7th, and 10th level, the darkwood stalker's bonus goes up by +2.

This bonus stacks with a favored enemy bonus (if any) acquired through ranger levels.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a darkwood stalker gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

He still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

If a darkwood stalker already had the uncanny dodge ability from another class, the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge instead.

Sneak Attack (Ex): If a darkwood stalker can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for an extra 1d6 points of damage.

For complete details on the sneak attack ability, see the description of the dark hunter earlier in this chapter.

Darkvision (Ex): Although stealthy and keen-eyed, the darkwood stalker is often at a disadvantage against orcs when fighting in the darkness.

Long ago, elven sages developed a ritual to allow the most dedicated stalkers to overcome this disadvantage.

Now, as they grow in experience, their night vision continually improves, eventually matching the darkvision of their hated foes.

At 4th level, a darkwood stalker gains darkvision out to 30 feet, and at 7th level, the range increases to 60 feet.

If the darkwood stalker already has darkvision as a racial ability, this ability does not increase it.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 5th level and higher, a darkwood stalker can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies other characters the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack him.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue of at least four levels higher than the character can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

If a darkwood stalker gains the uncanny dodge ability from another class, the levels from the classes that grant uncanny dodge stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the character.

Dodge Critical (Ex): Although often more skilled than their orc foes, darkwood stalkers have seen too many battles won by one lucky blow from a falchion.

At 8th level, a darkwood stalker becomes able to turn even the luckiest blow into a grazing strike.

Once per day, a darkwood stalker can make a Reflex saving throw (DC 20 + the enhancement bonus, if any, possessed by the weapon) to turn a critical hit dealt upon him into a normal hit.

The darkwood stalker must be aware of the attack and not flat-footed, and he must declare his attempt to reduce the effect of the critical hit before the damage from the hit is rolled.

Death Attack (Ex): If a 10th-level darkwood stalker studies a particular orc for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of possibly killing the target.

While studying the orc, the darkwood hunter can undertake other actions as long as his attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the darkwood stalker or recognize the darkwood stalker as an enemy.

If the victim of such an attack fails a Fortitude save (DC 10 + the darkwood stalker's class level + the darkwood stalker's Wis modifier), he dies.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once the darkwood stalker has completed the 3 rounds of study, he must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a death attack is attempted and fails (the victim makes his save) or if the darkwood stalker does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before he can attempt another death attack.

DERVISH

Wild, exotic, and as dangerous as her whirling blades, the dervish epitomizes speed, quickness, and abandon.

Her motions appear to be as random as they are graceful, but the steps of her lethal dance play out according to their own rhythm.

Nearly all dervishes belong to nomadic cultures.

These nomads are not simple wanderers with no roots to call their own—they have their ancient traditions, and their societies simply do not consider permanent settlements an important part of their nature.

They are gypsies, keeping their own traditions and forging their own familial and societal bonds while they move throughout the world.

Often, these tribes adopt the attitudes and even some of the laws of the lands they live in—for the sake of expedience, if nothing else.

The dervish treats fighting styles the same way.

A dervish learns the dance of war as she grows up among her family and her tribe.

She watches others as she travels, however, and brings new steps to the dance as she goes.

Fighters, rangers, and monks often take up the role of the dervish.

Many paladins look at the wildness of the dance and assume it has some roots in chaos, but those who look past the seeming randomness can find things to learn.

Barbarians seldom choose to learn the ways of the dance—the dervish depends on subtlety more than brute force.

The way of the dervish has been known to appeal to some druids, bards, and even sorcerers—those who wish to learn a type of fighting that does not rely on heavy arms or armor find the class interesting.

Halflings and elves make good dervishes, and many nomadic halfling tribes have dervishes as their primary protectors.

NPC dervishes seldom wander without their tribes.

They can be sent on missions, or serve as scouts in new lands, but the dervish is too important to the tribal unit to go off on her own for extended periods of time.

Some dervishes balk at this responsibility, however, so exceptions to this rule do show up occasionally.

A dervish found wandering alone is usually seeking new challenges and new knowledge.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dervish, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Perform (dance) 3 ranks, Tumble 3 ranks.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Dodge, Mobility, Weapon Focus (any slashing melee weapon).

CLASS SKILLS

The dervish's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dervish prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dervishes gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

AC Bonus (Ex): A dervish gains this bonus to Armor Class as long as she is wearing no armor or light armor and not carrying a shield.

This bonus to AC applies even against touch attacks or when the dervish is flat-footed.

She loses this bonus when she is immobilized or helpless, when she wears any armor heavier than light, when she carries a shield, or when she carries a medium or heavy load.

Dervish Dance (Ex): A dervish can become a whirling dancer of death a certain number of times per day. While in this dervish dance, she can take a full attack action (for melee attacks only) and still move up to her speed. However, the dervish must move a minimum of 5 feet between each attack when using this ability, and she cannot return to a square she just exited (though she may return to that square later during her full attack).

The dervish is subject to attacks of opportunity while dancing, but may tumble normally as part of her move.

A dervish prevented from completing her move is also prevented from finishing her full attack.

If a dervish wields a slashing weapon while in a dervish dance, she gains a bonus on her attack and damage rolls. This bonus is +1 at 1st level, and it increases by an extra +1 at every odd-numbered level thereafter.

A dervish may only perform a dervish dance while wielding a slashing weapon (she may use a double weapon, or multiple weapons, only if both ends of the weapon or all weapons are of the slashing type).

She cannot perform a dervish dance in any armor heavier than light or if she is using a shield.

While dancing, a dervish cannot use skills or abilities that involve concentration or require her to remain still, such as Move Silently, Hide, or Search.

A dervish with the bardic music ability can, however, sing while she dances, and a dervish can also use the Combat Expertise feat while in a dance.

A dervish cannot perform a dervish dance while under the effect of a rage or frenzy ability.

A dervish can perform a dervish dance only once per encounter.

A dervish dance lasts 1 round for every two ranks of Perform (dance) that the character has.

At the end of a dervish dance, the character becomes fatigued for the duration of the encounter (unless she is a 9th-level dervish, at which point this limitation no longer applies).

Movement Mastery (Ex): A dervish is so certain of her movements that she is unaffected by adverse conditions. When making a Jump, Perform (dance), or Tumble check, she may take 10 even if stress and distraction would normally prevent her from doing so.

Slashing Blades: A dervish treats the scimitar as a light weapon (rather than a one-handed weapon) for all purposes, including fighting with two weapons.

Fast Movement (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, a dervish gains an enhancement bonus to her speed.

A dervish in any armor heavier than light or carrying a medium or heavy load loses this bonus.

Spring Attack: At 3rd level, a dervish gains the Spring Attack feat, even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

Dance of Death: At 4th level, a dervish gains the benefit of the Cleave feat while performing a dervish dance, even if she does not meet the prerequisites for the feat.

She does not have to move 5 feet before making the extra attack granted by this ability.

Improved Reaction (Ex): When she attains 6th level, a dervish gains a +2 bonus on initiative rolls.

Elaborate Parry (Ex): When she attains 7th level, a dervish gains an extra +4 bonus to Armor Class when she chooses to fight defensively or use all-out defense in melee combat.

Tireless Dance: When a dervish reaches 9th level, the character no longer becomes fatigued for the duration of the encounter at the end of a dervish dance.

A Thousand Cuts (Ex): When a dervish reaches 10th level, once per day she may double the number of melee attacks she makes while performing a full attack action (whether in a dervish dance or not).

If a dervish uses this ability in conjunction with her dervish dance, she can make up to two attacks between moves.

The dervish also gains the benefit of the Great Cleave feat with slashing weapons while performing a thousand cuts, even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

She does not have to move 5 feet before making any extra attacks granted by this ability.

A dervish using this ability can receive an extra attack from the haste spell, but the bonuses provided by the spell do not stack with the bonuses granted by the class.

DRUNKEN MASTER

Martial arts students face a bewildering array of martial arts schools, each with its own adherents and detractors.

However, few schools are as unusual—or as controversial—as drunken boxing.

By weaving and staggering about as if inebriated, drunken boxers avoid many blows.

Likewise, their stumbling, lurching attacks catch their opponents off guard. Moreover, when they actually imbibe alcohol, drunken masters can perform truly prodigious feats of strength and bravery.

This ability garners a drunken master little respect among adherents of other martial arts schools, because drunken boxing exacts a toll on its users.

Drunken masters may remain intoxicated for hours after a fight, and they are often found half-asleep in taverns, mumbling incoherently.

This flies in the face of other schools' ascetic principles. Members of rival schools must be wary—they never know when the tipsy lout at the bar is just a harmless thug, and when he is a nigh-unstoppable drunken master.

Monks form the backbone of the drunken boxing school. A monk loses some face with his original school or monastery for becoming a drunken master, but a brilliant display of drunken fighting can sometimes silence critics in one's former school.

Members of other classes become drunken masters only rarely, although students often tell the tale of a barbarian from the north who became a phenomenal drunken master.

Prospective students are studied at a distance by other drunken masters, then treated to a display of the power of drunken boxing.

If the student expresses enthusiasm for learning the new techniques, a group of drunken masters takes him or her from tavern to tavern, getting rip-roaring drunk, causing trouble, and passing along the first secrets of the technique. Those who survive the revelry are welcomed as new drunken masters.

NPC drunken masters are often found in taverns and bars. They rarely pick fights there, but are quick to come to the aid of someone overmatched in a tavern brawl.

Most keep a low profile, although some are famous—or infamous—for the deeds they have performed while under the influence.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a drunken master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Tumble 8 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Great Fortitude, Improved Unarmed Strike (or the monk's unarmed strike ability).

Special: Flurry of blows ability; evasion ability; must be chosen by existing drunken masters and survive a night of revelry among them without being incarcerated, poisoned, or extraordinarily embarrassed.

CLASS SKILLS

The drunken master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the drunken master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Drunken masters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Drink Like a Demon (Ex): A drunken master's body handles alcohol differently from other people's.

He can drink a large tankard of ale, a bottle of wine, or a corresponding amount of stronger alcohol as a move action. Every bottle or tankard of alcohol he consumes during combat reduces his Wisdom and Intelligence by 2 points each, but increases his Strength or Constitution (character's choice) by 2 points.

A drunken master may benefit from a number of drinks equal to his class level.

The duration of both the penalty and the bonus is a number of rounds equal to the character's drunken master level + 3. Improvised Weapons (Ex): While bottles and tankards are a drunken master's preferred improvised weapons, he can use furniture, farm implements, or nearly anything else at hand to attack his foes.

A drunken master's improvised weapon deals as much damage as his unarmed strike plus an extra 1d4 points. Most improvised weapons deal bludgeoning damage, although some (a broken glass bottle, for example) would deal piercing or slashing damage.

When a drunken master rolls a natural 1 on an attack roll while using an improvised weapon, that weapon breaks apart and becomes useless.

Stagger (Ex): By tripping, stumbling, and staggering, a drunken master of 2nd level or higher can make a charge attack that surprises his opponents.

This ability has two beneficial aspects: First, the charge need not be in a straight line, even though the character can still move up to twice his speed.

Second, if a drunken master makes a DC 15 Tumble check before beginning a charge, his movement through threatened squares provokes no attacks of opportunity.

Swaying Waist (Ex): At 3rd level, a drunken master knows how to weave and bob during an attack, making him more difficult to hit.

The character gains a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class against any one opponent he chooses during his turn.

AC Bonus (Ex): At 4th level, a drunken master gains a +1 bonus to Armor Class.

This bonus improves to +2 at 9th level.

Improved Improvised Weapons (Ex): A drunken master of 4th level or higher can use long improvised weapons (such as ladders) as reach weapons according to their length, and improvised weapons with many protrusions (such as chairs) provide a +2 bonus on opponents' disarm attempts.

Finally, large objects with broad, flat surfaces (such as tables) can be upended to become improvised tower shields.

Greater Improvised Weapons (Ex): At 5th level and higher, a drunken master wielding an improvised weapon deals an extra 1d8 points of damage instead of 1d4.

Improved Feint (Ex): A drunken master who attains 6th level gains Improved Feint as a bonus feat even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

Improved Grapple (Ex): A drunken master who attains 7th level gains Improved Grapple as a bonus feat even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

For Medicinal Purposes (Sp): At 8th level, a drunken master gains the ability to convert a single alcoholic drink he has ingested into a single potion of cure moderate wounds, as if he had just drunk a dose of the potion.

To use this ability, the character must be under the effect of an alcoholic drink (see Drink Like a Demon, above).

When he converts one drink of alcohol into one dose of the potion, his ability scores change (+2 to Intelligence and Wisdom, –2 to Strength or Constitution) as if the duration of the alcohol's effect had expired.

This ability can be used up to three times per day.

It is a standard action that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Corkscrew Rush (Ex): A drunken master of 9th level or higher can perform this maneuver, leaping forward and twisting his body in midair as he attempts to head-butt an opponent.

When making a charge attack he can, in addition to dealing normal damage, initiate a bull rush (without provoking an attack of opportunity).

If the bull rush attempt succeeds, the opponent is stunned unless she makes a Will save (DC 10 + the drunken master's class level + the drunken master's Wis modifier).

However, if the bull rush attempt fails, the drunken master lands prone in front of the opponent.

Superior Improvised Weapons (Ex): At 9th level and higher, a drunken master wielding an improvised weapon deals an extra 1d12 points of damage instead of 1d8.

Breath of Flame (Sp): A 10th-level drunken master can ignite some of the alcohol within his body and spew it forth from his mouth as a free action.

This breath of flame deals 3d12 points of fire damage to all within the 20-foot cone, or half damage to those who make a Reflex save (DC 10 + the drunken master's class level + the drunken master's Con modifier).

Each time a drunken master uses breath of flame, it consumes one drink's worth of alcohol from within his body, lessening the penalty to his Wisdom and Intelligence scores and reducing the bonus to his Strength or Constitution score (character's choice).

Multiclass Note: A monk who becomes a drunken master may continue advancing as a monk.

EXOTIC WEAPON MASTER

Characters of any race or background can become exotic weapon masters; the only real requirement is commitment and perseverance.

Nevertheless, most exotic weapon masters are human, because members of that race have the most exposure to new cultures and thus the most opportunity to take up exotic weapons.

NPC exotic weapon masters often open training arenas or schools for those interested in learning to fight with unusual weapons or tactics.

They often take levels in other prestige classes and can be found as champions or leaders among bands of warriors.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become an exotic weapon master, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Craft (weaponsmithing) 3 ranks.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (any exotic weapon), Weapon Focus (any exotic weapon).

Special: Races that have familiarity with an exotic weapon (such as the dwarf's familiarity with the dwarven waraxe and the dwarven urgrosh) are considered to have the Exotic Weapon Proficiency feat for the purpose of meeting the requirements for this class.

CLASS SKILLS

The exotic weapon master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), and Profession (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the exotic weapon master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Exotic weapon masters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Exotic Weapon Stunt (Ex): At each level, an exotic weapon master learns a special trick that he can use with any exotic weapon for which he has the Weapon Focus feat.

He must select the trick learned when he gains the level, and once selected, the choice cannot later be changed.

He can't select the same stunt more than once.

Close-Quarters Ranged Combat: A character who knows this stunt doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity when using an exotic ranged weapon.

Double Weapon Defense: When wielding an exotic double weapon with both hands, the character gains a +1 shield bonus to AC.

Exotic Reach: When wielding an exotic weapon with reach, the character may make an attack of opportunity against a foe that provokes such an attack even if the foe has cover (but not total cover).

Exotic Sunder: When wielding a one-handed or two-handed exotic weapon, the character deals an extra 1d6 points of damage on any successful sunder attempt.

Flurry of Strikes: When wielding an exotic double weapon or a spiked chain with both hands, the character can elect to use a full attack action to make a flurry of strikes.

When doing so, he may make one extra attack in the round at his full base attack bonus, but this attack takes a –2 penalty, as does each other attack made in that round and until the exotic weapon master's next turn.

The extra attack may be with either end of the double weapon.

Ranged Disarm: The character can make a disarm attempt even on a ranged attack.

Such an attack provokes no attack of opportunity (except as normal for using a ranged weapon).

For the purpose of this disarm attempt, treat the character's ranged weapon as a light weapon.

If the character fails this disarm attempt, the defender can't attempt to disarm him.

Show Off: As a standard action, the character can display his mastery with an exotic weapon and confound his opponent.

The character may make an Intimidate check against a single opponent within 30 feet that can see him, adding his base attack bonus to the result.

If the result exceeds the opponent's modified level check (see the skill description on page 76 of the Player's Handbook), the opponent becomes shaken (-2 penalty on attack rolls, ability checks, and saving throws) for 1 round per class level of the exotic weapon master.

Stunning Blow: If the character has the Stunning Fist feat, he can utilize the feat while wielding an exotic melee weapon.

Throw Exotic Weapon: The character can throw an exotic weapon with no penalty on the attack roll, even if it isn't designed to be thrown (such as an orc double axe or a spiked chain).

When he throws a double weapon, only one end of the weapon (character's choice) can strike the target.

Exotic weapons thrown in this way have a range increment of 10 feet.

Twin Exotic Weapon Fighting: When wielding the same light exotic weapon in each hand, the character is treated as having the Two-Weapon Fighting feat.

If he already has the feat, the penalties on attack rolls are lessened to -1 for both the primary hand and the off hand when fighting in this manner.

Trip Attack: The character can use a one-handed or two-handed exotic weapon to make a trip attack.

If he is tripped during his own trip attempt, he can drop the weapon to avoid being tripped.

If the exotic weapon already allows its wielder to make trip attacks, the character instead adds a +2 bonus on any trip attempt.

Uncanny Blow: When wielding a one-handed exotic melee weapon in two hands, the character can focus the power of his attack so that he deals extra damage equal to his Strength bonus $\times 2$ instead of his Strength bonus $\times 1-1/2$.

If he has the Power Attack feat, he treats the weapon as two-handed for purposes of determining his bonus on damage rolls.

EYE OF GRUUMSH

Most people think they have seen the worst that orcs can breed when an orc barbarian comes raging over a hilltop—until they see a one-eyed orc barbarian come raging over a hilltop.

This creature may well be an eye of Gruumsh, an orc so devoted to his evil deity that he has disfigured himself in Gruumsh's name.

In an epic battle at the dawn of time, the elven deity Corellon Larethian stabbed out Gruumsh's left eye. Filled with rage and hatred, the orc deity called for followers loyal enough to serve in his image.

Those who heed this call are known as the eyes of Gruumsh.

They sacrifice their right eyes instead of their left ones so that their impaired vision complements that of their deity. Thus, symbolically at least, eyes of Gruumsh can see what Gruumsh cannot.

These living martyrs are some of the toughest orcs and half-orcs in the world.

The eye of Gruumsh is a true prestige class in the sense that all orcs respect those who achieve it.

If a candidate proves capable with the orc double axe and has no moral code to stand in the way of his service, only the test remains—to put out his own right eye in a special ceremony.

This is a bloody and painful ritual, the details of which are best left undescribed.

If the candidate makes a sound during the process, he fails the test.

No consequences for failure exist, except that the candidate can never thereafter become an eye of Gruumsh—and he has lost an eye.

Barbarians gain the most value from this prestige class, since it encourages raging as a fighting style.

Fighters, clerics, rangers, and even rogues also heed this calling.

Some orc tribes whisper of barbarians from other races who have adopted this mantle.

Of course, these may just be legends meant to inspire young orcs to jealous rage.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an eye of Gruumsh, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Orc or half-orc.

Alignment: Chaotic evil, chaotic neutral, or neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (orc double axe), Weapon Focus (orc double axe).

Special: The character must be a worshiper of Gruumsh and must put out his own right eye in a special ritual.

None of the eye of Gruumsh's special abilities function if the character regains sight in both eyes.

CLASS SKILLS

The eye of Gruumsh's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the eye of Gruumsh prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Eyes of Gruumsh gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Blind-Fight: An eye of Gruumsh gains Blind-Fight as a bonus feat.

In addition, he suffers no adverse effects from the loss of one of his eyes.

Command the Horde (Ex): An eye of Gruumsh can direct the actions of any nongood orcs or half-orcs that are within 30 feet of him and whose Hit Dice are lower than his character level.

Those who follow the character's orders gain a +2 morale bonus on Will saves.

Any eligible orc or half-orc who willingly goes against the eye of Gruumsh's directions loses this bonus immediately.

Rage (Ex): An eye of Gruumsh can fly into a rage just as a barbarian can, with all the same benefits and drawbacks (see page 25 of the Player's Handbook).

An eye of Gruumsh's class levels stack with his barbarian levels (if any) for determining the number of times per day he can use his rage ability.

Add together the character's levels in the eye of Gruumsh and barbarian classes and refer to Table 3–3: The Barbarian on page 25 of the Player's Handbook to determine the number of rages per day.

For example, a 6th-level barbarian/2nd-level eye of Gruumsh could rage three times per day (the same as an 8th-level barbarian), while a 4th-level eye of Gruumsh with no levels in barbarian could rage twice per day (the same as a 4th-level barbarian).

Swing Blindly (Ex): An eye of Gruumsh's rage becomes more powerful when he reaches 2nd level, but at the cost of lowered defenses.

The character adds an extra +4 to Strength while in a rage, but his Armor Class penalty goes from –2 to –4.

Ritual Scarring (Ex): Through frequent disfigurement of his own skin, an eye of Gruumsh's natural armor bonus improves by +1 at 3rd level (or to +1 if he didn't already have a natural armor bonus).

This bonus increases by another +1 for every three eye of Gruumsh levels gained thereafter.

Blinding Spittle (Ex): An eye of Gruumsh of 4th level or higher can launch blinding spittle at any opponent within 20 feet.

With a successful ranged touch attack (at a –4 penalty), he spits his stomach acid into the target's eyes.

An opponent who fails a Reflex save (DC 10 + eye of Gruumsh's class level + eye of Gruumsh's Con modifier) is blinded until he or she can rinse away the spittle.

ORGANIZATION: THE EYES OF GRUUMSH

"The cycle of my father's people is a simple one. You kill, you get better at killing, and you kill again. Break the cycle, and you die."

—Krusk

Though orcs revere eyes of Gruumsh for their unique clarity of vision, the average eye of Gruumsh isn't particularly well qualified to think for an entire tribe—even though he often assumes leadership of a tribe early in his career. Thus, he relies on a cleric of Gruumsh for wise counsel. To discourage any unhealthy confusion among their followers about who is in charge, both the eye of Gruumsh and the cleric encourage war against other races at every opportunity.

Since eyes of Gruumsh seek to avenge Corellon Larethian's insult to their deity, most are so obsessed with the destruction of

FRENZIED BERSERKER

The random madness of the thunderstorm and the unpredictability of the slaadi come together in the soul of the frenzied berserker.

Unlike most other characters, she does not fight to achieve some heroic goal or defeat a loathsome villain.

Those are mere excuses—it is the thrill of combat that draws her.

For the frenzied barbarian, the insanity of battle is much like an addictive drug—she must constantly seek out more conflict to feed her craving for battle.

This attack has no effect on creatures that don't have eyes or don't depend on vision.

Blinding spittle is usable twice per day at 4th level and four times per day at 7th level.

Blindsight (Ex): At 5th level, an eye of Gruumsh gains blindsight (see page 306 of the Monster Manual) out to 5 feet.

The range increases to 10 feet at 8th level.

Sight of Gruumsh (Ex): At 10th level, an eye of Gruumsh gains the ability to see the moment of his own death through his missing eye.

This foreknowledge gives him a +2 morale bonus on all saving throws and Armor Class from then on.

He also does not go unconscious when reduced to negative hit points; however, the character still dies at –10 hit points. (Whether or not the vision is accurate is irrelevant—the character believes it to be true).

elves that they attack any elven community on sight. Inspired by their leaders' rage, other orcs often throw themselves heedlessly at elven hordes.

Multiple eyes of Gruumsh usually don't work well together because they commonly have competing ideas about which course of action serves their deity best. Every few decades or so, however, several eyes of Gruumsh get the same idea in their heads—a crusade! (After all, a holy crusade involving hundreds of tribes under the command of dozens of eyes of Gruumsh is just the thing to inspire the younger generation to the deity's service.) When this occurs, the eyes of Gruumsh meet and declare truces between competing tribes by closing their functional left eyes all at once—thus blinding them to their own bickering. Then they go out and try to eradicate some other kind of creature.

Along the wild borderlands and in the evil kingdoms of the world, frenzied berserkers often lead warbands that include a variety of character types—and even other frenzied berserkers.

Some such groups turn to banditry and brigandage; others serve as specialized mercenaries.

Whatever their origin, such warbands naturally gravitate toward situations of instability and conflict, because wars and civil strife are their bread and butter.

Indeed, the coming of a frenzied berserker is the most obvious herald of troubled times.

The frenzied berserker's path is unsuited for most adventurers—a fact for which the peace-lovers of the world can be thankful.

Because of their traditional love for battle, orc and half-orc barbarians are the ones who most frequently adopt this prestige class, though human and dwarf barbarians also find it appealing.

It might seem that elves would be good candidates because of their chaotic nature, but the elven aesthetic and love of grace are at odds with the frenzied berserker's devaluation of the self.

Spellcasting characters and monks almost never become frenzied berserkers.

NPC frenzied berserkers often lead tribal warbands or raiders made up of fighters, barbarians, or other martial characters.

Some fall in with humanoids and even giantish tribes, but not all frenzied berserkers turn their chaotic strength to evil.

A few have found homes in small villages or in rural areas, acting as members of the settlement's defenses.

Most people give even such well-intentioned frenzied berserkers a wide berth, however, and they often find themselves wandering as loners in the wilderness.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a frenzied berserker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Cleave, Destructive Rage*, Intimidating Rage*, Power Attack.

* New feats found in Chapter 3 of this book.

CLASS SKILLS

The frenzied berserker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the frenzied berserker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Frenzied berserkers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Frenzy (Ex): A frenzied berserker can enter a frenzy during combat.

While frenzied, she gains a +6 bonus to Strength and, if she makes a full attack action, gains a single extra attack each round at her highest bonus.

(This latter effect is not cumulative with haste or other effects that grant additional attacks).

However, she also takes a -4 penalty to Armor Class and takes 2 points of nonlethal damage per round.

A frenzy lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the frenzied berserker's Constitution modifier.

To end the frenzy before its duration expires, the character may attempt a DC 20 Will save once per round as a free action.

Success ends the frenzy immediately; failure means it continues.

The effects of frenzy stack with those from any rage ability the character may have.

At 1st level, the character can enter a frenzy once per day.

Thereafter, she gains one additional use per day of this ability for every two frenzied berserker levels she acquires (but she can't use the ability more than once in any encounter).

The character can enter a frenzy as a free action.

Even though this takes no time, she can do it only during her turn, not in response to another's action.

In addition, if she takes damage from an attack, spell, trap, or any other source, she automatically enters a frenzy at the start of her next action, as long as she still has at least one daily usage of the ability left.

To avoid entering a frenzy in response to a provoking effect, the character must make a successful Will save (DC 10 + points of damage taken since her last action) at the start of her next turn.

While frenzied, the character cannot use any Charisma-, Dexterity-, or Intelligence-based skills (except for Intimidate), the Concentration skill, or any abilities that require patience or concentration, nor can she cast spells, drink potions, activate magic items, or read scrolls.

She can use any feat she has except Combat Expertise, item creation feats, or metamagic feats.

She can use her special ability to inspire frenzy (see below) normally.

During a frenzy, the frenzied berserker must attack those she perceives as foes to the best of her ability.

Should she run out of enemies before her frenzy expires, her rampage continues.

She must then attack the nearest creature (determine randomly if several potential foes are equidistant) and fight that opponent without regard to friendship, innocence, or health (the target's or her own).

When a frenzy ends, the frenzied berserker is fatigued (-2 penalty to Strength and Dexterity, unable to charge or run) for the duration of the encounter.

If the character is still under the effect of a rage ability, the fatigued condition does not apply until the rage ends—at which point the character is exhausted, not merely fatigued.

Diehard: A frenzied berserker gains Diehard as a bonus feat even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

Supreme Cleave: At 2nd level and higher, a frenzied berserker can take a 5-foot step between attacks when using the Cleave or Great Cleave feat.

She is still limited to one such adjustment per round, so she cannot use this ability during a round in which she has already taken a 5-foot step.

Deathless Frenzy (Ex): At 4th level and higher, a frenzied berserker can scorn death and unconsciousness while in a frenzy.

As long as her frenzy continues, she is not treated as disabled at 0 hit points, nor is she treated as dying at -1 to -9 hit points.

Even if reduced to -10 hit points or less, she continues to fight normally until her frenzy ends.

At that point, the effects of her wounds apply normally if they have not been healed.

This ability does not prevent death from massive damage or from spell effects such as slay living or disintegrate.

Improved Power Attack: Beginning at 5th level, a frenzied berserker gains a +3 bonus on her melee damage rolls for every -2 penalty she takes on her melee attack rolls when using the Power Attack feat (or +3 for every -1 penalty if wielding a two-handed weapon other than a double weapon).

This benefit does not stack with the normal effects of Power Attack.

Inspire Frenzy (Su): Beginning at 6th level, a frenzied berserker can inspire frenzy in her allies while she herself is frenzied.

When she uses this ability, all willing allies within 10 feet of her gain the benefits and the disadvantages of frenzy as if they had that ability themselves.

The frenzy of affected allies lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the frenzied berserker's Constitution modifier, regardless of whether they remain within 10 feet of her.

A frenzied berserker gains one additional use of this ability per day for every two additional frenzied berserker levels she acquires, though the ability is still usable only once per encounter.

Greater Frenzy (Ex): Starting at 8th level, the character's bonus to Strength during a frenzy becomes +10 instead of +6.

Supreme Power Attack: A 10th-level frenzied berserker gains a +2 bonus on her melee damage rolls for every -1 penalty she takes on her melee attack rolls when using the Power Attack feat (or +4 for every -1 penalty if wielding a two-handed weapon other than a double weapon).

This benefit does not stack with the effects of Power Attack or Improved Power Attack.

Tireless Frenzy: A 10th-level frenzied berserker no longer becomes fatigued after a frenzy, though she still takes the nonlethal damage for each round it lasts.

GNOME GIANT-SLAYER

In every gnome community, only a select few individuals of extraordinary courage take up the mantle of giant-slayer. Relying on a combination of agility, combat prowess, and pure craftiness, the gnome giant-slayer is the bane of all creatures who use their size to terrorize the small or weak. The champion of those far-too-often trampled underfoot, the gnome giant-slayer stands far taller than his stature would suggest.

As the ultimate believers that "The bigger they are, the harder they fall", these doughty battlers actively seek out ogres, trolls, giants, and the like to slay.

Some also utilize their training to take on other immense opponents, such as umber hulks, monstrous vermin, and even dragons.

Most gnome giant-slayers are fighters or rangers, although some paladins and clerics also take up the path of giant slaying.

Rogues who favor looting the dens of ogres and the like also become giant-slayers.

Monks make excellent giant-slayers.

Arcane spellcasters rarely take up this class, since it largely depends on toe-to-toe interaction with immensely powerful creatures.

Gnome giant-slayer NPCs are often lauded as heroes or celebrities within gnome communities.

They might serve as captains of the guard, trainers, or in other positions of authority.

Some pass down their mantle from generation to generation, granting the bravest son or daughter a treasured nickname such as "Trollbane" or "Giant-Crasher".

Those who work for their own purposes might still enjoy some measure of popularity but prefer to remain aloof from political venues in favor of pursuing personal gain.

Of course, many look to adventure to prove their mettle; rare indeed is the gnome giant-slayer who hasn't bearded his share of trolls or fire giants in their very lairs.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a gnome giant-slayer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Escape Artist 3 ranks, Speak Language (Giant),

Tumble 3 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The gnome giant-slayer's class skills (and the key abilities for each) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the gnome giant-slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Gnome giant-slayers have proficiency with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Favored Enemy (Giant) (Ex): A gnome giant-slayer gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against giants.

He gets the same bonus on weapon damage rolls against giants.

This benefit stacks with the ranger favored enemy class feature if giant is the ranger's favored enemy.

This bonus increases by an extra +2 for every three gnome giant-slayer levels beyond 1st.

Crafty Fighter (Ex): At 2nd level, a gnome giant-slayer gains a +4 dodge bonus to his Armor Class against giants, or a +2 dodge bonus against any other (nongiant) creature at least two size categories larger than himself.

This benefit is lost in any situation in which the gnome giant-slayer would lose his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class. He also loses this bonus in heavy armor.

Slippery (Ex): If a gnome giant-slayer of 3rd level or higher is grappled by a creature at least two size categories larger than himself, he can add his gnome giant-slayer level as a bonus on any checks (whether grapple checks or Escape Artist checks) made to escape grappling.

In addition, a gnome giant-slayer can move through an area occupied by a creature two size categories larger than he is.

This doesn't apply against creatures that completely fill their area, such as a gelatinous cube.

(Normally, a character can only move through an area occupied by another creature if it is at least three size categories larger than the character).

Close Shot (Ex): At 5th level and higher, a gnome giant-slayer does not provoke attacks of opportunity from giants for using a ranged weapon while threatened by them.

Fast Movement (Ex): At 6th level, a gnome giant-slayer's base land speed increases by 10 feet.

This benefit applies only when he is wearing no armor, light armor, or medium armor and not carrying a heavy load.

Apply this bonus before modifying the giant-slayer's speed because of any load carried or armor worn.

Improved Mobility (Ex): At 8th level and higher, a gnome giant-slayer gains a +4 dodge bonus to his Armor Class when moving out of or within a giant's threatened area.

As with all dodge bonuses, this benefit stacks with the bonus granted by the Mobility feat.

Annoying Strike (Ex): Whenever a gnome giant-slayer of 9th level or higher damages a giant in melee, that giant is shaken for 1 round.

Defensive Roll (Ex): A 10th-level gnome giant-slayer can roll with a potentially lethal blow to take less damage from it than he otherwise would.

Once per day, when he would be reduced to 0 or fewer hit points by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow struck by a giant, not a spell or special ability), he can attempt to roll with the damage.

To use this ability, he makes a Reflex saving throw (DC = damage dealt; the gnome giant-slayer adds his class level as a bonus on this saving throw).

If the save succeeds, he takes only half damage from the blow; if it fails, he takes full damage.

He must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to execute his defensive roll—if he is denied his Dexterity bonus to AC, he can't use this ability.

Since this effect would not normally allow a character to make a Reflex save for half damage, the character's evasion or improved evasion ability (if applicable) does not apply to the defensive roll.

HALFLING OUTRIDER

The seminomadic culture of the halfling race often results in sudden encounters with peril.

To safeguard themselves, many halfling communities turn to their outriders, elite champions whose task it is to warn their fellows of, and protect them from, danger.

The halfling outrider is naturally skilled in the arts of riding and scouting.

Most halfling outriders are fighters, rangers, druids, or rogues.

All classes, however, can benefit from the Armor Class bonus and defensive riding capabilities of the class.

NPC halfling outriders are usually found performing their duties in the field, or relaxing in their off-duty hours.

The presence of an outrider whether afield or at rest usually indicates that a halfling community cannot be far away.

However, some outriders feel the pull of adventure more strongly.

These individuals leave behind their hearths and homes for a life of excitement on the road.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a halfling outrider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Halfling.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Listen: 3 ranks, Ride 6 ranks, Spot 3 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Mounted Archery.

CLASS SKILLS

The halfling outrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Handle Animal (Cha), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the halfling outrider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Halfling outriders gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

AC Bonus: A halfling outrider gains a dodge bonus to the character's Armor Class when she is mounted.

This benefit is lost in any situation in which the character would lose her Dexterity bonus to Armor Class.

Mount: A halfling outrider gains a mount appropriate to the resources of her halfling community.

Most halfling communities attempt to provide an out rider with a riding dog or a warpony.

A halfling outrider may, of course, choose to find and train or purchase a more exotic mount.

Standard tack and harness is also provided, though, again, the character may wish to purchase masterwork or magic gear.

Halfling outrider class levels stack with paladin, druid, and ranger levels for determining the characteristics of a paladin's mount or an animal companion.

Alertness: A halfling outrider gains Alertness as a bonus feat.

Ride Bonus: A halfling outrider gains a competence bonus equal to her class level on all Ride checks.

Defensive Riding (Ex): A halfling outrider of 2nd level or higher knows the tricks of defensive riding.

If she does nothing else while mounted (she cannot attack when riding defensively), she gains a +2 bonus on Reflex saves and a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class.

In addition, her mount gains a +20 ft. bonus to its speed, a +2 bonus on all Will saves, and a +4 dodge bonus to its Armor Class.

Unbroken Charge (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a mounted halfling outrider can charge through difficult terrain or squares occupied by friendly creatures by making a DC 15 Ride check.

Stand on Mount (Ex): At 4th level, a mounted halfling outrider becomes able to stand on her mount's back even during movement or combat, taking no penalties to actions while doing so, by making a DC 20 Ride check.

While standing on her mount's back, a halfling outrider does not take any penalty for using a ranged weapon while her mount is taking a double move or running (see the Mounted Archery feat description, page 98 of the Player's Handbook).

Leap from the Saddle (Ex): A halfling outrider of 5th level or higher can dismount and land adjacent to her mount as a free action by making a DC 20 Ride check.

If an opponent is in a square she threatens (after dismounting), she can make a melee attack against that opponent, taking a +2 bonus on the attack roll and a -2 penalty to Armor Class (just as if the character were making a charge).

This ability is usable only if the mount is moving no faster than twice its speed.

Evasion (Ex): At 7th level, a halfling outrider gains the evasion ability.

If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage.

Evasion can be used only if the halfling outrider is wearing light armor or no armor.

A helpless halfling outrider (such as one who is unconscious or paralyzed) does not gain the benefit of the ability.

While the halfling outrider is mounted, she confers this ability to her mount as well, and the mount is able to use the halfling outrider's Reflex save bonus or its own, whichever is higher.

If the character already has the evasion ability, she gains improved evasion instead, and her mount still receives the benefit of evasion as described above.

Improved evasion works like evasion, except that while the character still takes no damage on a successful Reflex saving throw, she takes only half damage on a failed save.

Full Mounted Attack (Ex): At 8th level and higher, a halfling outrider may make a full attack when her mount moves more than 5 feet but no more than a single move action.

The character cannot combine this full attack with a charge action.

Quick Turn (Ex): A 10th-level halfling outrider can make a DC 25 Ride check as a free action to force her mount to execute one change of direction during while running or charging (though the mount must still move at least 10 feet in a straight line after the turn to execute a charge).

The turn may be up to 90 degrees, and the mount may make only one such turn per round.

If the Ride check fails, the mount moves an extra 10 feet in a straight line and then loses the rest of its actions on this turn.

HULKING HURLER

Usually brutish and always incredibly strong, hulking hurlers belong to those races of generously proportioned creatures who enjoy nothing more than wrenching boulders, trees, or even buildings free of their earthly bonds and throwing them at their foes.

No one knows how this loose organization came into being, but there is no doubt that hulking hurlers make fearsome enemies.

Hulking hurlers usually come from the giant races, though a few members of other species learn the unusually focused skills of the organization.

Those few hulking hurlers who advance in other classes first almost always come from fighter or barbarian backgrounds.

NPC hulking hurlers sometimes serve as specialists in giant warbands, but they can also be found among smaller humanoids, serving the function of a sort of artillery unit.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hulking hurler, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (any thrown weapon).

Special: Large size or larger.

CLASS SKILLS

The hulking hurler's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hulking hurler. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hulking hurlers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Catch Weapon (Ex): A hulking hurler gains the Snatch Arrows feat even if he does not meet the prerequisites. He may catch weapons of his size or smaller (and hurl them back at the attacker immediately if he chooses).

Really Throw Anything (Ex): A hulking hurler gains the Throw Anything feat (described in Chapter 3 of this book) as a bonus feat.

However, since a hulking hurler depends on brute strength more than skill, he can throw anything (not just weapons) he can lift as a light load.

If the item is an improvised weapon, he takes a -2 penalty on his attack roll instead of the normal -4.

Use the rules in Chapter 4 of this book to determine the amount of damage the thrown weapon does.

The range increment of a thrown weapon or improvised weapon wielded by a hulking hurler is 10 feet + 5 feet per size category the hulking hurler is beyond Large (this is a modification of the Throw Anything feat).

Two-Handed Hurl Trick (Ex): At 2nd level and again at 3rd level, a hulking hurler chooses one of the following tricks.

In order to use any of these abilities, the hulking hurler must grip the weapon or improvised weapon in two hands and throw it as a full-round action.

Area Attack: The character makes an attack roll against a square the target creature occupies (AC 10) rather than the creature itself.

Any creature in the square must succeed on a Reflex save (DC 10 + the hulking hurler's ranged attack bonus) or take full damage.

This ability may only be used with a Huge or larger weapon.

Knockdown Blow: If the hulking hurler's attack hits and does damage to any creature of Medium or smaller size, the target is rendered prone.

Meteor Strike: As a full-round action, a hulking hurler deals extra damage equal to twice his Strength bonus on a successful hit with a thrown weapon.

Overburdened Heave: The hulking hurler can throw a weapon up to two sizes larger than his size category, or an item that weighs as much as his medium load (so a Large hulking hurler with a Strength score of 25 could heave a Gargantuan javelin or a rock weighing up to 533 pounds).

Ranged Power Attack: If the target is within 30 feet, the hulking hurler can use Power Attack with his thrown weapon.

HUNTER OF THE DEAD

The hunter of the dead is the hated enemy of all undead. She spends each restless night tracking undead to their lairs and cleansing the land of their foul presence.

The hunter of the dead has many tools with which to fight such creatures.

Her skill with arms is the match of any fighter's, but, to aid her in the hunt, she also possesses spells and special abilities that draw upon her connection with positive energy.

Most hunters of the dead are clerics or paladins.

Fighters, rangers, monks, druids, and barbarians also make excellent hunters of the dead, while rogues and bards add their subterfuge skills to create a foe that the undead never see coming.

Sorcerers and wizards—especially those with a few levels of cleric or paladin—have many advantages when fighting undead, so they should never be discounted as potential hunters of the dead.

As NPCs, hunters of the dead are quiet loners, driven to think of little but their cause.

They usually have some traumatic tale about what brought them to hate the undead, but few are willing to share it with those they meet as they wander from town to town.

In places where spirits are particularly restless and the dead walk in numbers, hunters of the dead gather in secretive orders such as the House of Death to pool their strength and attack their foes together.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hunter of the dead, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks.

Special: Able to turn undead.

Special: Scar of Unlife: The character must have lost one level or had an ability score point drained by an undead creature.

Even if the loss is later offset by magic, this is the scar of unlife that all hunters of the dead carry.

CLASS SKILLS

The hunter of the dead's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Search (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hunter of the dead prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hunters of the dead gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a hunter of the dead gains the ability to cast a number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, a hunter of the dead must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a hunter of the dead with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Hunter of the dead bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the hunter of the dead's Wisdom bonus (if any).

When the hunter of the dead gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level hunter of the dead), she gains only the bonus spells she would be entitled to based on her Wisdom score for that spell level.

The hunter of the dead's spell list appears below; she has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

A hunter of the dead prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though a hunter of the dead cannot lose a spell to cast a cure spell in its place).

Detect Undead (Sp): At will, a hunter of the dead can use detect undead as if casting the spell of the same name.

Smite Undead (Su): Once per day, a hunter of the dead of 2nd level or higher can attempt to smite undead with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Wisdom modifier (if positive) to her attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per level.

For example, an 8th-level hunter of the dead armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+8 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses for Strength and magical effects that normally apply.

If a hunter of the dead accidentally smites a creature that is not undead, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Note: A paladin/hunter of the dead can both smite evil and smite undead in the same day, potentially against the same target (if it's an evil undead).

Spurn Death's Touch (Ex): A hunter of the dead of 3rd level or higher applies her Wisdom modifier (if positive) as an additional bonus on all saving throws against effects and spells used by undead.

This bonus stacks with the Wisdom modifier already applied to Will saves.

True Death (Su): Undead slain by a hunter of the dead of 5th level or higher, either by melee attacks or spells, can never rise again as undead.

They are forever destroyed.

Extra Turning: At 6th level, a hunter of the dead receives Extra Turning as a bonus feat.

This benefit allows the hunter to turn undead four more times per day than normal.

It stacks with any turning ability the character has from another class.

Positive Energy Burst (Su): At the cost of two normal turning attempts, a hunter of the dead of at least 8th level can use a standard action to create a positive energy burst that deals 1d6 points of damage per class level to all undead creatures within 20 feet.

Undead are allowed a Reflex save (DC 10 + the hunter's class level + the hunter's Cha modifier) for half damage.

Sealed Life (Su): A 10th-level hunter of the dead cannot lose levels due to energy drain effects (although death still results in level loss, as do other level- or experience-draining effects).

HUNTER OF THE DEAD SPELL LIST

Hunters of the dead choose their spells from the following list:

1st Level: magic stone, magic weapon, cure light wounds, hide from undead, remove fear.

2nd Level: bull's strength, cure moderate wounds, continual flame, darkvision, lesser restoration, remove paralysis.

3rd Level: cure serious wounds, daylight, halt undead, protection from elements, searing light, speak with dead.

4th Level: cure critical wounds, death ward, disrupting weapon, freedom of movement, restoration.

INVISIBLE BLADE

Who is this fool who dares to challenge you in the arena?

You brandish a greatsword, and he whips out a dagger.

You unsheathe your longsword, and he throws off his armor.

You advance menacingly, and he only smiles at you—a big, maniacal grin.

Is he mad?

Does he have a death wish?

No, he is an invisible blade, and you have made the classic mistake of underestimating his prowess.

As you fight, he seems almost relaxed, stepping lightly to the side, dodging your blows easily.

His eyes note your every move, as though taking mental notes about your style.

Then, in the split second when you lower your guard, he exploits your error, plunging his weapon into your heart.

Invisible blades are deadly fighters who prefer to use daggers and related weapons in combat.

Their training and techniques with these weapons make them just as lethal as any well-armed fighter.

Invisible blades enjoy cultivating misconceptions about the level of danger they present, and they relish any chance to demonstrate that the most unimposing weapons can be the most lethal.

Thus, invisible blades are rarely impressed by how mighty their opponents appear.

An invisible blade specializes in fighting with the dagger, kukri, or punching dagger.

He is not penalized for using other weapons with which he is proficient, but every class ability he possesses is tied into using one of these three weapons.

The typical invisible blade was once a rogue, who chose this path because his sneak attack ability dovetailed nicely with the abilities of this prestige class.

Bards and monks are also good candidates, as are barbarians, fighters, and rangers who are willing to exchange their arsenals of weapons for a less cumbersome approach.

Clerics and druids seldom choose this class, perceiving its members as faithless, while paladins ironically view invisible blades as too self-absorbed.

Sorcerers and wizards rarely become invisible blades because they don't appreciate the class's lack of offensive options and tight focus on weapon use.

NPC invisible blades are silently egotistical gladiators who regard their fighting style as superior to all other martial philosophies.

They place enormous emphasis on making a single decisive strike, thereby hoping to end a bout in a single round. Most invisible blades pick up their skills in a guild. A few, however, learn from seasoned professionals who expect a potential gladiator to practice fanatically with the dagger until he can pass the required rite-of-passage combat (see Requirements, below).

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an invisible blade, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Sense Motive 6 ranks.

Feats: Far Shot, Point Blank Shot, Weapon Focus (dagger, kukri, or punching dagger).

Special: The candidate must defeat a worthy opponent in single combat using one or more daggers, kukris, or punching daggers in any combination as his only weapons.

CLASS SKILLS

The invisible blade's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the invisible blade prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Invisible blades gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Dagger Sneak Attack (Ex): An invisible blade gains the sneak attack ability (see the description of the dark hunter, earlier in this chapter) if he does not already have it, but the extra damage applies only to sneak attacks made with a dagger, kukri, or punching dagger (the DM may allow other similar weapons).

When making a sneak attack with one of these weapons, he deals an extra 1d6 points of damage at 1st level, and this increases to 2d6 at 3rd level and to 3d6 at 5th level.

If he already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the applicable bonuses on damage rolls stack.

Unfettered Defense (Ex): An invisible blade benefits from an increased survival instinct during combat.

Because of this sixth sense, he adds 1 point of Intelligence bonus (if any) per invisible blade class level to his Armor Class in addition to any other modifiers he would normally receive.

If the invisible blade is caught flat-footed or is otherwise denied his Dexterity modifier to Armor Class, he also loses this bonus.

Unfettered defense functions only when an invisible blade is not wearing armor and is armed with one or more daggers, kukris, or punching daggers as his only weapons.

Bleeding Wound (Ex): An invisible blade of 2nd level or higher who makes a successful dagger sneak attack can choose to deal a bleeding wound, sacrificing 1d6 points of the extra damage from the dagger sneak attack.

Such an attack deals damage as normal in the round when the attack hits.

Thereafter, the wound caused by the invisible blade's dagger bleeds for 1 point of damage per round.

Multiple wounds from the weapon result in cumulative bleeding loss (two wounds for 2 points of damage per round, and so on).

The bleeding can only be stopped by a DC 15 Heal check or the application of any cure spell or other healing spell (heal, healing circle, and so on).

Creatures immune to sneak attack damage are immune to bleeding wounds as well.

Uncanny Feint (Ex): At 3rd level, an invisible blade gains the ability to feint in combat (see page 68 of the Player's Handbook) as a move action rather than a standard action.

At 5th level, the character can feint in combat as a free action.

An invisible blade can use uncanny feint only when armed with a dagger, kukri, or punching dagger.

Feint Mastery (Ex): At 4th level, an invisible blade armed with a dagger, kukri, or punching dagger becomes so sure of his ability to mislead opponents that he can take 10 on all Bluff checks when feinting in combat (see page 68 of the Player's Handbook), even if stress and distractions would normally prevent him from doing so.

JUSTICIAR

Where there are laws, there are those who defy them, and where citizens live in fear of these lawbreakers, brave souls hunt them down.

These are the justiciars.

They don't do it for money; they don't do it for glory.

They do it because it's a thankless job that needs to be done. It also happens to be a satisfying vocation to make a living by kicking the daylight out of a criminal who desperately deserves it.

Justiciars are generally solitary, relying on their own wits and skills.

They are fearless and single-minded in pursuit of their prey and ruthlessly effective in combat.

Innocence and alibi can be argued in front of a court, but pretty words don't change the facts of the case or absolve a criminal of guilt.

A justiciar is not necessarily judge, jury, or executioner; often he simply sees to it that those people get the chance to do their jobs.

When it is impractical to bring a miscreant to the hands of the law, or if the criminal resists, a justiciar doesn't hesitate to bring final justice to someone who deserves it.

Some evil justiciars prefer torturing their prisoners into confessing before turning them in.

When faced with a difficult challenge, justiciars may team up with each other or with a posse of other characters to hunt those wanted by the law.

The presence of one or more justiciars in a posse might come as a rude surprise to a group of individuals that have been robbing from the rich to give to the poor...

Most justiciars begin as rangers.

Some paladins also find being a justiciar in line with their ideology.

Fighters often find enough reward in killing; bringing people back alive is typically more effort than they consider worthwhile.

Conversely, many clerics are too forgiving to be justiciars; obvious exceptions include clerics of St. Cuthbert, as well as those of Hextor and certain other lawful evil deities.

Rogues and bards, with their stealth-oriented skills, can be very effective in this class.

Even the occasional druid, sorcerer, or wizard (especially diviners) enters the field, wielding spells as their weapons instead of steel.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a justiciar, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Gather Information 5 ranks, Search 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Skill Focus (Gather Information), Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The justiciar's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the justiciar prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Justiciars gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Bring 'em Back Alive (Ex): Whenever a justiciar attacks with a melee weapon, he can deal nonlethal damage with the weapon instead of lethal damage with no penalty on the attack roll.

Normally, attempting to deal nonlethal damage with a weapon in this way incurs a -4 penalty on the attack roll.

Nonlethal Strike (Ex): A justiciar can make nonlethal strikes.

Any time the character uses the bring 'em back alive ability and his target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not) or when the justiciar flanks the target, the justiciar's attack deals an extra 1d6 points of nonlethal damage.

This extra damage increases to 2d6 at 4th level, 3d6 at 7th level, and 4d6 at 10th level.

Should the justiciar score a critical hit with a nonlethal strike, this extra damage is not multiplied.

A justiciar can use nonlethal strike only on a living creature with discernible anatomy—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures are not subject to this extra damage.

Also, creatures immune to nonlethal damage are immune to nonlethal strike damage.

The justiciar cannot make a nonlethal strike against a creature with concealment.

Improved Grapple (Ex): At 2nd level, a justiciar receives Improved Grapple as a bonus feat even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

Crippling Strike (Ex): A justiciar of 2nd level or higher can make a nonlethal strike against an opponent with such precision that his blow weakens and hampers the opponent.

When a justiciar damages an opponent with a nonlethal strike, that character also takes 1 point of Strength damage.

Exotic Weapon Proficiency (Manacles): Intimately familiar with the capture of criminals, justiciars have learned to do more with a pair of manacles than restrain a lawbreaker.

A justiciar of 3rd level or higher can swing a pair of metal manacles in one hand as if they were a club without taking a penalty for using an improvised weapon.

Masterwork manacles can be wielded as if they were a masterwork light flail.

Street Savvy (Ex): A justiciar of 3rd level or higher gains a circumstance bonus on Gather Information checks he attempts while in pursuit of a criminal.

This bonus is initially +2 at 3rd level, and increases by an extra +2 every third level thereafter.

Hog-Tie (Ex): When a justiciar of 5th level or higher successfully pins an opponent while grappling, he can attempt to hog-tie the opponent (in addition to his other options; see If You're Pinning an Opponent on page 156 of the Player's Handbook).

A justiciar must have a rope, chain, or manacles in one hand to use this ability.

A justiciar can use this ability on an opponent of up to one size category larger than he is (for example, a halfling justiciar can attempt to hog-tie a Medium or smaller opponent).

He can use the ability only against humanoid-shaped creatures (thus, most humanoids, monstrous humanoids, outsiders, and giants would qualify).

An attempt to hog-tie is resolved with an opposed check. The justiciar can make a Use Rope check instead of a normal grapple check, while the opponent makes either a grapple check or an Escape Artist check.

If the justiciar succeeds, the opponent is hog-tied.

If the opponent succeeds, the hogtie attempt fails and the grapple continues.

If a justiciar successfully hog-ties an opponent, that person is considered bound and helpless.

A bound opponent can attempt to escape by making an Escape Artist check opposed by the justiciar's Use Rope check (including his +10 bonus; see Bind a Character on page 86 of the Player's Handbook) or a Strength check (DC 23 for rope, DC 26 for chain or manacles, DC 28 for masterwork manacles) to break free.

Improved Hog-tie (Ex): A justiciar of 8th level or higher can make a hog-tie attempt without first pinning his opponent.

Whenever a grapple is established, the justiciar can use an attack action to make a hog-tie attempt.

Also, if the justiciar has the Quick Draw feat, he does not need to be holding the rope, chain, or manacles in his hand before making the attempt.

Intuition (Su): When hunting a specific person, a 10th-level justiciar can use a Survival check to determine in which direction the culprit might be found if the criminal is within 1 mile of the justiciar (DC 15 + target's HD). A justiciar can use this ability to determine the direction of anyone he has previously faced in combat if he or she is within range.

The DM should make this check secretly for the justiciar, since the character should not know if he failed the check because of the die roll or because the target is too far away. A justiciar can make this check once per day for any single target.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a justiciar may continue advancing as a paladin.

KENSAI

The kensai masters body, mind, weapon, and will.

He devotes his strength and his life to the service of a master or an ideal he accepts as greater than himself.

Some kensai become masters in their own right, but even one who becomes an emperor sees himself as a servant of some higher power.

Most characters who become kensai aspire to the class from the beginning of their careers.

Often, other kensai or elite military organizations train likely young men and women in the principles of service, the arts of war, and the purity of mind and body necessary to become a kensai.

Even those who do not qualify at the end often become powerful adventurers.

A kensai can be a lone adventurer, serving an ideal or attempting to fulfill a lifetime goal.

Some kensai swear fealty to great lords and rise to become trusted bodyguards, warlords, or leaders in the lord's service.

Monks and paladins know the strenuous road a kensai must travel, and some tread that path.

Fighters value the might of the kensai, and some clerics have been known to join their ranks.

Few wizards or sorcerers achieve kensai status, and bards and barbarians find themselves particularly unsuited to service as a kensai.

While it might be thought that a rogue would make a poor kensai, such characters are not unheard of and can be deadly adversaries.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a kensai, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Diplomacy 5 ranks, Ride 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Weapon Focus (any weapon).

Special: Must complete an oath of service (see sidebar) to either an overlord or an ideal.

CLASS SKILLS

The kensai's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local and nobility) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the kensai prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Kensai gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Signature Weapon (Su): The kensai chooses one of his weapons (it must be one for which he has the Weapon Focus feat) to become a signature weapon.

Most kensai choose either a sword or bow for this weapon, but even a kensai's natural weapons can be chosen.

If the weapon is a manufactured one, it must be of at least masterwork quality.

Upon qualifying for the class, a kensai gains the ability to establish a link with his signature weapon.

The character focuses part of his life energy on the weapon, making it more effective in his hands and his hands alone. The process for imbuing a signature weapon with power is a simple one.

The character must find a quiet, safe spot to meditate (and pray, for those kensai who serve deities) for 24 hours.

At the end of this meditation, the kensai sacrifices a number of experience points, essentially shifting some of his life force into his signature weapon.

The signature weapon then becomes a magic weapon (if it wasn't already) and gains an enhancement bonus and/or special abilities.

His current class level limits the amount of enhancement a kensai can place into his signature weapon.

A kensai cannot create a signature weapon if doing so would cost enough experience points to reduce his character level.

SIGNATURE WEAPONS

Class Level	Weapon Bonus	Minimum XP Cost ^{}
1st	+1	40
2nd	+2	160
3rd	+3	360
4th	+4	640
7th	+7*	1,960
8th	+8*	2,560
10th	+10*	4,000

* A weapon can't actually have an enhancement bonus higher than +5, but it can have special abilities that are the equivalent of additional bonuses. Use these lines on the table to determine the XP cost when special abilities are added to a signature weapon. Example: A 6th-level kensai who has a masterwork longsword can imbue it with the power to be a +5 keen longsword at a cost of 1,440 XP, since the keen special ability is equivalent to a +1 bonus.

 The XP cost presented here assumes that the weapon being imbued does not already have an enhancement bonus. If it does, the cost to imbue it with additional power is reduced. For instance, if a kensai has a +1 longsword and wants to imbue it with the power to be a +3 longsword, he may do so by paying the difference in XP cost between creating a +1 weapon and a +3 weapon (360 minus 40, or 320 XP).

Use the table on the previous page to determine XP costs and class level limits.

If the ritual is interrupted, it can be begun again at any time, but it must run for a full 24 hours for the signature weapon to be imbued.

The kensai pays the XP cost as soon as the ritual has been completed.

A kensai's signature weapon has a caster level equal to the character's class level + 10.

Imbuing Double Weapons: A double weapon may be imbued, but both ends of the weapon must be paid for and imbued separately.

Imbuing Natural Weapons: The process for imbuing a kensai's natural weapons (such as his fists) is the same as for a manufactured weapon, except all of the kensai's natural weapons of one type are imbued at 100% of the cost + 10% per natural weapon.

For example, a human kensai who has Weapon Focus (unarmed strike) may turn his fists into signature weapons for 120% of the XP cost.

A six-armed kensai with a bite and tail attack would have to choose between fists, bite, and tail and pay either 160% of the cost (for six fists) or 110% of the cost (for the single bite or tail).

A kensai who imbues a particular type of natural weapon must imbue all his natural weapons of that type (so a human kensai with two fists must imbue both fists).

It takes 24 hours for a kensai to imbue one type of natural weapon, regardless of how many actual weapons of that type he possesses.

Losing a Signature Weapon: If a kensai's signature weapon is lost or stolen, the character must strive to recover it by any means that do not violate his oath or alignment.

A kensai who knowingly abandons a signature weapon is treated as if he broke his oath of service (see the sidebar).

A kensai who abandons a signature weapon and atones for the deed can begin to create a new signature weapon.

If someone destroys a kensai's signature weapon, only the kensai can repair it.

If enough is left of the weapon to salvage (the shattered shards of a sword, for example), the kensai can reforge the weapon as if he were using the Craft (weaponsmithing) skill to make a masterwork weapon.

If he takes the reforged weapon and then meditates for 24 hours, he may pay the appropriate XP cost to restore his weapon to full strength.

Should nothing remain of the weapon, the kensai must begin anew with a weapon that has never before been imbued.

The character, however, has not failed in his oath—the destruction of a kensai's weapon in service of his oath is not shameful, and other kensai are likely to show even more respect to a comrade whose weapon is destroyed in oath-bound service.

Losing Natural Weapons: If a kensai loses his natural weapons (such as his fists), he may have them regrown by using regeneration or a similar spell.

In this singular case, the kensai does not need to spend any more XP or time to reimbue his signature weapon with power.

The link is direct enough that no extra effort is necessary. Power Surge (Ex): At 2nd level, a kensai gains the ability to make a DC 15 Concentration check as a move action to focus his energy and spirit.

If he succeeds, he gains +8 to his Strength for a number of rounds equal to one-half his class level.

Each time after the first that a kensai successfully uses this ability in a single 24-hour period, the check DC increases by 5.

Ki Projection: At 4th level and higher, a kensai adds one-half his class level (round down) to any Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, or Intimidate checks he makes.

At 8th level and higher, the kensai adds his full class level to such checks.

A target that realizes it has been fooled by a kensai's successful Bluff check gains a +10 bonus on any check or saving throw involving the kensai's use of Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, or Intimidate against that target in the future.

The kensai can regain the creature's trust by changing its attitude from unfriendly to friendly (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Withstand (Ex): When a kensai of 5th level or higher is forced to make a Reflex save to avoid damage from an area effect spell (such as a fireball), he can make a Concentration check instead of a Reflex save to resist taking full damage.

If a kensai has the evasion or improved evasion ability, those benefits apply on this Concentration check as well.

Instill (Ex): Once per day, a kensai of 8th level or higher may take a full-round action to make a Concentration check (DC 10 + target's HD or character level) to impart some of his own ability into a willing ally he can touch.

The kensai then transfers some of his power to the ally: He subtracts up to 1 point per class level from his base attack bonus and/or any or all of his base save bonuses and transfers the same amount to the recipient.

The kensai regains the instilled power 1 hour later, when it transfers back out of the ally.

If the ally dies before the instilled power is transferred back, the kensai must make a Fortitude save (DC 5 + target's HD or character level) or die as well.

If he succeeds, he immediately gets his instilled powers back.

Ki Warlord: When a kensai attains 10th level, he gains great notoriety and becomes known as a ki warlord.

Other kensai of the same alignment revere the ki warlord, and even those of differing alignments treat him with some measure of respect.

If the ki warlord has an NPC master, this master likely assigns the ki warlord more responsibility and authority within his domain (perhaps giving him a castle, monastery, or military school).

If the ki warlord serves a deity, that deity may take a personal interest in giving the ki warlord more responsibility, perhaps actually contacting the ki warlord directly or through intermediaries and making the deity's wishes known.

In addition to this added responsibility, a ki warlord gains some tangible benefits.

He has the right to petition other (lower-level) members of the prestige class for assistance on adventures or in the fulfillment of his oath.

As long as a ki warlord's requests do not violate the other members' own oaths of service or alignment, lower-level kensai have a responsibility to assist a ki warlord in any reasonable manner—such as providing food and shelter, access to minor resources, and other things another character might have to barter for.

Ki warlords inspire those around them.

When fighting within 30 feet of a ki warlord, allies gain a +1 morale bonus on Will saves, Concentration checks, and attack rolls.

Lawful allies gain a +2 morale bonus on these checks.

Multiclass Note: A samurai, paladin, or monk who becomes a kensai may continue advancing in his original class.

OATH OF SERVICE

A kensai's oath of service must be sworn in front of witnesses and must be upheld for the kensai to continue advancing in levels. Typical oaths include swearing service to a powerful lord of the kensai's alignment, to an organization with the same alignment and goals of the kensai, to the kensai's deity, or even to an ideal or principle the kensai upholds.

These oaths are not trivial, and prospective kensai who attempt to enter the prestige class with broad oaths or ones deliberately easy to fulfill find themselves spurned and cannot join the class at all, even if they meet the other requirements.

A kensai who breaks his oath, for whatever reason, loses access to his kensai special abilities and must receive an atonement spell from a cleric or druid of his alignment to get them back and to continue advancing in the kensai class. A kensai must also strictly adhere to his alignment. A kensai who intentionally and seriously violates his alignment also breaks faith and endures the same negative effects.

This dual requirement can pose a serious conundrum at times. If a lawful good kensai swears service to a lord who then orders the kensai to perform an evil act, the kensai is caught between his oath and his alignment. He must violate one to fulfill the other, and either way he needs to atone. If the kensai chooses his alignment, he can break his oath, gain atonement, and swear a new oath (often one relating to "correcting" his former lord). He can then advance as a kensai again. If the kensai chooses his lord, he changes alignment and must gain atonement from, in this case, an evil cleric.

A kensai who changes his alignment from lawful loses his kensai abilities and cannot advance further in this class until he gains atonement and switches his alignment back to lawful.

Fulfillment of the Oath of Service: If a kensai fulfills an oath of service, or if the terms of the oath no longer apply (for example, if a kensai swears service to a king who then dies of old age, or if a kensai swears to defeat an enemy power and then in the course of adventuring defeats it), the kensai must reflect and then swear a new oath. In general, a kensai can be "between oaths" for no more than one week per class level. A kensai who does not swear a new oath before the grace period expires is treated as if he broke his oath of service.

DM Note: The idea of the oath of service does not exist to punish a player who chooses to roleplay a kensai, but to challenge that player. The kensai is a powerful prestige class, and the oath of service is one of the costs that goes along with it. You should work with the player to come up with an oath that fits into your campaign—one that provides the player with roleplaying opportunities and you with a hook you can use to motivate the entire party.

KNIGHT OF THE CHALICE

A knight of the Chalice is a member of an elite knightly organization devoted to fighting demons and other evil outsiders.

Motivated by a pious hatred of these creatures that embody the principles of evil and routinely invade the Material Plane, knights of the Chalice learn tactics and gain special abilities to help them in their crusade.

A character who qualifies for entrance into the Order of the Chalice is typically a paladin/ranger or a cleric/ranger.

Characters with minimal levels as a ranger/cleric or ranger/paladin can qualify even if they have more levels in other classes—rogue, fighter, and even wizard or sorcerer.

Wizards and sorcerers are rarely drawn to the order's crusade, and cannot qualify as knights until reaching high levels.

Few monks or bards have enough dedication to exterminating demons to take up this class.

Knights of the Chalice are often lone crusaders, maintaining only loose connections to their order. NPC knights sometimes gather adventuring bands around themselves for combat support.

A knight of the Chalice could become a temporary ally of a group of adventurers while the party is engaged in a campaign against a demon.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a knight of the Chalice, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +8.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 10 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast divine spells, including protection from evil.

CLASS SKILLS

The knight of the Chalice's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the knight of the Chalice prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knights of the Chalice gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a knight of the Chalice gains the ability to cast a number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, a knight of the Chalice must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a knight with a Wisdom of 10 or lower can not cast these spells.

Knight of the Chalice bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the knight's Wisdom modifier.

When the knight gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level knight), she gains only the bonus spells she would be entitled to based on her Wisdom score for that spell level.

The knight of the Chalice's spell list appears below; he has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

A knight of the Chalice prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though a knight cannot lose a spell to cast a cure spell in its place).

Fiendslaying (Ex): Knights of the Chalice gain a number of special benefits in combat with evil outsiders.

A 1st-level knight of the Chalice gets a +1 competence bonus on attack rolls against evil outsiders.

On a successful attack, she deals an extra 1d6 points of damage due to her expertise in combating these creatures. These bonuses increase as the knight advances in level, as shown on Table 2-19.

A 1st-level knight of the Chalice's +1 competence bonus also applies to Intimidate, Listen, Sense Motive, and Spot checks when she uses these skills against evil outsiders. She gets the same bonus on Will saving throws against attacks from evil outsiders, and on opposed ability checks she makes against evil outsiders.

These bonuses all stack with the knight's favored enemy bonus (if any).

Censure Demons (Su): Knights of the Chalice can censure demons, much as clerics turn undead.

Rather than channeling positive energy, a knight of the Chalice channels energy from the celestial planes of lawful good.

When a knight of the Chalice uses this ability, any demon within 30 feet must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + the knight of the Chalice's class level + the knight of the Chalice's Cha modifier) or be censured.

A censured demon whose Hit Dice are equal to or greater than twice the knight's class level is stunned by the knight's holy power for 1 round.

If a censured demon has fewer Hit Dice than twice the knight's class level, it is stunned and must succeed on a second Will save (same DC) or be sent back to its home plane as if it had been the subject of a dismissal spell. Only one demon may be dismissed in this way by any single censure attempt; if more than one demon is required to make this second Will save, check for the demon with the lowest HD first.

A knight may attempt to censure demons once per day for every two class levels she possesses.

Courage of Heaven (Su): A knight of the Chalice of 2nd level or higher is immune to fear effects cast or created by evil outsiders.

At 5th level and higher, a knight of the Chalice is also immune to enchantment spells and effects cast or created by evil outsiders, including charms and suggestions.

At 8th level and higher, these immunities extend to all allies within 20 feet of the knight of the Chalice.

Consecrated Casting (Ex): When a knight reaches 4th level, spells cast by the character on evil outsiders become more difficult to resist.

When the knight casts a spell that targets an evil outsider, add +2 to the knight's caster level check to overcome the target's spell resistance and +2 to the DC of any saving throw the spell allows.

Holy Aura (Su): A 10th-level knight of the Chalice has the ability to create a holy aura once per day that affects herself only.

The aura's effect is as the spell cast by a 10th-level cleric, but it wards the knight against the attacks, spells, and mental influence of evil outsiders only, and only evil outsiders can be blinded if they strike the knight.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a knight of the Chalice may continue advancing as a paladin.

KNIGHT OF THE CHALICE SPELL LIST

Knights of the Chalice choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: bless water, bless weapon, detect chaos, detect evil, divine favor, doom, endure elements, magic weapon, protection from evil, remove fear, summon monster I.

2nd Level: aid, align weapon, bull's strength, consecrate, endurance, resist elements, sound burst, spiritual weapon, summon monster II, undetected alignment.

3rd Level: dispel magic, invisibility purge, magic circle against evil, magic vestment, prayer, protection from elements, searing light, shout, summon monster III.

4th Level: dimensional anchor, discern lies, dismissal, dispel evil, holy smite, greater magic weapon, lesser aspect of the deity, lesser planar ally.

KNIGHT PROTECTOR

The few, the proud, the knight protectors are martial characters dedicated to restoring the ideals of knightly chivalry before they fade forever.

The protectors see moral decay everywhere they look in the world around them, brought on by a lapse in ethical behavior.

Like paladins, knight protectors adhere to a rigid code of behavior that embraces such values as honor, honesty, chivalry, and courage.

Unlike paladins, the first duty of knight protectors is to this code and the ideals for which it stands, rather than to a deity or a holy order.

A protector is expected to display these ideals in all aspects of his behavior and throughout all his actions and deeds, however arduous they may be.

Many knight protectors come from backgrounds of honor and loyalty, such as other orders of chivalry or the service of a powerful master.

Paladins and ex-paladins are the most common knight protectors, and clerics of lawful deities (such as St. Cuthbert or Heironeous) as well as fighters seeking a higher ideal often find much to appreciate in the knight protector's code of conduct.

Members of most other classes, particularly spellcasters, lack either the interest or the dedication to pursue this path.

NPC knight protectors are often found wandering alone, looking for worthy people to protect or idealistic lords to serve.

What little bond or organization exists between knight protectors is extremely strong—whether a knight protector was once a baron, a lowly liegeman, or a samurai, each feels a kinship to his compatriots and a longing for better days.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a knight protector, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful neutral or lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 6 ranks, Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 4 ranks, Ride 6 ranks.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Cleave, Great Cleave, Mounted Combat, Power Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The knight protector's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the knight protector prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knight protectors gain proficiency with tower shields.

Defensive Stance (Ex): At the start of any turn when a knight protector is within 5 feet of an ally who has fewer Hit Dice than he does, the knight protector can transfer up to 2 points of Armor Class to the ally (making his own Armor Class worse by the same number).

The maximum number of points he can transfer increases by 1 for every three levels beyond 1st.

Shining Beacon (Su): A knight protector is the physical and spiritual embodiment of high ideals.

All his allies gain a +4 morale bonus on saves against fear effects when they stand within 10 feet of the character.

If the knight protector is paralyzed, unconscious, or otherwise rendered helpless, his allies lose this bonus.

Best Effort (Ex): The daunting nature of the knight protector's goals often requires special focus of effort.

Beginning at 2nd level, a knight protector gains a bonus on any one skill check he makes, once per day.

The character must declare that he is using this ability before he makes the skill check.

This bonus increases by 1 for every three levels beyond 2nd.

Iron Will (Ex): At 2nd level, a knight protector gains Iron Will as a bonus feat.

Supreme Cleave (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a knight protector can take a 5-foot step between attacks when using the Cleave or Great Cleave feat.

No Mercy (Ex): At 6th level, a knight protector gains the ability to make one extra attack of opportunity per round (as if he had the Combat Reflexes feat and a Dexterity modifier of +1).

At 9th level and higher, the character can make as many as two extra attacks of opportunity per round.

This benefit stacks with the benefit of the Combat Reflexes feat.

Retributive Attack (Su): If an ally of a 10th-level knight protector is rendered helpless or unconscious, the character can make a retributive attack against the creature that felled his ally.

When making a retributive attack, the knight protector adds his Charisma bonus (if any) to his attack roll and deals an extra 10 points of damage on a successful hit.

A knight protector can make a number of retributive attacks per day equal to his Charisma bonus (minimum one), but never more than one per round.

He may make more than one retributive attack against the same foe.

Multiclass Note: A paladin or samurai who becomes a knight protector may continue advancing in his original class.

EX-KNIGHT PROTECTORS

A knight protector who willingly and knowingly violates the code for no adequate reason loses all supernatural class features of the prestige class and may no longer advance in levels as a knight protector.

THE CODE OF THE KNIGHT PROTECTOR

A knight protector must be of lawful neutral or lawful good alignment, and must adhere to the order's code of conduct.

Support: The order supports its own. A knight protector can expect to receive room and board, as well as a mount with appropriate gear, from the order for as long as he remains in its ranks and adheres to the Code.

MASTER OF THE UNSEEN HAND

Masters of the unseen hand delight in crushing their foes with invisible force, flinging massive objects into the sky, and disarming enemies with a single thought.

Their mastery of the craft of telekinesis makes masters of the unseen hand potent and versatile combatants.

Originally a cabal of sorcerers who learned to push the limits of their telekinesis, the masters of the unseen hand are now a loose-knit group that includes outsiders and other creatures with the ability to use telekinesis.

Sorcerers are the most likely characters to become masters of the unseen hand, and some wizards take a level or two in the class as well.

A significant minority of the order are creatures with the innate ability to use telekinesis, such as githyanki, ghosts, beholders, and even the occasional demon.

Because their abilities are suited to warfare, masters of the unseen hand are often found in the thick of the fighting, disarming opponents with telekinesis and using it to hurl them to the ground—or even high into the sky.

Some hire themselves out as mercenaries, attaching themselves to a group of mid-level fighters who want to catch their foes by surprise.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of the unseen hand, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast the telekinesis spell, or access to telekinesis as a spell-like or supernatural ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of the unseen hand's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

The Code:

Courage and enterprise in obedience to the order.

Defense of any mission unto death.

Respect for all peers and equals; courtesy to all lessers.

Combat is glory; battle is the true test of self-worth; war is the flowering of the chivalric ideal.

Personal glory above all in battle.

Death before dishonor.

All of the following are class features of the master of the unseen hand prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of the unseen hand gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Improved Caster Level (Ex): At 1st level, a master of the unseen hand begins his relentless focus on the power of telekinesis.

He adds his levels in master of the unseen hand to his caster level (whether from actual spellcasting levels or determined by the spell-like ability) when using his telekinesis ability.

For example, a 10th-level sorcerer/3rd-level master of the unseen hand casts telekinesis as a 13th-level caster, and a blue slaad who is a 2nd-level master of the unseen hand would use its telekinesis spell-like ability as a 10th-level caster.

Versatile Telekinesis (Ex): A master of the unseen hand learns to combine the three versions of the telekinesis spell or ability, switching from one to another as he likes.

For instance, he can use sustained force for 2 rounds, then switch to combat maneuver, then return to using sustained force.

The spell or spell-like ability ends after the first use of the violent thrust version, however, or if the master of the unseen hand is unable to maintain concentration.

Telekinetic Wielder (Ex): A master of the unseen hand develops the ability to wield weapons with his telekinetic power.

By maintaining concentration on the combat maneuver version of telekinesis, a master of the unseen hand of 2nd level or higher can make a single attack with an unattended weapon or one he is holding, moving the weapon up to 20 feet before the attack.

Resolve the attack as normal, except that the weapon's movement doesn't provoke attacks of opportunity.

The master of the unseen hand's base attack bonus on this attempt is equal to his caster level plus his Intelligence modifier (if a wizard) or Charisma modifier (if a sorcerer or a creature with the telekinesis supernatural or spell-like ability).

Any weapon-related feats the master of the unseen hand has (such as Weapon Focus and Power Attack) do not apply when he's telekinetically wielding a weapon.

The weapon wielded can be one the master of the unseen hand took from a foe on a successful disarm attempt.

Sustained Concentration (Ex): At 2nd level, a master of the unseen hand becomes adept at moving and fighting while maintaining his telekinesis ability.

It only takes a move action, not a standard action, to use the sustained force version of telekinesis (or simply to maintain concentration so the ability doesn't end).

The master of the unseen hand can even cast another spell while maintaining concentration on telekinesis, but doing so requires a successful Concentration check as if the caster were distracted by a nondamaging spell (Concentration check DC equal to the save DC of telekinesis).

It still takes a standard action to use the combat maneuver or violent thrust versions of the ability, however.

Full Attack Telekinesis (Ex): At 3rd level, a master of the unseen hand is as skilled in telekinetic combat as a fighter is with melee combat.

When using the combat maneuver version of telekinesis or wielding a weapon telekinetically, the master of the unseen hand can make a full attack, potentially attacking, bull rushing, disarming, grappling, or tripping more than once per round.

Just as with nontelekinetic attacks, the master of the unseen hand gains an additional attack for every 5 points of base attack bonus above +1 (using caster level for base attack bonus as described in the telekinesis spell description).

Improved Violent Thrust (Ex): At 4th level, a master of the unseen hand's violent thrust version of telekinesis becomes more effective.

He uses his caster level in place of his base attack bonus when making the attack roll, and he uses his Intelligence modifier (if a wizard) or Charisma modifier (if a sorcerer or a creature with the telekinesis supernatural or spell-like ability) as a bonus on damage rolls if he hurls weapons at the target.

Finally, using a violent thrust no longer ends the telekinesis effect, but the master of the unseen hand can't make another violent thrust for 1d4 rounds.

Telekinetic Flight (Ex): A master of the unseen hand of 4th level or higher can use the sustained force version of telekinesis to lift himself and willing creatures into the air. With a move action, the master of the unseen hand can move 20 feet with perfect maneuverability and can move willing creatures as well.

The master of the unseen hand doesn't have to move all the creatures he's lifting in the same direction, but any lifted creatures plummet to the ground if they move more than 40 feet from the master of the unseen hand.

The master of the unseen hand can lift one Medium or smaller creature (carrying up to its maximum load) per three caster levels.

A Large creature counts as two Medium creatures, a Huge creature counts as two Large creatures, and so forth.

Unlike the form of flight granted by the fly spell, telekinetic flight ends immediately and abruptly if disrupted by dispel magic or a lapse in the master of the unseen hand's concentration.

Without telekinesis to support them, creatures fall to the ground immediately, taking 1d6 points of damage per 10 feet fallen (maximum 20d6).

Fling Skyward (Ex): Rather than hurling a creature toward another target, a 5th-level master of the unseen hand can use the violent thrust version of telekinesis to hurl a creature straight up.

A target is allowed a Will save (and spell resistance) to negate the effect.

The master of the unseen hand can lift a creature into the air a maximum distance of 10 feet per caster level.

At the beginning of the character's next action, the creature falls to the ground, taking 1d6 points of damage per 10 feet fallen.

Unlike other times when a master of the unseen hand uses the violent thrust version of telekinesis, flinging a foe skyward immediately ends the telekinesis effect.

MASTER THROWER

"Only a master thrower would invent a new style of fighting that involves cleverly disarming herself".

That's how many more traditional weapon masters think of master throwers.

Indeed, many master throwers see those who dabble in thrown weapons the same way.

If a character tosses away a hand axe, javelin, or dagger, he may end up facing his foe with bare hands.

Unless one is a monk, one should avoid that situation at all reasonable costs.

Master throwers depend on quick reflexes, good planning, and, of course, deadly aim to survive in a world that values brute strength over clever tactics.

Members of this prestige class establish a camaraderie that often overshadows alignment or cultural differences.

This camaraderie won't prevent two master throwers from fighting each other if the need arises, but it does give those individuals an incentive to find peaceful—or at least nonlethal—ways of settling their differences.

Some orders have developed sigils or small signs they can use to identify their members.

Common sigils include a hand gripping a dagger by its point, or a whirling handaxe on a field of blue.

Many master throwers make phantom throwing motions with their hands as they enter combat, watching their opponents to see if they return the sign.

NPC master throwers like to frequent cities and towns where they can demonstrate their abilities for others and pick up new tricks or pointers from specialists with different weapons.

Since such demonstrations can be made against nonliving targets or in sport hunting, master throwers are often welcomed at fairs and celebrations, where they use their abilities to entertain.

Some master throwers find service in the city guard or as personal protectors of the very rich.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master thrower, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Sleight of Hand 4 ranks.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot, Weapon Focus (any thrown weapon).

CLASS SKILLS

The master thrower's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master thrower prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Master throwers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Quick Draw: At 1st level, a master thrower gains the Quick Draw feat.

Thrown Weapon Trick (Ex): At 1st level and every two levels thereafter, a master thrower chooses one of the following thrown weapon tricks.

Once chosen, the trick is a permanent part of the master thrower's repertoire and may not be exchanged.

A master thrower cannot choose the same trick more than once.

Each trick may only be used with a thrown weapon for which the character has taken Weapon Focus.

Deadeye Shot: The critical multiplier for any specific type of thrown weapon increases by one (for example, a hand axe has a critical multiplier of $\times 4$ instead of $\times 3$) when this ability is used.

The benefit of this ability does not stack with any other effect that increases critical multipliers.

Defensive Throw: If a master thrower with this ability succeeds on a Concentration check (DC 10 + number of threatening foes) before attempting to attack with a thrown weapon while in a threatened square, her thrown weapon attacks don't provoke attacks of opportunity for 1 round. If the check fails, her opponents get attacks of opportunity as normal when she makes her attacks.

Doubletoss: A master thrower with this ability may, as a standard action, throw two weapons at one or two targets within 30 feet.

The character may apply her full Strength bonus to each weapon (instead of one-half her Strength bonus for the off-hand weapon).

The normal penalties for fighting with two weapons apply (see page 160 of the Player's Handbook).

Palm Throw: When using little thrown weapons (darts, shuriken, and daggers; the DM may allow other weapons), a master thrower with this ability may throw two of each weapon with a single attack roll.

Damage for each weapon is resolved separately, but the master thrower does not apply her Strength bonus to either damage roll.

Sneaky Shot: Just before making a ranged attack, a master thrower with this ability can use a move action to make a Sleight of Hand check opposed by her target's Spot check. If she wins the opposed check, her opponent is denied his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class against the attack.

Trip Shot: A master thrower with this ability may use a thrown weapon to make a trip attempt against an opponent farther than 5 feet away.

The character makes a normal attack against the opponent with a thrown weapon.

If the attack succeeds, in addition to doing damage as normal, the master thrower makes a Dexterity check with a +4 bonus opposed by the opponent's Dexterity check or Strength check (whichever ability score has the higher modifier).

Other modifiers may apply on this opposed check (see page 158 of the Player's Handbook).

If the master thrower wins the opposed check, the opponent is tripped.

The benefit of this ability does not stack with the benefit of the Improved Trip feat.

Tumbling Toss: When wearing light, medium, or no armor, a master thrower with this ability can hurl a single thrown weapon at any point during a tumbling attempt as a standard action.

If the result of her Tumble check is 25 or higher, the master thrower does not provoke an attack of opportunity for making this attack regardless of how many opponents threaten her.

Two with One Blow: If a master thrower with this ability uses a thrown weapon to attack two opponents adjacent to each other, she may take a -4 penalty on the attack roll and attempt to hit both opponents at once.

The attack may hit either, both, or neither opponent depending on the roll and the Armor Class of each opponent.

Damage for each opponent is resolved separately.

If the attack roll results in the threat of a critical hit, roll to confirm each critical hit separately.

Weak Spot: A master thrower can gain this ability only after reaching 5th level.

When using a thrown weapon against a target of her size or larger, the character can make a ranged touch attack instead of a normal attack.

If the attack hits, the master thrower does not apply her Strength bonus to the damage.

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level, a master thrower gains the evasion ability.

If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage.

Evasion can be used only if the master thrower is wearing light armor or no armor.

A helpless master thrower (such as one who is unconscious or paralyzed) does not gain the benefit of the ability.

If the character already has the evasion ability, he gains improved evasion instead.

Improved evasion works like evasion, except that while the character still takes no damage on a successful Reflex saving throw, she takes only half damage on a failed save.

Snatch Arrows: A master thrower gains the benefit of the Snatch Arrows feat at 4th level, even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

Critical Throw (Ex): At 5th level, a master thrower gains the Improved Critical feat for any thrown weapon with which she has Weapon Focus.

MINDSPY

Success in combat relies on anticipating your enemy's every move.

A mindspy knows how easy that can be if you're privy to your foe's every thought.

By reading the minds of her enemies, a mindspy knows exactly what they're going to do a fraction of a second before they do it.

Eventually she learns to probe deeper, finding weak spots in her enemy's training.

Because the class relies utterly on detect thoughts, most mindspies are creatures who have it as a spell-like or supernatural ability usable at will, such as couatls, succubi, doppelgangers, ghaeles, myrmarchs, leonals, mind flayers, dark nagas, rakshasas, and green slaadi.

Spellcasters sometimes take levels in the prestige class if they can cast detect thoughts frequently, or if they have a helm of telepathy to enable the mindspy's class features.

The most often encountered mindspies are elite mind flayer or doppelgangers.

There is rumored to be a secretive order of couatl mindspies that roams the planes, hunting down evildoers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mindspy, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast the detect thoughts spell or to use detect thoughts as a spell-like ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The mindspy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the mindspy prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mindspies gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Anticipate (Su): Because she is reading her foe's thoughts, a mindspy knows where she needs to block and how she needs to dodge before an attack from the foe arrives.

In addition, a mindspy can detect weak points in a foe's defense by observing her enemy's thoughts.

At 1st level, a mindspy can add 1 point of Charisma bonus (if any) per mindspy class level as a bonus to her Armor Class against attacks from a foe whose surface thoughts she is detecting (if the normal 3 rounds passes and the target fails its Will save) as well as an insight bonus on attack rolls against any foe whose surface thoughts she is detecting. If a mindspy is caught flat-footed or is otherwise denied her Dexterity bonus, she also loses this insight bonus to her Armor Class.

Combat Telepathy (Su): By reading her opponents' surface thoughts, a mindspy can anticipate their every move. She can make a Concentration check (DC 10 + damage taken during the previous round) at the beginning of her turn.

If the mindspy succeeds, she can maintain concentration on detect thoughts as a free action.

If the mindspy casts a spell or uses another spell-like ability, detect thoughts ends.

Spherical Detect Thoughts (Su): A mindspy can widen the area of her detect thoughts spell or ability into a sphere centered on her, rather than a cone.

The radius of the sphere is equal to the length of the cone.

Faster Mindscan (Su): By 2nd level, a mindspy has become adept at tuning into others' thoughts quickly.

In the round when she activates detect thoughts, she detects the presence or absence of thoughts and the Intelligence score of each thinking mind in the area.

In the next round, she detects the surface thoughts of any one mind in the area.

Multiple Surface Thoughts (Su): A mindspy of 3rd level or higher can simultaneously detect the surface thoughts of any two creatures who fail their Will saves.

This means that she gains anticipate bonuses against both of them.

Once per round as a free action, she can choose new minds to listen in on.

At 5th level, a mindspy can simultaneously detect the surface thoughts of four creatures.

Instant Mindscan (Su): At 4th level and higher, a mindspy can enter her enemies' minds at the speed of thought. She gains all the information from detect thoughts (presence or absence of minds, Intelligence scores, and surface thoughts) in the same round when she activates the spell or ability.

The mindspy's enemies still get Will saves to keep their surface thoughts secret.

NATURE'S WARRIOR

Nature's warriors are defenders of the wild, protectors of the natural world...and often druids who have spent "too much time" in wild shape form.

Members of this prestige class share a bond that transcends race and outside appearance.

When a character gains the ability to naturally shift into the form of a "lower animal", she sometimes gains a perspective on life that makes her envy this adopted form over her own.

She may simply feel a stronger tie to nature while in animal (or elemental) form, or perhaps she longs for the power such forms give her.

Certainly she begins to develop her abilities while in wild forms at the expense of the shape she was born in.

Many people consider nature's warriors to be loners or fanatics, even less a part of the world than the most solitary druid or ranger.

Nature's warriors, however, tend to be very communal. They often communicate with each other—sometimes through animal messengers, or even face to face, when they can bring themselves to leave their territories—and they keep a careful watch on "civilization".

Nature's warriors develop their animalistic instincts more strongly than the behavior associated with societal learning, and do have a tendency to come off as gruff or impatient with those who are not as "in tune" with nature as themselves.

It is not uncommon for a nature's warrior to spend days or even weeks in a single animal or elemental form, or to shift from form to form regularly, without returning to whatever humanoid form she started with.

Virtually all nature's warriors begin as members of the druid class, but some members of other prestige classes or creatures with the wild shape ability have adopted this class.

Many more militant druids—those with levels in fighter, barbarian, or ranger—find this class ideal for their purposes.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a nature's warrior, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 2 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Special: Wild shape ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The nature's warrior class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the nature's warrior prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Nature's warriors gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every even-numbered level gained in the nature's warrior class, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

If the character did not belong to a divine spellcasting class before attaining 2nd level in the prestige class, she gains a druid spellcasting level.

In no case, however, does she gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained, except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a nature's warrior, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Nature's Armament (Su): Upon attaining an odd-numbered level in this prestige class, a nature's warrior may choose one of the following abilities.

These abilities, unless otherwise noted, are only applicable while the nature's warrior is in wild shape form.

Armor of the Crocodile: The nature's warrior's natural armor bonus is improved by +1 per class level.

This is an actual improvement, not an enhancement bonus.

Blaze of Power: While in fire elemental form, the nature's warrior is covered in a blaze of power, which functions as a warm fire shield at a caster level equal to her druid level (if any) plus her nature's warrior level.

Claws of the Grizzly: The nature's warrior gains a +3 bonus on damage when using her natural weapons.

Earth's Resilience: The nature's warrior gains damage reduction 3/–.

Nature's Weapon: The nature's warrior gains a +1 enhancement bonus on attack rolls when using her natural weapons, and her attacks are treated as magic weapons for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Robe of Clouds: While in air elemental form, the nature's warrior may as a free action wreath her body in mist and clouds for 1 minute per class level (or until she dismisses the effect).

This gives her concealment, though it does not affect her ability to see or act at all.

Serpent's Coils: When in the form of a creature that normally has the improved grab ability, the nature's warrior gains a +4 bonus on all grapple checks and does damage equal to 1d8 + her Strength bonus after winning an opposed grapple check.

Water's Flow: To use this ability, the nature's warrior must be able to use wild shape to take the form of an elemental.

Three times per day as part of a move action, the character may transform her body into a flowing rush of water.

She may move at her base land speed while in this form but does not provoke attacks of opportunity while doing so.

She may do nothing but move while in this form.

At the end of her move, she immediately changes back into whatever form she was in prior to activating this ability.

She may use this ability while not in wild shape form.

Wild Growth: The nature's warrior gains fast healing 1.

Wings of the Hurricane: If the nature's warrior is in an avian form or air elemental form, she increases her base fly speed by 30 feet and improves her maneuverability by one category (thus good maneuverability becomes perfect).

Wilding (Su): Nature's warrior class levels stack with druid levels (as well as levels in other prestige classes that allow these abilities to stack) to determine wild shape abilities and for wild empathy checks.

For example, a druid 8/nature's warrior 3 would be considered an 11th-level druid for purposes of wild shape size, type, and frequency (she could assume wild shape form 4/day and could become a Tiny creature). She would add +11 for her class levels (instead of +8) to her wild empathy checks against animals and certain magical beasts.

TABLE 2-24: THE NATURE'S WARRIOR

OCCULT SLAYER

The occult slayer is driven to confront any arcane or divine spellcaster who crosses her path.

Occult slayers believe that mortals are too irresponsible to wield magic, and that those who dare to do so must be slain. Spellcasters who become occult slayers are considered to have seen the error of their ways—although they may still cast spells, they rely primarily on their battle prowess and their ability to resist magical effects to defeat their enemies. The occult slayer comes into her own through exhaustive training.

Every regimen she performs is an exercise that refines her anger against spellcasters into martial skill.

Each occult slayer forms a preternatural bond with her masterwork weapon of choice, which serves as the instrument of her vengeance.

This prestige class is ideal for individuals who have been victimized by spellcasters and seek acceptable ways to oppose them.

Most occult slayers begin their careers as fighters, although barbarians and rangers often take this path as well.

Monks and rogues have also been known to embrace this calling, but bards and paladins find the occult slayer's preoccupation with spellcasters stifling.

Clerics, druids, sorcerers, and wizards—the primary targets of occult slayers—tend not to adopt this prestige class, although such turnarounds are not without precedent. NPC occult slayers seldom form organizations, because they have discovered that congregating in one place attracts spellcasters intent on making preemptive strikes against them.

Instead, occult slayers discreetly meet from time to time to exchange information about spellcasting opponents they have targeted for matches.

Otherwise, the occult slayer operates alone, traveling between venues in search of matches that involve spellcasters.

Because of the inherent discretion that occult slayers display, a candidate for this prestige class must be chosen and trained by another occult slayer who is willing to share her secrets.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an occult slayer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Spellcraft 3 ranks.

Feats: Improved Initiative, Weapon Focus (any weapon).

CLASS SKILLS

The occult slayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the occult slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Occult slayers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and all armor and shields.

Magical Defense (Ex): An occult slayer's constant training in countering magic of all types manifests itself as a bonus on saving throws against spells or spell-like abilities.

This bonus is +1 at 1st level, and it increases to +2 at 3rd level and to +3 at 5th level.

Weapon Bond (Su): An occult slayer must choose a particular weapon of at least masterwork quality as the focus of her power.

Upon making her selection, she immediately forms a bond with the chosen weapon that imbues it with the force of her hatred for spellcasters.

Thereafter, any successful attack she makes with that weapon against a spellcaster or a creature with spell-like abilities deals an extra 1d6 points of damage.

If this particular weapon is lost or destroyed, the occult slayer loses the ability to deal the extra damage until she acquires and bonds with another weapon of the same kind of at least masterwork quality.

The occult slayer must spend one day per character level practicing with the replacement weapon (and doing very little else—no adventuring) to create a new weapon bond.

Mind over Magic (Su): Starting at 2nd level, an occult slayer can cause a spell or spell-like ability targeted against her to rebound onto the originator as a free action. This ability otherwise functions as the spell turning spell (caster level equals the character's occult slayer level + 5). An occult slayer can use this ability once per day at 2nd level and twice per day at 4th level.

Vicious Strike (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, an occult slayer who readies an attack action to disrupt a spellcaster deals double damage if the attack hits.

Auravision (Su): At 3rd level, an occult slayer gains the ability to see magical auras at a range of up to 60 feet as a free action.

This ability otherwise functions as the detect magic spell. The character cannot use this ability to determine anything but the number of magical auras present.

Nondetection Cloak (Su): Upon reaching 4th level, an occult slayer (and any gear she wears or carries) becomes more difficult to locate through divinations such as clairaudience/clairvoyance, locate object, and other detection spells.

The occult slayer gains magical protection from divinations equivalent to a nondetection spell (caster level equals the character's occult slayer level), except that it affects only the occult slayer and her possessions.

Blank Thoughts (Ex): At 5th level, an occult slayer can induce within herself a state of mental absence, thereby becoming immune to mind-affecting effects (charms, compulsions, patterns, phantasms, and morale effects). She can suppress or resume this ability as a free action.

TABLE 2-25: THE OCCULT SLAYER

ORDER OF THE BOW INITIATE

When asked, “What is Truth?”, an initiate of the Order of the Bow picks up his bow, fires an arrow and, without saying a word, lets his mastery of the weapon serve as the gauge of the archer’s progress along the way.

By learning the meditative art of the Way of the Bow, the archer improves his discipline, precision, and spirituality. Order of the Bow initiates see their weapons as extensions of their being, and the use of a bow as a spiritual experience.

Fighters are the most common initiates of the Order of the Bow.

Rangers, paladins, and even barbarians utilize these skills and philosophies as well.

Some rogues and bards have been known to enter the order, but they are rare indeed.

NPC initiates are most often encountered teaching others the ways of archery or wandering the lands looking for true challenges for their skill.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an Order of the Bow initiate, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Craft (bowmaking) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot, Rapid Shot, Weapon Focus (longbow, shortbow, or the composite version of either).

CLASS SKILLS

The Order of the Bow initiate’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Order of the Bow initiate prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Order of the Bow initiates gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Ranged Precision (Ex): As a standard action, an initiate may make a single precisely aimed attack with a ranged weapon, dealing an extra 1d8 points of damage if the attack hits. When making a ranged precision attack, an initiate must be within 30 feet of his target.

An initiate’s ranged precision attack only works against living creatures with discernible anatomies.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits (including undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures) is not vulnerable to a ranged precision attack, and any item or ability that protects a creature from critical hits (such as armor with the fortification special ability) also protects a creature from the extra damage.

Unlike with a rogue’s sneak attack, the initiate’s target does not have to be flat-footed or denied its Dexterity bonus, but if it is, the initiate’s extra precision damage stacks with sneak attack damage.

Treat the initiate’s ranged precision attack as a sneak attack in all other ways.

The initiate’s bonus to damage on ranged precision attacks increases by +1d8 every two levels.

An initiate can only use this ability with a ranged weapon for which he has taken the Weapon Focus feat.

Close Combat Shot (Ex): At 2nd level, an initiate can attack with a ranged weapon while in a threatened square and not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Greater Weapon Focus (Ex): At 4th level, an Order of the Bow initiate gains the Greater Weapon Focus feat with a single ranged weapon for which he has taken the Weapon Focus feat even if he has not attained 8th level as a fighter.

Sharp-Shooting: At 6th level, an initiate gains the Sharp-Shooting feat (see Chapter 3 of this book) even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

Extended Precision (Su): A 10th-level Order of the Bow initiate’s senses and feel for “the shot” become so attuned that he may make ranged precision attacks (and sneak attacks, if he has the ability) at a range of up to 60 feet.

PURPLE DRAGON KNIGHT

The famous Purple Dragons are regarded across the land as exemplars of disciplined, skilled, loyal soldiers.

Their reputation is deserved partly because of the heroic actions of their leaders, the Purple Dragon knights.

Purple Dragon knights develop uncanny skills related to coordinating and leading soldiers.

Most are fighters, rangers, or paladins, but a few bards, clerics, and rogues have been known to become Purple Dragon knights.

Sorcerers and wizards tend to join the War Wizards, an elite brigade of fighting spellcasters allied with the Purple Dragons, while barbarians are too undisciplined, and druids and monks “lack the commitment” to measure up to the Purple Dragons’ exacting standards.

In general, NPC Purple Dragon knights are responsible for leading the Purple Dragons on and off the battlefield.

Player character knights either are retirees, special liaisons to the army, or recipients of honorary titles.

A character’s level in this prestige class is irrelevant to his rank in the military, although higher-ranked knights tend to be of higher level.

It is not necessary to have this prestige class to serve in the Purple Dragons at large, or even to be an officer in their ranks.

Likewise, a Purple Dragon knight might serve her entire career on “detached duty”, away from the unit as a whole.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Purple Dragon knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good, neutral good, lawful neutral, or neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 1 rank or Intimidate 1 rank, Listen 2 ranks, Ride 2 ranks, Spot 2 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Negotiator.

Special: Membership in the Purple Dragons.

CLASS SKILLS

The Purple Dragon knight’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (local) (Int), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Purple Dragon knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Purple Dragon knights gain proficiency with tower shields.

Heroic Shield (Ex): A Purple Dragon knight can use the aid another action to give an ally a +4 circumstance bonus to Armor Class instead of the normal +2.

Rallying Cry (Su): Up to three times per day as a free action, a knight can utter a powerful shout that causes all allies within 60 feet to gain a +1 morale bonus on their next attack roll and increases their speed by 5 feet until the knight’s next turn.

Traditionally, this mind-affecting ability is used when a formation of soldiers is about to charge.

Inspire Courage (Su): This ability, gained at 2nd level, has the same effect as the bard ability of the same name.

The knight makes an inspirational speech, bolstering her allies against fear and improving their combat abilities. To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the knight speak.

The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the knight speak and for 5 rounds thereafter.

While speaking, the knight can fight but cannot cast spells, activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls), or activate magic items by magic word (such as wands).

Affected allies receive a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

At 2nd level, a knight may use this ability once per day; at 4th level, she may use it twice per day.

Fear (Su): Once per day as a standard action, a knight of 3rd level or higher can evoke a fear effect (DC 10 + the knight’s class level + the knight’s Cha modifier) as the spell fear, using her class level as the caster level.

Her allies are immune to the effect.

Oath of Wrath (Su): Once per day as a free action, a knight of 4th level or higher can select a single opponent within 60 feet and swear an oath to defeat him.

For the duration of the encounter, the knight has a +2 morale bonus on melee attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saving throws, and skill checks made against the challenged target.

The effect is negated immediately if the knight uses a full-round action to move away from the challenged opponent.

Final Stand (Su): Once per day, a 5th-level Purple Dragon knight can inspire his troops to a heroic effort, temporarily increasing their vitality.

All allies within 10 feet of the knight gain 2d10 temporary hit points.

This ability affects a number of creatures equal to the knight’s class level + her Charisma modifier and lasts an equal number of rounds.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a Purple Dragon knight may continue advancing as a paladin.

RAGE MAGE

At first, it seems like a contradiction—an arcane spellcaster that “loses herself” in a blind fury.

Yet, the rage mage makes for an interesting case, since her approach to magic is based on the primal passion of magic more than the studious quasi-scientific approach.

The rage mage prestige class is sure to enliven any campaign, because it raises fascinating questions on the true nature of magic and magic use.

But don’t ask the rage mage to answer those questions herself—she’s not interested in the “why”, only the results. A rage mage taps into the primal essence of magic, using her own natural anger and frenzy to channel the arcane power in flashy, flamboyant ways.

Like the barbarian, the rage mage is often the product of a less civilized society.

All rage mages must have at least some background as a barbarian (or some other class that grants a rage or frenzy ability), as well as training as a wizard, sorcerer, or—very rarely—a bard.

Rage mage NPCs are usually found working with barbarians.

They tend to shy away from traditional spellcasters and avoid the colleges and guilds where such individuals usually gather.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a rage mage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Feat: Combat Casting.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Special: Rage or frenzy ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The rage mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the rage mage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Rage mages gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every even-numbered level gained in the rage mage class, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

In no case, however, does she gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained, except for an increased effective level of spellcasting (but see spell rage, below).

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a rage mage, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Spell Rage (Ex): A rage mage can cast spells while in a rage, as long as the spell's casting time is no more than 1 full round.

When she casts a spell of the abjuration, conjuration, evocation, necromancy, or transmutation school while in a rage, the rage mage uses her character level as her caster level.

This ability only works when the rage mage is in a spell rage.

While in a spell rage, a rage mage becomes reckless and loses her some of her ability to defend herself.

She temporarily takes a -2 penalty to Armor Class.

She can attempt Concentration checks to avoid having a spell disrupted, but can't use any other Charisma-, Dexterity-, or Intelligence-based skills (except for Balance, Escape Artist, Intimidate, and Ride) while in a spell rage. A fit of rage lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the character's Constitution modifier.

A rage mage can end her rage voluntarily.

At the end of the rage, the character is fatigued (-2 Strength, -2 Dexterity, can't charge or run) for the duration of the current encounter (unless the rage mage is 10th level, when this limitation no longer applies).

A rage mage can only fly into a rage once per encounter, and only a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Entering a rage takes no time itself, but a rage mage can only do it during her action, not in response to somebody else's action.

Overcome Spell Failure (Ex): At 2nd level, a rage mage learns to ignore some of the restrictive nature of armor.

Her arcane spell failure chance when wearing light or medium armor decreases by 10%.

Rage (Ex): A rage mage can enter a rage one additional time per day at 3rd level and another time per day at 8th level.

Angry Spell (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, when a rage mage casts a spell of the abjuration, conjuration, evocation, necromancy, or transmutation school while raging, the save DC for the spell increases by +2.

At 10th level, this increase becomes +4.

Spell Fury (Sp): Upon reaching 7th level, a rage mage can quicken one spell of 4th level or lower (as if she had used the Quicken Spell feat), but without adjusting the spell's level or casting time.

She may use this ability once during each rage.

Tireless Rage (Ex): At 9th level and higher, a rage mage no longer becomes fatigued at the end of her rage.

Warrior Cry (Sp): A 10th-level rage mage may scream out a cry once per day as a free action on her turn and gain the benefit of the Tenser's transformation spell, with one exception: She does not lose her spellcasting ability for the duration of this effect.

The rage mage's caster level for the purpose of this effect is equal to her character level.

RAVAGER

Feared by many and understood by few, the infamous ravager is an individual who has dedicated himself to the service of Erythnul, deity of slaughter.

Living a life of violence and savagery, the ravager seeks to spread this deity's malignant influence wherever he goes, never resting long in one place, lest the forces of good and law pursue him.

Ravagers who come from the ranks of fighters and barbarians find that the ravager's offensive capabilities enhance their combat skills, while wizard, sorcerer, cleric, and druid ravagers find that their ability to cause terror in their foes is a very useful defensive measure. Ravagers spend much of their time with others of their kind, roaming the land in small, close-knit warbands, striking unsuspecting communities without warning, and retiring back into the wilderness to plan their next terrible raid.

Sometimes the clergy of Erythnul commands a lone ravager to undertake some mission or project that obliges the ravager to join up with other individuals, but such alliances are usually temporary and must be managed carefully, lest they lead to quarrels or worse.

NPC ravagers are usually encountered in small warbands of from two to six individuals, but sometimes a lone ravager may be encountered when undertaking a special mission. All ravagers are readily identified by the bizarre and fearsome facial tattoos they wear to mark themselves as Erythnul's instruments.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a ravager, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic evil or neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 3 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feats: Improved Sunder, Power Attack.

Special: Must survive the ravager initiation rites (see the sidebar).

CLASS SKILLS

The ravager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Int), and Ride (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ravager prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ravagers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Pain Touch (Su): Erythnul teaches that life is pain, and so is the touch of a ravager.

A ravager can make an unarmed touch attack that deals 1d8 points of damage + 1 point per ravager level.

Weapon attacks also transmit the pain of Erythnul, but only at the rate of 1d4 extra points of damage + 1 point per ravager level.

RAVAGER RITES

Individual ravagers are often perceived as dangerous loners but, in actuality, each belongs to a tight-knit warband. The initiation of a potential ravager into a warband (and into the prestige class) is brutally violent.

When a prospective member approaches a warband and makes his intention to join known, the ravagers' standard tactic involves attacking him en masse. The warband's lowest-ranked members (usually anywhere between six to sixteen warriors, rogues, or fighters with individual levels between 2nd and 6th) come out first and try their best to kill the newcomer. Should the newcomer survive an arbitrary period of time (usually between 3 and 10 rounds, depending on how well the newcomer appears to be fighting and the cruelty or interest of the

The ravager can make one additional pain touch attack for every three levels beyond 1st.

Aura of Fear (Su): Enemies within 10 feet of a ravager of 2nd level or higher take a -2 morale penalty on all saving throws for as long as they remain within range.

This ability is usable a number of times per day as given on the table.

Each use lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the ravager's Charisma modifier.

The range of this aura increases at 5th level to 20 feet, and then again at 8th level to 30 feet.

Crudest Cut (Ex): When a ravager reaches 3rd level, his familiarity with pain and fear grant him a cruel precision with his melee attacks.

The character must declare he is making a crudest cut attempt before he makes a melee attack (thus, a failed attack roll ruins the attempt).

If he strikes successfully, he deals 1d4 points of Constitution damage to the target, in addition to any other damage the attack may cause.

A ravager can use crudest cut once per day for every three levels he has attained, but may only make one crudest cut attempt per round.

Visage of Terror (Sp): A 10th-level ravager has plumbed the true depths of horror and hopelessness.

Once per day, he can trigger a spell-like ability similar to the arcane spell phantasmal killer (save DC 10 + the ravager's class level + the ravager's Cha bonus) as a standard action.

To the foe the ravager selects, he seems to take on the visage of what the target fears most.

In all other respects, this ability functions as the spell described in the Player's Handbook.

TABLE 2-29: THE RAVAGER

warband's leader), he is allowed to join the warband.

Should the newcomer actually want to progress in the ravager prestige class, he must undergo a second rite: the fire sacrifice. The candidate waits on his knees, praying to Erythnul (or a similar deity) to fill his heart with hate and malice. Other members of the warband acquire a suitable sacrificial victim (preferably human, but in a pinch any humanoid will do). The would-be ravager must sacrifice the victim in accordance with the unholy rites of the deity, which always involve bloodletting followed by burning the sacrifice alive. Following this cruel and horrific act, the warband applies a distinctively repulsive set of tattoos to the applicant's face that forever marks him as a true ravager. Once the ceremony is complete, the only way to leave the warband is to die.

REAPING MAULER

Truly wise adventurers are always wary of unarmed opponents, for such adversaries are usually more than they seem.

Such an opponent might even be a reaping mauler—the worst nightmare of a character who depends on weapon skills to win.

Anyone who dares to wield a weapon against a reaping mauler had better make use of it quickly, because the opportunity won't last long.

Reaping maulers are the back-breakers, the limb-twisters, and the neck-snappers among pit fighters.

Grapplers of the highest order, they wear nothing heavier than light armor in combat to maximize their flexibility, and they use no weapons to achieve their gruesome victories, for they prefer the intimacy of a barehanded kill. A reaping mauler wants to be close enough to taunt his opponent with whispers while crushing the life out of it, to smell its fear, and to watch the despair creep over its face when the opponent realizes just how useless its weapons are during a grapple.

Most of those attracted to the reaping mauler prestige class are fighters, but it is not uncommon for barbarians or rangers to embrace this path.

Monks have natural ability in this direction, but the class sometimes feels too chaotic for such a character.

Paladins and clerics have also been known to dabble in this prestige class, treating the combat style as both good, hearty sport and a means to render opponents unconscious without killing them.

Druids sometimes become reaping maulers to enhance their ability to tame animals by hand, and even rogues occasionally adopt the class.

Bards, sorcerers, and wizards usually lack the physical strength to be good candidates for the class, but they respect reaping maulers for their obvious spell-disrupting abilities.

NPC reaping maulers are burly, rowdy individuals who carry themselves with an air of invulnerability.

When it comes to the simple pleasures of life—drink and food—they believe the world exists for their convenience. In a reaping mauler's mind, there is no problem that can't be solved with brawn.

If something can be taken by force, he feels that it must naturally belong to him, and rarely does anyone openly oppose this concept.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a reaping mauler, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Escape Artist 5 ranks, Tumble 5 ranks.

Feats: Clever Wrestling*, Improved Unarmed Strike.

Special: The candidate must have defeated at least three opponents one size category larger than himself with his bare hands.

* New feat found in Chapter 3 of this book.

CLASS SKILLS

The reaping mauler's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the reaping mauler prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Reaping maulers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Improved Grapple (Ex): When wearing light armor or no armor, a reaping mauler gains the benefit of the Improved Grapple feat, even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

Mobility (Ex): When wearing light armor or no armor, a reaping mauler gains the benefits of the Mobility feat, even if he does not meet the prerequisites.

Adept Wrestling (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a reaping mauler who is wearing light armor or no armor gains a +1 bonus on all grapple checks and opposed Dexterity or Strength checks.

This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level.

Counter Grapple (Ex): When grappling or pinned, a reaping mauler of 3rd level or higher wearing light armor or no armor can attempt either a grapple check or an Escape Artist check opposed by his opponent's grapple check to free himself as normal.

If he fails the check he has chosen, he can immediately attempt the other check as a free action.

Sleeper Lock (Ex): At 3rd level, a reaping mauler learns how to render an opponent unconscious with pressure.

If the character pins his opponent while grappling and maintains the pin for 1 full round, the opponent must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + the reaping mauler's class level + the reaping mauler's Wis modifier) at the end of the round or fall unconscious for 1d3 rounds.

A creature with no discernible anatomy has immunity to this effect.

Devastating Grapple (Ex): If a 5th-level reaping mauler pins his opponent while grappling and maintains the pin for 3 consecutive rounds, the opponent must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + the reaping mauler's class level + the reaping mauler's Wis modifier) at the end of the third round or die. A creature with no discernible anatomy is immune to the effect of this ability.

RONIN

When a samurai or other noble warrior is exiled from the service of his feudal lord, he may become a ronin—a masterless warrior cast adrift in the world, but still clinging to the remnants of his former life.

Blade in hand, a ronin wanders from job to job, trying to stay one step ahead of his enemies—and the shame of his past.

The vast majority of ronin were once samurai; both game rules and theme tie the two classes together.

As with the samurai class presented in Chapter 1 of this book, the ronin prestige class has its roots in feudal Japan, but it's an appropriate choice in any campaign world that includes an Asian-themed culture.

"Ronin" is Japanese for "wave-man", and ronin tend to be inveterate wanderers.

Even if an Asian setting isn't an important part of your campaign, a ronin character may be a traveler from a distant land, eager to put his dishonor behind him and live out his days in a land where no one knows the code of bushido. Ronin are often found in the pay of less scrupulous feudal lords.

Because they are trained in the art of war, they are prized as mercenaries.

Those who hire a ronin should watch their employee closely.

Almost every ronin has a failure of honor in his past; most involve a conflict with their former masters.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a ronin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (bastard sword).

Special: Must have fled or been exiled from the service of a feudal lord, commonly for disobeying orders, displaying rudeness or cowardice at a crucial juncture, or failing in a crucial task.

CLASS SKILLS

The ronin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ronin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ronins gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Infamy: The ronin's reputation for dishonor—deserved or not—follows him everywhere.

Whenever someone in a position of authority has heard of the ronin's past (usually through a DC 10 Gather Information or Knowledge [nobility and royalty] check), that person's attitude starts one category worse than usual, and the ronin takes a -4 circumstance penalty on all Charisma-based checks involving that person.

The infamy penalty applies only if the authority figure knows the ronin's identity, so some ronin adopt pseudonyms or secret identities.

Sneak Attack (Ex): If a ronin can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for an extra 1d6 points of damage. This extra damage increases by 1d6 points every third level (+2d6 at 4th level, +3d6 at 7th level, +4d6 at 10th level).

For complete details on the sneak attack ability, see the description of the dark hunter earlier in this chapter.

Banzai Charge (Ex): The ronin has cast away the code of bushido and at least a measure of his own honor, but his heart still remembers the thrill of bravery.

When a ronin of 2nd level or higher charges into battle, he can accept a variable penalty to his Armor Class and take an equivalent bonus on the damage roll.

The normal -2 AC penalty for charging still applies and counts toward the bonus, but the ronin cannot accept a penalty smaller than -2 or larger than his base attack bonus. For example, a 2nd-level ronin making a banzai charge could take a -8 penalty to AC in exchange for a +8 bonus on the damage roll.

Bonus Feat: The ronin's experience in battle has taught him many tricks and techniques.

At 5th and 9th level, a ronin may choose one feat from the following list: Far Shot, Improved Precise Shot, Manyshot, Mounted Archery, Mounted Combat, Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot, Rapid Shot, Ride-By Attack, Shot on the Run, Spirited Charge, Trample.

The ronin must still meet all the prerequisites for the bonus feat.

FORMER SAMURAI

Ronins who possess levels of samurai (that is to say, are now ex-samurai) regain some of their lost class features the more levels of samurai they possess; refer to the accompanying table for details.

High-level ronins retain much of their bushido training, even if fate has dealt them a treacherous blow.

TABLE 2-31: THE RONIN

1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Infamy, sneak attack +1d6

EX-SAMURAI RONIN ABILITIES

Samurai

Level Regained Abilities

1st–5th	The ronin regains any kiai smite class feature he once possessed as a samurai, and can use it just as any samurai can.
6th–10th	As above, plus the ronin regains any staredown class feature (staredown, mass staredown, improved staredown) he once possessed as a samurai, using it just as he did before he became an ex-samurai.
11th+	As above, plus an ex-samurai of this stature immediately gains a ronin level for each level of samurai he trades in. For example, a character who has thirteen levels of samurai can immediately become a 10th-level ronin with all abilities if he chooses to lose ten levels of samurai. The character level of the character does not change. However, with the loss of samurai levels, the character might lose some of the class features granted by the samurai class. Thus, an ex-samurai of 14th level could become a 4th-level ronin/10th-level samurai, but would lose the improved two swords as one, kiai smite 3/day, and improved staredown class features.

SPELLSWORD

The dream of melding magic and weaponplay is fulfilled in the person of the spellsword.

A student of both arcane rituals and martial techniques, the spellsword gradually learns to cast spells in armor with less chance of failure.

Moreover, he can cast spells through his weapon, bypassing his opponent's defenses.

Despite the class's name, a spellsword can use any weapon or even switch weapons.

"Spellaxe", "spellspear", and other appellations for this prestige class are certainly possible but not commonly used. The requirements for this prestige class make it most attractive to multiclass wizard/fighters or sorcerer/fighters, although bard/fighters can meet the requirements just as easily.

Fearing by other martial characters because of his ability to use spells, and feared by spellcasters because of his ability to cast those spells while wearing armor, a spellsword often walks the world alone.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spellsword, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks.

Feats: Proficiency with all simple and martial weapons and with all armor (heavy, medium, and light).

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Special: Must have defeated a foe through force of arms alone, without recourse to spellcasting.

CLASS SKILLS

The spellsword's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Knowledge (Int), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int). Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the spellsword prestige class.

Spells per Day: At every odd-numbered level, a spell sword gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), save for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a spellsword, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Ignore Spell Failure (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, a spell sword's hard work and practice at merging spellcraft with weaponplay starts to pay off.

As an extraordinary ability, he ignores a portion of the arcane spell failure chance associated with using armor.

This reduction starts at 10% and gradually increases to 30%, as shown on the class table.

A spellsword subtracts the given percentage value from his total spell failure chance, if any.

For instance, a character wearing scale mail and carrying a small shield normally has a spell failure chance of 30%, but this drops to only 20% for a 1st-level spellsword.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level, a spellsword advances his art, gaining a bonus feat.

This bonus feat must be either a metamagic feat or one drawn from the list of bonus feats allowed to a fighter (see Table 5–1 on page 90 of the Player's Handbook).

Channel Spell (Sp): At 4th level, a spellsword can channel any spell he can cast into his melee weapon.

Using this ability requires a move action, and the spellsword uses up the prepared spell or spell slot just as if he had cast the spell.

The channeled spell affects the next target that the spell sword successfully attacks with his weapon (saving throws and spell resistance still apply).

Even if the spell normally affects an area or is a ray, it affects only the target.

The spell is discharged from the weapon, which can then hold an other spell.

A spellsword can channel his spells into only one weapon at a time.

Spells channeled into a weapon are lost if not used in 8 hours.

Multiple Channel Spell (Sp): A 10th-level spellsword can channel two spells into his melee weapon, using a move action to channel each one.

Both channeled spells affect the next target the spellsword successfully attacks with his weapon, in the order the spells were placed into the weapon.

As with the channel spell class feature, saving throws and spell resistance apply normally.

Each time a spellsword uses multiple channel spell, two of his five channel spell uses per day are expended.

STONELORD

Dwarves know more secrets about stone than anyone. They live and die among the stones, and the earth whispers to them—or at least to select individuals.

These special dwarves are known as stonelords.

They use their connection with the earth to draw from the infinite reserves of power within it to help them perform amazing feats.

Fighters are the most common stonelords, although dwarf paladins and rangers adopt the mantle as well.

Though uncommon, dwarf rogues, clerics, and even the occasional wizard or sorcerer become stonelords.

NPC stonelords work in dwarven communities as protectors and leaders.

Occasionally they work in groups, but even then, their varied backgrounds and chosen powers make them all very different.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stonelord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Craft (stoneworking) 6 ranks, Speak Language (Terran).

Feats: Endurance.

Special: The character must undergo an arduous ritual involving immersion in sacred loam, long fasting periods deep underground, and the ingestion of 1,000 gp worth of powdered gemstones.

The gem type chosen is then the stonelord's totem gem, and she must carry that type of stone with her at all times to access the spell-like abilities she gains as a stonelord.

CLASS SKILLS

The stonelord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stonelord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stonelords gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Earth's Blood (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord can take a standard action to heal her own wounds using a clump of mud.

This ability heals a number of hit points equal to 1d8 + her stonelord class level.

Stone Power: At every even-numbered level, a stonelord can choose one ability from the following list of stone powers.

No stone power can be chosen more than once.

Unless otherwise noted, the stonelord uses her class level as the caster level for these effects (the save DCs are Constitution-based).

Using one of these abilities is a standard action unless otherwise noted.

Earthgrip (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord with this ability can use hold monster on any target touching the ground.

If the opponent is airborne or waterborne, the stonelord cannot affect the creature with the spell.

Earth Magic (Su): Once per day, a spell cast by a stonelord with this ability (assuming she can cast spells) is considered maximized as if prepared with the Maximize Spell feat, although the spell's level is unaffected.

The spell's level cannot be higher than the class level of the stonelord.

Using this ability is a free action.

Earth's Endurance (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord with this ability grants herself a boost to her Constitution score as if she were affected by a bear's endurance spell for 1 hour.

Earth's Strength (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord with this ability grants herself a boost to her Strength score as if she were affected by a bull's strength spell for 1 hour.

Earth Power (Su): Once per day, all melee attacks made in a single round by a stonelord with this ability gain a +2 bonus on the attack roll and deal an extra 2d6 points of damage on a successful hit.

Using this ability is a free action.

Earth Shadows (Su): Once per day per class level, a stonelord with this ability can create a figment of a Medium earth elemental that appears in a flanking position adjacent to the stonelord's opponent for 1 round.

This ability allows the stonelord to make flanking attacks (+2 to hit, can make a sneak attack if such ability is available) against that opponent during that round.

Using this ability is a free action.

Gravity (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord with this ability can use a slow effect (as the spell).

Stoneskin (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord with this ability can give herself the benefit of a stoneskin spell (caster level equal to the stonelord's class level).

The character must provide the material component as if she were actually casting the spell.

Summon Earth Elemental (Sp): Once per day, a stone lord with this ability can summon an earth elemental as if she had cast a summon monster spell.

The size of the summoned earth elemental depends on the stonelord's class level, as follows: 1st–3rd, Small; 4th–6th, Medium; 7th–9th, Large; 10th, Huge.

Stone Shape (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord of 3rd level or higher can use a stone shape effect (caster level equal to the stonelord's class level).

Meld into Stone (Sp): Once per day per class level, a stonelord of 5th level or higher can use a meld into stone effect (caster level equal to the stonelord's class level).

Stone Tell (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord of 7th level or higher can speak with stone as if she had cast stone tell (caster level equal to the stonelord's class level).

Earthquake (Sp): Once per day, a stonelord of 9th level or higher can use an earthquake effect (caster level equal to the stonelord's class level).

TATTOOED MONK

Certain monastic orders bestow supernatural or spell-like powers on their members by inscribing magic tattoos on their skin.

These tattooed monks shave their heads, speak in cryptic riddles and maxims, and—in many cases—travel the countryside furthering their quest for enlightenment by facing and conquering temptation.

The great majority of tattooed monks begin their careers as monks.

A small number of fighters, druids, and even a few clerics adopt the tattooed monk prestige class.

In general, tattooed monks are drawn almost exclusively from rural or wild regions, though more “civilized” individuals who gain the favor of the order are sometimes allowed to join.

The ranks of the tattooed monks are divided between worldly monks—those who believe that temptation can only be overcome if it is squarely faced—and ascetic monks, who rarely leave their mountaintop retreats.

Player character tattooed monks are assumed to fall into the former category, but NPCs can be found in both roles.

NPC tattooed monk often fulfill roles as philosophers and mystics, helping others find answers to esoteric questions and solutions to unusual problems.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tattooed monk, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Improved Grapple, Improved Unarmed Strike.

CLASS SKILLS

The tattooed monk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tattooed monk prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tattooed monks gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Monk Abilities: A tattooed monk's class levels stack with his monk levels for determining his unarmed damage, AC bonus, and unarmored speed bonus.

Tattoo (Su or Sp): Tattooed monks gain their powers from the magic tattoos that eventually cover their bodies.

A 1st-level tattooed monk has one tattoo and gains another tattoo at every odd-numbered level.

A tattooed monk can choose his tattoos from among those described below.

Note that three of the tattoos (centipede, crescent moon, and phoenix) have minimum class level requirements.

All tattoos are magical, and the abilities they bestow are supernatural (except for the crescent moon).

A tattooed monk in an antimagic field loses all benefits of his tattoos.

Unless the effect of a tattoo is continuous, activating a tattoo is a move action that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Arrowroot: A character with this tattoo can heal wounds in another character by touch.

Each day he can cure a total number of hit points equal to his Wisdom bonus × his class level.

A tattooed monk cannot heal himself, but he may divide the curing among multiple recipients, and he doesn't have to use it all at once.

Bamboo: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Constitution score. This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Bat: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Dexterity score. This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Bellflower: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can add his Charisma modifier as an enhancement bonus to any of his ability scores (including Charisma).

This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Butterfly: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Wisdom score.

This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Centipede: Once per week, a character with this tattoo can use a shadow walk effect.

This ability allows the tattooed monk to cross great distances, but he must end his journey on the Material Plane.

A tattooed monk must be at least 5th level to gain this tattoo.

Chameleon: A character with this tattoo can use an alter self effect once per day per tattoo he possesses. This benefit lasts for 1 hour per class level.

Crab: A character with this tattoo gains damage reduction 2/magic.

This damage reduction improves by 2 for each additional tattoo he possesses.

Crane: A character with this tattoo gains a gradual immunity to bodily decay.

When a tattooed monk first gains this tattoo, he gains immunity to nonmagical diseases.

When he gains his next tattoo (whatever it may be), he acquires immunity to poison as well.

When he gains his next tattoo, he no longer takes ability score penalties for aging, and he cannot be magically aged. (Any aging penalties he may already have incurred remain in place).

Bonuses still accrue, and the tattooed monk still dies of old age when his time is up.

Chrysanthemum: Every hour that a character with this tattoo is in direct sunlight, he heals a number of hit points equal to his level.

A daylight spell does not provoke this fast healing; the character must be exposed to real sunlight.

Dragon: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can use fire breath as if he had drunk an elixir of fire breath (see page 255 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

Dragonfly: Once per day, a character with this tattoo gains a dodge bonus to his AC equal to the number of tattoos he possesses.

This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Falcon: A character with this tattoo is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Allies within 10 feet of his gain a morale bonus on their saving throws against fear effects equal to the tattooed monk's Charisma bonus (if any) plus the number of tattoos he possesses.

Lion: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can smite a foe, gaining a +4 bonus on the attack roll and a bonus on the damage roll equal to his class level on a single melee attack.

The tattooed monk must declare the smite before making the attack.

A missed attack uses up the attempt.

Monkey: A character with this tattoo gains a +1 competence bonus per tattoo he possesses on all Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Open Lock, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble checks.

Moon, Crescent: Once per day, a character with this tattoo can use ethereal jaunt as a spell-like ability.

A tattooed monk must be at least 9th level to gain this tattoo.

Moon, Full: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can gain a +2 luck bonus on a single attack roll, skill check, or ability check, as he calls on the power of the full moon.

This ability cannot be used during daylight hours.

Mountain: A character with this tattoo can activate it to take on the immovability of a mountain for as much as 1 round per class level, gaining phenomenal durability though he cannot move from the spot where he stands.

He gains a +4 bonus to his Constitution and Wisdom scores.

The increase in Constitution increases the tattooed monk's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away when the ability's duration expires or when the character chooses to end it (a free action).

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While using this ability, the tattooed monk takes a -20 penalty on any Dexterity-based skill checks.

He is immune to bull rush and trip attacks.

The tattooed monk may use this ability once per day per tattoo he possesses.

Nightingale: A character with this tattoo can heal wounds, either his own or others'.

He can heal a number of hit points of damage equal to twice his current class level each day, and he can spread this healing out among several uses.

Ocean: A character with this tattoo never needs to eat, sleep, or drink.

Phoenix: A character with this tattoo gains spell resistance equal to his class level + 15.

A tattooed monk must be at least 7th level to gain this tattoo.

Pine: A character with this tattoo gains the Remain Conscious feat.

Scorpion: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can force an opponent attacking him to use his lowest ability score modifier instead of his Strength or Dexterity score modifier when making his attack roll.

The character can activate this tattoo on his opponent's turn, but he must declare it before the success or failure of the attack is determined.

The tattooed monk must be aware of the attack and not flat-footed in order to use this ability.

Spider: To use this tattoo, a character must have the Stunning Fist feat.

Instead of a stunning fist attack, a character with this tattoo can make an attack that delivers a contact poison.

The poison's save DC is equal to 10 + the tattooed monk's class level + his Con modifier.

The poison's initial and secondary damage is 2 points of Constitution damage.

Using this tattoo counts as one of the character's stunning fist attacks for that day.

Sun: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can gain a +2 luck bonus on a single attack roll, skill check, or ability check, as he calls on the full power of the sun.

This ability can only be used during daylight hours.

Tiger: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can fight unarmed with a +1 bonus on all attack rolls and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage with a successful attack.

This burst of martial arts ferocity lasts for 1 round per class level.

Tortoise: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can use his class level as the number of ranks in a skill he does not possess for the purpose of one skill check.

For example, a 4th-level tattooed monk with two tattoos can make up to two Use Magic Device checks as if he had 4 ranks in that skill.

He adds his Charisma modifier to the skill check as usual.

Unicorn: A character with this tattoo gains the power of good fortune, usable once per day.

This ability allows the tattooed monk to reroll one d20 roll that he has just made.

The character must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

The character must declare the reroll before the result of the original roll has been determined.

Wasp: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, a character with this tattoo can use haste on herself.

The benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

White Mask: A character with this tattoo is immune to detect thoughts, detect lies, and any attempt to magically discern his alignment.

He gains a +10 bonus on all Bluff checks.

Multiclass Note: A monk who becomes a tattooed monk may continue advancing as a monk.

THAYAN KNIGHT

While the Red Wizards of Thay are not opposed to blasting their opponents with deadly spells or shredding the minds of their enemies with dark magic, there are times when they need protectors who have mastered the art of swordplay.

These protectors are the Thayan knights, familiar with magic and loyal to none but the tattooed mages.

The Thayan knights act as bodyguards and enforcers for the Red Wizards (see page 193 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

They lead common Thayan troops into battle and help guard the wizard enclaves.

Although they are referred to as knights, they have no code of conduct, and the only rule that binds them is that their lives are worth nothing compared to the safety of the Red Wizards.

Almost all Thayan knights are fighters, although monks and rangers have been known to pursue this career.

Barbarians are typically too reckless to concentrate on defense, and the Red Wizards consider other individuals too weak to perform the duties of a Thayan knight.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Thayan knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 2 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks,

Knowledge (local Thay) 2 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Weapon Focus (longsword).

Special: Sworn allegiance to the Red Wizards of Thay.

CLASS SKILLS

The Thayan knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (Thay local) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Thayan knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thayan knights gain proficiency with tower shields.

Horrors of Thay (Ex): Because of long exposure to the cruelty of her homeland, a Thayan knight gains a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm effects.

At 4th level, these bonuses increase to +4 and +2, respectively.

None of these bonuses apply against attacks from Red Wizards.

Zulkir's Favor (Su): At 1st level, a Thayan knight undergoes a long and painful tattooing ritual.

A magic tattoo, placed either on the back or the forehead, provides a +2 resistance bonus on Reflex saves.

The tattoo also marks the knight as someone loyal to the Red Wizards.

The knight automatically fails any saving throw against a mind-affecting spell cast by a Red Wizard.

When the tattoo is visible, the knight gains a +2 morale bonus on Intimidate checks as an extraordinary ability.

Zulkir's Defender (Ex): A Thayan knight of 2nd level or higher gains a +2 morale bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls against any creature that attacks her or that she has previously seen attack a Red Wizard.

Fighter Feat: At 3rd level, a Thayan knight may choose any one feat except Weapon Specialization from the fighter bonus feat list (see Table 5-1, page 90 of the Player's Handbook).

Final Stand (Su): Once per day as a standard action, a Thayan knight of 4th level or higher can inspire her troops. Allies within 10 feet of the knight gain 2d10 temporary hit points.

This ability affects a number of creatures equal to the knight's class level + the knight's Charisma modifier and lasts the same number of rounds.

Zulkir's Champion (Su): A 5th-level Thayan knight receives a large magic tattoo across her face, signifying her devotion to the protection of the Red Wizards.

Once per day, she can add a +2 luck bonus on a single saving throw.

This bonus can be taken after the die is rolled and after other modifiers have been applied to the roll.

When the tattoo is visible, the knight gains a +4 morale bonus on Intimidate checks as an extraordinary ability.

WAR CHANTER

The roar of battle, the screams of the dying, the howl of the warrior's cry...these are all notes in the music composed by the war chanter.

His music flows across the battlefield like a raging torrent, catching friends and foes alike in its wake.

Bards of particularly militant mindsets become war chanters (giving up their spellcasting ability in the process), and among barbarians, war chanters are often the leaders or elite warriors of a tribe.

The music of a war chanter inspires those around him and pushes them to greater heights of strength and deeds of valor.

Fighters and barbarians sometimes gain a few levels of bard in qualifying for this prestige class.

Paladins and monks cannot join because of the alignment requirement, but members of both those classes respect the leadership and military qualities of the war chanter class. NPC war chanters are usually leaders of small warbands. It is not unusual to see them as chief lieutenants in larger groups.

They function best when surrounded by lesser allies, but can be encountered on their own as well.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a war chanter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Perform (sing) or Perform (oratory) 6 ranks.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Weapon Focus.

Special: Able to use the inspire courage bardic music ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The war chanter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the war chanter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: War chanters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Inspire Toughness (Su): A war chanter with 9 or more ranks in Perform (sing) or Perform (oratory) can use her song or poetics to impart a kind of berserk resiliency on her allies (including himself).

To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the war chanter sing (or speak).

The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the war chanter sing and for 5 rounds thereafter.

An affected ally receives +2 temporary hit points for every class level of the war chanter.

At 6th level and higher, a war chanter also grants affected allies the benefit of the Diehard feat when using this ability.

War Chanter Music: War chanter music follows the same rules as bardic music (see page 29 of the Player's Handbook). War chanter levels stack with bard levels for the purpose of determining how often a character can use war chanter music or bardic music.

War chanter levels do not stack with bard levels for determining which songs a bard has access to.

Inspire Recklessness (Su): A War chanter of 3rd level or higher with 12 or more ranks in any Perform skill can use her song or poetics to inspire an often dangerous, but very effective, ferocity in one of her allies within 60 feet (or in himself).

The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the war chanter sing and for 5 rounds thereafter.

An affected ally (or the war chanter herself) is inspired to recklessness, gaining the ability to decrease her Armor Class by a number less than or equal to her base attack bonus and add the same number to her melee attack rolls as a morale bonus.

On her action, before making any attack rolls in a round, the affected character must choose to subtract a number from her Armor Class and add the same number to all melee attack rolls (this number may be 0).

The penalty to Armor Class and the bonus on attack rolls apply until the character's next action.

Combine Songs (Su): A war chanter of 5th level or higher with 12 or more ranks in any Perform skill can combine two types of bardic music or war chanter music to provide the benefits of both (normal stacking rules for bonus types apply).

Inspire Awe (Su): A war chanter of 7th level or higher with 15 or more ranks in any Perform skill can inspire uneasiness, fear, or even terror in her foes.

To be affected, a foe must be within 60 feet of the war chanter and must be able to hear the war chanter.

Foes get a Will save (DC 10 + war chanter's class level + war chanter's Cha modifier) to resist the effect.

The severity of the effect depends on the difference between the foe's Hit Dice and the war chanter's Hit Dice (character level).

Subtract the foe's HD from the war chanter's HD and consult the following table.

HD Difference	Effect
+10 or more	Foe is paralyzed with fear
+1 to +9	Foe is panicked
0 to -5	Foe is frightened
-6 or less	Foe is shaken

The effect lasts for as long as the foe can hear the war chanter and 1 round thereafter.

If a foe's hearing of the war chanter's song is interrupted, the foe needs to make another saving throw when he hears the war chanter's song again.

Singing Shout (Su): When a war chanter of 8th level or higher engages in battle, he often lets out a singing shout as a standard action.

All allies (including herself) within a 60-foot radius who can hear the war chanter gain a +4 enhancement bonus to Strength for a number of rounds equal to one-half the class level of the war chanter.

Inspire Legion (Su): A 10th-level war chanter with 18 or more ranks in any Perform skill can unite her allies and make them fight better together.

To be affected, an ally must be within 60 feet of the war chanter and must be able to hear the war chanter.

Only allies who meet these requirements at the beginning of the song are affected, and an ally whose hearing is interrupted or who moves more than 60 feet away from the war chanter cannot rejoin the same song.

The effect lasts as long as the affected characters can hear the war chanter and stay within range.

When the war chanter begins singing, determine the best base attack bonus among all the affected characters.

All affected characters use this base attack bonus or the war chanter's character level as their base attack bonus for the duration of the effect.

All affected characters gain a +2 competence bonus on damage rolls as well.

WARSHAPER

Most martial characters rely on manufactured gear such as a sword and a shield or natural endowments such as teeth and claws to survive on the battlefield.

The warshaper finds those options sadly limiting, instead growing and evolving her own weapons and armor to suit the threat at hand.

Blessed with the ability to change form at a moment's notice, warshapers delight in surprising their foes by growing massive claws, armored skin, or other unpleasant surprises.

Warshapers must have some ability to change their form, and many are shapechangers such as doppelgangers and lycanthropes.

Wizards and sorcerers who know the polymorph spell can take levels in the prestige class, as can druids who have mastered the wild shape class feature.

Most warshapers can change their outward appearance in the blink of an eye, so they don't stand out among the ranks of their allies.

It's not until the soldier you're fighting grows a tentacle and fangs that you know you have met a warshaper.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warshaper, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any (but see below).

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Special: Must be able to change shape in one of the following five ways:

- Change shape supernatural ability (aranea, hound archon, barghest, doppelganger, rakshasa, slaad).
 - Shapechanger subtype (lycanthropes, phasm).
 - Polymorph as a spell-like ability (astral deva, planetar, solar, couatl, marilith, bronze dragon, gold dragon, silver dragon, efreeti, leonal guardinal, night hag, ogre mage, pixie).
 - Able to cast the polymorph spell.
 - Wild shape or similar class feature (bear warrior*, druid).
- The alternate form ability (possessed by quasits, vampires, and others) is insufficient to become a warshaper.

* Prestige class from this book.

CLASS SKILLS

The warshaper's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the warshaper prestige class.

The class features function only when the warshaper is in a form other than her own (which for doppelganger and phasm warshapers is most of the time).

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Warshapers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Morphic Immunities (Ex): A warshaper is adept at distributing her form's vital organs around her body to keep them safe from harm.

Warshapers are immune to stunning and critical hits.

Morphic Weapons (Su): As a move action, a warshaper can grow natural weapons such as claws or fangs, allowing a natural attack that deals the appropriate amount of damage according to the size of the new form (see Table 5-1 on page 296 of the Monster Manual).

These morphic weapons need not be natural weapons that the creature already possesses.

For example, a warshaper polymorphed into an ettin (Large giant) could grow a claw that deals 1d6 points of damage, or horns for a gore attack that deals 1d8 points of damage.

If the warshaper's form already has a natural weapon of that type, the weapon deals damage as if it were one category larger.

For example, a warshaper who used wild shape to become a dire wolf (Large animal) could grow its jaw and snout, enabling a bite attack that deals 2d6 points of damage (as a for Huge animal), not the normal 1d8.

A warshaper can change morphic weapons as often as it likes, even if it is using a shapechanging technique such as the polymorph spell or the wild shape class feature that doesn't allow subsequent changes after the initial transformation.

Morphic Body (Su): At 2nd level and higher, a warshaper can use its precise control over its form to make itself stronger and heartier.

It gains +4 to Strength and +4 to Constitution. Morphic Reach (Su): A warshaper of 3rd level or higher can suddenly stretch its limbs, neck, or other appendages outward, giving it 5 more feet of reach than the creature it's emulating.

Unlike most creatures, warshapers don't appear to have a longer reach until they actually use it.

Morphic Healing (Su): At 4th level, a warshaper becomes able to change its form where wounds appear, creating smooth skin where once were wounds.

The warshaper gains fast healing 2, and if it spends a full-round action and succeeds on a Concentration check (DC equal to the total damage it has sustained), it heals 10 points of damage.

Flashmorph/Multimorph (Su): A 5th-level warshaper gains one of two class features.

If the warshaper has the ability to change form at will, such as from the change shape ability, the shapechanger subtype, or a polymorph spell-like ability, it gains the flashmorph class feature, allowing it to change form as a move action.

If it casts the polymorph spell, has polymorph as a spell-like ability usable less often than at will, or has the wild shape class feature, it instead gains the multimorph class feature. Multimorph allows a warshaper to change forms multiple times during the duration of the spell, spell-like ability, or class feature that enables her to change form.

For example, a wizard/warshaper could polymorph into a troll for 2 minutes, then change into a red dragon for 4 minutes, and then spend the rest of the spell's duration in the form of a hill giant.

Each change requires a standard action, and only the first transformation heals the warshaper.

If the warshaper changes into its natural form, the spell, spell-like ability, or use of wild shape ends.

DEFENDERS OF THE FAITH (3.0)

CHURCH INQUISITOR

While many champions of good are dedicated to fighting forces of evil that are external to them and their church—as clerics and paladins of Heironeous are devoted to destroying followers of Hextor—the church inquisitor is at least as concerned about evil and corruption within.

When greed eats away at a church hierarchy, when devils infiltrate a knightly order and seduce its leaders to evil, when high clerics succumb to evil enchantments and fall from the path of their deities, it is usually a church inquisitor who uncovers the evil and cuts it away.

Church inquisitors specialize in divination, to detect evil and corruption, and abjuration, to protect themselves and others from evil magic.

They are most often drawn from the clerics or paladins of a lawful church or order.

Members of other classes usually find it difficult to meet the requirements of the prestige class, and rarely have the incentive to do so.

Player characters might encounter NPC church inquisitors if they are involved in a lawful church or order—perhaps even as subjects of the inquisitor's investigations.

Church inquisitors are particularly likely to appear after incidents involving demons or devils, since they combat the widespread corruption these creatures tend to leave in their wake.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a church inquisitor, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Base Will Save: +3.

Knowledge (arcana): 8 ranks.

Spellcraft: 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast dispel magic as a divine spell.

Special: Must be a member of a lawful good church or religious order, and must have already uncovered some corruption within that organization.

CLASS SKILLS

The church inquisitor's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Scry (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the church inquisitor prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Church inquisitors are proficient with all simple weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Detect Evil (Sp): A church inquisitor can detect evil at will as a spell-like ability.

This ability duplicates the effect of the spell detect evil.

Prestige Domain: Upon adopting the church inquisitor class, a character gains access to the Inquisition domain, described in Chapter 4: Divine Magic.

The character gains the granted power associated with the domain (a +4 bonus on dispel checks) and can choose the spells in that domain as his daily domain spells.

Spells per Day: A church inquisitor continues advancing in divine spellcasting ability as well as learning the skills of inquisition.

Thus, when a new church inquisitor level is gained, the character gains new divine spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, more frequent remove disease, and so on).

This means that he adds the level of church inquisitor to the level of another divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

For example, if Garjin, an 8th-level cleric, gains a level as a church inquisitor, he gains new divine spells as if he had risen to 9th level as a cleric, but uses the other church inquisitor aspects of level progression such as base attack bonus and save bonuses.

If he next gains a level as a cleric, making him a 9th-level cleric/1st-level church inquisitor, he gains divine spells as if he had risen to 10th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a church inquisitor, the player must decide which class to assign each level of church inquisitor for the purpose of determining divine spells per day.

Immune to Charms (Ex): A church inquisitor of 2nd level or higher is immune to all charm spells and effects.

Pierce Illusion (Su): At 3rd level, the church inquisitor gains the supernatural ability to penetrate illusions and disguises at will.

The inquisitor must touch an illusion or a creature shrouded in illusion (such as a change self spell).

The inquisitor then makes a caster level check as if casting dispel magic against the illusion effect.

If he succeeds at this check, the illusion is immediately dispelled.

The church inquisitor's +4 bonus on dispel checks (the Inquisition domain granted power) applies to this check as well.

In addition, the inquisitor has a +4 competence bonus on Spot checks against the Disguise skill.

Immune to Compulsions (Ex): A church inquisitor of 5th level or higher is immune to all compulsion spells and effects.

Force Shapechange (Su): A church inquisitor of 6th level or higher can force a creature into its natural form.

The church inquisitor must make a successful melee touch attack against the creature.

If the attack is successful, the church inquisitor makes a caster level check as if casting dispel magic against the shapechanging effect.

The church inquisitor's +4 bonus on dispel checks (the Inquisition domain granted power) applies to this check.

This ability undoes the effect of alter self, polymorph self, shapechange, and alternate form abilities, whether exceptional, spell-like, or supernatural in nature.

The affected creature cannot change its shape again for 1d6 rounds.

The church inquisitor can use this ability at will.

Immune to Possession (Ex): A church inquisitor of 8th level or higher is immune to magic jar, soul bind, trap the soul, a ghost's Malevolence ability, and all other spells or effects that displace or replace a character's life force.

The character can still travel to the planes via astral projection, if so desired.

Discern Lies (Sp): A church inquisitor of 9th level or higher can use discern lies as a spell-like ability three times per day.

Learn the Truth (Su): By touching a creature that has lied to him, a church inquisitor of 9th level or higher can force the creature to tell the truth.

The creature can make a Will save (DC 10 + the church inquisitor's level + the church inquisitor's Charisma modifier) to resist this mind-affecting compulsion effect.

If the saving throw fails, the creature must speak the true version of the lie it uttered.

The church inquisitor can use this ability at will, but only immediately after using his discern lies spell-like ability on the creature in question.

CONSECRATED HARRIER

The consecrated harrier acts as a bounty hunter for her religion or organization.

Where church inquisitors hunt evil and corruption within a church and other champions of good fight external forces of evil in general, a consecrated harrier hunts blasphemers, heretics, and those who betray or attack the church directly.

For instance, a consecrated harrier might accept a mission to track down and kill an ogre that defiled a shrine, or to bring a heretic before the heads of her church.

The mission is always related to either a single, specific offense of blasphemy or defilement, or to the source of a heresy.

The church assigns missions or targets as needed.

Hunting specific enemies of a church requires many of the skills possessed by bounty hunters.

While the consecrated harrier deals with her targets capably once she finds them, she must find them first.

The consecrated harrier must be subtle and clever, as well as strong in her faith.

Because her foes may have spells and magical abilities of their own, she must be strong-willed and prepared to properly deal with such.

Paladins and clerics often make good consecrated harriers because of their high Charisma scores.

Rangers are equally desirable because of their superior tracking abilities.

Rogues often possess the subtlety and conversational skills to locate their targets.

A consecrated harrier can be difficult for others to spot. She uses her skills, spells, and abilities to mask her nature until she can confront her target.

Most consecrated harriers appear to be genial, pleasant people who always have a joke or a story to tell.

This facade masks their true, implacable nature, allowing them to gather clues without arousing interest or suspicion. Particularly powerful or well-protected foes attract small groups of consecrated harriers who work with other classes to reach and confront their targets.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a consecrated harrier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Disguise: 5 ranks.

Gather Information: 5 ranks.

Profession (lawyer): 5 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Special: The candidate must accept an assignment from her church to locate and destroy some specific, individual enemy of the church.

A character who fails must wait a year and a day before applying again.

If she succeeds, the church accepts her as a consecrated harrier and she may gain levels in the class.

CLASS SKILLS

The consecrated harrier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Search (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the consecrated harrier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Consecrated harriers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells per Day: Beginning at 1st level, a consecrated harrier gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the consecrated harrier must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a consecrated harrier with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast spells.

Consecrated harrier bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + Wisdom modifier.

When the consecrated harrier gets "—" spells of a given level, the character cannot cast any spells of that level.

When the consecrated harrier gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the harrier gets only bonus spells.

A consecrated harrier without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The consecrated harrier's spell list appears below; she has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

A consecrated harrier prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the consecrated harrier cannot lose a spell to cast a cure spell in its place).

Blessing of Scripture (Su): All consecrated harriers receive a +2 sacred bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks when tracking their church-assigned target.

If the assigned target is a group, this bonus applies to the group's leader.

They receive the same bonus on melee attack rolls and melee weapon damage rolls against their targets.

A consecrated harrier does not receive this bonus with ranged weapons.

This bonus increases to +4 at 3rd level, +6 at 5th level, +8 at 7th level and +10 at 9th level.

Detect Chaos (Sp): The consecrated harrier can detect chaos at will as a cleric of equal level.

Sanctified Sight (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, a consecrated harrier receives a +4 bonus on all saves against illusions.

Dispel Magic (Sp): A consecrated harrier can use dispel magic as a cleric of the same level.

Starting at 3rd level, the consecrated harrier can use this spell-like ability once per day, plus one additional time per point of Wisdom bonus.

Emotion (Sp): Starting at 4th level, a consecrated harrier can arouse an emotion in all living creatures in a 15-foot radius, as the spell emotion.

She uses this spell-like ability as a wizard of one level lower, so a 4th-level consecrated harrier uses it like a 3rd-level wizard.

She can do this a number of times each day equal to her Wisdom bonus, minimum one.

False Vision (Su): Starting at 6th level, a consecrated harrier can hide herself from the scrying attempts of her target, her target's allies, or anyone in the target's employ, as the spell false vision.

She uses this supernatural ability as a wizard of one level lower, so a 6th-level consecrated harrier uses it like a 5th-level wizard.

She can do this a number of times each day equal to her Wisdom bonus, minimum one.

Implacable Hunt (Su): Beginning at 8th level, if the consecrated harrier wounds a target and the target escapes, the consecrated harrier always knows the direction in which her target lies and the approximate distance between her and her target.

This ability only works if the consecrated harrier and her target are on the same plane of existence.

Implacable hunt can be used simultaneously against different targets, as long as each of those individual targets is part of a group that is, in total, the harrier's target for her current mission.

Faultless Hunt (Su): At 10th level, a consecrated harrier who establishes an implacable hunt can intensify this to a faultless hunt, enabling her to locate her quarry even across planar boundaries.

Unlike an implacable hunt, which can affect several individuals at the same time, only one faultless hunt against a single individual can be pursued at one time.

For the consecrated harrier to begin a faultless hunt, she must abandon any faultless hunt that she is already conducting.

Code of Conduct: A consecrated harrier must make it known to her target who she is and why she is there at the time of the confrontation.

She cannot sneak attack her target.

She cannot slay her target on a battlefield without the target knowing who she is and why she is there.

Consecrated harriers purposely word the requirements for conducting themselves vaguely, so that an individual consecrated harrier in the field has some flexibility.

Harriers who fail to act according to their code of conduct must undertake an act of atonement before they can add any further levels of this class (see the atonement spell description, page 176 of the Player's Handbook).

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a consecrated harrier may continue advancing as a paladin.

CONSECRATED HARRIER SPELL LIST

Consecrated harriers choose their spells from the following list:

- 1st—alter self, animate rope, calm emotions, command, doom.
- 2nd—charm person, daylight, detect thoughts, hold person.
- 3rd—death ward, discern lies, dismissal, legend lore.
- 4th—dominate person, mark of justice.
- 5th—antimagic field, banishment.

CONTEMPLATIVE

For any servant of a deity, no joy is greater than at those rare moments when the presence of her patron deity is a real, tangible force, sending shivers of power through her body and sending her soul soaring.

For some, the taste for this experience is such a powerful attraction that they begin devoting their lives to cultivating it, hoping to attain greater closeness to their deity through a life of contemplation.

Spending hours in prayer and meditation, these devoted followers purify their souls, fitting them for closer contact with the divine.

While some contemplatives withdraw from the world into private retreats, others remain active, even adventuring, finding that true nearness to their deity comes from living out the deity's will in the world.

In return, they find their minds, bodies, and souls purified, perfected, and finally brought close to union with their deity.

Some contemplatives, rather than devoting their lives to a deity, strive to conform themselves to an some other abstract principle such as an alignment.

Their mission is no less divine than that of contemplatives devoted to a deity, and their methods substantially the same.

Many such contemplatives live as itinerant philosophers, teaching their doctrines in schools or in the marketplace as they travel from city to city, hoping to enlighten the masses.

Most contemplatives are clerics, though paladins are also often drawn to the mystic's journey. Members of other classes rarely have sufficient devotion to a deity or philosophy to choose this course.

An NPC contemplative might be a reclusive hermit, a church leader, or a passionate champion of her deity. Such a character might have something a group of player characters needs—a holy relic, a bit of sacred lore, or simply a higher-level spell than the clerics in town can cast. Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a contemplative, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (religion): 13 ranks.

Special: Must have had direct contact with one's patron deity or a direct servant of that deity, or with an enlightened being embodying the highest principles of an alignment (a solar, for example).

CLASS SKILLS

The contemplative's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the contemplative prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Contemplatives are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any armor or with shields, but sometimes carry these proficiencies from their previous class.

Prestige Domain (Ex): Upon adopting the contemplative class, and again at 6th level, a character gains access to a prestige domain of her choice, as described in Chapter 4: Divine Magic.

The character can choose any domain made available by her deity or alignment—either a new prestige domain or a standard domain listed in the Player's Handbook.

The character gains the granted power associated with the domain she chooses, and can select the spells in that domain as her daily domain spells.

Divine Health (Ex): A contemplative is immune to all diseases, including magical diseases such as mummy rot and lycanthropy. Spells per Day: A contemplative who was previously a divine spellcaster continues to gain access to more powerful divine magic while following the contemplative path.

Thus, when a new contemplative level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in the divine spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, more frequent remove disease, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of contemplative to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly. For example, if Theresa, an 11th-level cleric, gains a level as a contemplative, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 12th level as a cleric, but uses the other contemplative aspects of level progression such as base attack bonus and save bonus.

If she next gains a level as a cleric, making her a 12th-level cleric/1st-level contemplative, she gains spells as if she had risen to 13th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a contemplative, the player must decide which class to assign each level of contemplative for the purpose of determining divine spells per day.

If the contemplative did not previously belong to a divine spellcasting class, she gains the ability to cast divine spells exactly as a cleric of her patron deity.

Her spell progression is the same as that of a cleric.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 2nd level, a contemplative gains the ability to shrug off magical effects that would otherwise control or compel her.

If a contemplative with resistant mind is affected by an enchantment and fails her saving throw, one round later she can attempt her saving throw again.

She only gets this one extra chance to succeed at her saving throw.

Divine Wholeness (Su): At 3rd level, a contemplative can cure her own wounds, in addition to any other healing ability she may have.

She can cure up to twice her current level in hit points each day, and she can spread this healing out among several uses.

Divine Body (Su): At 5th level, a contemplative becomes immune to poisons of all kinds.

Divine Soul (Su): At 7th level, a contemplative gains spell resistance.

Her spell resistance equals her class level + 10.

In order to affect the contemplative with a spell, a spellcaster must roll the contemplative's spell resistance or higher on 1d20 + the spellcaster's level.

Eternal Body (Ex): After achieving 9th level, a contemplative no longer suffers ability penalties for aging and cannot be magically aged.

(Penalties she has already suffered remain in place).

Bonuses still accrue, and the contemplative still dies of old age when her time is up.

Mystic Union (Su): At 10th level, a contemplative becomes a magical creature.

She is forevermore treated as an outsider rather than as a humanoid.

For instance, charm person does not affect her.

Additionally, the contemplative gains damage resistance 20/+1.

This means that the contemplative ignores (instantly regenerates) the first 20 points of damage from any attack unless the damage is dealt by a weapon with a +1 or higher enhancement bonus, by a spell, or by a form of energy (fire, cold, electricity, and so forth).

As an outsider, a 10th-level contemplative is subject to spells that repel enchanted creatures, such as protection from good.

DIVINE ORACLE

Some people call them mad, and certainly some divine oracles are driven mad by the visions they see.

Some people doubt their words; indeed, some divine oracles are cursed never to be believed.

Wherever the deities are known to speak to mortals, some mortals hear their voices with a unique clarity and gain insight into the past, the present, and the future by virtue of their unusual status.

Divine oracles are such mortals, blessed—or cursed—by visions from their deities.

All divine oracles are spellcasters, and most were clerics or druids before adopting the divine oracle prestige class. Whatever their other classes, all divine oracles share a particular devotion to the Divination school of magic, having mastered all available means to catch glimpses of the future.

NPC divine oracles often live in out-of-the-way places, though usually close enough to civilization that people with pressing questions about the future can seek them out to have their questions answered.

They frequently inhabit sacred shrines or ancient temples and rarely take an active part in world affairs.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine oracle, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Scry: 10 ranks.

Feat: Skill Focus (Scry).

CLASS SKILLS

The divine oracle's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Players Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the divine oracle prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine oracles are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or with shields, but usually carry these proficiencies from their previous class.

Spells per Day: A divine oracle continues advancing in spellcasting ability as well as gaining the abilities of her new class.

Thus, when a new divine oracle level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, wild shape ability, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of divine oracle to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly. For example, if Cassandra, a 10th-level cleric, gains a level as a divine oracle, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 11th level as a cleric, but uses the other divine oracle aspects of level progression such as base attack bonus and save bonuses.

If she next gains a level as a cleric, making her an 11th-level cleric/1st-level divine oracle, she gains spells as if she had risen to 12th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a divine oracle, the player must decide which class to assign each level of divine oracle for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Prestige Domain: Upon adopting the divine oracle class, the character gains access to the Divination domain, described in Chapter 4: Divine Magic.

The character gains the granted power associated with the domain (+2 caster level for divination spells), and can choose the spells in that domain as her daily domain spells.

Scry Bonus (Su): A divine oracle has a +2 sacred bonus on all Scry checks.

Prescient Sense (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, if a divine oracle makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally inflicts half damage on a successful save (such as a red dragon's fiery breath or a fireball spell), she instead suffers no damage, since her prescience allowed her to get out of the way faster.

This form of evasion works no matter what armor the divine oracle wears, unlike the monk's and rogue's evasion ability.

Divination Enhancement (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a divine oracle adds her divine oracle level to her percentage chance of success when using divination spells such as augury or divination.

If an 11th-level cleric/4th-level divine oracle casts divination, her chance of success would be 70% (base) + 15% (1% per caster level) + 4% (her divine oracle level), or 89%.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a divine oracle gains the ability to react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so.

The divine oracle retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(She still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 6th level, the divine oracle can no longer be flanked, since she can react to opponents on opposite sides of her as easily as she can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the divine oracle.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the divine oracle can flank her (and thus sneak attack her).

At 8th level, the divine oracle gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks by traps.

Immune to Surprise (Ex): At 10th level, the divine oracle's sensitivity to danger is so great that she is never surprised. She can always take a partial action during a surprise round, unless she is physically restrained from doing so.

HOLY LIBERATOR

The holy liberator is a holy warrior, a distant cousin of the paladin, who is dedicated to overthrowing tyranny wherever it may be found.

These champions of freedom and equality are strong-willed, independent-minded, and virtuous.

They particularly direct their efforts against lawful evil societies (dictatorships or plutocracies), slaveholders and slave traders, and powerful, corrupt governments, but they also recognize the possibility for tyranny even in a state of anarchy (where strong individuals may impose their will on people weaker than they).

Members of all classes—with the prominent exception of monks—are often drawn to the holy liberator prestige class.

Chaotic good fighters and rangers are natural holy liberators, augmenting their already significant combat abilities with the holy powers of the prestige class.

Many clerics are also drawn to become holy liberators—particularly chaotic clerics of Pelor and certain clerics of Kord.

Many rogues also adopt the holy liberator class, working with stealth and steel for the cause of freedom.

NPC holy liberators are usually loners, though they may organize rebellious forces in a tyrannical nation.

They often have powerful celestial allies, from celestial animals to ghaele eladrins, assisting their cause, but tend to work in a loose network rather than a structured or close association.

Just as holy liberators rarely accept orders from anyone, they are loath to give them, choosing to form alliances and friendships rather than manipulate minions or servants.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a holy liberator, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Diplomacy: 5 ranks.

Feat: Iron Will.

CLASS SKILLS

The holy liberator's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the holy liberator prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Holy liberators are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells per Day: A holy liberator has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the holy liberator must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a holy liberator with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Holy liberator bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the holy liberator's Wisdom modifier.

When the holy liberator gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, he gets only bonus spells. (A holy liberator without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level).

The holy liberator's spell list appears below.

A holy liberator has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just like a cleric.

A holy liberator prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the liberator cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Detect Evil (Sp): The holy liberator can detect evil as a spell-like ability at will.

This ability duplicates the effects of the spell detect evil.

Resist Enchantment (Su): Holy liberators gain a +2 morale bonus on all saving throws against enchantment spells or effects.

Divine Grace (Su): A holy liberator of 2nd level or higher applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, a holy liberator of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite evil with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

For example, a 9th-level holy liberator armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+9 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses for high Strength or magical effects that normally apply.

If the holy liberator accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Smite evil is a supernatural ability.

Turn Undead (Su): When a holy liberator reaches 3rd level, he gains the ability to turn undead.

He turns undead as would a cleric of two levels lower.

Immune to Charm and Compulsion (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the holy liberator gains immunity to all charm and compulsion effects.

His mind is his own, and no other creature can control his thoughts or actions.

Subversion (Su): By spending 5 minutes in conversation with a character who is under the influence of a charm or compulsion effect, a holy liberator of at least 7th level can help that character break free of the enchantment.

As a full-round action, the holy liberator touches the enchanted character (making a melee touch attack roll, if necessary) and invokes the divine power within himself. The enchanted character immediately makes a new saving throw, using his own saving throw bonus plus the holy liberator's Charisma bonus.

If the result equals or exceeds the DC of the original saving throw, the character is freed from the charm or compulsion effect.

Code of Conduct: Holy liberators must be of chaotic good alignment and lose all special class abilities if they ever willingly commit an act of evil.

True to their alignment, holy liberators have no more formalized code of conduct than that.

HOLY LIBERATOR SPELL LIST

Holy liberators choose their spells from the following list:

1st—bless, bless weapon, cure light wounds, detect poison, detect undead, divine favor, endure elements, magic weapon, remove fear, resistance, virtue.

2nd—aid, bull's strength, calm emotions, cure moderate wounds, delay poison, remove paralysis, resist elements, shield other.

3rd—cure serious wounds, discern lies, dispel magic, greater magic weapon, magic circle against evil, prayer, remove curse.

4th—cure critical wounds, death ward, dispel evil, freedom of movement, holy sword, neutralize poison.

EX-PALADIN LIBERATORS

It is not altogether uncommon for paladins to slip away from the unswerving path of law in their overriding quest for good and become holy liberators.

For the most part, the ex-paladin who adopts the holy liberator class does not regain any of his lost paladin abilities.

However, in the case of smiting evil and turning undead, the former paladin's levels contribute to his ability in his new class.

Both of these abilities function at a level equal to the character's paladin levels plus his holy liberator levels.

Thus, the ex-paladin's smite evil ability deals extra damage equal to his combined levels, and he turns undead using this combined level as a base.

CELESTIAL COMPANION

Upon or after reaching 5th level, a holy liberator can call a celestial cat, dog, eagle, hawk, horse, owl, pony, or wolf as a companion.

(See Appendix 1 of the Monster Manual for these creatures' basic statistics and Appendix 3 for the celestial template).

This creature may willingly act as a guardian (such as a hawk), a helper (such as a cat), or a mount (such as a horse).

The holy liberator's companion further gains HD and special abilities based on the holy liberator's character level.

The holy liberator may have only one celestial companion at a time.

Should the holy liberator's companion die, he may call for another one after one day.

The new celestial companion has all the accumulated abilities due a companion of the holy liberator's current level.

Character Level: The character level of the holy liberator (the total levels achieved in all his classes).

Bonus HD: These are extra d8 Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier, as normal.

Extra Hit Dice improve the companion's base attack bonus and base save bonuses, as normal.

Natural Armor: This is a bonus to the companion's natural armor rating.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the companion's Strength score.

Int: The companion's Intelligence score (the celestial companion is smarter than normal animals of its kind).

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the companion is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage on a successful saving throw and only half damage on a failed saving throw.

Share Spells: At the holy liberator's option, he may have any spell he casts on himself also affect his companion.

The companion must be within 5 feet.

If the spell has a duration other than instantaneous, the spell stops affecting the companion if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the companion again even if the companion returns to the holy liberator before the duration expires.

Additionally, the holy liberator may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his companion (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself.

The holy liberator and the companion can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the companion's type (magical beast).

Empathic Link (Su): The holy liberator has an empathic link with the companion out to a distance of up to one mile.

The holy liberator cannot see through the companion's eyes, but they can communicate telepathically.

Even intelligent companions see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Because of the empathic link between the companion and the holy liberator, the holy liberator has the same connection to a place or an item that the companion does.

Share Saving Throws: The companion uses its own base save or the holy liberator's, whichever is higher.

Speak with Holy Liberator: The holy liberator and companion can communicate verbally as if they were using a common language.

Other creatures do not understand the communication without magical help.

Blood Bond: The companion gains a +2 bonus on all attacks, checks, and saves if it witnesses the holy liberator being threatened or harmed.

This bonus lasts as long as the threat is immediate and apparent.

Spell Resistance: The companion's spell resistance equals the holy liberator's level + 5.

To affect the companion with a spell, a spellcaster must make a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) at least equal to the companion's spell resistance.

HOSPITALER

It is the duty of knights hospitaler to protect people traveling on religious pilgrimages.

Over the years, this single duty has expanded to include the construction and administration of hospitals and refugee facilities.

Hospitalers are a fighting force of necessity, sworn to poverty, obedience, and the defense of those in their care. NPC hospitalers often travel in groups, usually with pilgrims on their way to or from a site of particular importance to their faith.

Hospitalers may be found running pilgrim hostels, defending temple hospitals, or standing vigil over religious relics and sites.

They seldom go on quests or adventures except to rescue endangered pilgrims or to recover relics or sites from heretics and unbelievers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hospitaler, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Handle Animal: 5 ranks.

Ride: 5 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The hospitaler's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hospitaler prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hospitalers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Turn Undead: A hospitaler gains the ability to turn undead at 3rd level.

She turns undead as a cleric two levels lower.

This stacks with undead turning from other classes.

Add the hospitaler level -2 to the class level for any other classes that have the turning ability.

For example, a 6th-level cleric/4th-level hospitaler turns undead as an 8th-level cleric.

Note that paladins also use their class level -2 to determine their effective turning level, so a 6th-level paladin/4th-level hospitaler turns undead as a 6th-level cleric.

Spells per Day: A hospitaler continues advancing in divine spellcasting ability as well as learning the skills of the hospitalers.

Thus, when a new hospitaler level is gained, the character gains new divine spells per day as if she had gained a level in the cleric class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, greater damage with the smite evil ability, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of hospitaler to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

For example, if Alhandra, an 8th-level paladin, gains a level as a hospitaler, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 9th level as a paladin, but uses the other hospitaler aspects of level progression such as attack bonus and save bonuses. If she next gains a level of paladin, making her a 9th-level paladin/1st-level hospitaler, she gains spells as if she had risen to 10th level as a paladin.

Lay on Hands (Sp): A hospitaler can heal wounds by touch, as the paladin ability.

Any paladin levels add to the hospitaler's level for this purpose.

Remove Disease (Sp): A hospitaler can use remove disease as the paladin ability.

Any paladin levels add to the hospitaler's level for this purpose.

Bonus Feats: At the indicated levels, a hospitaler may take a bonus feat.

These feats are drawn from the following list:

Ambidexterity, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge (Mobility, Spring Attack), Exotic Weapon Proficiency, Expertise (Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Whirlwind Attack), Improved Critical*, Improved Initiative, Improved Unarmed Strike (Deflect Arrows, Stunning Fist), Mounted Combat (Mounted Archery, Trample, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge), Point Blank Shot (Far Shot, Precise Shot, Rapid Shot, Shot on the Run), Power Attack (Cleave, Improved Bull Rush, Sunder, Great Cleave), Quick Draw, Two-Weapon Fighting (Improved Two-Weapon Fighting), Weapon Finesse*, Weapon Focus*.

Feats dependent on other feats are listed parenthetically after the prerequisite feat.

The hospitaler can select feats marked with an asterisk (*) more than once, but for a different weapon each time.

The hospitaler must still meet all prerequisites for a feat, including ability score and base attack bonus minimums.

Important: These feats are in addition to the feat that a character of any class gets every three levels.

The hospitaler is not limited to the list given here when choosing those feats.

Code of Conduct: Hospitalers take an oath of poverty, obedience, and defense of those in their care.

This does not mean that hospitalers live mean, penny-pinching lives.

They share their wealth among themselves and give any excess to their order.

Obedience is not related to character or social rank, but rather to position assigned within the order, and often changes with the situation.

Regardless of their relative ranks, all hospitalers defer to the head of a facility while on the grounds.

Hospitalers must be willing to lay down their lives to protect the pilgrims or hospitaler facilities under their care, but should not do so recklessly.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a hospitaler may continue advancing as a paladin.

EX-HOSPITALERS

A hospitaler who becomes chaotic, who willfully commits an evil act, or who grossly violates the hospitaler code of conduct loses all class features and spells and may not progress in levels as a hospitaler.

She regains her abilities if she atones for her violations (see the atonement spell description, page 176 of the Player's Handbook).

A hospitaler may be a multiclass character, but faces a special restriction.

A hospitaler who gains a new class or, if already a multiclass character, gains a level in a class other than paladin may never again raise her hospitaler level, though she retains all her hospitaler abilities.

The path of the hospitaler, like that of the paladin, requires a constant heart.

Once you have turned off the path, you may never return.

HUNTER OF THE DEAD

The hunter of the dead is the hated enemy of all undead. She spends each restless night tracking undead to their lairs and cleansing the land of their foul presence forever. The hunter of the dead possesses many tools with which to fight against such creatures.

Her skills with arms are the match of any fighter, but, to aid her in the hunt, she also possesses spells and special abilities that draw upon her connection with positive energy.

Most hunters of the dead are clerics or paladins.

Fighters, rangers, monks, druids, and barbarians also make excellent hunters of the dead, while rogues and bards add their subterfuge skills to create a foe that the undead never see coming.

Sorcerers and wizards—especially those with a few levels as a cleric or a paladin—have many advantages when fighting undead, so they should never be discounted as potential hunters of the dead.

As NPCs, hunters of the dead are quiet loners, driven to think of little but their cause.

They usually have some traumatic tale of what brought them to hate the undead, but few are willing to share it with those they meet as they wander from town to town.

In places where spirits are particularly restless and the dead walk in numbers, hunters of the dead gather in secretive orders such as the House of Death to pool their strength and attack their foes together.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hunter of the dead, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Knowledge (undead): 5 ranks.

Special: Ability to turn undead.

Scar of Unlife: The character must have lost one level or had an ability score point permanently drained by an undead creature.

This is the scar of unlife that all hunters of the dead carry.

CLASS SKILLS

The hunter of the dead's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (undead) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Search (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hunter of the dead prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hunters of the dead are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells per Day: A hunter of the dead has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the hunter of the dead must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a hunter of the dead with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast spells.

Hunter of the dead bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + Wisdom modifier.

When the hunter of the dead gets "—" spells of a given level, the character cannot cast any spells of that level.

When the hunter of the dead gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the hunter of the dead gets only bonus spells.

A hunter of the dead without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The hunter of the dead's spell list appears below; she has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

A hunter of the dead prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the hunter of the dead cannot lose a spell to cast a cure spell in its place).

Detect Undead (Sp): At will, the hunter of the dead can detect undead as a spell-like ability.

This ability duplicates the effect of the spell detect undead.

Smite Undead (Su): Once per day, a hunter of the dead of 2nd level or higher can attempt to smite undead with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Wisdom modifier (if positive) to her attack roll and inflicts 1 extra point of damage per level; for example, an 8th-level hunter of the dead armed with a longsword would inflict 1d8+8 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses for high Strength and magical effects that normally apply. If the hunter of the dead accidentally smites a creature that is not undead, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Note: A paladin/hunter of the dead can both smite evil and smite undead in the same day, potentially against the same target (if it's an evil undead).

Spurn Death's Touch (Ex): A 3rd-level hunter of the dead applies her Wisdom modifier (if positive) as an additional bonus on all saving throws against effects and spells used by undead.

Will saves thus add double the normal Wisdom modifier.

True Death (Su): Undead slain by a hunter of the dead, either by melee attacks or spells, can never rise again as undead.

They are forever destroyed.

Extra Turning: At 6th level, a hunter of the dead receives Extra Turning as a bonus feat.

This feat allows the hunter to turn undead four more times per day than normal.

Positive Energy Burst (Su): In lieu of two normal turning attempts, a hunter of the dead of at least 8th level can create a positive energy burst that deals 1d6 points of damage to all undead creatures within 100 feet of the character for every class level of hunter of the dead the character has attained.

Undead are allowed a Reflex save (DC 10 + the class level of the hunter) for half damage.

Sealed Life (Su): Upon reaching 10th level, a hunter of the dead cannot lose levels due to energy draining effects (although death still results in level loss, as do other level- or experience-draining penalties).

HUNTER OF THE DEAD SPELL LIST

Hunters of the dead choose their spells from the following list:

1st—magic weapon, cure light wounds, invisibility to undead, remove fear.

3rd—cure serious wounds, protection from elements, searing light, halt undead.

4th—cure critical wounds, death ward, freedom of movement.

KNIGHT OF THE CHALICE

A knight of the Chalice is a member of an elite knightly organization devoted to fighting demons.

Motivated by a pious hatred of these creatures that embody the principles of chaos and evil, knights of the Chalice learn tactics and gain special abilities to help them in their crusade.

A character who qualifies for entrance into the order of the Chalice is typically a paladin/ranger or a cleric/ranger.

Characters with minimal levels as a ranger/cleric or ranger/paladin can qualify even if they have more levels in other classes—rogue, fighter, and even wizard or sorcerer.

Wizards and sorcerers are rarely drawn to the order's crusade, and cannot qualify as knights until very high levels.

Few monks or bards have enough dedication to exterminating demons to take up this class.

Knights of the Chalice are often lone crusaders, maintaining only loose connections to their order.

NPC knights sometimes gather adventuring bands around themselves for combat support.

A knight of the Chalice could become a temporary ally of a player character party while the party is engaged in a campaign against a demon.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a knight of the Chalice, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +8.

Knowledge (religion): 10 ranks.

Knowledge (the planes): 5 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast divine spells, including protection from evil.

Equipment: Magic (+1 or better) full plate armor.

Special: Has demons as a favored enemy, and has defeated a demon or driven it back to its home plane.

CLASS SKILLS

The knight of the Chalice's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the knight of the Chalice prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knights of the Chalice are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Demonslaying: Knights of the Chalice gain a number of special benefits in combat with demons.

A 1st-level knight of the Chalice gets a +1 competence bonus on attack rolls against demons.

On a successful attack, he deals an additional 1d6 points of damage due to his expertise in combating these creatures. These bonuses increase as the knight advances in level, as shown on Table 3–9.

A 1st-level knight of the Chalice's +1 competence bonus also applies to Intimidate, Listen, Sense Motive, and Spot checks when he uses these skills against demons.

He gets the same bonus on Will saving throws against attacks from demons, and to opposed ability checks he makes against demons.

These bonuses all stack with the knight's favored enemy bonus.

Censure Demons (Su): Knights of the Chalice can censure demons, much as clerics turn undead.

Rather than channeling positive energy, the knight of the Chalice channels energy from the celestial planes of lawful good.

Like a cleric, the knight makes a Charisma check and consults Table 8–16, page 140 of the Player's Handbook.

Instead of using his class level, however, he uses his character level to determine the most powerful demon he can censure.

He then rolls 2d6 + his knight of the Chalice level + his Charisma modifier for censuring damage.

Using both his character level and his knight of the Chalice class level in this manner means that he is more likely to affect a single powerful demon, but unlikely to turn more than one of them.

A censured demon is stunned by the knight's holy power. Stunned creatures lose their Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) and can take no actions.

Foes gain a +2 circumstance bonus to hit stunned creatures.

If a knight of the Chalice attacks a censured demon, the demon can act normally on its next turn.

If the knight of the Chalice's character level is at least twice the demons' Hit Dice, he banishes the demons back to their home plane.

Like a cleric, a knight of the Chalice can make a number of censuring attempts per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

These attempts are separate from any attempts to turn undead.

Spells per Day: A knight of the Chalice has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the knight must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a knight with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Knights of the Chalice bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the knight's Wisdom modifier.

When the knight gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, he gets only bonus spells.

(A knight without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level).

The knight of the Chalice's spell list appears below.

A knight has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just like a cleric.

A knight of the Chalice prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though he cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Spell Focus and Spell Penetration Feats: Knights of the Chalice automatically gain the benefits of the Spell Focus and Spell Penetration feats when casting a targeted spell against a demon.

The saving throw DC for such spells is increased by +2, and the knight gets a +2 bonus on caster level checks to beat the demon's spell resistance.

Courage of Heaven (Su): A knight of the Chalice of 2nd level or higher is immune to fear effects cast or created by demons.

Allies within 10 feet of the knight of the Chalice gain a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against these effects as well.

Heavenly Devotion (Su): At 5th level and above, a knight of the Chalice is immune to enchantment spells and effects cast or created by demons, including charms and suggestions.

Allies within 10 feet of the knight of the Chalice gain a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against these effects as well.

Consecrated Aura (Su): At 8th level and above, a knight of the Chalice exudes a permanent consecrate effect to a radius of 20 feet.

If the knight is within the area of a desecrate spell, both effects are negated until the knight leaves the area or the desecrate spell expires.

If the desecrate spell is enhanced by an altar or other permanent fixture dedicated to an evil deity, the knight's consecrate effect negates the enhancement while the knight remains in the area: Turning penalties are reduced to -3 and undead gain only a +1 profane bonus on their rolls.

Holy Aura (Su): At 10th level, a knight of the Chalice gains the ability to create a holy aura around himself (only) when he is engaged in combat with one or more demons.

The aura's effect is as the spell cast by a 10th-level cleric, but it wards the knight against the attacks, spells, and mental influence of demons only, and only demons can be blinded if they strike the knight.

Knights of the Chalice choose their spells from the following list:

1st—bless water, bless weapon, detect chaos, detect evil, divine favor, doom, endure elements, magic weapon, protection from evil, remove fear, summon monster I.

2nd—aid, bull's strength, consecrate, endurance, resist elements, sound burst, spiritual weapon, summon monster II, undetected alignment, zeal†.

3rd—dispel magic, invisibility purge, magic circle against evil, magic vestment, prayer, protection from elements, searing light, shout, summon monster III.

4th—dimensional anchor, discern lies, dismissal, dispel evil, holy smite, greater magic weapon, lesser aspect of the deity†, lesser planar ally, weapon of the deity†.

† New spell described in Chapter 4 of this book.

KNIGHT OF THE MIDDLE CIRCLE

These knights are members of the Stargazers organization (see Chapter 2 of this book).

Once ordained, knights of the Middle Circle accept strict demands for their allegiance and obedience and undertake many important duties.

They provide security for Stargazer chapterhouses and may be called upon for similar service for allies of the Stargazers. Since the Stargazers welcome members of any class to their ranks, the knights of the Middle Circle often deliver membership invitations to honorable, good adventurers or expert astronomers who have served the Outer Circle for several years.

The knights often offer missions and quests to Outer Circle adventurers, and occasionally lead such adventures.

If a mission is too important for those not sworn to the Stargazers to know of, knights of the Middle Circle may be assigned to work on it secretly under the cover of some more obvious activity.

Knights of the Middle Circle receive messages and instructions from the Inner Circle via secret communications and carrier pigeons.

Thus, they're comfortable working either with animals or with messages that carry hidden meaning.

Because of their exposure to prophecy and various ways of divining the future, knights of the Middle Circle develop extraordinary powers of intuition and prediction.

NPC knights of the Middle Circle may deliver invitations to undertake quests.

They're generally friendly and warm, but evasive when questioned closely about their order.

When asked how the Stargazers decided to undertake a quest, they say that they observe the movements of the stars in the night sky and interpret those movements. When knights undertake a quest without members of the Outer Circle, they never discuss it openly.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a knight of the Middle Circle, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Good, nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Handle Animal: 7 ranks.

Gather Information: 4 ranks.

Innuendo: 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The knight of the Middle Circle class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Innuendo (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex) and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the knight of the Middle Circle prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knights of the Middle Circle are proficient with simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells per Day: To cast a spell, a knight of the Middle Circle must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a knight with a Wisdom score of 10 or lower cannot cast spells.

Knight bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a Difficulty Class of 10 + spell level + Wisdom modifier.

When the knight gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the knight gets only bonus spells.

A paladin without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of the level.

A knight has access to any spell on the list below and can freely choose which to prepare, just as a cleric can.

A knight of the Middle Circle prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the knight cannot use spontaneous casting to substitute a cure spell in place of a prepared spell).

A knight of the Middle Circle's caster level is one-half his knight class level.

Blind-Fight: A knight of the Middle Circle gains this bonus feat at 1st level.

Combat Sense (Ex): A knight of the Middle Circle may designate a single opponent in combat.

Against that opponent, the knight gains a +2 insight bonus to AC and a +2 insight bonus on attacks.

At 5th level, these bonuses increase to +4.

At 10th level, the bonuses increase to +6.

Tongues (Sp): A knight of the Middle Circle must be able to communicate with those he meets, acting as the eyes and ears of the Stargazers.

Beginning at 2nd level, he can invoke tongues (as the spell) a number of times per day equal to his knight class level plus his Charisma bonus.

True Strike (Sp): At 3rd level, a knight of the Middle Circle can use true strike (as the spell) once per day.

He can use this ability once more per three levels advanced (twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 9th level).

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a knight of the Middle Circle may continue advancing as a paladin.

KNIGHT OF THE MIDDLE CIRCLE SPELL LIST

Knights of the Middle Circle choose their spells from the following list:

1st—bleed, bleed weapon, cure light wounds, detect poison, detect undead, divine favor, magic weapon, protection from evil, read magic.

2nd—augury, shield other, undetected alignment.

3rd—cure moderate wounds, discern lies, dispel magic, greater magic weapon, prayer.

The Inner Circle

Those who wish to advance to the Inner Circle must have at least one level as a paladin and must be able to gain more (they must be lawful good, have atoned for any violations, and must not have added levels of a class that forbids further advancement as a paladin).

The Stargazers

The Stargazers charge minimal dues of all Middle and Inner Circle members, but primarily funds itself through private donations made by wealthy knights in addition to their dues. In return, the Stargazers provide housing, food, training, and assistance (for instance, they might help a paladin discover where to find a special mounts). The Stargazers sometimes provide special equipment of magic items for truly important quests.

MASTER OF SHROUDS

The master of shrouds is an evil spellcaster who magically seizes incorporeal undead and sets them to do her bidding. The wrathful undead spread fear and death as they vent their anger at being disturbed.

While a master of shrouds has some divine spells, her primary tool is the ability to summon incorporeal undead creatures to serve her.

Paladins never become masters of shrouds, though ex-paladins may do so if they turn far enough from their lawful good roots.

Evil clerics most often become masters of shrouds.

Druids and rangers may also join the ranks of this prestige class provided they acquire enough levels and have the proper attitude.

NPC masters of shrouds generally operate in secret, pursuing their evil plans most often under cover of darkness.

They may work individually or in groups, depending on their alignment.

They rarely stay in one place for long, and rarely work in groups larger than four, to avoid attracting too much attention from paladins and good clerics, not to mention hunters of the dead.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of shrouds, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Save Bonus: Will +5.

Concentration: 10 ranks.

Spellcraft: 10 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast divine spells, and access to at least one of these domains: Death, Evil, Protection.

A character who can cast at least one spell from a domain counts as having access for this purpose.

Special: Ability to channel negative energy.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of shrouds class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master of shrouds prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of shrouds are proficient with all simple weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells: A master of shrouds casts spells as a cleric (see Table 3–6: The Cleric, page 30 of the Player's Handbook) and has full access to the general cleric spell list.

Master of shrouds levels are added to cleric levels to determine spells per day and spell effects.

In addition, a master of shrouds gains access to the domains of Death, Evil, and Protection.

Spells per Day: A master of shrouds continues advancing in divine spellcasting ability as well as learning the skills of the masters of shrouds.

Thus, when a new master of shrouds level is gained, the character gains new divine spells per day as if she had gained a level in the cleric class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, wild shape ability, and so on).

This means that she adds the level of master of shrouds to the level of another divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

Extra Turning Feat: A master of shrouds gains Extra Turning as a bonus feat.

This adds four to the number of turning attempts she can make in a day.

Summon Undead I (Sp): This spell-like ability works like the summon monster I spell, with the following exceptions: A master of shrouds may summon any combination of shadows and allips totaling no more than two creatures. At the instant the ability is used, the master of shrouds may set a shorter duration than the usual 1 round per master level.

A master who can communicate with the summoned undead can direct them as per the summon monster spell. If the summoned creatures remain after the last enemy is gone, they will attack the master of shrouds unless she succeeds at a turning check for each creature every round until they disappear.

The summon undead I ability can be used a number of times each day equal to three plus the master of shrouds' Charisma bonus (minimum once).

Summoning Undead

Once a master of shrouds summons undead creatures, only three outcomes are possible. The undead may be slain or driven off in combat. The undead may depart when the spell duration ends. The undead attack the master of shrouds when their no other enemies remain to be dealt with. In the last case, the master of shrouds must rely on other powers or allies to save her from the wrath of the summoned undead.

Summon Undead II (Sp): As summon undead I, but the master of shrouds may summon two wraiths, or any combination of shadows and allips totaling no more than four creatures.

Summon Undead III (Sp): As summon undead I, but the master of shrouds may summon two spectres, or any combination of wraiths, shadows, and allips totaling no more than four creatures.

Summon Undead IV (Sp): As summon undead I, but the master of shrouds may summon any combination of spectres, wraiths, shadows, and allips totaling no more than eight creatures.

MASTER OF SHROUDS SPELL LIST

Masters of shrouds choose their divine spells from the following list:

- 1st—disrupt undead, chill touch, ray of enfeeblement.
- 2nd—ghoul touch, scare, spectral hand.
- 3rd—contagion, gentle repose, halt undead, vampiric touch.
- 4th—enervation, fear.
- 5th—magic jar.

Access to these spells does not increase the number of spells a master of shrouds can cast each day.

SACRED EXORCIST

Through elaborate rites that may include dancing, drumming, beating a possessed person on the soles of the feet, liberal use of holy water, or many other means, sacred exorcists hope to drive away the spiritual forces of evil, preventing them from causing harm to the bodies and souls of humanity.

Sacred exorcists are serious about their work and very devoted to their religion.

Not all of them are dour and grim, but most are. Their determination to combat the forces of evil in the world—along with their special ability to do so—more than makes up for their lack of humor.

Most sacred exorcists are clerics or paladins who are specifically trained by their church for the work they are called to do.

Most churches select only those who have shown a clear dedication to the work of opposing evil outsiders, as well as exemplary faith and devotion.

Occasionally, a wizard qualifies to fill this role in a church that is tolerant toward arcane magic, but members of other classes rarely become sacred exorcists.

NPC sacred exorcists are usually loners who travel from city to city in the service of their church.

As highly specialized professionals, their services are frequently in demand, though few cities would have need for a full-time sacred exorcist.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sacred exorcist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Knowledge (the planes): 7 ranks.

Knowledge (religion): 10 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast dismissal or dispel evil Special:

Adopting this prestige class requires the sanction of a church or order that ordains sacred exorcists.

Only characters judged by their church to be exemplary in faith and devotion, strong of will and upright in morality, are made sacred exorcists.

CLASS SKILLS

The sacred exorcist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sacred exorcist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sacred exorcists are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or with shields, but usually carry these proficiencies from their previous class.

Spells per Day: A sacred exorcist advances in spellcasting ability as well as learning the skills of exorcism.

Thus, when a new sacred exorcist level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, more frequent remove disease, and so on).

This means that she adds the level of sacred exorcist to the level of another spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

For example, if Delliva, an 8th-level cleric, gains a level as a sacred exorcist, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 9th level as a cleric, but uses the other sacred exorcist aspects of level progression such as base attack bonus and save bonuses.

If she next gains a level as a cleric, making her a 9th-level cleric/1st-level sacred exorcist, she gains spells as if she had risen to 10th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a sacred exorcist, the player must decide which class to assign each level of sacred exorcist for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Prestige Domain: Upon adopting the sacred exorcist class, the character gains access to the Exorcism domain (see Chapter 4: Divine Magic), including its granted power (the ability to force possessing spirits out of the bodies they inhabit).

The Exorcism domain spells can be chosen as daily domain spells.

Chosen Foe (Ex): A sacred exorcist designates either undead or outsiders as her chosen foe.

Extensive study and special training in the proper techniques for combating this foe gives the sacred exorcist a +1 competence bonus on Bluff, Intimidate, Listen, Sense Motive, and Spot skill checks and caster level checks to overcome any spell resistance of the chosen foe.

At 4th level the bonus increases to +2, and at 8th level it increases to +3.

Turn Undead (Su): Sacred exorcists can turn undead as clerics do.

A sacred exorcist who also has levels as a cleric or paladin adds her sacred exorcist level to her cleric level (or her paladin level –2) to determine her effective level with respect to turning attempts.

Resist Possession (Ex): Sacred exorcists of at least 2nd level receive a +4 sacred bonus on their saving throws against magic jar spells or similar abilities (including a ghost's malevolence ability), and a +2 sacred bonus on dispel checks made to dispel such effects.

They also get a +2 sacred bonus on their saving throws against all charm and compulsion spells and effects cast by evil outsiders or undead.

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, a sacred exorcist of at least 2nd level can detect evil as a spell-like ability.

This ability duplicates the effects of the spell detect evil.

Extra Turning: At 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, a sacred exorcist gains Extra Turning as a bonus feat.

Each time a sacred exorcist gains this feat, she adds four to the number of turning attempts she can make in a day.

Dispel Evil (Sp): At 4th level, the sacred exorcist gains the ability to use dispel evil as a spell-like ability once per week.

At 7th level, she can use this ability twice per week.

At 10th level, she can use it three times per week.

Consecrated Presence (Su): At 5th level and higher, a sacred exorcist is surrounded by an aura of positive energy that extends 20 feet from her presence.

This aura duplicates the effects of a consecrate spell, but it moves with the sacred exorcist.

If the sacred exorcist enters an area affected by a desecrate spell, both effects are negated while the sacred exorcist remains in the area.

If the sacred exorcist is the target of a desecrate spell, her aura is suppressed for the duration of the desecrate spell.

SACRED FIST

Sacred fists are independent organizations found within many temples.

Their ascetic members have turned their divine magic inward, bringing their bodies and wills into harmony. Sacred fists have sworn the use of weapons and heavy armor.

They consider their bodies and minds gifts from their deity, and they believe that not developing those gifts to their fullest potential is a sin.

Spellcasting does not dishonor them nor their deity.

Sacred fists are strong in faith, will, and body.

Clerics are excellent candidates for sacred fists orders.

Paladins may also choose to join them, but are seldom comfortable surrendering the trappings of their calling.

Fighters, rogues, bards, and even ex-monks may make good candidates, provided they have enough levels in a class that grants divine spells.

Druids often find the class's combat skills useful, as do sorcerers and wizards who have some levels as a cleric or other source of divine spells.

NPC sacred fists are as varied as their faiths.

In general, they travel the land individually, lending their skills to those who need protection or assistance.

While a sacred fist from a temple of Pelor might humbly assist almost anyone who asked, one from Erythnul's faith might help only when it gains him something.

Sacred fists from the temple of Kord tend to be genial brawlers, humble in victory and gracious in defeat.

All sacred fists seek challenges that allow them to further develop their fighting skills.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sacred fist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Feats: Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Unarmed Strike.

Spells: Ability to cast divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The sacred fist class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sacred fist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sacred fists surrender the use of weapons and shields.

They may use only light armor without breaking their religious discipline.

Code of Conduct: A member of a sacred fist order refuses to use any weapon.

A sacred fist who knowingly carries or uses a weapon loses all class spells and features and advances no farther as a sacred fist until he atones for his action (see the atonement spell description, page 176 of the Players Handbook).

Spells per Day: A sacred fist has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the sacred fist must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a sacred fist with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast spells.

Sacred fist bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + Wisdom modifier.

When the sacred fist gets "—" spells for a given level, the character cannot cast any spells of that level.

When the sacred fist gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the sacred fist gets only bonus spells.

A sacred fist without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The sacred fist's spell list appears below; he has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

A sacred fist prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though he cannot lose a spell to cast a cure spell in its place).

Free Domain: Upon adopting the sacred fist class, the character chooses one domain from his deity's list.

Unarmed Fighting (Ex): A sacred fist is highly trained in fighting unarmed, giving him considerable advantages when doing so.

A sacred fist's attacks may be with either fist interchangeably or even with elbows, knees, and feet.

There is no such thing as an off-hand attack for a sacred fist striking unarmed.

He may choose to deal either subdual or normal damage with his attack.

He deals more damage than normal, as summarized on the table below.

Level	Size of Sacred Fist
	Small	Medium-size or larger
1st	1d4	1d6
5th	1d6	1d8
8th	1d8	1d10
10th	1d10	1d12

Flurry Attack (Ex): The sacred fist may strike with a flurry of blows at the expense of accuracy.

When doing so, he may make one extra attack in a round at his highest base attack, but this attack and each other attack made that round suffer a -2 penalty apiece.

This penalty applies for 1 round, so it affects attacks of opportunity the sacred fist might make before his next action.

The sacred fist must use the full attack action (see page 124 of the Player's Handbook) to strike with a flurry of blows.

Puissant Fists (Su): A sacred fist ignores some damage resistance.

At 1st level, treat his strikes as +1 weapons for the purposes of damage resistance.

Starting at 3rd level, treat his strikes as +2 weapons for that purpose.

Starting at 6th level, treat them as +3 weapons, and at 9th level, treat them as +4 weapons.

This ability does not change the sacred fist's chance to hit or the damage dealt.

Evasion (Ex): A sacred fist can dodge and avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility.

If a sacred fist makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally inflicts half damage on a successful save (such as a red dragon's fiery breath or a fireball spell), the sacred fist instead suffers no damage.

Evasion can only be used if the sacred fist is wearing light armor or no armor.

Combat Casting (Ex): At 2nd level, a sacred fist gains this feat as a bonus feat.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a sacred fist gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. (He still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 5th level, the sacred fist can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of his as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies other characters the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack him.

The exception to this defense is that another character at least four levels higher than the character can flank him (and thus sneak attack him, if a rogue).

Uncanny dodge can only be used if the sacred fist is wearing light armor or no armor.

Blindsight (Ex): This ability, gained at 6th level, grants sensitivity to vibrations, scent, and acute hearing so that the sacred fist maneuvers and fights as well as a sighted creature.

His senses extend in a 30-foot radius.

Invisibility and darkness are irrelevant, though he still can't discern ethereal beings.

Sacred fists do not need to make Spot or Listen checks to notice creatures within range.

Sacred Flame (Sp): At 7th level, a sacred fist may use a standard action to invoke sacred flames around his hands and feet.

Instead of normal damage, a successful attack with these sacred flames deals damage as follows: 1d6 + Wisdom modifier if positive + sacred fist class level.

The attack has a maximum possible damage of 1d6+15 points.

At least half the damage is fire damage, and the rest is sacred energy (and thus not subject to effects that reduce fire damage).

A sacred flame attack may be combined with a flurry attack.

No Shadow Blows (Ex): Starting at 8th level, a sacred fist may add a positive Wisdom modifier to both attack and damage rolls.

Also, for purposes of countering damage reduction, his unarmed blows are considered magic weapons with an enhancement bonus equal to his Wisdom bonus, and this bonus is cumulative with that of puissant fists.

The sacred fist's mind, body, and will are forged into one instrument.

Inner Armor (Ex): At 10th level, a sacred fist's inner tranquility protects him from external threats.

He may invoke a +4 concentration bonus to AC, a +4 resistance bonus on all saves, and spell resistance equal to his class level for a number of rounds equal to his Wisdom modifier.

If his Wisdom modifier is +0 or negative, he cannot use this ability.

He may use inner armor a number of times per day equal to his class level.

SACRED FIST SPELL LIST

Sacred fists have access to spells appropriate for their alignment, provided those spells have a range of touch or personal.

This list excludes spells available only as domain spells.

Such spells would be available to a sacred fist with access to the domain.

1st—*bless water, burial blessing†, comprehend language, *cure light wounds, *curse water, divine favor, endure elements, entropic shield, *inflict light wounds, invisibility to undead, magic stone, *magic weapon, *protection from chaos/evil/good/law, sanctuary, shield of faith.

2nd—aid, augury, *brambles†, bull's strength, *cure moderate wounds, death knell, delay poison, endurance, gentle repose, *inflict moderate wounds, lesser restoration, resist elements, speak with animals, undetected alignment.

TEMPLAR

Sworn to the defense of a temple site, the templar is a holy warrior blessed by her deity with combat prowess and great endurance.

She bears her deity's favored weapon into battle and fights her deity's enemies without question or hesitation.

In addition to defending the temple itself, a templar may be charged with additional duties, including a campaign to attack foes on their own home ground.

Faithful people of all professions can enter the ranks of the templars; clerics and paladins are especially likely to do so.

Some temples (such as those of Boccob or Wee Jas) welcome wizards and sorcerers to become templars, valuing those characters' ability to use arcane magic combined with the martial training of the templar.

Likewise, Olidammara's temples are often guarded by rogue/templars, who combine combat training with sneak attack tactics.

Ranger/templars serve in temples of Ehlonna and Obad-Hai, while barbarian/templars are not unknown in temples of Kord or Erythnul.

Only monks, with their own specialized combat training, are unlikely to adopt the templar class.

NPC templars usually live cloistered in temple buildings or attached quarters.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a templar, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Knowledge (religion): 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Weapon Focus (with her deity's favored weapon).

CLASS SKILLS

The templar's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the templar prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Templars are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Mettle (Su): A templar's special blessing allows her to shrug off magical effects that would otherwise harm her.

If a templar makes a successful Will or Fortitude saving throw that would normally reduce the spell's effect, she suffers no effect from the spell at all.

Only those spells with a Saving Throw entry of "Will partial", "Fortitude half", or similar entries can be negated through this ability.

Weapon Specialization: A templar gains the Weapon Specialization feat with her deity's favored weapon.

Spells per Day: A templar has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the templar must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a templar with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Templar bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the templar's Wisdom modifier.

When the templar gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, she gets only bonus spells.

(A templar without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level).

The templar's spell list appears below.

A templar has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just like a cleric.

A templar prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the templar cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Smite (Su): Once per day, a templar of 2nd level or higher may make a single melee attack with a +4 attack bonus and a damage bonus equal to her templar level (if she hits).

The templar must declare the smite before making the attack.

At 7th level, the templar can smite twice per day.

If the templar has a smite evil or smite ability (for being a paladin or a cleric with the Destruction domain) already, she can use the ability one extra time per day (two extra times at 7th level).

The attack bonus does not increase, but the damage bonus is based on the character's combined level (templar level plus cleric or paladin level).

Damage Reduction (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, templars have the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 1 from the damage the templar takes each time she is dealt damage.

At 6th level, this damage reduction rises to 2, and at 9th level, it rises to 3.

Bonus Feat: At 4th level and again at 8th level, the templar gets a bonus feat.

These bonus feats must be drawn from the following list: Ambidexterity, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge (Mobility, Spring Attack), Exotic Weapon Proficiency*, Expertise (Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Whirlwind Attack), Improved Critical*, Improved Initiative, Improved Unarmed Strike (Deflect Arrows, Stunning Fist), Mounted Combat (Mounted Archery, Trample, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge), Point Blank Shot (Far Shot, Precise Shot, Rapid Shot, Shot on the Run), Power Attack (Cleave, Improved Bull Rush, Sunder, Great Cleave), Quick Draw, Two-Weapon Fighting (Improved Two-Weapon Fighting), Weapon Finesse*, Weapon Focus*.

Feats dependent on other feats are listed parenthetically after the prerequisite feat.

A character can select feats marked with an asterisk (*) more than once, but it must be for a different weapon each time.

Characters must still meet all prerequisites for a feat, including ability score and base attack bonus minimums.

TEMPLAR SPELL LIST

Templars choose their spells from the following list:

1st—bless, cause fear, command, divine favor, entropic shield, magic weapon, mount, shield of faith.

2nd—aid, bulls strength, calm emotions, endurance, enthrall, hold person, shield other, spiritual weapon.

3rd—blindness/deafness, daylight, dispel magic, invisibility purge, magic vestment, negative energy protection, prayer, searing light.

4th—divine power, freedom of movement, greater magic weapon, status.

Warpriests are fierce, earthy clerics who pray for peace but prepare for war.

Their strong wills, powerful personalities, and devotion to their deities make them fearsome combatants.

Clerics make good warpriests; members of other classes need levels as a cleric before they can qualify as warpriests because of the domain requirements.

Most NPC warpriests spend their time preparing for war. This effort includes personal training for combat, prayer, training with the local ruler's army, and studying history. Warpriests tend to have the more extroverted characteristics associated with their deities.

Occasionally they can be found scouting terrain in peacetime, and some have been known to hide their identities to spy on enemy nations.

They rarely go on adventures, and when they do it's to obtain some artifact or wondrous weapon to increase their prowess.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warpriest, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Diplomacy: 5 ranks.

Sense Motive: 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Leadership.

Spells: Access to at least one of these domains: Destruction, Protection, Strength, War.

A character who can cast at least one spell from a domain counts as having access for this purpose.

Special: Ability to channel positive or negative energy.

CLASS SKILLS

The warpriest class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Knowledge (War) (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the warpriest prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Warpriests have proficiency with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and all shields.

Spells per Day: A warpriest continues advancing in divine spellcasting ability.

When a warpriest gains a new even-numbered level, the character gains new divine spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, more frequent remove disease, and so on).

For example, an 8th-level cleric/2nd-level warpriest gains divine spells per day as if he had risen to 9th level as a cleric.

When he next gains a level as a warpriest, making him an 8th-level cleric/3rd-level warpriest, his number of divine spells per day does not change; but when he improves his warpriest level to 4th, he gains divine spells per day as if he had risen to 10th level as a cleric.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a warpriest, the player must decide which class to assign each even-numbered level of warpriest for the purpose of determining divine spells per day.

Prestige Domain: Upon adopting the warpriest class, the character gains access to the prestige domain of Glory (if he channels positive energy) or Domination (if he channels negative energy).

At fourth level, the warpriest gains access to the prestige domain of Divination.

Turn or Rebuke Undead (Su): Levels of warpriest count toward cleric or paladin levels when turning or rebuking undead.

Rally (Ex): A warpriest who currently is not suffering from a fear effect can use this ability as a standard action.

Allies within 60 feet who are suffering from any fear effect and who can hear the warpriest are allowed an immediate Will saving throw at the DC of the fear effect, with a +1 morale bonus per warpriest level.

Inflame (Ex): By giving a stirring speech for at least 5 minutes prior to battle, the warpriest provides those who listen a morale bonus on saving throws against any charm or fear effect.

The bonus begins at +2 for a 2nd-level warpriest and increases by +2 at each even-numbered level thereafter (+4 at 4th level, +6 at 6th level, and so on).

This effect lasts for 5 minutes after the speech ends, plus 1 minute per level of the warpriest.

The warpriest also gains the bonus.

Healing Circle (Sp): Once per day, the warpriest may use healing circle (as the spell).

Heroes' Feast (Sp): Once per day, the warpriest may use heroes' feast (as the spell).

Fear Aura (Su): Once per day the warpriest can project a fear aura to a radius of 20 feet for 1 round per warpriest level.

Foes must make a Will save (DC 10 + warpriest level + Cha bonus) or be affected as if by a fear spell.

Mass Haste (Sp): Once per day, the warpriest can use mass haste (as the spell).

Mass Healing (Sp): Once per day, the warpriest can use mass healing (as the spell).

Implacable Foe (Sp): At 10th level, the warpriest can channel enough positive energy to allies within a 100-foot radius that they will continue to fight even after suffering mortal wounds.

Using this ability is a move-equivalent action and requires concentration.

While in use, allies within the radius who take enough damage to become disabled or dying ignore the effects of that damage and continue fighting.

Death occurs instantly at -20 hit points.

When the ability ends, either because the warpriest stops concentrating, fails a Concentration check, or becomes disabled or worse, then the full effects of all damage take effect immediately.

Multiclass Note: Warpriest characters who gain levels outside the warpriest class must make an act of atonement (see the atonement spell description, page 176 of the Player's Handbook) before they can gain further levels as a warpriest.

DEITIES AND DEMIGODS (3.0)

BERSERK

Berserks are warriors who dress themselves in bearskins (“berserk” comes from “bear sark”, or “bear shirt”), taking advantage of the fear most people have for wild animals and simultaneously inviting the wild rage of the animal into the warrior’s body.

Berserks whip themselves into a battle frenzy, biting their shields and howling like animals.

They are ferocious fighters and seemingly insensitive to pain while this madness lasts.

Berserks make formidable enemies.

In their rage they have even been known to attack the boulders and trees of the forest, and it is not uncommon for them to kill their own people.

Barbarians generally disdain berserks, whose lack of control in battle goes beyond even barbarians’ legendary rages.

The Asgardian gods are often arcane spellcasters themselves, so even wizards and sorcerers may find themselves “blessed” with battle fury.

As nonplayer characters, berserks are indistinguishable from other fighters and warriors until their madness overtakes them.

They rarely travel together, knowing firsthand how dangerous they can be to their own allies.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a berserk, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (medium), Martial Weapon Proficiency (battleaxe, longsword, or warhammer), Shield Proficiency.

CLASS SKILLS

The berserk’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the berserk prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Berserks gain proficiency with light armor as well as all simple and martial melee weapons, if they did not have these proficiencies from a previous class.

Battle Fury (Ex): Starting at 1st level, berserks can enter battle fury as a standard action.

They gain +6 to Strength, +6 to Constitution, and a +3 morale bonus on Will saves, but suffer a –2 penalty to AC while in battle fury.

The increase in Constitution increases the berserk’s hit points by 3 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the fury when the Constitution score drops back to normal.

(These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are; see Temporary Hit Points in Chapter 8 of the Player’s Handbook).

While in his fury, a berserk cannot use skills or abilities that require patience and concentration, such as moving silently or casting spells (the only class skills he can’t use are Animal Empathy and Wilderness Lore).

He cannot use ranged weapons.

He can use any feat he might have except for Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus (if it’s tied to a skill that requires patience or concentration).

While in a fury, berserks attack every being they can see. When a berserk begins attacking a foe, she continues until that foe dies, the berserk dies or becomes incapacitated, or the fury ends.

In order to avoid attacking a friend or innocent bystander, the berserk must make a Will save (DC 15 + the number of rounds already spent in a fury).

A fit of battle fury lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the character’s (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

The berserk may not prematurely end the battle fury voluntarily.

If there are no longer any beings in sight, the berserk randomly attacks walls, rocks, trees, doors, or anything else she can see.

At the end of a fury, the berserk is fatigued (–2 to Strength, –2 to Dexterity, can’t charge or run) for the duration of that encounter.

The berserk can only fly into a fury once per encounter and only a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Movement Bonus (Ex): At 1st level, berserks increase their movement rate by 10 feet.

This bonus only applies to the berserk’s human and hybrid forms.

Beast Shape (Su): At 3rd level, the berserk selects a totem animal from the following list: bear (brown), boar, eagle, raven, whale (cachalot), or wolf.

A number of times per day determined by level, the berserk may change shape into a hybrid creature with features that combine human and animal, or into the animal itself.

A hybrid retains the use of human arms, hands, and intelligence, but loses the power of speech.

A hybrid cannot use skills or abilities that require patience and concentration, such as moving silently or casting spells (the only class skills he can't use are Animal Empathy and Wilderness Lore).

He can use any feat he might have except for Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus (if it's tied to a skill that requires patience or concentration).

Hybrids also gain +2 Strength and +2 Constitution.

The increase in Constitution increases the berserk's hit points by 1 point per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the fury when the Constitution score drops back to normal.

(These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are; see Temporary Hit Points in Chapter 8 of the Player's Handbook).

While in animal form, the berserk gains the abilities and movement speeds of the animal and retains her human intelligence.

A berserk cannot use battle fury while in either hybrid or animal form, nor can she use beast shape while in battle fury.

A berserk can always change back to human form. No equipment or clothing transforms with the berserk.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the berserk gains the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 1 from the damage the berserk takes each time she is dealt damage.

At 4th level, this damage reduction rises to 2.

At 6th level it rises to 3.

At 8th level it rises to 4.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0.

JUSTICIAR OF TAIIA

Justiciars of Taiia are the members of the Purifying Flame sect whose oracular ability is limited, but who fulfill the role of carrying out Taiia's sentence against wrongdoers. They are devoted to Taiia's Destroyer aspect, revering the consuming power of the sun's flames, and emulating their righteous wrath.

Justiciars of Taiia bring a range of experience to their unusual calling.

Some are devout clerics, while others are scurrilous rogues. Fighters, monks, and, especially, rangers are often drawn to the class, while paladins and druids rarely qualify.

Wizards and sorcerers have been known to adopt the class as well, though it is rare.

Some justiciars also have levels in the assassin prestige class.

NPC justiciars of Taiia are respected but feared.

In areas where this sect is politically powerful, justiciars have the means and the freedom to bring their enemies to an unpleasant end.

Even where their power suffers legal curtailment, they employ any means available to them to bring their foes to "justice".

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a justiciar of Taiia, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Patron Deity: Taiia.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 6 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The justiciar of Taiia's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the justiciar of Taiia prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: At 1st level, a justiciar of Taiia gains any one weapon proficiency feat (Simple Weapon Proficiency, Martial Weapon Proficiency with a certain weapon, or Exotic Weapon Proficiency with a certain weapon) as a bonus feat.

Otherwise, justiciars do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a justiciar of Taiia gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the justiciar must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + spell level, so a justiciar with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Justiciar bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the justiciar's Wisdom modifier (if any).

When the justiciar gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the justiciar gets only bonus spells.

A justiciar without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The justiciar's spell list appears below.

A justiciar prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the justiciar cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Sneak Attack (Ex): If a justiciar of Taiia can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Any time the justiciar's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the justiciar flanks the target, the justiciar's attack deals extra damage.

The extra damage is +1d6 at 1st level and an additional 1d6 every three levels thereafter.

Should the justiciar score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

A justiciar of Taiia cannot make a sneak attack to deal subdual damage.

The justiciar must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The justiciar cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

A justiciar of Taiia can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Additionally, any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks.

If a justiciar gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Combat Sense (Ex): A justiciar of at least 2nd level may designate a single opponent in combat.

Against that opponent, the justiciar gains a +2 insight bonus to AC and a +2 insight bonus on attack rolls.

At 5th level, these bonuses increase to +4.

At 8th level, they increase to +6.

Augury (Sp): At 3rd level, a justiciar of Taiia gains the ability to use augury as a spell-like ability once per day as a cleric of the justiciar's level.

At 6th level, he can use this ability twice per day, and at 9th level he can use it three times per day.

Divination (Sp): A 5th-level justiciar can use divination as a spell-like ability once per day as a cleric of the justiciar's level.

At 10th level, he gains the ability to use divination twice per day.

EX-JUSTICIARS

A justiciar of Taiia who falls from the favor of the Purifying Flame—by refusing to carry out his assignments or joining another sect—cannot gain additional levels as a justiciar but retains all justiciar abilities.

If a justiciar ever leaves the church of Taiia, he loses his spells and spell-like abilities but retains his other powers.

JUSTICIAR OF TAIIA SPELL LIST

Justiciars of Taiia choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: bane, cause fear, command, deathwatch, divine favor, doom, magic weapon.

2nd Level: aid, bull's strength, enthrall, hold person, spiritual weapon, zone of truth.

3rd Level: bestow curse, blindness/deafness, contagion, magic vestment, prayer, searing light.

4th Level: commune, discern lies, divine power, greater magic weapon.

SOLDIER OF LIGHT

The Soldiers of Light are a military order of the church of Elishar, dedicated to open warfare against the minions of Toldoth in anticipation of the final conflict between Toldoth's forces and the hosts of Elishar.

Every soldier's dream is to fight alongside Elishar in the great battle and help achieve the ultimate victory of the light.

To that end, the Soldiers of Light practice a rigorous discipline of military training, prayer, and asceticism to ensure that they are prepared for the final battle, whenever it should occur.

The soldier of light prestige class bears a certain resemblance to the paladin and the blackguard, military champions devoted to a particular alignment.

It attracts followers of Elishar from a variety of different classes.

Clerics, fighters, and rangers are the most common, but martial-minded rogues and bards, and even some wizards and sorcerers join the order and adopt the prestige class. Barbarians and monks are barred by virtue of their alignment, but former members of both classes have been known to join the order after abandoning their past classes. NPC soldiers of the light are found wherever there is evil to combat.

They often cooperate with paladins and other allies of good alignment.

The order itself is structured fairly loosely, with some close-knit cells and a number of “members at large” who travel widely and adventure extensively.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a soldier of light, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Alignment: Neutral good.

Patron Deity: Elishar.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The soldier of light’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the soldier of light prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Soldiers of light are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with all armor and shields.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a soldier of light gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the soldier must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + spell level, so a soldier with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Soldier bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the soldier’s Wisdom modifier (if any).

When the soldier gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the soldier gets only bonus spells.

A soldier without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The soldier’s spell list appears below.

A soldier of light prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does.

Spontaneous Casting: Since soldiers of light are so attuned to positive energy, they can spontaneously cast cure spells just as a good cleric can.

The soldier can convert any prepared divine spell—including soldier of light spells, cleric spells, ranger spells, or even druid spells—into a cure spell of the same level.

Detect Undead (Sp): At will, the soldier of light can detect undead as a spell-like ability.

This ability duplicates the effects of the spell detect undead.

Turn Undead (Su): A soldier of light can turn undead.

He may use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

He turns undead as a cleric of his soldier of light level.

If the soldier can already turn undead, his effective turning level is his previous effective level plus his soldier of light level.

He does not gain extra turning attempts in a day.

Extra Turning: As a feat, a soldier of light may take Extra Turning.

This feat allows the soldier to turn undead four more times per day than normal.

A soldier can take this feat multiple times, gaining four extra daily turning attempts each time.

Divine Grace (Su): A soldier of light of 2nd level or higher applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

Smite Undead (Su): Once per day, a soldier of light of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite undead with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Wisdom modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

If the soldier of light accidentally smites a creature that is not undead, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Positive Fortitude (Su): A soldier of light of at least 3rd level gains a +2 sacred bonus on all saving throws against necromantic spells or effects, as well as energy drain attacks.

Energion Companion: At 4th level, a soldier of the light can summon a xag-ya, an outsider formed of positive energy.

This xag-ya serves as a companion to the soldier and can communicate telepathically with him when it is within range and line of sight (though its thoughts are sometimes alien and cryptic).

When the soldier reaches 8th level, he can summon an additional energion and add +2 HD (with all attendant benefits, including base attack bonus and saving throw bonus increases) to both xag-ya companions.

The xag-ya’s statistics are included in abbreviated format below; the creature is fully described in Manual of the Planes. They and the negative-energy xeg-yi are collectively called energions.

If an energion companion is killed, or the soldier of light chooses to dismiss it, the soldier of light must attempt a Fortitude saving throw (DC 15).

If the saving throw fails, the soldier of light loses 200 experience points per soldier level.

A successful saving throw reduces the loss by half, to 100 XP per class level.

The soldier’s level can never go below 0 as the result of an energion’s dismissal or death.

A killed or dismissed energion companion cannot be replaced for a year and a day.

Divine Vengeance (Su): At 5th level, a soldier of light gains the ability to channel positive energy in a melee attack to deal additional damage against undead.

The soldier spends one of his turn attempts to add 2d6 points of sacred damage to all his successful melee attacks against undead until the end of his next action.

(Note: This ability is identical with the Divine Vengeance feat described in Defenders of the Faith.)

If you are using that book, soldiers of light gain that feat as a bonus feat at 5th level, even if they do not have the prerequisite Extra Turning feat.

Fast Healing (Su): At 7th level, the positive energy infusing the soldier of light’s body allows him to heal his wounds quickly.

At the beginning of each of his turns, he heals 1 hit point.

If he has taken both subdual and normal damage, he heals subdual damage first.

Fast healing does not restore hit points lost from starvation, thirst, or suffocation.

At 10th level, the soldier of light heals 2 hit points per round.

Positive Energy Burst (Su): In lieu of two normal turning attempts, a soldier of light of at least 8th level can create a positive energy burst that deals 1d6 points of damage per class level to all undead creatures within 100 feet of the character.

Undead are allowed a Reflex save (DC 10 + the soldier's class level) for half damage.

EX-SOLDIERS OF THE LIGHT

A soldier of the light who ceases to be good or who violates the tenets of his faith loses all special abilities and spells, and may not progress in levels as a soldier.

He regains his abilities if he atones for his violations (see the atonement spell description in the Player's Handbook).

SOLDIER OF THE LIGHT SPELL LIST

Soldiers of the light choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: bless, bless water, bless weapon, cure light wounds, detect evil, invisibility to undead, light, magic weapon, protection from evil, shield of faith.

2nd Level: aid, consecrate, cure moderate wounds, daylight, lesser restoration, make whole, shield other.

3rd Level: cure serious wounds, greater magic weapon, magic circle against evil, negative energy protection, prayer, remove disease, searing light.

4th Level: cure critical wounds, death ward, holy smite, holy sword, lesser planar ally, restoration.

DRAONOMICON (3.5)

BLOODSCALED FURY

An angry dragon is fearsome indeed.

A dragon in a frothing rage, with its eyes shot red, great gobbets of spittle foaming from its mouth, and a sheen of blood coating its scales, is a terror few can withstand.

A bloodscaled fury is a dragon whose rage surpasses that of a human barbarian as the barbarian's rage surpasses a child's tantrum.

Most bloodscaled furies are dragons of at least juvenile age with several levels of barbarian.

A very few dragons come to the prestige class along a more unusual path, such as the sohei class or Singh rager prestige class from Oriental Adventures.

Few bloodscaled furies have levels in classes that do not feature a rage ability.

Bloodscaled furies are solitary dragons and rather akin to destructive forces of nature.

Their tendency toward chaos means that no one can predict when a bloodscaled fury might descend upon a human settlement or wilderness outpost and level the place, leaving a blasted crater in its wake.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bloodscaled fury, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +22.

Skills: Intimidate 14 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack, Shock Wave, Windstorm.

Special: Rage: The dragon must have some sort of rage ability, most commonly derived from levels in the barbarian class, and must be able to enter this rage at least three times per day.

Frightful Presence: The dragon must have the frightful presence ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The bloodscaled fury's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Swim (Str), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the bloodscaled fury prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A bloodscaled fury gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Fearsome Presence (Ex): A bloodscaled fury is a terror to behold, and the seething fury that churns in its heart inspires terror in all who lay eyes on it.

The dragon's frightful presence becomes more powerful: The saving throw DC to resist the ability is increased by the dragon's class level.

Creatures with Hit Dice equal to or less than 1/2 the dragon's class level + 4 are panicked if they fail their saving throws, while creatures with more Hit Dice are shaken. Both fear effects last for 6d6 rounds (rather than the usual 4d6).

Draconic Fury (Ex): At 2nd level, a bloodscaled fury's rage becomes more fearsome.

While raging, its Strength and Constitution scores increase by an additional 2 points and it gains an additional +1 morale bonus on its Will saves.

Thus, an 11th-level barbarian/2nd-level bloodscaled fury gains +8 to its Strength and Constitution scores and +4 on its Will saves.

(Its Armor Class penalty remains at -2).

At 6th level, and again at 10th, these bonuses increase by a similar amount.

An 11th-level barbarian/10th-level bloodscaled fury gains +12 to its Strength and Constitution scores and +6 on its Will saves.

Scales of Blood (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a bloodscaled fury earns its name.

When it enters a rage, small quantities of blood ooze out around its scales, lining their edges and adding to the dragon's fearsome appearance.

More important, the blood supernaturally wards the dragon from spells and weapon damage.

For the duration of the dragon's rage, its spell resistance increases by its class level, and its damage reduction improves as well.

The number before the slash in the dragon's damage reduction increases by 5 at 3rd level.

In addition, at 7th level a bloodscaled fury's damage reduction can be overcome only by magic cold iron weapons, and at 11th level only by epic cold iron weapons. For example, an old white dragon with damage reduction 10/magic who reaches 3rd level as a bloodscaled fury gains damage reduction 15/magic while raging.

At 7th level, it gains damage reduction 15/magic and cold iron while raging, and at 11th level it gains damage reduction 15/epic and cold iron while raging.

Rend: At 4th level, a bloodscaled fury gains Rend (see page 73) as a bonus feat, even if it doesn't have the prerequisites.

Extended Fury (Ex): At 5th level, a bloodscaled fury can remain in a rage for a number of rounds equal to 6 + its Con modifier.

Incite Rage (Ex): At 8th level, a bloodscaled fury gains the ability to incite rage in its allies whenever it enters a rage.

The dragon can affect all willing allies within 60 feet, granting them a +4 morale bonus to Strength, a +4 morale bonus to Constitution, a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, and a -2 penalty to Armor Class for as long as the dragon remains raging.

This ability is otherwise identical to normal barbarian rage, including the fatigue at the end of the rage.

Tireless Fury (Ex): At 9th level, a bloodscaled fury no longer becomes fatigued at the end of its rage.

Blinding Speed (Ex): A 12th-level bloodscaled fury can act as if under the effects of a haste spell for a total of 12 rounds each day.

The duration of the effect need not be consecutive rounds. Activating this power is a free action.

EX-BLOODSCALED FURIES

A bloodscaled fury that becomes lawful loses all class features and cannot gain more levels as a bloodscaled fury.

DISCIPLE OF ASHARDALON

The ancient red dragon Ashardalon, when struck a mortal blow by a human druid, replaced his wounded heart with a living demon: a balor of enormous power named Ammet, the Eater of Souls.

Inspired by this example, disciples of Ashardalon bind fiendish spirits to their own hearts, eventually taking on the characteristics of demonic spawn themselves.

Disciples of Ashardalon do not really worship the ancient dragon, nor do they literally learn directly from him as the word "disciple" implies, but they regard Ashardalon as the great exemplar of their path and seek to emulate him in every way possible.

Dragons of any class or none can qualify for the disciple of Ashardalon prestige class.

Those with a religious or arcane leaning who have pursued specialized knowledge are most likely to follow this course.

Even the most martially minded evil dragons, though, often find enough to inspire them in Ashardalon's example that they adopt this class.

Disciples of Ashardalon are members of an organization, loose-knit and secretive though it may be.

Of necessity, they have some contact with other members of the order, but their overwhelming personal ambition means they rarely cooperate with one another in pursuit of their various evil schemes.

They are likely to make use of various minions, particularly those of a fiendish character, in pursuit of their plans, rather than rely on the cooperation of equals.

Like their evil exemplar, they are often served by deluded cults made up of evil humanoids or even undead.

Both they and their cultists contemplate plans of sweeping evil grandeur—seizing power, leveling kingdoms, reclaiming or destroying ancient artifacts, and the like.

They are thus particularly well suited for use in campaigns of epic scope and, quite likely, epic level.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a disciple of Ashardalon, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +18.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 18 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 18 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Quicken Spell-Like Ability.

Special: Initiation: Before adopting the prestige class, a dragon must join the loose-knit cult of other disciples and undergo its initiation rites.

This process includes the ritual scarring of the dragon's heart—an extremely dangerous practice that would claim the life of a dragon too weak to qualify for the class, and leaves even those that do robbed of 1 point of Constitution. (Dragons that progress to at least 6th level in this class regain the lost Constitution point eventually).

CLASS SKILLS

The disciple of Ashardalon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the disciple of Ashardalon prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A disciple of Ashardalon gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Fiendbond (Su): As part of its initiation, a disciple of Ashardalon binds a demonic spirit to its own heart, emulating the manner in which Ashardalon himself took a balor as his heart.

The dragon's alignment changes to chaotic evil if it was not already of that alignment.

The dragon gains bonus sorcerer spells as if its Charisma score were 2 points higher than actual.

Resistance (Ex): A disciple of Ashardalon gains resistance to acid, cold, electricity, and fire.

This resistance is 5 at 1st level, and increases by 5 at 4th level and every four levels thereafter (10 at 4th level, 15 at 8th level, and 20 at 12th level).

Spell-Like Abilities: A disciple of Ashardalon gains spell-like abilities as it increases in level.

Its caster level is equal to its class level, and its saving throw DCs are 10 + its Cha modifier + spell level.

Once an ability is gained, the disciple can use it a certain number of times per day, as follows: 3/day—darkness, poison, unholy aura; 1/day—blasphemy, contagion, desecrate, destruction, horrid wilting, unhallow, unholy aura, unholy blight.

Skill Point Increase: At 2nd level, and again at 10th level, a disciple of Ashardalon gains a pool of bonus skill points equal to the number of dragon Hit Dice it possesses. This pool represents a gradual transition from being a creature of the dragon type (with 6 skill points per HD) to being an outsider (with 8 skill points per HD).

These bonus skill points are in addition to the skill points gained at every level, and are not modified by the dragon's Intelligence score.

Ability Increase: Every three levels, a disciple of Ashardalon's ability scores increase automatically.

At 3rd, 6th, 9th, and 12th level, its Strength, Dexterity, and Intelligence all increase by 1 point.

At 6th and 12th level, its Constitution and Charisma also increase by 1 point.

By 12th level, a disciple of Ashardalon has the ability score adjustments of the half-fiend template.

Poison Immunity (Ex): A disciple of Ashardalon of 6th level or higher is immune to all forms of poison.

Natural Armor Increase (Ex): At 7th level, a disciple of Ashardalon's natural armor bonus improves by 1.

Fiendish Perfection (Ex): At 12th level, a disciple of Ashardalon's bond with its demonic spirit is complete and perfect.

The dragon now has the half-fiend template and becomes an outsider rather than a dragon.

DISPASSIONATE WATCHER OF CHRONEPSIS

The draconic deity of fate, death, and judgment, Chronopsis is silent, unconcerned, and dispassionate.

Most dragons respect him, but few revere him or serve him as clerics because of his neutral alignment.

Chromatic and metallic dragons are almost always too committed to philosophical extremes to become clerics of Chronopsis, and their passionate adherence to their alignment means they have little interest in the detached attitude of the watchers.

Most dispassionate watchers are gem dragons, brown dragons, fang dragons, song dragons, dragon turtles, or wyverns.

True to their name, dispassionate watchers of Chronopsis remain aloof from the events of the world around them, taking the role of observers rather than active participants. They are excellent sources of information and advice, and dragons often appeal to them to judge disputes and complaints.

They typically make their lairs in areas that other dragons use as graveyards, embodying their deity's aspect as a god of death and keeping the graves safe from robbers and defilers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dispassionate watcher, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Alignment: Any neutral.

Skills: Knowledge (any two) 20 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast divine spells.

Domain: Knowledge (or able to cast at least three Knowledge domain spells as arcane spells).

CLASS SKILLS

The dispassionate watcher's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the dispassionate watcher of Chronopsis prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dispassionate watcher gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Divine Conversion: At 1st level, a dispassionate watcher loses any effective sorcerer level it had previously gained by virtue of its age and draconic variety.

Its effective divine spellcasting level increases by the number of sorcerer levels it sacrificed.

These effective levels apply only to the dragon's spellcasting, not to other class abilities (such as turning undead).

For example, a very old amethyst dragon/1st-level cleric adopts the dispassionate watcher of Chronopsis prestige class.

Its sorcerer caster level of 11th converts into eleven effective cleric levels, giving the dragon the spellcasting ability of a 12th-level cleric.

Calming Aura (Su): At 1st level, a dispassionate watcher loses its frightful presence ability (if it had one), gaining instead an infectious aura of calm detachment.

This aura has the same radius and Will save DC as the dragon's frightful presence ability, if it had one.

If it did not possess frightful presence, the radius is equal to 5 feet per 2 HD the dragon possesses (counting only its base dragon Hit Dice, not any class levels).

The Will saving throw to resist the effect has a DC of 10 + 1/2 dragon's base HD + its Cha modifier.

The effect of the aura is the same as that of a calm emotions spell, but it lasts as long as the dispassionate watcher does not attack.

Draconic Knowledge: A dispassionate watcher gains Draconic Knowledge (see page 69) as a bonus feat.

It uses its dispassionate watcher level as an additional modifier on its draconic knowledge checks.

Spellcasting: From 2nd level on, when a new dispassionate watcher level is gained, the dragon gains new spells per day as if it had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class it belonged to before it added the prestige class.

It does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, wild shape, and so on).

This essentially means that the dragon adds the level of dispassionate watcher to the level of whatever divine spellcasting class the dragon has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the dragon had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a dispassionate watcher, the dragon must decide to which class it adds each level of dispassionate watcher for the purpose of determining spells per day.

A very old amethyst dragon/1st-level cleric/2nd-level dispassionate watcher has the spellcasting ability of a 13th-level cleric: 11 from divine conversion of its sorcerer spellcasting levels, 1 from its single cleric level, and 1 from its two levels in the prestige class.

If a dragon advances an age category after taking levels in this class, the added levels of spellcasting ability are added to its effective divine spellcasting level.

If the very old amethyst dragon in the example above lives to be ancient, its spellcasting level would increase by 2, so it would cast spells as a 15th-level cleric.

Comprehend Languages (Sp): At 2nd level, a dispassionate watcher gains the ability to use comprehend languages at will.

Stunning Rebuke (Su): A 4th-level dispassionate watcher can deliver a thunderous rebuke that stuns one creature of its choice within 100 feet.

If the target creature fails a Will saving throw (DC 10 + dispassionate watcher's class level + 1/2 its Cha modifier), it is stunned for 1d4+1 rounds.

This is a sonic effect, but is not language-dependent.

Tongues (Sp): A 5th-level dispassionate watcher can use tongues at will.

Discern Lies (Su): At 6th level, a dispassionate watcher knows when anyone (other than a deity) is deliberately lying.

This ability is like the discern lies spell, except that it works continuously and applies to any creature the dragon can perceive.

Clearsight (Ex): A 9th-level dispassionate watcher can see illusions, transmuted creatures and objects, and disguised creatures and objects for what they really are, provided they are within 30 feet of the dragon.

This ability is similar to the true seeing spell, except that it also foils mundane disguises.

Vision (Sp): At 10th level, a dispassionate watcher gains the ability to use vision three times per day.

Using this ability is only a standard action for the dragon.

Analyze Dweomer (Sp): A 12th-level dispassionate watcher can use analyze dweomer at will.

DRACOLYTE

Only a few rare nondragons take up worship of the draconic gods.

The dracolite is the most dedicated of these rare individuals, a divine spellcaster who devotes his energy and support to the deities of dragonkind.

As a dracolite gains power and prestige, he receives abilities associated with the dragons themselves.

Clerics and druids are the most likely to become dracolites. Some paladins and rangers, particularly those with metallic dragon allies, enter this prestige class.

Most members of other classes don't have the religious bent to pursue this path.

Dracolites often congregate with others who share their respect and faith, including members of many of the other prestige classes presented here.

They are outcasts in most cultures, except those that have innate respect for dragonkind (such as kobolds, lizardfolk, and troglodytes).

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dracolite, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any nondragon.

Feats: Dragonfriend, Toughness.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The dracolite's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dracolite prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dracolite gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spellcasting: When a new dracolite level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, and so on).

This essentially means that the character adds the level of dracolite to the level of whatever divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a dracolite, he must decide to which class he adds each level of dracolite for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Prestige Domain (Ex): At 1st level, a dracolite gains access to a prestige domain based on his alignment.

Good-aligned dracolites (and neutral clerics who channel positive energy) gain access to the Glory prestige domain (and its granted power), while evil-aligned dracolites (and neutral clerics who channel negative energy) gain access to the Domination prestige domain (and its granted power). Dracolites who are neither good nor evil (and who don't channel positive or negative energy) can select either of these domains, but once made, the choice can never be altered.

The spells associated with the prestige domain can be selected to fill any domain spell slots the dracolite has available.

If the prestige domain is the character's only domain, he gains the ability to cast a domain spell of each spell level to which he has access once per day, in addition to those spells he already casts.

Prestige domains are presented and explained in the Cleric Domains section, beginning on page 107.

Alertness: At 3rd level, a dracolite gains Alertness as a bonus feat.

Foster Dragon: At 5th level, a dracolite is entrusted with the care of a wyrmling dragon.

The kind of dragon is up to the DM, but the dragon's alignment should match the dracolite's.

The wyrmling dragon follows the dracolite loyally, and will even accompany him on adventures (though it receives no XP and can't attain new levels).

If the wyrmling dies, the dracolite cannot gain any additional dracolite levels until he receives an atonement spell from another dracolite or a cleric who worships a draconic deity.

Immunities (Ex): A 7th-level dracolYTE gains immunity to magic sleep and paralysis effects.

Keen Senses (Ex): At 9th level, a dracolYTE gains darkvision out to 60 feet and low-light vision.

Summon Dragon (Sp): A 10th-level dracolYTE can, as a full-round action, summon a dragon once per day.

DRAGON ASCENDANT

Easily the most powerful creatures native to the Material Plane, dragons hold a unique position in relation to the powers beyond that plane.

Those who become dragon ascendants quest to transcend the limitations of material existence, rising above all other dragons to become nothing less than deities themselves. Their progress through the levels of this class represents their advancement toward their ultimate goal, and they become increasingly godlike as they advance.

Most dragon ascendants have not previously gained class levels, but all are dragons of considerable age and power. A few dragon clerics, paladins, and blackguards move into the dragon ascendant prestige class when they reach sufficient levels of power.

Members of the divine prestige classes described in this chapter (the dispassionate watcher of Chronopsis, the sacred warder of Bahamut, and the unholy ravager of Tiamat) sometimes also choose the path of divine ascension to become more perfect servants of their deities.

Dragon ascendants are proud and typically aloof.

They view travel along the path toward divine ascension as a race, and do not choose to share the road with others on the same course.

On the other hand, they often have followers and allies who support them on their quest, and they work more freely with lesser dragons and nondragons than other dragons do.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragon ascendant, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any true dragon.

Base Attack Bonus: +30.

Feats: Draconic Knowledge, Fast Healing, Great Fortitude, Improved Speed, Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes.

Special: Consume Hoard: A would-be dragon ascendant must eat its hoard to begin the process of divine ascension.

Its hoard must have a value of at least 100,000 gp, but the dragon cannot choose to eat just 100,000 gp and leave the rest alone—it must consume its entire hoard.

This ability is similar to a summon monster spell, except that the dracolYTE summons an adult dragon of the same kind as the wyrmling dragon entrusted to his care (see above).

The summoned dragon remains for 10 rounds and follows the dracolYTE's commands.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragon ascendant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the dragon ascendant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragon ascendant gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Awesome Aura (Ex): A dragon ascendant loses its innate frightful presence, replacing it with a special fear aura.

This aura surrounds the dragon at any radius it chooses up to the extent of its frightful presence (30 feet × the dragon's age category), and is always active unless the dragon chooses to deactivate it.

The dragon can choose to exclude its own allies from the effect of its aura.

Creatures within the aura must make a Will save (DC equal to the dragon's frightful presence DC plus 1/2 its dragon ascendant levels).

Creatures that fail their saving throws are shaken, while those that succeed are immune to the effect of that dragon's aura for 24 hours.

If the dragon attacks or charges, shaken creatures must attempt a second Will save (same DC) or become frightened.

When a dragon ascendant reaches 5th level, it can choose to modify its aura to inspire resolve in its allies and dread in its enemies.

All allies of the dragon within the radius of its aura receive a +4 morale bonus on attack rolls, saves, and checks.

The dragon's foes must succeed on a Will saving throw or take a -4 penalty on attack rolls, saves, and checks.

When a dragon ascendant reaches 10th level, it gains a third option for its aura.

The dragon can cause affected creatures to become dazed, simply staring at the dragon in fascinated awe, if they fail their Will saves.

As with the fear aspect of the aura, the dragon can choose to exclude its allies from the effects of the aura.

All uses of a dragon's awesome aura are mind-affecting effects.

Hit Point Increase (Ex): At 2nd level, and every two levels thereafter, a dragon ascendant gains 1 hit point per Hit Die it possesses, including all its dragon Hit Dice and those gained from class levels.

This benefit can never increase a dragon's hit points above the maximum for its Hit Dice and Constitution bonus.

At 12th level, a dragon ascendant's hit points are equal to the maximum for its Hit Dice and Constitution bonus.

Transmutation Immunity (Ex): At 3rd level, a dragon ascendant gains immunity to polymorphing, petrification, and any other attack that would alter its form.

Any shape-altering powers or spells the dragon has work normally on itself.

Increased Damage Reduction (Su): At 4th level, a dragon ascendant's damage reduction can be overcome only by epic weapons.

At 8th level, the amount of the dragon's damage reduction (the number before the slash) is increased by 5.

For example, an ancient black dragon/8th-level dragon ascendant has damage reduction 20/epic.

Lifewarding (Ex): At 6th level, a dragon ascendant is no longer vulnerable to attacks that cause energy drain, ability drain, or ability damage.

Deflection Bonus (Su): At 7th level, a dragon ascendant gains a deflection bonus to its Armor Class equal to its Charisma bonus, if any.

Iron Mind (Ex): At 9th level, a dragon ascendant becomes immune to mind-affecting effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, patterns, and morale effects).

Resistance to Fire (Ex): At 11th level, a dragon ascendant gains resistance to fire 20, if it does not already possess immunity to fire.

Spell Resistance (Ex): At 11th level, a dragon ascendant's spell resistance increases to 33.

Immortality (Ex): A 12th-level dragon ascendant is actually a quasi-deity, and can no longer die from natural causes. It does not need to eat, sleep, or breathe.

It can still be slain in physical or magical combat, and it is still subject to death from massive damage.

Code of Conduct: A dragon ascendant must be absolutely true to the principles of its alignment, whatever they may be.

A dragon ascendant loses its awesome aura if it ever willingly commits an act opposed to its alignment (and it does not regain its frightful presence), and it cannot gain more levels as a dragon ascendant.

The dragon can regain its awesome aura and once more advance in the dragon ascendant prestige class if it atones for its violations (see the atonement spell in the Player's Handbook), as appropriate.

DRAGONKITH

Dragonkith are creatures that serve and aid dragons. They live with or near a dragon or a group of dragons, acting as servants or peers (depending on the individual dragon and the dragonkith).

In return for service, over time, the dragon bestows upon a dragonkith special abilities—and even physical changes—using complex rituals known only to their kind.

Although sometimes they are humans, elves, dwarves, halflings, or gnomes, dragonkith are just as often members of other intelligent species, such as lizardfolk, giants, troglodytes, lammasu, pseudodragons, titans, dragonnes, beholders, lamias, and others—even, rarely, other dragons.

Thus, dragonkith are a diverse group; no one class is more likely than another to become one, and many dragonkith do not have classes at all (they are monsters).

NPC dragonkith are usually found in the company of their dragon companion.

Sometimes they are alone, completing some errand for the dragon.

Occasionally they work in small, tight-knit groups of dragonkith, all pledged either to the same dragon or to allied dragons.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragonkith, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Alertness, Endurance.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks.

Language: Draconic.

Special: Must be chosen by a dragon of the same alignment. If a dragonkith ever ceases its relationship with the dragon, or the dragon dies, the character loses all special abilities gained from this prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragonkith's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (any) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragonkith prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragonkith gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Scales (Ex): A dragonkith, over time, develops crusty scales the same color as her dragon companion.

At 1st level, this protection adds +1 to the natural armor bonus of the dragonkith, and its natural armor bonus improves by an additional +1 every three levels.

If the dragonkith already has natural armor as an aspect of its creature kind (and not from a spell or magic item), this bonus stacks with its existing natural armor bonus.

Telepathic Plea (Su): Wherever a dragonkith is, its dragon companion can send an instantaneous, telepathic plea for help at any time.

No details are provided in the message, other than that the dragon is in danger.

This communication does not work both ways (the dragonkith cannot alert the dragon).

Mighty Attack (Su): At 2nd level, once per day, a dragonkith can call upon its dragon's might to deal an extra 1d6 points of damage on a single attack.

The dragonkith must decide before an attack is resolved whether it will use this power.

If the attack misses, that use of the mighty attack is wasted. For every three levels beyond 2nd, the damage increases by another 1d6.

Detect Treasure (Sp): Once per day, a dragonkith of 3rd level or higher can use a detect treasure ability.

This works like the detect magic spell, except that it senses Medium or smaller objects that are worth more than 100 gp.

On the first round, the dragonkith detects the presence of such objects; on the second round, the power reveals the number of objects and the location of each.

In each subsequent round, the dragonkith can make an Appraise check to estimate the value of one object.

Energy Resistance (Su): A dragonkith develops an ever stronger resistance to the energy associated with its dragon companion's breath weapon.

Beginning at 3rd level, it can ignore some damage of the type generated by its dragon companion's breath weapon. This ability applies to sources of the energy type other than the dragon companion's breath weapon.

Thus, a dragonkith with a red dragon companion gains resistance to fire 5 at 3rd level, effective against fire from any source.

This resistance improves to 10 at 7th level and to 15 at 9th level.

In the case of dragons with multiple breath weapons, the dragonkith gains resistance to one type of damaging breath.

Telepathic Link (Su): At 4th level, a dragonkith develops a telepathic link with its companion dragon out to a distance of up to 1 mile.

The dragonkith and dragon can communicate telepathically.

Because of this link, one has the same connection to an item or place that the other does.

For instance, if the dragonkith has seen a room, its dragon companion can teleport into that room as if she had seen it too.

Sorcerous Knack (Sp): At 6th level, a dragonkith acquires the ability to cast a single arcane spell once per day as a sorcerer of its class level.

The dragonkith must choose a spell known to its dragon companion, and it must have a Charisma score of at least 10 + the spell's level to use the spell by means of the sorcerous knack ability.

Once the spell is chosen, that decision can never be changed.

Share Spells (Su): At either the dragon's or the dragonkith's option, any spell one casts on itself also affects the other. The two must be touching at the time.

If the spell has a duration other than instantaneous, the spell stops affecting them if they move farther than 100 feet apart.

The spell's effect will not be restored even if they return to each other before the duration would otherwise have ended.

The dragon and dragonkith can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of their respective types.

TABLE 3-4: THE DRAGONKITH

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Scales (natural armor +1), telepathic plea

DRAGONRIDER

Some dream of soaring through the clouds atop a mighty draconic steed, feeling the wind on their faces, afraid of nothing.

The dragonrider doesn't simply dream of this life—he leads it.

Characters of all classes may become dragonriders, though the most common are barbarians, fighters, paladins, and rangers.

Other characters looking to follow this path often pick up a level of one of these classes first, to gain the riding talent necessary.

An NPC dragonrider might be encountered as a solitary ally of a family of dragons or as part of a larger fighting force, perhaps affiliated with a kingdom or city-state that uses dragons as part of its defenses.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragonrider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Skill Focus (Ride).

Skills: Diplomacy 4 ranks, Handle Animal 4 ranks, Ride 8 ranks.

Language: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragonrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragonrider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragonrider gains proficiency with the lance, longspear, short bow, and all simple weapons.

Dragonriders are proficient with light, medium, and heavy armor and with shields.

Dragonriding (Ex): A dragonrider may add his class level as a bonus to any Ride checks made in conjunction with riding a dragon.

In addition, any dragon ridden by a dragonrider enjoys maneuverability of one grade better than normal (maximum perfect maneuverability).

For instance, an adult green dragon with a dragonrider astride it has average maneuverability rather than poor.

Immune to Frightful Presence (Su): While mounted on or within 10 feet of his dragon mount, a dragonrider is immune to the frightful presence of dragons.

Mounted Spellcasting (Ex): A dragonrider has a +5 bonus on Concentration checks made to cast a spell while riding a mount.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd level, a dragonrider gains a bonus feat drawn from the following list: Mounted Archery, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge, Trample, Weapon Focus (lance), Weapon Specialization (lance).

He must meet all the prerequisites for this bonus feat.

Flyby Attack (Ex): Any dragon mount ridden by a dragonrider of at least 4th level is treated as having the Flyby Attack feat.

Spur Mount (Ex): A 5th-level dragonrider can make a DC 20 Ride check to spur his dragon mount to greater speed. Success on this check increases the dragon's speed (flying and otherwise) by 50% (round down to the nearest 5-foot increment), for 5 rounds.

TABLE 3-5: THE DRAGONRIDER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+2	Dragonriding, immune to frightful presence
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+3	Mounted spellcasting
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+3	Bonus feat

DRAGONSLAYER

They come from all walks of life, from all cultures and societies.

They may be poor or wealthy, strong or wise, good or evil, skilled with blade or spell.

But all dragonslayers share a singular courage and strength of heart—a necessary commodity in their line of work.

Characters of any class may pursue the path of the dragonslayer.

Fighters, barbarians, and paladins enjoy the class's increased combat prowess against these powerful enemies.

Sorcerers, clerics, wizards, and druids can continue to improve their spellcasting ability while gaining new powers suitable for use in battling dragons.

Even bards, monks, rangers, and rogues have much to gain from this class, though the dragonstalker class (see below) is often more their style.

Multiclass characters, such as fighter/sorcerers or barbarian/cleric, can make particularly good dragonslayers, bringing a variety of talents to the task.

NPC dragonslayers have few close associates who aren't as skilled as they are in the art of battling dragons.

Unless a dragonslayer can trust you with his life, he isn't likely to spend much time in your company.

This attitude can lead to a life of solitude, as the dragonslayer travels wherever the cause takes him.

A few dragonslayers actively seek out others who share their bravery and dedication, even training those who show promise.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragonslayer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Dodge, Iron Will.

Skills: Tumble 2 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragonslayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana), Jump (Str), Search (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragonslayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragonslayer gains proficiency with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields and tower shields.

Spellcasting: Each time a character attains an odd-numbered dragonslayer level, the character gains new spells per day and spells known as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that the character adds the level of dragonslayer to the level of whatever spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character takes one or more levels in this class before having any levels in a spellcasting class, he does not receive this spellcasting benefit.

If he thereafter takes levels in one or more spellcasting classes, he becomes eligible to receive the spellcasting benefit for any level in the dragonslayer class that he has not already attained.

For example, a 5th-level fighter/1st-level dragonslayer does not receive the spellcasting benefit for being a 1st-level dragonslayer because he did not belong to a spellcasting class before taking a level in the prestige class.

If he then picks up one or more levels of wizard before advancing to 3rd level in the dragonslayer class, he receives the spellcasting benefit of a 3rd-level dragonslayer (when he attains that level) but does not receive the 1st-level benefit retroactively.

Aura of Courage (Su): At 1st level, a dragonslayer gains immunity to fear (magical or otherwise).

Allies within 10 feet of the dragonslayer gain a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects.

Damage Bonus (Ex): A dragonslayer gains a bonus on weapon damage rolls against dragons equal to his class level.

Overcome Draconic Spell Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a dragonslayer may add his class level to any caster level checks made to overcome a dragon's spell resistance.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 3rd level, a dragonslayer gains damage reduction 1/—.

This improves to damage reduction 2/— at 6th level, and to damage reduction 3/— at 9th level.

Energy Resistance (Su): At 5th level, a dragonslayer gains resistance to acid 5, cold 5, electricity 5, fire 5, and sonic 5.

These resistances improve to 10 at 10th level.

These resistances don't stack with any other similar effects.

Lightning Reflexes: A dragonslayer gains Lightning Reflexes as a bonus feat at 6th level.

Improved Critical (Ex): A 7th-level dragonslayer gains the effect of the Improved Critical feat for any weapon he uses against a dragon.

This benefit does not stack with any other ability that increases the threat range of a weapon.

True Strike (Sp): At 10th level, a dragonslayer may use true strike once per day as a move action.

DRAGONSONG LYRIST

The dragonsong lyrist taps into the power of dragonsong, an ancient form of performance that originated among the draconic races, to create strange and wondrous magical effects.

Many bards become dragonsong lyrists, though rogues and even a few monks have been known to pursue the class.

Multiclass barbarian/bards and sorcerer/rogues also make good dragonsong lyrists.

Dragonsong lyrists are usually loners, though they occasionally congregate to share new songs or poems.

They get along well with bards and sorcerers, and some occupy positions of great respect in barbarian tribes.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragonsong lyrist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Feat: Dragonsong.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Diplomacy 5 ranks,

Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Perform (oratory or sing) 10 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragonsong lyrist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragonsong lyrist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragonsong lyrist gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Greater Dragonsong (Su): Once per day per class level, a dragonsong lyrist can use song or poetics to invoke the power of dragonsong.

Invoking dragonsong requires a standard action.

In the case of effects that require a saving throw, the DC is equal to 10 + lyrist's class level + lyrist's Cha modifier.

The bonus from the Dragonsong feat also applies to this save DC.

In cases where the character continues a greater dragonsong effect over the course of multiple rounds (such as song of strength), the dragonsong lyrist can fight while using greater dragonsong but cannot cast spells, activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls), or activate magic items by command word (such as wands). Maintaining a greater dragonsong effect does not require concentration.

A deaf dragonsong lyrist has a 20% chance to fail when using greater dragonsong.

If she fails, the attempt still counts against her daily limit.

Song of Strength: A 1st-level dragonsong lyrist can imbue herself and her allies with great physical power.

The dragonsong lyrist and all allies within 30 feet who can hear her gain a +4 morale bonus to Strength for the duration of the lyrist's performance and for 5 rounds thereafter.

This is a mind-affecting ability.

Song of Compulsion: At 2nd level, a dragonsong lyrist can use her greater dragonsong to make a suggestion to a single creature within 30 feet who can hear the lyrist.

A Will save negates the effect.

This is an enchantment (compulsion, mind-affecting, language-dependent effect).

Dragons take a -2 penalty on this saving throw.

Song of Flight: A 3rd-level dragonsong lyrist can grant herself and her allies the ability to fly, as the spell of the same name.

This song affects the character and a number of allies equal to her Charisma modifier (all of whom must be able to hear the lyrist) and lasts for 1 minute per level.

This is a transmutation effect.

Song of Fear: At 4th level, a dragonsong lyrist can use her song or poetics to inspire fear in her foes.

All enemies within a radius of 30 feet × class level are subject to the effect if they have fewer HD than the dragonsong lyrist.

A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a Will save remains immune to that dragonsong lyrist's frightful presence ability for 24 hours.

On a failure, creatures with fewer than half the dragonsong lyrist's HD become panicked for 2d6 rounds and those with HD equal to or greater than half the dragonsong lyrist's become shaken for 2d6 rounds.

Dragons are immune to this ability, as are any creatures immune to fear.

This is a mind-affecting effect.

Song of Healing: A 5th-level dragonsong lyrist can use her greater dragonsong to heal herself and her allies.

Each ally within 30 feet who can hear the dragonsong lyrist regains hit points and ability points as if he or she had rested for a full day.

No character may benefit from this ability more than once per hour.

This is a conjuration (healing) effect.

Spellcasting: Each time an even-numbered dragonsong lyrist level is gained, the character gains new spells per day and spells known as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that the character adds 1/2 her dragonsong lyrist level to the level of whatever spellcasting class she has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character takes two or more levels in this class before having any levels in a spellcasting class, she does not receive this spellcasting benefit.

If she thereafter takes levels in one or more spellcasting classes, she becomes eligible to receive the spellcasting benefit for any level in the dragonsong lyrist class that she has not already attained.

For example, a 6th-level monk/2nd-level dragonsong lyrist does not receive the spellcasting benefit for being a 2nd-level dragonsong lyrist because she did not belong to a spellcasting class before taking 2nd level in the prestige class.

If she then picks up one or more levels of wizard before advancing to 4th level in the dragonsong lyrist class, she receives the spellcasting benefit of a 4th-level dragonsong lyrist (when she attains that level) but does not receive the 2nd-level benefit retroactively.

DRAGONSTALKER

“Dragonslayers?

Pah, any fool can call himself a dragonslayer.

Most get themselves killed within a few days, which is probably for the best.

No, the real skill isn't in walking into the dragon's cave and challenging it to a duel—it's in tracking it across a hundred miles of wilderness, sneaking up close and killing it before it even knows you're there.”

—Deirdre Firewalker, dragonstalker

The dragonstalker prefers a much more subtle approach than the dragonslayer.

She uses stealth and guile to track her prey, striking with skill and uncanny accuracy when the time is right.

Rangers and rogues are the most common dragonstalkers, since the two classes share a predilection for the subtlety and patience the prestige class requires.

Barbarians, particularly those from dragon-terrorized areas, often take up this class.

Bards also make reasonable dragonstalkers—certainly, the profession makes for many great tales told around the fire.

Most other classes are better off pursuing the path of the dragonslayer (see page 125).

NPC dragonstalkers are loners, since they rarely trust others to hold their own in a hunt.

When tracking a particularly formidable foe, a dragonstalker might recruit other stealthy characters, such as rangers or rogues, for assistance.

Once or twice in a generation, a hunt of great significance may arise that brings together a team of dragonstalkers from various backgrounds.

In such a case, the dragon has little chance of escaping.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragonstalker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Blind-fight, Track.

Skills: Gather Information 4 ranks, Hide 6 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Move Silently 6 ranks, Search 6 ranks.

Language: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragonstalker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Wis), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragonstalker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dragonstalker gains proficiency with the longbow, longspear, net, shortbow, and all simple weapons.

Dragonstalkers are proficient with light armor and with shields.

Hunting Bonus (Ex): Starting at 1st level, a dragonstalker gains a bonus equal to her class level on Bluff, Listen,

Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks when using these skills against dragons.

Sneak Attack (Dragon): Beginning at 2nd level, if a dragonstalker catches a dragon when it is unable to defend itself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, any time the dragonstalker's target would be denied its Dexterity bonus to AC (whether it actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the dragonstalker's attack deals an extra 2d6 points of damage.

This extra damage increases by 2d6 points every other level (4d6 at 4th level, 6d6 at 6th level, and so on).

Should the dragonstalker score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the dragon is 30 feet away or less.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, a dragonstalker can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage.

She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty, because she must make optimal use of her weapon to execute the sneak attack.

A dragonstalker can only sneak attack living dragons with discernible anatomies.

Any dragon immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the dragonstalker must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

A dragonstalker cannot sneak attack while striking at a dragon with concealment or by striking the limbs of a dragon whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a dragonstalker gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack when the ability is used against dragons.

Ignore Natural Armor (Ex): Once per day, a dragonstalker of 3rd level or higher can ignore a target's natural armor bonus (including any enhancement to that natural armor) for one attack (melee or ranged).

You must declare that you are using this ability before you make the attack roll.

At 7th level, a dragonstalker can use this ability twice per day.

Hide Scent (Ex): At 5th level, a dragonstalker can use the Disguise skill to hide her (or someone else's) scent.

This requires a Disguise check (with a –10 penalty) opposed by a Wisdom check made by any creature attempting to use the scent ability to discover the dragonstalker's presence.

Hiding one's scent requires twice as long as a typical Disguise check (1d3×20 minutes), and the effect lasts for 1 hour per class level.

Magic that alters your form doesn't affect this Disguise check.

Foil Blindsight (Su): Once per day, a 9th-level dragonstalker can render herself completely imperceptible to blindsense.

This requires a standard action, and the effect lasts for 10 minutes.

This ability has no effect on other forms of vision (whether mundane or magical).

For instance, it doesn't keep someone from spotting or hearing the dragonstalker with normal senses, or from noticing an invisible dragonstalker by means of a true seeing spell.

Dragonstrike (Su): At 10th level, the effective enhancement bonus of any weapon wielded by a dragonstalker against a dragon is +2 better than normal, and the weapon deals an extra 2d6 points of damage against dragons.

This benefit stacks with the enhancement bonus increase and bonus damage dice from a weapon with the bane (dragons) special ability.

ELEMENTAL MASTER

Dragons are creatures of raw elemental power.

Two mighty forces rage within their veins: the energy that powers their breath weapons, and the elemental nature that forms the core of their being.

Elemental masters strive to attain the purity of perfect attunement with both of these forces.

The path of the elemental master is almost exclusively pursued by true dragons, since the class requires a connection to elemental and energy forces.

Some dragons have levels in other classes, commonly wizard or sorcerer, before adopting this prestige class, but many others do not.

Elemental masters are the most solitary and reclusive of dragons, spending their lives in communion with the natural forces of the universe rather than interacting with creatures they consider to be lesser life forms.

When they do cooperate with other creatures, they choose elementals and outsiders from the elemental planes as their allies, and occasionally younger dragons of the same variety.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an elemental master, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Base Attack Bonus: +20.

Feats: Any three metabreath feats.

Spells: Able to cast arcane spells.

Special: Elemental Attunement: The dragon must have an energy or elemental subtype, such as air, cold, earth, electricity, fire, or water.

Breath Weapon: The dragon must have a breath weapon that deals energy damage.

CLASS SKILLS

The elemental master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the elemental master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An elemental master gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Element Mastery (Ex): At 1st level, an elemental master gains an additional attunement to the element type that corresponds to its subtype.

Dragons with the air or electricity subtype (including emerald, green, crystal, fang, and song dragons) gain air mastery: Any airborne creature takes a –1 penalty on attack and damage rolls made against the dragon.

Dragons with the earth subtype (including blue, copper, amethyst, brown, deep, and sapphire dragons) gain earth mastery: The dragon gains a +1 bonus on attack and damage rolls if both it and its foe are touching the ground.

Dragons with the fire subtype (including red, gold, and brass dragons, as well as hellfire wyrms) gain fire mastery: The dragon gains a +1 bonus on attack and damage rolls if both it and its foe are touching fire or using weapons with the flaming or flaming burst special abilities.

Dragons with the water subtype (including black, bronze, and topaz dragons) gain water mastery: The dragon gains a +1 bonus on its attack and damage rolls if both it and its opponent are touching water.

Dragons with the cold subtype (silver and white dragons) gain cold mastery: The dragon gains a +1 bonus on attack and damage rolls if both it and its foe are touching ice or using weapons with the frost or icy burst special abilities.

Elemental Command (Su): An elemental master can turn or destroy creatures of the elemental subtype opposed to its own subtype, just as a good cleric turns undead.

It can rebuke or command creatures of its own elemental subtype, as an evil cleric rebukes undead.

The dragon can use these abilities a total number of times per day equal to 3 + its Charisma modifier.

Air and earth are opposed elemental subtypes; fire and water are opposed.

Dragons with the cold subtype can rebuke cold creatures and turn fire creatures.

Energy Attunement (Ex): An elemental master is attuned to the energy type that powers its breath weapon.

Dragons with more than one breath weapon gain attunement to the one that deals energy damage, usually acid, cold, electricity, fire, or sonic energy.

A dragon with multiple energy breath weapons can choose a single energy type it is attuned to.

This ability grants the dragon no special powers, but determines the form of powers it gains later, including energy substitution, energy focus, energy burst, and energy storm.

Energy Substitution (Ex): At 2nd level, an elemental master gains the ability to modify its spells that have an energy descriptor so that they use the dragon's attuned energy instead.

The substituted spell works normally in all respects except the type of damage dealt.

Summon Elemental (Sp): Once per day, starting at 2nd level, an elemental master can use its breath weapon to summon a Medium elemental corresponding to its elemental subtype.

The dragon breathes as normal, but in the wake of its breath the elemental appears, attacking in the next round.

If it chooses, the dragon can instead summon an adult arrowhawk (air or cold), average salamander (fire), adult tojanida (water), or average xorn (earth).

This ability works like the summon nature's ally V spell, with the dragon's class level as its caster level.

A dragon with the cold subtype can summon a Medium water elemental or an adult tojanida.

At 5th level, an elemental master can summon one Large elemental or two Medium elementals.

This ability works like the summon nature's ally VI spell.

At 8th level, an elemental master can summon one Huge elemental, two Large elementals, or four Medium elementals.

Instead, the dragon can summon one elder arrowhawk, noble salamander, elder tojanida, or elder xorn, or four Medium creatures of the appropriate kind.

This ability works like the summon nature's ally VII spell.

At 11th level, an elemental master can summon one greater elemental, two Huge elementals, or four Large or Medium elementals.

This ability works like the summon nature's ally VIII spell.

Energy Focus (Ex): At 3rd level, an elemental master adds 1 to the save DC of spells it casts with an energy descriptor corresponding to the dragon's attuned energy type.

This bonus increases by +1 for every additional three levels the elemental master gains (+2 at 6th level, +3 at 9th level, and +4 at 12th level), and it stacks with the bonus from the Spell Focus feat.

Energy Burst (Su): A 4th-level elemental master can create a burst of damaging energy around its body.

The burst consists of energy corresponding to the dragon's attuned energy type and has a radius of 5 feet per class level of the dragon.

Anything in the area takes 1d8 points of damage per class level of the dragon.

A successful Reflex save (DC 10 + dragon's class level + its Con modifier) reduces the damage by half.

Creating an energy burst counts as a use of the dragon's breath weapon.

It cannot breathe or create another burst for 1d4 rounds after creating a burst.

Energy Storm (Su): A 7th-level elemental master can surround itself with a vortex of swirling energy corresponding to the dragon's attuned energy type.

The vortex extends from the dragon in an emanation with a radius of 5 feet per class level.

The effect stops attacks with thrown weapons and projectiles.

Such attacks fail if made by creatures inside the area, or if targeted at creatures within the area, or if their paths take them through the area.

The storm deals 2 points of damage per class level to every unprotected creature within its area each round.

The storm lasts for 1 round per class level (though the dragon can dismiss it as a move action), and counts as two uses of the dragon's breath weapon.

The dragon cannot use its breath weapon (or its energy burst ability) while the storm is in place and for 2d4 rounds after it subsides.

Spell-Like Ability: At 10th level, an elemental master gains a spell-like ability associated with its elemental subtype.

An air dragon can use whirlwind, an earth dragon earthquake, a fire dragon incendiary cloud, a water dragon horrid wilting, and a cold dragon polar ray. The dragon can use this ability three times per day, with a caster level of 20th.

Elemental Qualities (Ex): A 12th-level elemental master is immune to poison, sleep effects, paralysis, and stunning. It is not subject to critical hits or flanking.

HIDECARVED DRAGON

Hidecarved dragons are members of an enigmatic order of dragons and half-dragons.

Their name comes from the markings engraved on their scales, which grant them incredible mystical protection. Dragons of the hidecarved order resemble monks in their strict discipline, dedication to personal perfection, and mystical transcendence.

Most hidecarved dragons are true dragons, since many drakes, landwyrm, wyverns, and other creatures of the dragon type lack the thick, heavy scales necessary to receive the mystical engravings of the order.

A half-dragon can become a hidecarved dragon only if its nondragon parent had very significant natural armor, although some half-dragon/half-giants have been known to use magic to thicken their hides sufficiently to qualify for the class.

Some dragons advance in other classes—commonly monk, wizard, sorcerer, or cleric—before adopting this prestige class, primarily to meet the minimum base Will save requirement.

Hidecarved dragons do not build monasteries, but they do gather in small groups called “lauths”.

These tiny communities of three to five dragons share a large territory and come together only occasionally, but will gather quickly to help if one member of the lauth is threatened.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hidecarved dragon, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Natural Armor Bonus: +20.

Base Save Bonus: Will +12.

Feat: Iron Will.

CLASS SKILLS

The hidecarved dragon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the hidecarved dragon prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A hidecarved dragon gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Increased Spell Resistance (Ex): A hidecarved dragon adds its class level to its natural spell resistance.

Dragons without natural spell resistance do not gain spell resistance when they adopt this class.

However, if a hidecarved dragon with no natural spell resistance ages to the point where it gains spell resistance, it adds its class level to the natural spell resistance it gains at its new age category.

Suppress Weakness: At 2nd level, a hidecarved dragon gains Suppress Weakness (see page 74) as a bonus feat.

Poison Resistance (Ex): At 2nd level, a hidecarved dragon gains a +4 bonus on saving throws against poison.

Energy Resistance (Ex): At 3rd level, a hidecarved dragon gains resistance 10 to two energy types it is not already immune, vulnerable, or resistant to.

The dragon can choose from resistance to acid, cold, electricity, fire, or sonic energy.

For example, a gold hidecarved dragon could gain resistance to acid 10 and electricity 10.

Still Mind (Ex): At 4th level, a hidecarved dragon gains a +2 bonus on saving throws against spells and effects from the enchantment school.

Natural Armor (Ex): At 4th level, a hidecarved dragon's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

At 8th level the increase becomes +4, and at 12th level it becomes +6.

Increased Damage Reduction (Su): At 5th level, the amount of a hidecarved dragon's natural damage reduction (the number before the slash) increases by 5, and its damage reduction can be overcome only by chaotic magic weapons. For example, a mature adult blue dragon/5th-level hidecarved dragon has damage reduction 15/magic and chaotic.

Extra Energy Immunity (Ex): At 6th level, a hidecarved dragon gains immunity to an energy type it was already resistant to.

Its resistance to one other energy type it has resistance 10 against increases to 20, and it gains resistance 10 against a third energy type.

For this third energy type, a dragon with the fire subtype cannot choose cold, and a dragon with the cold subtype cannot choose fire.

The gold hidecarved dragon from the earlier example could become immune to electricity at 6th level, increase its acid resistance to 20, and gain resistance to sonic 10.

At 12th level, a hidecarved dragon's energy resistances and immunities improve again.

Its resistance 20 becomes immunity, its resistance 10 becomes resistance 20, and it gains resistance 10 to all other energy types (acid, cold, electricity, fire, and sonic) that it is not already immune or resistant to.

The gold hidecarved dragon example, at 12th level, would have immunity to fire (naturally), electricity (since 6th level), and acid.

It would have resistance to sonic 20 and cold 10.

Overcome Weakness: At 7th level, a hidecarved dragon gains Overcome Weakness (see page 72) as a bonus feat.

Death Ward (Sp): At 7th level, a hidecarved dragon gains the ability to use death ward on itself once per day as a cleric of its class level.

Wholeness of Body (Su): At 9th level, a hidecarved dragon can cure its own wounds.

It can cure up to three times its class level in hit points each day and can spread this healing out among several uses.

Poison Immunity (Ex): At 10th level, a hidecarved dragon gains immunity to poison of all kinds.

Superior Damage Reduction (Su): At 11th level, a hidecarved dragon's damage reduction can be overcome only by epic chaotic weapons.

For example, a mature adult blue dragon/11th-level hidecarved dragon has damage reduction 15/epic and chaotic.

HOARDSTEALER

“Don’t call me a burglar.
Burglars steal baubles and trinkets.
If I wanted trinkets, I’d rob a dwarf.
I want treasure.”

—Liam Boldfingers, halfling hoardstealer

The hoardstealer specializes in relieving wealthy individuals from large amounts of said wealth.

In most cases, these individuals are dragons, since few creatures keep so much wealth in one place.

Stealing a dragon’s hoard is a challenging task, to be sure, but if it were easy, it probably wouldn’t be worth doing.

Most hoardstealers are rogues, though some bards and rangers can become hoardstealers with the right training. Other classes may fancy themselves treasure-finders, but they don’t have the aptitudes to take up the art of hoardstealing.

By their very nature, most NPC hoardstealers work alone. Some may recruit assistance for tough jobs—such as rogues or other stealthy sorts—but a hoardstealer rarely sees such hired help as anything but expendable assets.

The smart hoardstealer knows that he can only count on himself to get the job done—everyone else is just an amateur.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hoardstealer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Appraise 8 ranks, Disable Device 4 ranks, Escape Artist 4 ranks, Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks, Open Lock 4 ranks, Search 8 ranks.

Special: The character must have participated in the location and recovery of a treasure hoard (dragon or otherwise) valued at 5,000 gp or more.

CLASS SKILLS

The hoardstealer’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Jump (Str), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Swim (Str), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hoardstealer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A hoardstealer is proficient with all simple weapons but gains no proficiency with armor or shields.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a hoardstealer gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, the hoardstealer must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell’s level, so a hoardstealer with an Intelligence of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Hoardstealer bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the hoardstealer’s Int modifier.

When the hoardstealer gets 0 spells of a given level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level hoardstealer), he gains only the bonus spells he would be entitled to based on his Intelligence score for that spell level.

The hoardstealer’s spell list appears below.

A hoardstealer casts spells just as a wizard does.

Darkvision (Su): At 1st level, a hoardstealer gains darkvision with a range of 30 feet, or the range of his existing darkvision improves by 30 feet if he already has the ability.

At 5th level and at 9th level, the range of the hoardstealer’s darkvision extends another 30 feet, to a maximum of +90 feet at 9th level.

Trapfinding (Ex): Like a rogue, a hoardstealer can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a DC higher than 20.

He may also use the Disable Device skill to disarm a magic trap.

A hoardstealer who beats a trap’s DC by 10 or more can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with his party) without disarming it.

Hide from Dragons (Sp): A 2nd-level hoardstealer can cast hide from dragons on himself once per day.

This functions as the spell of the same name (see page 113), except that it only affects the hoardstealer and lasts for only 1 round per level.

At 6th level, the hoardstealer may use this ability twice per day.

At 10th level, he may use it three times per day.

Trap Sense (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a hoardstealer gains an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +2 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +2 dodge bonus to AC against attacks by traps.

At 6th level these bonuses rise to +4, and at 9th level to +6.

These bonuses stack with trap sense bonuses gained from other classes.

Deep Pockets (Su): Once per day, a 3rd-level hoardstealer can turn any container—from a waistcoat pocket to a backpack to a barrel—into the equivalent of a bag of holding. The container's weight remains the same, but it becomes capable of holding up to 10 cubic feet (or 100 pounds) of material per level.

The duration of this effect is 1 hour per level.

If the effect ends prematurely (such as by being dispelled), everything within the container spills out onto the floor.

Treasure Dowsing (Su): Once per day, a 4th-level hoardstealer can concentrate (a full-round action) to detect the location of the largest mass of metal or minerals within a range of 10 feet per level.

If the hoardstealer concentrates on a specific metal or mineral (such as gold or diamonds), he detects the location of each such deposit within range.

This is otherwise identical to the effect of a rod of metal and mineral detection (see page 236 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

At 7th level, the hoardstealer may use this ability twice per day.

INITIATE OF THE DRACONIC MYSTERIES

Not all who explore the mysterious powers of dragons do so out of heritage or religious faith.

Some become students of knowledge that leads to greater power.

Most initiates of the draconic mysteries are monks, though some fighters follow the path as well.

In rare cases, barbarians, rangers, or rogues have been known to become initiates.

NPC initiates may gather in quiet places of study to share their learning and practice their techniques.

Or they may test their powers in the field, either alone or with others who respect their ways.

Regardless of her company, the initiate of the draconic mysteries remains a strange and wondrous individual, set apart from others of her race by her pursuit of ancient secrets.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an initiate of the draconic mysteries, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Feats: Alertness, Improved Unarmed Strike, Power Attack.

At 10th level, he may use it three times per day.

Skill Mastery (Ex): At 8th level, a hoardstealer may select a number of skills equal to 3 + his Int modifier.

When making a skill check with one of these skills, the hoardstealer may take 10 even if stress and distractions would normally prevent him from doing so.

He becomes so certain in his ability that he can use his skill reliably under adverse conditions, such as when an angry dragon pursues him down a tunnel.

HOARDSTEALER SPELL LIST

Hoardstealers choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: detect magic, detect secret doors, expeditious retreat, ghost sound, identify, Tenser's floating disk, Nystul's magic aura, read magic, unseen servant.

2nd Level: cat's grace, knock, invisibility, locate object, resist energy, spider climb.

3rd Level: arcane sight, clairaudience/clairvoyance, dispel magic, protection from energy, shrink item.

4th Level: arcane eye, dimension door, freedom of movement, *hide from dragons

* New spell detailed on page 106.

Skills: Concentration 6 ranks, Jump 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Tumble 4 ranks.

Language: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The initiate's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Listen (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the initiate of the draconic mysteries prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An initiate of the draconic mysteries gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Evasion (Ex): An initiate of the draconic mysteries can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility.

If an initiate makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a save (such as a red dragon's fiery breath or a fireball), the initiate instead takes no damage.

Evasion can only be used if the initiate is wearing light armor or no armor.

Claws of the Dragon (Su): At 2nd level, the unarmed strike of an initiate of the draconic mysteries is empowered with draconic might.

The initiate's unarmed strike can overcome damage reduction as if it were a magic weapon.

In addition, the unarmed strikes of an initiate of the draconic mysteries may deal slashing damage, at her option. Such damage cannot be nonlethal damage.

Keen Senses (Ex): At 3rd level, an initiate gains darkvision out to 60 feet and low-light vision.

Increased Unarmed Damage (Ex): At 4th level, the damage dealt by an initiate's unarmed attacks increases by one die step (such as from 1d3 to 1d4, or from 1d8 to 1d10).

At 8th level, it increases another die step.

Frightful Presence (Ex): A 5th-level initiate of the draconic mysteries can unsettle foes with her mere presence.

The initiate can activate her frightful presence as a free action.

Creatures within a radius of 30 feet per point of Charisma modifier (minimum 30 feet) are subject to the effect if they have fewer Hit Dice than the initiate (dragons are immune to the effect).

A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a Will save (DC 10 + initiate's class level + initiate's Cha modifier) remains immune to that initiate's frightful presence for 24 hours.

On a failure, creatures with 4 or fewer HD become panicked for 2d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 2d6 rounds.

Improved Evasion (Ex): At 6th level, an initiate's evasion ability improves.

She still takes no damage on a successful Reflex saving throw against attacks such as a dragon's breath weapon or a fireball, but henceforth she only takes half damage on a failed save.

Spell Resistance (Su): Beginning at 7th level, an initiate of the draconic mysteries gains spell resistance equal to 15 + her class level.

Deadly Strike (Su): A 9th-level initiate deals triple damage on a critical hit inflicted by her unarmed strike, regardless of whether it dealt bludgeoning or slashing damage.

Timeless Body (Ex): After attaining 9th level, an initiate no longer takes ability score penalties for aging (see Table 6-5: Aging Effects, page 109 of the Player's Handbook) and cannot be magically aged.

Any penalties she may have already taken, however, remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue, and the initiate still dies of old age when her time is up.

Dragon Shape (Su): At 10th level, an initiate of the draconic mysteries gains the ability to use a shapechange ability once per day to take the form of a dragon, from Tiny to Huge size, for 1 hour.

Once a form is assumed, it cannot be changed except to return to normal (which dismisses the effect).

The effect is otherwise identical to the shapechange spell, including the HD limitation of the new form and the abilities of the form gained.

PLATINUM KNIGHT

The platinum knight protects good-aligned dragonkind from their natural enemies, the chromatic dragons, as well as any others who would prey upon these noble creatures. Bahamut, Lord of the Good Dragons, is his patron, while the minions of Tiamat are his mortal foes.

Paladins, clerics, and fighters are the most common platinum knights.

Of course, any good-aligned character who counts himself an ally of dragonkind can pursue this class, and has much to gain from it.

NPC platinum knights often work with other good-aligned beings, including dragons, celestials, paladins, and, of course, characters of other classes who share their outlook.

They do not hesitate to recruit assistance when facing powerful evil dragons, but voluntarily associate only with other good characters.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a platinum knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Dragonfriend.

Skills: Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The platinum knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the platinum knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A platinum knight is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Smite Evil Dragon (Su): Once per day, a platinum knight may attempt to smite an evil dragon with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 2 extra points of damage per level.

If a platinum knight accidentally smites a creature that is not an evil dragon, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

The bonuses from this ability don't stack with other smite abilities, such as the paladin's smite evil.

Every three levels beyond 1st, the platinum knight gains one additional daily use of this ability.

Immune to Frightful Presence (Ex): Platinum knights are treated as dragons for the purpose of being immune to the frightful presence of dragons and similar creatures.

Spellcasting: When an even-numbered platinum knight level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds 1/2 his platinum knight level to the level of some other spellcasting class he has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character takes two or more levels in this class before having any levels in a spellcasting class, he does not receive this spellcasting benefit.

If he thereafter takes levels in one or more spellcasting classes, he becomes eligible to receive the spellcasting benefit for any level in the platinum knight class that he has not already attained.

For example, a 6th-level fighter/2nd-level platinum knight does not receive the spellcasting benefit for being a 2nd-level platinum knight because he did not belong to a spellcasting class before taking 2nd level in the prestige class.

If he then picks up one or more levels of wizard before advancing to 4th level in the platinum knight class, he receives the spellcasting benefit of a 4th-level platinum knight (when he attains that level) but does not receive the 2nd-level benefit retroactively.

Platinum Scales (Ex): At 3rd level, a platinum knight's skin takes on a slightly metallic sheen.

He gains a +1 increase to his natural armor bonus.

At 7th level, this increase improves to +2.

Bahamut's Grace (Su): A 5th-level platinum knight adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws against the attacks, special abilities, and spells cast by evil dragons.

This effect stacks with the divine grace class feature of paladins and similar abilities.

Charisma Bonus (Ex): At 9th level, a platinum knight's Charisma increases by 2 points.

True Seeing (Su): At 10th level, a platinum knight gains the ability to see all things as they actually are.

This ability is the equivalent of the true seeing spell and lasts for 1 hour.

A platinum knight may use true seeing once per day.

SACRED WARDER OF BAHAMUT

Among dragon clerics of Bahamut, some are moved primarily by compassion for those who suffer from the depredations of evil dragons.

These clerics adopt the sacred warder of Bahamut prestige class, shaping their identities around the idea of protecting those who cannot hope to protect themselves from the awesome power of Tiamat's brood.

Sacred warders of Bahamut are usually gold or silver dragons with some levels in the cleric class.

Good half-dragons are surprisingly common among the ranks of the sacred warders, and they find more acceptance there than in most other dragon groups and organizations. Sacred warders often possess some levels of paladin as well as cleric; other classes are rare.

Sacred warders can be found anywhere evil dragons threaten other creatures.

Their usually lawful alignment inclines them to cooperate with other creatures.

They sometimes operate in pairs, but more often work with groups of humanoids or other creatures drawn from the communities they try to protect.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sacred warder of Bahamut, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any dragon.

Alignment: Lawful good or neutral good.

Base Attack Bonus: +15.

Feats: Endure Blows, Power Attack.

Spells: Able to cast divine spells.

Domain: Protection.

Special: Damage reduction 5/magic.

CLASS SKILLS

The sacred warder's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), and Sense Motive (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the sacred warder of Bahamut prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A sacred warder gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Divine Conversion: At 1st level, a sacred warder loses any effective sorcerer level it had previously gained by virtue of its age and draconic variety.

Its effective divine spellcasting level increases by the number of sorcerer levels it sacrificed, allowing the dragon to cast cleric spells much more effectively.

These effective levels apply only to the dragon's spellcasting, not to other class abilities (such as turning undead or wild shape).

For example, a very old gold dragon/1st-level cleric adopts the sacred warder of Bahamut prestige class.

Its sorcerer caster level of 13th converts into thirteen effective cleric levels, giving the dragon the spellcasting ability of a 14th-level cleric.

Smite Evil Dragons (Su): Once per day, a sacred warder of Bahamut of at least 2nd level may attempt to smite an evil dragon with one normal melee attack.

It adds its Charisma bonus to its attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

If the sacred warder accidentally smites a dragon that is not evil, or a creature that is not a dragon, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

A sacred warder can smite any creature of the dragon type that has an evil alignment.

At 6th level, a sacred warder may smite evil dragons twice per day, and at 10th level it can do so three times per day.

Spellcasting: From 2nd level on, when a new sacred warder level is gained, the dragon gains new spells per day as if it had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class it belonged to before it added the prestige class.

It does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, wild shape, and so on).

This essentially means that the dragon adds the level of sacred warder to the level of whatever divine spellcasting class the dragon has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the dragon had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a sacred warder, the dragon must decide to which class it adds each level of sacred warder for the purpose of determining spells per day.

A very old gold dragon/1st-level cleric/2nd-level sacred warder has the spellcasting ability of a 15th-level cleric: 13 from divine conversion of its sorcerer spellcasting levels, 1 from its single cleric level, and 1 from its two levels in the prestige class.

If a dragon advances an age category after taking levels in this class, the added levels of spellcasting ability are added to its effective divine spellcasting level.

If the very old gold dragon in the example above lives to be ancient, its spellcasting level would increase by 2, so it would cast spells as a 17th-level cleric.

Aura of Courage (Ex): At 3rd level, a sacred warder becomes immune to fear effects.

In addition, the dragon's frightful presence ability alters so that it inspires allies as well as striking terror into enemies. Allies within the radius of the dragon's aura (30 feet × its age category) are unaffected by the dragon's frightful presence and receive a morale bonus on their saving throws against fear equal to the dragon's class level + its Cha modifier.

Allies within the aura cannot be panicked by an evil dragon's frightful presence, regardless of their Hit Dice.

Enemies within the aura are affected normally by the dragon's frightful presence.

Sacred Shield (Su): At 7th level, a sacred warder gains the ability to surround itself with a protective aura that lasts 10 minutes and protects the dragon's body and equipment from attacks.

The shield absorbs 10 points of damage per class level.

Once the shield absorbs that much damage, it collapses.

The damage can be from any source—weapons, spells, any energy type, and so on.

Damage the dragon would not take anyway (fire damage against a gold dragon, for example, or weapon damage blocked by the dragon's damage reduction) does not count against the damage absorbed by the shield.

The dragon can use this ability three times per day.

Area Sacred Shield (Su): At 12th level, a sacred warder of Bahamut can extend its sacred shield to protect an area with a radius of 30 feet.

The dragon can place the barrier anywhere within its line of sight, and can choose to make it mobile with respect to an unattended object or willing creature (including the dragon itself).

The shield blocks incoming attacks, but creatures inside the shield can still attack out through the shield.

TALON OF TIAMAT

The talon of Tiamat furthers the goals of evil dragonkind. He takes particular delight in causing harm to metallic dragons and their allies.

The talons of Tiamat welcome characters from any class or background, as long as they share a dedication to evil.

Former fighters and barbarians rub shoulders with those who practice sorcery or divine magic.

Even ex-paladins can find a home among the talons.

Talons of Tiamat may work individually or in groups, as befits their plans.

They work well with evil characters of any stripe, and ally with evil dragons when possible.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a talon of Tiamat, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Feats: Dragonthral.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Intimidate 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

The talon of Tiamat's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the talon of Tiamat prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A talon of Tiamat is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Breath Weapon (Su): At 1st level, a talon of Tiamat gains the ability to breathe out a cone of frost (size of the cone corresponds to the size of the character) that deals 3d6 points of cold damage.

As the talon gains levels, additional versions of his breath weapon become available to him.

At 3rd level, the talon can breathe a line of acid (8d4 acid damage).

At 5th level, he can breathe a cone of corrosive gas (10d6 acid damage).

At 7th level, he can expel a line of lightning (12d8 electricity damage).

At 9th level, he can breathe a cone of fire (14d8 fire damage).

In each case, a successful Reflex save halves the damage dealt.

The DC for saves against the talon's breath weapon is 10 + talon class level + Con modifier.

A talon of Tiamat can use each of his breath weapons once per day.

Once a talon uses any of his breath weapons, he can't use any other breath weapon until 1d4 rounds have passed.

Spellcasting: When an even-numbered talon of Tiamat level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds 1/2 his talon of Tiamat level to the level of some other spellcasting class he has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly. If a character takes two or more levels in this class before having any levels in a spellcasting class, he does not receive this spellcasting benefit.

If he thereafter takes levels in one or more spellcasting classes, he becomes eligible to receive the spellcasting benefit for any level in the talon of Tiamat class that he has not already attained.

For example, a 7th-level fighter/2nd-level talon of Tiamat does not receive the spellcasting benefit for being a 2nd-level talon of Tiamat because he did not belong to a spellcasting class before taking 2nd level in the prestige class.

If he then picks up one or more levels of wizard before advancing to 4th level in the talon of Tiamat class, he receives the spellcasting benefit of a 4th-level talon of Tiamat (when he attains that level) but does not receive the 2nd-level benefit retroactively.

Voice of the Dragon (Ex): At 2nd level, a talon of Tiamat gains a +2 bonus on Bluff and Intimidate checks.

This bonus increases by +2 every four levels thereafter, to +4 at 6th level and +6 at 10th level.

Keen Senses (Ex): A talon of Tiamat gains low-light vision at 4th level.

He gains darkvision out to 60 feet at 8th level.
Immunities (Ex): At 6th level, a talon of Tiamat gains immunity to magic sleep and paralysis effects.
 In addition, he gains immunity to one of the following forms of energy, at his option: acid, cold, electricity, or fire. Once an energy immunity is selected, the decision may never be changed.
Frightful Presence (Ex): An 8th-level talon of Tiamat can unsettle foes with his mere presence.
 The talon of Tiamat can activate his frightful presence as a free action.
 Creatures within a radius of 30 feet per point of Charisma modifier (minimum 30 feet) are subject to the effect if they have fewer Hit Dice than the talon of Tiamat (dragons are immune to the effect).

 A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a Will save (DC 10 + talon's class level + talon's Cha modifier) remains immune to that talon's frightful presence for 24 hours.
 On a failure, creatures with 4 or fewer HD become panicked for 2d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 2d6 rounds.
Dominate Dragon (Su): A 10th-level talon of Tiamat can attempt to dominate any dragon (as dominate monster, but it only applies to dragons) once per day.
 The target may attempt a Will save to negate the effect (DC 10 + talon's class level + talon's Cha modifier).

UNHOLY RAVAGER OF TIAMAT

The goddess of evil dragons and of conquest, Tiamat claims some allegiance from every evil dragon. Those who devote themselves entirely to her cause, however, are among the most fearsome forces of evil in the world, living embodiments of her destructive power. Unholy ravagers of Tiamat are dragon clerics that hope to attain a sliver of their deity's mighty power while aspiring to none of Tiamat's subtlety and sophistication. Unholy ravagers live only to destroy, and when they set their minds on destruction, no stone is left standing on another when they are finished. Unholy ravagers of Tiamat are usually blue or green dragons with some levels of cleric. Though red dragons are born with a strong hereditary predisposition to chaos, a number of them stray from that alignment and end up as neutral evil unholy ravagers. An unholy ravager typically works alone, but may drive marauding hordes of kobolds, lizardfolk, or hobgoblins ahead of itself to soften up the opposition—or lull its foes into overconfidence.
 Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an unholy ravager of Tiamat, a dragon must fulfill all the following criteria.
Race: Any dragon.
Alignment: Lawful evil or neutral evil.
Base Attack Bonus: +15.
Feats: Maximize Breath, Recover Breath, Tempest Breath.
Spells: Able to cast divine spells.
Domain: Destruction.

CLASS SKILLS

The unholy ravager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the unholy ravager of Tiamat prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An unholy ravager gains no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Divine Conversion: At 1st level, an unholy ravager loses any effective sorcerer level it had previously gained by virtue of its age and draconic variety.

Its effective divine spellcasting level increases by the number of sorcerer levels it sacrificed, allowing the dragon to cast cleric spells much more effectively.

These effective levels apply only to the dragon's spellcasting, not to other class abilities (such as turning undead or wild shape).

For example, a very old red dragon/1st-level cleric adopts the unholy ravager of Tiamat prestige class.

Its sorcerer caster level of 13th converts into thirteen effective cleric levels in addition to its 1 level of cleric, giving the dragon the spellcasting ability of a 14th-level cleric.

Smite: An unholy ravager of Tiamat adds its class levels to its cleric levels to determine its bonus on damage when using its smite ability (the granted power of the Destruction domain).

At 4th level, 8th level, and 12th level, an unholy ravager can use its smite ability one additional time per day.

Spellcasting: From 2nd level on, when a new unholy ravager level is gained, the dragon gains new spells per day as if it had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class it belonged to before it added the prestige class.

It does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, wild shape, and so on).

This essentially means that the dragon adds the level of unholy ravager to the level of whatever divine spellcasting class the dragon has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the dragon had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an unholy ravager, the dragon must decide to which class it adds each level of unholy ravager for the purpose of determining spells per day.

A very old red dragon/1st-level cleric/2nd-level unholy ravager has the spellcasting ability of a 15th-level cleric: 13 from divine conversion of its sorcerer spellcasting levels, 1 from its single cleric level, and 1 from its two levels in the prestige class.

If a dragon advances an age category after taking levels in this class, the added levels of spellcasting ability are added to its effective divine spellcasting level.

If the very old red dragon example above lives to be ancient, its spellcasting level would increase by 2, so it would cast spells as a 17th-level cleric.

Breath Weapon Substitution (Sp): A 2nd-level unholy ravager of Tiamat can use breath weapon substitution at will.

However, using this ability increases the number of rounds the dragon must wait before using its breath weapon again by 1 round, as if it were using a metabreath feat.

Aura of Despair (Su): At 3rd level, an unholy ravager's frightful presence alters slightly.

In addition to the fear effect, creatures within the radius of the dragon's frightful presence take a -2 penalty on all saving throws.

This penalty is applied before creatures roll their saving throws against the frightful presence effect itself.

Profane Blast (Su): At 7th level, an unholy ravager of Tiamat can unleash a narrow blast of raw profane energy from its mouth three times per day.

The blast is a ray, requiring a ranged touch attack, with a range of 400 feet + 40 feet per class level.

The blast looks and feels like energy of the same type as the dragon's breath weapon.

If it hits a target, it deals the same number of dice worth of damage as the dragon's breath weapon, but uses d12s.

(So, a great wyrm blue dragon would deal 24d12 points of damage with its profane blast).

The damage it deals results directly from divine power and is therefore not subject to being reduced by protection from energy and similar magic.

Each use of this ability counts as a use of the dragon's breath weapon, so it cannot use its breath weapon for 1d4 rounds after issuing a profane blast.

An unholy ravager can target a creature behind a wall of force, prismatic wall, or prismatic sphere with its profane blast.

The dragon makes a special dispel check, rolling 1d20 + its age category + its class level against a DC of 11 + the effect's caster level.

If this check is successful, the effect is instantly negated (all layers in a prismatic effect are destroyed) and the ray goes on to strike the intended target (if the ranged touch attack roll is successful).

A profane blast is stopped normally by a sacred warder of Bahamut's sacred shield.

Mass Profane Blast (Su): At 12th level, an unholy ravager of Tiamat's profane blast occupies the same area as its breath weapon and affects all creatures within that area.

The dragon can choose whether to use a ray profane blast or a mass profane blast, and can use both abilities no more than a total of three times per day.

If a wall of force or prismatic effect is within the area of a mass profane blast, the dragon makes a special dispel check as described above for each such effect within the area.

DRAGON MAGIC (3.5)

DIAMOND DRAGON

"Let me show you a little trick I picked up from... a friend"

—Morvek Thar

Not all draconic secrets are about magic.

In addition to the well-known chromatic and metallic true dragons, there are the gem dragons.

Clinging more closely to neutrality, these beasts of crystal and thought are masters of the powers of the mind, rather than of arcane forces.

Much as sages believe the better-known dragons were the first to harness arcane magic, psionic scholars think the gem dragons were the first to unlock the vast potential of the mind.

The boldest of them study the link between gem dragons and psionics, learning to tap into what they refer to as the “draconic psionic collective”.

They see themselves as drawing power from psionic dragon energy and call themselves diamond dragons, after the rarest of gemstones.

BECOMING A DIAMOND DRAGON

Diamond dragons normally arise from the ranks of psions and wilders who seek a more martial path for their training. The physical rigors required to understand how gem dragons think force psions to bulk up considerably, while the unconventional path of dragon-based psionics appeals to the wilders’ less disciplined nature.

Fewer psychic warriors walk the path of the diamond dragon, lacking the power points necessary to make best use of the abilities learned.

However, their naturally combative power selection matches well with dragon psionics, so those with a method of boosting their power points make very effective diamond dragons.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Neutral good, neutral evil, lawful neutral, chaotic neutral, or neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 3 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

Special: Ability to manifest 3rd-level psionic powers.

CLASS SKILLS

(+2 Int modifier per level): Autohypnosis, Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (psionics), Profession, Psicraft, Ride, Search, Swim, Use Psionic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

Diamond dragons learn to channel the powers of dragons through their psionics, duplicating the abilities and physical features that true dragons take for granted.

Doing this requires them to spend somewhat less energy on traditional psionic studies, though they continue to learn nondraconic psionic powers only slightly more slowly than their traditional brethren.

The payoff for this reduction in standard psionic power is the ability to fight, fly, and even cow foes as dragons do.

Manifesting: At every level except 1st and 6th, you gain new power points per day, access to new powers, and an increase in manifester level as if you had also attained a level in a manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming a diamond dragon, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining maximum power level, manifester level, and new power access.

Dragon Augmentation (Ex): Learning to think the way dragons think is more than a matter of mental training. Dragons are extremely fit creatures, and a psionic character must begin to match that fitness as part of learning their mental habits.

At 1st level, as a result of such study and physical training, you gain a +1 bonus to Strength, Dexterity, or Constitution (your choice).

Once this choice is made, it cannot be changed.

At 5th level and again at 10th level, you have the choice of increasing the same ability score by another +1, or adding a +1 bonus to a different physical ability score.

Sleep/Paralysis Neutralization (Su): Starting at 1st level, you are capable of overcoming magical sleep and paralysis effects by drawing on the mental powers of gem dragons. As an immediate action, when you would magically be put to sleep or paralyzed, you can expend 1 power point to neutralize the effect.

Channel Dragon Claws (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can channel the power of the gem dragons to form claws made of psionic energy.

They appear as shimmering, clear crystal claws that form around your own fingers.

Manifesting the claws takes one standard action and 1 power point.

The claws last for 1 minute per manifester level and deal 1d6 points of slashing damage (assuming you are Medium) plus your Strength bonus.

You can attack with one claw as a standard action or both claws as a full-round action.

In addition, in any round in which you take a standard action to manifest a psionic power, you can make a single claw attack as a swift action.

For every 2 additional power points you spend to manifest your dragon claws, you gain a +1 enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls with the claws (maximum +5). You can spend a number of power points on this ability equal to or less than your manifester level.

Breath Weapon (Su): At 4th level, you can manifest a breath weapon attack, similar to those of various dragons.

Doing this costs 5 power points and deals cold, electricity, fire, or sonic damage (chosen at the time of manifestation; see below for details); a successful Reflex save (DC 10 + class level + your Int modifier) halves the damage.

Each of the damage types acts slightly differently, as detailed below.

Cold: This 30-foot-long, cone-shaped breath weapon deals 5d8 points of cold damage and allows a Fortitude save (not a Reflex save) for half damage.

Electricity: This 60-foot-long, line-shaped breath weapon deals 5d6 points of electricity damage and adds 2 to the save DC.

Fire: This 30-foot-long, cone-shaped breath weapon deals 5d8 points of fire damage.

Sonic: This 30-foot-long, cone-shaped breath weapon deals 5d4 points of sonic damage and ignores objects’ hardness.

For every additional power point you spend on your breath weapon, you deal an extra die of damage.

You can spend a number of power points on this ability equal to or less than your manifester level.

Channel Dragon Wings (Su): Starting at 6th level, you can form wings made of psionic energy.

The wings form without damaging or being hampered by any armor or clothing worn.

Manifesting the wings costs 7 power points.

The wings grant you a fly speed of 30 feet with perfect maneuverability and last for 1 minute per manifester level.

You cannot fly if you are carrying a heavy load.

Flying with the wings takes only as much concentration as walking, leaving you free to fight or manifest psionic powers.

For every 2 additional power points you spend, your fly speed increases by 5 feet.

You can spend a number of power points on this ability equal to or less than your manifester level.

Channel Dragon Tail (Su): Starting at 8th level, you can form a long dragon tail made of psionic energy.

The tail appears to be a shimmering, clear, crystal appendage that grows from your own spine.

Manifesting the tail costs 9 power points, and it lasts for 1 minute per level.

The tail has twice your normal reach (thus, it has a reach of 10 feet if you are human but 20 feet if you are an ogre), and you can make a melee attack with it as a standard action, dealing 1d8 points of bludgeoning damage (assuming you are Medium) plus $1-1/2 \times$ your Strength bonus, if you also have claws from your channel dragon claws ability, you can attack with the tail and both claws as a full-round action (treat the claws as secondary natural weapons for the purpose of your attack rolls).

Your psychic tail cant make attacks of opportunity.

For every 2 additional power points you spend on your dragon tail, you gain a +1 enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls with the tail (max +5).

You can spend a number of power points on this ability equal to or less than your manifester level.

Frightful Presence Aura (Su): At 10th level, you gain the ability to project a frightful presence aura similar to that of a dragon.

Activating your frightful presence costs 11 power points; once activated, it remains active for 5 rounds.

The frightful presence functions in a 60-foot radius.

Any enemy within this area must make a Will save (DC 10 + class level + your Int modifier) or be shaken for the remainder of the frightful presence's duration.

Creatures with fewer than half your Hit Dice are frightened rather than shaken.

For every additional power point you spend on your frightful presence aura, the duration increases by 1 round.

You can spend a number of power points on this ability equal to or less than your manifester level.

PLAYING A DIAMOND DRAGON

You have learned to tap into the energies of the minds of dragons, drawing forth pure psionic powers that others cannot access.

Much like a sorcerer with draconic feats or a dragonfire adept, you have elevated yourself above others of your race, becoming more like a dragon than a humanoid.

You're proud of this accomplishment, and it shows.

Knowing you're better able to survive a fight gives you the confidence to be open about your superiority.

You don't need to be smug or overbearing, but you do exude a quiet sense of personal satisfaction and accomplishment.

COMBAT

You are better able to engage in close combat than typical psions or wilders.

In addition to being more physically fit, you can employ your channeled claws or tail to strike at foes in melee without giving up psionic attacks.

Your cone-shaped breath weapon can catch numerous foes in it near the front line, while your line-shaped breath weapon allows you to strike at enemies who hold back, such as spellcasters and masterminds.

However, you are not as resilient as a true fighter and still depend on armor or defensive psionic powers for safety.

You should be ready to retreat (possibly by flying away) if you run low on power points.

ADVANCEMENT

There are many ways to find the path of the diamond dragon.

You might have been driven to understand psionic dragons, naturally developing a closer understanding of them through study and mediation.

You might have actually met such a creature, perhaps many years ago when you first learned psionics, and found yourself moving toward a form that's more in keeping with that teacher.

Or perhaps you simply had visions or dreams about using psionic energy in dragon form and followed them to create a training program that made you what you are today.

Now that you've begun to see real benefits from your study into dragon psionics, a long and clear course of study lies before you.

You gain some draconic power at nearly every level and can augment your abilities with careful selection of your other psionic powers.

You can become more dragonlike and expand your mental studies long after you've mastered the secrets of this prestige class.

As a diamond dragon, you have greater freedom than other psionic characters when selecting psionic powers, because you know that as you progress through your new career, you'll automatically gain melee and ranged attack powers and mobility, though all at a cost in power points.

When selecting your other psionic powers, focus on those that increase your defense, healing ability, or general utility.

Since you'll burn through power points faster than most psionic characters, you would benefit from taking the Psionic Talent feat as many times as you can manage.

In addition, your greater physical abilities make Body Fuel an attractive choice.

RESOURCES

All diamond dragons share a sense of kinship that binds them together, even if they end up on opposite sides of an issue.

You can count on polite treatment from diamond dragons who oppose you and warm hospitality from those who do not.

Having taken the mantle of being a dragon, you are expected to be self-sufficient, but you could ask for a meal and a safe place to sleep without violating that expectation.

A few colleges of diamond dragons exist, welcoming all who come to them in peace.

Many of these colleges have one or two gem dragons that teach and maintain order.

At these places, you can attend classes or find a quiet place to mediate, but you cannot recruit armies to march off to war.

DIAMOND DRAGONS IN THE WORLD

"I thought we had him—before he hit me with that blasted tail and flew off!"

—Tordek, dwarf fighter

Diamond dragons fit well in any game that includes both psionics and a higher concentration of dragons.

Though based on psionic gem dragons, diamond dragons can operate even if neutral dragons are not common in the campaign.

A diamond dragon might have learned draconic powers from an ancient tome of lore, a senior diamond dragon, or a rare lone gem dragon sitting atop a distant mountain. Most members of this prestige class wander and test their new abilities against the threats of the world, making them excellent choices for adventurers.

ORGANIZATION

Diamond dragons spend little time in the cloistered schools where psionics are taught.

At a typical psionics school, they are treated as venerated outsiders, asked to speak about their unique view of psionics and their experiences as a draconic thinker, but they are not expected to stay for any great length of time.

A diamond dragon who wishes to remain at a particular school for a few weeks or months could teach classes or perform difficult chores in exchange for a small cell and simple fare, but the character's radical path prevents him from attaining a position of power there.

Less commonly, a diamond dragon might establish his own school upon retirement, creating a place that teaches only the draconic version of psionics.

In these colleges, wandering diamond dragons and true gem dragons can stay as long as they wish, and students handle all chores.

The more draconic powers a diamond dragon can demonstrate, the greater authority he enjoys.

NPC REACTIONS

Diamond dragons are too rare for most groups to have formed any particular opinions about them.

Most communities treat diamond dragons as they would any psionic characters—or as psychic warriors, if the community recognizes a difference between the manifesting classes.

Sorcerers and dragonfire adepts often see diamond dragons as kindred spirits, though this attitude does not automatically lead to a friendly reaction.

Gem dragons are friendly toward diamond dragons, whom they consider younger cousins.

Should a diamond dragon violate a gem dragon's hospitality and goodwill, however, the creature's attitude becomes hostile very quickly.

DIAMOND DRAGON LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (psionics) can research diamond dragons to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Diamond dragons are psionic characters with dragonlike abilities.

DC 15: Diamond dragons channel the power of psionic gem dragons, gaining claws, wings, tails, and similar powers.

DC 20: By learning draconic powers, psionic diamond dragons grow physically tougher and gain new attack options—including a breath weapon.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable diamond dragon, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Most diamond dragons travel constantly, making them difficult to find.

If a diamond dragon school operates in an area, it's possible to set up a meeting with a junior faculty member in a day or two, or a senior member in no less than a week.

It's traditional (but not mandatory) to bring gifts to such a teacher to show respect.

DIAMOND DRAGONS IN THE GAME

Because they are wanderers, diamond dragons fit well in campaigns where psionic characters are normally found only in far-off lands.

A single diamond dragon can exist without requiring a whole network of psionic characters to have taught and trained him.

If gem dragons exist in the campaign, they can become the source of all diamond dragons, training a single student every few centuries.

Diamond dragons appeal to players who like psions and wilders but find them too fragile.

This prestige class might not be martial enough for players who like psychic warriors, though some will enjoy it.

The class is strongly rooted in the psionics system and requires more bookkeeping than a typical psionic character, so it's best reserved for players who have experience with that kind of character.

ADAPTATION

If the campaign doesn't include gem dragons, the Dungeon Master can easily transform diamond dragons into more generic psionic characters who use their mental powers to emulate dragonlike features, rather than channeling them from a conceptual collective.

In a campaign with no psionics at all, the DM could turn diamond dragons into an arcane prestige class, allowing them to fuel their special abilities by spontaneously sacrificing existing spells rather than spending power points.

Treat a sacrificed spell as having a number of power points equal to twice its spell level minus 1.

Thus, a diamond dragon could sacrifice a 3rd-level spell to power his breath weapon class feature.

DRAGON DESCENDANT

“When you cross me, you cross my entire heritage. And my ancestors were unstoppable tyrants of the skies.”

—Lauthus Thulcher, dragon descendant

A secretive monastic order, dragon descendants tap into the power of their draconic heritage to call on their ancestors in times of need.

Then they fight in synthesis with the spirit of a long-dead dragon that bolsters both offense and defense.

BECOMING A DRAGON DESCENDANT

Almost all dragon descendants are monks with multiple chromatic dragons in their family tree.

But they aren't necessarily evil, nor do they necessarily know all the details of their ancestry.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Feats: Combat Reflexes, Dragontouched or Draconic Heritage (any chromatic dragon), Improved Unarmed Strike.

Special: Still mind class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Sense Motive, Spot, Swim, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

As you attain higher levels, you gain access to more of your ancestral heritage, culminating in your ability to call on the spirits of two of your ancestors at the same time.

Monk Abilities: Throughout your career as a dragon descendant, your dragon descendant levels stack with your monk levels for determining your unarmed damage, Armor Class bonus, and unarmored speed bonus.

Ancestor: At every odd-numbered level, you can tap into the power of a specific, notable ancestor dragon to augment your own abilities.

When you call an ancestor's spirit to you, your facial features shift to become a combination of your own face and that of your ancestor.

Calling an ancestor spirit is a standard action.

Until you reach 10th level, you can have only one ancestor spirit active at a time.

When you call a new one, the old one automatically departs.

Rampaging Ancestor: Starting at 1st level, you can call a dragon ancestor known for its destructive rampages through the countryside.

When you call that ancestor's spirit, you become immune to fear and gain a +1 insight bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls.

At 5th level the insight bonus increases to +2, and at 9th level it increases to +3.

In addition, your unarmed strikes are considered to be magic and chaotic-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Subtle Ancestor: Starting at 3rd level, you establish a connection to an ancestor dragon that was a puppet master, wielding influence among the lesser races with subterfuge. When you call that ancestor's spirit, you gain an insight bonus on Hide checks and Move Silently checks equal to your dragon descendant class level, and you don't take the standard -5 penalty for moving quickly while you sneak around.

You can also make sneak attacks as a rogue of your dragon descendant level, dealing an extra 2d6 points of damage with each successful sneak attack (this stacks with any existing sneak attack or similar class feature you have).

Eldritch Ancestor: Starting at 5th level, you can connect to an ancestor dragon that was a powerful spellcaster.

When you call on the eldritch ancestor's spirit, you gain the spell-like ability to emit a ray with a range of 60 feet.

This ranged touch attack affects a single target, allows no saving throw, and deals 1d6 points of damage per two dragon descendant class levels.

The ray is the equivalent of a spell whose level is equal to one-half your dragon descendant class level (round down). The ray is subject to spell resistance, and it deals half damage to objects.

Enduring Ancestor: Starting at 7th level, you connect to an ancestor dragon that survived such adversity as attacks from other dragons, would-be dragonslayers, and adventurers seeking to raid its hoard.

When you call on this ancestor's spirit, you gain an insight bonus on saving throws equal to one-half your class level. You also gain damage reduction X/cold iron, where X is equal to your dragon descendant class level.

Ancient Ancestor: Starting at 9th level, you reach an ancestor dragon known widely to sages and historians even today—one of the great ancient dragons of folklore.

When you call on this ancestor's spirit, you can make an attack of opportunity against any foe who attempts a melee attack against you, until you have reached your limit of attacks of opportunity set by your Dexterity score and the Combat Reflexes feat.

Furthermore, you gain an insight bonus to your Armor Class equal to one-half your dragon descendant class level. Ancestral Lore: When you meditate, you sometimes hear the whispers of your ancestors, and if you concentrate hard enough, you can briefly communicate with them and benefit from their draconic lore.

This contact functions like bardic knowledge (PH 28), except that you substitute a Concentration check for the bardic knowledge check.

Starting at 2nd level, you can meditate in this way once per week.

Slippery Mind: Starting at 4th level, the presence of an ancestor dragon's spirit can jar your mind free of magical effects that would otherwise control or compel you.

For more details, see the rogue class feature (PH 51).

Rapid Calling: By 6th level, you have made such lasting connections to your ancestors that you're able to call them forth more quickly.

From now on, connecting to an ancestor spirit takes only a swift action, not a standard action.

Detect Dragonblood (Sp): Starting at 8th level, you can detect nearby dragons at will; their blood seems to sing to you faintly.

See the detect dragonblood spell, page 65.

Double Synthesis: Starting at 10th level, your soul is such a welcome home for your ancestors that you can have two ancestor dragon spirits active at the same time, gaining the full benefit of each.

If you call a third ancestor, the spirit that has been with you the longest departs to make room for the newcomer.

PLAYING A DRAGON DESCENDANT

You know that you are part of a long line of dragons, even if the details of your genealogy are revealed only gradually, and that heritage is important to you.

Whenever you call an ancestor spirit to share your soul, that connection deepens.

The scholars of the First Scroll (see page 141) share many of your values, such as an interest in the power of dragon bloodlines and the potency of draconic magic.

They teach the meditation techniques that open your soul to your ancestors.

Likewise, some dragons know these techniques and can teach them to students.

Certain dragons go so far as to watch their human relative from a distance, revealing the true "family history" when the character reaches adulthood.

Thus, it's not uncommon for a dragon descendant to learn the techniques of the class but grow horrified by the evil acts of the dragons that teach them.

Fortunately, once a dragon descendant learns the meditation techniques, he subsequently needs only solitary practice.

The path to ancestral enlightenment doesn't require constant study with dragons or the First Scroll.

COMBAT

The most important choice you make in combat is which ancestor spirit you want.

- The rampaging ancestor is always a solid choice in melee; no one looks askance at bonuses on attack rolls and damage rolls.

- The subtle ancestor is useful when infiltrating and attacking with surprise, but it's less helpful if your foes are aware of you.

- The eldritch ancestor has only one benefit, but it's a big one: a ranged attack no monk can match.

Combined with your monklike maneuverability, it makes you an elusive foe.

Choose the enduring ancestor when you're trying to occupy a monster's full attention while your allies do something else.

Call the ancient ancestor in climactic fights to the death with a major enemy.

ADVANCEMENT

Most dragon descendants learn the necessary meditative techniques from a dragon or from members of the First Scroll.

As you gain more levels in this class, First Scroll researchers might ask for your help.

On the other hand, a chromatic dragon might tempt you with power and an alliance, bringing you face to face with the truth about your heritage—there are powerful evildoers in your past.

After you've learned how to connect with your ancestor spirits, advancing as a dragon descendant is mostly a matter of solitary practice and meditation.

Once you enter the class, your instructors have no further insight to provide, and they can't prevent your advancement even if you spurn them.

At every odd-numbered level, you become able to connect to a new ancestor dragon spirit.

The first time you do so is during an extended meditation not unlike a seance.

You converse with your ancestor, and thereafter that same ancestor spirit will return whenever you call.

Some dragon descendants revel in the connection with their ancestry and treat the spirits as friends.

Others hold them at a serene distance, and a few smile as they force the evildoers of the past to make amends by using their power for good.

When you gain access to a new ancestor, take some time to think about who that dragon was in life.

It's more interesting to plead, "Aid me, oh Kur-i-yah of the Howling Mountains" than to simply say "I call my rampaging ancestor".

RESOURCES

Because dragon descendants are solitary in nature, individuals provide little if anything in the way of resources for one another.

Unless you are affiliated with an organization such as the First Scroll (see below), it is likely that the only resources you have access to are those that you procure for yourself.

DRAGON DESCENDANTS IN THE WORLD

"I don't know where she learned such martial arts techniques.

They have a...sinuous quality I've never seen before."

—Horu Desh, master of the Knife-as-Wind school

Dragon descendants engage in the same rigorous physical and mental exercises that monks do.

plus they spend time in meditation communing with their ancestors.

A dragon descendant is almost always sharing spirit-space with a long-dead ancestor, so it's common for him to make historical references that other members of his party don't understand.

Some dragon descendants change personalities—at least to a degree—depending on which ancestor spirit they're currently hosting.

ORGANIZATION

Dragon descendants have no formal organization of their own.

A human monk known only as Brother Denka was the first dragon descendant among members of the First Scroll, more than 400 years ago.

He taught the technique to dozens of disciples before being summoned to meet with the group's upper hierarchy, alter which he was never seen again.

Today, many dragon descendants remain affiliated with the First Scroll, taking directions from the group's leaders.

Others serve mighty dragons as trusted lieutenants.

In tact, a human dragon descendant who has risen to the top of the Shadow's Fangs cabal (see page 144) actually shares an ancestor with the group's secret master.

Vaeratrux.

NPC REACTIONS

Chromatic dragons show great respect to dragon descendants because they have a special connection to their own bloodline and heritage.

Thus, chromatic dragons have an initial attitude of friendly toward any dragon descendant who is not overtly hostile or is not known to be working against that dragon's particular machinations.

Few others know about dragon descendants and so have no preconceptions about them.

However, historians—characters with 4 or more ranks in Knowledge (history)—are fascinated with the idea of conversing with long-dead ancestors, and a dragon descendant who demonstrates this ability gains a +2 circumstance bonus on social interactions with them.

DRAGON DESCENDANT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research dragon descendants to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Some people with dragon blood in their family tree can speak to their dead dragon ancestors through meditation.

They're called dragon descendants.

DC 15: Dragon descendants can call an ancestor dragon spirit into their bodies.

When they do, they take on some of the abilities of that ancestor, including fighting styles, stealth, and magic.

DC 20: The more powerful a dragon descendant, the more different ancestor spirits he can call—but only one at a time.

DC 25: A group known as the First Scroll can teach the techniques necessary to become a dragon descendant.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable dragon descendant, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

DRAGON DESCENDANTS IN THE GAME

At first, dragon descendants appear to be similar to monks. Other characters usually don't notice a difference until they start changing their abilities and appearance as they shift ancestor spirits.

Dragon descendants invite players to make interesting tactical choices by picking the best ancestor spirit for a given situation.

The class should appeal to players who like family history to be an important part of their characters' backgrounds. And because dragon descendants are connected to evil dragons, the class makes a great option for players who like their characters to have a sinister past but have also vowed to reform.

ADAPTATION

As written, the dragon descendant is a 10-level prestige class.

But if you have a player who is fascinated by this option, consider extending the class rather than forcing a less interesting choice (probably back to monk) after 10th level. Offer new ancestor spirits at every odd-numbered level, and cap the extended version of the class by granting the double synthesis ability at the highest level.

If the notion of an evil heritage doesn't work for your game, it's easy to imagine metallic dragons having dragon descendants.

This adaptation requires nothing more than changing the rampaging ancestor to a crusading ancestor instead.

DRAGON LORD

"The earth trembles where dragons tread.

Let the land shudder at my very steps, and let all who dare my gaze fall under my shadow."

—Master Ghorkel, half-orc dragon lord

A dragon lord is the general at the head of an army, the emperor at the helm of an empire, or the warleader who dominates a battlefield.

He learns much from dragons, modeling his philosophy and strategies after the powerful creatures with great success.

Dragon lords strike fear into the hearts of all who cross their path and use brilliant combat tactics that mirror those of the true dragons.

In many legends, a dragon lord is the spirit of a dead dragon reborn into a different body, slowly awakening over time and coming to realize the power of its former self.

BECOMING A DRAGON LORD

For the most part, only characters with a dominating presence on the battlefield become dragon lords.

Fighters and marshals (see Miniatures Handbook) are the most common characters who take this prestige class, though clerics and paladins dedicated to deities of war or dragon gods sometimes become dragon lords due to exceptional circumstances.

Similarly, some especially ferocious or savage barbarians become dragon lords, modeling their combat tactics after the instinctive brutality of true dragons.

On rare occasions, hexblades and samurai (see Complete Warrior) take this prestige class, too, but their philosophies often conflict with those of the typical dragon lord.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Ride, Sense Motive, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

Dragon lords are masters of battlefield warfare who have studied the tactics and abilities of dragons and emulate their philosophies.

Like other warlords, dragon lords use fear and intimidation to demoralize their enemies, while at the same time inspiring zealous devotion in their followers.

Draconic Aura: You know that the image and presence of a dragon can boost or destroy the morale of troops, an effect you study and build into your strategies.

At 1st level, you gain the ability to project a single draconic aura chosen from those presented on page 86.

At 4th, 7th, and 10th level, you can add another draconic aura to the list of those you can project.

When you reach 5th level, the bonus granted by both of your auras increases to +2.

At 9th level, the bonus granted by all three of your auras increases to +3.

The aura gained at 10th level grants a +3 bonus, just as the other three auras you gained earlier.

Reckless Devotion (Su): When soldiers learn that a dragon fights on their side, they have greater incentive to struggle valiantly against the enemy—when victory seems assured, all want a share of the glory.

Starting at 2nd level, you learn to inspire this kind of zeal in your followers, granting them a temporary boost in their combat abilities driven by fanatical devotion.

Once per day, you can select a number of allies equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1) to gain the benefit of this ability.

The chosen allies gain 5 temporary hit points, a +1 morale bonus on melee attack rolls and melee damage rolls, and a +1 morale bonus on saves.

Any character who is your cohort or follower (as per the Leadership feat) gains twice the normal benefit (10 temporary hit points and a +2 bonus).

All benefits last for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

At 6th level, you can use this ability twice per day, and at 10th level, you can use it three times per day.

Divide and Conquer (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you gain the ability to fight even when assaulted from different sides, turning a disadvantage into a cunning strategy.

Just as dragons can fight off foes when swarmed by lashing out in all directions, you learn to use your foes' distance to your advantage.

Whenever you are flanked by two or more creatures, you gain a bonus on melee damage rolls against each flanker equal to 1/2 your dragon lord class level (rounded up).

If you can't be flanked (such as if you have the improved uncanny dodge class feature), you still gain the benefit of this ability when opponents occupy flanking positions around you.

Dragon Leadership (Ex): Starting at 1st level, you add 2 to your Leadership score for the purpose of attracting a cohort with the dragonblood subtype.

Most dragon lords prefer the Dragon Cohort feat (see Draconomicon) to the Leadership feat, but this benefit applies equally well to any feat or other benefit that grants you a cohort.

Crushing Defeat (Ex): Starting at 8th level, you gain the ability to demoralize your enemies by dealing with them harshly, ensuring that they know your power just as lesser beings know the power of true dragons.

Whenever you slay or incapacitate an opponent (by reducing him to -1 or fewer hit points), you can make an Intimidate check as a free action to demoralize a number of foes equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1) within 60 feet (see the Intimidate skill.

PH 76).

This ability is a mind-affecting fear effect.

PLAYING A DRAGON LORD

Like the dragons that roam the land, you are the master of all you survey.

There is no fortress you cannot capture, no hold you cannot defend, no army you cannot overrun and no enemy you cannot face down.

You know that strategy is the larger part of victory in battle, and as a result you turn your mind toward the tactical side of command.

Yet your mentors and heroes are not generals and commanders of old, but rather the dragons that live in the world here and now.

The greatest strategy of all is to rout your enemy not with your sword but with your presence.

Just as a dragon flies overhead, causing panicked masses to flee, so too do you ride into battle with confidence and savagery, driving your enemies to flee before you.

This philosophy also applies to life beyond the battlefield. When faced with a challenge, you know it is best to proceed with confidence and a solid strategy.

Having the right tool for the job is a significant part of success, and you're willing to take what you need to accomplish your task.

If those you take from are willing, so be it: if not, it is of no concern.

Though you demand discipline from those who serve you, the notion that local laws and other trivial mailers apply to you is laughable.

A dragon does not ask before it takes treasure for its hoard, and you are a dragon among mortals.

Some would call you lawless, even criminal at times, but such unenlightened lesser beings fail to realize that you make the laws.

By your decree are actions taken, just as a dragon bends to its command all those who live in its domain.

This is the natural way of things; the strongest set the rules for the weaker to follow.

The dragon is not meek before the shepherd, and you are not meek before those who lack the will and knowledge to challenge you.

The few beings whom you consider your equal—namely, fellow adventurers and other warlords—are afforded the respect and admiration that one dragon might give to another.

Loyalty is a virtue that you expect from those who serve you.

but your loyalty is earned only by those who prove themselves your equal in bravery, cunning, or power.

COMBAT

If you can win a battle without firing a single arrow or leading a single charge, so much the better.

If you can intimidate a foe into fleeing or accept the surrender of an interior force, the victory is sweeter.

When combat is unavoidable and the foolish challenge you, your favorite strategy is to show them the folly of their mistake by delivering upon them a merciless defeat.

Every strike could be a killing blow, and you rarely hold back, even if there might be value in keeping a foe alive.

You take prisoners if doing so is of no extra difficulty, but you have little time for games—if taking an enemy alive is even a small hindrance, you dispatch him instead.

You make frequent use of your intimidating demeanor, shouting epithets and curses at your foes as you cleave through them.

Your goal is not only to defeat an enemy but also to demoralize his allies, giving you a greater chance of success.

However, if intimidation is not possible and your actions only further enrage your opponents, you focus on simply defeating them.

Alter all, when your foes cannot be routed, why hand them an advantage by stoking their fury?

ADVANCEMENT

The first time you saw a dragon on the wing, with dozens of commoners fleeing before it like a tidal wave through the streets, you knew there was a smarter path to victory than simple battlefield tactics.

From that point on, you studied the way that dragons fight, both against lesser beings and against one another, in the hope of one day harnessing their awesome presence.

Now you have accomplished your goal and become more than a mere military commander—you are a self-styled warlord, your mere will a command to others.

You have set yourself up as a dragon among mortals, a dominant force that bends others to your wishes.

Moreover, your continued study of dragonkind has brought you great success on the battlefield, putting your name on the lips of all those who have seen your skill in war.

As a dragon lord, you should always purchase the maximum number of ranks in your Intimidate skill to take full advantage of your special abilities.

Feats that enhance the Intimidate skill are also valuable, as are magic items or spells that improve your Charisma score. Additionally, standard combat feats that let you dispense with foes more quickly allow you to demoralize even more opponents.

RESOURCES

The world is yours for the taking.

Your followers provide aid and assistance, as well as brute force, whenever you call upon them.

In essence, you are the leader of your own organization.

If you have proven yourself on the field of battle, you might find entire cities or nations willing to serve your needs out of respect, fear, or both.

Few will dare to stand in your path, allowing you to reach out and take whatever you wish.

DRAGON LORDS IN THE WORLD

“There is no more fearsome sight on the battlefield than a dragon bringing its might to bear on your forces.

That some should seek to harness such an effect is natural, and using this knowledge against their enemies means victory and glory.”

—Bors, dwarf war priest

A Dungeon Master might find it challenging to fit a dragon lord into a campaign, especially one with good-aligned player characters.

Though the dragon lord could easily be a bully or a thug, he might also be a famous military commander who is revered and feared even by his own people.

Similarly, dragon lords seeking to do good might be crusaders who consider it their right (or even their duty) to use their strength as a means of eradicating evil.

Though a dragon lord is forceful and intimidating, the character's player ultimately decides whether he uses his power for good or ill.

ORGANIZATION

Like the dragons they model themselves after, dragon lords are figuratively at the top of the food chain.

They are the commanders and leaders, the warlords and warmongers, who call the shots and determine courses of action.

Each dragon lord is the master of his own domain, and if two of them come into contact with one another, sparks fly more often than not.

When their circles of influence overlap, they clash frequently, with pain and death the usual result.

As leaders, dragon lords are strict, demanding loyalty and obedience from their followers.

Since most dragon lords are military commanders—whether on a grand scale, such as the leader of an army, or on a small scale, such as the head of an adventuring party—they require great discipline in their followers and allies, making rare exceptions only for fellow adventurers who have proven themselves trustworthy.

NPC REACTIONS

Dragon lords are feared and revered nearly everywhere they go.

They demand respect even when in hostile territory, meaning that lawful enemies are more inclined to be simply unfriendly toward them.

However, the other side of this coin is that in supposedly friendly towns and cities, a dragon lord frequently is unwelcome, and people who would normally be friendly toward a group of PCs might be indifferent, or in extreme cases unfriendly, toward a party that contains a dragon lord. Dragon lords just have a way of gaining reputations as bullies and thugs.

Among militaries or mercenary bands, however, a dragon lord's demand for respect usually outweighs his ability to command fear, and as such any dragon lord traveling among a band of soldiers can expect a more friendly welcome.

Even when meeting with opposing commanders or visiting an enemy encampment under a flag of truce, a dragon lord's reputation can turn hostility to indifference—a sign that enemy soldiers respect his accomplishments.

DRAGON LORD LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research dragon lords to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Dragon lords are warlords who model their tactics after those used by dragons.

DC 15: Dragon lords adhere to a philosophy that defeating enemies without combat is just as desirable as overcoming them on the field of battle.

DC 20: Dragon lords have such a presence in combat that they can drive off veteran soldiers simply by intimidating them, and a favorite tactic is to utterly crush a foe before demoralizing its allies.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable dragon lord, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Dragon lords are not hard to locate, especially since their names and deeds are on the tongue of almost everyone who meets them.

Finding a dragon lord is usually as simple as inquiring at military encampments or with mercenary bands, especially those with a reputation for overrunning an opposing force and sending enemies fleeing.

DRAGON LORDS IN THE GAME

A dragon lord can be a challenging inclusion in a good-aligned campaign, but such a character should fit naturally in games that feature a more ambiguous view of the nature of good and evil.

Players who wish to be party leaders or command their own forces will likely find this prestige class appealing, especially since dragon lords are usually wrecking balls who can smash foes and send other enemies packing. Most dragon lords have little difficulty accepting other adventurers as equals (except for those who shy from challenges or flee in fear), so they integrate well into diverse parties, though sometimes they clash with paladins for the same reason they clash with other dragon lords.

ADAPTATION

Dragon lords need very little adaptation to fit into other campaign models.

If the world does not have dragons in abundance, just change the philosophy of this prestige class so that it's based on defeating enemies without necessarily resorting to violence.

Replace the draconic aura bonus feats with simple fighter bonus feats to give the characters prowess in combat without relying on dragons or draconic abilities.

HAND OF THE WINGED MASTERS

"By the order of the Council of Wyrms, and for their greater glory, you must die!"

—Myrmith Drakeblade

Dragons often need expert servants to be their eyes, ears, and hands in humanoid society.

A hand of the winged masters has dedicated his life to the service of a single dragon or to a group of dragons united in a common cause.

A dragon master becomes the political and spiritual leader for the hands, gaining their total loyalty.

This service rises above obedience to country, church, family, or friend.

Usually, the hands act as spies and informants, but when needed, they can also be saboteurs and killers.

BECOMING A HAND OF THE WINGED MASTERS

Since hands of the winged masters primarily serve as spies and informants, this prestige class is most applicable to rogues and multiclass rogues (such as rogue/rangers and rogue/fighters).

In campaigns using the ninja, scout, and spellthief classes (see Complete Adventurer), ninjas and scouts are equally common members of this prestige class.

Spellthieves are less likely to enter this class, since it offers no arcane spell progression, but a spellthief who is willing to sacrifice future spellcasting ability can easily qualify.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Hide 4 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Languages: Draconic. Feats: Dragonouched.

Special: Sneak attack, sudden strike, or skirmish +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (local), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Survival, Swim, Tumble, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As agents of great dragons, hands of the winged masters constantly strive to accomplish their assigned missions and train to be more effective tools.

They learn to move about unnoticed, strike from the shadows, and work with other servants of their masters.

Draconic Senses: At 1st level, you gain Draconic Senses (see page 17) as a bonus feat, even if you don't meet its prerequisite.

If you already have Draconic Senses, you can instead take any other draconic feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Special Attack (Ex): At 2nd level, 5th level, and 8th level, your sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike ability deals an extra 1d6 points of damage.

If you have more than one of these abilities, you can improve any one ability of your choice (choose each time you gain this benefit).

Dragonfire Strike: At 3rd level, you gain Dragonfire Strike (see page 18) as a bonus feat, even if you don't meet its prerequisite.

TABLE 2-5: THE DRAGON LORD

Level	Base				Special	Hit Die: d10	Draconic Auras Known
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Draconic aura +1	1
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Reckless devotion 1/day	1
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Divide and conquer	1
4th	+4	+4	+1	+1	Dragon leadership	2
5th	+5	+4	+1	+1	Draconic aura +2	2
6th	+6	+5	+2	+2	Reckless devotion 2/day	2
7th	+7	+5	+2	+2	—	3
8th	+8	+6	+2	+2	Crushing defeat	3
9th	+9	+6	+3	+3	Draconic aura +3	3
10th	+10	+7	+3	+3	Reckless devotion 3/day	4

If you already have Dragonfire Strike, you can instead take any other draconic feat for which you do meet the prerequisite.

Master's Gift (Su): Starting at 7th level, you are so attuned to the arcane powers of your dragon master that beneficial arcane spells have an improved effect on you.

Any arcane spell that is harmless (those that include the word "harm less" in their saving throw entry) has twice the standard duration when cast on you.

If the spell is cast on multiple targets, the duration is doubled only for you.

Improved Dragonfire Strike (Su): At 9th level, you gain the ability to deal extra damage when using your Dragonfire Strike feat.

Whenever you choose to convert your sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike damage to energy damage by using this feat, you can add an extra 1 point of damage per die rolled.

For example, if you have sneak attack +6d6, you would deal 6d6+6 points of fire damage with your Dragonfire Strike feat.

True Stealth (Ex): At 10th level, you gain a heightened awareness of the difficulties involved with concealing your presence from advanced senses.

This ability helps you learn to avoid even the keenest senses.

If you take a -10 penalty on Hide or Move Silently checks (as appropriate), you can use these skills to conceal yourself from scent, tremorsense, blindsense, and blindsight.

Creatures using those sensory abilities must make an opposed Listen or Spot check to notice you.

PLAYING A HAND OF THE WINGED MASTERS

You are a humanoid servant for one or more dragon masters that desire to influence the world indirectly.

As courier, spy, guardian, warrior, and (it need be) assassin, you further the cause of your overlords.

Since your missions often require secrecy, it's best to put forth a simple cover story or demonstrate an obvious purpose so as not to raise suspicions.

You might pose as nothing more than a sneak and Treasure hunter, but in truth, you belong to a vast network and could be called on at any moment to carry out covert duties.

Most hands of the winged masters work for a cabal of some kind, such as the Shadow's Fangs (see page 144).

These cabals can provide minor assistance with training, cover stories, and delivering messages to and from your dragon masters.

However, they will not expend valuable resources to solve your problems.

By the time you enter this prestige class, the cabal expects you to extricate yourself from most trouble on your own.

Only if you had something of great value for the dragon masters would the cabal risk itself for your sake.

COMBAT

You are more alert than most rogues and no less able to take advantage of a distracted foe.

If possible, you should strike early in combat, while your opponent is still flat-footed.

After that, your job is to outmaneuver foes, picking off the weak and (if needed) delivering a powerful blow to a flanked major combatant.

Never allow yourself to be cut off from a speedy exit, and always remain aware of your environment.

While your allies focus on hitting an enemy, make sure to keep an eye on alcoves, corners, and shadowy passages from which a new foe—or some other opportunity—might appear.

ADVANCEMENT

As a hand of the winged masters, you must demonstrate great loyalty to a superior and a willingness to bend or break laws in service to that superior.

Nothing is more important than carrying out your mission, and you are willing to betray or trick others if needed.

This dedication and moral ambiguity brought you to the attention of a secret cabal and convinced them to recruit you.

When you finally learned the identity of their ultimate leader, you saw the benefit of belonging to an organization run by a creature far older, stronger, and wiser than you will ever be.

You are now a trusted agent of the dragon masters that rule your cabal.

Acting on your own, you follow orders loyally—without ignoring opportunities to further the cabal's goals—and maintain a cover story to ensure you are never linked to the group.

Not yet a leader, you remain an expert agent and troubleshooter, sent to accomplish difficult missions that others have failed to complete.

As a spy, you should purchase as many ranks in the Listen and Spot skills as you can.

Not only does this make you better able to ferret out information, but it also makes you more likely to act in a surprise round (and deal sneak attack damage).

Hide and Move Silently are the next two most important skills for you.

Alter that, choose skills that will help you fulfill your assigned missions and maintain your cover story, which might paint you as nothing more than a common thief or greedy adventurer.

RESOURCES

If you absolutely must have something to accomplish a mission, such as a map or a description of a target, your cabal provides it.

Beyond that, you are expected to take care of your own needs.

In major cities, the cabal can arrange for you to buy illegal materials (such as thieves' tools and poisons) safely; but at your own expense.

The group is not insensitive to your financial needs, however, and might give you leads on legitimate opportunities for jobs or treasure, thus ensuring that you acquire the funds you will need to pull off future secret missions.

HANDS OF THE WINGED MASTERS IN THE WORLD

"Myrmith is a great trapfinder—witty, clever, and dependable. I just wish he wouldn't wander off so often.

Sometimes it takes two or three days to find him for a new mission."

—Regdar, fighter

A hand of the winged masters needs a cabal from which to take orders, and one or more worthwhile dragon rulers to work for.

These need not be particularly complicated (the DM can use the First Scroll or the Shadow's Fangs; see Chapter 5), but they should match the character's interests.

A chaotic good scout should be approached by a group working toward the common good, while a lawful evil ninja is more likely to serve a dragon that believes the world must be conquered and remade in a more orderly manner.

A cabal presents an easy way to interest the character in an adventure.

A note from the organization requesting information about a particular dungeon or ordering the assassination of a certain evil wizard pushes the hand, and his companions, into adventure as easily as do commands from a paladin's or cleric's superiors.

ORGANIZATION

A dragon-led cabal can organize itself in numerous secret ways.

Typically, a hand of the winged masters knows only a few other agents and leaders, ensuring that he can't leak much to the group's enemies if he is captured.

The hand is taught passwords and secret signs to identify other members of the cabal, but if group leaders suspect that the information has been compromised, they quickly change these codes and signals.

Normally, a hand works without direct aid from the cabal, receiving orders through a secret method of communication (perhaps from a barmaid at a favored tavern) and reporting his results to a different agent.

Again, if these arrangements are compromised, a new cabal member makes herself known to the hand and institutes a new set of contact procedures.

NPC REACTIONS

As long as a hand keeps his cover story intact, others treat him as it he is exactly what he claims to be.

Most hands pose as adventurers who happen to be expert locksmiths, which gives them a veneer of legitimacy but often provokes suspicion from guards and nobles.

However, if a hand's role as a spy for dragons is discovered, practically everyone immediately considers him a threat, and thereafter he receives an indifferent reaction at best.

HANDS OF THE WINGED MASTERS LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (history) can research hands of the winged masters to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.
DC 10: Hands of the winged masters are agents for secretive dragons.

DC 15: Each hand receives orders from a secret cabal and rarely knows more than one or two other members.

DC 20: Hands are alert, they benefit from arcane spells more than most, and they act as spies, assassins, or couriers for their dragon overlords.

Finding a hand of the winged masters is difficult at best.

A DC 20 Gather Information check reveals where to drop off a request for a meeting.

After that, the player characters must wait to see if a hand shows up or makes contact.

Only if the PCs have some urgent business will the cabal expose even a junior member of its organization.

HANDS OF THE WINGED MASTERS IN THE GAME

Before introducing hands of the winged masters into a campaign world, the DM should decide why one or more dragons would need a cabal of spies, and then consider the nature of the group.

The Shadow's Fangs (see page 144) are one example of a cabal, but it's possible for a group to serve a council of dragons, or even drakes of good alignment that want to keep their involvement in humanoid affairs as clandestine as possible.

Once you have a simple idea for the cabal, introduce it to the players and see if they're interested in working more closely with the secretive group.

A hand of the winged masters appeals most to players who like rogues, secrets, and ongoing plots.

The class is built to let a PC carry out covert missions and serve hidden agendas while still having reasons to go on adventures with the rest of the party.

Players who enjoy the idea of medieval spies in a fantasy setting should find the class intriguing.

ADAPTATION

Hands of the winged masters are less closely tied to dragons than most of the other prestige classes in this chapter.

They could easily be transformed into bodyguards for arcane spellcasters, couriers serving a deity of travel, or simply advanced spies.

Their class features would remain the same, but the DM would need to restructure the group they work for.

PACT-BOUND ADEPT

"Let go of your rules, your rituals, and your formulas, and let the magical flow as the dragons do."

—Rothan, pact-bound adept

Pact-bound adepts are sorcerers who have learned to transcend their beliefs about spells and magic and embrace arcane power as dragons do.

They focus their innate connection to magic, becoming more like dragons in the way they cast spells.

A pact-bound adept opens herself to the raw magical energy that flows just out of reach of other humanoid casters and becomes a conduit for that power.

Most pact-bound adepts can perform incredible feats of magical prowess, growing beyond the bounds of what some spellcasters consider possible and moving into the realm of dragon sorcery.

BECOMING A PACT-BOUND ADEPT

Pact-bound adepts are typically sorcerers who have embraced their draconic ancestry and want to learn more about how dragons cast spells.

Knowing that their own spellcasting ability comes from the draconic blood in their veins, these sorcerers want to unlock within themselves the same connection to magic that all dragons possess.

Pact-bound adepts seek out powerful dragons and bond with them, learning under their tutelage the path to greater skill in the arcane arts.

Each adept is closely allied with at least one dragon and uses the gifts bestowed by her draconic instructors to open herself more fully to magic.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 9 ranks, Spellcraft 9 ranks.

Feats: Draconic Heritage.

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: Must have an active dragonpact (see page 87) with a dragon.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Knowledge (arcana), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Pact-bound adepts shift their spellcasting style to match that of dragons, allowing them to cast spells by instinct rather than with hand gestures and vocal sounds.

Additionally, they learn to temper their own magical ability, making them more powerful spellcasters and letting them accept magical boons from dragons more easily.

Spellcasting: At each level other than 1st and 4th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also attained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a pact-bound adept, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Improved Pact (Su): You learn to alter the magic that flows through you so that you can gain greater benefits by way of your dragonpact.

At 1st level, your caster level with spell-like abilities from your dragonpact improves by one.

In addition, at 1st level choose a single dragonpact that you currently have: you gain spell-like abilities as if you had sacrificed a spell one level higher than the actual spell sacrificed.

For example, a pact-bound adept who has sacrificed a 3rd-level spell as part of the flames of crimson wrath dragonpact would gain three daily uses of burning hands and two daily uses of protection from energy (fire), as if she had sacrificed a 4th-level spell.

At 4th level, your caster level with dragonpact spell-like abilities improves by another one, and the spell-like abilities from your chosen dragonpact improve as if you had sacrificed a spell two levels higher than the actual spell sacrificed.

Each time you enter into a new dragonpact, you can choose to apply this benefit to the new dragonpact in place of the previous dragonpact.

Dragoncast (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you become able to channel magical energy in much the same way that dragons do.

Three times per day, you can cast any arcane spell (of a level equal to or less than your class level) as though it were affected by both the Silent Spell and Still Spell metamagic feats, removing the need for any verbal and somatic components.

Neither the casting time of the spell nor the spell's level changes for this casting.

Eschew Materials: At 3rd level, you gain Eschew Materials as a bonus feat.

If you already have this feat, you can choose any other feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Bonus Dragonpact: At 5th level, you gain the ability to enter into a second dragonpact.

The second dragonpact can be with the same dragon or another dragon, even of another kind.

You can't enter into the same dragonpact twice.

PLAYING A PACT-BOUND ADEPT

Though other spellcasters rely on hand gestures, powerful words, and complex formulas derived from years of research, you know that the purest and most powerful form of spellcasting is that used by true dragons.

Tower-bound wizards might spend years researching a single spell, while you could spend mere days in the presence of a dragon and achieve the same result.

You can conjure up spells of incredible power before anyone else knows you have even started.

Other casters, both divine and arcane, seem clumsy and slow to you, because they have handicapped themselves with humanoid concepts, rules, and sciences.

You cultivate instinct and intuition, learning to listen to your inner connection to magic.

You have felt the purity of draconic spellcasting and hope that, some day, everyone can share in this knowledge.

If other spellcasters would just stop long enough to heed the wisdom of dragons, they too would see an easier way, one unencumbered by physical form.

You know that you are truly in the minority—most spellcasters are too frightened or stubborn to change.

In a way, you feel pity for them, while at the same time hoping they will learn to reach within themselves for answers.

Not everyone thinks that dragons are as benevolent as you believe them to be.

Certainly, evil dragons exist, as do evil humans, evil elves, evil dwarves, and evil members of any other race.

Unfortunately, in your viewpoint, many people see all dragons as a threat, which keeps them from opening their eyes enough to learn from the great creatures.

Despite any display of power you manifest, some will always choose to remain blind.

For now, you seek to prove that your way—the way of the dragons—is better by going out into the world and doing things that no other spellcaster can.

If others will not hear the truth, you must let them see it with their own eyes, all the while gaining knowledge for yourself.

With each passing day, your power grows because you are willing to embrace your draconic heritage.

You spend hours deep in meditation, looking inward to find a stronger connection to the arcane and to better understand how dragons instinctively tap into this source.

COMBAT

Unafraid to wade into battle, you rely on your natural abilities for defense.

Since you can cast some spells without having to speak or move, you have little fear of being grappled, especially when a well-placed spell can free you from entrapment. Unlike your more timid fellow spellcasters, you enter combat boldly, knowing that the blessings of dragonkind give you an advantage over those who rely on traditional spellcasting.

Offensive spells, your greatest strength, come to you as naturally as breathing.

Since you can use your abilities to penetrate the staunchest magical defenses, allies look to you for help.

When spells cast by others might be rebuffed, your spells can punch through, putting the responsibility on you to bring down a dangerous foe.

ADVANCEMENT

Your first steps toward becoming a pact-bound adept were those you took into a dragon's lair.

After learning that the legendary beasts could grant great power, you dedicated yourself to a path that allows you to study under the wisest dragon sorcerers.

Your entry into a dragonpact marked the beginning of your journey and unlocked the first of many new abilities that other casters can only dream about.

As a pact-bound adept, you constantly seek new ways to tap into the source of magic.

Since you have accepted your draconic heritage, you spend your days attempting to strengthen that connection and learning to cast spells instinctively.

As your knowledge grows, you can cast spells without worrying about simplistic humanoid spellcasting concepts. Now that you have increased your natural aptitude for spellcasting, you can focus on expanding your raw magical knowledge.

Metamagic feats should make up a large portion of your feat choices, giving you new options when casting spells and compensating for a slightly reduced overall spellcasting power level.

Additionally, draconic fears provide extra abilities when casting spells; those that provide extra benefits each time a spell is cast allow you to gain the maximum effect from every spell.

RESOURCES

Very few other individuals see the world as you do.

Fellow pact-bound adepts are few and far between, and most other sorcerers and wizards think that dealing with dragons is asking for trouble.

Most divine spellcasters consider you to be a heretic, leaving you very few places to turn.

No official organization exists to provide you with aid or resources, but most pact-bound adepts have crossed paths with at least one or two others like themselves.

Despite these difficulties, you do have one group on your side: friendly true dragons.

They rarely act directly or your behalf, but most view you as a student seeking enlightenment, and they eagerly provide you with knowledge.

Given their long lives and knowledge of the past, friendly dragons are especially helpful when you need information of almost any kind.

Additionally, friendly dragons are much more likely to enter into dragonpacts with you due to an increased level of trust.

On rare occasions, these dragons will provide monetary assistance.

PACT-BOUND ADEPTS IN THE WORLD

"These heretics preach the blasphemy that dragons are the way to true enlightenment, but do not be fooled.

Only the deities grant miracles, no matter what these so-called adepts claim.

They have bartered their very souls away for a taste of power, but in the end they have damned themselves by turning away from the gods and prostrating themselves before these covetous beasts."

—Pharsis the Pious, Inquisitor

Pact-bound adepts are easily integrated into any setting where sorcerers can be found.

In essence, a pact-bound adept is a sorcerer who has followed a slightly different path.

Rather than focusing on learning many new spells of higher levels, a pact-bound adept seeks to make the most of the spellcasting ability she already possesses.

However, the local public attitude toward dragons quickly comes to be associated with the character as well.

If a community receives aid from a benevolent silver dragon, a pact-bound adept might be considered an ambassador between the people and dragonkind.

If, on the other hand, a city is constantly terrorized by a violent red dragon, a pact-bound adept might be seen as one who consorts with the enemy and could lace prejudice or violence.

In many ways, pact-bound adepts fit into the world in much the same way as dragons do.

ORGANIZATION

A pact-bound adept usually finds a role in an adventuring party or other organization that allows her time to explore her spellcasting ability freely.

Since no organization specifically caters to pact-bound adepts, many find themselves in drastically different circumstances from those of their comrades.

Some join organizations that work with or for dragons, using this association to bring themselves closer to the creatures.

For example, a pact-bound adept might join a church that reveres the dragon deities, working as an acolyte to make contact with dragon worshipers of those gods.

Alternatively, a pact-bound adept might seek out a college of wizardry that has a standing agreement with a dragon to share knowledge, working as a researcher or aide while spending time getting acquainted with the drake.

Within the ranks of pact-bound adepts, prestige and influence is measured by the depth of their devotion to draconic magic.

The most highly revered are those who have forged dragonpacts with a number of dragons, especially if the dragons are of different varieties.

A widely traveled pact-bound adept with numerous dragonpacts and abilities is thought to be living her best possible life.

When two or more pact-bound adepts come into conflict, they usually defer to the one with a greater knowledge of draconic spellcasting, relying on her wisdom and experiences to provide a reasonable solution.

NPC REACTIONS

Clerics, paladins, and other spellcasters who specialize in divine magic often view pact-bound adepts as heretics and blasphemers who have put their faith in false deities (dragons) and forsaken the righteous path in favor of idolatry.

This viewpoint tends to make religious characters unfriendly or hostile toward pact-bound adepts, though the more tolerant religions are usually indifferent.

Similarly, characters who live in communities terrorized by evil dragons are likely unfriendly toward pact-bound adepts, fearing them to be collaborators out to sabotage local defenses against the monsters.

Whether or not this is true is immaterial to these people—they simply view any who associate with dragons as potential enemies.

On the other hand, communities that benefit from the presence of a good-aligned dragon are usually friendly or helpful to a pact-bound adept.

Additionally, most good dragons (and some neutral and evil dragons) are at least indifferent toward a pact-bound adept. Unless the character directly interferes with the dragon's plans, a dragon usually treats her as a neutral third party, neither friend nor foe, sparing her from its wrath when others would certainly be slain.

PACT-BOUND ADEPT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) can research pact-bound adepts to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Pact-bound adepts are sorcerers who make treaties with dragons to gain advanced powers.

DC 15: Pact-bound adepts claim that dragons can teach methods of spellcasting that require less effort and yield greater results.

DC 20: Pact-bound adepts use a combination of arcane spells and spell-like abilities, some of which aren't normally available to sorcerers.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable pact-bound adept, the areas where she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

Locating a pact-bound adept is a matter of learning where dragons reside in the vicinity.

Usually, pact-bound adepts make their homes close to dragon lairs or in areas where dragon sightings are common.

In some cases, they can be found by asking local sorcerers and wizards about those who fraternize with dragons.

PACT-BOUND ADEPTS IN THE GAME

The pact-bound adept is a great alternative for spellcasters who wish to explore the dragonpact magic system.

Any campaign that makes use of the dragonpact rules would be a perfect fit for this class.

Though a pact-bound adept falls behind a standard sorcerer in spellcasting, this loss is offset by the more potent benefits gained from the adept's dragonpact.

Players looking for a new take on sorcerer spellcasting should consider playing a pact-bound adept.

Since the class features cater to the dragonpact magic system, any player who wishes to have her character enter into a magical agreement should consider the pact-bound adept as a means of gaining additional benefits over sorcerers who enter into dragonpacts more casually.

ADAPTATION

You could adapt this class to allow characters other than sorcerers to dabble with the dragonpact magic system.

For example, a favored soul or warmage might use this class to qualify for dragonpacts as if he were a sorcerer; in place of the dragonpact requirement for entry, you might require the Dragontouched feat.

SWIFT WING

"I shall sweep aside your sins, evil, and wickedness, and sweep you from the world with them"

—Orielle Bladeworthy, Swift Wing of Pelor

Many churches use analogy and allegory to describe the traits of their deities, as well as the proper attitude their faithful should maintain.

It's not unusual for these analogies to compare crusading gods and their clerics to elements of dragonkind.

After all, dragons are formidable creatures considered by many to be symbols of deific power.

In a few churches, the use of allegory becomes so strong that certain worshipers actually begin to refer to the church itself as a holy dragon, and to themselves as parts of that dragon.

Swift wings are church servants who see themselves as the fast-moving, hard-hitting crusaders of their god's cadre of worshipers.

BECOMING A SWIFT WING

Most commonly, clerics of martial deities take the swift wing prestige class, though a few paladins are drawn to it as well.

Characters of this sort relish the thought of using the power of a dragon toward the goals and efforts of a religious cause.

They believe their gradual assumption of draconic powers represents an acceptance of their new path by their deities, and often see the more traditional members of their church as hidebound and stubborn.

Since these traditionalists won't apply force as quickly and decisively as swift wings consider necessary, members of this class use their augmented power to operate without the support of their church organization.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Languages: Draconic.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Special: Ability to turn undead.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Concentration, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

Swift wings lose some spellcasting ability in return for gaining dragonlike powers.

Their new abilities make them more versatile without removing their power to heal allies and damage undead. As they rise in level, they also become more resilient and mobile, able to resist many attacks and move more quickly to support teammates.

Weapon Proficiency: You gain proficiency with your deity's favored weapon.

Spellcasting: At every level except 1st and 5th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a swift wing, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Dragon Affinity (Ex): Your concept of yourself as part of a holy dragon that serves your church draws upon a mystic link to a particular kind of dragon you consider affiliated with your deity.

At 1st level, select one kind of dragon (such as gold or red) that has an alignment within one step of your deity's alignment. Your affinity for this kind of dragon grants you a +5 circumstance bonus on Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks made regarding dragons of this variety.

Dragon Domain: At 1st level, you gain the granted power and spell access of the Dragon domain.

If your spellcasting doesn't normally allow domain access, you can add the spells of the Dragon domain to the spell list of your divine spellcasting class.

The Dragon domain appears in Draconomicon and Spell Compendium.

Its granted power allows you to add Bluff and Intimidate to your list of divine spellcasting class skills, and its domain spells are (in ascending order of level) magic fang, resist energy, greater magic fang, voice of the dragon (see Draconomicon or Spell Compendium), true seeing, stoneskin, dragon ally (see Draconomicon or Spell Compendium), mass suggestion, and dominate monster.

Draconic Senses: At 2nd level, you gain Draconic Senses (see page 17) as a bonus feat, even if you don't meet the prerequisite, if you already have this feat, you can select any other draconic feat for which you meet the prerequisite.

Breath of Life (Su): At 3rd level, you gain the ability to channel positive energy into a breath weapon.

As a standard action, you can spend one use of your turn undead ability to create a 30-foot-long, cone-shaped breath weapon.

The breath weapon deals 1d6 points of damage per level to undead; a successful Reflex save (DC 10 + class level + Cha modifier) halves this damage.

Living creatures within the area of the breath weapon are instead healed of 1 point of damage per level.

Energy Resistance (Ex): At 4th level, your link to the dragon variety you have affinity with grows to grant you energy resistance.

Choose one energy type (acid, cold, electricity, fire, or sonic) that your affiliated dragon kind either is immune to, resistant to, or deals as damage with a breath weapon. You gain resistance 20 to that energy type.

If your chosen dragon variety has no energy immunity, energy resistance, or energy breath weapon, you gain resistance to fire 20.

Wings (Su): At 5th level, you gain the ability to sprout and dismiss wings as a free action.

The wings are supernatural effects, growing through clothing and armor without damaging them.

The wings match the appearance of the wings of the dragon variety you have affinity with.

With the wings, you can fly at a speed equal to your land speed with good maneuverability.

You can fly in light, medium, or heavy armor, but not when carrying a heavy load.

Flying with the wings takes only as much concentration as walking, leaving you free to cast spells, make ranged attacks, or take other actions.

At 10th level, your fly speed increases to twice your base land speed.

This ability counts as having a fly speed when qualifying for feats such as Flyby Attack (MM 303) and Wingover (MM 304).

Damage Reduction (Su): At 7th level, your link to draconic energies gives you a hide as tough as a dragon's, though you look no different.

You gain damage reduction 5/magic.

Energy Immunity (Su): At 9th level, your link to draconic energy is so complete that you gain immunity to the energy type you selected for resistance at 4th level.

Draconic Surge (Ex): At 10th level, you become filled with draconic energy, making you physically and mentally more dragonlike.

You gain a +1 bonus to Strength, Dexterity, or Constitution (your choice), and a +1 bonus to Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma (your choice).

Once you have assigned these bonuses to two ability scores, they cannot be changed.

Often, the draconic surge is accompanied by a slight physical change in your appearance—for example, your eyes might become more dragonlike, or your hair might change color to match the hue of the dragon variety you have affinity with.

PLAYING A SWIFT WING

You are more than just another servant of your god.

As part of a holy dragon, you can find your deity's foes with keen senses, run them down with swift speed, and destroy them with purifying force.

Although you might spend more time supporting your allies than striking down foes directly, you do it from the front of every battle.

You have powers beyond those of typical priests, and you are dedicated to using them to further your church's goals.

You might not appear to be a dragon, but spiritually you have adopted that role as much as your religious vocation. Perhaps your church considers you a blessed champion, granted powers by your deity as a sign of special favor. In this case, church leaders call on you to undertake especially dangerous missions that others have failed to carry out.

They expect you to be self-sufficient, taking on any threat without the assistance of common church members. Alternatively, your superiors might view you with suspicion.

Although you feel that you are a dragon in service to a higher calling, others in the church don't understand why a divine agent is drawn to such an arcane symbol.

In this case, your church constantly tests you, wary of your true intentions and unwilling to extend you the benefit of the doubt, but no matter what your relationship with your church, you are largely cut off from its aid—and that's fine. You have learned to depend on yourself and some close allies, and you don't need the help of other church members to carry out your deity's goals.

COMBAT

As a swift wing, your place is in the forefront of any conflict, but you must use your superior senses and mobility to keep yourself from being cut off or overrun. If you were a front-line fighter before becoming a swift wing, you need to remember that you're not quite as tough as a full-fledged paladin.

If you came to this class as a cleric, your basic function remains unchanged—heal and aid your allies, harm undead, and support the primary combatants.

You can do this while flying, even in heavy armor, and you now have the defenses to survive longer if you draw enemy fire.

Don't stand in one place and let yourself get bogged down. Rather, you are most effective when you choose your targets carefully, felling wounded foes, healing comrades near death, and casting spells to strike at enemies beyond hammer's reach.

ADVANCEMENT

You set foot on the path of the swift wing the first time you heard an elder of your church describe the faithful as a holy dragon in your deity's service.

Most of the people listening heard nothing more than an analogy of the power of faith, but to you, a deeper truth had been revealed. The gods had servants in the form of archons and other celestials—why not dragons, too?

Not all dragons would be appropriate, but the image of one particular type of dragon acting as a mortal warrior for your deity stuck in your head.

You began to see every ecclesiastical role as part of the draconic whole of the church, with paladins as claws, divine magic as a cleansing breath weapon, and yourself as a swift wing who brings the power of the church to its foes. You sought out lore about dragons, studied examples of priests and dragons working together, and imagined yourself as a mighty, draconic assistant of your god. In time, you realized that your faith in this role was well placed.

Your affinity for dragons grew, and you began to receive not just divine magic from your deity, but gifts of dragonlike powers as well.

At first, these changes seemed minor.

While you had access to a few new spells and could spot things you once would have overlooked, there was little to set you apart.

But as you have grown and advanced, you've learned that you truly are different.

Listen and Spot are class skills for you, allowing you to increase your keen senses to be the match of anyone in your group.

You eventually gain a natural fly speed as well, allowing you to take Flyby Attack (MM 303) and similar flight-augmenting feats.

RESOURCES

You've stepped outside the traditional role of an agent of the church, embracing a symbol generally associated with arcane spellcasters.

Even if your deity has ties to dragons or arcane magic, others in your church are unsure how to assist you.

Your faith sets you apart from fellow clerics and paladins, and you must be prepared for the solitude that choice brings.

You can forge close alliances to protect your back, but as far as others of your faith are concerned, you're on your own.

SWIFT WINGS IN THE WORLD

"I cannot condone the interpretation of a silver dragon as a representative of the light of Pelor.

I also can't argue against the effectiveness of members of our congregation who believe that interpretation"

—Prelate Phelan, High Priest of Pelor

Swift wings are crusaders driven to seek out and eliminate enemies of their church.

Not content to sit and wait for reports about foes to filter in to them, they scour the world looking for wrongs to right. As long as a swift wing has the slightest clue that an enemy of her deity is active or the faithful of her religion are in trouble, she will bring her force to fight wherever she can do the most good.

ORGANIZATION

The relationship between a swift wing and the official hierarchy of her church is strained at best.

Because she still commands the divine powers granted by her deity, a swift wing rightfully claims to be following the tenets of her faith.

However, her unorthodox belief structure makes it hard for typical priests to comprehend her.

In many cases, a swift wing is treated like a loose cannon, allowed to fight for the church but not accepted as a member of its inner circle.

Excluded from the normal authority structure of her organization, a swift wing is more likely than many clerics to seek out her own allies.

She knows she has set herself apart from her fellow priests and is willing to work with allies that others of her order might find questionable.

A swift wing won't compromise her principles, but she gives friends and comrades the benefit of the doubt as long as they help bring down the adversaries of her deity.

With no formal place in her own organization, she must learn to make one in whatever group will have her.

A swift wing still fills the role she played before following her radical path of faith, if previously a paladin, she remains a devout warrior at the forefront of battle, if she was a cleric, she remains a supporting character who can hold her own in a fight.

Swift wings have forceful personalities and can provide leadership to groups lacking purpose or direction. However, for swift wings who are not party leaders, the most important goal is to accomplish each mission so as not to undermine the authority of their commander.

NPC REACTIONS

Among members of her own faith, a swift wing rarely receives more than an indifferent welcome at first, though her actions can earn her greater respect once others get to know her.

Typical divine agents remain condescending or suspicious, but powerful good-aligned wizards, sorcerers, and dragons are friendly to swift wings, seeing them as open-minded. Common folk are often friendly toward swift wings, moved by their natural drive and their unwillingness to let bureaucracy obstruct their quest to make the world a better place.

Evil spellcasters of any sort are unfriendly toward swift wings, viewing them as hybrid threats that are too dangerous to risk leaving alive.

Evil dragons are openly hostile toward swift wings, offended that mortals dare to siphon the draconic energies that flow through the world.

Their anger often causes them to attack swift wings first—it they can identify the upstarts, of course.

Additionally, any foe that would fear a good cleric or paladin is hostile toward a swift wing.

Demons, devils, cultist, and evil monsters all see swift wings as strong threats that must be eliminated.

Undead in particular have good reason to loathe any character with a breath weapon that exudes positive energy.

SWIFT WING LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (religion) can research swift wings to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: A swift wing is a divine spellcaster who has taken on aspects of dragonkind.

DC 15: Though rarely trusted by her senior priests, a swift wing is a dedicated foe of her deity's enemies and uses supernatural dragonlike abilities to find and destroy them.

DC 20: A swift wing has reduced access to divine spells but gains keen senses, the power of flight, a breath weapon that gives off positive energy, and resistance similar to that of a dragon.

Finding a swift wing operating in a given area requires talking to locals: church officials are unlikely to help those who seek one of their black sheep.

A DC 15 Gather Information check reveals the details of any swift wing known by local nobles, commoners, or brigands.

SWIFT WINGS IN THE GAME

A swift wing requires no extensive organization or church to support her.

Any cleric or paladin who meets the entry requirements can choose to follow this somewhat radical path, knowing that she is putting herself apart from the traditional ranks of her religion.

All she needs is a gentle push, perhaps from a lone older swift wing or a prayer book or sermon that compares the agents of her deity to the might of a dragon.

From there, the swift wing must find her own place, bolstered by her draconic powers and certain knowledge of her god's support.

Swift wings are self-confident characters who ignore the limitations of their church hierarchies in favor of getting things done.

A player looking for a character who eschews extensive limitations or support networks might enjoy a swift wing's independence.

The prestige class should also appeal to players who want to make their clerics more interesting, experiment with draconic powers, or try a character similar to a paladin but with different abilities.

ADAPTATION

Because this prestige class requires that an entrant have the ability to turn (rather than rebuke) undead, the swift wing is designed for good characters over evil ones, though a neutral cleric could conceivably qualify.

To make swift wings into draconic agents of evil instead, the DM can simply change the requirement to allow characters who can rebuke undead.

Such evil swift wings might be favored humanoid agents of Tiamat or members of a church controlled by an evil dragon.

In an Eberron campaign, the swift wing class could be linked in some manner to dragonmarks, retaining the draconic connection but altering it to better fit that world.

WYRM WIZARD

“Every dragon is like a library full of books so old their titles have been forgotten.

Most would pay dearly for a chance to plunder such a resource, but only I have the key to the library doors.”

—Doran Stout, wyrm wizard of the Free City

Wyrms are spellcasters who learn new spells not through research and experimentation but rather by tapping into the vast wealth of arcane knowledge possessed by dragons.

Like many other wizards, wyrm wizards spend a great deal of time perfecting their spellcasting techniques, though most of their spells are based on the teachings of friendly dragons.

A wyrm wizard and his dragon mentor might spend weeks or months in seclusion, discussing the finer points of spell manipulation or exploring new concepts.

Unlike many others who interact with dragons, wyrm wizards also act as comrades to spellcasting dragons, providing insight into magic that the creature might not otherwise possess.

BECOMING A WYRM WIZARD

Generally, only wizards become wyrm wizards because of their dedication to the study of magic.

Other arcane casters explore more dynamic and instinctive spellcasting techniques instead of conducting methodical research.

Wizards of any specialty follow this path, though diviners—thanks to their love of learning—are slightly more common than others.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 9 ranks, Spellcraft 9 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

Feats: Any metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Ability to prepare and cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Knowledge (any, taken individually), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Wyrms are exceptionally good at understanding the basics of spellcasting and magic.

Thanks to the insight of draconic mentors, wyrm wizards can craft whole new spells based on complex magical theories and unravel the inner workings of any spell in the blink of an eye.

Their extensive research, performed side by side with dragons, gives them a wealth of knowledge regarding arcane magic.

Spellcasting: At every level other than 2nd, 4th, and 6th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a wyrm wizard, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Knowledge of the Wyrm (Ex): You spend a great deal of time exploring the depths of a dragon's magical knowledge, giving you a distinct advantage over spellcasters who do not have the benefit of draconic tutelage.

Starting at 1st level, by spending at least 1 hour doing nothing but performing research, you can add your class level as an insight bonus on Knowledge (arcana) checks made for the next 8 hours.

You need not consult with a dragon to gain this insight, though if you do, the insight bonus improves by 2.

At 5th level, you also gain this bonus on Spellcraft checks, for the same duration.

Spell Research (Ex): One of the greatest advantages that you gain from consulting draconic lore is the ability to unlock magical secrets forbidden to other wizards.

Starting at 2nd level, select one spell from any class's spell list (including divine spells), of a level equal to or lower than the highest-level arcane spell you can prepare and cast. You can add this spell to your arcane spellcasting class spell list as a spell of the same level; all other aspects of the spell remain unchanged.

At every even-numbered level thereafter, you gain the knowledge and use of one additional spell in this manner.

Draconic Discovery (Ex): At 3rd level, you make startling discoveries into the nature of magic thanks to the unique insight of your dragon mentors.

Select any arcane spell of up to 2nd level that you are capable of preparing and casting, and any one metamagic feat you know (with a maximum spell slot adjustment of four).

Once per day, you can apply the effect of that metamagic feat to the chosen spell without adjusting the spell slot of the spell or preparing it ahead of time.

At 6th level, you can select a second arcane spell (of up to 4th level) to gain this benefit (choosing either the same or a different metamagic feat that you know).

At 9th level, you can select a third arcane spell (of up to 6th level) to gain this benefit, again selecting either the same or a different metamagic feat that you know.

Convert Counterspell (Su): Starting at 7th level, you can identify the components of an incoming spell instantaneously and convert stored arcane energy into a counterspell.

You can lose any prepared spell of 3rd level or higher in order to cast dispel magic as a counterspell, or you can lose any prepared spell of 6th level or higher in order to cast greater dispel magic as a counterspell.

This ability does not allow you to convert spells for general use into dispel magic and only applies to counterspelling.

The normal rules for casting a counterspell still apply.

Break Spell Resistance (Su): At 10th level, you gain great insight into the way creatures naturally resist magic by studying the magical defenses of dragons.

Whenever you succeed on a caster level check to overcome a target's spell resistance, you can lose a prepared spell as a free action to negate the target's spell resistance.

The target loses its spell resistance for a number of rounds equal to the level of the spell you expended.

PLAYING A WYRM WIZARD

You have always known that magic holds more promise than your mind could imagine.

Some mysteries of the multiverse are beyond human comprehension, but this fact does not stop you from trying to puzzle them out, making every attempt to explore the great secrets of magic.

Unlike some who cloister themselves in towers or spend every hour with their nose buried in a book, you prefer to seek out others who have followed your same path.

Dragons, magical creatures of legend and potent spellcasters, are your preferred source of knowledge, and no other will suffice.

As such, you have little regard for established centers of learning—colleges, churches, wizard academies—and you see no need to offer the deference and respect that they seem to expect.

Indeed, you are skeptical of any arcane knowledge that does not come directly from a dragon unless you see it with your own eyes.

You often face prejudice and anger from those who do not share your beliefs, and as such you become defensive when others question the validity of your research.

Additionally, your ability to make amazing discoveries in conjunction with your dragon allies has given you great confidence to see beyond the accepted rules and find wisdom elsewhere.

Above all, you believe that dragons hold the key to new knowledge and advancement of magical abilities, and your best course of action is to befriend and learn from them.

COMBAT

Like most spellcasters, your strengths lie not in your ability to barge into combat, but in your talents that allow you to strike from a distance.

Furthermore, thanks to your advanced understanding of magic gleaned from many hours with dragon mentors, you have an uncanny knack for unraveling spells cast by others. As such, you often hold your strength in reserve, choosing to react only when other spellcasters attempt to cast spells of their own.

When you are not faced with such a threat, you prefer to cast spells that have been strengthened by your research, relying on them to provide a significant advantage over the standard spells of your enemy.

ADVANCEMENT

You started learning magic in the traditional ways—through study and experimentation.

Soon, however, you discovered that there are greater avenues to knowledge than books and self-teaching.

Under the tutelage of dragons, you began to learn more about how magic works, and soon you were able to apply their instinct and experience to your own magical studies.

You seek the counsel of dragon mentors to solve arcane mysteries and explore your talents, relying on their insight as other wizards rely on dusty tomes and aging instructors. To you, the world of magic is embodied in a living, breathing being, known to most as a dragon but to you as a teacher.

As a wyrm wizard, you benefit greatly from feats and abilities that improve your power to overcome magical defenses, such as the Spell Penetration feat.

Additionally, anything that grants you extra spells (such as magic items that increase your intelligence) helps to compensate for your slower acquisition of new spells.

RESOURCES

Dragons are your greatest and primary resource.

By befriendng and studying under true dragons, you can learn much about how magic works.

Additionally, dragons often provide you with knowledge or items that can prove invaluable while adventuring.

Moreover, any dragon that acts as your mentor likely becomes protective of you, sometimes coming to your defense if you are threatened.

Though you cannot rely on this protection every time you're in a difficult situation, having a dragon back your actions on occasion is a powerful advantage, especially when you are lacing down a superior foe.

WYRM WIZARDS IN THE WORLD

"Can you ever really trust the word of a dragon?"

Surely creatures that so covet wealth must also hoard arcane lore, and it seems farfetched that they would allow mere humans access to such closely guarded knowledge.

After all, is not each mortal wizard a potential thief of a dragon's spell hoard?"

—Kaija, wizard of the Hidden Mask

Wyrms choose living creatures as their source of knowledge rather than books or relics, meaning that their learning process is far more dynamic than that of the typical spellcaster.

Unlike most characters, a wyrm wizard does not simply stop by a local library to research magical matters, and instead must seek out a friendly dragon to get the most from his studies.

As a result, wyrm wizards remain in areas close to several friendly dragons, ensuring that they are never far from the source of their knowledge.

Some are reluctant to stray too far from their base of operations, though adventuring wyrm wizards do travel in order to seek out the different perspectives of different types of dragons.

ORGANIZATION

A wyrm wizard highly prizes the knowledge and wisdom of dragons, often seeking the best way to ingratiate himself into dragon society.

As such, some wyrm wizards live among dragons for long periods of time, acting as both students and partners in arcane research.

On the other hand, groups of wyrm wizards will, from time to time, invite a particular dragon to live among them in order to facilitate greater research.

In many cases, wyrm wizards actually organize in much the same way that dragons do.

with older and more learned wyrm wizards at the top of the power structure and new, younger wyrm wizards at the bottom.

Natural spellcasting aptitude has little to do with a wyrm wizard's position in the hierarchy, since most wyrm wizards respect only those who have truly unlocked the secrets of dragon magic.

Most wyrm wizards spend the bulk of their free time engaged in discussion and debate with dragons over the nature of magic and the intricacies of spellcasting.

While traveling or adventuring, wyrm wizards take every possible moment to record the progress of their journey in log books or on scrolls so that, once they return to a place where they can rejoin their dragon mentors, they have a full account of anything that happened to them.

This allows them to consult their dragon teachers regarding anything strange that might have happened on the journey, a practice most wyrm wizards see as absolutely necessary given the great wisdom of older dragons.

NPC REACTIONS

Though both kinds of characters study arcane magic, wyrm wizards are not usually welcomed by more traditional wizards and magical researchers.

Their choice to seek out alternative methods of learning is considered offensive by some and dangerous by others, meaning that most traditional wizards and academics will be indifferent at best or unfriendly at worst.

Some see wyrm wizards as double agents who serve dragons, intentionally allowing their minds to be poisoned in the name of seeking greater power.

Dragons regard wyrm wizards with a variety of sentiments, and while good dragons might be helpful, many evil dragons are unfriendly or hostile.

Often, evil dragons see wyrm wizards as lesser beings out to plunder the secrets of dragonkind without earning them.

In such cases, a normally trusting wyrm wizard might find himself in a situation that turns dangerous quickly.

WYRM WIZARD LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research wyrm wizards to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Wyrm wizards are arcane scholars who use the knowledge of dragons for their research.

DC 15: Most wyrm wizards are capable of altering their spells in a way that no other wizards can, turning the dragons' intuitive knowledge of magic into wizard spell principles.

DC 20: Wyrm wizards can counter the spells of other casters due to their understanding of magic.

Also, through their consultation with dragons, wyrm wizards can puzzle out arcane knowledge that other wizards cannot.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable wyrm wizard, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Wyrm wizards are less common than standard wizards but still can be found anywhere spellcasters congregate. However, adventurers out to locate one should not waste their time looking around colleges of wizardry or vast libraries.

Instead, they should seek out the nearest dragon's lair.

WYRM WIZARDS IN THE GAME

Wyrm wizards work in any campaign that features opportunities for research or quests for knowledge.

Though their versatility as spellcasters makes them useful in adventuring situations, wyrm wizards truly shine when they have time to conduct research between adventures.

Additionally, a wyrm wizard's amazing discoveries can compensate for a lack of alternative spellcasting in a party without a diverse cadre of casters.

Though a wyrm wizard loses some of his more powerful spells, he still contributes in a variety of ways, forgoing a focus on arcane spells in exchange for greater utility in the campaign.

ADAPTATION

In campaigns where conferring with dragons is not common (or might be taboo), simply revise the wyrm wizard class so it gains knowledge from another source. Since a wyrm wizard's class features stem from his ability to sift through the knowledge of ancient magical creatures, try substituting another long-lived race with natural spellcasting abilities, such as elves, celestials, or infernals. Regardless, adapting the class in this way requires little more than altering its background and should not involve significant changes to game mechanics.

HIT DIE: D4

DRAGONS OF FAERÛN (3.5)

WEARER OF PURPLE

The wearer of purple prestige class was originally presented in Faiths and Pantheons.

The following notes update it for v.3.5.

Requirements: Alchemy becomes Craft (alchemy).

Replace the Scry skill with Concentration.

Add Craft, Knowledge (local), and Spellcraft to the list of class skills.

The text for the new domain class feature should be changed to: At 1st level, a wearer of purple gains a domain from the following list: Death, Dragon, or Scalykind.

The character gains the granted power of the new domain. A wearer of purple's class level stacks with his primary spellcasting class level for determining the effects of these three domains' granted powers.

If a wearer of purple has no cleric levels, he can still learn domain spells.

If he memorizes divine spells each day—in the way of druids, rangers, and paladins—he can choose to memorize a domain spell instead of one of his usual spells, but never more than one spell of each level.

If he prepares spells (as a wizard does), he must find a scroll of a domain spell and scribe it into his book.

This kind of caster can memorize one domain spell of each level per day.

If the character casts spells spontaneously, he can select one of the domain spells to add to his list whenever he has the option to choose a new spell.

This benefit does not allow him to exceed his maximum number of spells known.

Once a domain spell is known, it can be cast any number of times per day.

The text for the dracoride class feature should be changed to: Beginning at 2nd level, a wearer of purple receives a +4 bonus on Ride checks involving creatures of the dragon type.

DROW OF THE UNDERDARK (3.5)

ARACHNOMANCER

“There are many paths to understanding the Spider Queen. Some worship her, others fear her, but few fully comprehend her glory.

The road I walk, however, offers the most thorough knowledge of Lolth’s generous blessings.”

—Derzen Vrinn, arachnomancer

By discarding the religious traditions dominating drow culture, the arachnomancer finds a different way to serve the Weaver of Webs.

Through careful study, the arachnomancer comes to understand spiders in a unique and disturbing way, developing a rapport with the vermin.

It doesn’t take long for the arachnomancer to shape his magical studies to awaken the Spider Queen’s blessings within himself, allowing him to assume the form of a monstrous spider.

BECOMING AN ARACHNOMANCER

To many, arachnomancers are expressions of the Flesh-Carver’s influence on the mortal world, but the fact is that only masters of arcane magic, not divine, can learn the techniques necessary to enter this class.

Still, many drow clerics compromise their religious studies to dabble in arcane magic so that they too can know the power of the Spider Queen.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Climb 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feat: Verminfriend (see page 53).

Spells: Ability to cast spider climb, summon swarm, or web as an arcane spell.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Handle Animal, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (religion), Move Silently, Spellcraft, Spot, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

Arachnomancers slowly absorb the characteristics of vermin as they advance until they transcend their ordinary form, in the process discovering the power to assume the form of a monstrous spider.

Their studies awaken certain vermin-like qualities within them, leaving these characters forever changed.

Spellcasting: At 1st, 3rd, 4th, 6th, and 7th level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an arachnomancer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Poison Save Bonus (Ex): You gain a bonus on saving throws against poison equal to your class level.

Handle Spiders (Ex): You gain a +5 bonus on skill checks to use the Handle Animal skill with spiders (see page 46).

Spider Domain: You gain access to the Spider domain and the granted power associated with the domain (rebuke spiders as an evil cleric rebukes undead, a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier).

If you already have access to one or more domains, you can now choose spells from this domain as your daily domain spells.

If you do not already have a domain, each day you can prepare one domain spell for each level you can cast, from 1st on up.

See the deity, domains, and domain spells cleric class feature, PH 32.

Spider Shape (Su): At 2nd level, you can change into a Small, Medium, or Large monstrous spider (either hunting or web-spinning) and back again three times per day.

At 5th level, you can also take the form of a Tiny or Huge monstrous spider, and at 8th level, you can take the form of a Gargantuan monstrous spider.

The effect lasts for 1 hour per arachnomancer level.

This ability functions as wild shape, so you can select and use the Natural Spell feat.

See the wild shape druid class feature, PH 37.

Tremorsense (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, you can detect and pinpoint any creature or object within 20 feet.

At 6th level, your tremorsense extends to 60 feet.

You can use this ability five times per day.

Activating this ability is a swift action, and it lasts for a number of rounds equal to your arachnomancer class level.

Webwalking (Su): Starting at 4th level, you can ignore webs (magical or nonmagical) as if you were under the effect of a freedom of movement spell.

You can climb webs at your normal land speed without needing to make Climb checks and walk along webs without needing to make Balance checks.

Climb Speed (Ex): At 7th level, you gain a climb speed equal to your normal land speed.

In addition, you gain a +8 bonus on Climb checks and you can always choose to take 10 on these checks, even if rushed or threatened.

PLAYING AN ARACHNOMANCER

You are obsessed with spiders.

They fill your dreams and your waking thoughts.

The extent of your preoccupation does not stop with ordinary spiders: You are fascinated by all spiderkind, from the monstrous spiders of the Underdark to the dreaded bebiliths that the priestesses conjure for the most profane rituals.

Even when not studying spiders, you find ways to bring them up in conversation, dropping fascinating (to you) tidbits and trivia about different breeds of spiders, their mating habits, and their hunting habits, and going to great lengths to extol the virtues of vermin.

Although the drow might tolerate or even appreciate such insights, your attraction to spiders does little to endear you to members of other races.

COMBAT

The greatest strength you have as an arachnomancer is the ability to assume the form of a monstrous spider.

Although this ability greatly enhances your combat prowess, you are no more durable in your spider shape than you were in your original form.

However, you gain the extraordinary abilities of your new form, including a poisonous bite and the ability to spin webs.

Even if you don't fall back on your spider shape ability, you still have a number of assets.

The first level you take in this class significantly improves your spellcasting options by granting you the bonus spells of the Spider domain.

You sacrifice some of your spellcasting potential, but you still have a large enough array of spells to augment your other arachnomancer features and to eliminate foes.

ADVANCEMENT

Images and icons of spiders have always been a part of your life.

Your society taught you to venerate these creatures, to exalt them as the children of Lolth.

It's no wonder, then, you became obsessed with them.

What began as idle curiosity—a preoccupation with the movements of their graceful forms, the intricate beauty of their magnificent webs, and the trembling of their victims before they sink poison-bearing fangs into flesh—soon filled your dreams.

You simply could no longer bear to be away from them.

You threw yourself into the study of spiders, interacting with them and allowing them to pierce your flesh so that you could experience the ambrosia of their venom.

You bent your magical knowledge to their study and emulation, until one day you realized that the kinship you felt with these creatures was no longer yours alone: The spiders seemed to regard you as one of their own.

You find you have more in common with the vermin you study than with other creatures, and you even prefer the company of spiders to the mercurial drow.

Though you might be distant and somewhat off-putting, the understanding of spiders that you have accumulated grants you unique status and freedom.

The drow regard you as a favored servant of Lolth and indulge you in your pursuits.

One of the first feats you should take after entering this class is Natural Spell.

This feat allows you to access your spells even when in spider form.

As for skills, investing in Handle Animal improves your chances of training vermin, who can then serve you as minions, guardians, or companions.

RESOURCES

Your best resource is the kinship you share with vermin.

Spiders are likely abundant in your native environment (since they are drawn to dark elf communities), so you have no shortage of allies.

If you are not a drow, you can join a nest of spiders, exerting your influence until the creatures accept you as part of the pack.

Clearly, drow veneration of all things arachnid grants some benefits.

Few drow would dare cross such an obviously blessed individual.

ARACHNOMANCERS IN THE WORLD

"As if spiders and drow weren't bad enough, there are spiders who think they are drow, and worse, drow who think they are spiders!"

—Osson Hjortgar, deepwarden

Where there are drow and spiders, there's bound to be an arachnomancer.

Given the nature of drow culture, the arachnomancer class is a logical expression of drow values and religious beliefs. As such, there's at least one arachnomancer in any drow community.

ORGANIZATION

Each arachnomancer arrives at his understanding of spiders in a slightly different way, although many study the nature and capabilities of these creatures for similar reasons.

Naturally selfish, would-be arachnomancers conceal their knowledge from others, perhaps out of some misguided belief that they are somehow special to the Spider Queen and gifted with unique insight into the vermin.

Some simply aim to exploit Lolth's creatures by tapping into the power of these monstrous arachnids.

Despite their guarded, selfish nature, arachnomancers enjoy a certain amount of reverence from Lolth's church. Few high priestesses dare harm established arachnomancers directly, regardless of any affront they might present.

Instead, arachnomancers become tools in the priestesses' secret power grabs and intrigues.

Most arachnomancers find themselves in the employ of influential drow matriarchs and showered with gifts, comforts, and the fulfillment of every desire, with only the occasional mission or appearance to interrupt their foul studies.

NPC REACTIONS

Arachnomancers are reclusive individuals.

To the common drow, the arachnomancer is a pure expression of Lolth, the visible hand of the Spider Queen. Thus, drow of all stations are friendly or even helpful toward these individuals.

Outside the safety and security of the drow city, however, arachnomancers find a less tolerant world.

To those who have suffered depredations at the hands of the dark elves, arachnomancers epitomize the abominable nature of drow civilization.

This revulsion crosses nearly all racial boundaries, leading to invariably hostile attitudes.

ARACHNOMANCER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (dungeoneering) can research arachnomancers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: There is a breed of Underdark spellcasters that dabble in spider-magic.

DC 15: They call themselves arachnomancers with good reason.

They can transform themselves into spiders.

DC 20: Arachnomancers are specialized spellcasters, typically wizards, who invest their magical energy to better understand the characteristics of spiders.

Through their studies, they learn to assume the form of spiders, imbuing them with the senses and capabilities of the objects of their obsession.

Characters interested in finding an arachnomancer will have little luck unless they are willing to explore the Underdark, and even then, they must often enter a drow city.

There, they might find a few clues about a local arachnomancer with a Gather Information check, but extensive questioning is almost guaranteed to raise the suspicions of the community.

This activity will bring the arachnomancer to the PCs—and he is not likely to have conversation on his mind.

ARACHNOMANCERS IN THE GAME

The arachnomancer class offers arcane spellcasters a chance to expand their combat capabilities in new directions.

Although entry into this class does diminish spellcasting capabilities, it offers a suite of powers to compensate for the loss: Indeed, arachnomancers retain their usefulness even after their daily allotment of spells is exhausted.

Players who enjoy tinkering with their characters and having a broad range of options available to them might be attracted to this class.

The arachnomancer class requires commitment, so characters branching into this class do so for the long term, in order to access the greatest transformations at high levels.

ADAPTATION

To the drow of Eberon, spiders and their kind are sacred but ultimately just reflections of the scorpion, a creature blessed by their strange deity Vulkoor.

Arachnomancers hold a place in society similar to that of driders: They are seen as chosen servants of the Mockery, of whom it's believed Vulkoor is a part.

With a little work, you can adapt this class so that it reflects the traits of scorpions rather than spiders.

Replace handle spiders with handle scorpions (functioning like the aforementioned ability, but with scorpions).

Additionally, the prestige class does not offer access to the Spider domain, nor does it grant the webwalking ability.

Instead, it improves spellcasting ability at all eight levels rather than six.

Finally, instead of transforming into a spider, the arachnomancer changes into a similarly sized monstrous scorpion.

TABLE 3–2: THE ARACHNOMANCER HIT DIE: D6

CAVESTALKER

“Welcome to my realm.

You'll find naught for you here but privation, fear, and death—oh, and my blade.”

—Gaelimor Zyrshaen, drow cavestalker

The Underdark's most dangerous predators are not its horrific monstrosities, crawling and festering in the darkest of grottoes.

Rather, they are the deadly cavestalkers, moving effortlessly through a jungle of living rock—and none are as much at home in these caverns as the drow.

Just as a surface ranger feels at peace in the heart of a virgin forest, so too is a cavestalker at home in the wilds of the Underdark.

Yet even in his most familiar environment, he is aware of the ever-present danger that surrounds him.

It is in the task of surviving this endless peril that he finds peace away from so-called “civilized folk”.

BECOMING A CAVESTALKER

Rangers and druids are natural candidates for the cavestalker class.

Underdark races that choose the path of the druid or ranger find little use for the abilities of those classes that are attuned to the wilderness of the surface.

The cavestalker class augments and hones those abilities, making them more suitable for use in the endless night and providing a true advantage for those that live away from the light.

Rogues occasionally become cavestalkers, since their high skill point allotment allows them to achieve the requirements more easily than other classes.

Other classes might enjoy the benefits of becoming a cavestalker, but would likely find meeting the requirements to be prohibitive.

Regardless of class, only individuals who have natural darkvision can achieve the affinity with the lightless depths necessary to become a cavestalker.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 4 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Base Attack Bonus: +2.

Special: The candidate must have natural darkvision to allow successful navigation of Underdark tunnels.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Heal, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (geography), Knowledge (Underdark local), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spot, Swim, Survival, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in the class, cavestalkers become more familiar with the Underdark's natural elements.

In addition, any abilities they have from the ranger or druid classes become attuned to their subterranean environment.

Advanced Spelunker (Ex): As a cavestalker, your familiarity with the environs of the Underdark allows you to move through it easily, even in the most difficult conditions.

As a result, you gain a +2 circumstance bonus on Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, and Jump checks in natural subterranean surroundings.

Underdark Affinity (Ex): At 2nd level, your adaptation to the Underdark allows you to use your nature-themed class abilities in natural subterranean surroundings as well.

These include the druid and ranger abilities of camouflage, hide in plain sight, trackless step, and woodland stride.

If you already have wild empathy, you can now use it to affect vermin.

If you have the wild shape ability, add vermin to the types of creatures you can become (subject to all the size and frequency limitations provided by that ability).

If you do not already have these underlying abilities, Underdark affinity does not grant them to you; it only augments those you already have.

Hide of Stone (Ex): As you gain levels in the cavestalker class, your body embraces the rigors of the Underdark and takes on something of its hue and toughness.

Your skin hardens and becomes flinty, granting you a natural armor bonus in addition to a circumstance bonus on Hide checks when in natural subterranean surroundings.

These bonuses increase as you progress through the cavestalker class, at 6th level and again at 10th level.

Lesser Cavesense (Ex): At 3rd level, you are gifted with a mystical connection to the Underdark, giving you darkvision out to 120 feet.

If you already have darkvision out to 120 feet, your darkvision extends an additional 60 feet.

Due to your familiarity with the acoustic qualities of the Underdark, you also gain a +4 competence bonus on Listen checks made in subterranean surroundings.

Exotic Combat Style (Ex): At 4th level, you gain mastery of a specific exotic combat style, either the spiked chain style or the hand crossbow style.

If you are not a ranger or have not already selected a ranger combat style, choose one of these two styles.

You gain proficiency in that exotic weapon—either the spiked chain or the hand crossbow—if you do not already have it.

If you already have selected two-weapon combat as a ranger combat style, then the exotic combat style provides you with the Exotic Weapon Proficiency (spiked chain) feat and permits the use of a spiked chain as a one-handed weapon.

If you already have selected archery as a ranger combat style, then the exotic combat style provides you with the Exotic Weapon Proficiency (hand crossbow) feat and grants you the Rapid Reload feat, even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for the feat.

If you acquire a ranger combat style after gaining an exotic combat style, then the two styles must correspond in a similar fashion: You must select two-weapon combat after choosing the spiked chain style, or archery after choosing the hand crossbow style.

The benefits of your chosen exotic combat style apply only when you wear light or no armor.

You lose all benefits of your exotic combat style when wearing medium or heavy armor.

Expert Spelunker (Ex): Upon reaching 5th level, your familiarity with the tight confines of the Underdark allows you to retain your Dexterity bonus even when climbing or when in a cramped space.

Furthermore, you're better able to negotiate cramped spaces, lowering Escape Artist DCs, move penalties, and attack penalties by one category.

See Table 6–1: Cramped Spaces on page 159.

Gaseous Form (Sp): At 6th level, you gain the ability to traverse the treacherous and confined terrain of the Underdark by assuming gaseous form once per day (caster level 12th).

Improved Exotic Combat Style (Ex): Your aptitude for your chosen exotic combat style increases at 7th level.

If you do not already have a combat style from the ranger class, then the improved exotic combat style grants you one of those ranger combat styles.

If you already have the hand crossbow exotic combat style, you must select archery; if you already have the spiked chain exotic combat style, you must choose two-weapon combat.

If you select archery, then you are treated as having the Rapid Shot feat, even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for that feat.

If you select two-weapon combat, then you are treated as having the Two-Weapon Fighting feat, even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for that feat.

If you already have the ranger two-weapon combat style and the spiked chain exotic combat style, then the improved exotic combat style allows you to treat a spiked chain as one size category smaller for the purpose of use in a cramped space (see Expert Spelunker, above).

If you already have the ranger archery combat style and the hand crossbow exotic combat style, then you are treated as having the Manyshot feat even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for that feat.

You are able to use this feat in conjunction with a hand crossbow.

As before, the benefits of your chosen style apply only when you wear light or no armor.

You lose the benefit of your exotic combat style when wearing medium or heavy armor.

Greater Cavesense (Ex): When you reach 8th level, your mystical connection to the Underdark increases, granting you tremorsense out to 30 feet.

Void in Space (Su): When you reach 9th level, your attunement to the particular atmosphere of the Underdark allows you to warp the sounds, scents, and vibrations you give off, making you invisible to creatures that rely on senses other than sight to detect others.

This effectively makes you undetectable to blindsense, blindsight, and tremorsense.

You still make noises and vibrations (though a successful Move Silently check can mask the sounds), but creatures that cannot see are incapable of determining your true location and believe that you are 30 feet in a random direction from where you are actually located.

In addition, this ability nullifies the effect of the Blind-Fight feat against you.

Master Spelunker (Su): By the time you reach 10th level, your affinity for the terrain of the Underdark has become so great that you can negotiate it without difficulty and even merge with it at times.

This grants you the ability to use spider climb (as the spell) on any natural stone surface at will.

In addition, you can use meld into stone (as the spell) with any surface of unworked stone three times per day.

PLAYING A CAVESTALKER

As a cavestalker, you nurture a close, almost mystical connection to the deadly terrain of the Underdark.

To you, the lightless tunnels are not friends, exactly, but perhaps well-respected adversaries.

Danger is always present, yet you understand it and even find a certain succor in living alongside it.

COMBAT

Although you are a formidable warrior, you usually prefer not to stand against the sheer might of the world's fighters and barbarians.

Your greatest ally is your own native environment.

None dare face your blades when they are trapped in a cramped tunnel, and your exhaustive knowledge of the Underdark allows you to draw enemies into untenable positions where you have the advantage—and where you might even be able to dispatch them without having to fight at all.

With your excellent mobility, you might consider taking a few levels of rogue, adding a deadly sneak attack to your repertoire.

And if things get too hot, it's easy for you to disappear into a realm of extreme peril where few dare to follow.

ADVANCEMENT

The call of the wild is a very different thing in the Underdark from what it is on the surface, but its allure is no less enticing.

Whereas on the surface a character might enter the remote reaches of nature to find solitude or peace, in the Underdark he typically does it for survival.

Perhaps the most dangerous location in the Underdark is on the "civilized" streets of a drow city: an environment rife with political intrigue, betrayal, and assassination.

To escape these noxious environs, you sought refuge in the surrounding tunnels where even the foulest elements of drow society fear to tread.

By gaining an intimate knowledge of this hazardous realm, you buy some breathing room and security from the knives of your kin without abandoning all the advantages that drow society has to offer.

As your cavestalker abilities increase, you find the Underdark a more and more inviting place (if a place of such constant peril can be called inviting).

You use your skills to establish safe havens for yourself or to gain employment opportunities—perhaps guiding the rich and the powerful to distant, dangerous locations.

You also find that continuing to advance as a ranger or druid augments your already impressive abilities in the Underdark's deepest caverns.

"Lolth's priestesses rule the cities with unquestioned dominance, but the tunnels—the tunnels belong to the cavestalkers."

—Pharug Lurimil, drow merchant of the Crescent Clan
For the drow who pursues the life of a ranger or druid—normally impractical classes for members of a subterranean race—the existence of the cavestalkers is validation for his unconventional choice.

With the abilities of a cavestalker, that drow can exert his mastery of nature in a more accessible environment, one that lies just beyond the far outposts of a drow city.

ORGANIZATION

There is no special organization for cavestalkers.

You are more likely to be a loner—or at best the leader of a group of fringe brigands or renegades—than you are to gather with other cavestalkers.

Sometimes priestesses or noble houses hire cavestalkers as spies, and merchant clans are eager to employ you as a guide along the most perilous trade routes.

Cavestalkers can find membership in one of the drow fighting societies or house garrisons, serving as scouts or leaders for the far patrols that guard the fringes of a drow city's sphere of influence.

Additionally, you might be called on to lead an expeditionary force to attack some distant target or settlement.

NPC REACTIONS

Within a drow city proper, you find that you are either ignored or regarded with some small amount of curiosity. A certain mystique surrounds the reputation of the cavestalkers, but it seems distant and irrelevant to the drow cutthroat or noble who makes his living preying upon the denizens of the streets.

It is only when a drow finds himself outside the secure boundaries of his city that he truly appreciates you.

Indeed, he holds you almost in awe, knowing that you are all that stands between him and a horrible death in a hostile environment.

CAVESTALKER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (Underdark local) or Knowledge (dungeoneering), or who have the bardic knowledge ability, can research cavestalkers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check or bardic knowledge check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Only those assisted by a cavestalker can hope to survive in the wilds of the Underdark for long.

DC 15: Cavestalkers move with ease through tunnels and terrain that others find dangerous or impassable.

They make use of this aptitude to set traps and ambushes for those who dare chase them.

DC 20: As a cavestalker advances in knowledge and skill, grows more and more connected to tunnels in which he lives.

It is said that at death, a cavestalker becomes one with the caverns.

In a drow city, a cavestalker can be found by inquiring with the various garrisons, fighting societies, or at locations frequented by merchant clans (Gather Information DC 10). Having a ranger or druid in the party reduces the check DC by 5.

CAVESTALKERS IN THE GAME

As a player character, you can put your levels in ranger or druid to good use for adventuring in the Underdark, when you would otherwise find the abilities provided by those classes somewhat unproductive.

You can serve as a guide for a party, helping it to avoid the Underdark's hidden dangers and using your talents to outmaneuver or outwit those foes that can't be avoided. An NPC cavestalker might be the leader of a drow patrol or the head of a band of outlaws living outside drow society and preying on those foolish enough to venture beyond its boundaries.

He could also be a spy sent to observe some other community and report its weaknesses to his masters.

ADAPTATION

Although cavestalkers are most frequently found among the drow, they are certainly not limited to the race of the dark elves.

A svirfneblin hermit might live as a cavestalker, quietly protecting the fringes of his community from the incursion of subterranean beasts.

Alternately, a duergar or dwarf cavestalker could be a prospector seeking new veins of ore for his clan.

The barbaric quaggoths and grimlocks rarely become cavestalkers, but a truly exceptional individual from one of these races might choose this class—perhaps one born into slavery and later raised to leadership of his tribe.

A character from a surface-dwelling race can also become a cavestalker, though he would need to have extensive exposure to an underground environment.

He could dwell near an extensive natural cave system, for example, or in a community with close ties to a gnome or dwarf clanhold.

In this case, the character might start out as a ranger or druid and become more and more acclimated to a subterranean environment as his adventures take him deeper into the nearby caverns.

Finally, a member of a surface race adopted by some underground-dwelling people might find his way to the cavestalker class, pushed toward solitude by the awkward sense of never quite fitting in.

DEMONBINDER

“By the eight names of Lolth, I invoke thee.
By the eight curses of the Flesh-Carver, I command thee.”

By the eight dooms of the Spider Queen, I summon thee.
Fill my empty vessel with your profane might, your limitless power, and your inexhaustible wisdom.
Let us become one and show the world your true power!”

—Olarae Quavein, demonbinder

The demonbinder draws the essence of demons into herself to acquire their power.

Such acts are forbidden, and doing so condemns the mortal to eternity in the deepest pits of the Abyss.

However, the demonbinder cares little for her fate, being wholly concerned with power in the here and now.

It is from this doom that she is able to invest herself with the power of fiends, and the farther she travels down the road of corruption, the more potent are the demons she binds.

BECOMING A DEMONBINDER

Demonbinders all have at least four levels of warlock, but not all are pure warlocks.

Many dabble in other classes, especially those who seek to augment their combat capabilities.

Class levels in ranger, fighter, and especially barbarian are all common choices for demonbinder candidates.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Drow.

Alignment: Chaotic evil.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Language: Abyssal.

Invocations: Baleful utterance plus any two others.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Disguise, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Knowledge (religion), Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

The demonbinder prestige class increases the number of invocations at your disposal, and it also provides access to a number of supernatural abilities and resistances.

From the start, you gain a pool of points that you use to bind demons that bestow their powers onto you.

In many cases, you can use these demons to modify your eldritch blast.

You also gradually acquire the immunities enjoyed by demons, as well as their damage reduction.

Invocations Known: At each level above 1st, you gain new invocations as if you had also gained a level in the warlock class.

You do not gain any other benefits a warlock would have otherwise gained.

Damnation Points (Ex): You gain a number of damnation points equal to your Charisma modifier plus your class level.

You use damnation points to activate your demonbind abilities.

You cannot spend damnation points when in the area of a consecrate, hallow, or magic circle against evil spell.

You regain all spent damnation points after 5 minutes of rest.

Demonbind (Sp): Once per day per class level, you can spend damnation points to invoke the essence of a demon and bind it to your soul.

This changes your general appearance (which has no significant game effect unless stated otherwise) and also grants you certain benefits.

Binding a demon in this way is a full-round action and lasts for 10 rounds.

If you invoke a second demonbind when another is still active, the new one replaces the old one.

Temporary hit points granted by a demonbind vanish when the demonbind ends (or is replaced by a new demonbind).

Some demonbinds allow you to spend additional damnation points to gain an extra benefit.

You can use this option only when affected by the demonbind, and the benefit lasts until the start of your next turn or until the demonbind ends, whichever comes first.

Any saving throw allowed has a DC of 10 + class level + Cha modifier.

When under the effect of a demonbind, you gain telepathy out to 100 feet (MM 316) and the evil subtype if you don't have it already.

If you are targeted by a banishment or dismissal spell, you instantly lose your demonbind.

If you enter an area protected by a hallow or consecrate spell, the demonbind is suppressed for as long as you remain in the area.

Each demonbind is the equivalent of a spell whose level equals the damnation point cost for invoking the demonbind.

Dretch (1 point): Your body becomes flabby and grotesque, and your limbs become thin and spindly.

You gain 5 temporary hit points and resistance to acid 5, cold 5, and fire 5.

Babau (2 points): A sheen of red ectoplasm covers your hands.

You gain 10 temporary hit points and sneak attack +1d6 (as the rogue class feature).

In addition, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to lace your eldritch blast with caustic slime, dealing an extra 5 points of acid damage.

Succubus (3 points): Small, useless black wings erupt from your back.

You gain 15 temporary hit points and the benefits of the tongues spell.

You can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to gain a +5 competence bonus on Bluff and Diplomacy checks.

Yochlol (4 points): Your flesh takes on a slightly amorphous appearance, occasionally forming tiny vestigial tendrils that wave about as if searching for something.

You gain 20 temporary hit points, and you have a 25% chance to ignore the extra damage from a critical hit or sneak attack.

Also, you can spend one damnation point as a swift action to use gaseous form on yourself.

Bebilith (4 points): Your skin turns a dark shade of blue and your eyes redden.

Six vestigial limbs that flap uselessly for the duration emerge from your ribs.

You gain 20 temporary hit points and the scent ability.

You can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to gain a climb speed equal to your land speed.

Vrock (5 points): A down of gray and white feathers covers your body.

Your face twists and contorts, forming a hard beak in place of your mouth.

As you move, puffs of harmless dust rise from your body.

You gain 25 temporary hit points.

In addition, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to augment your eldritch blast with screeching sonic energy.

A target struck by this eldritch blast takes an additional 10 points of sonic damage and becomes deafened for 5 rounds (Fort negates deafness).

Glabrezu (6 points): Your hands twist into crab-claws.

You gain 30 temporary hit points and a +5 competence bonus on Bluff checks.

In addition, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to gain the benefit of a true seeing spell.

Nalfeshnee (7 points): Your body swells with corruption, the skin stretching taut from the profound pressure created by the possessing fiend.

You gain 35 temporary hit points and resistance to acid 5, cold 5, and fire 5.

Additionally, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to lace your eldritch blast with a nalfeshnee's smite.

Non-evil targets with fewer HD than your character level who are struck by the eldritch blast are dazed for 1 round, overwhelmed by horrid visions (Will negates).

Marylith (8 points): An extra two sets of arms grow from the sides of your body, your legs fuse into a green serpent's tail, and your eyes burn with an unholy light.

You gain 40 temporary hit points.

Your original arms (if any) are your primary arms, and the new limbs are secondary limbs.

You can wield extra weapons with these new limbs, but all such attacks are treated as off-hand attacks.

Also, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to use one of your new limbs to fire an eldritch blast at a –5 penalty on the attack roll; you can't apply any eldritch essence or blast shape invocations (or any other modifications) to this eldritch blast.

Balor (9 points): Massive wings tear out of your back, and angry red flames wreath your body.

You gain 45 temporary hit points and a fly speed equal to your land speed (good maneuverability).

Also, you can spend 1 damnation point as a swift action to make a melee touch attack that deals fire damage equal to the damage normally dealt by your eldritch blast.

Damage Reduction (Su): Starting at second level, you gain damage reduction 2/good.

At 6th and 10th level, your damage reduction improves to 4/good and 6/good, respectively.

Resistance to Electricity (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you gain resistance to electricity 5.

At 5th level, this resistance increases to 10.

This resistance stacks with the energy resistance class feature gained by the warlock.

Immunity to Poison (Su): At 7th level, you gain immunity to all types of poison, even magical poison.

Immunity to Electricity (Su): At 9th level, your resistance to electricity is replaced by immunity to electricity.

PLAYING A DEMONBINDER

By becoming a demonbinder, you sacrifice your immortal soul for the instant power granted by the Abyss.

You draw demonic agencies inside yourself, triggering a vile transformation that bestows not only a sampling of a fiend's power, but also a resemblance to that fiend.

Constant exposure to these creatures leaves a stain on your soul so foul that no act of restitution will ever cleanse it.

For obvious reasons, most demonbinders find little acceptance in most civilized lands and are forced to make do in remote places: dark lands filled with goblinoids, giants, and other creatures that care little for the interests of one depraved mortal.

This, however, is not the case with the drow.

Thanks to Lolth's association with the Abyss, particularly with regard to her personal domain (the Demonweb Pits), female demonbinders are valued members of the Spider Queen's clergy.

Called the Daughters of the Demon, they treat regularly with fiends.

Lending special insights into the nature of demons, they aid priestesses in a particularly terrifying ritual—one in which these otherworldly beings are called up to take part in depraved couplings, hoping to gain the favor of the Queen of Spiders.

COMBAT

The demonbinder prestige class offers an incredible selection of abilities, granting you uncommon versatility. With the infusion of temporary hit points acquired from your demonbind, you have a greater ability to withstand attacks before you have to withdraw from combat.

Demonbinds also give you ways to improve your eldritch blast.

However, they require additional expenditures of damnation points, which limits your options at lower levels but provides even greater flexibility with the use of your eldritch blast as you grow more powerful.

ADVANCEMENT

The Abyss and the creatures that dwell within its endless depths contain enormous power that you have stolen and molded to serve your purposes.

You turned to the forbidden knowledge of the demonologists, scouring tomes of the most profane knowledge to unlock the secrets of demonbinding. You learned how to open yourself to these spirits and invite them to reside within you.

The depth of their wickedness shocked you at first, but each time you bound one, you found your reluctance slipping away until the process felt almost natural.

Unless you are ensconced in a church of Lolth, odds are that you are an exile, cast out of society for your terrible arts.

You might surround yourself with minions for the protection they afford.

If you are not an exile, and you are female, then you are a part of the esteemed Daughters of the Demon, a coven of female drow warlocks who advise and support the priestesses, helping them to exert their absolute control over the community.

Though most of your time is spent in these endeavors, you occasionally use your magical talents to thwart your most ambitious competitors.

As you advance, you should invest in feats that improve your eldritch blast ability.

Since the demonbinder class does not improve the amount of damage you deal, feats such as Ability Focus (eldritch blast) and Weapon Focus (eldritch blast), as well as Maximize Spell-Like Ability and Heighten Spell-Like Ability, make it harder for foes to resist this vital component of your arsenal.

RESOURCES

The Daughters of the Demon receive assistance from the clerics of Lolth, who regard them as valuable tools for maintaining their status and control.

In exchange for your support, the priestesses provide you with lodging, food, clothing, and all of life's necessities.

In addition, they also offer free healing.

If it lies within their power, as well as discounted spellcasting services.

Though the rewards are considerable, make no mistake:

You are their servant.

DEMONBINDERS IN THE WORLD

"How can you doubt the reasons behind the curse that banished the drow from the sun's light?"

The demonbinders prove their wickedness.

They earned their fate—and the day this world sees the end of the dark elves cannot come soon enough."

—Estrella Montenegro, Knight of the Chalice

Demonbinders are a menace.

They have no restraint.

They eschew the good sense that keeps sane mortals from treating with demons.

Demonbinders are too arrogant to recognize that they are the tools of the creatures they supposedly control, and the fact that they have not yet been bodily snatched into the Abyss to suffer incomprehensible tortures is only proof that these twisted individuals are immensely valuable to the demon princes.

ORGANIZATION

From the very moment young drow exhibit a warlock's unique powers, they are taken from their houses, stripped of their familial loyalties, and steeped in the dark arts of warlock magic.

Few survive the arduous training and profoundly evil rites meant to usher them into their next stage of development.

For most, their "education" stops when they achieve adulthood, whereupon they take their place in the priesthood as members of the church.

A few go farther than this position, however.

Warlocks who display a special knack for dealing with fiends and who exhibit a deeper understanding of those creatures study tunder the tutelage of established demonbinders, learning a different, darker path to power. Again, the casualty rate from such instruction is high, and many would-be demonbinders simply disappear, with only an echoing scream to suggest where they went and what took them.

Once past the initial stages of training, the newly ordained demonbinder oversees and sometimes participates in summoning rituals, cackling as the acolytes shriek with pain and terror from the caress of a conjured fiend. Although demonbinders have great power, the path is not without its drawbacks.

No priestess fully trusts a demonbinder, and with good reason: These individuals are every bit as fickle and dangerous as Lolth herself.

When infused with a demon's essence, their capricious and violent tendencies become far worse.

NPC REACTIONS

Demonbinders are lumped together with demon worshipers, detestable in almost every circle and certainly by any civilized community.

Those who learn of a demonbinder's nature, abilities, and allegiance are hostile and attack on sight if at all possible. Demonbinders find welcome only among evil outsiders and creatures that venerate demonic gods.

To such individuals, demonbinders are kindred spirits, serving the same powers for the same ends.

They are indifferent, or friendly if they happen to serve identical masters.

DEMON BINDER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research demonbinders to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: There is little difference between demonbinders and the demons that possess them.

DC 15: Demonbinders, though they have much in common with other spirit sharers, are wholly in a class of their own. They transcend the limits of common sense, willingly giving their bodies to demons.

DC 20: A demonbinder uses his or her own corruption to open a gate inside himself or herself, allowing a malignant spirit to occupy his or her body for a brief time.

From such unions, the demonbinder gains a variety of powers and resistances that vary with the demon or demons bound.

Outside drow cities, demonbinders are reclusive. Characters interested in tracking down a demonbinder have the best chances of doing so by using Gather Information in frontier villages at the edges of civilization.

DEMONBINDERS IN THE GAME

Demonbinders lurk at the fringes of society, so you should be able to incorporate them into an ongoing campaign with little to no work.

Furthermore, demonbinders are blessedly rare, and unless the characters have been in a drow city for a long time, there's no reason to assume the PCs have had previous encounters with these characters.

Best as adversaries, low-level demonbinders make excellent lieutenants: They are versatile, and the techniques they use are hard to predict.

A higher-level demonbinder might lead a group of cultists, perhaps acting as a prophet.

ADAPTATION

Demonbinders are vile warlocks, utterly in thrall to the demons they bind.

To make this class more useful to players, you could downplay some of darker elements to bring it more in line with other transformative prestige classes such as the dragon disciple (DMG 183) and the fiend-blooded (Heroes of Horror).

Replace the chaotic evil alignment requirement with any nongood.

In addition, apply the following changes to the damnation ability described above.

Damnation (Su): You gain a number of damnation points equal to your Charisma modifier plus your class level. You use damnation points to power your demonbind ability.

Spent damnation points return at a rate of 1 point per 5 rounds.

You cannot spend damnation points when in the area of a consecrate, hallow, or magic circle against evil spell.

Damnation comes with a price.

Whenever you use damnation points, you must succeed on a DC 20 Will save or gain one negative level.

Negative levels gained in this way last for 1 minute.

Evil characters are immune to this side effect.

DREAD FANG OF LOLTH

"All things are possible with the grace of the Spider Queen. It is a shame you did not realize this before your treasonous transgression."

—Shalzac Raelnan, dread fang of Lolth

The dread fangs of Lolth are elite soldiers who fight for the drow matriarchs.

They are a visible manifestation of the theocratic power that governs the dark elves, and their appearance elicits fear in almost all who behold them.

Dread fangs of Lolth answer only to the clergy, but they work alongside the mysterious eyes of Lolth (see page 80) from time to time.

BECOMING A DREAD FANG

Most dread fangs of Lolth are multiclass fighter/rogues, because the combination of these classes offers the quickest path to meeting the requirements.

Some fangs have levels in ranger or barbarian instead of fighter, or ninja instead of rogue.

A rare few dabble in arcane magic as sorcerers or wizards, and then alternate levels in dread fang of Lolth and eldritch knight (DMG 186).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful evil.

Race: Drow.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Listen 2 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks,

Spot 2 ranks.

Special: Evasion.

Special: Sneak attack +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

Dread fangs of Lolth are shrewd warriors who specialize in the element of surprise.

From the outset, they are granted blessings from their goddess that set them apart from other warriors.

As they gain levels, they develop a number of techniques that help them make swift and deadly attacks.

Lolth's Will (Su): Your racial bonus on Will saves against spells and spell-like abilities increases to +4.

Lolth's Whispers (Su): The dread voice of the Spider Queen fills your thoughts.

You gain a +2 insight bonus on damage rolls.

As a swift action, you can give up this bonus and bestow it on an ally within 30 feet that you can clearly see.

The ally's bonus lasts for 1 round.

Sudden Strike (Ex): You deal extra damage at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

You can't use sudden strike to deliver nonlethal damage.

Weapons capable of dealing only nonlethal damage don't deal extra damage when used as part of a sudden strike.

Otherwise, this ability functions as the sneak attack rogue class feature (PH 50), and it stacks with sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target.

(This ability is the same as the ninja's sudden strike class feature, described in Complete Adventurer).

This extra damage increases by 1d6 at each odd-numbered level beyond 1st.

Poison Use (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you never risk accidentally poisoning yourself when applying poison to a weapon.

Team Maneuverability (Ex): Also at 2nd level, you add one-half your class level as an insight bonus on Climb and Jump checks.

All allies within 30 feet gain a +2 competence bonus on these checks if they can see you.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 3rd level, you cannot be caught flat-footed and react to danger before your senses would normally allow you to do so.

See the uncanny dodge barbarian class feature, PH 26.

If you already have this ability, you gain improved uncanny dodge instead (see below).

Improved Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save and take only half damage on a failed save.

See the improved evasion monk class feature, PH 42.

Team Defense (Ex): At 4th level, you gain a +1 dodge bonus to Armor Class.

As a swift action, you can give up and bestow this bonus onto an ally within 30 feet that you can clearly see.

The ally's bonus lasts for 1 round.

The dodge bonus increases to +2 at 8th level.

Spider Bite (Ex): By 6th level, you have learned where to strike your foes to best deliver your poison.

When you attack with a poisoned weapon, the save DC to resist the initial effect increases by 2.

Opportunist (Ex): At 7th level, once per round, you can make an attack of opportunity against an opponent who has just been injured in melee by another character.

See the opportunist rogue class feature, PH 51.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): From 9th level on, you can no longer be flanked.

See the improved uncanny dodge barbarian class feature, PH 26.

Ambush (Ex): At 10th level, during a surprise round, you can act normally if aware of your opponents; you are not restricted to just a standard action and can perform a full-round action, standard and move action, and so on.

If you are surprised, you can still take a standard action.

PLAYING A DREAD FANG OF LOLTH

As a dread fang of Lolth, you enforce the will of the priestesses.

The goddess favors you, filling your mind with her whispers and mutterings.

Most times, it is a constant, almost maddening noise, but you have learned to pick out some wisdom from her litany—insights that make you a better warrior.

You are more than just a soldier, though.

You are part of an elite fighting force that protects and furthers the Spider Queen's interests.

As a group, you and your fellow fangs protect temples, priestesses, and the city, and occasionally undertake important missions for the clerics of Lolth.

You take your responsibilities seriously and are loyal to a fault.

COMBAT

Many of your class features require you to gain surprise.

Rather than improving your sneak attack, you gain sudden strike, which grants extra damage only against opponents deprived of their Dexterity bonus.

You can certainly hold your own in a fight, but you're most dangerous when ambushing your enemies.

At 2nd level, you gain your first team ability.

Like the eyes of Lolth, you are most effective when fighting alongside allies.

When grouped with other fangs or eyes, you and your allies can respond to changes in the battlefield and best allocate your resources to win the fight.

ADVANCEMENT

Becoming a dread fang of Lolth was no easy task.

It involved endless hours of training, including the extensive study of numerous fighting techniques as well as in-depth religious indoctrination.

For years, you honed your abilities, improving upon your already formidable talents.

But the priestesses waited for a sign of greater ability, and then it came: The mark of Lolth's favor began as a faint voice, the slightest whisper, something you might have imagined.

But it soon became far more insistent.

It distracted you and pushed you to the brink of madness, but somehow you resisted—and eventually embraced the whispering, knowing that it was the voice of the goddess herself.

And thus, you were welcomed into the ranks of the fangs. Since nearly all your abilities rely on surprise, invest in feats and skills that help you take advantage of these circumstances.

Feats such as Improved Initiative, Spring Attack, and Great Cleave are good choices, but don't overlook feats that enhance your sneak attack and sudden strike abilities, particularly Razing Strike and Staggering Strike.

When you gain treasure, spend it on items that improve your stealth.

Cloaks and boots of elvenkind are viral, as are elixirs of hiding and sneaking.

RESOURCES

You are a chosen servant of Lolth and, by virtue of your status, few drow dare cross your path.

The priestesses supply you with your basic equipment, as well as housing, clothing, and the necessary supplies to survive.

In addition, you have an easy time finding trainers and mentors who can help you refine your craft.

DREAD FANGS IN THE WORLD

"The dread fangs of Lolth are lackeys at best, but as elite guards, shock troops, and enforcers, they are useful allies.

If they have one flaw, it's their obedience.

They never question orders.

Ever."

—Xune Argith, eye of Lolth

The dread fangs of Lolth are important additions to any campaign in which the drow are featured as principal antagonists.

They use drow tactics and perfect them, and so are extremely evasive, unpredictable, and mobile.

Even when used along-side lesser soldiers, the dread fangs drive home the cunning tactics the drow favor, and instill in the PCs a healthy respect for their foes.

ORGANIZATION

The dread fangs of Lolth have a presence in nearly every drow city.

Wherever there are priestesses of the Spider Queen, fangs are not far.

As the enforcement arm of the church, the fangs ensure that the wishes of the priestesses are fulfilled and their enemies destroyed.

The clerics assign fangs to the eyes of Lolth.

Under the command of these operatives, the fangs provide the muscle to ensure a successful mission.

Eyes and fangs work exceptionally well together, their abilities complementing each other.

When so paired, they can be a nearly unstoppable force.

Candidates are always carefully screened before being invited to join the fangs, since the priestesses cannot afford to compromise the integrity of the organization with dissent or treasonous thoughts.

They pick talented males (and rarely females) who are unswervingly loyal to the Spider Queen.

Candidates endure a difficult period of training to alter their personalities and correct their conflicting loyalties until a single-minded warrior remains.

Of these, only the ones who hear the voice of Lolth are allowed to become full-fledged members.

NPC REACTIONS

The dread fangs of Lolth are an intimidating presence among the drow, serving as constant reminders of the priestesses' pervasive presence in their lives.

Drow clerics are always friendly toward fangs, valuing their support of the theocracy, but the same attitude doesn't always extend to all levels of drow society.

Ordinary soldiers resent them out of jealousy, since (unlike the rank and file) the fangs succeeded in rising above their station.

Likewise, nobles fear the fangs, perpetually worrying that the priestesses will employ those elite warriors against the houses.

Of course, none would be so foolish as to exhibit anything other than a friendly face when speaking to a fang, but most nobles harbor disdain for the class and are secretly unfriendly.

DREAD FANG OF LOLTH LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research dread fangs of Lolth to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Dread fangs of Lolth are elite soldiers.

DC 15: Dread fangs, with their sudden strike ability, are most powerful when they have the advantage of surprise and numbers.

DC 20: When working with allies, dread fangs can lend their skills to those allies to improve their capabilities in combat, making the allies an extremely effective fighting force.

Dread fangs of Lolth are scarce outside drow cities, though within them, a character can locate a dread fang with a Gather Information check.

Such checks should have low DCs, since nearly all drow know the location of the dread fangs' barracks.

DREAD FANGS IN THE GAME

Incorporating the dread fangs of Lolth into an ongoing campaign is simple, since they are practically exclusive to drow cities.

If you have been running a long campaign featuring the drow, you could treat the existence of the dread fangs (and the eyes of Lolth) as a relatively new development, perhaps as a response to the actions of the adventurers.

ADAPTATION

If you run a campaign in a setting where Lolth is not clearly present, such as in Eberron or in Faerûn during the period of Lolth's silence, you can adapt this class easily by replacing Lolth with a campaign-appropriate deity.

You can even retool the concept to make it suitable for surface elves.

For example, instead of spider bite, change the class feature to scorpion sting and the name of the class to the stinger of Vulkoor.

EYE OF LOLTH

"We are the watchers.

We monitor those who enjoy the enlightened wisdom and benevolence of the matriarchs."

—Xune Argith, eye of Lolth

The eyes of Lolth are stealthy servants and watchers faithful to the Church of Lolth.

They observe activity in the lands controlled by the matriarchs and report their findings back to the houses. It falls to the eyes of Lolth to lead forces of dread fangs of Lolth (see page 76) and other drow to capture enemies and bring them back to the temples for interrogation. They are the secret police—and they are everywhere.

BECOMING AN EYE OF LOLTH

Multiclass cleric/rogues easily meet the requirements of this class, since they have the mix of skills and abilities necessary to take eye of Lolth levels early on.

A cleric/scout can also advance into this class at a higher level.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Drow.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Listen 8 ranks, Spot 8 ranks.

Feats: Cautious Attack (see page 47).

Domain: Trickery.

Special: Evasion.

Special: Sneak attack +2d6 or skirmish +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Disguise, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As an eye of Lolth, you improve your powers of observation.

At higher levels, you can bestow this uncanny awareness on your allies, giving you the edge needed to lead your strike force and to attack quickly and efficiently.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an eye of Lolth, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Aura of Truth (Su): You emit a 20-foot-radius aura that prevents other creatures from speaking falsehoods, as if they were in the area of a zone of truth spell.

Creatures are entitled to a Will save (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) to resist this effect.

As with the spell, characters that move beyond the range of your aura are free to speak as they choose.

Blindsense (Su): You gain blindsense (MM 306) out to 10 feet.

At 4th, 7th, and 9th level, the extent of your blindsense increases by an additional 10 feet.

Lolth's Vision (Ex): You add your class level to Spot checks. You can grant this bonus to an ally within 30 feet as a swift action.

This bonus lasts for 1 round.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

See the sneak attack rogue class feature, PH 50.

This damage increases by 1d6 at 5th level and again at 8th level.

Teamwork Observation (Ex): From 3rd level onward, if you spend 1 minute taking no other action than observing a single target, you gain a +2 bonus on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls against that target for 5 rounds. All allies within 30 feet gain the same bonus.

(The allies need not be present while you study the target). At 7th level, this bonus increases to +4.

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, as long as you are within 10 feet of some sort of a shadow, you can use the Hide skill even when being observed.

See the assassin class feature, DMG 181.

Team Sense (Ex): At 6th level, you gain a +2 insight bonus on initiative checks and Listen, Search, and Spot checks. All allies within 30 feet of you also gain this bonus.

Team Stealth (Ex): Beginning at 9th level, you take no penalty on Hide and Move Silently checks when moving faster than one-half your normal speed but less than your full speed, and you take only a –10 penalty on Hide and Move Silently checks when moving your full speed.

As a swift action, you can grant this benefit to another character within 30 feet for 1 round.

Vanish (Su): At 10th level, as a swift action you can become invisible for 5 rounds.

You can use this ability at will, but you must wait 1 minute between uses.

PLAYING AN EYE OF LOLTH

You pride yourself on your vigilance and pay attention to every smallest detail, no matter how inconsequential.

It is because of your observations that you have worth in the eyes of the matriarchs, and as long as you have worth, you have some degree of protection from the awful torments they inflict on those who have angered them. The eyes of Lolth are an insidious organization, infesting every level of drow society.

As a member, you live a double life, posing as a priestess or as a common citizen in one of the city's ghettos.

It's vital that you retain your cover, since it allows you to keep track of the various undercurrents that define the tumultuous atmosphere of drow culture.

COMBAT

You never allow yourself to be caught unaware, and your class features make this event unlikely at best. Scout out the battlefield before taking any action, using team stealth to best position yourself and your allies so you can surprise your adversaries.

Like a rogue or a scout, you're at your best when you support other characters in combat.

You can pepper your enemies with ranged attacks, but unless you have the advantage of surprise, you should focus on flanking your enemies to complement your warrior allies.

Should a battle ever turn against you, though, you have the means to escape.

Hide in plain sight allows you to effectively vanish, and when you attain the highest level in this class, you can become invisible.

Aside from providing an almost infallible means of escape, you can also use these abilities to strike from unseen positions, crippling unsuspecting opponents with your devastating attacks.

ADVANCEMENT

The church of Lolth aggressively recruits new eyes of Lolth. In fact, eyes are always under orders to watch for suitable candidates to bring into the organization.

In all likelihood, this was your first introduction to the eyes.

Of course, it wasn't as if you had a choice about joining. Refusing an invitation is tantamount to accepting a death sentence.

As an eye of Lolth, it is your responsibility to gather information about your fellow drow, to notice trends and developments within your culture, and to anticipate upheavals.

One might expect the priestesses to take a more active role in monitoring their cities, but their important enemies protect their privacy with a variety of wards.

It falls to you to undertake these dangerous missions, to get close to the movers and shakers of the underworld and learn what you can.

Your most important role is that of a spy, so you would do well to invest skill points in Gather Information, Listen, and Spot.

Of equal importance is the ability to observe unseen, so Hide and Move Silently are excellent skills to improve.

As for feats, select those that complement your class features, such as Quick Reconnoiter.

Also consider feats that improve your combat capabilities and maneuverability, such as Spring Attack, Terrifying Strike (page 54), and Shadowborn Warrior (page 52).

RESOURCES

As members of the secret police, eyes of Lolth have access to extensive stores of information, compiled by various agents working in the field.

Most entries are dossiers on agitators, important slaves, and the members of the mighty households.

Eyes of Lolth who use this information gain a +4 competence bonus on Knowledge (history) and Knowledge (local) checks.

Eyes are more than just spies.

They enforce the matriarchs' will, acting as warriors and assassins.

On dangerous missions, eyes team up with dread fangs of Lolth (see page 76), especially when they must capture particularly troublesome opponents.

EYES OF LOLTH IN THE WORLD

"Never trust a drow, especially a smiling one."

—Gorben Stonefist, duergar merchant

The eyes of Lolth wait, watch, and listen.

They could be anyone, anywhere.

They usually operate in drow cities, but they can be found anywhere—as long as their priestesses have an interest in the place.

Eyes of Lolth provide an in-game reason for why the drow are able to anticipate the player characters' movements, serving as foils for the PCs and, ultimately, as obstacles for the characters to overcome.

ORGANIZATION

To the common drow, the existence of the eyes is only the subject of conjecture.

Few drow have ever knowingly met an eye of Lolth, even though most suspect that they've encountered at least one during the course of their lives.

The extent of the eyes' power varies from city to city.

In some places, they are a force rivaling even the Spider Queen's church and are no longer subject to the whims of her clerics.

In others, they are small, disorganized, and subjugated by the subversive elements in the cities.

Regardless, those who know about the eyes invariably fear them.

In most cases, the eyes work directly for the priestesses, filing regular reports and receiving assignments from the church.

Eyes are loners, since too many operatives in one place can compromise a mission.

Certain targets require a greater investment of resources, however, and in these cases groups of four or more eyes might monitor the same mark.

The eyes are closely affiliated with the dread fangs of Lolth. Although some rivalry exists between the two groups, they work together to handle dangerous jobs.

Fangs, as the enforcers and elite soldiers, do the majority of the fighting.

The eyes direct the combat, lending support where needed.

NPC REACTIONS

As drow, eyes of Lolth receive the same kind of reactions that other drow face, which is usually fear and hostility from nearly all non-drow and indifference from their own kind.

On the off chance that an eye's affiliation is revealed, drow attitudes improve to helpful, to avoid the wrath of the matriarchs.

EYE OF LOLTH LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research eyes of Lolth to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: The drow secret police are called the eyes of Lolth.

DC 15: They have preternatural awareness: They can hear the slightest sound and spot the smallest detail.

DC 20: Eyes never fight fairly, preferring the element of surprise.

When on an important mission, they work alongside the dread fangs of Lolth.

You don't find the eyes of Lolth; they find you.

Any concerted effort made to track one down soon comes to an eye's attention, and one or more might be assigned to watch the player characters.

If any of the PCs seem a good candidate for the organization, an eye might approach when they are alone, inviting the characters to join.

Should a character refuse, the eye accepts that decision and returns the next day with a group of dread fangs to snatch the unwilling candidate.

EYES OF LOLTH IN THE GAME

The eyes favor secrecy, so you can incorporate them easily into an ongoing campaign.

They can be a constant source of frustration to adventuring parties.

They might approach the characters under the pretense of friendship, only to funnel information back to the matriarchs.

Such villains might even help the PCs if it allows them to get closer to their target.

More likely, though, the eyes shadow their steps, watching from a distance until the proper moment to attack.

ADAPTATION

The eye of Lolth class can be customized by changing its focus.

Instead of serving the drow matriarchs, the eyes could be recast as surface elves who make forays into the Underdark to monitor their estranged kin.

Change the drow requirement to elf or half-elf and the Knowledge (religion) requirement to Knowledge (dungeoneering).

In lieu of gaining Lolth's vision, the class grants characters darkvision out to 60 feet.

Finally, the character loses all team-oriented benefits, but gains the ability to use disguise self at 3rd level, alter self at 6th level, and finally polymorph at 9th level, each a number of times per day equal to the character's Charisma bonus (minimum 1/day) and at a caster level equal to the character's Hit Dice.

INSIDIOUS CORRUPTOR

"Friends, listen not to the dire warnings of the dwarves! The Underdark, while dangerous, is no worse than any other wilderness...and the treasures!

Indeed, the Underdark is a new frontier, ripe with adventure and replete with plunder that's yours for the taking.

The drow, you ask?

What have you heroes to fear of a few elves?"

—Belgos Xarann, insidious corruptor

The insidious corruptor is a manipulator, a devious and sinister villain who lures individuals to their dooms.

Armed with his silver tongue and his keen wit, few can resist his suggestions, and his victims meet dreadful fates either as sacrifices on the high priestesses' bloody altars or as slaves in the endless tunnels of the Underdark.

BECOMING AN INSIDIOUS CORRUPTOR

Nearly all corruptors are arcane spellcasters, since candidates must master the dominate person spell before taking levels in the class.

Insidious corruptors are unique to the drow, and most of them are bards or sorcerers who establish a strong foundation of spellcasting abilities prior to advancing in this prestige class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Drow.

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Bluff 9 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Feats: Persuasive.

Spells: Ability to cast dominate person.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Diplomacy, Disguise, Forgery, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (local), Listen, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

Although his talents lie in his deceptions, the insidious corruptor has a powerful will that he can exert upon any creature he meets.

He sinks the claws of his influence into the hearts and minds of his victims, using them like puppets to further his own ambitions.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an insidious corruptor, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Claws of Influence (Su): At will, as a standard action, you can select a single living creature within 30 feet that you can see and that has an Intelligence score of at least 3.

The target must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) or become vulnerable to your coercions.

You gain your class level as an insight bonus on Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Sense Motive checks made against targets that fail their save against this ability.

At 1st level you can affect one target at a time.

At 3rd level and every three levels thereafter, you gain an additional target.

The claws of influence remain until you release the subject (a swift action) or until it is more than 30 feet away from you, at which point it is instantly freed from your influence.

Manipulate Senses (Su): As a swift action, you can alter the senses of a creature affected by claws of influence.

You can grant an insight bonus or penalty, of any amount up to your class level, to its Listen, Search, and Spot checks for 1 minute.

Probe Thoughts (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, as a standard action you can violate the thoughts of any creature currently under the effect of claws of influence.

This ability functions like the detect thoughts spell, except the target does not get a saving throw.

You gain information as if you had spent 3 rounds in concentration.

After you use this ability, the target becomes confused (as the confusion spell) for 1 round.

Manipulation (Su): At 3rd level, as an immediate action you can telepathically urge a single creature under the effect of claws of influence to take any of the following specific actions on its next turn.

Attack: The target creature uses a standard action to make a single attack.

Cast: The target creature casts a spell with a casting time of 1 standard action or less.

Move: The target creature spends a move action to move at a rate equal to his speed.

The target is free to make choices as to the target of its attack or spell, or where and how it moves.

The target is under no compulsion to abide by your instructions.

However, if the target chooses not to obey, it takes a -4 insight penalty on all attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saving throws, and checks for 1 round.

Minion (Su): Beginning at 4th level, as a standard action you can select a single creature under the effect of claws of influence and affect it with a dominate monster spell for 1 round.

As with the spell, if you force the target to do something against its nature, it can immediately make another saving throw against claws of influence with a +2 bonus to break free from this effect.

Swift Enchantment (Ex): Starting at 5th level, as an immediate action you can release a subject under the effect of claws of influence to cast an enchantment spell as a swift action.

Irresistible Charm (Ex): At 6th level, as a swift action you can release a subject under the effect of claws of influence to increase the save DC of the next enchantment (charm) spell you cast by an amount equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum +1).

Greater Manipulation (Su): Beginning at 7th level, you can issue commands to creatures under the sway of claws of influence with greater effect.

Attack: The target attacks another creature that you indicate. If it does, it gains a +4 bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls.

Cast: The target casts a spell at a target you indicate.

If it does, the save DC increases by 2.

Move: The target moves where you indicate.

If it does, it gains a +10 enhancement bonus to its speed for 1 round.

As with manipulation, subjects are not forced to abide by your directives.

However, if they choose some other action, they do so under penalties prescribed by manipulation.

Greater Minions (Su): Starting at 8th level, as a standard action you can force any and all creatures under the effect of claws of influence to act as if under the influence of a dominate monster spell for 1 round.

This ability otherwise functions as the minion ability.

Irresistible Compulsion (Ex): At 9th level, as a swift action you can release a subject under the effect of claws of influence to increase the save DC of the next enchantment (compulsion) spell you cast by an amount equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum +1).

Master Manipulator (Su): At 10th level you can use claws of influence as a swift action.

If you use it as a standard action, the save DC to resist it increases by 4.

PLAYING AN INSIDIOUS CORRUPTOR

Domination is your trade.

You derive pleasure from manipulating others, from bending them to your will and making them your creatures.

To this end, you have magnified your already impressive powers to specialize in controlling other beings.

The more you influence them, and the more you instruct them to behave as you desire, the more they become your slaves.

COMBAT

Under no circumstances should you ever fight on your own behalf.

It's vital to surround yourself with minions—willing or otherwise.

You lack the combat capabilities of other characters, and advancing in this class diminishes your spellcasting abilities.

Luckily, you have a number of talents that convince others to protect you, and as you grow more powerful, this influence can extend even over your enemies.

Some might see you as a supporting character, a specialized individual with some skill at enchantment magic.

In truth, you control everything, convincing your allies to perform as you direct and weakening your opponents so that your comrades can do their jobs.

ADVANCEMENT

You didn't choose to become an insidious corruptor; you were born to it. Your entire life has been spent manipulating, deceiving, and creating situations that best benefit you. This ability only grew more pronounced when you studied magic, for therein lay the secrets of true mastery. You discovered that you could achieve far more with well-placed spells than you ever could with cunning wit and careful words.

Even better, you learned to marry those two techniques into one extremely effective method—the claws of influence ability, which changed your life forever. Although when directly confronted you are nearly impossible to refuse, your powerful personality loses its force when you are separated from your subjects. Those who grow wise to your nature and abilities resent you—and might even hate you. Thus, you rarely remain overlong in your drow city, leaving to seek your fortunes on the surface.

There you work carefully to serve the matriarchs, sending expeditions into traps that allow the dark elves to harvest the would-be adventurers as slaves. The abilities granted by this class are only a starting point; your selection of skills and feats determines your success as an insidious corruptor.

As soon as you can, pick up the Leadership feat. This feat gives you a strong base of minions that you can control easily in combat.

As well, invest in feats that improve your spellcasting abilities.

Examples include Greater Spell Focus (enchantment), Spell Penetration, and Extra Spell.

Other excellent choices include Coercive Spell and Imperious Command (see pages 47 and 50 respectively), as well as Ability Focus (claws of influence).

For skills, never neglect Bluff, Diplomacy, Disguise, Intimidate, and Sense Motive.

These are vital skills for interaction, and interaction is key to your survival.

RESOURCES

One tangible benefit gained from this class is the network of minions you establish.

Over time, extensive use of the Diplomacy skill engenders goodwill and allegiance, allowing you to swell the numbers of individuals who will help you.

These willing tools work to further your mission, doing everything from setting up appointments with adventurers to monitoring independent expeditions and forays into the Underdark.

Aside from the intelligence they gather, they also supply you with wealth, gifts, and even companionship.

INSIDIOUS CORRUPTORS IN THE WORLD

"I don't understand it.

The map Belgos gave us says there's a secret door right here! I've looked for over ten minutes, and nothing.

Wait.

Did you hear that?

It sounded like movement...over there..."

—Morzul Darkhunter, dungeon delver

An insidious corruptor is the proverbial spider at the center of the web.

Since he rarely confronts his foes directly, he serves as a hidden enemy, orchestrating elaborate schemes to harass and impede the PCs on their adventures—likely without them ever knowing it.

Insidious corruptors are evil, conniving villains who move their minions like pawns.

ORGANIZATION

At home in a large organization, an insidious corruptor wastes little time climbing the ranks, forcing his way to the top to best control the institution.

He manages this with a surgical precision, carefully murdering those who prove too difficult to control and bending the rest to his will.

It doesn't matter which organization he joins, as long as he benefits by doing so.

The most likely target for infestation by an insidious corruptor is a group whose primary function is exploration and acquisition, such as the Blacklock Loreseekers or the Order of Illumination.

Posing as a candidate, the insidious corruptor meets whatever criteria are required by the organization—or he fakes the relevant abilities by the use of the Disguise skill or other means—until he is accepted by the group and made a full-fledged member.

Once there, he is careful to keep the organization's purpose and function in mind, secretly replacing key members with those loyal to himself.

It's just a matter of time before he takes control, at which point it's far too late to stop him.

NPC REACTIONS

Insidious corruptors cultivate alter egos and disguises to secure their positions with countless supporters and allies. They develop praiseworthy reputations, influenced in no small part by their unusual talents.

Thanks to their public facade, they can move freely through communities, spreading their corruption as they go. Few people can see through an insidious corruptor's disguise, and most are friendly or even helpful to these charismatic individuals.

Should a corruptor's identity and purpose become known, however, hostility—and perhaps even violence—can be the only result.

Among the drow, the same animosity holds true. Dark elves with an understanding of the insidious corruptor's capabilities are unfriendly at best, since the mere presence of this shady character breeds doubt in the minds of those who have previously crossed his path.

INSIDIOUS CORRUPTOR LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (local) can research insidious corruptors to learn more about them. When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some say that at the center of every conspiracy, every plot, and every betrayal, there's an insidious corruptor, foul agent of the drow who wants nothing other than to steer us wrong.

DC 15: The insidious corruptor is a cunning spy who sows discord and tragedy.

He uses trickery and deception to get his way, exerting his influence on you and making you his slave.

DC 20: Insidious corruptors infiltrate the surface world on occasion, usually to lure individuals into the Underdark. An insidious corruptor might fund an expedition, supply a group with a map, and even offer a few tantalizing treasures to whet his prey's appetites.

Insidious corruptors don't advertise their presence. If they have any dealings at all with player characters, it is through intermediaries, or—if they must—behind the safety of a cunningly wrought disguise. In a drow city, however, characters are likely to be found by an insidious corruptor anxious to use them for his own purposes—purposes that likely involve slavery, exploitation, or murder.

INSIDIOUS CORRUPTORS IN THE GAME

The insidious corruptor is an excellent adversary, a hidden enemy who complicates the lives and the efforts of the PCs. When the PCs confront an insidious corruptor, they might have to face friends who have fallen under his sway. The corruptor's most loyal minions gladly give their lives to protect their master, whether out of fear or adoration. The corruptor is a powerful, intelligent foe, and as such is best used as the final encounter in a long adventure—his capabilities can stretch the characters' resources to the breaking point.

ADAPTATION

The insidious corruptor class reflects a very specific aspect of drow culture—the ubiquity of manipulation. Such individuals are born from the self-serving, corrupt environment of their societies.

Many of the class features might be attractive to players, and with the right adaptation, you can alter the class in ways that make it considerably less disruptive to the typical adventuring party.

The first and most important change is to alter the alignment prerequisite from any evil to any non-good. From there, you should alter the corruptor's class features so that they affect only opponents, thus preventing player character corruptors from manipulating other PCs. With these minor changes in place, the class should be playable as written.

TABLE 3–7: THE INSIDIOUS CORRUPTOR HIT DIE: D6

KINSLAYER

"I will slay them all, each and every one.

While I suffer in the depths of the earth, forced to grub like worms for food and live shoulder to shoulder with the filthy fish-folk, mind flayers, and countless other threats, they cavort in the warm sun, free of worries, free of fear.

I say, no more!

The fire of my hate will never be quenched as long as at least one elf breathes the clean air of the world above."

—Dak Falshae, kinslayer

Though the ancient conflict that rent the elves and the drow asunder has long passed into antiquity, neither race has forgotten.

Each side nurses old grudges and hatreds, refusing to set aside their differences.

The two races exist in a state of war, with each side launching forays against the other.

There are avengers aplenty on the side of the surface elves, but few compare to the ferocity of the kinslayer, a hunter whose entire existence is defined by his vows.

BECOMING A KINSLAYER

Drow despise surface elves; thus, any drow who make the solemn vow to destroy their kin can enter this class.

But the life of the kinslayer is hard, and only those with incredible stamina and dedication can hope to awaken the ancient hate that drives the class.

Drow rangers often take levels in kinslayer, and among the more savage groups, drow barbarians might similarly commit their lives to vengeance.

Few others have the burning desire to make such an unholy pact with the Queen of Spiders.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

CLASS FEATURES

Your hatred for elves manifests as a violent, bloodthirsty rage.

As you advance, you learn to overcome the obstacles that make it difficult to kill your sworn enemies.

You adapt to the sunlight and even shrug off enemy spells. Eventually you can alter your appearance so that you look just like your hated foes.

Mettle (Ex): Whenever you make a successful Fortitude or Will saving throw that would normally lessen (rather than negate) the effect of a spell or other magical ability, it has no effect on you at all.

Any spell that is normally negated by a successful saving throw is unaffected by this ability.

Rage (Ex): You can fly into a screaming blood frenzy.

See the barbarian rage class feature (PH 25).

You gain additional uses of this ability at 5th and 9th levels.

If you already have a rage or frenzy ability from another source, the uses per day stack with the rage granted by this class feature.

Surge of Hate (Ex): Whenever you begin a combat in which you see elves among your enemies, add your class level as a morale bonus on your initiative check.

Inured to Sunlight (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you no longer suffer from the detrimental effects of bright light, such as sunlight or the daylight spell.

Smite Elves (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can smite elves once per day.

This ability functions like the smite evil paladin class feature (PH 44), but the smite affects only elves or half-elves.

You gain additional uses of this ability at 5th and 8th levels.

Elf Bane (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, when using a weapon to attack an elf, you gain a +1 insight bonus on your attack rolls and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage.

Shameful Strike (Su): At 4th level, you can make a shameful strike as a full-round action.

You make a normal melee attack, but at a -4 penalty.

If you hit, the target becomes sickened for 1 round per class level.

Deny Elf Magic (Su): From 6th level on, whenever you are targeted by a spell or spell-like ability cast by another elf, you can make a level check (using your total character level) as an immediate action.

If the result is higher than your spell resistance, it replaces your spell resistance for the purpose of negating that spell.

Disguise Heritage (Su): Beginning at 7th level, you can alter your appearance to that of a surface elf, as if using the disguise self spell.

This affects your body but not your possessions.

It is not an illusory effect, but a minor physical alteration of your appearance within the limits described for the spell.

Fey Bane (Su): Starting at 8th level, when using a weapon to attack a creature of the fey type, you gain a +1 insight bonus on your attack rolls and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage.

Vengeful Strike (Su): At 10th level, whenever an elf deals damage to you, you gain a +4 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls on your first melee attack against that individual in the following round.

Lolth's Curse (Su): At 10th level, you can bestow a powerful curse on a single elf as a full-round action.

You must sacrifice two of your daily uses of smite or rage (or a combination of both) to use this ability.

When you use Lolth's curse, any single elf within 30 feet that you can see clearly must succeed on a Will save (DC 20 + your Cha modifier) or gain the light blindness special quality as well as assuming the appearance of a drow.

The target gains no other drow abilities.

The effects are permanent and can only be lifted by a remove curse spell or more powerful magic.

PLAYING A KINSLAYER

You hate them—all of them.

You place the blame for your people's fate squarely on the elves' shoulders.

They are weak, decadent, and effete, and their existence is an affront to you.

They are a scourge, an obstacle that prevents your people's return to the surface.

When you spoke the unspeakable vow to commit genocide, you set the course for your life.

Your mission is clear: The elves must be destroyed.

COMBAT

When confronted with your enemies, don't hold back.

You feed off the fires of vengeance that burn within you, and abandon yourself to the beast within.

Using your rage to boost your fighting attributes, you fling yourself at your foes with little regard for your own safety, interspersing your attacks with smites and shameful strikes.

Should an elf manage to injure you, you merely become more inflamed with hate.

With experience, you learn that not every elf you meet should die immediately.

You come to appreciate caution.

You can alter your features to match theirs, and so can slip in among them to more easily destroy them.

Armed with this knowledge, you can return and paint their forests with their blood, savoring their expressions when they feel firsthand the heavy weight of Lolth's curse.

ADVANCEMENT

The only thing you need to become a kinslayer is a deep and abiding hatred of elves.

This contempt could be directed at those elves on the surface, or possibly toward elves of your own kind.

Your loathing for your kin drives you to speak the forbidden words, making the unforgivable promise to the Spider Queen that you will not rest until every elf is dead.

As you gain levels, you develop terrifying abilities that augment your brutal tactics, but that also tantalize you with the ability to blend in with your enemies.

You do not see this power as an opportunity to understand them, but as a means to ruin them.

You should invest in feats that build upon the class features granted by your chosen path.

Feats such as Extend Rage and Extra Rage boost your rage abilities and maximize the carnage you create, while Chosen Foe (see page 47) and Intimidating Strike thematically reflect your dedication to your mission.

When purchasing equipment, spend your gold on weapons first, since they increase your damage potential.

Everything else is secondary.

RESOURCES

Although you prefer your own company, you're no fool.

The elves are smart, after all, and they protect themselves with a variety of defenses.

Although you're not part of an organization, you sometimes lead raids onto the surface to gather much-needed gear and resources to take back the drow cities.

As you advance, you might find yourself working with a cadre of skilled murderers and warriors who share your goals, and you come to rely on these companions rather than compromising your mission with standard allies.

KINSLAYERS IN THE WORLD

"Soulless butchers, every one.

These drow...they have no hearts, no compassion.

They are merciless killers who make no distinction between warriors and innocents.

Do we descend into their communities, killing all we find?

No.

Though, I admit, perhaps this has been our error."

—Elwyn, lone survivor of a kinslayer raid

The kinslayer gives life to the simmering hatred the drow have for their cousins.

They have but one purpose: extermination.

Most kinslayers live short, violent lives, remembered for their savagery and the bodies they left behind.

The bloody evidence of their crimes emphasizes their role as brutal villains.

ORGANIZATION

Kinslayers can appear anywhere in drow society, from lowly commoners and servants to zealous priestesses.

Those who are part of an organization work from within, shifting its purpose to serve their needs.

For instance, an entire drow house under the control of a particularly charismatic kinslayer matriarch might abandon the political intrigues of the city to funnel its resources, slaves, and soldiers into endless raids on the world above. Not content with the work of their minions, the kinslayers lead these expeditions themselves—spending their lives in an impossible pursuit, but spreading fear and death wherever they go.

NPC REACTIONS

Kinslayers disturb even other dark elves.

Their single-mindedness, their impassioned hatred that borders on obsession, is a sign of weakness to those not caught up in the kinslayer's fervor.

All drow want their surface kin to pay for the dark elves' misfortune, but death is too final, too complete a fate.

In a sense, it's almost merciful.

Drow would rather enslave surface elves—genocide produces no opportunity to gloat.

As such, drow are indifferent at best toward kinslayers, and some, especially those with a vested mission or plan for a particular surface elf community, are unfriendly.

Kinslayers sully the dark elves' already sullied reputations. Drow are reviled already, but those who reveal themselves as kinslayers are utterly despised.

Good surface-dwellers react with immediate hostility when faced with a kinslayer, and most cannot permit these characters to live.

KINSLAYER LORE

Characters who have ranks in Knowledge (history) can research kinslayers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: All drow are evil, but there are different degrees of wickedness.

Kinslayers are among the worst.

DC 15: Kinslayers kill elves.

That's what they do.

Why?

Revenge is probably the best guess, though for what, who knows?

History says that the drow earned their fate.

DC 20: What makes these villains so terrifying is their commitment to their purpose.

They can't be reasoned with.

They can shrug off spells, slice through defenses, and even bestow their own curse onto their victims.

Kinslayers are easy to locate and require little effort to track down.

These characters are drawn to elf settlements, and word of their exploits travels fast, usually spurred by the tendrils of smoke rising from the communities that fall prey to their attacks.

KINSLAYERS IN THE GAME

As long as there is strife between the drow and other elves, there will always be kinslayers.

The kinslayer is a vicious opponent, a premier villain who wages a violent campaign of epic proportions.

The sheer evil of his purpose makes him an outlaw that the player characters will readily hate.

If there's any reluctance to stand against him, a few decimated elf villages should make PCs realize the danger the kinslayer poses.

ADAPTATION

The easiest way to adapt this prestige class is to modify its thematic elements.

Instead of hunting elves, the kinslayer could hunt drow instead.

This would certainly be a viable choice for drow who recognize the corruption of their culture—but, since they are evil themselves, see no way other than utter annihilation to end their people's transgressions.

Kinslayer characters could also be surface elves who have succumbed to blind hatred, risking a precipitous plunge into corruption themselves.

You should modify the class features to reflect these changes, swapping fey bane for vermin bane and perhaps granting kinslayers spell resistance rather than the Lolth's curse ability.

DUNGEON MASTER'S GUIDE 3.0 (3.0)

ARCANE ARCHER

Master of the elven warbands, the arcane archer is a warrior skilled in using magic to supplement her combat prowess. Beyond the woods, arcane archers gain renown throughout entire kingdoms for their supernatural accuracy with a bow and their ability to imbue their arrows with magic.

In a group, they can strike fear into an entire enemy army. Fighters, rangers, paladins, and barbarians become arcane archers to add a little magic to their combat abilities.

Conversely, wizards and sorcerers may take this prestige class to add combat capabilities to their repertoire.

Monks, clerics, druids, rogues, and bards rarely become arcane archers.

NPC arcane archers often lead units of normal archers or form small, elite units formed entirely of arcane archers. These units are one of the prime reasons that the elves are so feared in battle.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane archer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Weapon Focus (any bow other than a crossbow),

Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASH SKILLS

The arcane archer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex).

Intuit Direction (Wis), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex),

Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness

Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the arcane archer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An arcane archer is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble.

Enchant Arrow: At 1st level, every nonmagical arrow an arcane archer nocks and lets fly becomes enchanted, gaining a +1 enhancement bonus.

Unlike magic weapons enchanted by normal means, the archer need not spend experience points or money to accomplish this task.

However, an archer's magic arrows only function for her. For every two levels of arcane archer the character advances past 1st level in the prestige class, the magic arrows she creates gain +1 greater potency (+1 at 1st level, +2 at 3rd level, +3 at 5th level, +4 at 7th level, and +5 at 9th level)

Imbue Arrow: At 2nd level, an arcane archer gains this spell-like ability, allowing her to place an area spell upon an arrow.

When the arrow is fired, the spell's area is centered upon where the arrow lands, even if the spell could normally be centered only on the caster.

This ability allows the archer to use the bow's range rather than the spell's range.

It takes a standard action to cast the spell and fire the arrow. The arrow must be fired in the round the spell is cast, or the spell is wasted, Seeker Arrow: At 4th level, the arcane archer can launch an arrow once per day at a target known to her within range, and the arrow travels to the target even around corners.

Only an unavoidable obstacle or the end of the arrow's range prevents the arrow's flight.

For example, if the target is within a windowless chamber with the door closed, the arrow cannot enter.

This ability negates cover and concealment modifiers, but otherwise the attack is rolled normally.

This is a spell-like ability.

(Shooting the arrow is part of the action).

Phase Arrow: At 6th level, the arcane archer can launch an arrow once per day at a target known to her within range, and the arrow travels to the target in a straight path, passing through any nonmagical barrier or wall in its way.

(A wall of force, a wall of fire, or the like stops the arrow).

This ability negates cover, concealment, and even armor modifiers, but otherwise the attack is rolled normally.

This is a spell-like ability.

(Shooting the arrow is part of the action).

Hail of Arrows: In lieu of her regular attacks, once per day the 8th-level arcane archer can fire an arrow at each and every target within range, to a maximum of one target for every arcane archer level she has earned.

Each attack uses the archer's primary attack bonus, and each enemy may only be targeted by a single arrow.

This is a spell-like ability.

Arrow of Death: At 10th level, the arcane archer can enchant an arrow of death that forces the target, if damaged by the arrow's attack, to make a Fortitude save (DC 20) or be slain immediately.

It takes one day to create an arrow of death, and the arrow only functions for the arcane archer who created it.

The enchantment lasts no longer than one year, and the archer can only have one such arrow in existence at a time.

ASSASSIN

The assassin is the master of dealing quick, lethal blows.

Assassins also excel at infiltration and disguise.

Assassins often function as spies, informants, killers for hire, or agents of vengeance.

Their training in anatomy, stealth, poison, and the dark arts allows them to carry out missions of death with shocking, terrifying precision.

Rogues, monks, and bardic assassins make for the classic skulking assassin in the shadows with a blade carrying certain death.

Fighters, ex-paladins, rangers, druids, and barbarians operate as warrior assassins, with as much ability to kill in combat as from the shadows.

Sorcerers, wizards, and clerics may be the most terrifying assassins of all, for with their spells they can infiltrate and slay with even greater impunity.

As NPCs, assassins work in guilds or secret societies found hidden in cities or based in remote fortresses in the wilderness.

Sometimes they serve more powerful evil characters singly or in a group.

Occasionally an assassin works alone, but only the most capable are willing to operate without any sort of support or backup.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an assassin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Move Silently: 8 ranks.

Hide: 8 ranks.

Disguise: 4 ranks.

Special: In addition, he must kill someone for no other reason than to join the assassins.

CLASS SKILLS

The assassin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int, exclusive skill), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Read Lips (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha, exclusive skill), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the assassin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An assassin's weapon training focuses on weapons suitable for stealth and sneak attacks.

Assassins are proficient with the crossbow (hand, light, or heavy), dagger (any type), dart, rapier, sap, shortbow (normal and composite), and short sword.

Assassins are proficient with light armor but not with shields.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble, and that carrying heavy gear imposes a check penalty on Swim checks.

Sneak Attack: If an assassin can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, any time the assassin's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the assassin's attack deals +1d6 points of damage. This extra damage increases by +1d6 points every other level (+2d6 at 3rd level, +3d6 at 5th level, and so on).

Should the assassin score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is 30 feet away or less.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, the assassin can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage.

He cannot use a weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual -4 penalty, because he must make optimal use of his weapon in order to execute the sneak attack.

An assassin can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the assassin must also be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The assassin cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If an assassin gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Death Attack: If the assassin studies his victim for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of possibly either paralyzing or killing the target (assassin's choice).

While studying the victim, the assassin can undertake other actions so long as his attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the assassin or recognize the assassin as an enemy.

If the victim of such an attack fails her Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + the assassin's class level + Intelligence modifier) against the kill effect, she dies.

If the saving throw fails against the paralysis effect, the victim's mind and body become enervated, rendering her completely helpless and unable to act for 1d6 rounds plus 1 round per level of the assassin.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once the assassin has completed the 3 rounds of study, he must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a death attack is attempted and fails (the victim makes her save) or if the assassin does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before he can attempt another death attack.

Poison Use: Assassins are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, an assassin gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, the assassin must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so an assassin with an Intelligence of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Assassin bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the assassin's Intelligence modifier (if any).

When the assassin gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the assassin gets only bonus spells.

An assassin without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The assassin's spell list appears below.

An assassin prepares and casts spells just as a wizard does. Saving Throw Bonus vs.

Poison: Assassins train with poisons of all types and slowly grow more and more resistant to their effects.

This is reflected by a natural saving throw bonus to all poisons gained at 2nd level that increases by +1 for every two levels the assassin gains (+1 at 2nd level, +2 at 4th level, +3 at 6th level, and so on).

Uncanny Dodge: Starting at 3rd level, the assassin gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

At 2nd level and above, he retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(He still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 5th level, the assassin can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies others the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the assassin.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the assassin can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

At 10th level, the assassin gains an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus to Reflex saves made to avoid traps, and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks by traps.

At 14th level: +2, 17th +3, 20th +4.

If the assassin has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant the ability and determine the character's uncanny dodge ability on that basis.

ASSASSIN SPELL LIST

Assassins choose their spells from the following list:

1st level—change self, detect poison, ghost sound, obscuring mist, spider climb.

2nd level—alter self, darkness, pass without trace, undetected alignment.

3rd level—deeper darkness, invisibility, misdirection, nondetection.

4th level—dimension door, freedom of movement, improved invisibility, poison.

BLACKGUARD

The blackguard epitomizes evil.

He is nothing short of a mortal fiend.

The quintessential black knight, this villain carries a reputation of the foulest sort that is very well deserved.

Consorting with demons and devils and serving dark deities, the blackguard is hated and feared by all.

Some people call these villains antipaladins due to their completely evil nature.

The blackguard has many options available to him—sending forth dark minions and servants to do his bidding, attacking with stealth and honorless guile, or straightforward smiting of the forces of good that stand in his way.

Fighters, ex-paladins, rangers, monks, druids, and barbarians make for indomitable combat-oriented blackguards, while rogues and bardic blackguards are likely to stress the subtle aspects of their abilities and spells.

Sorcerers, wizards, and clerics who become blackguards are sometimes called diabolists and favor dealing with fiends even more than other blackguards do.

As NPCs, blackguards usually lead legions of undead, evil outsiders, or other monsters to conquer their own doomed demesne or expand their existing territory.

Sometimes they serve more powerful evil characters as dark lieutenants.

On occasion they operate alone as hired killers or wandering purveyors of ill, destruction, and chaos.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a blackguard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Knowledge (religion): 2 ranks.

Hide: 5 ranks.

Feats: Cleave, Sunder.

Special: The blackguard must have made peaceful contact with an evil outsider who was summoned by him or someone else to have contracted the taint of true evil.

CLASS SKILLS

The blackguard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the blackguard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Blackguards are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble.

Detect Good: At will, the blackguard can detect good as a spell-like ability.

This ability duplicates the effects of the spell detect good.

Poison Use: Blackguards are skilled in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Dark Blessing: A blackguard applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus to all saving throws.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a blackguard gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the blackguard must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a blackguard with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Blackguard bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the blackguard's Wisdom modifier.

When the blackguard gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, he gets only bonus spells.

(A blackguard without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level).

The blackguard's spell list appears below.

A blackguard has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just like a cleric.

A blackguard prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though the blackguard cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Smite Good: Once a day, a blackguard of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite good with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

For example, a 9th-level blackguard armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+9 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses from high Strength or magical effects that normally apply. If the blackguard accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Smite good is a supernatural ability.

Aura of Despair: Beginning at 3rd level, the blackguard radiates a malign aura that causes enemies within 10 feet of him to suffer a -2 morale penalty on all saving throws.

Aura of despair is a supernatural ability.

Command Undead: When a blackguard reaches 3rd level, he gains the supernatural ability to command and rebuke undead (see the Player's Handbook, pages 139–140).

He commands undead as would a cleric of two levels lower.

Sneak Attack: If a blackguard can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, any time the blackguard's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), blackguard's attack deals +1d6 points of damage at 4th level and an additional +1d6 points for every three levels thereafter (+2d6 at 7th level, +3d6 at 10th level, and so on).

Should the blackguard score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is, not multiplied.

Ranged attacks only count as sneak attacks if the target is 30 feet away or less.

A blackguard cannot make a sneak attack to deal subdual damage.

The blackguard must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot. He cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

A blackguard can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies.

Undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is not subject to sneak attacks.

If a blackguard gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

BLACKGUARD SPELL LIST

Blackguards choose their spells from the following list:

1st level—cause fear, cure light wounds, doom, inflict light wounds, magic weapon, *summon monster I

2nd level—bull's strength, cure moderate wounds, darkness, death knell, inflict moderate wounds, shatter, *summon monster II

3rd level—contagion, cure serious wounds, deeper darkness, inflict serious wounds, protection from elements, *summon monster III

4th level—cure critical wounds, freedom of movement, inflict critical wounds, poison, *summon monster IV

* Evil creatures only.

FALLEN PALADINS

Blackguards who possess levels of paladin (that is to say, are now ex-paladins) gain extra abilities the more levels of paladin they possess.

Those who have tasted the light of goodness and justice and turned away make the foulest villains.

TABLE 2-12: FALLEN PALADIN BLACKGUARD ABILITIES

Paladin Levels	Extra Ability
1-2	Smite good once per day. (This is in addition to the ability granted to all blackguards at 2nd level, so that a fallen paladin blackguard can smite good a total of twice per day.)
3-4	Lay on hands . Once per day, the blackguard can cure himself of damage equal to his Charisma bonus times his level. The blackguard can only cure himself or his fiendish servant with this spell-like ability.
5-6	Sneak attack damage increased by +1d6.
7-8	Fiendish summoning. Once per day, the blackguard can use a summon monster I spell to call forth an evil creature. For this spell, the caster level is double the blackguard's class level.
9-10	Undead companion. In addition to the fiendish servant, the blackguard gains (at 5th level) a Medium-size skeleton or zombie as a companion. This companion cannot be turned or rebuked by another and gains all special bonuses as a fiendish servant when the blackguard gains levels.
11 +	Favored of the dark deities. Evil deities like nothing more than to see a pure heart corrupted, and thus a fallen paladin of this stature immediately gains a blackguard level for each level of paladin he trades in. For example, a character who has twelve levels of paladin can immediately become a 10th-level blackguard with all abilities if he chooses to lose ten levels of paladin. The character level of the character does not change. This, of course, is in every way a profitable trade for the evil character, since he has already lost most of the benefits he gained from having those paladin levels. However, with the loss of paladin levels, the character no longer gains extra abilities found on this table. Thus, a fallen paladin of 15th level could become a 10th-level blackguard/5th-level paladin with the first three extra abilities on this chart because of those five levels of paladin.

FIENDISH SERVANT

Upon or after reaching 5th level, a blackguard can call a fiendish bat, cat, dire rat, horse, pony, raven, or toad to serve him. (See the Monster Manual for these creatures' basic statistics.) This creature may be used as a guardian (such as a bat), a helper (such as a cat), or a mount (such as a horse). The blackguard's servant further gains HD and special abilities based on the blackguard's character level.

The blackguard may have only one fiendish servant at a time. Should the blackguard's servant die, he may call for another one after a year and a day. The new fiendish servant has all the accumulated abilities due a servant of the blackguard's current level.

TABLE 2-11: FIENDISH SERVANTS

Blackguard Character Level	Bonus HD	Natural Armor	Str Adj.	Int	Special
12 or less	+2 HD	+1	+1	6	Improved evasion, share spells, empathic link, share saving throws
13-15	+4 HD	+3	+2	7	Speak with blackguard
16-18	+6 HD	+5	+3	8	Blood bond
19-20	+8 HD	+7	+4	9	Spell resistance

Blackguard Character Level: The character level of the blackguard (his blackguard level plus his original class level).

Bonus Hit Dice: These are extra d8 Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier, as normal. Extra Hit Dice improve the servant's base attack and base save bonuses, as normal.

Natural Armor: This is a bonus to the servant's natural armor rating.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the servant's Strength score.

Int: The servant's Intelligence score. (The fiendish servant is smarter than normal animals of its kind.)

DWARVEN DEFENDER

The defender is a sponsored champion of a dwarven cause, a dwarven aristocrat, a dwarven deity, or the dwarven way of life.

As the name might imply, this character is a skilled combatant trained in the arts of defense.

A line of dwarven defenders is a far better defense than a 10-foot-thick wall of stone, and much more dangerous.

Most dwarven defenders are fighters, paladins, rangers, or clerics, although ex-barbarians, sorcerers, wizards, and druids can certainly all benefit from the defensive capabilities of this prestige class.

Rogues, bards, and monks usually depend too heavily on mobility to really use the abilities of the dwarven defender class to their fullest.

NPC dwarven defenders are usually soldiers in a dwarven citadel, segregated into their own units separate from regular warriors or fighters.

Occasionally, a lone, wandering dwarven defender can be encountered on some mission, although he usually guards his words so closely that it's difficult to learn what his quest actually entails.

Hit Die: dl2.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a defender, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Race: Dwarf.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Dodge, Endurance, Toughness.

Improved Evasion: If the servant is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage on a successful saving throw and only half damage on a failed saving throw. Improved evasion is an extraordinary ability.

Share Spells: At the blackguard's option, he may have any spell he casts on himself also affect his servant. The servant must be within 5 feet. If the spell has a duration other than instantaneous, the spell stops affecting the servant if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the servant again even if the servant returns to the blackguard before the duration expires. Additionally, the blackguard may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his servant (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself. The blackguard and the servant can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the servant's type (magical beast).

Empathic Link: The blackguard has an empathic link with the servant out to a distance of up to one mile. The blackguard cannot see through the servant's eyes, but they can communicate telepathically. Even intelligent servants see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible. This empathic link is a supernatural ability.

Because of the empathic link between the servant and the blackguard, the blackguard has the same connection to a place or an item that the servant does.

Share Saving Throws: The servant uses its own base save or the blackguard's, whichever is higher.

Speak with Blackguard: The blackguard and servant can communicate verbally as if they were using a common language. Other creatures do not understand the communication without magical help.

Blood Bond: The servant gains a +2 bonus to all attacks, checks, and saves if it witnesses the blackguard threatened or harmed. This bonus lasts as long as the threat is immediate and apparent.

Spell Resistance: The servant's spell resistance equals the blackguard's level + 5. To affect the servant with a spell, a spellcaster must make a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) at least equal to the servant's spell resistance.

CLASS SKILLS

The defender's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dwarven defender prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The dwarven defender is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble.

Defensive Stance: When he needs to, the defender can become a stalwart bastion of defense.

In this defensive stance, a defender gains phenomenal strength and durability, but he cannot move from the spot he is defending.

He gains the following benefits:

- +2 Strength
- +4 Constitution
- +2 resistance bonus on all saves
- +4 dodge bonus to AC

The increase in Constitution increases the defender's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the defensive stance when the Constitution score drops back 4 points.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While defending, a defender cannot use skills or abilities that would require him to shift his position, such as Move Silently or Jump.

A defensive stance lasts for 3 rounds, plus the character's (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

The defender may end the defense voluntarily prior to this limit.

At the end of the defense, the defender is winded and suffers a -2 penalty to Strength for the duration of that encounter.

The defender can only take his defensive stance a certain number of times per day as determined by his level (see Table 2-13: The Dwarven Defender).

Taking the stance takes no time itself, but the defender can only do so during his action.

(A defender can't, for example, take the stance when struck down by an arrow in order to get the extra hit points from the increased Constitution).

Defensive Awareness: Starting at 2nd level, the dwarven defender gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

At 2nd level and above, he retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(He still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 6th level, the dwarven defender can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the dwarven defender.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least 4 levels higher than the dwarven defender can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

At 10th level, the dwarven defender gains an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus to Reflex saves made to avoid traps.

Defensive awareness is cumulative with uncanny dodge. If the dwarven defender has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant these two abilities and determine the character's defensive awareness ability on that basis.

Damage Reduction: At 6th level, the dwarven defender gains the extraordinary ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 3 from the damage the dwarven defender takes each time he is dealt damage.

At 10th level, this damage reduction rises to 6.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0. (That is, the defender cannot actually gain hit points in this manner).

LOREMASTER

Loremasters are spellcasters who concentrate on knowledge, valuing lore and secrets over gold. They uncover secrets that they then use to better themselves mentally, physically, and spiritually. Characters without at least one level of wizard, sorcerer, cleric, or druid gain little benefit to becoming a loremaster. Paladins, rangers, and bards might gain some benefit, but overall, it would be minor.

Loremasters sometimes gather in secluded cabals but are more likely to be located as an order attached to a university, a library, or some other source of information. They're likely to earn extra money as sages and information brokers, pouring their wages in their own research. A loremaster might also adopt a position as a wise one in a community, or even as its leader, drawing upon her knowledge to help others.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a loremaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast seven different divinations, one of which must be 3rd level or higher.

Two Knowledge Skills (Any Type): 10 ranks in each.

Feats: Any three metamagic or item creation feats, plus Skill Focus (Knowledge [any individual Knowledge skill]).

CLASS SKILLS

The loremaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Decipher Script (Int, exclusive skill), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animals (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Speak Language, Spellcraft (Int), and Use Magic Device (Cha, exclusive skill).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the loremaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Loremasters gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble. Spellcasting: A loremaster continues training in magic as well as her field of research.

Thus, when a new loremaster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a Spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of loremaster to the level of some other Spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

For example, if Gremda, an 8th-level wizard, gains a level in loremaster, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 9th level in wizard, but uses the other loremaster aspects of level progression such as attack bonus and save bonus.

If she next gains a level of wizard, making her a 9th-level wizard/1st-level loremaster, she gains and casts spells as if she had risen to 10th-level wizard.

If a character had more than one Spellcasting class before she became a loremaster, she must decide to which class she adds each level of loremaster for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Secret: In their studies, loremasters stumble upon all sorts of applicable knowledge and secrets.

At 1st level and every two levels afterward (3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th levels), the loremaster chooses one secret from Table 2-15: Loremaster Secrets.

Her level plus Intelligence modifier determines which secrets she can choose.

She can't choose the same secret twice.

Level +	Int Modifier	Secret	Effect
1		Instant mastery	4 ranks of a skill in which the character has no ranks
2		Secret health	+3 hit points
3		Secrets of inner strength	+1 bonus to Will saves
4		The lore of true stamina	+1 bonus to Fortitude saves
5		Secret knowledge of avoidance	+1 bonus to Reflex saves
6		Weapon trick	+1 bonus to attack rolls
7		Dodge trick	+1 dodge bonus to AC
8		Applicable knowledge	Any one feat
9		Newfound arcana	1 bonus 1st-level spell*
10		More newfound arcana	1 bonus 2nd-level spell*

*As if gained through having a high ability score.

Lore: Loremasters gather knowledge.

At 2nd level, they gain the ability to know legends or information regarding various topics, just like a bard can with bardic knowledge.

The loremaster adds her level and her Intelligence modifier to the Knowledge check.

See page 29 in the Player's Handbook for more information on bardic knowledge.

Bonus Languages: Loremasters, in their laborious studies, learn new languages in order to access more knowledge.

The loremaster can choose any new language at 4th and 8th level.

Greater Lore: At 6th level, a loremaster gains the ability to identify magic items, as the spell, as an extraordinary ability. She may do this once per item examined.

True Lore: At 10th level, once per day a loremaster can use her knowledge to gain the affects of a legend lore spell or an analyze dweomer spell.

True lore is an extraordinary ability.

SHADOWDANCER

Operating in the border between light and darkness, shadowdancers are nimble artists of deception.

They are mysterious and unknown, never completely trusted but always inducing wonder when met.

Rogues, bards, and monks make excellent shadowdancers, but fighters, barbarians, rangers, and paladins also find shadowdancer abilities allow them to strike at their opponents with surprise and skill.

Wizard, sorcerer, cleric, and druid shadowdancers employ the defensive capabilities inherent in the prestige class to allow them to cast their spells from safety and move away quickly.

Despite their link with shadows and trickery, shadowdancers are as often good as evil.

They may use their incredible abilities as they wish.

Shadowdancers often work in troupes, never staying in one place too long.

Some use their abilities to entertain.

Others operate as thieves, using their abilities to infiltrate past defenses and dupe others.

All shadowdancer troupes maintain an aura of mystery among the populace, who never know whether to think well or ill of them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadowdancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Move Silently: 8 ranks.

Hide: 10 ranks.

Perform: 5 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Combat Reflexes.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadowdancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Decipher Script (Int, exclusive skill), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the shadowdancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadowdancers are proficient with the club, crossbow (hand, light, or heavy), dagger (any type), dart, mace, morningstar, quarterstaff, rapier, sap, shortbow (normal and composite), and short sword.

Shadowdancers are proficient with light armor but not with shields.

Note that armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble.

Hide in Plain Sight: Shadowdancers can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

As long as they are within 10 feet of some sort of shadow, shadowdancers can hide themselves from view in the open without anything to actually hide behind.

They cannot, however, hide in their own shadows.

Hide in plain sight is a supernatural ability.

Evasion: At 2nd level, a shadowdancer gains evasion.

If exposed to any effect that normally allows her to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage (such as a fireball), she takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

The evasion ability can only be used if the shadowdancer is wearing light armor or no armor.

Darkvision: At 2nd level, a shadowdancer can see in the dark as though she were permanently under the affect of a darkvision spell.

This is a supernatural ability.

Uncanny Dodge: Starting at 3rd level, the shadowdancer gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so.

At 2nd level and above, she retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(She still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 5th level, the shadowdancer can no longer be flanked; she can react to opponents on opposite sides of her as easily as she can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies others the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the shadowdancer.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least 4 levels higher than the shadowdancer can flank her (and thus sneak attack her).

At 10th level, the shadowdancer gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus to Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks from traps.

At 14th +2, 17th +3, 20th +4.

If the shadowdancer has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant the ability and determine the character's uncanny dodge ability on that basis.

Shadow Illusion: When a shadowdancer reaches 3rd level, she can create visual illusions from surrounding shadows. This spell-like ability is identical to the arcane spell silent image and may be employed once per day.

Summon Shadow: At 3rd level, a shadowdancer can summon a shadow, an undead shade.

(See the Monster Manual for the shadow's statistics).

Unlike a normal shadow, this shadow's alignment matches that of the shadowdancer.

The summoned shadow cannot be turned, rebuked, or commanded by any third party.

This shadow serves as a companion to the shadowdancer and can communicate intelligibly with the shadowdancer. Every third level gained by the shadowdancer allows her to summon an additional shadow and adds +2 HD (and the requisite base attack and base save bonus increases) to all her shadow companions.

For example, a 9th-level shadowdancer can have three shadow companions, each with 6 HD.

If a shadow companion is destroyed, or the shadowdancer chooses to dismiss it, the shadowdancer must attempt a Fortitude saving throw (DC 15).

If the saving throw fails, the shadowdancer loses 200 experience points per shadowdancer level.

A successful saving throw reduces the loss by half, to 100 XP per prestige class level.

The shadowdancer's experience can never go below 0 as the result of a shadow's dismissal or destruction.

A destroyed or dismissed shadow companion cannot be replaced for a year and a day.

Shadow Jump: At 4th level, the shadow dancer gains the ability to travel between shadows as if by means of a dimension door spell.

The limitation is that the magical transport must begin and end in an area with at least some shadow.

The shadowdancer can jump up to a total of 20 feet each day in this way, although this may be a single jump of 20 feet or two jumps of 10 feet each.

Every two levels thereafter, the distance a shadowdancer can jump each day doubles (40 feet at 6th level, 80 feet at 8th level, and 160 feet at 10th level).

This amount can be split up among many jumps, but each jump, no matter how small, counts as a 10-foot increment. (For instance, a 6th-level shadowdancer who jumps 32 feet cannot jump again until the next day).

Defensive Roll: Starting at 5th level, the shadowdancer can roll with a potentially lethal blow to take less damage from it.

Once per day, when a shadowdancer would be reduced to 0 hit points or less by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow, not a spell or special ability), the shadowdancer can attempt to roll with the damage.

She makes a Reflex saving throw (DC = damage dealt) and, if successful, takes only half damage from the blow.

She must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to execute her defensive roll.

If she is in a situation that would deny her any Dexterity bonus to AC, she can't attempt the defensive roll.

Slippery Mind: This extraordinary ability, gained at 7th level, represents the shadowdancer's ability to wriggle free from magical effects that would otherwise control or compel her.

If the shadowdancer is affected by an enchantment and fails her saving throw, 1 round later she can attempt her saving throw again.

She only gets this one extra chance to succeed at her saving throw.

If it fails as well, the spell's effects proceed normally.

Improved Evasion: This extraordinary ability, gained at 10th level, works like evasion (see above).

The shadowdancer takes no damage at all on successful saving throws against attacks that allow a Reflex saving throw for half damage (breath weapon, fireball, and so on). What's more, she takes only half damage even if she fails her saving throw, since the shadowdancer's reflexes allow her to get out of harm's way with incredible speed.

ARCANE ARCHER

Master of the elven warbands, the arcane archer is a warrior skilled in using magic to supplement her combat prowess.

Beyond the woods, arcane archers gain renown throughout entire kingdoms for their supernatural accuracy with a bow and their ability to imbue their arrows with magic.

In a group, they can strike fear into an entire enemy army.

Fighters, rangers, paladins, and barbarians become arcane archers to add a little magic to their combat abilities.

Conversely, wizards and sorcerers may take this prestige class to add combat capabilities to their repertoire.

Monks, clerics, druids, rogues, and bards rarely become arcane archers.

NPC arcane archers often lead units of normal archers or form small, elite units formed entirely of arcane archers.

These units are one of the prime reasons that the elves are so feared in battle.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane archer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot, Weapon Focus (longbow or shortbow).

Spells: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The arcane archer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex).

Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the arcane archer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An arcane archer is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

Enhance Arrow (Su): At 1st level, every nonmagical arrow an arcane archer nocks and lets fly becomes magical, gaining a +1 enhancement bonus.

Unlike magic weapons created by normal means, the archer need not spend experience points or gold pieces to accomplish this task.

However, an archer's magic arrows only function for her. For every two levels the character advances past 1st level in the prestige class, the magic arrows she creates gain +1 greater potency (+1 at 1st level, +2 at 3rd level, +3 at 5th level, +4 at 7th level, and +5 at 9th level).

Imbue Arrow (Sp): At 2nd level, an arcane archer gains the ability to place an area spell upon an arrow.

When the arrow is fired, the spell's area is centered on where the arrow lands, even if the spell could normally be centered only on the caster.

This ability allows the archer to use the bow's range rather than the spell's range.

It takes a standard action to cast the spell and fire the arrow. The arrow must be fired in the round the spell is cast, or the spell is wasted.

Seeker Arrow (Sp): At 4th level, an arcane archer can launch an arrow once per day at a target known to her within range, and the arrow travels to the target, even around corners.

Only an unavoidable obstacle or the limit of the arrow's range prevents the arrow's flight.

For example, if the target is within a windowless chamber with the door closed, the arrow cannot enter.

This ability negates cover and concealment modifiers, but otherwise the attack is rolled normally.

Using this ability is a standard action (and shooting the arrow is part of the action).

Phase Arrow (Sp): At 6th level, an arcane archer can launch an arrow once per day at a target known to her within range, and the arrow travels to the target in a straight path, passing through any nonmagical barrier or wall in its way. (A wall of force, a wall of fire, or the like stops the arrow).

This ability negates cover, concealment, and even armor modifiers, but otherwise the attack is rolled normally. Using this ability is a standard action (and shooting the arrow is part of the action).

Hail of Arrows (Sp): In lieu of her regular attacks, once per day an arcane archer of 8th level or higher can fire an arrow at each and every target within range, to a maximum of one target for every arcane archer level she has earned.

Each attack uses the archer's primary attack bonus, and each enemy may only be targeted by a single arrow.

Arrow of Death (Sp): At 10th level, an arcane archer can create an arrow of death that forces the target, if damaged by the arrow's attack, to make a DC 20 Fortitude save or be slain immediately.

It takes one day to make an arrow of death, and the arrow only functions for the arcane archer who created it.

The arrow of death lasts no longer than one year, and the archer can only have one such arrow in existence at a time.

ARCANER TRICKSTER

Arcane tricksters combine their knowledge of spells with a taste for intrigue, larceny, or just plain mischief.

They are among the most adaptable of adventurers.

Arcane spellcasting and the sneak attack ability are needed to qualify for this class, making it a natural choice for multiclass wizard/rogues or sorcerer/rogues.

Assassins occasionally opt for this class, but usually only if they already have wizard or sorcerer levels.

Arcane tricksters tend to use a seat-of-the-pants approach to adventuring, loading up on spells that improve their stealth and mobility.

An NPC arcane trickster is just the sort of person that might bump into you in a crowded tavern.

(Check your pockets).

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane trickster, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Decipher Script 7 ranks, Disable Device 7 ranks, Escape Artist 7 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast mage hand and at least one arcane spell of 3rd level or higher.

Special: Sneak attack +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

The arcane trickster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the arcane trickster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arcane tricksters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new arcane trickster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an arcane trickster, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Ranged Legerdemain: Using his unique talents, an arcane trickster can perform one of the following class skills at a range of 30 feet: Disable Device, Open Lock, or Sleight of Hand.

Working at a distance increases the normal skill check DC by 5, and an arcane trickster cannot take 10 on this check. Any object to be manipulated must weigh 5 pounds or less. An arcane trickster can use ranged legerdemain once per day initially, twice per day upon attaining 5th level, and three times per day at 9th level or higher.

He can make only one ranged legerdemain skill check each day, and only if he has at least 1 rank in the skill being used.

Sneak Attack: This is exactly like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by +1d6 every other level (2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th).

If an arcane trickster gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

Impromptu Sneak Attack: Beginning at 3rd level, once per day an arcane trickster can declare one melee or ranged attack he makes to be a sneak attack (the target can be no more than 30 feet distant if the impromptu sneak attack is a ranged attack).

The target of an impromptu sneak attack loses any Dexterity bonus to AC, but only against that attack.

The power can be used against any target, but creatures that are not subject to critical hits take no extra damage (though they still lose any Dexterity bonus to AC against the attack).

At 7th level, an arcane trickster can use this ability twice per day.

TABLE 6-2: THE ARCANIC TRICKSTER

ARCHMAGE

The highest art is magic—often referred to as the Art.

Its most advanced practitioners are frequently archmages, characters who bend spells in ways unavailable to other spellcasters.

An archmage gains strange powers and the ability to alter spells in remarkable ways, but must sacrifice some of her spell capability in order to master these arcane secrets.

Most archmages are purely wizards or sorcerers.

They rarely multiclass, choosing instead to concentrate on perfecting their arcane skills.

NPC archmages in urban areas often hold positions of power in magic-focused guilds.

Their pursuit of arcane excellence and their familiarity with high arcana place them above most of their peers.

Some archmages choose a more solitary path, often eschewing society to study in quietude.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an archmage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 15 ranks, Spellcraft 15 ranks.

Feats: Skill Focus (Spellcraft), Spell Focus in two schools of magic.

Spells: Ability to cast 7th-level arcane spells, knowledge of 5th-level or higher spells from at least five schools.

CLASS SKILLS

The archmage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (alchemy) (Int), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the archmage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Archmages gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new archmage level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class in which he could cast 7th-level spells before he added the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class in which he could cast 7th-level spells before he became an archmage, he must decide to which class he adds each level of archmage for the purpose of determining spells per day.

High Arcana: An archmage learns secret lore unknown to lesser wizards and sorcerers.

She gains the opportunity to select a special ability from among those described below by permanently eliminating one existing spell slot (she cannot eliminate a spell slot of higher level than the highest-level spell she can cast).

Each special ability has a minimum required spell slot level, as specified in its description.

For example, a 15th-level wizard normally can cast two 7th-level spells per day (bonus spells for specialization or high Intelligence can increase this number).

A 13th-level wizard/2nd-level archmage who chooses the arcane reach ability forfeits one 7th-level spell slot, and so can only cast one 7th-level spell per day, not counting bonus spells.

An archmage may choose to eliminate a spell slot of a higher level than that required to gain a type of high arcana.

Arcane Fire (Su): The archmage gains the ability to change arcane spell energy into arcane fire, manifesting it as a bolt of raw magical energy.

The bolt is a ranged touch attack with long range (400 feet + 40 feet/level of archmage) that deals 1d6 points of damage per class level of the archmage plus 1d6 points of damage per level of the spell used to create the effect.

For instance, a 5th-level archmage who channels a 7th-level spell into arcane fire deals 12d6 points of damage to the target if it hits.

This ability costs one 9th-level spell slot.

Arcane Reach (Su): The archmage can use spells with a range of touch on a target up to 30 feet away.

The archmage must make a ranged touch attack.

Arcane reach can be selected a second time as a special ability, in which case the range increases to 60 feet.

This ability costs one 7th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Counterspelling: When the archmage counterspells a spell, it is turned back upon the caster as if it were fully affected by a spell turning spell.

If the spell cannot be affected by spell turning (for example, if it is a spell that affects an area), then it is merely counterspelled.

This ability costs one 7th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Elements: The archmage can alter an arcane spell when cast so that it utilizes a different element from the one it normally uses.

For example, an archmage could cast a fireball that deals sonic damage instead of fire damage.

This ability can only alter a spell with the acid, cold, fire, electricity, or sonic descriptor.

The spell's casting time is unaffected.

The caster decides whether to alter the spell's energy type and chooses the new energy type when he begins casting.

This ability costs one 8th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Shaping: The archmage can alter area and effect spells that use one of the following shapes: burst, cone, cylinder, emanation, or spread.

The alteration consists of creating spaces within the spell's area or effect that are not subject to the spell.

The minimum dimension for these spaces is a 5-foot cube.

For example, an archmage could cast a fireball and leave a hole where his ally stands, preventing any fire damage.

Furthermore, any shapeable spells have a minimum dimension of 5 feet instead of 10 feet.

This ability costs one 6th-level spell slot.

Spell Power: This ability increases the archmage's effective caster level by +1 (for purposes of determining level-dependent spell variables such as damage dice or range, and caster level checks only).

This ability costs one 5th-level spell slot.

Spell-Like Ability: An archmage who selects this type of high arcana can use one of her arcane spell slots (other than a slot expended to learn this or any other type of high arcana) to permanently prepare one of her arcane spells as a spell-like ability that can be used twice per day.

The archmage does not use any components when casting the spell, although a spell that costs XP to cast still does so and a spell with a costly material component instead costs her 10 times that amount in XP.

This ability costs one 5th-level spell slot.

The spell-like ability normally uses a spell slot of the spell's level, although the archmage can choose to make a spell modified by a metamagic feat into a spell-like ability at the appropriate spell level.

For example, an archmage can make lightning bolt into a spell-like ability by using a 3rd-level spell slot to do so, or into a maximized lightning bolt by using a 6th-level spell slot.

The archmage may use an available higher-level spell slot in order to use the spell-like ability more often.

Using a slot three levels higher than the chosen spell allows her to use the spell-like ability four times per day, and a slot six levels higher lets her use it six times per day.

For example, Hexark, a 15th-level wizard/2nd-level archmage, is a pyromaniac and never wants to be denied the ability to cast fireball, so she permanently uses a 9th-level spell slot to get fireball as a spell-like ability usable six times per day.

She forfeits a 5th-level spell slot to master the ability.

If spell-like ability is selected more than one time as a high arcana choice, this ability can apply to the same spell chosen the first time (increasing the number of times per day it can be used) or to a different spell.

ASSASSIN

The assassin is the master of dealing quick, lethal blows. Assassins also excel at infiltration and disguise.

Assassins often function as spies, informants, killers for hire, or agents of vengeance.

Their training in anatomy, stealth, poison, and the dark arts allows them to carry out missions of death with shocking, terrifying precision.

Most rogues, monks, and bards who choose this class become examples of the classic assassin skulking in the shadows with a blade carrying certain death.

Fighters, ex-paladins, rangers, druids, and barbarians operate as warrior assassins, with as much ability to kill in combat as from the shadows.

Sorcerers, wizards, and clerics may be the most terrifying assassins of all, for with their spells they can infiltrate and slay with even greater impunity.

As NPCs, assassins work in guilds or secret societies found hidden in cities or based in remote fortresses in the wilderness.

Sometimes they serve more powerful evil characters singly or in a group.

Occasionally an assassin works alone, but only the most capable are willing to operate without any sort of support or backup.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an assassin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Disguise 4 ranks, Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks.

Special: The character must kill someone for no other reason than to join the assassins.

CLASS SKILLS

The assassin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the assassin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An assassin's weapon training focuses on weapons suitable for stealth and sneak attacks.

Assassins are proficient with the crossbow (hand, light, or heavy), dagger (any type), dart, rapier, sap, shortbow (normal and composite), and short sword.

Assassins are proficient with light armor but not with shields.

Sneak Attack: This is exactly like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by +1d6 every other level (2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th).

If an assassin gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

Death Attack: If an assassin studies his victim for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of possibly either paralyzing or killing the target (assassin's choice).

While studying the victim, the assassin can undertake other actions so long as his attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the assassin or recognize the assassin as an enemy.

If the victim of such an attack fails a Fortitude save (DC 10 + the assassin's class level + the assassin's Int modifier) against the kill effect, she dies.

If the saving throw fails against the paralysis effect, the victim's mind and body become enervated, rendering her helpless and unable to act for 1d6 rounds plus 1 round per level of the assassin.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once the assassin has completed the 3 rounds of study, he must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a death attack is attempted and fails (the victim makes her save) or if the assassin does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before he can attempt another death attack.

Poison Use: Assassins are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, an assassin gains the ability to cast a number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, an assassin must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so an assassin with an Intelligence of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Assassin bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the assassin's Intelligence bonus (if any).

When the assassin gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level assassin), he gains only the bonus spells he would be entitled to based on his Intelligence score for that spell level.

The assassin's spell list appears below.

An assassin casts spells just as a bard does.

Upon reaching 6th level, at every even-numbered level after that (8th and 10th), an assassin can choose to learn a new spell in place of one he already knows.

The new spell's level must be the same as that of the spell being exchanged, and it must be at least two levels lower than the highest-level assassin spell the assassin can cast.

For instance, upon reaching 6th level, an assassin could trade in a single 1st-level spell (two spell levels below the highest-level sorcerer spell he can cast, which is 3rd) for a different 1st-level spell.

At 8th and 10th levels, he could trade in a single 1st-level or 2nd-level spell (since he now can cast 4th-level assassin spells) for a different spell of the same level.

An assassin may swap only a single spell at any given level, and must choose whether or not to swap the spell at the same time that he gains new spells known for that level.

TABLE 6-5: ASSASSIN SPELLS KNOWN

Level	Spells Known
	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
1st	2 ¹	—	—	—
2nd	3	—	—	—
3rd	3	2 ¹	—	—
4th	4	3	—	—
5th	4	3	2 ¹	—
6th	4	4	3	—
7th	4	4	3	2 ¹

¹ Provided the assassin has sufficient Intelligence to have a bonus spell of this level.

Save Bonus against Poison: Assassins train with poisons of all types and slowly grow more and more resistant to their effects.

This is reflected by a natural saving throw bonus to all poisons gained at 2nd level that increases by +1 for every two additional levels the assassin gains (+2 at 4th level, +3 at 6th level, and so on).

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, an assassin gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. (He still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

If a character gains uncanny dodge from a second class (such as a barbarian/rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below).

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 5th level, an assassin can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the assassin.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the assassin can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

If a character gains uncanny dodge (see above) from a second class (such as a barbarian/rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge, and the levels from those classes stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the character.

Hide in Plain Sight (Su): At 8th level, an assassin can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

As long as he is within 10 feet of some sort of shadow, an assassin can hide himself from view in the open without having anything to actually hide behind.

He cannot, however, hide in his own shadow.

ASSASSIN SPELL LIST

Assassins choose their spells from the following list:

1st Level: disguise self, detect poison, feather fall, ghost sound, jump, obscuring mist, sleep, true strike.

2nd Level: alter self, cat's grace, darkness, fox's cunning, illusory script, invisibility, pass without trace, spider climb, undetectable alignment.

3rd Level: deep slumber, deeper darkness, false life, magic circle against good, misdirection, nondetection.

4th Level: clairaudience/clairvoyance, dimension door, freedom of movement, glibness, greater invisibility, locate creature, modify memory, poison.

BLACKGUARD

The blackguard epitomizes evil.

He is nothing short of a mortal fiend.

The quintessential black knight, this villain carries a reputation of the foulest sort that is very well deserved. Consorting with demons and devils and serving dark deities, the blackguard is hated and feared by all. Some people call these villains antipaladins due to their completely evil nature.

The blackguard has many options available to him—sending forth dark minions and servants to do his bidding, attacking with stealth and honorless guile, or straightforward smiting of the forces of good that stand in his way.

Fighters, ex-paladins, rangers, monks, druids, and barbarians make for indomitable combat-oriented blackguards, while rogues and bards who become blackguards are likely to stress the subtle aspects of their abilities and spells.

Sorcerers, wizards, and clerics who become blackguards are sometimes called diabolists and favor dealing with fiends even more than other blackguards do.

As NPCs, blackguards usually lead legions of undead, evil outsiders, or other monsters to conquer their own doomed demesne or expand their existing territory.

Sometimes they serve more powerful evil characters as dark lieutenants.

On occasion they operate alone as hired killers or wandering purveyors of ill, destruction, and chaos.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a blackguard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks.

Feats: Cleave, Improved Sunder, Power Attack.

Special: The character must have made peaceful contact with an evil outsider who was summoned by him or someone else.

CLASS SKILLS

The blackguard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy

(Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the blackguard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Blackguards are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Aura of Evil (Ex): The power of a blackguard's aura of evil (see the detect evil spell) is equal to his class level plus his cleric level, if any.

Detect Good (Sp): At will, a blackguard can use detect good as a spell-like ability, duplicating the effect of the detect good spell.

Poison Use: Blackguards are skilled in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Dark Blessing (Su): A blackguard applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

Spells: A blackguard has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a blackguard spell, a blackguard must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a blackguard with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Blackguard bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the blackguard's Wisdom modifier.

When the blackguard gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level blackguard), he gains only the bonus spells he would be entitled to based on his Wisdom score for that spell level. The blackguard's spell list appears below.

A blackguard has access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare, just as a cleric.

A blackguard prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does (though a blackguard cannot spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells).

Smite Good (Su): Once a day, a blackguard of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite good with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level. For example, a 9th-level blackguard armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+9 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses from high Strength or magical effects that normally apply.

If a blackguard accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

At 5th level, and again at 10th level, a blackguard may smite good one additional time per day.

Aura of Despair (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, the blackguard radiates a malign aura that causes enemies within 10 feet of him to take a -2 penalty on all saving throws.

Command Undead (Su): When a blackguard reaches 3rd level, he gains the supernatural ability to command and rebuke undead (see the Player's Handbook, page 159).

He commands undead as would a cleric of two levels lower.

Sneak Attack: This ability, gained at 4th level, is like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage increases by +1d6 every third level beyond 4th (7th and 10th).

If a blackguard gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

BLACKGUARD SPELL LIST

Blackguards choose their spells from the following list:

1st Level: cause fear, corrupt weapon, cure light wounds, doom, inflict light wounds, magic weapon, summon monster I.*

2nd Level: bull's strength, cure moderate wounds, darkness, death knell, eagle's splendor, inflict moderate wounds, shatter, summon monster II.*

3rd Level: contagion, cure serious wounds, deeper darkness, inflict serious wounds, protection from elements, summon monster III.*

4th Level: cure critical wounds, freedom of movement, inflict critical wounds, poison, summon monster IV.*

* Evil creatures only.

CORRUPT WEAPON

Blackguards have access to a special spell, corrupt weapon, which is the opposing counterpart of the paladin spell bless weapon (see page 205 of the Player's Handbook).

Instead of improving a weapon's effectiveness against evil foes (as the paladin spell does), corrupt weapon makes a weapon more effective against good foes.

FALLEN PALADINS

Blackguards who have levels in the paladin class (that is to say, are now ex-paladins) gain extra abilities the more levels of paladin they have.

Those who have tasted the light of goodness and justice and turned away make the foulest villains.

A fallen paladin who becomes a blackguard gains all of the following abilities that apply, according to the number of paladin levels the character has.

1-2: Smite good 1/day.

(This is in addition to the ability granted to all blackguards at 2nd level, so that a fallen paladin blackguard can smite good a total of twice per day).

3-4: Lay on hands.

Once per day, the blackguard can use this supernatural ability to cure himself or his fiendish servant of damage equal to his Charisma bonus \times his level.

5-6: Sneak attack damage increased by +1d6.

Smite good 2/day.

7-8: Fiendish summoning.

Once per day, the blackguard can use a summon monster I spell to call forth an evil creature.

For this spell, the caster level is double the blackguard's class level.

9-10: Undead companion.

In addition to the fiendish servant, the blackguard gains (at 5th level) a Medium-size skeleton or zombie as a companion.

This companion cannot be turned or rebuked and gains all special bonuses as a fiendish servant when the blackguard gains levels.

Smite good 3/day.

11 or more: Favored of the dark deities.

Evil deities like nothing more than to see a pure heart corrupted, and thus a fallen paladin of this stature immediately gains a blackguard level for each level of paladin he trades in.

For example, a character who has twelve levels of paladin can immediately become a 10th-level blackguard with all abilities if he chooses to lose ten levels of paladin.

The character level of the character does not change.

This, of course, is in every way a profitable trade for the evil character, since he has already lost most of the benefits he gained from having those paladin levels.

However, with the loss of paladin levels, the character no longer gains as many extra abilities for being a fallen paladin.

Thus, a fallen 15th-level paladin could become a 10th-level blackguard/5th-level paladin and gain the first three extra abilities on this chart because of the character's remaining five levels of paladin.

Smite good 4/day.

THE BLACKGUARD'S FIENDISH SERVANT

Upon or after reaching 5th level, a blackguard can call a fiendish bat, cat, dire rat, horse, pony, raven, or toad to serve him.

(See the Monster Manual for these creatures' basic statistics).

This creature may be used as a guardian (such as a bat), a helper (such as a cat), or a mount (such as a horse).

The blackguard's servant further gains HD and special abilities based on the blackguard's character level (see the table).

A blackguard may have only one fiendish servant at a time. Should the blackguard's servant die, he may call for another one after a year and a day.

The new fiendish servant has all the accumulated abilities due a servant of the blackguard's current level.

The abilities mentioned in the "Special" column of the accompanying table are described below.

Character Level	Bonus HD	Natural Armor Adj.	Str Adj.	Int	Special
12th or lower	+2	+1	+1	6	Empathic link, improved evasion, share saving throws, share spells
13th–15th	+4	+3	+2	7	Speak with blackguard
16th–18th	+6	+5	+3	8	Blood bond
19th–20th	+8	+7	+4	9	Spell resistance

Character Level: The character level of the blackguard (his blackguard level plus his original class level).

Bonus HD: Extra eight-sided (d8) Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier, as normal. Extra Hit Dice improve the servant's base attack and base save bonuses, as normal.

Natural Armor Adj.: This is an improvement to the servant's existing natural armor bonus.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the servant's Strength score.

Int: The servant's Intelligence score. (A fiendish servant is smarter than normal animals of its kind.)

TABLE 6–6: THE BLACKGUARD

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spells per Day
						1st	2nd	3rd	4th
1st	+1	+2	0	0	Aura of evil, detect good, poison use	0	—	—	—
2nd	+2	+3	0	0	Dark blessing, smite good 1/day	1	—	—	—
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Command undead, aura of despair	1	0	—	—
4th	+4	+4	+1	+1	Sneak attack +1d6	1	1	—	—
5th	+5	+4	+1	+1	Fiendish servant, smite good 2/day	1	1	0	—
6th	+6	+5	+2	+2		1	1	1	—
7th	+7	+5	+2	+2	Sneak attack +2d6	2	1	1	0
8th	+8	+6	+2	+2		2	1	1	1
9th	+9	+6	+3	+3		2	2	1	1
10th	+10	+7	+3	+3	Sneak attack +3d6, smite good 3/day	2	2	2	1

Empathic Link (Su): The blackguard has an empathic link with his servant out to a distance of up to 1 mile.

The blackguard cannot see through the servant's eyes, but they can communicate empathically.

Because of the limited nature of the link, only general emotional content (such as fear, hunger, happiness, curiosity) can be communicated.

Note that the low Intelligence of a low-level blackguard's fiendish servant limits what the creature is able to communicate or understand, and even intelligent servants see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Because of the empathic link between the servant and the blackguard, the blackguard has the same connection to a place or an item that the servant does.

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the servant is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage on a successful saving throw and only half damage on a failed saving throw.

Improved evasion is an extraordinary ability.

Share Saving Throws: For each of its saving throws, the servant uses either its own base save bonus or the blackguard's, whichever is higher.

The servant applies its own ability modifiers to saves, and it doesn't share any other bonuses on saves that the blackguard might have (such as from magic items or feats).

Share Spells: At the blackguard's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts on himself also affect his servant.

The servant must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit.

If the spell has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the servant if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the servant again even if the servant returns to the blackguard before the duration expires.

Additionally, the blackguard may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his servant (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself.

A blackguard and his servant can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the servant's type (magical beast).

Speak with Blackguard (Ex): If the blackguard's character level is 13th or higher, the blackguard and servant can communicate verbally as if they were using a common language.

Other creatures do not understand the communication without magical help.

Blood Bond (Ex): If the blackguard's character level is 16th or higher, the servant gains a +2 bonus on all attack rolls, checks, and saves if it witnesses the blackguard being threatened or harmed.

This bonus lasts as long as the threat is immediate and apparent.

Spell Resistance (Ex): If the blackguard's character level is 19th or higher, the servant gains spell resistance equal to the blackguard's level + 5.

To affect the servant with a spell, another spellcaster must get a result on a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) that equals or exceeds the servant's spell resistance.

DRAGON DISCIPLE

It is known that certain dragons can take humanoid form and even have humanoid lovers.

Sometimes a child is born of this union, and every child of that child unto the thousandth generation claims a bit of dragon blood, be it ever so small.

Usually, little comes of it, though mighty sorcerers occasionally credit their powers to draconic heritage.

For some, however, dragon blood beckons irresistibly. These characters become dragon disciples, who use their magical power as a catalyst to ignite their dragon blood, realizing its fullest potential.

Dragon disciples prefer a life of exploration to a cloistered existence.

Most are barbarians, fighters, or rangers who have dabbled as sorcerers or bards.

Occasionally, a serious spellcaster explores the path to further a goal of finding out more about his draconic heritage, though at the expense of most of his arcane studies.

Clerics and druids rarely choose to become dragon disciples.

Already adept at magic, many pursue adventure, especially if it furthers their goal of finding out more about their draconic heritage.

All dragon disciples are drawn to areas known to harbor dragons.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragon disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any nondragon (cannot already be a half-dragon).

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast arcane spells without preparation.

Special: The player chooses a dragon variety when taking the first level in this prestige class, subject to the DM's approval.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragon disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragon disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dragon disciples gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Bonus Spells: Dragon disciples gain bonus spells as they gain levels in this prestige class, as if from having a high ability score, as given on Table 6–7.

A bonus spell can be added to any level of spells the disciple already has the ability to cast.

If a character has more than one spellcasting class, he must decide to which class he adds each bonus spell as it is gained.

Once a bonus spell has been applied, it cannot be shifted.

Natural Armor Increase (Ex): At 1st, 4th, and 7th level, a dragon disciple becomes more draconic in appearance. His skin develops tiny iridescent scales, nearly invisible at first but becoming more noticeable at higher levels.

This provides an increase to the character's existing natural armor (if any), as indicated on Table 6–7 (the numbers represent the total increase gained to that point).

As his skin thickens, a dragon disciple takes on more and more of his progenitor's physical aspect.

Claws and Bite (Ex): At 2nd level, a dragon disciple gains claw and bite attacks if he does not already have them.

Size	Bite Damage	Claw Damage
Small	1d4	1d3
Medium	1d6	1d4
Large	1d8	1d6

Use the values above or the disciple's base claw and bite damage values, whichever are greater.

A dragon disciple is considered proficient with these attacks.

When making a full attack, a dragon disciple uses his full base attack bonus with his bite attack but takes a –5 penalty on claw attacks.

The Multiattack feat (see page 304 of the Monster Manual) reduces this penalty to only –2.

Ability Boost (Ex): As a dragon disciple gains levels in this prestige class, his ability scores increase as noted on Table 6–7.

These increases stack and are gained as if through level advancement.

Breath Weapon (Su): At 3rd level, a dragon disciple gains a minor breath weapon, derived from his draconic ancestor. The type and shape depend on the dragon variety whose heritage he enjoys (see below).

Dragon Variety*	Breath Weapon
Black	Line of acid
Blue	Line of lightning
Green	Cone of corrosive gas (acid)
Red	Cone of fire
White	Cone of cold
Brass	Line of fire
Bronze	Line of lightning
Copper	Line of acid
Gold	Cone of fire
Silver	Cone of cold

* Other varieties of dragon disciple are possible, using other dragon varieties as ancestors.

Regardless of the ancestor, the breath weapon deals 2d8 points of damage of the appropriate energy type.

At 7th level, the damage increases to 4d8, and when a disciple attains dragon apotheosis at 10th level it reaches its full power at 6d8.

Regardless of its strength, the breath weapon can be used only once per day.

Use all the rules for dragon breath weapons (see page 69 of the Monster Manual) except as specified here.

The DC of the breath weapon is 10 + class level + Con modifier.

A line-shaped breath weapon is 5 feet high, 5 feet wide, and 60 feet long.

A cone-shaped breath weapon is 30 feet long.

Blindsight (Ex): At 5th level, the dragon disciple gains blindsense with a range of 30 feet.

Using nonvisual senses, such as acute smell or hearing, the dragon disciple notices things it cannot see.

He usually does not need to make Spot or Listen checks to notice and pinpoint the location of creatures within range of his blindsense ability, provided that he has line of effect to that creature.

Any opponent the dragon disciple cannot see still has total concealment against him, and the dragon disciple still has the normal miss chance when attacking foes that have concealment.

Visibility still affects the movement of a creature with blindsense.

A creature with blindsense is still denied its Dexterity bonus to Armor Class against attacks from creatures it cannot see.

At 10th level, the range of this ability increases to 60 feet.

Wings (Ex): At 9th level, a dragon disciple grows a set of draconic wings.

He may now fly at a speed equal to his normal land speed, with average maneuverability.

Dragon Apotheosis: At 10th level, a dragon disciple fully realizes his draconic heritage and takes on the half-dragon template (see page 146 of the Monster Manual).

His breath weapon reaches full strength (as noted above), and he gains +4 to Strength and +2 to Charisma.

His natural armor bonus increases to +4, and he acquires low-light vision, 60-foot darkvision, immunity to sleep and paralysis effects, and immunity to the energy type used by his breath weapon (see above).

DUELIST

The duelist (sometimes known as the swashbuckler) is a nimble, intelligent fighter trained in making precise attacks with light weapons, such as the rapier.

She always takes full advantage of her quick reflexes and wits in a fight.

Rather than wearing bulky armor, a duelist feels the best way to protect herself is not to get hit at all.

Duelists are most often fighters or rangers, but almost as often are rogues or bards.

Wizards, sorcerers, and monks make surprisingly good duelists due to those classes' lack of reliance on armor.

They benefit greatly from the weapon skill the duelist offers.

Some paladins and barbarians who deviate a good deal from their archetypes become duelists.

NPC duelists are usually loners looking for adventure or a get-rich-quick scheme.

Occasionally they work in small, tight-knit groups, fighting with team-based tactics.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a duelist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Perform 3 ranks, Tumble 5 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Weapon Finesse.

CLASS SKILLS

The duelist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump

(Str), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.
Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The duelist is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but no type of armor or shield.

Canny Defense (Ex): When not wearing armor or using a shield, a duelist adds 1 point of Intelligence bonus (if any) per duelist class level to her Dexterity bonus to modify Armor Class while wielding a melee weapon.

For instance, a 2nd-level duelist with an Intelligence score of 16 (+3 bonus) can add +2 to her Armor Class.

If a duelist is caught flat-footed or otherwise denied her Dexterity bonus, she also loses this bonus.

Improved Reaction (Ex): At 2nd level, a duelist gains a +2 bonus on initiative checks.

At 8th level, the bonus increases to +4.

This bonus stacks with the benefit provided by the Improved Initiative feat.

Enhanced Mobility (Ex): When wearing no armor and not using a shield, a duelist gains an additional +4 bonus to AC against attacks of opportunity caused when she moves out of a threatened square.

Grace (Ex): At 4th level, a duelist gains an additional +2 competence bonus on all Reflex saving throws.

This ability functions for a duelist only when she is wearing no armor and not using a shield.

Precise Strike (Ex): At 5th level, a duelist gains the ability to strike precisely with a light or one-handed piercing weapon, gaining an extra 1d6 damage added to her normal damage roll.

When making a precise strike, a duelist cannot attack with a weapon in her other hand or use a shield.

A duelist's precise strike only works against living creatures with discernible anatomies.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits (including undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures) is not vulnerable to a precise strike, and any item or ability that protects a creature from critical hits (such as armor with the fortification special ability) also protects a creature from a precise strike.

At 10th level, the extra damage on a precise strike increases to +2d6.

Acrobatic Charge (Ex): At 6th level, a duelist gains the ability to charge in situations where others cannot.

She may charge over difficult terrain that normally slows movement.

This enables her to run down steep stairs, leap down from a balcony, or to tumble over tables to get to her charge target. Depending on the circumstance, she may still need to make appropriate checks (Jump or Tumble checks in particular) to successfully move over the terrain.

Elaborate Parry (Ex): At 7th level and higher, if a duelist chooses to fight defensively or use total defense in melee combat, she gains an additional +1 dodge bonus to AC for each level of duelist she has.

Deflect Arrows: At 9th level, a duelist gains the benefit of the Deflect Arrows feat (see page 93 of the Player's Handbook) when using a light or one-handed piercing weapon.

TABLE 6–8: THE DUELIST

DWARVEN DEFENDER

The defender is a sponsored champion of a dwarven cause, a dwarf aristocrat, a dwarven deity, or the dwarven way of life.

As the name might imply, this character is a skilled combatant trained in the arts of defense.

A line of dwarven defenders is a far better defense than a 10-foot-thick wall of stone, and much more dangerous.

Most dwarven defenders are fighters, paladins, rangers, or clerics, although ex-barbarians, sorcerers, wizards, and druids can certainly all benefit from the defensive capabilities of this prestige class.

Rogues, bards, and monks usually depend too heavily on mobility to use the abilities of the dwarven defender class to their fullest.

NPC dwarven defenders are usually soldiers in a dwarven citadel, segregated into their own units separate from regular warriors or fighters.

Occasionally a lone, wandering dwarven defender can be encountered on some mission, although he usually guards his words so closely that it's difficult to learn what his quest actually entails.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a defender, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Dodge, Endurance, Toughness.

CLASS SKILLS

The defender's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dwarven defender prestige class.

AC Bonus (Ex): The dwarven defender receives a dodge bonus to Armor Class that starts at +1 and improves as the defender gains levels, until it reaches +4 at 10th level.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dwarven defender is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Defensive Stance: When he needs to, a defender can become a stalwart bastion of defense.

In this defensive stance, a defender gains phenomenal strength and durability, but he cannot move from the spot he is defending.

He gains +2 to Strength, +4 to Constitution, a +2 resistance bonus on all saves, and a +4 dodge bonus to AC.

The increase in Constitution increases the defender's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the defensive stance when the Constitution score drops back 4 points.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While in a defensive stance, a defender cannot use skills or abilities that would require him to shift his position, such as Move Silently or Jump.

A defensive stance lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the character's (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

A defender may end his defensive stance voluntarily prior to this limit.

At the end of the defensive stance, the defender is winded and takes a –2 penalty to Strength for the duration of that encounter.

A defender can only use his defensive stance a certain number of times per day as determined by his level (see Table 6–9).

Using the defensive stance takes no time itself, but a defender can only do so during his action.

(A defender can't, for example, use the stance when struck down by an arrow in order to get the extra hit points from the increased Constitution).

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a dwarven defender gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

At 2nd level and above, he retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(He still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized). If a character gains uncanny dodge from a second class (such as rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below).

Trap Sense (Ex): At 4th level, a dwarven defender gains an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks by traps.

At 8th level, these bonuses rise to +2.

These bonuses stack with trap sense bonuses gained from other classes.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 6th level, a dwarven defender gains the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 3 points from the damage the dwarven defender takes each time he is dealt damage.

At 10th level, this damage reduction rises to 6/–.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0. (That is, the defender cannot actually gain hit points in this manner).

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 6th level, a dwarven defender can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the dwarven defender.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the dwarven defender can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

If a character gains uncanny dodge (see above) from a second class (such as rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge, and the levels from those classes stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the character.

Mobile Defense (Ex): At 8th level, a dwarven defender can adjust his position while maintaining a defensive stance. While in a defensive stance, he can take one 5-foot step each round without losing the benefit of the stance.

ELDRITCH KNIGHT

Studying the martial and arcane arts to equal degree, the eldritch knight is a versatile combatant who can cast a fireball on her foes or charge them with sword drawn.

The eldritch knight takes pride in her ability to use the right technique for the job: spells against physically tough foes and force of arms against spellcasting enemies.

Eldritch knights split their time between physical training to become better soldiers and arcane study to learn more powerful spells.

They tend to be driven individuals, because simultaneously perfecting their spellcasting and combat prowess requires immense time and effort.

Eldritch knights are never truly at home among arcane spellcasters or elite soldiers, so many drift from wizard school to mercenary unit to band of adventurers.

Every would-be eldritch knight must demonstrate both skill with a broad array of weapons and mastery of the basics of arcane spellcasting.

Thus, almost all eldritch knights are multiclass characters already, with fighter/wizard the most common combination.

A few eldritch knights were once bards, and even paladin/sorcerers aren't unheard of.

Eldritch knights can be found wherever there's a good fight or the promise of arcane lore.

They find higher-level fighters and wizards particularly interesting, and some eldritch knights apprentice themselves for a time to learn the finer points of arcane technique or weapons prowess.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an eldritch knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Weapon Proficiency: Must be proficient with all martial weapons.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The eldritch knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the eldritch knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Eldritch knights gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Bonus Feat: At 1st level, an eldritch knight may choose a bonus feat from the list of feats available to fighters.

This is in addition to the feats that a character of any class normally gets every three levels.

The character must still meet any prerequisites for these bonus feats, including four levels of fighter for the Weapon Specialization feat.

Spells per Day: From 2nd level on, when a new eldritch knight level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of eldritch knight to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before she became an eldritch knight, she must decide to which class she adds each level of eldritch knight for the purpose of determining spells per day.

HIEROPHANT

A divine spellcaster who rises high in the service of his deity gains access to spells and abilities of which lesser faithful can only dream.

The hierophant prestige class is open to powerful divine spellcasters who are approaching access to the strongest and most difficult divine spells.

They delay the acquisition of these greatest gifts in exchange for a deeper understanding of and ability to control the power they channel.

Most hierophants were clerics or druids.

Some may have pursued another divine spellcasting-focused prestige class.

Hierophants rarely multiclass into non-spellcasting classes. Hierophants are usually high-ranking members of a church or druidic circle.

Most are exemplary representatives of their faith.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hierophant, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 15 ranks.

Feats: Any metamagic feat.

Spells: Able to cast 7th-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The hierophant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hierophant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hierophants gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells and Caster Level: Levels in the hierophant prestige class, even though they do not advance spell progression in the character's base class, still stack with the character's base spellcasting levels to determine caster level.

Special Ability: Every level, a hierophant gains a special ability of his choice from among the following.

Blast Infidel (Su): A hierophant can use negative energy spells to their maximum effect on creatures with an alignment opposed to the hierophant.

(See the table below for a list of which alignments are opposed to each alignment).

Hierophant Alignment	Opposed Alignment
Lawful good	Chaotic evil
Neutral good	Neutral evil
Chaotic good	Lawful evil
Lawful neutral	Chaotic neutral
Neutral	Lawful good, chaotic good, lawful evil, chaotic evil*
Chaotic neutral	Lawful neutral
Lawful evil	Chaotic good
Neutral evil	Neutral good
Chaotic evil	Lawful good

* A neutral hierophant chooses one of these alignments to be the one that he opposes, for the purposes of this special ability.

Any spell with a description that involves inflicting or channeling negative energy (inflict spells, mass inflict light wounds, harm) cast on a creature of the opposed alignment works as if under the effect of a Maximize Spell feat (without using a higher-level spell slot).

Undead affected by this ability heal the maximized amount of damage.

Divine Reach (Su): A hierophant with this ability can use touch spells on targets up to 30 feet away.

If the spell requires a melee touch attack, the hierophant must make a ranged touch attack instead.

Divine reach can be selected a second time as a special ability, in which case the range increases to 60 feet.

Faith Healing (Su): A hierophant can use healing spells to their maximum effect on creatures of the same alignment as the hierophant (including the hierophant himself).

Any spell with the healing descriptor cast on such creatures works as if under the effects of a Maximize Spell feat (without using a higher-level spell slot).

Gift of the Divine (Su): Available only to hierophants with cleric levels, this ability allows a hierophant to transfer one or more uses of his turn undead ability to a willing creature. (Hierophants who rebuke undead transfer uses of rebuke undead instead).

The transfer lasts anywhere from 24 hours to one week (chosen at the time of transfer), and while the transfer is in effect, the number of turning attempts per day allowed to the hierophant is reduced by the number transferred.

The recipient turns undead as a cleric of the hierophant's cleric level but uses her own Charisma modifier.

Mastery of Energy (Su): Available only to hierophants with cleric levels, this ability allows a hierophant to channel positive or negative energy much more effectively, increasing his ability to affect undead.

Add a +4 bonus to the hierophant's turning checks and turning damage rolls.

This ability only affects undead, even if the hierophant can turn other creatures, such as with a granted power of a domain.

Metamagic Feat: A hierophant can choose a metamagic feat in place of one of the special abilities described here if desired.

Power of Nature (Su): Available only to hierophants with druid levels, this ability allows a hierophant to temporarily transfer one or more of his druid class features to a willing creature.

The transfer lasts anywhere from 24 hours to one week (chosen at the time of transfer), and while the transfer is in effect, the hierophant cannot use the transferred power.

He can transfer any of his druid powers except spellcasting and the ability to have an animal companion.

The druid's wild shape ability can be partially or completely transferred.

For example, a hierophant may transfer the ability to use wild shape once per day to the recipient and retain the rest of his uses for himself.

If the hierophant can assume the form of Tiny or Huge animals, the recipient can as well.

As with the imbue with spell ability spell, the hierophant remains responsible to his deity for any use to which the recipient puts the transferred abilities.

Spell Power: This special ability increases a hierophant's effective caster level by 1 for purposes of determining level-dependent spell variables (such as damage or range) and for caster level checks.

This ability can be selected more than once, and changes to effective caster level are cumulative.

Spell-Like Ability: A hierophant who selects this special ability can use one of his divine spell slots to permanently prepare one of his divine spells as a spell-like ability that can be used twice per day.

The hierophant does not use any components when casting the spell, although a spell that costs XP to cast still does so, and a spell with a costly material component instead costs him 10 times that amount in XP.

The spell normally uses a spell slot of the spell's level (or higher, if the hierophant chooses to permanently attach a metamagic feat to the spell chosen).

The hierophant can use an available higher-level spell slot to use the spell-like ability more than once per day.

Allocating a slot three levels higher allows him to cast the spell four times per day, and a slot six levels higher lets him cast it six times per day.

For example, Lonafin the hierophant wants to be able to create undead whenever he has the opportunity, so he permanently uses a 9th-level spell slot to get animate dead as a spell-like ability usable six times per day.

If selected more than one time as a special ability, this ability can apply to the same spell (increasing the number of times per day it can be used) or to a different spell.

HORIZON WALKER

The horizon walker is an unceasing traveler to the universe's most dangerous places.

As her journeys take her from place to place, she adapts to become one with her environment.

In time, she develops a mystic connection with the ground beneath her.

But she is by no means tied to a particular place; her restless feet are ever leading her toward the horizon, where new adventures await.

Horizon walkers tend to be hard to surprise or impress, because they've seen so many wonders during their travels.

It's common for a horizon walker to have an outward attitude of "been there, done that".

But horizon walkers are gripped by an unquenchable wanderlust, so they're always in the midst of a journey or planning their next one.

As they travel, horizon walkers develop a magical resonance with the terrain that surrounds them, making them unparalleled guides and scouts.

And they're formidable foes when their travels take them into danger, able to use the terrain they know so well to good advantage.

Rangers and bards take up the path of the horizon walker more often than other characters, but that's more because they appreciate the wanderer's life, not because the path of the horizon walker is particularly specialized.

A fair number of horizon walkers were barbarians who strayed from their native lands or rogues who found their skills useful on the road.

Occasionally a druid will adopt the prestige class, though most are loath to do so because they sacrifice their spellcasting advancement.

You'll find horizon walkers on the road, or in places so forbidding that roads don't exist.

They rarely stay in one place for long, and they're eager to launch a new expedition—the more exotic and remote the destination, the better.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a horizon walker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (geography) 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance.

CLASS SKILLS

The horizon walker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Speak Language (none), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the horizon walker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Horizon walkers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Terrain Mastery: As horizon walkers travel, they gain a mystical connection with the very ground they walk on.

At each level, they add a new terrain environment to their repertoire from those given below.

Terrain mastery gives a horizon walker a bonus on checks involving a skill useful in that terrain, or some other appropriate benefit.

A horizon walker also knows how to fight dangerous creatures typically found in that terrain, gaining a +1 insight bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls against creatures with that terrain mentioned in the Environment entry of their descriptions (see the Monster Manual).

The horizon walker only gains the bonus if the Monster Manual description specifically lists the terrain type.

Horizon walkers take their terrain mastery with them wherever they go.

They retain their terrain mastery bonuses on skill checks, attack rolls, and damage rolls whether they're actually in the relevant terrain or not.

For example, a horizon walker who has selected desert terrain mastery is immune to fatigue even if she's underground, in the mountains, or in a city.

Planar Terrain Mastery: Eventually a horizon walker's familiarity with terrain extends to her journeys to other planes of existence.

Planar terrain mastery functions just like terrain mastery, except that the horizon walker can choose one of the planar categories at each level.

The horizon walker can take a nonplanar terrain type instead, if she wishes.

TERRAIN MASTERY BENEFITS

Aquatic: You are naturally at home in the water, gaining a +4 competence bonus on Swim checks, or a +10-foot bonus to your swim speed if you have one.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against aquatic creatures.

Desert: You have endured where others perish, so you're good at conserving your body's resources.

You resist effects that tire you.

You are immune to fatigue, and anything that would cause you to become exhausted makes you fatigued instead.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against desert creatures.

Forest: You have an instinctive sense of camouflage from your time among the trees, granting you a +4 competence bonus on Hide checks.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against forest creatures.

Hills: The faintest echoes find their way to your ears, granting you a +4 competence bonus on Listen checks.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against hills creatures.

Marsh: You have learned to be quieter than the whispering rushes; your mystic connection to the marsh grants you a +4 competence bonus on Move Silently checks.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against marsh creatures.

Mountains: You naturally cling to surfaces others fall from. You gain a +4 competence bonus on Climb checks, or a +10-foot bonus to your climb speed if you have one.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against mountain creatures.

Plains: The wide-open spaces have sharpened your eyes, granting you a +4 competence bonus on Spot checks.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against plains creatures.

Underground: You have magically adapted to your time in the dark.

You have 60-foot darkvision, or 120-foot darkvision if you already had darkvision from another source.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against underground creatures.

Fiery (Planar): This kind of planar terrain mastery provides you with resistance to fire 20.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against outsiders and elementals with the fire subtype.

Weightless (Planar): You gain a +30-foot bonus to your fly speed on planes with no gravity or subjective gravity, such as the Astral Plane or the Elemental Plane of Air (see Chapter 5).

You gain a +1 insight on attack and damage rolls against creatures native to the Astral Plane, the Elemental Plane of Air, and the Ethereal Plane, such as githyanki and air elementals.

(A creature native to a particular plane has this fact designated in its Environment entry in the Monster Manual).

Cold (Planar): This kind of planar terrain mastery provides you with resistance to cold 20.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against outsiders and elementals with the cold subtype.

Shifting (Planar): You have the supernatural ability to use the ever-shifting nature of planes such as Limbo and the Plane of Shadow to travel faster.

You instinctively anticipate shifts in the reality of the plane that bring you closer to your destination, giving you the spell-like ability to use dimension door (as the spell cast at your character level) once every 1d4 rounds.

You gain a +1 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against outsiders and elementals native to a shifting plane, such as slaadi and shadow mastiffs.

Aligned (Planar): You have the instinctive ability to mimic the dominant alignment of the plane.

You incur none of the penalties for having an alignment at odds with that of the plane, and spells and abilities that harm those of the opposite alignment (such as unholy blight) don't affect you.

You have the dominant alignment of the plane with regard to magic, but your behavior and any alignment-related class features you have are unaffected.

Cavernous (Planar): You gain tremorsense with a 30-foot range.

Other (Planar): If your campaign uses planes you have invented yourself (see Creating a Cosmology, page 167), you should design additional planar terrains.

A plane composed entirely of an immense black spiderweb suspended over a roiling ocean of insectoid vermin, for example, might have a +4 competence bonus on Balance checks and a +4 bonus on Fortitude saves against poison as the benefit for planar terrain mastery.

LOREMASTER

Loremasters are spellcasters who concentrate on knowledge, valuing lore and secrets over gold. They uncover secrets that they then use to better themselves mentally, physically, and spiritually. Characters without at least one level of wizard, sorcerer, cleric, or druid gain little benefit for becoming a loremaster.

Paladins, rangers, and bards might gain some benefit, but overall, it would be minor.

Loremasters sometimes gather in secluded cabals but are more often found as members of an order attached to a university, a library, or some other source of information. They're likely to earn extra money as sages and information brokers, pouring their wages into their own research.

A loremaster might also adopt a position as a wise one in a community, or even as its leader, drawing upon her knowledge to help others.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a loremaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (any two) 10 ranks in each.

Feats: Any three metamagic or item creation feats, plus Skill Focus (Knowledge [any individual Knowledge skill]).

Spells: Able to cast seven different divination spells, one of which must be 3rd level or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

The loremaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (alchemy) (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animals (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Speak Language, Spellcraft (Int), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the loremaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Loremasters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: A loremaster continues training in magic as well as her field of research.

Thus, when a new loremaster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of loremaster to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

Secret: In their studies, loremasters stumble upon all sorts of applicable knowledge and secrets.

At 1st level and every two levels higher than 1st (3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th), the loremaster chooses one secret from the table on the next page.

LOREMASTER SECRETS

Level + Int Modifier	Secret	Effect
1	Instant mastery	4 ranks of a skill in which the character has no ranks
2	Secret health	+3 hit points
3	Secrets of inner strength	+2 bonus on Will saves
4	The lore of true stamina	+2 bonus on Fortitude saves
5	Secret knowledge of avoidance	+2 bonus on Reflex saves
6	Weapon trick	+1 bonus on attack rolls
7	Dodge trick	+1 dodge bonus to AC
8	Applicable knowledge	Any one feat
9	Newfound arcana	1 bonus 1st-level spell*
10	More newfound arcana	1 bonus 2nd-level spell*

* As if gained through having a high ability score.

Her level plus Intelligence modifier determines the total number of secrets she can choose.

She can't choose the same secret twice.

Lore: Loremasters gather knowledge.

At 2nd level, a loremaster gains the ability to know legends or information regarding various topics, just as a bard can with bardic knowledge.

The loremaster adds her level and her Intelligence modifier to the lore check.

See page 28 of the Player's Handbook for more information on bardic knowledge.

Bonus Languages: Loremasters, in their laborious studies, learn new languages in order to access more knowledge. A loremaster can choose any new language at 4th and 8th level.

Greater Lore (Ex): At 6th level, a loremaster gains the ability to understand magic items, as with the identify spell.

True Lore (Ex): At 10th level, once per day a loremaster can use her knowledge to gain the effect of a legend lore spell or an analyze dweomer spell.

MYSTIC THEURGE

Blurring the line between divine and arcane, mystic theurges draw power from divine sources and musty tomes alike.

While most spellcasters choose one path to magical power, mystic theurges walk two roads at once, simultaneously mastering spells common to clerics and wizards.

Mystic theurges have unparalleled diversity of spells.

In time, a mystic theurge can cast almost any spell in the Player's Handbook.

While a mystic theurge doesn't have the uninterrupted spell advancement that a cleric, wizard, or sorcerer has, he makes up for this with versatility.

Mystic theurges are often obsessed with magical lore, traveling to the ends of the earth to learn some new arcane secret or divine insight.

Because a mystic theurge casts both arcane and divine spells, all members of this class are multiclass spellcasters. Cleric/sorcerers and cleric/wizards are the most common mystic theurges, with druid/sorcerers more rare and druid/wizards almost unheard of.

Mystic theurges tend to be fascinated with magic in whatever form it takes.

They're always on the hunt for powerful magic items and new arcane spells.

Those mystic theurges who worship a deity use the power of their spellcasting to further their deity's agenda.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mystic theurge, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 6 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells and 2nd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The mystic theurge's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.
Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the mystic theurge prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mystic theurges gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new mystic theurge level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in any one arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class and any one divine spellcasting class he belonged to previously.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of mystic theurge to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class and divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

For example, a 3rd-level cleric/3rd-level wizard who takes a level in mystic theurge has the same access to spells as a 4th-level cleric and a 4th-level wizard.

But he continues to turn undead as a 3rd-level cleric, and his wizard familiar won't gain any new abilities.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class or more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a mystic theurge, he must decide to which class he adds each level of mystic theurge for the purpose of determining spells per day.

RED WIZARD

The Red Wizards are the masters of Thay, the would-be magical overlords of the land of Faerûn (in the FORGOTTEN REALMS® campaign setting). They focus on a school of magic more intently than any specialist, achieving incredible mastery of magic within a very narrow focus.

Seen as cruel and evil tyrants by people across the world of Toril, a few choose to leave their region, assume secret identities, and practice magic without having to worry about political alliances and possible slave uprisings. Early in their careers, would-be Red Wizards specialize in a school of magic and acquire the Tattoo Focus feat that prepares them for entry into the Red Wizard prestige class. All Red Wizards have some skill as a specialist wizard, and most follow that path exclusively, but a few dabble in other sorts of learning (such as combat or divine magic). While it is possible for a sorcerer or bard to become a Red Wizard, such misfits are ridiculed in their homeland and are incredibly rare.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Red Wizard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human from Thay.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Tattoo Focus (see New Features of the Red Wizard, below) plus a total of three metamagic feats or item creation feats.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The Red Wizard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Red Wizard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Red Wizards gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A Red Wizard's training focuses on arcane spells.

Thus, when a new Red Wizard level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of Red Wizard to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became a Red Wizard, he must decide to which class he adds each level of Red Wizard for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Enhanced Specialization: Upon becoming a Red Wizard, a character increases his devotion to his wizard school of specialization.

In exchange for this, the Red Wizard must sacrifice study in one or more schools.

The Red Wizard must choose an additional prohibited school or schools using the rules in the Player's Handbook. He can never again learn spells from those prohibited schools.

He cannot choose the same prohibited schools he chose as a 1st-level wizard.

He can still use the prohibited spells he knew prior to becoming a Red Wizard, including using items that are activated by spell completion or spell trigger.

For example, Ghorus Toth is specialized in the school of transmutation.

His prohibited schools are abjuration and enchantment. When he becomes a Red Wizard, he must choose one other prohibited school.

He decides to select conjuration as his additional prohibited school.

Specialist Defense: A Red Wizard gains a bonus on saving throws against spells from his specialist school.

This bonus starts at +1 and increases at higher levels, as shown on Table 6–15.

Spell Power: At 2nd level, a Red Wizard gains a bonus that increases his effective caster level for purposes of determining level-dependent spell variables and for caster level checks.

The bonus starts at +1 and increases at higher levels, as shown on Table 6–15.

This ability stacks with other spell power benefits that affect spells from the Red Wizard's specialist school.

Bonus Feat: At 5th level, a Red Wizard gains a bonus feat, which must be either an item creation feat, a metamagic feat, or the Spell Mastery feat.

Circle Leader: At 5th level, a Red Wizard gains the ability to become a circle leader, who is the focus person for Red Wizard circle magic (see New Features of the Red Wizard, below).

Scribe Tattoo: At 7th level, a Red Wizard gains the ability to place the Thayan wizards' magic tattoos upon willing and qualified novices, giving them the Tattoo Focus feat and inducting them into his circle.

Great Circle Leader: A 10th-level Red Wizard can be the leader of a great circle, which can have up to nine other participants instead of just five.

NEW FEATURES OF THE RED WIZARD

The Red Wizard prestige class was originally created for inclusion in the FORGOTTEN REALMS® Campaign Setting, and uses several rules specific to that setting.

We've reproduced them here so you can better see how the class works.

Consider carefully before adding them to a campaign that does not use the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting.

NEW FEAT: TATTOO FOCUS [SPECIAL]

You bear the powerful magical tattoos of a Red Wizard of Thay.

Prerequisite: Specialized in a school of magic.

Region: Thay.

Benefit: Add +1 to the DC for all saving throws against spells from your specialized school.

You get a +1 bonus on caster level checks (1d20 + caster level) to overcome a creature's spell resistance when casting spells from that school.

Special: Only characters with the Tattoo Focus feat can participate in Red Wizard circle magic (see below).

CIRCLE MAGIC

Some of the most powerful and spectacular spells worked across Faerûn are cast in the form of circle magic. Circle magic is a type of cooperative spellcasting that allows the spellcaster leading the circle to increase his caster level significantly and achieve results otherwise unavailable to the spellcasters composing the circle.

The Red Wizards of Thay make frequent use of circle magic.

Stories of other forms of circle magic abound in Faerûn.

Participation: The ability to participate in circle magic requires the possession of the Tattoo Focus feat (see above). One spellcaster, usually the most powerful or experienced character present, stands at the center of the circle.

This character is the circle leader.

A Red Wizard cannot be a circle leader unless he is at least a 5th-level Red Wizard.

A circle requires a minimum of two participants plus the circle leader.

Up to five participants can aid a circle leader in a standard circle; a Red Wizard of 10th level can lead a great circle containing up to nine other participants.

All participants in a circle must stand within 10 feet of the circle leader, who stands in the center.

Circle Powers: The first use of circle magic is to empower the circle leader with the strength of all the participants.

This requires 1 full hour of uninterrupted concentration on the part of all participants and the circle leader.

Each participant casts any single prepared spell, which is consumed by the circle and has no effect other than expending the prepared spell.

The spell levels expended by the circle participants are totaled as circle bonus levels.

Each bonus level may be used to accomplish the following effects.

- Increase the circle leader's caster level by one for every circle bonus level expended (maximum caster level 40th). This benefit applies to level-dependent variables of a spell such as range or duration, and to level checks (dispel checks, checks to overcome spell resistance, and so on).
- Add Empower Spell, Maximize Spell, or Heighten Spell metamagic feats to spells currently prepared by the circle leader.

Each circle bonus level counts as one additional spell level required by the application of a metamagic feat to a spell.

The circle leader may add one of the three listed feats to a spell even if he does not know the feat or if the addition of the feat would raise the spell level past the circle leader's normal maximum spell level (maximum spell level 20th). These effects last for 24 hours or until expended.

Circle bonus levels may be divided up as the circle leader sees fit.

For example, the Red Wizard Hauth Var leads a circle in which four participants each cast a 2nd-level spell, so that Hauth Var gains eight circle bonus levels.

Hauth Var chooses to use three circle bonus levels to maximize his cone of cold spell, three to increase his caster level from 10th to 13th for all level-based variables in his spells, and two to provide a +2 bonus on any level checks he needs to make.

The maximized spell is used up whenever he casts his cone of cold, and the other two effects remain for the next 24 hours.

Many high-level Red Wizards lead circles on a daily basis to exact magical power from their apprentices.

SHADOWDANCER

Operating in the border between light and darkness, shadowdancers are nimble artists of deception.

They are mysterious and unknown, never completely trusted but always inducing wonder when met.

Rogues, bards, and monks make excellent shadowdancers. Fighters, barbarians, rangers, and paladins also find that shadowdancer abilities allow them to strike at their opponents with surprise and skill.

Wizard, sorcerer, cleric, and druid shadowdancers employ the defensive capabilities inherent in the prestige class to allow them to cast their spells from safety and move away quickly.

Despite their link with shadows and trickery, shadowdancers are as often good as evil.

Shadowdancers often work in troupes, never staying in one place too long.

Some use their abilities to entertain.

Others operate as thieves, using their abilities to infiltrate past defenses and dupe others.

All shadowdancer troupes maintain an aura of mystery among the common folk, who never know whether to think well or ill of them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadowdancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Move Silently 8 ranks, Hide 10 ranks, Perform (dance) 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Mobility.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadowdancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the shadowdancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadowdancers are proficient with the club, crossbow (hand, light, or heavy), dagger (any type), dart, mace, morningstar, quarterstaff, rapier, sap, shortbow (normal and composite), and short sword.

Shadowdancers are proficient with light armor but not with shields.

Hide in Plain Sight (Su): A shadowdancer can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

As long as she is within 10 feet of some sort of shadow, a shadowdancer can hide herself from view in the open without anything to actually hide behind.

She cannot, however, hide in her own shadow.

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level, a shadowdancer gains evasion. If exposed to any effect that normally allows her to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage (such as a fireball), she takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

The evasion ability can only be used if the shadowdancer is wearing light armor or no armor.

Darkvision (Su): At 2nd level, a shadowdancer can see in the dark as though she were permanently under the effect of a darkvision spell.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a shadowdancer has the ability to react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to even be aware of it.

She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. (She still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

If a character gains uncanny dodge from a second class (such as barbarian or rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below).

Shadow Illusion (Sp): When a shadowdancer reaches 3rd level, she can create visual illusions from surrounding shadows.

This ability's effect is identical to that of the arcane spell silent image and may be employed once per day.

Summon Shadow (Su): At 3rd level, a shadowdancer can summon a shadow, an undead shade (see the Monster Manual for the shadow's statistics).

Unlike a normal shadow, this shadow's alignment matches that of the shadowdancer, and the creature cannot create spawn.

The summoned shadow cannot be turned, rebuked, or commanded by any third party.

This shadow serves as a companion to the shadowdancer and can communicate intelligibly with the shadowdancer.

Every third level gained by the shadowdancer adds +2 HD (and the requisite base attack and base save bonus increases) to her shadow companion.

For example, a 9th-level shadowdancer can have a shadow companion with 6 HD.

If a shadow companion is destroyed, or the shadowdancer chooses to dismiss it, the shadowdancer must attempt a DC 15 Fortitude save.

If the saving throw fails, the shadowdancer loses 200 experience points per shadowdancer level.

A successful saving throw reduces the loss by half, to 100 XP per prestige class level.

The shadowdancer's XP total can never go below 0 as the result of a shadow's dismissal or destruction.

A destroyed or dismissed shadow companion cannot be replaced for 30 days.

Shadow Jump (Su): At 4th level, a shadowdancer gains the ability to travel between shadows as if by means of a dimension door spell.

The limitation is that the magical transport must begin and end in an area with at least some shadow.

A shadowdancer can jump up to a total of 20 feet each day in this way; this may be a single jump of 20 feet or two jumps of 10 feet each.

Every two levels higher than 4th, the distance a shadowdancer can jump each day doubles (40 feet at 6th, 80 feet at 8th, and 160 feet at 10th).

This amount can be split among many jumps, but each one, no matter how small, counts as a 10-foot increment.

(A 6th-level shadowdancer who jumps 32 feet cannot jump again until the next day).

Defensive Roll (Ex): Starting at 5th level, a shadowdancer can roll with a potentially lethal blow to take less damage from it.

Once per day, when a shadowdancer would be reduced to hit points or less by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow, not a spell or special ability), she can attempt to roll with the damage.

She makes a Reflex saving throw (DC = damage dealt) and, if successful, takes only half damage from the blow.

She must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to execute her defensive roll.

If she is in a situation that would deny her any Dexterity bonus to AC, she can't attempt a defensive roll.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 5th level, a shadowdancer can no longer be flanked, since she can react to opponents on opposite sides of her as easily as she can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the shadowdancer.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the shadowdancer can flank her (and thus sneak attack her).

If a character gains uncanny dodge (see above) from a second class (such as barbarian or rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge, and the levels from those classes stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the character.

Slippery Mind (Ex): This ability, gained at 7th level, represents a shadowdancer's ability to wriggle free from magical effects that would otherwise control or compel her. If a shadowdancer is affected by an enchantment and fails her saving throw, 1 round later she can attempt her saving throw again.

She only gets this one extra chance to succeed at her saving throw.

If it fails as well, the spell's effects occur normally.

Improved Evasion (Ex): This ability, gained at 10th level, works like evasion (see above).

A shadowdancer takes no damage at all on successful saving throws against attacks that allow a Reflex saving throw for half damage (breath weapon, fireball, and so on).

What's more, she takes only half damage even if she fails her saving throw, since her reflexes allow her to get out of harm's way with incredible speed.

THAUMATURGIST

The thaumaturgist reaches out with divine power to other planes of existence, calling creatures there to do his bidding.

Evil thaumaturgists conspire with demons and devils to gain power on the Material Plane, while good thaumaturgists send powerful angels or eladrins on holy quests.

In combat, thaumaturgists often summon creatures from the Outer Planes to fight on their behalf.

These creatures fade away as soon as the battle is over, but thaumaturgists also make agreements with more powerful creatures for long-term service.

The planar ally of a thaumaturgist is utterly devoted to furthering the thaumaturgist's goals (or the goals of a deity, if the thaumaturgist worships one).

Almost all thaumaturgists were once clerics, because the first step on the path of thaumaturgy is making an agreement with a denizen of the Outer Planes by use of the lesser planar ally spell.

But many of the class abilities are useful to arcane spellcasters, so multiclass cleric/wizards and the occasional cleric/sorcerer aren't unheard of.

A thaumaturgist is keenly aware that his unparalleled conjurations are just tools in service of his overall philosophy or deity.

Thus, thaumaturgists often undertake quests to advance a cause, using their abilities to conjure up a strike force of summoned and called creatures at a moment's notice.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a thaumaturgist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Feats: Spell Focus (conjuration).

Spells: Able to cast lesser planar ally.

CLASS SKILLS

The thaumaturgist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (none), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the thaumaturgist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thaumaturgists gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new thaumaturgist level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of thaumaturgist to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a thaumaturgist, he must decide to which class he adds each level of thaumaturgist for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Improved Ally: A thaumaturgist is adept at convincing creatures from other planes to do his bidding.

When a thaumaturgist casts a planar ally spell (including the lesser and greater versions), he makes a Diplomacy check to convince the creature to aid him for a reduced payment.

If the thaumaturgist's Diplomacy check adjusts the creature's attitude to helpful (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook), the creature will work for 50% of the standard fee, as long as the task is one that is not against its nature.

For example, a 1st-level thaumaturgist negotiating with an initially friendly planar ally that gets a Diplomacy check result of 15 can convince a 6 HD creature to perform a 7-hour task for only 1,500 gp per hour (a 6 HD creature would ordinarily ask for 3,000 gp per hour).

The thaumaturgist's improved ally class feature only works when the planar ally shares at least one aspect of alignment with the thaumaturgist.

A thaumaturgist can have only one such ally at a time, but he may bargain for tasks from other planar allies normally.

Augment Summoning: At 2nd level, a thaumaturgist gains the Augment Summoning feat (see page 89 of the Player's Handbook).

Extended Summoning: At 3rd level and higher, all spells from the summoning subschool that the thaumaturgist casts have their durations doubled, as if the Extend Spell feat had been applied to them.

The levels of the summoning spells don't change, however. This ability stacks with the effect of the Extend Spell feat, which does change the spell's level.

Contingent Conjunction: A 4th-level thaumaturgist can prepare a summoning or calling spell ahead of time to be triggered by some other event.

This functions as described for the contingency spell, including having the thaumaturgist cast the summoning or calling spell beforehand.

The spell is cast instantly when the trigger event occurs. For example, a thaumaturgist could use the contingent conjunction ability to summon a barbed devil the next time he is attacked, or call a ghaele eladrin to act as messenger if the king falls ill.

The conditions needed to bring the spell into effect must be clear, although they can be general.

If complicated or convoluted condition as are prescribed, the contingent conjunction may fail when triggered.

The conjunction spell occurs based solely on the stated conditions, regardless of whether the thaumaturgist wants it to, although most conjunctions can be dismissed normally.

A thaumaturgist can have only one contingent conjunction active at a time.

Planar Cohort: A 5th-level thaumaturgist can use any of the planar ally spells to call a creature to act as his cohort.

The called creature serves loyally and well as long as the thaumaturgist continues to advance a cause important to the creature.

For example, a 5th-level thaumaturgist could use planar ally to call a bralani eladrin to act as his cohort.

As long as the thaumaturgist undertakes quests and missions to fight evil and uphold good, the eladrin will loyally serve.

To call a planar cohort, the thaumaturgist must cast the relevant spell, paying the XP costs normally.

It takes an offering of 1,000 gp × the HD of the creature to convince it to serve as a planar cohort, and the improved ally class feature can't be used to reduce or eliminate this cost.

The planar cohort can't have more Hit Dice than the thaumaturgist has, and must have an ECL no higher than the thaumaturgist's character level -2.

A bralani eladrin has an ECL of 11 (6 Hit Dice and +5 level adjustment), so it might serve as a planar cohort to an 8th-level cleric/5th-level thaumaturgist (character level 13th). A thaumaturgist can have only one planar cohort at a time, but he can continue to make agreements with other called creatures normally.

A planar cohort replaces a thaumaturgist's existing cohort, if he has one by virtue of the Leadership feat (page 106).

DUNGEONSCAPE (3.5)

BEAST HEART ADEPT

"I'd rather not travel with your band. Here in the dungeon, I'll stick with my companions. They talk less and fight harder."

—Daktar Goretusk, half-orc beast heart adept
Adventurers face monsters every time they descend into a new dungeon.

Most view the creatures as horrid abominations that want nothing more than to cut them down where they stand. However, the beast heart adept sees through a monster's frightening visage.

By attuning himself to the bestial urges of dungeon creatures, he learns to form powerful bonds with a small number of monsters.

These creatures become his devoted allies, and together they form a potent fighting combination.

BECOMING A BEAST HEART ADEPT

The role of a beast heart adept is not an easy one. A potential member of this class must throw himself into the rugged, dangerous world beneath the ground. There, he submerges his civilized urges and learns to live as a beast.

He uses this experience, along with his knowledge of magic, animal husbandry, and subterranean ecology, to unleash the monstrous creature that hides within his heart. Once he completes this process, he becomes capable of forming a powerful bond with certain creatures.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Handle Animal 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Knowledge (dungeoneering) 4 ranks.

Feats: Animal Affinity.

Special: Spend at least one week living alone in a dungeon complex.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft (any), Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Heal, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (the planes), Profession (any), Ride, Survival, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

A beast heart adept forms something like a pack, with himself at the center and his bestial allies as the members. Under his tutelage and care, these monsters become stronger and tougher.

Over time, the beast heart adept learns to optimize his fighting ability when battling alongside his newfound allies.

Monstrous Companion (Ex): You gain the service of a monstrous companion.

The creature is similar to a druid's animal companion (PH 35), but it is a magical beast or aberration rather than an animal.

Choose one of the following as your monstrous companion: ankheg, blink dog, giant eagle, giant owl, hippogriff (4 Hit Dice), krenshar (4 Hit Dice), otyugh, owlbear, pegasus, or worg.

Except for the hippogriff and the krenshar, which are larger than normal, the monster is typical of its kind.

MONSTROUS COMPANIONS

The beast heart adept's monstrous companion is superior to a normal animal of its kind and has special powers, as described below.

Class Level	Bonus HD	Natural Armor Adj.	Str/Con Adj.	Bonus Tricks	Bonus Special
1st–2nd	+0	+0	+0	1	Link
3rd–4th	+2	+2	+2	2	Evasion
5th–6th	+4	+4	+4	3	Devotion
7th–8th	+6	+6	+6	4	—
9th–10th	+8	+8	+8	5	Improved evasion

Monstrous Companion Basics: Use the base statistics for a creature of the companion's kind as given in the Monster Manual, but make the following changes.

Class Level: Use the character's beast heart adept level.

Bonus HD: Add this number to the base creature's existing Hit Dice. Extra Hit Dice improve a monstrous companion's base attack bonus and base save bonuses, and grant it additional feats and skill points (for details, see Improving Monsters, MM 290). Monstrous companions do not increase in size as a result of these extra Hit Dice.

Natural Armor Adj.: Add this number to the base creature's existing natural armor bonus.

Str/Con Adj.: Add this number to the base creature's Strength score and Constitution score.

Bonus Tricks: The value in this column is the number of bonus tricks known by the monstrous companion, in addition to any other tricks the beast heart adept might teach it. These bonus tricks do not require training time or Handle Animal checks, and they do not count against the normal limit of tricks known by the monstrous companion. The beast heart adept selects these bonus tricks, and once selected, they cannot be changed. Only monstrous companions that have an Intelligence score of 1 or 2 must be taught to perform a trick; smarter monsters can be directed verbally.

Link (Ex): A beast heart adept can handle his monstrous companion as a free action, or push it as a move action. The

Just as with a druid's alternative animal companion, an alternative monstrous companion gains abilities as if your beast heart adept class level were lower than it actually is.

Monster Empathy (Ex): You can use body language, vocalization, and demeanor to improve the attitude of a magical beast such as a chimera or a gorgon.

This ability functions like the druid's wild empathy class feature (PH 35), except that it affects magical beasts regardless of their Intelligence score.

You can also use this ability to influence an animal (such as a dire bear) or an aberration that has an Intelligence score of 1 or 2 (such as a rust monster), but you take a -4 penalty on the check.

If its Intelligence is greater than 2, the companion has the same alignment as you.

If you have levels in other classes (such as druid or ranger) that give you the ability to have an animal companion, those levels do not stack with your beast heart adept levels for the purpose of determining which kinds of monstrous companions you can select (and what the abilities of those companions are).

At 3rd level or higher, you can select from alternative lists of monsters (see the sidebar).

beast heart adept gains a +4 circumstance bonus on monster empathy checks and Handle Animal checks regarding a monstrous companion.

Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, your monstrous companion can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save. See the monk class feature (PH 41).

Devotion (Ex): A monstrous companion's devotion to its master is so complete that it gains a +4 morale bonus on Will saves against enchantment spells and effects.

Improved Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 9th level, your monstrous companion can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save and take only half damage on a failed save. See the monk class feature (PH 42).

ALTERNATIVE MONSTROUS COMPANIONS

A beast heart adept of sufficiently high level can select his monstrous companion from one of the following lists. Apply the indicated adjustment to the beast heart adept's level (in parentheses) when determining the monster's characteristics and special abilities.

3rd Level or Higher (Level –2)

Digester
Girallon
Manticore
Winter wolf

5th Level or Higher (Level –4)

Chimera
Wyvern

7th Level or Higher (Level –6)

Chuul
Destrachan
Dragonne

9th Level or Higher (Level –8)

Behir
Gray render Yrthak

If you have the wild empathy ability from another class, add your levels in that class to your beast heart adept level when influencing magical beasts or animals.

In addition, you no longer take a penalty to your monster empathy check when influencing animals.

If you have 5 or more ranks in the Handle Animal skill, you gain a +2 bonus on your monster empathy checks.

Monster Handler (Ex): You can make Handle Animal checks with regard to magical beasts and aberrations without penalty.

This ability applies only to creatures that have an Intelligence score of 1 or 2.

Magical beasts and aberrations that have higher Intelligence scores cannot be controlled by Handle Animal at all.

Monster Lore (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain uncanny knowledge about all types of living monsters, including their habitats, behavior, abilities, and weaknesses. You can make a special monster lore check to identify monsters or their special abilities or vulnerabilities. The check functions as a Knowledge check (PH 78), except the monster lore check can identify any living creature. You gain a bonus on this check equal to your beast heart adept level + your Int modifier.

You can attempt this check in addition to making the relevant Knowledge check to learn about a creature. If you have levels in the bard class or the loremaster prestige class, you can add those levels to your beast heart adept levels when determining the bonus on the monster lore check.

Monstrous Flank (Ex): At 4th level, you learn to better coordinate your attacks with your monstrous companion. When you form a flank with a companion, both you and the creature gain an additional +2 bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls against the flanked opponent.

Extra Monstrous Companion (Ex): At 5th level, you gain a second monstrous companion, chosen from the list of companions available to a 1st-level beast heart adept. Treat your beast heart adept class level as if it were four levels lower for the purpose of determining the monster's abilities (or of selecting an alternative companion at higher levels).

At 9th level, you gain a third monstrous companion, chosen from the list of companions available to a 1st-level beast heart adept.

Treat your beast heart adept class level as if it were eight levels lower for the purpose of determining the monster's abilities (or of selecting an alternative companion at higher levels).

Monstrous Tactics (Ex): Starting at 7th level, you and your monstrous companions make an excellent team.

Through coordination and practice, you have learned to optimize your combined efforts.

When one of your monstrous companions strikes an opponent with a melee attack, the target provokes an attack of opportunity from you.

With this ability, you can make an attack of opportunity against a particular target once per round.

In addition, your companions do not grant cover against your enemies when you use ranged attacks or spells.

Monstrous Team-Up (Ex): When you reach 10th level, all the members of your adventuring party now gain the benefits of your monstrous flank and monstrous tactics abilities.

Any references to "you" in those abilities now include your allies.

PLAYING A BEAST HEART ADEPT

Sometimes you shun other humanoids.

but you are always at ease among the strange monsters that form your pack, talking and singing to them regularly.

You enjoy watching your monster allies in action, directing their movements to turn them into an efficient fighting machine.

As the leader of your pack, you revel in your victories and mourn your losses.

In the end, the pack must survive.

The dungeon is your home.

In fact, some powerful beast heart adepts wander into the deepest subterranean levels and are never seen again. Rumors abound of entire dungeons having been taken over by the mightiest adepts and their countless minions.

Adventurers who enter these places are allowed to leave, as long as they do not harm the creatures that live there.

Should the intruders attack, a considerate beast heart adept might hang their skulls at the dungeon's entrance to warn other fools.

Evil beast heart adepts spread stories of the great wealth to be found in their dungeons, the better to lure victims who bring magic weapons and items.

COMBAT

You are a member of a pack, and in battle you seek to maximize the combination of your abilities and those of your monstrous companions.

If you specialize in ranged attacks, choose companions that have a high number of hit points and can hold back the enemy.

If you favor melee combat, pick mobile companions that hit hard so that you can form deadly flanks.

Abilities that improve your companions' fighting prowess are doubly useful.

Bardic music abilities, spells such as bull's strength, and so on make your entire pack more deadly.

In most cases, a monstrous companion will not be able to handle the toughest foes you face.

For example, if you encounter a hill giant and a number of trolls, send your companion against the trolls—the giant might be able to squash it with a single blow.

Let your companion hold back the trolls while the rest of your adventuring party battles the main threat.

While you see your monstrous companions as members of your pack, do not neglect your fellow adventurers.

Your ankheg companion can stand beside the party's wizard to guard her against attackers, while your manticores can carry the rogue over the enemy and drop him in a flanking position.

ADVANCEMENT

Handle Animal is the most obvious skill choice, though Diplomacy can be just as useful if your monstrous companions are intelligent.

An even distribution of Knowledge skills can keep you informed about any creature you might face.

If one of your companions can serve as a mount, spend a few skill points on Ride, and consider taking Mounted Combat and the associated feats.

Leadership is also an excellent choice, if your DM allows it. A monstrous cohort (such as a kuo-toa cleric or a minotaur barbarian) will deepen your bond with beasts while bolstering your party's strength.

RESOURCES

Most rational adventurers prefer to kill monsters rather than keep them, so you have few peers when it comes to training your monstrous companions.

Any beast heart adepts you meet, however, are eager to talk shop.

You also have a tenuous relationship with druids and rangers.

While they often agree with you on the principle of communing with beasts, they question your choice of companions.

They cannot understand how someone could admire monsters the way they value animals.

You have a kinship with professional animal trainers, particularly those who train unusual mounts for local knights.

They might provide you with feed and a stable when you come to town, though the smaller the community, the more questions your “pets” will raise.

It is best to leave your more intelligent companions in the wilderness (with a prearranged rendezvous time) rather than risk bringing them into a city that will not tolerate their presence.

BEAST HEART ADEPTS IN THE WORLD

“Did you see that—that—that thing go by?

Monsters, here, in our fine city?

I tell you, I never thought I’d see the day.

Scandalous!”

—Lucius Araphani, aristocrat

Beast heart adepts usually dwell on the outskirts of civilization, disparaged as adventurers who became fascinated with their opponents.

Many are eccentric hermits, living with their monstrous companions and shunning a world that does not understand their special relationships.

The monsters are odd pets and helpers, aiding the beast heart adept with mundane tasks.

The juxtaposition of deadly dungeon creatures and the daily chores of rural life can be unnerving, to say the least—just ask anyone who has seen a chimera painting a barn.

ORGANIZATION

Beast heart adepts have no formal organization of their own, but many are loosely associated with local dungeoneering guilds.

Not only are beast heart adepts valuable allies when exploring below ground, but they also train inexperienced adventurers by providing real monsters for use in nonlethal battles.

However, beast heart adepts usually remain outside the hierarchy of the guild, whose members both need and disdain them.

The sole advantages for beast heart adepts are compensation (feeding monsters is expensive) and legitimacy.

With proper papers from the guild, beast heart adepts can bring their monsters into a city without arousing the ire of the local authorities.

Beast heart adepts who used to be druids often retain ties to whatever formal organization they had joined previously.

Essentially, they are specialists among druids, focusing on magical beasts instead of animals.

Druids grudgingly admit that most of a beast heart adept’s companions have as much a place in the natural world as any animal, and they call upon the nearest beast heart adept when they need to remove a monster from their region.

Just as with the dungeoneering guilds, however, beast heart adepts cannot advance in druid society beyond the rank of “distasteful but necessary”.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people see the monsters long before they notice the master, if they notice him at all.

In civilized areas, the majority of townsfolk are hostile to monsters, and by extension to the beast heart adept who brought them.

However, commoners are indifferent to a beast heart adept who travels solely with companions that are known for their good temperament or that are used as mounts, such as hippogriffs, giant eagles, or griffons.

Still, these creatures are fairly unusual, and the beast heart adept probably treats them more like friends than beasts of burden, anyway.

In wilderness regions, NPC attitudes improve.

Seasoned adventurers are indifferent to a beast heart adept and his monsters, no matter what their breeds, once informed that these particular creatures are not for slaying. Druids and rangers are friendly to a beast heart adept whose companions are magical beasts.

They appreciate his intentions, even if they find his methods strange.

If he has any aberrations in his pack, however, druids and their ilk are merely indifferent.

Monsters react differently only if a beast heart adept keeps one of their own kind.

Creatures that have an Intelligence score of 1 or 2 regard any monstrous companion of the same race as friendly.

Smarter monsters treat similar creatures indifferently, unless the companion’s alignment has changed significantly as a result of serving its master.

For example, a lawful good blink dog might become neutral evil while serving as a monstrous companion.

In such cases, others of its kind treat the companion with open hostility, considering it a perversion to be destroyed.

The beast heart adept is treated with equal hostility for bending the creature’s nature to his will.

BEAST HEART ADEPT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (dungeoneering) can research beast heart adepts to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some adventurers would rather learn about monsters than fight them.

They call themselves “beast heart adepts”.

DC 15: Beast heart adepts train and befriend common dungeon monsters.

They keep to themselves, mostly, but you’ll never find anyone who knows more about the ways of monsters.

They’re your best bet for firsthand knowledge about all kinds of creatures.

DC 20: Many beast heart adepts are former druids who have given up contact with the outside world, sick of trying to explain their fascination with monsters.

Just because a particular creature is typically evil, that doesn’t mean a beast heart adept who trains one is evil, too.

Somehow, he can convince even the nastiest monsters to see things his way.

Beast heart adepts live far from civilization, which can make them difficult to find.

Luckily, when they come to town, the locals rarely forget it.

A successful DC 15 Gather Information check will tell the PCs whether a beast heart adept has passed through the community in the last few years, though the story will grow in the telling.

A successful DC 25 Gather Information check will put the PCs in contact with an animal trainer who has an acquaintance who has a friend who knows a beast heart adept.

However, most trainers respect a beast heart adept's desire for privacy, so the adventurers will have to persuade the trainer to lead them to the reclusive pack leader.

BEAST HEART ADEPTS IN THE GAME

It can be a challenge to add beast heart adepts to a campaign, but no more of a challenge than adding a character who has the Leadership feat.

The presence of monstrous companions will complicate combat encounters, but the beast heart adept's player controls the creatures, so most of the burden will remain with him.

Furthermore, as the PCs attain higher levels, they will gain more power than the monstrous companions will, relegating some of the creatures to noncombat functions. Cities are the bane of a beast heart adept; an urban adventure will likely deprive him of most of his class features.

Dungeon crawls, on the other hand, are his specialty, allowing him and his odd companions to explore the setting for which they were created.

Players who like outlandish characters will enjoy playing a beast heart adept.

Perhaps they previously considered playing a member of a bizarre race just for the fun of it, or maybe they obsess over the details of every monster they face.

This prestige class allows them to put different monsters through their paces and learn how the creatures handle combat.

The class might also appeal to strategists because it lets them direct several combatants in battle and thus have more control over the tactical situation.

ADAPTATION

Some campaigns might include organizations of beast heart adepts that focus on one specific monster (or one group of monsters) to the exclusion of others.

For example, a beast heart adept guild might train aerial creatures to defend a mountaintop city, adding hippogriffs, giant eagles, griffons, and pegasi to the city's garrison. Such trainers might call themselves "aeriemasters" instead. On the other hand, orc wolfmasters could be bound to packs of worgs and winter wolves, leading them in war against their hated elf rivals.

In both cases, consider replacing the monster empathy and monster lore abilities with other minor powers more suited to a narrow focus.

DUNGEON LORD

It is said that the lich knows every stone in his infernal hold, and that any who dare to enter provoke his wrath.

He can stroll through traps that would crush any other, and glide through the darkness while calling out doom.

That dungeon is his domain, his home, and there is no way to defeat him in its halls.

—From the tale of Virdangast, dungeon lord

Some creatures become so familiar with their home that they can navigate it with their eyes closed and are attuned to the smallest change.

Intruders tread on dangerous ground, facing a foe with a significant edge.

When the home is a dungeon, the result is a dungeon lord. Undisputed masters of their environment; dungeon lords possess a supernatural awareness of their home and a fierce desire to crush those who dare to invade it.

BECOMING A DUNGEON LORD

Although the entry requirements for the dungeon lord prestige class are relatively simple, aspirants must have complete familiarity with one entire, specific dungeon environment.

This requirement excludes most adventurers from the class and opens it up to creatures that actually live in the dungeon.

Although the abilities of a dungeon lord do not add to a creature's spellcasting progression or other typical class features, they grant impressive powers in relation to dungeons, making this prestige class ideal for a number of monsters.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Special: Intelligence 10 or higher.

Special: Ability to cast spells, or any spell-like or supernatural ability.

Special: Complete familiarity with the chosen dungeon environment and knowledge of the contents of every chamber (including other inhabitants, doors, traps, hidden objects, and all magical and mechanical effects).

Special: Must be an aberration, dragon, fey, magical beast, monstrous humanoid, outsider, or undead.

Alternatively, humanoids of the goblinoid and kobold subtype can enter this class.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Disable Device, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Search, Spot, Swim, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

A dungeon lord's abilities depend on the specific dungeon environment, which must have a clearly defined area (such as an entire dungeon complex or one particularly large level).

You can be familiar with only one dungeon at a time.

If you are forced to leave your dungeon, none of the class abilities provided by this prestige class will function.

Should you be driven out of your dungeon permanently, you can designate another.

Typically, the level of familiarity needed requires at least two months of study and exploration, but it can take much longer, at the DM's discretion.

Dungeon Mastery (Ex): Your familiarity with the dungeon is so complete that you know its entire layout by memory. While inside your dungeon, you can move at normal speed when unable to see and when crossing difficult terrain. You can move through any trap in the dungeon without triggering it, unless you choose to set it off.

You automatically notice any difference to any chamber in your dungeon (such as a chair that is out of place, a bookshelf that has been reorganized, or an area of dust that has been disturbed).

You also receive a +8 bonus on Survival checks made to track creatures in your dungeon.

In addition, you can open or close any door or secret door in your dungeon as a free action.

Horde Lord (Ex): You share your knowledge of the dungeon with the minions you command.

Your allies gain a +1 bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls while you live and they are within the dungeon.

When you attain 5th level, the bonus increases to +2.

Dungeon Step (Su): At 2nd level, you gain the ability to use dimension door (PH 221) to travel to any location in your dungeon.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to your Intelligence modifier (minimum 1).

You cannot take others with you when you use this ability. Your caster level for this effect is equal to your Hit Dice.

Complete Awareness (Su): At 3rd level, you gain complete awareness of your dungeon.

You can use clairvoyance/clairaudience (PH 209) at will to view any chamber in the dungeon.

In addition, you receive a mental alarm, as the alarm spell (PH 197), whenever anyone enters the dungeon.

This alarm tells you the location at which the intruder entered, but it gives no other details.

Your caster level for these effects is equal to your Hit Dice.

Dungeon Minions (Ex): At 3rd level, you share your mastery of the dungeon with your allies.

They can open and close doors and secret doors in the dungeon as free actions.

They ignore difficult terrain within the dungeon that is caused by persistent, enduring features, such as rubble, cracks in the floor, and so forth.

A newly introduced obstacle, such as an overturned cartload of apples, does not fall into this category.

Animate Objects (Sp): Beginning at 4th level, you can cause the dungeon itself to rise up against intruders.

Once per day, you can cast animate objects (PH 199) on any object in the dungeon.

Your caster level for this effect is equal to your Hit Dice.

Dungeon Defender (Ex): At 5th level, you become the unquestioned master of your dungeon.

You defend it with the righteous fury of one whose cherished home is threatened.

When you face intruders within your dungeon, you gain immunity to fear effects, and you gain a +2 morale bonus on attack rolls, damage rolls, saving throws, and checks.

In addition, the DC of the save against any spell, spell-like ability, or supernatural ability you use increases by 1.

Leadership: At 5th level, you gain Leadership as a bonus feat.

If you already have the feat, you gain a +4 bonus to your Leadership score.

PLAYING A DUNGEON LORD

You are the master of your domain, and you know it.

The dungeon is your sanctuary, your home, and those who dare to intrude upon it without your permission are despoilers, bent upon theft and murder.

While within your dungeon, you are at the height of confidence, bordering on arrogance, for none can hope to defeat you.

That does not mean, however, that you should underestimate intruders.

They bring tools that are tailored to your destruction.

When the time is right, you must act swiftly and decisively.

Until such time, conceal your plans.

Outside your dungeon, you are nervous and uneasy.

The external world is foreign to you and beyond your control.

That makes you vulnerable, and you should strive to return to familiar territory as quickly as possible.

COMBAT

In combat, use your abilities and the tools around you wisely.

Since you control the environment, use it to your advantage.

Plan for a fight in nearly every chamber and develop a strategy for any possibility.

Place traps, tools, and weapons where they will have the most effect.

Take advantage of your mobility in darkness and through difficult terrain.

If you have minions, make sure that their environment suits their abilities and minimizes their weaknesses.

If you must make a final stand, do it in an area that has been customized to enhance your strengths.

Do not be afraid to retreat if a battle turns against you.

Your opponents might score small victories, but you can outlast them.

Perhaps you appear to cede ground to your enemies only to lure them into greater danger.

Always spy on your foes to determine their powers and abilities.

Prey upon their confidence and use your knowledge about their tactics to your advantage.

Nullify their strengths, and you will make quick work of them.

At the height of your power, during a confrontation deep within the dungeon, focus your minions and animated objects on the opponent who poses the greatest threat.

This ploy gives you ample time to deal with the remaining intruders.

ADVANCEMENT

The dungeon lord prestige class does little to advance your other abilities, so to increase your power, take levels in other classes.

Most dungeon lords turn to spellcasting and take levels in the cleric, sorcerer, or wizard classes.

They offer versatility and allow you to summon allies, conjure obstacles, and alter the landscape of the dungeon to confound intruders.

Other options include classes that enhance your combat abilities.

These are useful for deterring intruders, but they put you in a considerable amount of danger.

Instead once you have the Leadership feat, add minions to your dungeon, along with a cohort to lead them and to orchestrate defense.

RESOURCES

Expect no assistance of any kind from other dungeon lords. In fact, they might seek to harm your cause if they view you as a threat or covet your dungeon.

The only resources you can count on are those in your dungeon.

All the creatures, magic items, and traps in it are at your disposal.

DUNGEON LORDS IN THE WORLD

"I'm telling you we are being watched.

The fiend seems to know our every move.

He's ready for us at every turn."

—Regdar, dungeon intruder

Dungeon lords make excellent masters of nearly any subterranean redoubt.

They know everything that transpires in their environment and can use that knowledge to great advantage.

Gloating and overconfident, these masterminds are best used as recurring menaces.

As the PCs descend from level to level, they might encounter a dungeon's lord now and again, but the final showdown should occur in the climactic battle, when the master has no other choice.

And of course, the dungeon lord has prepared a special battlefield that plays to his many strengths.

Dungeon lords need not be of evil alignment.

A gold dragon dungeon lord, for example, might use its power to protect its lair and would be happy to lend some of its knowledge to adventurers who help it drive out a threat.

The daily life of a dungeon lord is as varied as those who take up the class.

For most, the day (or specified period, as there are few clocks underground) begins with a tour of the dungeon to ensure that no one has disturbed any careful preparations or set off any traps.

Especially paranoid dungeon lords might perform this check several times a day.

The tour is followed by time spent increasing defenses or modifying chambers to better suit their needs.

Otherwise, most dungeon lords keep busy honing their skills, such as crafting magic items, researching new spells, and training (or creating) minions.

Some dungeon lords, especially undead, spend long periods of time motionless, sitting on an ancient throne or sleeping in a sarcophagus.

These eternal guardians mimic the rest that they are forever denied.

But they can remain inactive only if the entire dungeon is sealed and there is little other work to be done.

ORGANIZATION

No formal organization of dungeon lords exists.

The only exception occurs when several dungeon lords band together to control a particularly large multilevel dungeon.

These individual leaders often pay homage to a master who controls the largest, grandest, or deepest layer of the dungeon.

Together, they form a council, meeting only when the need is greatest.

Distrusting one another but unable to leave the dungeon, they are forced to cooperate to some small degree.

NPC REACTIONS

All residents of a dungeon treat the dungeon lord with the utmost respect and reverence.

Those who fail to do so quickly find themselves expelled or worse.

Servants show their respect through groveling, strict obedience, and a zealous work ethic.

This deference extends to those in the dungeon lord's favor. Angering the master's lieutenant can carry as dire a consequence as angering the lord himself.

Few outside the dungeon lord's realm know of his existence, and in most cases, that is how he likes it.

To the majority of townsfolk, the dungeon lord is just a tale told to make children eat their vegetables.

DUNGEON LORD LORE

Characters who have the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (dungeoneering) can research dungeon lords to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

Lore about a specific dungeon lord can be learned only with a Knowledge check appropriate to that type of creature (such as Knowledge [the planes] for an outsider).

DC 10: Some creatures dwell in a dungeon for so long that they become intimately familiar with all its details.

These creatures are known as dungeon lords.

DC 15: Dungeon lords are masters of their environment. Their strong connection to their dungeons allows them to know when anything is out of place.

DC 20: Powerful dungeon lords can sense intruders and turn the dungeon to attack them.

Outside the dungeon, though, their abilities are greatly diminished.

DC 25: A dungeon lord can move about its lair at will and spy on intruders.

Reckless explorers should prepare to face a mighty foe who knows everything about them and can strike at any time.

DUNGEON LORDS IN THE GAME

You can bring a dungeon lord into your game as part of the standard dungeon design process.

Because the prestige class is well suited to NPCs, it gives you a great deal of flexibility when running an encounter with an evil mastermind who works behind the scenes to thwart the characters.

However, a dungeon lord is not a skilled combatant or spellcaster, so any creature that takes this prestige class should already have considerable powers.

Much of a dungeon lord's strength comes from its preparation and planning.

For example, a vampire wizard might spy on the PCs and learn that the rogue can evade area-effect spells.

As a result, the cunning master prepares a hold person spell for that particular threat.

ADAPTATION

Although the focus of this prestige class is the dungeon environment, it could be adapted to any other contained lair or outpost, which need not be evil in nature.

A king's captain who has levels in this class can watch the castle (his environment) carefully for intruders to protect the monarch.

A silver dragon might treat sacred ruins as its dungeon, using its power to watch over the dead and guard an ancient weapon that might one day be needed again.

TRAPSMITH

“That, my friends, is what we in the trade call a blood melon. A nasty little trap designed to fire razor-tipped darts into your head when you bend down to look through the keyhole.

Stand back—I’ll take care of this.”

—Kalder Phentley, trapsmith

Many adventurers view traps as nuisances—just more obstacles to be overcome—but some see traps as an art form.

Similar to a rogue in many respects, a trapsmith hones her craft to a level of perfection that few can hope to emulate. Simple and crude traps offend her, and complicated death traps cause her to leap about (cautiously, of course) in wonderment and joy.

More than just an expert at disarming devices, a trapsmith excels at rigging deadly surprises to harm her enemies, secure her camp, and confound pursuers.

BECOMING A TRAPSMITH

A trapsmith needs a high number of skills and the trapfinding class feature, so many members of this prestige class begin their careers as rogues.

Other classes can qualify, including ninjas, scouts, and spellthieves (all from Complete Adventurer), factotums (see page 14), and rangers who have the trap expert alternative class feature (see page 12).

But rogues have the easiest time of it.

Because the trapsmith is a skill-based character, she must have a high Intelligence score.

A high Dexterity score also proves to be of great value, adding to a number of her skills.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Craft (trapmaking) 8 ranks, Disable Device 8 ranks, Open Lock 5 ranks, Search 8 ranks.

Special: Trapfinding class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Craft, Disable Device, Escape Artist, Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Listen, Open Lock, Profession, Search, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As a trapsmith, your abilities revolve around using mundane traps and magic traps to your advantage. After attaining only a few levels, you are the most qualified member of your party at dealing with traps, and your abilities allow you to protect your fellows in a number of ways.

Versatility is key when designing your character, because while traps are a common danger, they are not always present.

Make sure to carry plenty of supplies so that you can make your own traps to use against enemies.

Booby Traps (Ex): You can quickly set up simple booby traps (see the sidebar) to harm and hinder your foes.

BOOBY TRAPS

A trapsmith can create a number of different traps to hinder and harm foes. Each trap described below includes information on its area, effects, base cost, and cost per use. The base cost covers the parts of the trap that are reusable if recovered. The cost per use covers the pieces that are destroyed or expended when the trap is set off. All traps below are mechanical traps with a touch trigger.

A trapsmith can disable and disassemble one of his own traps without making a check. This process takes approximately 1 minute.

Other booby traps are possible with your DM's approval.

Alarm Trap: This trap is little more than a series of bells attached to a thin trip wire. When the wire is breached, the bells ring, and those nearby can attempt a DC -5 Listen check to notice the noise. This trap takes 1 round to set up per 10 feet of trip wire used. Anyone who runs into the trap can attempt a Reflex save to avoid setting it off (DC equal to 1/2 your Craft [trapmaking] check result).

Base Cost: 1 gp/10 ft.

Cost/Use: —.

Advanced Version: The DC of the Reflex save to avoid setting off an advanced alarm trap is equal to your Craft (trapmaking) check result.

Bolt Trap: This trap fires a light or heavy crossbow at one target that breaks a trip wire. The crossbow makes a single attack with a bonus equal to 1/2 your Craft (trapmaking) check result. The bolt deals standard damage for its type, but you can use masterwork or magic crossbows and bolts to enhance the accuracy or damage. The trap must be reset after the crossbow fires. The trap can cover a line of up to 20 feet.

Base Cost: 35 gp (light crossbow) or 50 gp (heavy crossbow); add 300 gp for a masterwork crossbow.

Cost/Use: None, or the cost of the ammunition if it is masterwork or magic.

When setting up a trap, make a Craft (trapmaking) check. The check result is the Difficulty Class of an attempt to find the trap by making a Search check.

Half the check result is the DC of an attempt to disarm the trap by making a Disable Device check.

The check result affects other variables, too; see the Booby Trap sidebar below for details.

Setting up a booby trap is usually a full-round action, though some take longer, as noted in the sidebar.

Starting at 3rd level, your skill improves such that you can create advanced versions of the simple booby traps you already know.

Master Disarmer (Ex): Your skill at finding and disarming traps is legendary.

When dealing with a trap, add your trapsmith level to your Search checks, Disable Device checks, and Open Lock checks.

Trap Sense (Ex): You are adept at evading the effects of traps, gaining bonuses at 1st level, 3rd level, and 5th level. See the barbarian class feature (PH 26).

Trap sense gained from other sources (such as barbarian or rogue levels) stacks with this benefit.

Spells: If you are smart enough, you might gain the ability to cast arcane spells.

To cast a particular spell, you must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Your bonus spells are based on your Intelligence.

Saves to avoid the effects of your spells have a DC of 10 + the spell's level + your Int bonus (if any).

You cast spells as a bard does.

Advanced Version: An advanced bolt trap fires up to three bolts from three separate crossbows. Setting up an advanced trap takes 2 rounds and requires three crossbows (tripling the base cost as appropriate to the type).

Drop Trap: A heavy or dangerous item is rigged to fall on anyone who crosses a trip line. When the trip line is breached, the item drops, making a touch attack with a bonus equal to 1/2 your Craft (trapmaking) check result. You can rig an alchemical item (which deals damage appropriate to the item) or a heavy object such as a stone (which deals 1d6 points of bludgeoning damage). The trap can cover a single 5-foot-square area.

Base Cost: 1 sp.

Cost/Use: Varies depending upon the cost of the dropped item.

Advanced Version: An advanced drop trap can drop up to three alchemical items, a very heavy object (which deals 3d6 points of bludgeoning damage), or a net (which entangles the target, who can move freely but must make a successful DC 20 Escape Artist check to get out of the net).

Trip Rope Trap: This trap is made up of a strong rope attached tautly between two points. If anyone tries to cross the rope, it makes a trip attempt with a bonus equal to 1/2 your Craft (trapmaking) check result. The first creature to cross through the trap causes the rope to go slack, and it must be reset before the trap can be used again. The trap can cover a line of up to 20 feet.

Base Cost: 10 gp.

Cost/Use: —.

Advanced Version: An advanced trip rope trap makes the trip attempt using your Craft (trapmaking) check result for the opposed check. In addition, if the check succeeds, the trap can trip another creature that crosses through its space.

Table 1–4, below, details how many spells you can learn at each level.

TABLE 3–4: TRAPSMITH SPELLS KNOWN — Spells Known —

Level	1st	2nd	3rd
1st	2	—	—
2nd	3	—	—
3rd	3	2	—
4th	4	3	—
5th	4	3	2

Choose your spells from the following list.

1st—arcane sight, cat's grace, clairaudience/clairvoyance, dispel magic, fox's cunning, gaseous form, haste, knock, protection from energy.

2nd—arcane eye, dimension door, lesser globe of invulnerability, Otiluke's resilient sphere, stoneskin, stone shape.

3rd—Bigby's interposing hand, break enchantment, fabricate, greater dispel magic, wall of stone.

Arrow Proof (Su): When a trap activates, you know how to lessen the impact and reduce the damage.

Starting at 2nd level, you gain damage reduction 5/— against the effects of traps.

The reduction applies only to damage from physical attacks, such as arrows, crushing blocks, or pits.

Damage caused by spells or magical effects is not reduced. Damage reduction gained from multiple sources stacks, but only for damage dealt by a trap.

Quick Fingers (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you can disarm traps more quickly.

When you attempt a Disable Device check, use the table below in place of the table on page 72 of the Player's Handbook.

Device	Time	Disable Device DC
Simple	1 standard action	10
Tricky	1 full-round action	15
Difficult	1d4 rounds	20
Wicked	1d4 rounds	25+

If you have the quick fingers alternative class feature (see page 13), reduce the time needed for checks on difficult and wicked traps to 1d3 rounds.

Unweave (Su): At 3rd level, your understanding of magic traps allows you to unweave their magic, as if targeting the trap with dispel magic (PH 223).

Your caster level for this ability equals 5 + your trapsmith level.

You can use this ability three times per day.

It works only against magic traps, but spells such as alarm (PH 197), glyph of warding (PH 236), and the symbol spells (PH 289–291) are valid targets.

Dance through Danger (Ex): Starting at 4th level, when you make a Search check to find a trap and your result exceeds the DC by 5 or more, you can move past the trap without setting it off.

This benefit applies only to you—the careful movements and balance needed cannot be taught to your fellow adventurers.

Spell Proof (Su): Starting at 4th level, you enjoy a measure of protection against magic traps.

You gain spell resistance equal to 15 + your trapsmith level.

This spell resistance applies only to magic traps, which include spells such as fire trap (PH 231), explosive runes (PH 228), glyph of warding (PH 236), and the symbol spells (PH 289–291).

Avoid Disaster (Su): At 5th level, you learn to negate the effects of a trap as they happen.

Once per day, when a trap is sprung, you can make a Disable Device check as an immediate action.

If the check succeeds, you quickly disable the trap and avoid its effects.

If the check fails, the trap activates as normal.

PLAYING A TRAPSMITH

Traps are your profession, and even the most deadly of them fail to daunt you.

Whenever a new contraption is encountered, you want to be the first to examine it, figure out how it works, and try to disarm it.

Success shows that your knowledge and skill are superior to that of the trap's builder.

Failure, while disappointing, teaches you a valuable lesson that should never be forgotten.

Traps of your own design are your pride and joy.

Your home is littered with working traps and half-finished contraptions that you constantly tinker with.

When exploring, you always carry a few components for booby traps because you never know when you might need one.

COMBAT

Combat is dirty business, not at all like the challenge of a well-designed trap.

Any brute can swing an axe or pummel with a fist.

While you do not shy away from battle, you are a thinking combatant, always looking for the best position or tactic.

You frequently use combat maneuvers such as trip, disarm, and aid another to get the job done.

Let the barbarian deliver the killing blow to foes that you set up for him.

If a fight occurs near a trap, try to entice your foes into activating it.

When creating traps of your own design, place them in locations where they cannot be ignored or bypassed.

ADVANCEMENT

To build on the abilities granted by the trapsmith prestige class, take levels in other classes that enhance your role.

The rogue, ninja, scout, and spellthief classes work well in this regard, giving you abilities that complement your trap expertise.

Sneaking ahead of the party to set up a trip rope trap and then luring foes into it exemplifies this synergy.

The spellcasting classes are good choices, too, because many spells act as traps or help you deal with traps.

Similarly, do not overlook the bard class, which allows you to bolster your companions in multiple ways.

RESOURCES

Trapsmiths have no formal organization, but small groups of these specialists occasionally gather to show off their work.

You can count on basic aid from your fellows if needed, but do not expect more than room and board for a few days and rudimentary supplies.

TRAPSMITHS IN THE WORLD

"So, you're interested in a trap, eh?"

Well, I'm sure I could build you the finest, most deadly trap in the world, if you have the coin."

—Jeris "Twitch" Twitolin, trapsmith

Whether they are romping through dungeons logging traps or running a thriving shop in a busy metropolis, trapsmiths make excellent NPCs for a group to encounter.

They can provide the expertise needed to determine the builder of a devious trap, to disable an apparently unsolvable contraption, or to construct a new device.

Trapsmiths make excellent hirelings or commissioned specialists for PCs who are willing to pay for their brilliance.

Not surprisingly, trapsmiths spend most of their time honing their craft.

Many practice on harmless dummy traps, build new variations of classic devices, and sketch wild designs for experimental contraptions.

These pursuits lead trapsmiths to every corner of the world as they search for rare parts and study new traps firsthand—sometimes in the middle of a monster-filled dungeon.

To make a living, many trapsmiths who have ranks in Craft (locksmith) quietly build intricate locks, which always seem to be in short supply.

Others advertise their talents more actively, constructing all manner of traps for the wealthy and powerful.

However, not all trapsmiths are helpful.

Some grow so obsessed with their work that they begin to lure innocent victims into their traps as test subjects.

Evil trapsmiths might go so far as to build a whole dungeon of deadly traps and hide a fabulous treasure at the end just to draw adventurers into its halls.

ORGANIZATION

Lacking their own guild or group, some trapsmiths join guilds of locksmiths, clock makers, and other professionals with similar talents.

Once a year, though, trapsmiths from across the world gather to show off their latest designs and try to best one another with the most foolproof trap.

These fascinating competitions are open to the public and allow only nonlethal traps.

Unfortunately, zealous contestants have been known to ignore the rules on occasion.

NPC REACTIONS

Most commoners respect trapsmiths for their skill but view them as eccentric or obsessed.

When an NPC hires a trapsmith to build a contraption, she treats him with the utmost respect and tolerates his arrogance and bravado.

But when the job is done, she regards him only with suspicion.

After all, employers rarely trust someone who knows the secrets of their defenses.

In many towns, the locals talk in hushed tones about the local trapsmith, whose home emanates odd noises and receives even stranger deliveries.

TRAPSMITH LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Knowledge (local) can research trapsmiths to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Traps are difficult and dangerous to handle.

Experts in this field are known as trapsmiths.

DC 15: Trapsmiths are highly skilled at locating and disarming traps of all kinds.

They are also said to be quite talented at creating such devices.

DC 20: Trapsmiths can set up quick, simple booby traps with ease.

Some also cast spells that emulate the effects of traps.

DC 25: Experienced trapsmiths can avoid much of the danger posed by a trap, shrugging off effects that would kill others.

TRAPSMITHS IN THE GAME

It is easy to introduce trapsmiths into nearly any campaign. For example, wherever a particularly trap-laden dungeon exists, the local trapsmith might be cataloging the devices with wonder, or cleaning them out before they claim more explorers' lives.

On the other hand, if he was the one who trapped the dungeon in the first place, he might send a party of adventurers through its gate on a phony mission, just so he can test his work.

Perhaps the PCs hire a rival trapsmith who is certain she can lead them safely through the dungeon.

Or in a race to a prize between two groups of dungeoneers, the party that retains the services of a trapsmith will have a significant edge over its competition.

As a player option, a trapsmith makes a good PC in campaigns that feature plenty of traps.

A party that spends all its time in the wilderness will have little use for such a specialist, but explorers who want to clear out a huge dungeon will find a trapsmith a vital ally.

ADAPTATION

As a fairly generic prestige class, the trapsmith should fit into any campaign setting with little or no adjustment.

EXPANDED PSIONICS HANDBOOK (3.5)

CEREBREMANCER

Cerebremancers access both the arcane mysteries of spellcasting and the psionic powers of the mind.

Cerebremancers tend to be driven, ambitious sorts, willing to sacrifice more subtle abilities in exchange for pure power.

Only characters who have training in both psionic power and in the arcane arts can become cerebremancers.

Wizard/psion is the most common class combination, because both classes place a premium on high Intelligence. Sorcerer/psions are less common.

Psychic warriors are usually too interested in physical combat to devote themselves to intense study, and wilders generally lack the necessary patience.

NPC cerebremancers often act as liaisons between the arcane and psionic worlds.

Many continuously hunt for further knowledge that will enhance their mastery of both arcane spells and psionic powers.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cerebremancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Knowledge (psionics) 6 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Psionics: Able to manifest 2nd-level powers.

CLASS SKILLS

The cerebremancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration* (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher

Script (Int), Knowledge (arcana) Int, Knowledge (psionics)* (Int), Profession (Wis), Psicraft* (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the cerebremancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cerebremancers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Powers Known: When a new cerebremancer level is attained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also attained a level in any one arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if he had also gained a level in any one manifesting class he belonged to previously.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of either class would have gained (bonus metamagic, metapsionic, or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of cerebremancer to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class and manifesting class the character has, then determines spells per day, caster level, power points per day, powers known, and manifest level accordingly. For example, a 3rd-level wizard/3rd-level psion who takes a level in cerebremancer has the same access to spells as a 4th-level wizard and the same number of power points as a 4th-level psion.

But his wizard familiar and his psicrystal (if he has one) won't gain any new abilities.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class or more than one manifesting class before he became a cerebremancer, he must decide to which class he adds each level of cerebremancer for purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, power points per day, powers known, and manifest level.

ELOCATER

Elocaters are renowned for their agile combat stratagems, using their knowledge of motion and space to set themselves up for quick attacks against slower opponents. Elocaters excel on the field of battle, slipping in and out of harm's way like a violent wind, surprising foes with their sudden opportunistic attacks and then darting away before foes are able to retaliate.

Elocaters are also known for "getting there", wherever "there" is.

They are swift travelers, proficient in simple scouting or in gaining entrance into locked and trapped treasure vaults. Psychic warriors seem most attracted to the elocater class, though combat-oriented wilders and psions of the kineticist and nomad disciplines also find elocater class features of interest.

NPC elocaters often work as guides or scouts, able to find a way forward when all mundane methods have been exhausted.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an elocater, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Feats: Mobility, Spring Attack.

Psionics: Able to manifest 1st-level powers.

CLASS SKILLS

The elocater's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration* (Con), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (psionics), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Psicraft (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Psionic Device* (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the elocater prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Elocaters are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light armor. Powers Known: At every level indicated on the table, the character gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if she had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on). This essentially means that she adds the level of elocater to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifester level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before she became an elocater, she must decide to which class she adds the new level of elocater for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifester level.

Scorn Earth (Su): At 1st level, an elocater's feet lift from the ground.

From now on, she can float a foot above the ground.

Instead of walking she glides along, unconcerned with the hard earth or difficult terrain.

While she remains within 1 foot of a flat surface of any solid or liquid, she can take normal actions and make normal attacks, and can move at her normal speed (she can even "run" at four times her normal speed).

However, at distances higher than 1 foot above any surface, her speed diminishes to 10 feet per round.

While she remains within 1 foot of a surface, she can make melee and ranged attacks normally, but if she moves any higher, she incurs the penalties on melee and ranged attack rolls as if she were the subject of the psionic levitate power (see the levitate spell description, page 248 of the Player's Handbook).

Sidestep Charge (Ex): At 1st level, an elocater gains Sidestep Charge (see page 51) as a bonus feat, even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

If the character already has this feat, she gains no benefit.

Opportunistic Strike (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, an elocater's hyperawareness of spatial relations gives her an instinctive view of the battlefield, which allows her to make a cunning attack against distracted opponents.

The elocater gains a +2 insight bonus on her attack roll and her damage roll (if the attack hits) for the first attack she makes against an opponent that has been dealt damage in melee by another character since the elocater's last action. At 5th level the insight bonus increases to +4, and at 8th level the insight bonus increases to +6.

Dimension Step (Su): An elocater of 3rd level or higher can slip psionically between spaces as if using the psionic dimension door power, once per day.

The elocater cannot bring any other creatures with her. Her manifester level for this effect is equal to her elocater level.

Flanker (Ex): An elocater of 4th level or higher can flank enemies from seemingly impossible angles.

She can designate any adjacent square as the square from which flanking against an ally is determined (including the square where she stands, as normal).

She can designate the square at the beginning of her turn or at any time during her turn.

The designated square remains her effective square for flanking until she is no longer adjacent to it or until she chooses a different square (at the start of one of her turns). The character can even choose a square that is impassable or occupied.

Transporter (Ex): At 6th level, an elocater learns both psionic teleport and psionic plane shift.

These powers are in addition to any powers the elocater normally learns by advancing a level.

The elocater treats these powers as if they were 3rd-level powers on her class list.

This means, among other things, that manifesting these powers costs 5 power points.

(If the character does not have a high enough manifester level to manifest 3rd-level powers, such as might be the case for some psychic warriors who qualify for this class, the character cannot manifest these powers until she has attained the required manifester level).

Capricious Step (Ex): At 7th level, an elocater can take an extra 5-foot step in any round when she doesn't perform any other movement (except for the first 5-foot step).

Like the first, the second 5-foot step does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The character can take the extra 5-foot step immediately after taking the first, or wait until the end of her other actions for the round.

In all other ways, the rules for taking a 5-foot step apply, as described on page 144 of the Player's Handbook.

Dimension Spring Attack (Su): An elocater of 9th level or higher can use her dimension step ability in conjunction with her Spring Attack feat once per day.

This ability can be used only against opponents within 60 feet to which the elocater has line of sight.

She can dimension step up to the target, use Spring Attack, and then use dimension step to return to her starting point. (When she uses this ability, the total distance she can travel before and after the attack is not limited by her speed).

The use of this ability counts as her use of the dimension step ability on that day (and this ability is not available during a day when she has already used dimension step).

Accelerated Action (Su): When she attains 10th level, an elocater can accelerate herself and thereby take more actions than normal.

An elocater can accelerate herself for a total of 5 rounds per day.

She can choose to parcel out her accelerated actions in 1-round increments.

(This effect is not cumulative with similar effects that provide additional actions, such as schism or a haste spell—and in fact an elocater can't take an accelerated action if affected by these or similar effects).

If she makes a full attack while accelerated, an elocater can make one extra attack with any weapon she is holding. The attack is made using her full base attack bonus, plus any modifiers appropriate to the situation.

If the elocater uses her accelerated action to move, she gains an enhancement bonus to her speed of +30 feet.

The elocater can use her accelerated action to manifest a power, as long as she has not already manifested a power in the current round and the one she wants to manifest has a manifesting time of 1 standard action or shorter.

While accelerated, she gains a +2 dodge bonus on attack rolls and Reflex saves and a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class. Any condition that makes her lose her Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (if any) also makes her lose these dodge bonuses.

FIST OF ZUOKEN

The Fists of Zuoken are members of an order of martial artists devoted to mastering their own physical and mental development while protecting psions and other psionic creatures.

The fists of Zuoken believe that mental powers are to be nurtured in all who possess them.

In addition to their formidable prowess in combat, fists of Zuoken develop mental powers that surprise and astound their enemies.

Almost all fists of Zuoken are monks who are affiliated with a specific order created to guard centers of psionic learning—usually fortresses in the middle of forbidding wastelands.

Naturally, the monks learned from the psionic masters as well, and thus the fists of Zuoken were born.

The most common place to find NPC fists of Zuoken is a monastery where psionic learning is undertaken; such a place often employs fists of Zuoken as guards.

But if psionic creatures are undergoing persecution elsewhere, the fists of Zuoken often come to their rescue, leaving only ruined bodies and burnt-out minds in their wake.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Fist of Zuoken, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skill: Concentration 9 ranks.

Feat: Wild Talent.

Special: Still mind class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

The Fist of Zuoken's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Concentration* (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (psionics)* (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Psicraft* (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Fist of Zuoken prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fists of Zuoken gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Monk Abilities: A Fist of Zuoken's class levels stack with his monk levels for the purpose of determining his unarmed damage and bonuses to Armor Class and unarmored speed.

His class levels do not apply to other monk abilities such as flurry of blows, slow fall, and so on.

Power Points/Day: A Fist of Zuoken can manifest powers. His ability to manifest powers is limited by the power points he has available.

His base daily allotment of power points is given on Table 6-3: The Fist of Zuoken.

In addition, he receives bonus power points per day if he has a high Wisdom score (see Table 2-1: Ability Modifiers and Bonus Power Points).

His race may also provide bonus power points per day, as may certain feats and items.

If a Fist of Zuoken has power points from a different class, those points are pooled together and usable to manifest powers from either class.

Bonus power points from having a high ability score can be gained only for the character's highest psionic class.

Powers Known: A Fist of Zuoken chooses his powers from the psychic warrior power list.

At 1st level, a Fist of Zuoken knows one psychic warrior power of your choice.

Each time he attains a new level, he learns one new power. A Fist of Zuoken can manifest any power that has a power point cost equal to or lower than his manifesting level.

The total number of powers a Fist of Zuoken can manifest per day is limited only by his daily power points.

In other words, a 5th-level Fist of Zuoken (with a total of 15 power points, not counting any gained for a high Wisdom score) could manifest a power costing 1 power point fifteen times in one day, a power costing 5 power points three times in one day, or any combination of power point costs that does not exceed 15 power points in total.

A Fist of Zuoken simply knows his powers; they are ingrained in his mind.

He does not need to prepare them (in the way that some spellcasters prepare their spells), though he must get a good night's sleep each day to regain all his spent power points.

The Difficulty Class for saving throws against Fist of Zuoken powers is 10 + the power's level + the Fist of Zuoken's Wisdom modifier.

For example, the saving throw against a 2nd-level power has a DC of 12 + Wis modifier.

Maximum Power Level Known: A Fist of Zuoken gains the ability to learn one 1st-level power when he takes his first level in the prestige class.

As he attains each new odd-numbered level, a Fist of Zuoken gains the ability to master more complex powers. A 3rd-level Fist of Zuoken can learn powers of 2nd level or lower, a 5th-level Fist of Zuoken can learn powers of 3rd level or lower, and so on.

To learn or manifest a power, a Fist of Zuoken must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the power's level.

ILLITHID SLAYER

Only the ignorant dismiss the illithid threat.

So say those who have dedicated their lives to the eradication of the mind flayer “infection”.

Psionic beings know the real dangers illithids pose better than nonpsionic individuals, and the most dedicated among them follow the code of the illithid slayer.

A primary illithid slayer credo is “Do or die”, where “do” means “find and slay illithids”.

Slayers have no use for those with faltering hearts (another of their credos—which, truth be told, number in the hundreds).

It is a poorly kept secret that while slayers are most adept at hunting and slaying illithids, their abilities make them deadly to any psionic creature.

Any character with some psionic ability can become an illithid slayer, as long as he or she hates illithids enough. Dwarves who take this prestige class are known as caradhaker, which loosely means “mindstalker”.

In fact, illithid slayers as a distinct class may have first originated among the dwarves, though the slayers themselves say they received their lore from a different, secret source.

NPC slayers sometimes travel in bands of two or three and enjoy identifying such group by grisly names.

Slayer bands may be hired as mercenaries by wealthy folk who travel in illithid-infested areas.

Between commissions, they are likely to strike out on their own, attempting to uncover the location of another mind flayer outpost, or better yet, a sunless city.

Rumors also speak of rogue slayer bands that have branched out and now hunt any and all psionic creatures, not just illithids.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an illithid slayer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skill: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 4 ranks.

Feat: Track.

For example, a Fist of Zuoken with a Wisdom score of 13 can manifest powers of 3rd level or lower.

Bonus Psionic Feat: At 5th and 10th level, a Fist of Zuoken can take any psionic feat from the psionic feats described in Chapter 3 as a bonus feat.

He must still meet the prerequisites for the feat.

Multiclass Note: A monk who becomes a Fist of Zuoken may continue advancing as a monk.

Psionics: Must have a power point reserve of at least 1 power point.

Special: Must have killed an illithid, either individually or as part of a group composed of no more than six members.

CLASS SKILLS

The illithid slayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration* (Con), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Listen (Wis), Psicraft* (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the illithid slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Illithid slayers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with all types of armor.

Powers Known: Beginning at 2nd level, an illithid slayer gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if she had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of illithid slayer to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifesting level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before she became an illithid slayer, she must decide to which class she adds the new level of illithid slayer for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifesting level.

If the character did not belong to a manifesting class before taking this prestige class (for example, if she was a soulknife or a ranger with the Wild Talent feat), she does not gain manifesting levels.

Favored Enemy (Illithid) (Ex): When she enters the class, an illithid slayer formally declares illithids and illithid kin (such as neothelids; see page 204) as the enemy she detests above all others.

Due to her extensive study of her foes and training in the proper techniques for combating them, she gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against illithids.

Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against creatures of this kind.

At 4th level the bonuses increase to +4, at 7th level to +6, and at 10th level to +8.

Illithid Sense (Su): An illithid slayer can sense the presence of illithids within 60 feet of herself, even if they are hidden by darkness or walls, but she cannot discern their exact location.

Brain Nausea (Su): At 2nd level, a slayer gains a constant defensive ability somewhat similar to the aversion power.

Any creature that attempts to eat the slayer's brain must succeed on a Will save (DC 15 + slayer's class level) or become disinclined to do so for 24 hours thereafter.

A creature that fails this save may take any action it desires except extracting the slayer's brain (but does not realize it is being so affected).

This ability is active even if the slayer is unconscious, stunned, or otherwise helpless.

Lucid Buffer (Ex): At 3rd level, an illithid slayer becomes especially skilled at resisting mental attacks.

She gains a +4 competence bonus on saving throws against all compulsions and mind-affecting effects.

This ability is active even if the illithid slayer is unconscious, stunned, or otherwise helpless.

Cerebral Blind (Su): After reaching 6th level, an illithid slayer is protected from all devices, powers, and spells that reveal location.

This ability protects against information gathering by clairsentience powers or effects that reveal location.

The ability even foils bend reality, limited wish, miracle, reality revision, and wish when they are used to gain information about the slayer's location (however, metafaculty can pierce this protective barrier).

In the case of remote viewing or scrying that scans an area an illithid slayer is in, the effect works, but the slayer simply isn't detected.

Remote viewing or scrying attempts that are targeted specifically at an illithid slayer do not work.

This ability is active as long as the slayer is psionically focused.

Breach Power Resistance (Su): An illithid slayer of 8th level or higher can enhance her weapon with psionic might. Each successful melee attack (or ranged attack if the target is within 30 feet) she makes with her weapon against a creature with power resistance temporarily reduces its power resistance by 1.

Unless the creature is slain, its lost power resistance returns all at once 12 hours later.

This ability is active as long as the slayer is psionically focused.

Cerebral Immunity (Su): On reaching 9th level, an illithid slayer gains protection from all devices, powers, and spells that influence the mind.

This ability shields her against almost all mind-affecting powers and effects (though the slayer can selectively allow powers or spells to affect her).

The ability even foils bend reality, limited wish, miracle, reality revision, and wish when they are used to mentally influence an illithid slayer.

This ability is active as long as the illithid slayer is psionically focused.

Blast Feedback (Su): At 10th level, an illithid slayer becomes able to turn an illithid's favorite attack against itself.

If a slayer makes her saving throw when attacked with mind blast, the mind blast rebounds upon the attacker!

Only the original attacker is targeted in the rebound effect. If the original attacker fails a Will saving throw (DC equal to that of the original attack), the attacker is affected normally by the mind blast.

METAMIND

Metaminds know that accumulating the most power in the shortest time is the key to psionic superiority.

All metaminds strive for “power to burn”—they are unconcerned with glamor or flashy behavior, but rather are single-mindedly determined to amass as much psychic power as possible.

Someone who takes one or more levels of metamind is sometimes colloquially referred to as a “head” by other psionic characters.

In game terms, a metamind is all about power points.

Any character with some manifesting ability can become a metamind to enhance his or her mental strength—at the expense of discovering higher-level powers.

Psions and wilders who need an extra edge for prolonged use of specific powers often take several levels of metamind.

NPC metaminds are often found among dedicated schools of psions who have banded together in opposition to a particular threat, such as illithids.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a metamind, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks, Psicraft 4 ranks.

Feat: Psicrystal Affinity.

Psionics: Manifester level 4th.

CLASS SKILLS

The metamind's class skills are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Concentration* (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Knowledge (psionics), and Psicraft (Int).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the metamind prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Metaminds gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Powers Known: At every even-numbered level, a metamind gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if he had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of metamind to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifest level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before he became a metamind, he must decide to which class he adds the new level of metamind for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifest level.

Free Manifesting (Ps): At 1st level, a metamind can manifest any 1st-level power he knows for free (without spending power points) three times per day.

At higher levels, a metamind gains the ability to freely manifest additional higher-level powers: three 2nd-level powers per day at 3rd level; one 3rd-level power per day at 5th level; one 4th-level power per day at 7th level; and one 5th-level power per day at 9th level.

This benefit applies only to the power point cost of an unaugmented power.

Points spent to augment a power and an experience point cost (if any) must be paid as normal.

Cognizance Psicrystal (Ex): At 2nd level, a metamind masters the trick of storing excess power points in a psicrystal.

The psicrystal is now treated as a cognizance crystal (see page 167) capable of storing 5 power points, in addition to its psicrystal abilities.

At every even-numbered level, a metamind becomes able to store an additional 2 power points in his psicrystal, to a maximum of 11 points at 8th level.

Font of Power (Ps): A 10th-level meta mind can act as a living cognizance crystal, producing seemingly endless power points once per day, for up to 1 minute.

His eyes shine like tiny stars, and faint illumination seems to beam out of his mouth and the end of each of his fingers. While so empowered, he can manifest any of his powers without drawing from his power point reserve.

He finds the power points he needs welling up within his own body.

If a metamind using this ability enters a metaconcert (see metaconcert, page 115), his power point reserve is accessed normally for the purpose of his contributing to the pool.

PSION UNCARNATE

Formless, fleshless, and unbound by the limits of corporeality—this is the goal of every psion uncarinate.

“Flesh is weak, but mind is strong”, or so goes the mantra taught by the Golden Mind.

The Golden Mind's origin is rumored to be offworld or offplane, and the Golden Mind is said to be an entity that has lost its way home (or has been exiled; the truth is unclear).

What is clear is that the Golden Mind teaches a potent skill—the ability to loose one's spirit from its shell and become a psion uncarinate.

Only hardcore manifesters are likely to be drawn to becoming uncarinate.

Thus, psions and wilders most often take the uncarinate path, while combat specialists such as psychic warriors are happy in their physicality.

NPC psion uncarinates are most often found “haunting” sites containing great stores of psionic lore, attempting to learn ever more about the heights that a mind might reach.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a psion uncarname, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks, Psicraft 8 ranks.

Feat: Psionic Body.

Psionics: Able to manifest 3rd-level powers.

Special: Must have had some instruction by another psion uncarname, have access to teachings of the Golden Mind, or belong to an organization that has access to or is administered by the Golden Mind.

CLASS SKILLS

The psion uncarname's class skills are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Bluff (Cha), Concentration* (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Disguise (Cha), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (psionics)* (Int), Psicraft (Int)*, and Sense Motive (Wis).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the psion uncarname prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Psion uncarnames gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Powers Known: At every level indicated on Table 6–6, a psion uncarname gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if he had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of psion uncarname to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifest level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before he became a psion uncarname, he must decide to which class he adds the new level of psion uncarname for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifest level.

Incorporeal Touch (Su): Beginning at 1st level, a psion uncarname can make up to three melee touch attacks per day that each deal 1d6 points of damage if they hit.

The character's Strength modifier is not applied to this attack, but it is effective against incorporeal creatures (and against corporeal creatures while the psion uncarname is incorporeal) The character's hand and arm seem to become slightly translucent when he makes these attacks.

A miss still counts as a use of the ability.

While uncarname (see below), a psion uncarname can make melee touch attacks at will that do not count against his uses of this ability.

For every four levels higher than 1st the psion uncarname attains, the damage on these attacks increases by 1d6 points.

Uncarnate Armor (Su): A psion uncarname wearing armor (or using inertial armor or a similar effect) gets his armor bonus to AC even when he becomes incorporeal (see Shed Body, below).

However, unlike other incorporeal creatures, a psion uncarname does not gain a deflection bonus to Armor Class from his Charisma modifier.

This ability works even if the armor being worn becomes incorporeal (such as through the use of the assume equipment ability described below).

Shed Body (Su): Starting at 2nd level, a psion uncarname can become incorporeal (or "uncarnate") once per day as a standard action.

The character can remain uncarname for up to 1 minute. During this time, the character's body fades into an immaterial form that retains the character's basic likeness. While uncarname, the character gains the incorporeal subtype (see below).

He gains a fly speed equal to his land speed (perfect maneuverability).

His material armor remains in place and continues to provide its armor bonus to AC (see Uncarnate Armor, above).

His material weapons also remain corporeal.

Losing his physical form allows the character to more easily access his mental abilities, and he gains a +1 bonus on all save DCs for powers he manifests while uncarname.

He can use equipment normally, deriving benefits from items that enhance his capabilities; however, all his equipment remains material even when the character is uncarname (but see the assume equipment ability, described below).

Often, a psion uncarname appears almost like a ghost wearing items of the material world.

This doesn't make his equipment more susceptible to attack (the normal rules for attended objects apply), but it does make it impossible for the character to enter or pass through solid objects while wearing solid equipment. If he drops his material equipment, he can pass through solid objects at will as described below.

At 6th level and higher, a psion uncarname can shed his body twice per day for up to 1 minute each time.

Incorporeal Subtype: An incorporeal psion uncarname has no physical body.

He can be harmed only by other incorporeal creatures, magic weapons or creatures that strike as magic weapons, and spells, spell-like abilities, or supernatural abilities. He is immune to all nonmagical attack forms.

Even when hit by spells or magic weapons, he has a 50% chance to ignore any damage from a corporeal source (except for positive energy, negative energy, force effects such as concussion blast, or attacks made with ghost touch weapons).

An incorporeal psion uncarname has no natural armor bonus—and, unlike other incorporeal creatures, does not gain a deflection bonus from his Charisma modifier.

An incorporeal psion uncarname can enter or pass through solid objects (subject to the restrictions described in the shed body and assume equipment abilities), but must remain adjacent to the object's exterior, and so cannot pass entirely through an object whose space is larger than his own.

He can sense the presence of creatures or objects within a square adjacent to his current location, but enemies have total concealment (50% miss chance) from an incorporeal psion uncarname that is inside an object.

To see farther from the object he is in and attack normally, the incorporeal psion uncarname must emerge.

An incorporeal psion uncarnate inside an object has total cover, but when he attacks a creature outside the object he only has cover, so a creature outside with a readied action could strike at him as he attacks.

An incorporeal psion uncarnate cannot pass through a force effect.

An incorporeal psion uncarnate's attacks pass through (ignore) natural armor, armor, and shields, although deflection bonuses and force effects (such as force screen) work normally against him.

He can pass through and operate in water as easily as he does in air.

An incorporeal psion uncarnate cannot fall or take falling damage.

He cannot make trip or grapple attacks, nor can he be tripped or grappled.

In fact, he cannot take any physical action that would move or manipulate an opponent or its equipment, nor is he subject to such actions.

Incorporeal creatures have no weight and do not set off traps that are triggered by weight.

An incorporeal creature moves silently and cannot be heard with Listen checks if it doesn't wish to be.

It has no Strength score, so its Dexterity modifier applies to both its melee attack rolls and its ranged attack rolls.

Nonvisual senses, such as scent and blindsight, are either ineffective or only partly effective with regard to incorporeal creatures.

Incorporeal creatures have an innate sense of direction and can move at full speed even when they cannot see.

Assume Equipment (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a psion uncarnate can designate a number of pieces of his worn equipment (including armor and weapons) equal to his psion uncarnate level to become incorporeal when he uses his shed body ability.

This has no effect on the equipment's function, but now when the psion uncarnate is incorporeal, he can enter or pass through solid objects while wearing nothing other than the designated equipment.

Once designated, the equipment automatically changes to incorporeal when the character sheds his body, and it returns to corporeality when the character does.

The character can change his designations as he desires.

Assume Likeness (Su): At 4th level and higher, while incorporeal, a psion uncarnate can assume the likeness of any Small, Medium, or Large creature as a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The character's abilities do not change, but he appears to be the creature that he assumes the likeness of, allowing him the ability to effectively disguise himself and bluff those who might wonder at his true nature.

Each physical interaction with a creature requires a successful Bluff check (opposed by the creature's Sense Motive check) to convince the creature of the psion uncarnate's new appearance.

The psion uncarnate must not do anything to give away his true (incorporeal) nature in order for the bluff to be successful; for instance, if he accepts an item from another creature only to have it fall through his immaterial hands, the Bluff check automatically fails.

However, a Bluff check would be allowed if the psion uncarnate uses his telekinetic force ability (see below) to hold the received item.

When using his assume likeness ability, a psion uncarnate has an additional +10 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks.

If he can read an opponent's mind, he gets a further +4 circumstance bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks.

Telekinetic Force (Su): Beginning at 7th level, while incorporeal, a psion uncarnate can use a telekinetic force effect (see the power description, page 135) as a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The save DC is equal to 14 + the psion uncarnate's key ability modifier (either Int, Wis, or Cha).

The character's manifester level is the manifester level of the effect.

Even while corporeal, a psion uncarnate can use this ability, but only three times per day (uses while he is uncarnate do not count against this use limit).

Uncarnate Bridge (Su): At 8th level, as a creature of almost pure mind, a psion uncarnate becomes more closely attuned to the minds of other creatures.

He gains the ability to transport himself via the minds of living creatures.

Once per day as a standard action while incorporeal, he can seamlessly enter any living creature with an Intelligence score and pass to another living creature with an Intelligence score that is within line of sight of the first creature.

The psion uncarnate must be in a space adjacent to the entry creature before transporting, and he appears in a space adjacent to the destination creature after transporting.

The entry and destination creatures need not be familiar to the character.

A psion uncarnate cannot use himself as the entry or destination creature.

Neither creature need be a willing participant.

When exiting the destination creature, the psion uncarnate chooses an adjacent square in which to appear.

Entering and leaving a creature is painless, unless the psion uncarnate wishes otherwise (see below).

In most cases, though, the destination creature finds being the endpoint of a mental bridge surprising and quite unsettling.

If he desires, a psion uncarnate can destructively exit the destination creature.

If the creature fails a Will save (DC 15 + psion uncarnate's key ability modifier), the exiting psion uncarnate tunes his mental form to destructively interfere with the target's mind.

He bursts forth explosively from the creature's body, dealing it 10d6 points of damage.

Uncarnate (Ex): At 10th level, a psion uncarnate becomes a being of pure psionic consciousness.

This ability is similar to shed body, except the character is permanently incorporeal (and gains that subtype).

If the character desires, he can become corporeal once per day for up to 1 minute, but he spends the rest of his time as an entity of mind untethered by the physical world.

PYROKINETICIST

Pyrokineticists know that a little psionic power goes a long way—for those interested only in fire.

They find both beauty and utility in the chaotic shape of flame, its spectrum of fuel-dependent colors, its warming heat, and its never-ending hunger.

Those who take one or more levels in the pyrokineticist class are sometimes colloquially referred to as “pyros”.

Pyrokineticists like fire.

A lot.

Any character with some psionic ability is a possible candidate for this prestige class.

Psions (particularly kineticists) and wilders might consider it acceptable to give up power acquisition in other areas if they have a passion for flame.

Psychic warriors also enjoy the pyro’s powers.

Soulknives often take levels in this class to gain access to the weapon afire ability for their mind blades.

Any character with the Wild Talent feat may also find this class appealing.

NPC pyrokineticists are rare, because society frowns on those whose pursuit in life is to “burn it all”.

Thus, pyros are rarely found in large communities (unless employed as secret enforcers).

Instead, they are more likely to be found on the fringes of society, as hermits in barren lands where everything around them has been burned to ash.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a pyrokineticist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Craft (alchemy) 1 rank,

Knowledge (psionics) 2 ranks.

Psionics: Must have a power point reserve of at least 1 power point.

Special: Must have set fire to a structure of any size just to watch it burn.

CLASS SKILLS

The pyrokineticist’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration* (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), and Psicraft* (Int).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the pyrokineticist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Pyrokineticists gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Fire Lash (Ps): A pyrokineticist gains the ability to fashion a 15-foot-long whip of fire from unstable ectoplasm as a move-equivalent action.

She takes no damage from a fire lash she creates, and if she releases her hold, it immediately dissipates.

The lash deals 1d8 points of fire damage to a target within 15 feet on a successful ranged touch attack.

A pyro can take Weapon Focus and Weapon Specialization (if she otherwise meets the prerequisites) in conjunction with the fire lash, as well as any feats that apply to the use of a standard whip.

The whip remains in existence as long as the pyrokineticist holds it.

Fire Adaptation (Ex): At 2nd level, a pyrokineticist becomes resistant to fire, gaining a +4 bonus on all saving throws against fire and heat spells and effects.

In addition, she gains resistance to fire 10.

Hand Afire (Ps): A pyrokineticist of 2nd level or higher can activate this ability as a move-equivalent action.

Flames engulf one of the pyrokineticist’s hands (but do her no harm).

Her unarmed attacks with that hand are treated as armed. Such attacks deal an extra 2d6 points of fire damage.

Bolt of Fire (Ps): Starting at 3rd level, as a standard action, a pyrokineticist can launch a bolt of psionically manifested fire at any target in line of sight within 60 feet.

This effect is treated as a ranged touch attack and deals 1d6 points of fire damage for each class level the pyro has.

Weapon Afire (Ps): At 4th level and higher, a pyrokineticist can activate this ability as a move-equivalent action.

Flames that harm neither her nor the weapon engulf one weapon she holds (which can be a projectile such as a stone, bullet, arrow, or bolt).

The weapon deals an extra 2d6 points of fire damage on a successful hit.

The weapon retains this effect for as long as the pyrokineticist wields it.

Nimbus (Ps): Beginning at 5th level, a pyrokineticist can activate this ability as a move-equivalent action.

Flames that harm neither the pyrokineticist nor her equipment engulf her entire body.

While she is aflame, the character’s Charisma score increases by 4, she can make a melee touch attack for 2d6 points of fire damage, and she gains damage reduction 5/magic.

If she is struck in melee, the attacker takes 2d6 points of fire damage.

This ability lasts for up to 1 minute per pyrokineticist level and is usable once per day.

Firewalk (Su): Beginning at 6th level, as a free action a pyrokineticist can expend her psionic focus (see the Concentration skill description, page 37) to literally walk on air.

She moves at her normal speed in all directions, including vertically, but cannot move more than double her speed in a round.

A firewalking pyro leaves footprints of flame in the air that disperse in 2 rounds, but her tread does not deal damage. She must pay 1 power point per round spent traveling in this fashion.

Fear No Fire (Ex): At 7th level, a pyrokineticist becomes highly resistant to fire, gaining a +8 bonus on all saving throws against fire and heat spells and effects and also gaining resistance to fire 20.

Greater Weapon Afire (Ps): At 8th level, when a pyrokineticist activates her hand afire ability or her weapon afire ability, her unarmed attack or weapon deals an extra 4d6 points of fire damage instead of 2d6.

Touch attacks made while she uses the nimbus ability likewise deal 4d6 points of damage instead of 2d6.

Heat Death (Ps): A pyrokineticist who reaches 9th level can expend her psionic focus and take a full attack action to raise the internal temperature of one living creature within 30 feet to lethal levels.

The target must succeed on a Fortitude saving throw (DC 14 + pyro's Cha modifier) or die horrifically as its blood (or other internal fluid) boils.

Even on a successful save, the target takes 4d8 points of fire damage from the heat.

Conflagration (Ps): At 10th level, a pyrokineticist gains the ability to create a massive burst of raging flames around herself, burning everything in the area.

Once per day, as a standard action, she can use this ability to deal 15d6 points of fire damage in a 30-foot-radius burst emanating from herself.

Any creature or object caught in the burst can make a Reflex saving throw (DC 15 + pyro's Cha modifier) for half damage.

Anyone failing the Reflex save against the conflagration must also make a Fortitude saving throw (same DC) or die due to extreme shock from the intense heat.

THRALLHERD

Thrallherds manipulate the minds of others as if they were clay in the hands of a sculptor.

Some creatures are more susceptible than others to the thrallherd's unconscious, but continual, call to service. And so they come, eager to be led, happy to follow, and completely under the thrallherd's control.

In this way, thrallherds keep a minor menagerie of enthralled servants that are anxious to do their will. This class doesn't offer much for those who enjoy doing things themselves.

Because thrallherds delegate most tasks, including their own physical defense, psions (especially telepaths) are most apt to follow this path.

NPC thrallherds are perfect villains or valuable lieutenants because of each one's ability to hold the minds of several underlings simultaneously, and without needing to actively recruit new believers to replace those that perish while executing their assigned duties.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a thrallherd, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks.

Feat: Inquisitor.

Psionics: Manifest level 5th and able to manifest mindlink.

CLASS SKILLS

The thrallherd's class skills are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Bluff (Cha), Concentration* (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (psionics), Psicraft (Int), and Sense Motive (Wis).

* See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the thrallherd prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thrallherds gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Powers Known: At every level from 2nd through 9th, a thrallherd gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if she had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of thrallherd to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifest level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before she became a thrallherd, she must decide to which class she adds the new level of thrallherd for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifest level.

Thrallherd (Ex): A thrallherd who has just entered the class sends out a subtle psychic call for servants, and that call is answered.

Essentially, the character gains something akin to the Leadership feat (see page 106 of the Dungeon Master's Guide), but with some important differences.

Those who answer a thrallherd's call are not referred to as cohorts and followers, but rather as thralls and believers, respectively.

They do not appear because they admire the character and want to serve her, but because a hidden psychic resonance connects the thrallherd and her servants.

As with the Leadership feat, a thrallherd has a Leadership score that determines the highest-level thrall and believers she can attract.

A thrallherd's Leadership score is equal to her character level + her Cha modifier + her thrallherd level.

(Note that her thrallherd level is counted twice).

This score is not affected by any of the modifiers mentioned on page 106 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

As with the Leadership feat, the called thrall's level is limited, even if the character's Leadership score would indicate a higher-level thrall.

Unlike with the Leadership feat, the level limit of a thrall is equal to the character's total level minus 1 (not level minus 2, as is true for cohorts).

A thrallherd cannot take the Leadership feat; if the character already has it, the feat is lost and replaced by this ability; those who were previously cohorts and followers go their separate ways, and those who are more mentally pliable show up later to take up roles as thralls and believers.

A thrallherd's first thrall and believers arrive within 24 hours of her entry into this class; likewise, lost thralls and believers are replaced within 24 hours.

Use the following table instead of the one in the Dungeon Master's Guide to determine the level of a thrallherd's thrall and the number of believers of various levels a thrallherd can attract.

Leadership Score	Thrall Level	— Number of Believers by Level —

Psionic Charm (Ex): At 3rd level, a thrallherd adds psionic charm to her powers known (if she doesn't already know it). Once per day, she can manifest psionic charm at a reduced power point cost.

The cost of psionic charm is reduced by the thrallherd's level, to a minimum of 1 power point.

The effect of this power is still restricted by the thrallherd's manifester level.

For example, a 5th-level psion/3rd-level thrallherd can manifest a psionic charm normally costing 7 points by spending only 4 points, but cannot manifest a psionic charm normally costing 10 points, since the effect of the power would be greater than her manifester level of 7th.

Psionic Dominate (Ex): At 5th level, a thrallherd adds psionic dominate to her powers known (if she doesn't already know it).

Once per day, she can manifest psionic dominate at a reduced power point cost.

The cost of psionic dominate is reduced by the thrallherd's level, to a minimum of 1 power point.

The effect of this power is still restricted by the thrallherd's manifester level.

Greater Dominate (Ex): At 7th level and higher, a thrallherd does not have to pay 2 additional power points when she augments psionic dominate to affect animals, fey, giants, magical beasts, and monstrous humanoids.

This reduced point cost does not increase the save DC of the power as if she had spent the additional power points.

Superior Dominate (Ex): At 9th level, a thrallherd does not have to pay 4 additional power points when she augments psionic dominate to affect aberrations, dragons, elementals, and outsiders (in addition to the creature types mentioned in the greater dominate ability).

This reduced point cost does not increase the save DC of the power as if she had spent the additional power points.

Twofold Master (Ex): At 10th level, a thrallherd can add a second thrall to her herd.

This second thrall's maximum level is equal to the thrallherd's level minus 2, even if her Leadership score would indicate a higher-level thrall.

WAR MIND

War minds are expert fighters who claim to possess unequaled knowledge in the art of war.

Through a combination of inner contemplation and external study of an ancient text called the Talariic Codex, war minds grow in their craft of arms and war.

Those who study the Talariic Codex learn several tenets, collectively known as chains of war.

As a war mind masters one chain, he opens himself to learn the next chain in the series, should he desire to continue to bend his mind to the intensive studies required to advance in this class.

Soulknives and psychic warriors are most likely to take up study of the Talariic Codex, though finding a copy of the ancient text may prove a task all its own.

Even those who initially begin their careers as fighters or barbarians may pick up some training in a psionic class for the express purpose of eventually being able to study as a war mind.

NPC war minds can sometimes be found directing military forces, leading elite strike teams, fighting in prestigious arena events as a local favorite, or in some other important warfare-oriented capacity.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a war mind, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Knowledge (history) 2 ranks, Knowledge (psionics) 8 ranks.

Psionics: Must have a power point reserve of at least 1 power point.

Special: Must have had some instruction by another war mind, have access to Talariic texts, or belong to an organization that has access to Talariic texts.

CLASS SKILLS

The war mind's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Concentration* (Con), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (psionics)* (Int), and Psicraft* (Int).

*See new skills and expanded uses of existing skills in Chapter 3 of this book.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for other skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the war mind prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: War minds gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Power Points/Day: A war mind can manifest powers. His ability to manifest powers is limited by the power points he has available.

His base daily allotment of power points is given on Table 6–9: The War Mind.

In addition, he receives bonus power points per day if he has a high Wisdom score (see Table 2–1: Ability Modifiers and Bonus Power Points).

His race may also provide bonus power points per day, as may certain feats and items.

If a war mind has power points from a different class, those points are pooled together and usable to manifest powers from either class.

Bonus power points from having a high ability score can be gained only for the character's highest psionic class.

Powers Known: A war mind chooses his powers from the psychic warrior power list.

At 1st level, a war mind knows one psychic warrior power of your choice.

At every even-numbered level higher than 1st, he learns one new power.

A war mind can manifest any power that has a power point cost equal to or lower than his manifest level.

The total number of powers a war mind can manifest per day is limited only by his daily power points.

In other words, a 5th-level war mind (with a total of 20 power points, not counting any gained for a high Wisdom score) could manifest a power costing 1 power point twenty times in one day, a power costing 5 power points four times in one day, or any combination of power point costs that does not exceed 20 power points in total.

A war mind simply knows his powers; they are ingrained in his mind.

He does not need to prepare them (in the way that some spellcasters prepare their spells), though he must get a good night's sleep each day to regain all his spent power points.

The Difficulty Class for saving throws against war mind powers is 10 + the power's level + the war mind's Wisdom modifier.

For example, the saving throw against a 2nd-level power has a DC of 12 + Wis modifier.

Maximum Power Level Known: A war mind gains the ability to learn one 1st-level power when he takes his first level in the prestige class.

As he attains each even-numbered level beyond 2nd, a war mind gains the ability to master more complex powers.

A 4th-level war mind can learn powers of 2nd level or lower, a 6th-level war mind can learn powers of 3rd level or lower, and so on.

To learn or manifest a power, a war mind must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the power's level.

For example, a war mind with a Wisdom score of 13 can manifest powers of 3rd level or lower.

Chain of Personal Superiority (Ex): At 1st level, a war mind learns the first principle of warfare for the individual combatant: the ability to both deal punishment and take it. Calling upon inner reserves of knowledge and dedication, a war mind can provide himself with a +2 insight bonus to Strength and Constitution for up to 1 minute.

A war mind can use this power three times per day.

Activating this power is a free action.

At 7th level, the insight bonus to Strength and Constitution improves to +4.

Chain of Defensive Posture (Ex): At 2nd level, a war mind learns the second principle of warfare for the individual combatant: the ability to avoid the enemy's counterattacks if that enemy is not immediately overwhelmed.

Calling upon inner reserves of knowledge and dedication, a war mind can provide himself with a +2 insight bonus to Armor Class for up to 1 minute.

A war mind can use this power three times per day.

Activating this power is a free action.

At 8th level, the insight bonus to Armor Class improves to +4.

Enduring Body (Ex): At 3rd level, a war mind learns the third principle of warfare for the individual combatant: to unleash in oneself the spirit of the enduring body.

The Talariic texts tell of the perfect warrior, a legend named Ununquam the Vanquisher, who lived many thousands of years ago but who achieved deeds that live on through the texts.

The spirit of the ideal body transforms a war mind, granting him damage reduction 1/—.

At 6th level, his damage reduction improves to 2/—.

At 9th level, his damage reduction improves to 3/—.

Sweeping Strike (Ex): At 5th level, a war mind gains the ability to make great, sweeping swings with a melee weapon.

On each melee attack a war mind makes, he can choose squares he threatens that are adjacent to each other, and his attacks apply to creatures in those two squares equally.

A war mind can use this ability on any attack, even an attack of opportunity or a cleave attempt.

A war mind cannot use this ability if he has moved more than 10 feet since the end of his last turn.

If a war mind drops one or both of his foes with a sweeping strike, he can attempt a cleave normally; however, he makes only one cleave attempt per sweeping strike, even if he drops more than one foe.

Chain of Overwhelming Force (Su): At 10th level, a war mind learns the fourth principle of warfare for the individual combatant: to discover the underlying violence of the world and deliver it in a perfectly executed attack.

The Talariic texts describe precisely the state of mind necessary to tap into this underlying energy and apply it to a single attack, dealing an extra 10d6 points of damage.

A war mind can use this power once per day.

Activating this power is a free action.

If the attack misses, the power is wasted.

FAITHS AND PANTHEONS (3.0)

ARACHNE

The Demon Queen of Spiders is a cruel, capricious deity who delights in pitting her worshipers against one another. Arachnes are priestesses of Lolth who have risen to the pinnacle of drow society, worshiping Lolth only for the power she grants.

Clerics or cleric/fighters are the mostly likely characters to adopt the arachne prestige class, although other class combinations, particularly those including sorcerer, ranger, and wizard, are not unknown.

Arachnes are only very rarely nondrow.

Arachnes are commonly found in drow cities of the Underdark in which priestesses of Lolth reign supreme, such as Menzoberranzan or Ched Nasad.

Many arachnes are matriarchs of drow noble houses or the daughters of such matron mothers.

Arachnes encountered outside drow cities are often young and less powerful, seeking to make a name for themselves in hopes of establishing or seizing control of their own noble houses some day.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arachne, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Aranea, choldrith, deep dragon, drow, half-drow, or half-fiend draegloth.

Gender: Female.

Alignment: Chaotic evil.

Skills: Handle Animal 3 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Speak Language (Abyssal), Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Still Spell, Survivor, plus either Exotic Weapon Proficiency (hand crossbow) or Weapon Finesse (dagger).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Domain: Spider.

Patron: Lolth.

Special: Must have passed the Test of Lolth (given to above-average followers of Lolth upon reaching 6th level).

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of an arachne (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Scry (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the arachne prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An arachne gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each arachne level, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class.

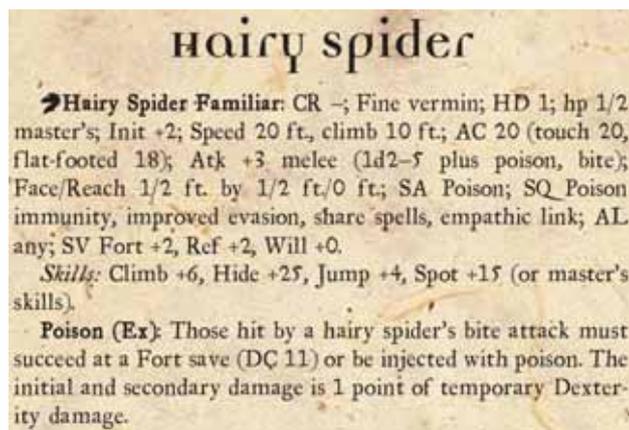

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an arachne, the player must decide to which class to add each arachne level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

The caster level of spell-like abilities is equal to the arachne's divine spellcaster level.

Familiar (Su): All arachnes can obtain a hairy spider familiar.

For purposes of this ability, an arachne's caster level is considered to be her highest divine caster level.

Spider Affinity (Ex): All arachnes are immune to the venom of spiders and spiderlike creatures.

Moreover, arachnes can communicate with arachnids and spiderlike creatures of all kinds as long as the creature has an Intelligence score of at least one.

Normal spiders never attack or harm arachnes unless magically controlled.

Spidereyes (Su): At 2nd level, an arachne can see through the eyes of her familiar as long as it is within 400 feet + 40 feet per divine caster level.

As long as the arachne and her familiar remain on the same plane, she can see and hear as if she were standing where it is, and during her turn she can switch her perception from its location to her own or back again as a free action.

Webspinner (Sp): At 3rd level, an arachne can ignore web spells and spider webbing as if affected by a freedom of movement spell.

She can walk along webs as if on solid ground (no Balance check required).

The web spell becomes part of her spell list as a 2nd level cleric spell.

Spider Mount (Sp): At 5th level, an arachne can call an unusually intelligent, strong, and loyal spider to serve her as a steed.

Such mounts are always monstrous spiders, with medium-size (for a Small arachne) or large (for a Medium-size arachne) being most common.

In all other respects, such spider mounts are identical to a paladin's mount, as discussed in Chapter 3 in the Player's Handbook.

Should the arachne's spider mount die, she may call for another one after a year and a day.

The new mount has all the accumulated abilities due a mount of the prestige class level of the arachne.

Dominant Male Drow (Sp): At 7th level, an arachne can cast dominate person once per day, affecting only male drow.

Zin-Carla (Su): At 9th level, an arachne can create a special form of undead called a zin-carla; see the sidebar on this page.

A spirit-wraith cannot be made to cast spells without the arachne losing control over its mind entirely, but can fully use its combat abilities and any skills possessed in life.

The arachne maintains a telepathic link to the spirit-wraith over any distance (as long as both remain on the same plane) that allows her to communicate with it and control it.

The arachne must make a successful Concentration check opposed by the spirit-wraith's Will saving throw once per day and whenever the spirit-wraith enters combat in order to continue to maintain control.

Control is also severed if the arachne and the zin-carla are on different planes or if the arachne dies.

If control is ever lost for any reason, the telepathic link between arachne and spirit-wraith ends immediately and cannot be restored.

The zin-carla then becomes a free-willed undead, seeking only vengeance against its creator, and gains the supernatural ability to know the direction and distance to the arachne that animated it.

If it manages to slay the arachne, the zin-carla crumbles to dust.

In the rare circumstance when the arachne dies without the zin-carla killing her, the zin-carla becomes a free-willed undead.

The zin-carla ritual requires 8 hours and the intact corpse of the creature to be animated.

The arachne must expend 50 XP per Hit Die of the creature to be animated.

Transcendence: At 10th level, an arachne becomes a creature blessed of Lolth, transcending her mortal body and becoming a divine creature (a native outsider).

Her type changes to “outsider (chaotic, evil)”, which means she is forevermore treated as an outsider rather than a humanoid.

For instance, charm person does not affect her, but she can be affected by spells such as banishment.

Yochlol Form (Su): Once per day the arachne may take the form of a yochlol, a Large black monstrous spider, or a cloud of noxious gas (as a yochlol does), as if using a shapechange spell.

She may change form among these shapes or her own shape for a period of 1 minute per caster level.

The Test of Lolth

Lolth is a fickle and cruel goddess, believing that the drow race is best served by constantly struggling against each other. To this end, she tests some of her more exceptional followers to determine if they are worthy of her patronage—and worthy of their lives. This test, known as the Test of Lolth, is given to any Lolth-worshipping drow upon reaching 6th level, although sometimes she waits until the subject is 7th or even 8th level.

Part of the test is about loyalty. Usually Lolth plants thoughts in the mind of a friend, family member, or ally of the subject, leading him to believe he has been chosen for a special favor from the Spider Queen. (If the subject of the Test has no suitable friend, family member, or ally, Lolth chooses a cleric that has showed insufficient zeal.) In return, he must destroy one of “Lolth’s enemies” (the drow actually being tested). Lolth instructs the dupe to ambush the target, slaying the enemy of the Spider Queen. When the target is attacked, she hears whispers from the Lolth that she is being tested and that the outcome of the battle determines whether she succeeds or fails. It is a test of loyalty whether or not the subject is willing to kill an ally if the Spider Queen tells her to do so.

The rest of the test is about power and resourcefulness—whether or not the subject is strong and clever enough to defeat a powerful foe. For NPCs, the dupe in the test is always a creature with the same CR as the subject of the test. For PCs (because they are stronger than an NPC of the same level), the dupe is always a creature with a CR three higher than the test subject’s character level (so a drow PC of 6th level would face an 8th-level drow NPC, since drow have a CR of “class level +1”). The fight is usually difficult and the test subject often has to expend all her resources to survive and vanquish her foe (who must be slain in order to satisfy Lolth).

If the subject passes the test, she gains a +2 morale bonus on attacks, saves, and checks for one month. She may claim any items she wants from her fallen enemy. If she is killed, Lolth sucks her soul dry. If she fails to defeat her opponent, refuses to fight, or is defeated but left alive, she is turned into a drider and usually departs her home in shame. Other drow are used to these disappearances and those that fail are rarely spoken of again. If the dupe of the test wins, Lolth may reward him (with the morale bonus for passing the test), wipe his mind of the events, or even expose him for his attack on another drow (while drow society is used to these interpersonal conflicts, the rule is to not get caught, so someone discovered in this manner is usually executed for incompetence).

zin-carla template

Translated from Undercommon, zin-carla means "spirit-wraith." Lolth only grants the zin-carla ritual for the completion of specific tasks, and these may never be purely to work revenge or bring harm on other drow. Failure in the task brings on the disfavor of Lolth.

The soul of a spirit-wraith is forcibly returned to its body by the will of the arachne who summons it, and it resents this act.

If the zin-carla's creator loses control of it for any reason, it becomes a free-willed undead, seeking only vengeance against its creator. It gains the supernatural ability to know the direction and distance to the being that animated it. If it manages to slay its creator, the zin-carla crumbles to dust.

CREATING A ZIN-CARLA

The zin-carla template can be applied to the body of any formerly living creature with Intelligence 3 or higher. The base creature's type changes to "undead." It uses all the base creature's statistics and special abilities except as noted here.

Special Qualities: A zin-carla retains all the special qualities of the base creature and those listed below, and also gains the undead type.

Damage Reduction (Su): A zin-carla's undead body is tough, giving the creature damage reduction 10/+1.

Turn Resistance (Ex): A zin-carla has +2 turn resistance.

Abilities: As an undead creature, a zin-carla has no Constitution score.

Skills: Same as base creature.

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground.

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: Same as the base creature +1.

Treasure: Same as the base creature.

Alignment: Always neutral.

Advancement: —

Although it acts as an extension of the arachne's will, a zin-carla is an independent monster. Unlike summoned monsters, which are considered part of an enemy's CR (see Experience Awards in Chapter 7: Rewards in the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide), a zin-carla counts as a separate creature and player characters that defeat one earn experience points for that encounter. A zin-carla has a CR equal to that of the original creature +1.

AUSPICIAN

Some believe that the gods determine the success or failure of events in Faerûn.

More capricious philosophers tout the elusive force known as luck as the deciding factor of the multiverse.

The clergies of Tymora and Beshaba, however, prefer a synthesis of these beliefs, claiming that their divine patrons guide the ministrations of luck.

Further, they profess that mortals can learn to bend luck to their own benefit or to the detriment of their enemies.

Auspicians, who manipulate luck as if it were the strings of a worn mandolin, give credence to their claims.

Though the holy scriptures of Beshaba and Tymora discuss them extensively, few outside those religions know auspicians exist.

Most auspicians are followers of a deity that recognizes the role of luck, having at least some training in one of those faiths.

Many have talents as rogues, bards, or sorcerers as well.

A few rare fighters are willing to admit that luck often plays a greater role than skill in combat, and most barbarians pride strength over luck.

Auspicians occasionally sign on with adventuring bands if a member of the party is said to be particularly lucky.

For the most part, however, auspicians keep a low profile. Auspicians recognize that they have a special kinship, even if they serve different deities, and they rarely choose to confront each other directly.

It's said that more than a few of Faerûn's villains view being able to kill an auspician as a sign of divine favor, and even the most fortunate auspician knows the value of making one's own luck by avoiding danger altogether.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an auspician, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Base Save Bonuses: Fort +5, Ref +2.

Feats: Dodge, Great Fortitude, Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes.

Domain: Luck.

Special: Must take a rare ingested poison called Tyche's blood (reputed to be laced with blood taken from the husk of the goddess Tyche after she split into Tymora and Beshaba).

This poison (Fort save DC 22, 2d6 Con, 1d6 Con + 1d6 Str) is administered by another auspician, and the character cannot attempt to thwart its effects with magic (such as spells or items that give saving throw bonuses, increase Constitution, or delay or neutralize poison), although she may use the granted power of the Luck domain to reroll one of her saving throws.

If she survives, she may advance in the prestige class.

Even if she dies and is returned to life, she may become an auspician, for bad luck is a kind of luck.

CLASS SKILLS

The auspician's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the auspician prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An auspician gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each auspician level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an auspician, the player must decide to which class to add each auspician level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Every morning, an auspician prays to the force of luck, aimed at no particular deity (although they still pray to their patron as well).

Fate Domain (Su): Auspicians gain access to the Fate domain, including the granted power.

If the character already has the domain, the effects do not stack.

Lucky Blow (Ex): Once per day as a free action, an auspician may call upon her connection to the forces of luck to grant herself one extraordinarily lucky attack roll.

The decision must be made before the die is rolled.

The attack gains a +20 luck bonus.

At 5th level, the bonus increases to +25.

At 9th level, the auspician receives a +30 bonus on her daily lucky blow.

Tyche's Curse (Sp): Once per day, an auspician of 2nd level or higher may bestow Tyche's curse upon a single target within close range (25 ft. + 5 ft./2 levels).

The target receives a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 class level + Wisdom bonus) to negate the effects.

Should he fail, he finds that the strands of good luck flee from him—he becomes clumsy, forgetful, and less effective than usual.

This has the effect of a bestow curse spell, except that the duration is 1 minute/class level.

At 6th level, she may use this ability twice per day.

Fickle Finger of Fate (Ex): On reaching 3rd level, the auspician gains the extraordinary ability to affect the luck of others.

Once per day, she may reroll one roll that another creature—friend or enemy—has just made.

That creature must take the reroll, even if it is worse than the original roll.

Fickle finger of fate takes place outside the normal initiative order, but the auspician cannot use it if she is caught flat-footed.

She must be able to see the recipient to use this ability.

Note: The auspician must decide whether to reroll before the results of the roll in question are applied; otherwise she must wait for another opportunity.

She is not automatically privy to the rolls of others, especially enemies, but it is usually easy to tell when a creature makes a saving throw or hits a target.

The auspician player should notify the DM prior to a foe's roll, stating her intention to use this ability immediately if the outcome appears undesirable.

Luck Infusion (Ex): By the time she reaches 4th level, an auspician's understanding of the intricacies of fate becomes so strong that she can twist luck and fate to give her certain abilities.

Each morning while preparing spells, the auspician chooses one of the following abilities, which lasts 24 hours, or until the auspician next prepares spells.

+1 luck bonus on melee attack rolls

+1 luck bonus on ranged attack rolls

+4 luck bonus on initiative

+2 luck bonus on Fortitude saves

+2 luck bonus on Reflex saves

+2 luck bonus on Will saves

+2 luck bonus on save DCs of auspician's spells

+2 luck bonus to AC

+2 luck bonus on skill checks

Mark of Fortune (Su): Once per day, an auspician of 7th level or higher can "lend" some of her luck to an ally by tracing a sigil upon the back of the companion's right hand or appendage.

By doing so, she gives her ally one of the abilities of her luck infusion power.

She may not give her ally the same ability that she has chosen for the day, nor may she give her ally the same ability as her permanent infusion power (see below).

Immediately after tracing the mark, a mirror image of the sigil appears on the auspician's left hand or appendage, granting her a penalty that exactly mirrors the ally's bonus.

For instance, if Meleyn lent her companion a +4 luck bonus on initiative, she would take a -4 penalty on initiative.

If one of the two marks of fortune is dispelled or suppressed (such as by an antimagic field), the other is disrupted in the same way.

No creature may benefit from more than one mark of fortune at any one time.

Permanent Infusion (Ex): Upon attaining 8th level, an auspician may select one of the luck infusion effects as a permanent extraordinary aspect of her character.

Luck of the Gods (Ex): At 10th level, the auspician gains the nigh-godly power to automatically succeed at one saving throw per day, regardless of the associated difficulty class.

The automatic success must be declared before the given save is rolled, obviating the need to roll any save at all.

TABLE 4-2: THE AUSPICIAN

DOOMGUIDE

In a world filled with wise outsiders and magical divination, there's little question about what happens to a being's soul after death.

Perhaps surprisingly, this knowledge has done little to assuage the fears of the people of Faerûn, who remain frightened that some demon might carry off their spirits while in transit to the Fugue Plane.

Worse, many fear that their bodies will be unearthed and animated by the kind of debased death-obsessed spellcasters who seem common since the fall of Myrkul during the Time of Troubles.

Those who worry about life after death turn to the doomguides of Kelemvor, an elite order of spellcasting warriors in service to the Judge of the Damned, to answer their fears with promises of a painless transition and a fair judgment in the afterlife.

When not administering to the needs of those about to die, doomguides halt the spread of necromancy by cleansing Faerûn of the taint of unlife through careful application of faith, spells, and bladecraft.

As both compassionate undertakers and vigorous foes of undead, doomguides represent the inherent dualism that defines death in the Realms.

Doomguides come exclusively from the ranks of Kelemvor's clergy.

The church teems with clerics who adhere to one side of the death equation over the other.

On one side are those who prefer to usher the sick and dying into the next world through peaceful application of kind words and soothing spells.

The contrasting philosophy is practiced by those who zealously thrust their maces into the ribcages of animate skeletons and view bedside ministry as a necessary but occasionally boring interlude between great battles against undead adversaries.

A doomguide must balance between these two extremes. Further, doomguides serve the church in a less obvious way, often acting as couriers from one temple to another. Seldom attached to a particular temple, doomguides are expected to travel the world, spreading the word of Kelemvor and the lessons of a peaceful, beautiful afterlife across all Faerûn.

While all doomguides are clerics of Kelemvor to some extent, some train as fighters to better destroy undead, some are wizards or sorcerers trying to undermine necromancy from the arcane side of the problem.

Few rogues or monks become doomguides, and religion and alignment prevent barbarians, bards, druids, paladins, or rangers from becoming doomguides.

Doomguides often lead bands of adventurers to clear out enclaves of undead or punish a particularly powerful or vile necromancer.

Occasionally, they officiate at important funerals or provide life-restoring magic to those who have served the church in the past and still have important work to conduct in this world.

Their requirement for travel makes encountering a doomguide in the wilderness nearly as likely as encountering one in more urban surroundings.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a doomguide, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful neutral.

Base Save Bonus: Will +4.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks.

Feats: Extra Turning, Great Fortitude.

Spells: Ability to cast speak with dead as a divine spell.

Patron: Kelemvor.

Special: The character must have destroyed an undead of at least 5 HD, whether by using weapons, spells, or positive energy.

He does not need to have done this alone.

The character must be proficient with the bastard sword.

CLASS SKILLS

The doomguide's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the doomguide prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A doomguide gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each doomguide level, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning undead—however, see the Kelemvor's Boon ability below).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a doomguide, the player must decide to which class to add each doomguide level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Kelemvor's Boon: By grace of the Lord of the Dead, doomguides add their doomguide class levels to their cleric levels for purposes turning or destroying undead, both for the initial turning check and the turning damage roll.

Rite of the Passing (Su): As a standard action, a doomguide may touch a corpse to protect it from those who would seek to animate it.

A dead creature for whom the ritual has been performed may not be animated in any way except the direct intervention of a deity.

A doomguide may perform the rite of the passing upon one creature per doomguide level per day.

Corpses of creatures with four or more Hit Dice more than the doomguide are immune to the ritual.

Converse with Dead (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the doomguide's study of the process of death has granted him the guile and understanding to coax additional information from corpses when using the speak with dead spell.

Instead of the usual one question per two caster levels, doomguides may ask one question per caster level.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd, 6th, and 10th level, a doomguide may select a bonus feat from the following list: Divine Vengeance, Empower Turning, Extra Turning, Heighten Turning, and Quicken Turning.

Save Bonus (Ex): At 4th level, doomguides get a +4 bonus on saving throws against death effects and to saving throws to overcome a negative level.

Upon reaching 8th level, a doomguide always makes his saving throw to overcome a negative level.

Bond of Fatal Touch (Su): The doomguide's devotion to Kelemvor and dedication to the teachings of the Lord of the Crystal Spire has helped him to establish certain supernatural links to Fatal Touch, Kelemvor's powerful bastard sword.

These links manifest in the form of a pale green nimbus around the weapon, representing the ability of the doomguide to increase the power of weapons he wields. The ability lasts for 1 round each time it is used, and can be invoked as a free action a number of times per day equal to the doomguide's Charisma bonus (minimum one).

A doomguide must decide to use the ability before attacking, and if the attack misses that use is wasted.

At 5th level, the bond grants wielded weapons the ghost touch property.

At 7th level, weapons wielded by the doomguide gain both ghost touch and the undead bane properties.

At 9th level, wielded weapons gain the ghost touch, undead bane, and disruption properties even if they are not bludgeoning weapons.

The weapon's normal abilities still apply.

Ethereal Purge (Sp): At 8th level, once per day the doomguide may surround himself with a sphere of power with a radius of 5 feet per class level that forces all ethereal creatures in the area to manifest on or shift themselves to the Material Plane, as appropriate.

For example, it forces ghosts to manifest, and ethereal filchers or creatures using an ethereal jaunt spell are forced into the Material Plane.

Such creatures may attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 doomguide's class level + doomguide's Wisdom bonus) to resist this effect.

Those who fail suffer the above effects and are prevented from returning to the Ethereal Plane for 1 minute per class level.

Kelemvor's Grace (Su): At 10th level, a doomguide gains complete immunity to energy drain and death effects.

Furthermore, allies within 10 feet of him gain a +4 bonus on saving throws against death effects and to saving throws to overcome a negative level.

DREADMASTER

Dreadmasters are the ultimate tyrants.

They seek to rule absolutely (next to, of course, Bane himself), preferably through terror and domination.

They instill the fear of Bane in all, but especially in those who do not give at least lip service to his supremacy as a deity.

Dreadmasters tend to accumulate followers and build organizations—like churches or societies, or political bodies such as kingdoms, nations, or city-states—over which they can rule with an iron fist.

They want to know everything that is going on, overseeing every detail with what they see as ruthless precision and others see as an obsessive need to control.

They love to accumulate items that enhance their personal presence to better cow others, their physical strength to better beat the weak into submission, or their wisdom or mental faculties to better plot the doom of their enemies. Dreadmasters always have many enemies (whether real or imagined).

Clerics most often become dreadmasters, although wizards, sorcerers, monks with a passionate devotion to Bane or to dictatorship sometimes choose this path as well.

Rogues, fighters, and rangers become dreadmasters less frequently, though they are often part of a dreadmaster's retinue.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become dreadmaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Intimidate 5 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Feats: Leadership, Skill Focus (Intimidate), Spell Focus (Enchantment).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Clerics who are dreadmasters must have access to either the Hatred or Tyranny domain.

Patron: Bane.

Special: A cohort of at least 6th level.

CLASS SKILLS

The dreadmaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language, and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are features of the dreadmaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dreadmaster gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each dreadmaster level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a dreadmaster, the player must decide to which class to add each dreadmaster level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Dominating Aura (Su): A dreadmaster is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Enemies within 20 feet of a dreadmaster suffer a -4 morale penalty on saving throws against fear effects.

The radius of this aura increases at 3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th level.

Insidious Insight (Ex): A dreadmaster has a knack for ferreting out what others are up to so that he can more effectively keep control.

Beginning at 2nd level, dreadmasters receive a +2 circumstance bonus on Sense Motive and Gather Information checks.

Rodcraft (Ex): Dreadmasters have an affinity for magic rods, seeing them as an extension of the symbolism of the divine scepter of rulership that is also seen in Bane's favored weapon, the morningstar.

Beginning at 4th level, when a dreadmaster makes a rod, the DCs for saving throws against the powers of rods they craft are two higher than would be those made by a nondreadmaster crafter of comparable level.

They especially love to make rods of rulership, enemy detection, and lordly might.

Enhanced Leadership (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, the dreadmaster receives a +2 bonus to his Leadership score. This increases to +4 at 8th level and +6 at 10th level. (He still cannot attract a cohort of greater than his character level).

At 6th through 10th level, a dreadmaster does not suffer the -2 cumulative Leadership penalty for causing the death of a cohort for one cohort per each dreadmaster level above 5th (up to a total of five cohorts at 10th level).

Dreadmasters of 10th level do not suffer the normal general -2 Leadership penalty for cruelty.

Fanatical Loyalty (Su): Followers and cohorts of the dreadmaster become fanatically loyal to the dreadmaster, with only Bane himself inspiring greater loyalty in them. They do not balk at life-threatening actions or actions that would normally lie outside their moral compunctions or normal behavior if the dreadmaster asks them to perform such actions.

Spells that the dreadmaster has cast upon his cohorts that normally grant a saving throw or saving throw bonus if the subject is asked to take life-threatening actions or actions contrary to her nature do not do so when the subject is fanatically loyal to the dreadmaster.

The dreadmaster gains this ability at 8th level.

Special Cohort: The dreadmaster attracts a special cohort (see Chapter 2 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) in addition to any cohort already gained.

If a leader loses this special cohort, he can generally replace it, according to his current Leadership score.

It takes time (1d4 months) to recruit a replacement.

At 10th level, the dreadmaster attracts a second special cohort in addition to any cohort or special cohorts already gained.

Because of the lawful nature of Bane, special cohorts who are mutually inimical by type, alignment, or nature are not drawn to the same dreadmaster.

Use the "Example Dreadmaster Special Cohorts" table to select special cohorts gained through this ability.

DWEOMERKEEPER

The Lady of Mysteries is the Weave, the conduit that allows mortal spellcasters to employ the raw force that is magic, and she encourages all creatures to explore its mysteries. Dweomerkeepers are Mystra's shepherds, safeguarding the Weave against threats to its integrity.

They are also skilled practitioners of the Art, who seek to explore magical theory and create new spells and magic items.

Most dweomerkeepers are cleric/wizards or cleric/sorcerers, although other class combinations, particularly those including specialist wizard, bard, and ranger, are not unknown.

Dweomerkeepers are found throughout Faerûn. Some dwell in lonely, isolated towers, wholly consumed with their magical studies.

Others dwell in huge cities, where all manner of magic is brought together and shared (willingly or not).

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dweomerkeeper, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Human.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Any item creation feat, any metamagic feat, and Exotic Weapon Proficiency (shuriken), plus one of the following metamagic feats: Delay Spell, Persistent Spell, or Twin Spell.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd level arcane and divine spells.

Able to cast dispel magic.

Domain: Magic or Spell.

Patron: Mystra.

Special: The character must have created at least one magic item, whether or not of a permanent nature.

The character cannot have the Shadow Weave Magic feat.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a dweomerkeeper (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (any) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the dweomerkeeper prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dweomerkeeper gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each dweomerkeeper level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a dweomerkeeper, the player must decide to which class to add each dweomerkeeper level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bonus Feats: At the indicated levels, dweomerkeepers can take a bonus feat, drawn from the following list: any item creation feat, any metamagic feat, Combat Casting, Innate Spell, Greater Spell Focus, Greater Spell Penetration, Improved Familiar, Magical Artisan, Skill Focus (Knowledge [arcana]), Skill Focus (Spellcraft), Spell Focus, Spell Mastery, Spell Penetration, or Weapon Focus (ray, energy missile, or touch spell).

The dweomerkeeper must meet all prerequisites for the chosen feat.

Weave Focus: Upon adopting this prestige class, dweomerkeepers are forever barred from ever taking the Shadow Weave Magic feat.

Even if the character chooses to renounce the Lady of Mysteries in favor of her dark rival, Shar, he is so attuned to the Weave that he can never fully renounce its ties.

In addition, dweomerkeepers gains a +5 bonus on caster level checks to cast their spells normally within a wild magic zone.

Darkvision (Ex): At 2nd level, a dweomerkeeper gains darkvision (60 ft. range) if he doesn't already have it, so as to better perceive the treacheries of Shar and the lies embodied by the Shadow Weave.

Nystul's Magic Aura (Sp): At 2nd level, a dweomerkeeper can cast Nystul's magic aura (often referred to as Mystra's lingering touch) once per day.

Mantle of Spells (Su): At 4th level, a dweomerkeeper begins creating a personal mantle of arcane and/or divine spells. He chooses one arcane or divine spell he can cast, and thereafter can convert prepared spells of that spell's type (arcane or divine) of that spell's level or higher into that spell just as a good cleric spontaneously casts prepared spells as cure spells.

This ability is similar to the Signature Spell feat except that the dweomerkeeper is not required to have mastered the spell with Spell Mastery.

Each time this ability is gained, the dweomerkeeper chooses another spell to become a part of his mantle.

Cloak of Mysteries (Su): At 10th level, a dweomerkeeper becomes wrapped in a mantle of ever-flowing magic.

All metamagic feats he currently knows or learns in the future are easier to use, reducing the level increase defined in the feat by -1 level.

A metamagic feat's spell slot modifier cannot be reduced below $+1$ spell level unless its level modifier is already $+0$.

For example, quickened fireball only uses a 6th-level slot ($+3$ levels) instead of a 7th-level slot ($+4$ levels), but a silent fireball still uses a 4th-level slot ($+1$ level).

Heighten Spell is unaffected.

ELEMENTAL ARCHON

Ask a follower of Kossuth which is the dominant of the four elements, and she'll tell you that fire burns away all in its path.

Akadians scoff at such pretension, stating that fire requires wind to spread and air to burn at all.

Devotees to Istishia dismiss both claims, pointing out that water extinguishes fire and when mixed with wind becomes a powerful force of destruction.

With quaking, rough laughter, priests of Grumbar boast that the earth can open at any moment, swallowing all into an airless chasm from which none can escape.

There is no solution to this age-old argument, nor has there been since the dawn of time.

The conflict of element against element has, however, engaged some individuals so deeply that they believe they are manifestations of their chosen element—the servants of powerful, seemingly uncaring elemental forces who want to once and for all tip the balance in favor of their chosen element.

Upon attaining this class, each elemental archon chooses one of the four elements (air, earth, fire, or water), and henceforth dedicates her life to proving that this element is the most important in the multiverse, and that all others are subservient to it (once an element is chosen, it cannot be changed).

Such elemental champions often are considered insufferably arrogant, and there can be little argument that their single-mindedness brooks few challenges.

The meeting of two elemental archons usually leads to bombastic displays of spellcasting, elemental summoning, and out-and-out destruction, with the "winner" of the combat seeing her victory as a moral win in an ageless philosophical contest.

When not combating each other, elemental archons aid churches dedicated to their element, such as those of Akadi, Grumbar, Istishia, and Kossuth.

Elemental archons generally are not a part of the hierarchies of these churches, but nearly all such clergies view them as important prophets worthy of respect and admiration.

Traveling archons preach to the people about the dominance of their chosen element, and are generally seen as somewhat insane by the general populace.

Most elemental archons come from the ranks of the cleric class, usually worshiping one of the elemental lords.

Some druids with a skewed view of the balance of nature become elemental archons, for most druids believe that existence itself is based upon an equal balance of all four elements, making elemental archons outcasts within most druidic circles.

Occasionally, rangers become elemental archons, but this more often is the result of an encounter with a powerful elemental or the survival of some near-death ordeal related to one of the elements.

Genasi, whose blood thrums with the stuff of the elements, frequently become elemental archons, and are seen by their fellows as the most blessed among an already ideal congregation.

Elemental archons never associate with archons of a different element.

They are willing to work with their own kind and those that do not profess supremacy of another element, but often an elemental archon is a loner, never fully understood by others.

Often they set up refuges in places thrumming with the power of their chosen element, such as an active volcano, an underwater grotto, a rocky desert, or a windswept cliff.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an elemental archon, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any neutral.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks, Speak Language (see Special).

Spells: Ability to cast protection from elements as a divine spell.

Patron: Akadi, Grumbar, Istishi, or Kossuth.

Special: Must speak the language associated with her chosen element (air—Auran, earth—Terran, fire—Ignan, water—Aquan).

CLASS SKILLS

The elemental archon class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Con), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the elemental archon prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An elemental archon gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each indicated elemental archon level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an elemental archon, the player must decide to which class to add each elemental archon level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Power of Arrogance: So strong is the elemental archon's belief in the supremacy of her chosen element that her attacks do greater damage against the servants of her enemies.

At 2nd level elemental archon gets a +2 competence bonus on any attack rolls against creatures with a subtype opposite her chosen element (air—earth; earth—air; fire—water; water—fire).

On a successful attack, she deals +2d6 points of damage due to her expertise in combating these creatures.

Elemental Resilience (Su): At 3rd level, an elemental archon gains resistance 10 against a type of energy, based on her chosen element.

Archons dedicated to air gain resistance to electricity attacks.

Those dedicated to earth gain resistance to acid attacks.

Fire archons gain resistance to fire attacks, and water archons gain resistance to cold.

At 6th level, the resistance rises to 20.

At 9th level, the archon gains resistance 30 against her associated energy type.

Elemental Affinity (Ex): An elemental archon gains a +1 caster level bonus to all spells with the designator of his chosen element.

If she already has a caster level bonus from having the appropriate elemental domain, these abilities stack.

Elemental Expertise (Ex): Elemental archons of 7th level or higher have achieved a sort of equilibrium with their element that gives them the edge in certain combat situations.

Consult the list below to determine the specific effect based upon the character's chosen element.

Air Expertise: Air archons gain a +1 circumstance bonus on attack and damage rolls against airborne creatures when the archon herself is airborne.

Earth Expertise: Earth archons gain a +1 circumstance bonus on attack and damage rolls if both she and her foe touch the ground.

Fire Expertise: Fire archons gain a +1 circumstance bonus on attack and damage rolls if both she and her foe are within 20 feet of an open flame (torch-sized or larger).

Water Expertise: Water archons gain a +1 circumstance bonus on attack and damage rolls if both she and her opponent touch water.

Elemental Transcendence: Through ultimate dedication to her chosen element and long association with elementals and the Elemental Planes, the elemental archon transcends her mortal form and becomes an elemental creature.

Her type changes to elemental (with the subtype according to her chosen element) as her body endures a change to a form more closely associated with her chosen element.

Though she retains a humanoid outline that might resemble her former form (albeit filled with crackling fire, swirling water, cloudy air, or rocky earth), she has no discernible anatomy.

The elemental archon gains the speed and movement modes, attacks, special attacks, and special qualities of a Medium-size elemental of the appropriate type, as noted in the Monster Manual, except that she uses her own ability scores and the save DC against her elemental attack form, if any (whirlwind, burn, or vortex) is 20 + her Constitution modifier.

She may use equipment normally, although fire elemental archons can handle wooden or paper items without igniting them.

The archon is immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning.

Despite her humanoid form, she has senses that span 360 degrees; she is not subject to critical hits or flanking.

The archon gains darkvision with a range of 60 feet (unless she already had better darkvision, in which case her former ability is retained).

She is not called or summoned elemental, so the third function of a protection from evil spell does not affect her.

If slain, the archon cannot be raised or resurrected, though a wish or miracle spell can restore her to life.

MEPHIT UNDERLINGS

Upon or after reaching 1st level, an elemental archon can call a triad of mephits to act as her servitors (see the Monster Manual for these creatures' basic statistics).

These toadying creatures may be used as guardians, messengers, or even battle companions (though as the archon becomes more powerful, this becomes less of a good idea).

The mephits gain HD and special abilities based on the elemental archon's class level.

Mephit underlings who summon additional mephits bring forth normal examples of the species (as opposed to more mephit underlings).

The elemental archon may have up to three mephit underlings at a time.

Should one of these servants die, she may call for another one after one day.

The new mephit underling has all the accumulated abilities due a servant of the elemental archon's current level.

What type of mephit an archon chooses for her underlings is limited by the following table.

TABLE 4-8: MEPHIT UNDERLING CHOICES

Chosen Element	Available Mephit Types
Air	Air, Dust, Ice
Earth	Earth, Salt
Fire	Fire, Magma, Steam
Water	Ooze, Water

Archons may choose any mixture of available mephit types, as determined by her chosen element.

Elemental Archon Level: The number of levels the character has in the elemental archon prestige class.

Bonus HD: These are extra d8 Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier, as normal.

Extra Hit Dice improve the underling's base attack bonus and base saving throw bonuses, as normal.

Natural Armor: This is a bonus to the underling's natural armor rating.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the underling's Strength score.

Empathic Link (Su): The elemental archon has an empathic link with her underlings out to a distance of one mile.

The elemental archon cannot see through the underlings' eyes, but each underling can communicate with the archon telepathically.

Though mephits undoubtedly view the material world through disturbed lenses, the archon's studies and experiences with her chosen element are so complete that misunderstandings are very rare.

Because of the empathic link between the underlings and the elemental archon, the archon has the same connection to a place or an item that her underlings do.

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the underling is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage on a successful saving throw and only half damage on a failed saving throw.

Share Saving Throws: The underling uses its own base save or the elemental archon's, whichever is higher.

Sycophantic Fawning (Sp): Underlings of experienced archons are pleased to serve such paragons of perfection, and they're more than happy to tell their master about how much they appreciate the privilege.

Once per day as a standard action, a mephit underling may extol the virtues of its master, granting the archon a +1 morale bonus on attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saves, and skill checks.

If more than one mephit underling engages in sycophantic fawning in the same round, these bonuses stack.

The effect lasts for 1 round per Hit Die of the highest Hit Die mephit engaging in the fawning.

If but a single mephit underling fawns, the effect lasts 1 round for each of that mephit's Hit Dice.

Improved Empathic Link (Su): As the empathic link ability, above, except that range is extended to 20 miles.

Slavish Sacrifice (Su): The mephit underling's bond with its master is so great that it is willing to sacrifice itself for the archon's welfare.

Each morning, in a ceremony that takes 15 minutes, the archon and her mephits strengthen their indelible link.

For the entire day, the damage from a single attack that does hit point damage that would bring the archon below 0 hit points instead is transferred instantly to the person of the archon's nearest mephit underling.

Regardless of how much damage is transferred, the underling always dies from the transfer, exploding in a sickening pop of elemental goo.

A mephit underling must be within 100 feet of the archon for the transfer to work.

Mephit underlings understand the danger inherent to serving powerful elemental archons, but view dying in this manner as among the most honorable ways of ending one's life.

Should the archon wish, she may forego the morning ceremony, in which case her mephits may not be sacrificed in this manner.

FOREST MASTER

Guardians of the pristine wilderness and defenders of the ancient trees, forest masters are the living embodiments of sentient nature.

They walk the shadows under the woods and destroy those who would lay waste to the wild lands.

Where druids hold all aspects of nature dear—wind and weather, animal and plant, meadows and mountains—the forest masters consider the forests more ancient than the coming of animals or humans the most sacred spots of the world.

Druids most often become forest masters, but it is not unheard of for rangers or clerics of nature deities to leave their kinships behind and follow this path.

A few multiclassed barbarians become forest masters, although they rarely have the dedication to the plant aspect of nature to embrace this worldview.

Forest masters often work alone, but are more than capable of working as part of a group.

Many times adventurers have spoken with what they thought was a young, small treant, when they were actually speaking with a very powerful forest master.

There are no rivalries between groups of forest masters, although individuals may disagree on methods of enacting the will of the Treefather.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a forest master, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Intuit Direction 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks, Wilderness Lore 13 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Endurance, Power Attack, Skill Focus (Wilderness Lore).

Spells: Ability to cast entangle, plant growth, and control plants.

Patron: Silvanus.

Special: The character must have made peaceful contact with a treant.

The character must also be proficient with the maul.

CLASS SKILLS

The forest master's class skills (and the key ability scores for each) are Concentration (Con), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the forest master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A forest master gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each indicated forest master level, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a forest master, the player must decide to which class to add each forest master level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Tree Brother (Sp): The forest master may assume tree shape once per day.

Nature Sense (Ex): The forest master can identify plants and animals with perfect accuracy.

He can determine whether water is safe to drink or dangerous.

Forest Dominion (Su): At 2nd level, the forest master gains the ability to rebuke or command plants as an evil cleric can rebuke or command undead.

His effective level for this ability is his class level, and he may use it a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

If he already has this ability because he is a cleric with the Plant domain, these levels stack with his cleric levels and vice versa.

Great Mallet (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, a forest master begins to awaken magical abilities within the wood and metal that make up his maul.

Any maul used by a forest master is treated as if it were a +2 maul with either the frost or shock property (the forest master decides each round whether the weapon's extra damage is cold or electricity).

If the weapon has additional abilities (such as defending), these abilities still apply, and if the weapon has an enhancement bonus better than +2 the higher of the two bonuses is used.

The maul does not gain these abilities if it is not wielded by the forest master.

At 6th-level, the forest master's maul acts as a +2 icy burst or +2 shocking burst weapon, with the forest master deciding each round what effect the weapon has.

At 9th level, the forest master's maul acts as a +3 mighty cleaving weapon in addition to its other properties (including its icy burst or shocking burst ability).

Natural Armor (Ex): At 3rd level, the forest master's skin changes into a tough, barklike hide, granting him natural armor +3.

This bonus increases to +5 at 5th level and +7 at 7th level.

Oak Strength (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, the forest master gains a +2 bonus to Strength and the ability to make slam attacks.

A Small creature's slam attack deals 1d4 points of damage, one from a Medium-size creature deals 1d6 points of damage, and a Large forest master's slam attack deals 1d8 points of damage.

Slam attacks are natural weapon attacks and do not provoke an attack of opportunity from the defender.

A forest master can select Improved Critical (slam), Weapon Focus (slam), and (if a fighter of 4th level or higher) Weapon Specialization (slam).

Upon gaining this ability, the forest master's hair takes on a green, leafy appearance.

Spruce Growth (Su): At 5th level, once per day the forest master can temporarily increase his size and strength as if using a righteous might spell.

If the forest master's new size is Large, his reach increases to 10 feet.

Oakheart (Ex): Upon reaching 7th level, a forest master's body becomes a thing of wood and leaf rather than meat and bone.

His type changes to plant.

As such, he is immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and polymorphing. He is not subject to critical hits or sneak attacks. However, the forest master becomes vulnerable to fire, and suffers double damage from fire attacks if he fails a Reflex saving throw, or half damage if he succeeds.

Deep Roots (Su): Beginning at 8th level, once per day the forest master may sink roots into the ground in any natural surface place that can support at least some vegetation. While rooted, the forest master gains fast healing 5, but has an effective Dexterity score of 1 and may not move from the spot in which he stands.

The forest master can withdraw his roots and end the healing as a free action.

Forest Longevity (Ex): At 8th level, the forest master is magically sustained by his continuing transformation and gains incredible longevity.

He no longer suffers ability score penalties for aging and cannot be magically aged.

Any penalties he may have already suffered remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue.

When the character reaches venerable age, his maximum age is determined in the normal manner but the final result is then multiplied by two.

Forest Might (Ex): At 10th level, the primordial forest infuses the forest master with power.

He gains a +2 bonus to Strength, a +2 bonus to Constitution, and he takes only half damage from piercing weapons.

He gains fast healing 1 (which does not add to the fast healing 5 he gains when using his deep roots ability) whenever standing on fertile soil, but cannot heal fire damage with this ability.

GOLDEYE

The Merchant's Friend is the patron of trade, money, and wealth.

Goldeyes are agents and promulgators of commercial intercourse, seeking to increase the wealth of their communities and realms by promoting the exchange of coins in trade.

Some spend their younger years as adventurers, seeking to acquire sizable stakes on which to build a fortune.

Others view themselves as "liberators" of unused coins, lying forgotten in dusty crypts or unused in miserly hoards where they do nothing to build ever-increasing wealth.

Conversely, others act as defenders of hoards, making sure that wealth (particularly their own and the church's) stays in the proper hands.

Most goldeyes have backgrounds as clerics or cleric/rogues, although other class combinations, particularly those including bard, fighter, sorcerer, or wizard, are not unknown.

Goldeyes are typically found in large cities, heading up merchant consortiums, running trading costers, or working to remove political, religious, and cultural impediments to trade.

Many are extremely wealthy members of the merchant nobility, wielding power from behind the scenes through careful application of their coins.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a goldeye, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Neutral.

Skills: Appraise 4 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Innuendo 2 ranks, Profession (bookkeeper, innkeeper, scribe, or similar mercantile-related profession) 4 ranks, Speak Language (Must know two human languages, each spoken in a region different from your home region [see the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting]).

Feats: Alertness, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (nunchaku), Skill Focus (Diplomacy).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron: Waukeen.

Special: The character must have acquired at least 5,000 gp worth of coins, gems, jewelry, and/or business investments (borrowing does not count toward this total).

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a goldeye (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Knowledge (religion), Listen (Wis), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Read Lips (Int), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the goldeye prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A goldeye gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each goldeye level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a goldeye, the player must decide to which class to add each goldeye level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Bonus Language (Su): All goldeyes can speak Abyssal, a divine legacy of Waukeen's decade-long imprisonment by the demon prince Graz'zt.

Trade Pidgin (Su): Goldeyes don't let language barriers get in their way of doing business.

By listening to an unfamiliar language for at least 1 minute and making a successful Wisdom check (DC 15), a goldeye can gain a basic (and temporary) understanding of that language.

This familiarity with the language is enough to communicate simple concepts such as "attack", "danger", "friendship", "safe", "stop", "trade", and numbers up to 20, which usually suffices to allow the goldeye to bargain with the creature (if appropriate).

Familiarity with the language lasts one day.

The goldeye gets a +2 bonus to refamiliarize himself with a language he's learned in this manner in the past month.

Sense Thoughts (Su): By engaging a creature in conversation, a goldeye can become aware of its thoughts as if using a detect thoughts spell.

The goldeye can use this ability for 1 minute per class level per day.

A use of this ability that lasts less than 1 minute counts as 1 minute.

Hoard Defender (Ex): At 3rd level, a goldeye gains a +2 morale bonus on attacks, saves, and checks when he is defending a cache of his valuables (or a building or business he owns) worth at least 5,000 gp.

This bonus also applies if the property is owned by the church of Waukeen.

Items held or carried by the goldeye or another character do not count, the cache must be an unattended object or objects.

Jack of All Trades (Ex): At 4th level, goldeyes get Jack of All Trades as a bonus feat.

Secret Cache (Su): At 5th level, goldeyes can create a single extradimensional storage space that only they can access. The cache moves with the goldeye as if it were a belt pouch. Adding to or removing from the secret cache is a move-equivalent action.

Like all extradimensional spaces, it cannot be accessed within an antimagic field, and a successful targeted dispel magic against the goldeye's clerical caster level causes it to be unreachable for 1d4 rounds.

If the goldeye is killed, the items within the cache appear on his person.

Dragon's Eye (Ex): The goldeye gains a +4 bonus on all Appraise checks at 6th level.

Furthermore, by studying a magic item for a full 8 hours and making a Spellcraft check (DC 20) he is able to determine its single most basic function as if using an identify spell, although there is no cost to using this ability.

Coinscry (Ex): At 7th level, a goldeye using the screaming spell doesn't need a divine focus for the spell, and can instead use any polished item made of precious metal, including plates, amulets, or even coins.

Because it is more difficult to see when using a very small scrying device, using an amulet-sized item gives a -5 penalty on the Scry check and using a coin-sized item gives a -10 penalty on the Scry check.

Splendorous Attire (Su): At 8th level, goldeyes can magically robe themselves in fancy attire once per day. Attire created in this fashion is equivalent to that created by a rod of splendor.

Goldeyes can also create a palatial tent once per tenday. Such pavilions are also identical to those created by a rod of splendor.

Neither power conveys the Charisma bonus of a rod of splendor, however.

Coinshook (Sp): At 9th level, a goldeye may cast a maximized heat metal spell once per day.

However, instead of dealing fire damage, the spell deals electricity damage.

The goldeye can use this ability once per day and does not need to have the Maximize Spell feat to use it.

Hoardfind (Sp): By concentrating, a goldeye can locate metals or minerals within 30 feet as if using a rod of metal and mineral detection.

She may activate this ability at will as a full-round action.

HEARTWARDER

Sune Firehair encourages beauty, passion, and love wherever they may be found.

Heartwarders are aesthetes and hedonists who actively seek out pleasure and beauty in all things and who nurture the creation of beautiful objects.

Most heartwarders are clerics, cleric/bards, cleric/rogues, or cleric/sorcerers, although other class combinations, particularly those including enchanter, are not unknown. Heartwarders are typically found in large cities in the company of the cultural elite.

Most are active patrons of the arts, and all play the role of matchmaker for persons in all levels of society.

Many are employed as artists, crafters, performers, or instructors.

Those who teach instruct in such varied subjects as art, choral music, cosmetics, dance, deportment, etiquette, fashion, handiwork, instrumental music, and manners. A few travel the world to promote beauty and love, and adventure in the manner of Sunite clerics.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a heartwarder, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic good.

Base Save Bonus: Ref +2.

Skills: Bluff 3 ranks, Diplomacy 6 ranks, Speak Language (Sylvan).

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Spell Focus (Enchantment), Exotic Weapon Proficiency (whip).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level spells.

Patron: Sune.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a heartwarder (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Innuendo (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the heartwarder prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A heartwarder gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each heartwarder level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a heartwarder, the player must decide to which class to add each heartwarder level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Charisma Increase (Ex): As the heartwarder gains levels in this prestige class, she becomes increasingly more persuasive and attractive.

At level 1 she gains a +1 inherent bonus to her Charisma score, and every other heartwarder level after that this bonus increases by +1 to a maximum of +5 inherent bonus at level 9.

Heart of Passion (Ex): At 2nd level, a heartwarder evinces such passionate belief in whatever she does or says that she can sway the thoughts of the most rigid critic.

This ability translates into a +2 bonus on all Charisma-based skill checks.

Lips of Rapture (Su): At 4th level, a heartwarder's kiss confers a state of bliss upon its recipient, conferring a +2 morale bonus on attacks, weapon damage, checks, and saves.

Moreover, it temporarily suspends the effects of exhaustion, fatigue, and nausea.

An enraptured recipient receives a +2 saving throw bonus against enchantment spells and effects.

This ability lasts 5 rounds, and can be used a number of times per day equal to her Charisma bonus.

The one downside to a heartwarder's kiss is that it also has the effect of a daze spell upon the recipient (the normal saving throw applies) as if cast by a sorcerer of heartwarder's caster level.

Voice of a Siren (Su): At 6th level, a heartwarder's voice is so enticing that she weakens the ability of opponents to resist her spells.

She gains the Spell Focus (Enchantment) and Spell Penetration feats, but they only apply to spells with a verbal component (and are not altered with the Silent Spell feat).

Tears of Evergold (Su): At 8th level, as a full-round action, a heartwarder can cry tears drawn from Evergold, a sacred pool that enhances beauty that Sune shares with the elven goddess Hanali Celanil.

If these tears are collected, they are equivalent to the effects of a potion of love and serve the Sunite faith as holy water.

A heartwarder can use this ability once per tenday, and while it does not cost her any gold to do so, calling upon the power of the pool requires her to spend 6 XP, just as if she had made the potion with the Brew Potion feat.

Fey Metamorphosis: At 10th level, a heartwarder is so attuned to the forces of natural beauty that she transcends mortal definitions of beauty.

Her type changes to "fey", which means, among other things, that she is no longer affected by spells that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person.

HORNED HARBINGER

At the end of the Time of Troubles, Myrkul, the Lord of Bones, former god of the dead, was destroyed off the coast of Waterdeep by Midnight, the mortal wizard who became the new Mystra.

What little remained of Myrkul's sentience was trapped inside the shattered remnants of an ancient Netherese artifact stored in nearby Blackstaff Tower.

Over the course of the next decade, the last vestiges of Myrkul's energy slowly restored the unholy artifact, imbuing it with the fallen deity's personality and memories.

Once the Crown of Horns was completely reconstituted, Myrkul teleported to many places across Faerûn, briefly settling on the brows of many living and undead former servants just long enough to create hordes of a undead in each location.

The most recent known bearer of the Crown of Horns, who bore it for at least a year, is believed to have been Nhyris D'Hotheke, a male pureblood yuan-ti who disappeared from his haunts in the subterranean port of Skullport in 1370 DR after being transformed into a lich by the Crown of Horns. More detail on the Crown of Horns can be found in Magic of Faerûn.

The horned harbingers are agents of the fallen Lord of Bones.

Some claim their creation heralds the restoration of Myrkul's mantle of godhood, while others view their continued existence as the last remnants of Myrkul's dwindling power.

Each horned harbinger has touched the Crown of Horns at some point since the Time of Troubles, although not all creatures who have done so have become members of this class.

Most horned harbingers are clerics, wizards, or necromancers, and many are undead.

Almost all once venerated the Lord of Bones but later turned to deities such as Cyric, Jergal, Kelemvor, or Velsharoon after the Time of Troubles and the death of their deity.

Upon adopting this prestige class, the faith of a horned harbinger must revert to that of the Lord of Bones, although it is unclear which god grants his divine spells. Clerics turning to the worship of Myrkul maintain the domain spells of their previous deity.

Failure to venerate Myrkul results in the loss of all abilities stemming from this class, with the exception of Hit Die, base attack bonus, and save bonuses.

Horned harbingers often live in large crypts or necropolises and haunt old battlefields.

They rarely, if ever, interact with living creatures except to acquire more corpses.

Such beings are often found in the company of large numbers of servitor undead.

If not already undead, most are actively pursuing lichdom. Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a horned harbinger, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks.

Patron: Myrkul.

Special: The character must have touched the Crown of Horns, a Netherese artifact that now contains the remnants of Myrkul's sentience, at least once since the Time of Troubles.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a horned harbinger (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the horned harbinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A horned harbinger gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Bone Horns (Ex): Horned harbingers grow six short curved horns of bone from their skull, as if wearing a crown of bone.

These horns are considered natural weapons for the creature, collectively dealing 1d6 points of piercing damage.

They do double damage when used as part of a charge.

Rebuke Undead (Su): The character can rebuke or command undead as a cleric of a level equal to his horned harbinger class level.

If the character could already rebuke undead, these levels stack with that ability.

Death Domain: Upon adopting the horned harbinger class, the character gains access to the Death domain, described in the Player's Handbook, as well as the granted power of that domain.

Levels in this prestige class stack with cleric levels for determining the effect of the granted power.

If the horned harbinger has no cleric levels, only horned harbinger levels are used for the granted power.

Deathwatch (Ex): At will, a horned harbinger can view the world as if he were using a deathwatch spell.

Bonus Feat: At the indicated levels, a horned harbinger may take a bonus feat.

These feats are drawn from the following list: Divine Vengeance, Empower Turning, Extra Turning, Heighten Turning, Quicken Turning, Leadership (undead cohorts only), Weapon Focus (bone horns).

Animate Dead (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, the character can cast animate dead once per day as a spell-like ability.

His caster level for this ability or casting animate dead as a spell is his horned harbinger level plus his Charisma bonus (if any), which stacks with any other class the character has which can cast animate dead.

For example, a clr7/horned harbinger 2 with Charisma 13 casts animate dead as a 10th-level cleric, whether using this spell-like ability or casting the spell as a cleric.

This caster level is also determines the maximum number of undead animated with animate dead that the horned harbinger can control (so a character with caster level 10 for this power could maintain control over 20 HD worth of undead).

Beginning at 4th level he may use this ability twice per day.

Captain of Undeath (Ex): At 5th level, a horned harbinger's limit for controlling undead animated with spells increases to 5 times his caster level instead of the normal 2 times his caster level.

His limit for undead controlled through the use of his command undead ability increases from his effective cleric level to 2 times his effective cleric level.

Create Undead (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, the character can cast create undead once per day.

His caster level for this ability is the same as the caster level for his animate dead ability.

The horned harbinger may cast animate dead instead of using his create undead spell-like ability, similar to an evil cleric spontaneously converting a prepared spell to an inflict wounds spell.

Ranged Animation (Su): At 7th level, any use of animate dead, whether as a normal spell or a spell-like ability, has a range of medium (100 ft. + 10 ft./level) instead of touch.

In other words, the horned harbinger can use animate dead at a distance, without having to touch the corpses.

If cast as a spell, the material components are still consumed but do not need to be placed on the corpses.

Create Greater Undead (Sp): Beginning at 8th level, the character can cast create greater undead once per day, with his caster level the same as the caster level for his animate dead ability.

The horned harbinger may cast animate dead or create undead instead of using his create greater undead spell-like ability, similar to an evil cleric spontaneously converting a prepared spell to an inflict wounds spell.

General of Undeath (Su): At 10th level, a horned harbinger's limit for controlling undead animated with spells increases to 10 times his caster level.

His limit for undead controlled through the use of his command undead ability increases 5 times his effective cleric level.

NIGHTCLOAK

The Mistress of the Night is the twisted and perverse goddess of hatred, jealousy, and evil and the creator of the Shadow Weave.

Nightcloaks are the apple of Shar's eye—devoted to her vision, preserving her secrets, practicing her magic, as twisted and bitter as she is.

They are beings of iron will and determination, although that determination is perverse.

They weave webs of intrigue, mental domination, blackmail, and control through the use of illusion, necromancy, and enchantment.

Yet they are not afraid to smash their toys if it suits Shar's purposes.

They are cruel and intelligent, and do not fear slipping away to return and grind their foes to dust at later time. Honor is of no consequence to them.

They do as they please, as long as it furthers their—and Shar's—power.

Clerics most often become nightcloaks.

Rangers are rare.

Nightcloaks often have levels of wizard, sorcerer, bard, or rogue in addition to the class that grants them divine spellcasting ability.

Nightcloaks dwell in communities large and small, often worshipping in secret.

Many work to overthrow governments, organize secret cabals, and create false cults to further their ends.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become nightcloak, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Bluff 2 ranks, Hide 2 ranks, Move Silently 2 ranks, Perform 4 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Shadow Weave Magic, Spell Focus (Enchantment, Illusion, or Necromancy), and Pernicious Magic or Tenacious Magic.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Clerics must have access to the Darkness domain.

Patron: Shar.

CLASS SKILLS

The nightcloak's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are features of the nightcloak prestige class. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A nightcloak gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each nightcloak level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a nightcloak, the player must decide to which class to add each nightcloak level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Darkness Spells: A nightcloak can prepare any Darkness domain spell as if it were on her divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Darkness domain list.

For instance, a cleric/nightcloak could prepare darkbolt as a 5th-level cleric spell, and a ranger/nightcloak could prepare blacklight as a 3rd-level ranger spell.

Eyes of Shar (Ex): Nightcloaks have eyes that are totally black.

They have 60-foot darkvision.

They can also see through magical darkness to a range of 10 feet (in the same black-and-white sight that darkvision provides).

They cannot be blinded by magical effects.

Insidious Magic: At 3rd level, nightcloaks get the Insidious Magic feat as a bonus feat, reflecting their ability to use the Shadow Weave under Shar's close guidance.

Shadow Talk (Su): Nightcloaks are able to communicate mystically through the shadows of the mind.

Nightcloaks can whisper short messages to other worshipers of Shar within 500 feet.

All Shar worshipers within range hear the message as a whisper in their mind.

Observers can hear the words if they are close enough to physically hear the nightcloak's actual whispers (a DC 15 Listen check if the listener is within 10 feet of the nightcloak, +1 DC per 5 feet beyond that).

This is a language-dependent free action, and it can be used to communicate with undead worshipers of Shar and undead creatures in the service of worshipers of Shar.

Disk of Night (Su): Beginning at 5th level, any chakram used by a nightcloak is treated as if it were a +2 returning chakram.

If it remains out of the hand of the nightcloak for more than 1 round, a chakram reverts to its original abilities.

If the weapon has additional abilities (such as frost), these abilities still apply, and if the weapon has an enhancement bonus better than +2, the higher of the two bonuses is used.

True Lies (Sp): At 6th level, a nightcloak can reach into a creature's mind and modify a subject's memories as the 4th-level bard spell modify memory.

A nightcloak can use this ability a number of times per tenday equal to her Charisma modifier (minimum one).

The modify memory works as if cast by a bard of the nightcloak's character level.

Mind of Shar (Ex): Beginning at 7th level, Shar grants nightcloaks the ability to use the power of their minds to protect themselves.

They add their Intelligence bonus (if any) to all saving throws.

Shar's Caress (Su): Once she reaches 8th level, a nightcloak can surround a held chakram, whip, or dagger with Shadow Weave magic, temporarily giving the weapon the unholy property.

This ability lasts for 1 round each time it is used, and can be invoked as a free action a number of times per day equal to the nightcloak's Charisma bonus (minimum one).

A nightcloak must decide to use this ability before the attack is made, and if the attack misses that use of Shar's Caress is wasted.

Minion of Shar (Sp): Upon reaching 9th level, once per tenday as a standard action a nightcloak can summon one shadow per class level to do her bidding for a number of rounds equal to her class level.

Any shadows this summoned shadow creates by draining Strength are under the control of the nightcloak, but vanish along with the original when the duration expires.

The nightcloak is able to verbally communicate with the shadows as if she knew their language.

She can also use her shadow talk ability to communicate with them.

Voice of Ineffable Evil (Sp): At 10th level, nightcloaks can command a creature as per the dominate monster spell 1/day as though cast by a sorcerer of a level equal to the nightcloak's character level.

The effect lasts one day.

Unlike most spell-like abilities, voice of ineffable evil has a verbal component.

OCULAR ADEPT

Each beholder believes that it represents a state of true perfection.

Among the desperate wastrels of decadent cities and debased explorers of the subterranean Underdark can be found humanoids who agree, and who have entered into a surgical pact with the beholder race in an attempt to achieve even a sliver of that perfection.

These so-called ocular adepts, outcasts of their own society, have pledged their services to one or more eye tyrants and pledged their religious devotions to the alien entity known as the Great Mother, the deity matron of all beholders.

Though ocular adepts often lead cells of degenerate cultists and fancy themselves important in the schemes of their masters, most beholders view them as self-important pawns at best, and mindless chattel at worst.

During the ceremony in which the character becomes an ocular adept, a beholder surgeon cuts the central eye from an eyeball beholderkin (a tiny beholderlike monster described in Monsters of Faerûn) and places it into a partially disintegrated niche in the supplicant's forehead.

A blasphemous incantation grants the eye functionality, opening new vistas of sight to the supplicant.

Thereafter the character takes on a more detached, alien demeanor, as the vestiges of the dying beholderkin's personality taints his troubled mind.

Surviving the ritual requires a hardy body and spirit. Clerics who have fallen out of favor with their deity are the most common ocular adepts (disgraced clerics of Bane, whose worshipers often use beholders as allies, are particularly common), though some fighters and barbarians have been known to fall victim to the allure of the spheres of many eyes.

Adapting to the psychic imprints of the eyeball graft takes the type of focused concentration common among the spellcasting classes; most wizards, bards, and sorcerers, however, usually are either too weak, too chaotic, or too image conscious to live amid hostile monsters with an alien eye grafted to their skulls.

Ocular adepts often are calculating, mad cult leaders who plot against surface nations according to the whims of their eye tyrant masters.

They negotiate the purchase of slaves, defend access points to beholder hives and lairs, and accompany correspondence and trade from one beholder outpost to another.

Using their charm person and charm monster abilities, ocular adepts amass a group of followers to aid them in their duties.

Ocular adepts occasionally are used as intermediaries between powerful beholders and heads of state at such times when the personal appearance of a beholder would be dangerous or undiplomatic.

Rarely does a beholder create more than one ocular adept at a time, so these beings rarely see another of their kind.

They share their masters' hatred of "imperfect" beholders and their "tainted" servants, so ocular adepts of rival beholders never work together.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an ocular adept, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any humanoid or monstrous humanoid.

Alignment: Lawful evil or neutral evil.

Base Save Bonus: Fort +4.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance.

Special: The character must supplicate himself before one or more beholders, pleading to be accepted into their community as an ocular adept.

The character must forswear all allegiances to his previous deity and swear devotion to the Great Mother.

CLASS SKILLS

The ocular adept's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the ocular adept prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An ocular adept gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: An ocular adept gains spells as a cleric of level 1–10, including one domain spell at each spell level available to the ocular adept.

The ocular adept chooses two of the following domains: Evil, Hatred, Law, Strength, and Tyranny.

If the ocular adept was already a cleric of another deity, swearing allegiance to the Great Mother is considered "gross violation" of the code of conduct expected by the ocular adept's former deity, causing the loss of all previous spellcasting abilities.

However, the implanting of eye of an eyeball beholderkin into the skull of the ocular adept fulfills the necessary conditions for changing deities as described in Chapter 5: Deities of the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting, and the ocular adept is thereafter a cleric of the Great Mother. He keeps his old cleric spellcasting abilities and gains additional cleric spells as shown on Table 4-15: The Ocular Adept.

This means that a cleric/ocular adept has a greater number of low-level spells, but never achieves the higher-level spells that a normal cleric would reach.

This reflects both the ocular adept's need to minister to a large number of (generally weaker) followers and the Great Mother's disdain of any creature that is not a true beholder. Because of his unique situation, a cleric/ocular adept has domain spell slots for his original cleric levels and domain spell slots for his prestige class levels.

He is not required to use the same domain spell of a particular level in each slot.

For example, if Terok the cleric/ocular adept has the Evil and Strength domains, he can prepare a protection from good (the 1st-level Evil domain spell) in his 1st-level cleric domain slot and endure elements (the 1st-level Strength domain spell) in his 1st-level ocular adept domain slot.

He could just as easily prepare two of either of those spells in those domain slots.

After the implanting ceremony, if the ocular adept willfully turns against the Great Mother, she may use the implanted eye in the adept's forehead as a conduit for her power, disintegrating him instantly.

Implanted Eyeball (Su): The central eye of an eyeball beholderkin fills part of the ocular adept's forehead.

Though the eyeball beholderkin perishes as a result of the surgery, its dying eye momentarily infects the host's brain with alien torment in its death throes.

Thereafter, the oversized eye magically becomes a part of the ocular adept's physiology.

The beholderkin's moribund taint arises occasionally in unintelligible psychic whispers (which most ocular adepts believe to be the encouragement of the Great Mother).

As a result of the surgery, the ocular adept gains understanding of the beholder language and a +4 bonus on Spot checks.

The eye also has a number of ray powers, which develop as the ocular adept advances in level.

Once they have been attained, each ray may be used up to two times a day.

Firing a ray from the implanted eyeball is a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The implanted eyeball closes and must rest for the full round immediately following a round in which a ray attack is used.

Each eye effect resembles a spell cast by a sorcerer of the adept's class level but follows the rules for a ray.

All rays have a range of 100 feet and a save DC of 10 + 1/2 the adept's class level + the adept's Charisma modifier.

Unless otherwise noted, each ray works like the spell for which it is named (including what type of saving throw resists it), except that it only affects the target of the ray.

Charm Person: A 1st-level ocular adept can emit a charm person ray.

Ocular adepts use this ability to confuse their enemies, ordering victims to restrain their friends or simply do nothing while the battle rages on.

Sleep: At 2nd level, an ocular adept can emit a ray of sleep.

Inflict Moderate Wounds: To punish powerful allies or wound their enemies, ocular adepts of 3rd level or higher often employ this ray.

Slow: This ray is usable by ocular adepts of 4th level or higher.

Fear: A 5th-level or higher ocular adept may employ this ray.

Charm Monster: At 6th level and higher, the ocular adept can use this ray.

Outside of combat, an ocular adept uses this ability to entice the dregs of society to join his or her cult, or to influence a merchant or politician when on a mission for his or her master.

Telekinesis: At 7th level and higher, the ocular adept can move objects or creatures with this ray.

Flesh to Stone: An ocular adept of 8th level or higher can emit this deadly ray.

Disintegrate: A 9th-level or higher ocular adept can use this ray to horrifying effect.

Finger of Death: At 10th level, the Great Mother grants the ocular adept the most deadly of those favors naturally possessed by her true children.

SILVERSTAR

Silverstars are dedicated advocates of freedom and tolerance, wanderers on the path of truth, and absolute foes of Shar.

They seek to build harmony among lycanthropes and nonshapechangers, and they protect the weak and the oppressed everywhere.

They cannot abide slavery, and they hate most undead.

They rarely settle in one place for long, instead moving along when seized by wanderlust or enticed by a new cause or mission.

Sometimes they receive visions and are seen as somewhat "touched" with prophecy by their closeness to the Moonmaiden.

They deal with lunar energies and phenomena and are, to a limited degree, able to wield the power of the moon, bringing its fierce, pure white light to Toril to advance the goddess's wishes.

Clerics most often become silverstars; rangers are a less common choice.

Selûne demands an individualistic outlook on life that is incompatible with the lawful nature of paladins and monks, and her passionately good and chaotic nature leaves little room for the balance a druid requires.

Silverstars are often found in large coastal cities dependent on the sea for trade and sustenance.

Others prefer the outlying reaches of civilized realms, where lycanthropes are most common.

Wherever they are found, silverstars actively oppose the activities and misdeeds of Shar's followers, whether singly or in groups.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become silverstar, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Alignment: Chaotic good.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Intuit Direction 2 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks.

Feats: Blind-Fight, Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Clerics who wish to become silverstars must have access to the Moon domain.

Patron: Selûne.

CLASS SKILLS

The silverstar's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are features of the silverstar prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Silverstars gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Selûne's favored weapon is the heavy mace, which silverstars refer to as the moon's hand.

Spells per Day: At each silverstar level, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a silverstar, the player must decide to which class to add each silverstar level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Moon Spells: A silverstar can prepare any Moon domain spell as if it were on her divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Moon domain list.

For instance, a cleric/silverstar could prepare moonblade as a 3rd-level cleric spell, and a ranger/silverstar could prepare moonbeam as a 2nd-level ranger spell.

Lunar Sight (Ex): Silverstars of 2nd level and above have low-light vision.

Moon's Hand (Su): Any heavy mace wielded by a 3rd-level silverstar is treated as if it were a +1 shock heavy mace.

If leaves the hand of the silverstar it reverts to its original abilities.

If the weapon has additional abilities (such as frost), these abilities still apply, and if the weapon has an enhancement bonus better than +1 the higher of the two bonuses is used.

At 6th level, the weapon is treated as a +2 shock heavy mace.

Tears of Selûne (Sp): A 4th-level silverstar can project small balls of luminescent lunar energy from her eyes as a dancing lights spell (torches or will-o'-wisps only) at will, as if cast by a sorcerer of her caster level.

Prophet's Sight (Su): Starting at 5th level, once per day a silverstar is able to see as if under the effect of a true seeing spell cast by a cleric of her level.

At 8th level, this ability can be used 2/day.

Selûnite Lycanthrope: Upon reaching 6th level, silverstars who contract any form of lycanthropy are treated as natural lycanthropes.

Their type changes to shapechanger, and they may select the Improved Control Shape feat (see the Monster Manual) or the Scent ability as a feat (see the Monster Manual) at any point that they can select a new feat.

Silverstars do not change alignment due to contracting lycanthropy and are aware of their actions while in animal or hybrid form.

Moonshield (Su): At 7th level, a silverstar learns how to better resist the magic of the Shadow Weave.

She gains a +2 bonus on saves against enchantment, illusion, and necromancy spells and effects, and spells and effects with the darkness descriptor.

This bonus applies whether or not the source is from the Weave or the Shadow Weave.

Greater Moon's Hand (Su): Upon reaching 9th level, a silverstar using her moon's hand ability treats her weapon as if it were a +2 shocking burst weapon.

Moonfire (Sp): Upon reaching 10th level, a silverstar can cast moonfire 1/day as a spell-like ability.

STORMLORD

Talos the Destroyer embodies the uncaring and destructive forces of nature that may strike at any time.

Stormlords are the chief agents of the Destroyer's wrath, inflicting destructive rampages wherever they wander in order to spread word of his endless fury.

Talos cares only that they call up a storm or engage in a spectacular act of violence every tenday or so.

Most stormlords are clerics, druids, or cleric/sorcerers, although other class combinations, particularly those including fighter or even barbarian, are not unknown.

Wizards have their own means of destroying things, and bards rarely can generate enough force with their spells to be considered worthy by the Destroyer.

Stormlords often live as brigands, indulging their personal desires for wealth, food, luxury items, and wanton behavior as they crave random, spectacular acts of violence.

They often pose as lunatics, in order to spread the word of Talos, and otherwise adopt disguises in order to scout out rich prizes to strike at.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stormlord, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Save Bonus: Fort +4.

Feats: Endurance, Great Fortitude, Weapon Focus (any spear or javelin).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron: Talos.

Special: The character must have been hit by a bolt of lightning, whether a natural bolt or one created by magic, and survived.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a stormlord (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the stormlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A stormlord gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each stormlord level, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, additional favored enemies, and so on).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a stormlord, the player must decide to which class to add each stormlord level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Electricity Resistance (Ex): As the stormlord gains levels in this prestige class, he becomes increasingly resistant to electrical energy, gaining electricity resistance in the amount given on the table.

Shock Weapon (Su): At 2nd level, any spear or javelin used by a stormlord is treated as a shock weapon.

The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

Storm Walk (Ex): At 3rd level, a stormlord (and his mount, if any) can walk or ride through storms (natural or magical) at his regular movement rate, completely unaffected by high winds (including gust of wind), pounding precipitation or waves, objects driven by the wind (which always seem to miss him), great claps of thunder, natural bolts of lightning, or any other natural symptom of Talos's fury.

Thundering Weapon (Su): At 5th level, any spear or javelin a stormlord uses is treated as a thundering weapon.

The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

Its effects stack with the stormlord's shock weapon ability.

Storm Ride (Sp): At 6th level, a stormlord gains the ability to fly during any storm as if using the fly spell.

Adverse wind conditions do not affect him; for example, even hurricane-force winds cannot knock him down or blow him away when flying.

Shocking Burst Weapon (Su): At 8th level, any spear or javelin used by a stormlord is treated as a shocking burst weapon.

The weapon loses this ability 1 round after leaving the hand of the stormlord.

Its effects stack with the stormlord's thundering weapon ability.

Elemental Conflagration (Sp): Upon reaching 10th level, a stormlord gains the ability to summon a quartet of Huge elementals once per tenday.

These four elementals are summoned as if using the summon monster IX spell, except that each elemental is of a different type (air, earth, fire, water).

STRIFELEADER

The Prince of Lies demands control by any means necessary.

Strifeleaders are the chief instruments of the Dark Sun, charged with spreading the One True Way of Cyric (as least the Prince of Lies whispers it in their minds) through force and deception.

They spread strife and work murder everywhere in order to make folk fear and believe in Cyric.

Most strifeleaders are clerics, rogues, or bards.

Particularly crafty fighters and barbarians may become strifeleaders, but characters of other classes rarely pursue this path.

Strifeleaders are often found supporting rulers with a taste for cruelty and empire-building.

They indulge in intrigue in every land so as to spread strife everywhere without plunging realms into widespread war and thus give worship to Tempus the war deity.

Most also spend their time scheming against each other in an endless struggle of cabal against cabal, with each strifeleader seeking to increase his personal power.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a strifeleader, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Disguise 8 ranks, Bluff 4 ranks, Intimidate 4 ranks, Speak Language (Abyssal).

Feats: Iron Will, Spell Focus (Illusion), Weapon Focus (longsword).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron: Cyric.

Special: The character must have single-handedly slain an illusionist, a cleric of Cyric, or someone with the Spell Focus (Illusion) feat.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a strifeleader (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the strifeleader prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A strifeleader gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each indicated strifeleader level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, additional favored enemies, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a strifeleader, the player must decide to which class to add each strifeleader level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Dominating Aura (Su): A strifeleader is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Enemies within 20 feet of a strifeleader suffer a –2 morale penalty on saving throws against fear effects.

The radius of this aura increases at 4th and 7th levels.

Poison Use: Strifeleaders are skilled in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Skilled Prevarication (Ex): At 2nd level, strifeleaders become skilled in the art of telling lies.

They get a +2 bonus on Bluff and Intimidate checks.

Moreover, strifeleaders gain a +4 bonus on saving throws against the spells discern lies and zone of truth.

Sneak Attack: Starting at 3rd level, if a strifeleader can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, any time the strifeleader's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the strifeleader's attack deals +1d6 points of damage.

This extra damage increases by +1d6 points at 6th and 9th level.

Should the strifeleader score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is 30 feet away or less.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, the strifeleader can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage.

He cannot use a weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual -4 penalty, because he must make optimal use of his weapon in order to execute the sneak attack.

A strifeleader can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the strifeleader must also be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The strifeleader cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a strifeleader gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Illusions: Beginning at 5th level, the strifeleader adds the spells ghost sound, invisibility, minor image, mirror image, major image, phantasmal killer, and silent image to his spell list.

The spells become clerical spells at the same levels they are on the Sor/Wiz list (so the strifeleader may prepare invisibility as a 2nd-level cleric spell).

Death Attack (Ex): Starting at 8th level, if the strifeleader studies his victim for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of possibly either paralyzing or killing the target (strifeleader's choice).

While studying the victim, the strifeleader can undertake other actions as long as his attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the strifeleader or recognize him as an enemy.

If the victim of such an attack fails her Fort saving throw (DC 10 + the strifeleader's class level + the strifeleader's Intelligence modifier) against the kill effect, she dies.

If the saving throw fails against the paralysis effect, the victim's mind and body become enervated, rendering her completely helpless and unable to act for 1d6 rounds plus 1 round per level of the strifeleader.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once the strifeleader has completed the 3 rounds of study, he must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a death attack is attempted and fails (the victim makes her save) or if the strifeleader does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before he can attempt another death attack.

Greater Death Attack (Ex): At 10th level, the DC for the strifeleader's death attack (whether to kill or paralyze) increases by +4.

SWORD DANCER

Eilistraee the Dark Maiden encourages drow to return to the surface world and reestablish themselves as rightful, nonevil inhabitants of the Night Above.

Although they need not be drow themselves, sword dancers are expected to lead that migration and work to promote harmony between drow and surface-dwelling races.

They nurture beauty, music, the craft of making musical instruments, and song wherever they find it, assist hunters and hunting, and help others in acts of kindness whenever they see ways to do so.

Most sword dancers are clerics, cleric/fighters, or cleric/bards.

Other class combinations, particularly those including ranger, rogue, and sorcerer, are somewhat less common. Barbarians and wizards rarely become sword dancers.

Drow and half-drow are by far the most common races to adopt the sword dancer class, but other races, particularly half-elves, humans, and surface elves, venerate the Dark Maiden as well.

Sword dancers usually dwell together in small groups in places where other elven races might dwell.

Most frequent woodland glades where they gather to dance, sing, and engage in swordplay under the light of the moon.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sword dancer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Gender: Female.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Perform 5 ranks (includes dance and singing), Speak Language (Elven and Undercommon).

Feats: Dodge, Expertise, Skill Focus (Perform), Weapon Focus (any sword).

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Patron: Eilistraee.

Special: The character must have seen the sun rise at least once and spent at least one continuous month living on the surface (without entering the Underdark), dancing each night under the light of the moon.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a sword dancer (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (History) (Int), Knowledge (Local) (Int), Knowledge (Nature) (Int), Knowledge (Religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Tumble (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points Per Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the sword dancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A sword dancer gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

A sword dancer that wears medium or heavy armor or carries or wears a shield cannot use any of her special abilities, and a sword dancer wearing only light armor must succeed at an arcane spell failure roll in order to use any of her spell-like or supernatural abilities granted by this prestige class (not including spellcasting).

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each sword dancer level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a sword dancer, the player must decide to which class to add each sword dancer level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): All sword dancers have low-light vision.

Sword Song (Su): A sword dancer can attune herself to a particular sword (magical or not), a process that takes one tenday.

During this time she must be wearing or holding the sword for at least 8 hours each day, and if interrupted she must start again.

She may only be attuned in this fashion to one sword at a time.

Beginning the process of attuning another sword negates the ability of the currently attuned sword.

Once attuned to this sword, whenever she wields it the sword sings heroic songs, granting her a +2 morale bonus on attack and damage rolls with the sword and a +3 morale bonus on saving throws against mind-affecting spells and effects.

This ability is a sonic, mind-affecting effect, and can be used for a maximum number of rounds per day equal to her class level plus her Charisma modifier.

If this ability is applied to a dancing sword, the dancing sword gains the attack and damage bonus, but the saving throw bonus still applies to the sword dancer.

Moonlights (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, at will and as a free action a sword dancer can create small lights equal to those produced by the dancing lights spell.

These lights are under the control of the sword dancer but cannot move more than 5 feet from her body.

The sword dancer can have in existence a number of lights equal to her class level.

Sword Dance (Su): At 3rd level, a sword dancer can attune herself to a particular sword (which may be the same sword as her singing sword) in the process described above.

Once attuned to the sword, she may use it as if it had the dancing property.

She may use this ability a number of times per day equal to her class level.

Mobility: The sword dancer gains the Mobility feat at 4th level.

Maiden's Sword (Su): At 5th level, a sword dancer gains the ability to craft magic swords as if she had the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat.

This ability only works on her attuned swords, but the magic abilities given to the sword persist even if she loses her attunement to the sword.

She may add any properties (including enhancement bonuses) to a sword as long as she meets the property's other prerequisites.

Lesser Spell song (Su): At 6th level, a sword dancer gains the ability to spontaneously cast prepared cleric spells of 3rd level or lower as any of her domain spells, just as a good cleric spontaneously casts prepared cleric spells as cure wounds spells.

Any spells she casts in this manner always have a verbal component in addition to their normal components.

For example, a sword dancer with access to the Moon domain who has prepared divine favor (a 1st-level spell) may lose divine favor in order to cast faerie fire (a 1st-level spell from the Moon domain).

Spring Attack: The sword dancer gains the Spring Attack feat at 7th level.

Spell song (Su): At 8th level, the sword dancer's lesser spell song ability expands to include spontaneous casting of cleric spells of up to 6th level as domain spells.

Sword Shield (Su): At 10th level, as a free action a sword dancer may command her dancing sword to fight in a defensive manner, taking a penalty of up to -5 on the sword's attacks in order to add the same number (up to +5) to her Armor Class as an armor bonus.

The changes to the sword's attack rolls and her Armor Class last until her next action.

She can only use this ability on one dancing sword at a time.

TECHSMITH

Faerûn resounds with the measured cadence of blacksmiths hammering out their newest creation, the clatter-clack of tinkers cobbling together the contents of a bin of junk to create something truly useful, and the fizzing pops of chemicals as alchemists labor to create some heretofore unseen form of artificial life.

At the head of this orchestra of technological progress can be found the techsmiths of Gond, men and women devoted to the development of new inventions and the progression of achievement in the name of the Wonderbringer.

Though based in the Lantanese city of Illul, techsmiths can be found throughout the continent as advisors to rulers, as merchants selling fantastic wares, and as builders and operators of small golems tasked with taking care of unsightly municipal duties such as caring for large sewer systems or interring the dead.

Theirs is a primarily cosmopolitan pursuit, making techsmiths far more common in cities than in pastoral regions.

Most travel widely, however, both to share their own creations and to monitor the creations of folk from all corners of the known world.

Because of their skill in building constructs, techsmiths are experts at demolishing them as well, and are sometimes called into service to destroy dangerous things of that type before they cause too much harm.

Techsmiths tend toward extreme eccentricity, often concerning themselves with the solution of some mathematical formula far more than personal interaction with their companions.

Slow to make friends with those who do not share their obsession with mechanics and explosives (in that order), it often has been said that a techsmith's only true confidante is the golemlike construct known as a gondsman, who serves as the techsmith's servant, assistant, and friend. The techsmiths draw their ranks almost exclusively from the clergy of Gond, since the High Holy Crafhouse of Inspiration, where the secrets of the techsmiths are imparted to would-be members of the order, does not accept applications from followers of other deities. Clerics of other gods who bestow the Craft domain upon their followers (such as certain members of the gnomish and dwarven pantheon) occasionally convert to Gond worship in order to gain the secrets of the techsmiths.

It is said that this troubles the Wonderbringer but little, as the end result promises interesting creations from headstrong inventors.

Those techsmiths who do not adventure often attempt to profit from their proprietary knowledge by creating smokepowder weapons and bombs and selling them to the highest bidder.

Unscrupulous techsmiths seek out conflict that they might profit from both sides.

Such individuals are a good source of explosives, firearms, and new inventions, and do lucrative business selling their goods to members of the adventuring class.

In larger cities with a strong Gondian presence, they may form a guild, but most work alone.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a techsmith, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Craft (armorsmithing, blacksmithing, metalworking, or weaponsmithing) 9 ranks.

Feats: Craft Wondrous Item, Skill Focus (Craft [armorsmithing, blacksmithing, metalworking, or weaponsmithing]).

Spells: Ability to cast minor creation.

Patron: Gond.

Special: Must visit the High Holy Crafhouse of Inspiration in the city of Illul on the island of Lantan.

CLASS SKILLS

The techsmith class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (architecture and engineering) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Open Lock (Dex), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the techsmith prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Techsmiths are proficient with all simple weapons, and gain the feat Exotic Weapon Proficiency (firearms) if they do not already have it.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each techsmith level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a techsmith, the player must decide to which class to add each techsmith level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Gondsmen (Ex): Upon becoming a techsmith, the character may construct a gondsman—a loyal mechanical warrior, assistant, bodyguard, and friend.

This gondsman costs the techsmith nothing, for it is assumed that in the time before becoming a techsmith he has been researching and working on parts of the gondsman in his spare time.

A gondsman is a construct, is made of metal and wood (and is therefore vulnerable to attacks such as warp wood and rusting grasp).

The techsmith can create a gondsman in one of two sizes: Small (Str 13, Dex 14, Con —, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 6) or Medium-size (Str 15, Dex 12, Con —, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 6), or A gondsman has a +5 natural armor, neutral alignment, d10s for Hit Dice, and Hit Dice equal to the techsmith's class level + 3.

It has a slam attack that deals 1d8 points of base damage.

A new gondsman has no equipment but can use any equipment appropriate for its size.

As the techsmith gains a level, the gondsman also increases in ability by gaining a Hit Die.

Following the rules for constructs in the Monster Manual, the gondsman gains the normal improvements for a construct that adds a Hit Die: 1d10 hit points, attack bonus as cleric, poor base save bonus improvement.

In addition, each time the techsmith gains a level, he may add an upgrade to his gondsman, selecting from the following options:

- +1 Strength
- +1 Dexterity
- +1 to base attack bonus
- +1 to one save
- +1 to existing natural armor bonus

A gondsman shares a special bond with its creator, similar to the relationship between a sorcerer and his familiar.

The construct and creator share an empathic link to a distance of one mile.

The techsmith cannot see through the gondsman's eyes, but they can communicate telepathically.

Even the most intelligent and personable gondsmen tend to see the world through a somewhat detached, mechanical perspective, so misunderstandings are possible.

This empathic link is a supernatural ability.

Because of the empathic link between the gondsman and the techsmith, the techsmith has the same connection to a place or item that the gondsman does.

Should a gondsman be damaged, the techsmith can repair it using artisan's tools at a rate of 1 hit point per hour.

Alternatively, the mending spell can restore 1 hit point.

Since constructs are creatures, cure spells affect it normally.

If a gondsman is reduced to 0 hit points, it is destroyed.

Should a gondsman be destroyed, the techsmith may construct another.

Constructing a replacement gondsman costs 500 gp per Hit Die and takes 1 day for every 1,000 gp value of the gondsman (as if the techsmith were creating a magic item).

For example, a 6th level techsmith wishing to replace a 9 HD gondsman would have to spend 4,500 gp and five days creating the gondsman.

sample gondsmen

Techsmiths develop gondsmen to suit their needs and wants.

The 5th level techsmith's gondsman, below, emphasizes offense with its +3 Strength and +1 attack increases.

The 11 HD gondsman, below, shows a defensive approach with natural armor increased by +4 and saving throws each increased by +1.

All gondsmen share construct traits:

Construct Traits: Immune to mind-influencing effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, patterns, and morale effects), and to poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, disease, death effects, necromantic effects, and any effect that requires a Fort save unless it also works on objects; cannot heal damage (though regeneration and fast healing still apply, if present); not subject to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, ability drain, or energy drain; not at risk of death from massive damage, but destroyed when reduced to 0 hit points or less; cannot be raised or resurrected; darkvision 60 ft.

A 1st level techsmith's 4 HD gondsman:

➤ Clang: Gondsman; CR —; Medium-size construct; HD 4d10; hp 22; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 16 (touch 11, flat-footed 15); Atk +5 melee (1d8+3, slam); SQ Construct traits; AL N; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +2; Str 15; Dex 12, Con —, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 6.

A 5th level techsmith's 8 HD gondsman:

➤ Wrath's Hammer: Gondsman; CR —; Medium-size construct; HD 8d10; hp 44; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 16 (touch 11, flat-footed 15); Atk +11/+6 melee (1d8+4, slam); Face/Reach 5 ft. × 5 ft./5 ft.; SQ construct traits; AL N; SV Fort +2, Ref +3, Will +3; Str 18, Dex 12, Con —, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 6.

An 8th level techsmith's 11 HD gondsman:

➤ Fairshield: Gondsman; CR —; Small construct; HD 11d10; hp 60; Init +2; Spd 20 ft.; AC 22 (touch 13, flat-footed 20); Atk +10/+5 melee (1d8+1, slam); SQ Construct traits; AL N; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +5; Str 13, Dex 14, Con —, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 6.
Skills and Feats: Hide +6.

Technical Knack (Ex): Techsmiths of a certain skill level pick up a technical knack, an innate familiarity with the workings of mechanical gadgetry and science that allows them a +2 competence bonus on all Alchemy, Appraise, Craft, Disable Device, Knowledge, and Open Lock checks involving some sort of mechanical, technological, or explosive circumstance.

This bonus increases to +4 at 5th level and +6 at 8th level.

New Domain: The techsmith may choose a new domain from Gond's list of available domains (Craft, Earth, Fire, Knowledge, Metal, and Planning).

The techsmith receives the domain's granted power and may choose the domain's spells as domain spells.

(The techsmith now has three choices each level for domain spells instead of two).

A techsmith that has no cleric levels gains no spells or spell slots from this ability, but gains the granted power of the domain he chooses.

Construct Sense (Su): Techsmiths of 3rd level or higher can communicate telepathically with any construct within 60 feet.

They may make a Spot check (DC 15) to recognize a construct for what it is.

Golembane (Ex): Because of his superior knowledge of constructs, a techsmith can combat a golem (or any construct) with weapons or unarmed attacks as if it had no damage reduction.

After watching a construct in action for 1 round, he knows what spells it is particularly vulnerable or immune to.

Improved Critical (Ex): Because of his study of metals and other crafting materials, a techsmith knows how to best utilize any weapon and find the weak spots of any armor.

Any weapon he uses threatens critical hits as if he had the Improved Critical feat.

Explosive Obsession (Ex): Due to their familiarity with the intricacies of smokepowder, techsmiths of 9th level or higher may create enhanced bombs.

These powerful explosives operate exactly as described under Renaissance Grenadelike Weapons in Chapter 6 in the Dungeon Master's Guide, except that they deal 2d8 points of damage and have a blast radius of 15 feet.

Crafting such a bomb costs 50 gp in raw materials and requires 2 hours.

Golemsmite (Ex): Upon reaching 10th level, a techsmith is a lethal foe to any opposing constructs.

If the techsmith makes a critical hit with a melee weapon against a construct of any type, it is immediately destroyed, as if the techsmith were using a mace of smiting.

WAVESERVANT

Umberlee is widely feared by all who make their living from the sea, and those who trespass her domain had best pay tribute to avoid her wrath.

Waveservants serve the Bitch Queen as both tribute gatherers and enforcers.

Most waveservants are clerics, rangers, or cleric/rangers. Sometimes a wizard or sorcerer with a fondness for water magic becomes a waveservant, a few druid/waveservants are known, and some barbarian tribes venerate the Bitch Queen and have barbarian/waveservant members nearly as temperamental as the goddess herself.

Waveservants are usually loners.

Some dwell on storm-swept islands and coasts, while others spend their whole lives aboard ships.

Many make their living as pirates, attacking merchant ships that do not make sufficient offerings to their goddess.

They rarely venture far from large bodies of water.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a waveservant, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Intuit Direction 3 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Speak Language (Aquan), Swim 4 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Weapon Focus (trident).

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Clerics who wish to become waveservants must have access to the Ocean domain.

Patron: Umberlee.

Special: The character must have made peaceful contact with a water elemental, an evil creature of type outsider (water), or an evil aquatic creature; the creature must have had at least 6 Hit Dice and the character must have communicated with it using a language or magic.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a waveservant (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Int), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the waveservant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A waveservant gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each waveservant level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a waveservant, the player must decide to which class to add each waveservant level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Ocean Spells: A waveservant can prepare any spell from the Ocean domain as if it were on his divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Ocean domain list.

For instance, a ranger/waveservant could prepare endure elements as a 1st level ranger spell.

Water Breathing (Ex): A waveservant can breathe water as easily as air, and gains a swim speed of 30 feet.

Like all creatures with a swim speed, waveservants do not need to make Swim checks to move through the water at their swim speed.

They have a +8 bonus on all Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard.

They can always choose to take 10 on Swim checks even if rushed or threatened.

They can use the run action while swimming provided they swim in a straight line.

Drowned Legion: Waveservants with the ability to rebuke undead gain a +4 to their turning damage roll whenever they or the targeted undead are at least half immersed in water.

Freedom of Movement (Ex): At 2nd level, waveservants move and attack normally while underwater as if they were under the effects of a freedom of movement spell.

They may also cast spells unhindered when underwater.

Restrictions not directly related to the water (such as a web spell cast into the water) are not thwarted by this ability.

Aquatic Servants (Su): At 3rd level, a waveservant gains the ability to rebuke or command aquatic creatures.

This ability works just like an evil cleric rebuking or commanding undead, but uses the waveservant's class level to determine the effect of the rebuke attempt.

The waveservant may use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + her Charisma modifier.

Sahuagin Rage (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a waveservant can call upon the inhuman bloodlust of the sahuagin, entering a rage exactly the same as that of a barbarian. She may do this once per day.

Deep Sight (Ex): At 4th level, a waveservant can see underwater as if she had darkvision and low-light vision.

Nose of the Shark (Ex): At 4th level, the waveservant gains the keen scent ability of a shark whenever she is within the water.

She can detect creatures that are within the water within 180 ft. and can detect blood in the water at ranges of up to one mile.

Jellyfish Poison (Su): At 5th level, the waveservant causes thousands of tiny poisoned nearly invisible barbs to grow from her face and hands.

With a touch attack, she may inject poison through these barbs into the body of a target creature.

The poison (Fort DC 10 + 1/2 class level + Wisdom bonus) deals 1d6 points of initial and secondary Strength damage.

The waveservant can use the barbs to make multiple poison attacks as long as they remain.

The barbs may be invoked once per day, remain on the waveservant's skin for up to 1 minute per class level, and can be dismissed as a free action.

The poison cannot be removed from the character's skin or the barbs and stored for later use.

Tremorsense (Ex): At 6th level, a waveservant becomes so attuned to the vibrations of water that she effectively has the tremorsense ability in regard to creatures within or touching the body of water she is in.

For example, if she were in an underground lake, she would know the exact location of an invisible rogue swimming through the lake toward her, but would not have any unusual ability to locate the invisible sorcerer flying above her.

The range of this ability is 60 feet.

Jellyfish Tentacles (Su): At 8th level, when in water, the waveservant gains the ability to transform her arms into dozens of spindly translucent tentacles, all bearing poisoned barbs.

The tentacles have a reach of 10 feet.

The waveservant may attempt a touch attack with the tentacles, with a successful touch attack meaning the target is subject to the effects of jellyfish poison (see above).

If used outside of water, the tentacles hang to the ground, have a maximum reach of 5 feet, and can only affect creatures that step on them.

Attacks with melee weapons against tentacles are made against AC 10, deal only 1 point of damage to the waveservant, and sever a single tentacle with each hit, but there are so many strands and they regrow so quickly that these attacks are almost entirely ineffective.

Attacks with ranged weapons deal no damage.

Area attacks affect the tentacles (and the waveservant) normally.

While her arms are transformed into tentacles, she may not cast spells with anything other than verbal components, she cannot manipulate objects, and any magic items worn on her hands or arms are temporarily absorbed and cease functioning while this ability is active.

Transforming her arms back to normal is a free action.

She may use this ability for a number of rounds per day equal to her class level plus her Charisma modifier.

Arms of the Octopus (Su): At 9th level, the waveservant gains the ability to transform her arms into long suckered and barbed tentacles with 10 foot reach.

She may attack with these arms as if they were natural weapons for her, and attacks in this manner do not draw attacks of opportunity.

A tentacle deals 1d4 points of damage plus the waveservant's Strength bonus.

A successful attack with a tentacle allows the waveservant to immediately attempt a grapple without having to make a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity.

A waveservant that has grappled an opponent can choose to constrict her opponent with a successful grapple attack, automatically dealing 2d4 points plus Strength bonus of normal damage.

While her arms are transformed into tentacles, she may not cast spells with anything other than verbal components, her effective Dexterity for manipulating objects is 6, and any magic items worn on her hands or arms are temporarily absorbed and cease functioning while this ability is active.

Transforming her arms back to normal is a free action.

She may use this ability for a number of rounds per day equal to her class level plus her Charisma modifier.

Jellyfish Body (Su): At 10th level, a waveservant's body undergoes a radical transformation.

Her bones and internal organs soften and diffuse, leaving only her skin to define her shape.

While this does not greatly affect her appearance (her features soften somewhat) or any of her other abilities, it does leave her body with no parts that are more vulnerable than any other.

In short, she has no discernable anatomy, and is therefore no longer subject to critical hits or sneak attacks. Her type changes to aberration (aquatic).

WEARER OF PURPLE

Wearers of purple are members of the Cult of the Dragon who embrace the creation and veneration of the Sacred Ones, the great dracoliches of Faerûn.

Members follow the teachings of Sammaster the Mad, who prophesied that dragon dragons shall rule the world entire. Organized into autonomous cells, Dragon Cultists collectively serve as an intelligence-gathering and communications network for the evil dragons of Faerûn and the Cult's dracoliches.

Wearers of purple are typically leaders of such Dragon Cult cells.

They are responsible for tracking evil dragons to their lair, offering tribute to evil dragons, convincing evil dragons to become dracoliches, preparing the necessary ritual components for the transformation, and serving dracoliches once created.

Most wearers of purple serve one dracolich, although members of powerful cells may serve up to a half a dozen Sacred Ones.

Most wearers of purple are clerics, wizards, wizards specializing in the art of necromancy, or sorcerers.

Those clerics who do join the ranks of the Dragon Cult are typically followers of Bane, Cyric, Gargauth, Shar, Talona, or Velsharoon.

Although fighters and rogues make up the bulk of the Cult's lower ranks, few non-spellcasters ascend to leadership positions with the Cult of the Dragon.

Wearers of purple are usually high-ranking members of a Dragon Cult cell who work closely with fellow Cultists.

Most are either involved in wooing one or more dragons to undergo the transformation to undeath or serving one of the Sacred Ones directly.

Most remain in close proximity to the lair of the dragon that they serve except when coordinating with other cells or seeking out other wyrms.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a wearer of purple, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Save Bonus: Will +5.

Skills: Alchemy 5 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (local) 3 ranks, Speak Language (Draconic).

Feats: Iron Will, Spell Focus (Necromancy).

Spells: Able to cast at least one necromantic spell.

Special: The character must have made peaceful contact with an evil true dragon or dracolich.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a wearer of purple (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Scry (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the wearer of purple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A wearer of purple gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each wearer of purple level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a wearer of purple, the player must decide to which class to add each wearer of purple level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Energy Resistance (Ex): Upon adopting the wearer of purple class, the character gains a resistance 5 to one type of energy (commonly acid, cold, electricity, or fire), as described in Chapter 3 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Most characters choose a resistance to the type of energy embodied in the breath weapon of the dragon or dracolich that they attend or expect to attend.

At 3rd and 5th level, the energy resistance increases to 10 and 15, respectively.

New Domain: At 1st level, the wearer of purple gains a domain from the following list: Death, Evil, Scalykind. The character gains the granted power of the new domain. A wearer of purple's class level stacks with his cleric level for determining the effects of these three domain's granted powers.

If the wearer of purple has no cleric levels, he doesn't gain the domain spells, but uses his levels in this prestige class to determine the granted power's effects.

Dracoride (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, when riding any kind of dragon, a wearer of purple uses his normal Ride skill score, even if he chose a nondraconic sort of mount when he first selected the Ride skill.

In other words, he suffers no penalties for riding a "different" or "very different" mount when riding dragons.

Item Creation Feat: At 4th and 6th level, the wearer of purple gains a bonus feat from the following list: Brew Potion, Craft Wondrous Item, Forge Ring.

The wearer of purple must meet all prerequisites for the chosen feat.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Beginning at 7th level, a wearer of purple can unsettle foes with his mere presence, much like the Sacred Ones he serves.

The ability takes effect automatically whenever the character attacks or charges.

Creatures within a radius of 30 feet are subject to the effect if they have fewer HD than the character.

Creatures may resist with a successful Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 class level + Charisma modifier).

Those that save are immune to the character's frightful presence for one day.

On a failure, creatures with 4 or fewer HD become panicked for 4d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 4d6 rounds.

Dragons are immune to this effect.

Paralyzing Touch (Su): Beginning at 8th level, a creature touched by a wearer of purple must make a Fort save (DC 10 + 1/2 class level + Charisma modifier) or be paralyzed for 2d6 rounds.

A successful saving throw against this effect does not confer any immunity against subsequent attacks.

The wearer of purple may use this touch attack a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma bonus (if any), and must make a melee touch attack against his opponent to use this ability.

Once invoked, the ability is treated as a touch spell, with the character "holding the charge" for the ability until it is used or dispersed.

Paralyzing Gaze (Su): Beginning at 9th level, the wearer of purple may cause his eyes to glow, giving him the ability to paralyze victims within 40 feet who fail a Fort save (DC 10 + 1/2 class level + Charisma modifier).

If the saving throw is successful, the target creature is forever immune to the gaze of that particular wearer of purple.

If it fails, the victim is paralyzed for 2d6 rounds.

The wearer of purple may use this gaze attack a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma bonus (if any).

Rebuke Sacred Ones (Su): Beginning at 10th level, a wearer of purple may use his rebuke undead ability to rebuke a dragon or dracolich.

The cleric makes a rebuke attempt as normal, except that his range is 120 feet and only affects the targeted dragon or dracolich.

A dracolich's turn resistance does not apply against this ability.

WINDWALKER

The Rider of Winds teaches his adherents to ride the wind and let it take them wherever it blows, so as to see the wonder of the world.

Some followers of Shaundakul take this admonition literally, learning to shape the winds with their hands and ride them to lands as yet unseen.

In their travels, windwalkers spread the teachings of Shaundakul far and wide, lending a helping hand to those in need and blazing trails for those who follow.

Many come to Myth Drannor to drive the evil outsiders from the site of Shaundakul's greatest temple.

Most windwalkers are clerics or rangers.

Some bards and sorcerers become windwalkers, but other classes rarely follow this path.

Windwalkers are usually loners and rarely stay in any one location for any length of time.

Many make their living exploring new caravan routes for merchant consortiums.

Others simply live off the land, traveling far and wide across the globe in search of new vistas.

A fair number of windwalkers are active adventurers, albeit with a penchant for exploring far-off ruins in mysterious locales.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a windwalker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Human, half-elf, or air genasi.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Intuit Direction 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Wilderness Lore 3 ranks.

Feats: Lightning Reflexes, Track, Weapon Focus (greatsword).

Spells: Ability to cast divine spells.

Clerics who wish to become windwalkers must have access to the Air or Travel domain.

Patron: Shaundakul.

Special: The character must have visited at least three different regions in her lifetime.

The character must have flown at least once for an hour or more, whether by means of magic or an aerial mount.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a windwalker (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the windwalker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A windwalker gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each windwalker level, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as an improved chance of turning or rebuking undead).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a windwalker, the player must decide to which class to add each windwalker level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Air and Travel Spells: A windwalker can prepare any spell from the Air or Travel domains as if it were on her divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Air or Travel domain list.

For instance, a ranger/windwalker could prepare obscuring mist as a 1st level ranger spell.

Soft Fall (Su): A windwalker always receives some support from the winds, as if under the protection of a feather fall spell.

Cold Resistance (Ex): As the windwalker gains levels in this prestige class, she becomes increasingly resistant to cold, gaining cold resistance in the amount listed on the table.

Portalsense (Su): A 3rd-level windwalker can use the spell analyze portal at will.

Air Walk (Su): A windwalker may air walk at will.

Smite Fiend (Su): Once per day, beginning at 5th level, a windwalker may attempt to smite a fiend (evil outsider) with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Charisma bonus to the attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

If she accidentally smites a creature that isn't an evil outsider, the smite has no effect but is still used up for the day.

If she has a smite ability from another class, she may use her smite abilities separately or combine them into a single attack, if appropriate.

At 9th level, she can use this ability twice per day.

Windsong (Su): A 7th-level windwalker can churn the air in a 30 foot radius from herself, creating a droning, roaring noise that disrupts concentration and drowns out normal noise.

Creatures within the area of churning air (except the windwalker herself) must make Concentration checks (DC 10 + 1/2 windwalker's class level + windwalker's Charisma bonus) to cast spells or perform any activity that requires concentration.

Creatures within 60 feet of the windwalker are effectively deafened, although this deafness ends as soon as they leave the area or the windsong stops.

The windsong also acts as a wind wall spell throughout its entire area, and functions as a countersong (as the bard ability) for all creatures within the zone of churning air (the windwalker makes a class level check instead of a Perform check).

Maintaining the windsong requires concentration and the windwalker can only use the ability a total number of rounds per day equal to her class level.

Ride the Winds (Su): At 10th level, a windwalker gains a fly speed of 100 ft. (good).

FIEND FOLIO (3.0)

FIEND OF BLASPHEMY

Mortal creatures seem to have an innate drive to offer worship to deities and form associations of a religious nature.

The fiend of blasphemy is a master of the infernal art of perverting this natural desire and turning it toward the corrupt veneration of fiendish masters.

Adept at exploiting mortal weaknesses, a fiend of blasphemy forms a diabolical cult whose members are hopelessly bound to the fiend, to the eventual damnation of their souls.

As the name suggests, only fiends can acquire and advance in the fiend of blasphemy prestige class.

Some can qualify without any levels in other classes at all, while others gain levels, usually as clerics, before joining the prestige class.

Some fiendish sorcerers and bards, and occasionally wizards as well, use powers of illusion and enchantment to help them deceive mortals and lure them into blasphemous cults.

Martial-minded fiends, with levels as fighters, rangers, or barbarians, occasionally form cults made up of brigands, pirates, or mercenaries.

Fiends of blasphemy almost always work alone.

Their ultimate purpose is to drive mortals away from the worship of true deities, especially good deities, and win their souls to the Lower Planes.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fiend of blasphemy, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Outsider with the evil subtype.

Base Save Bonus: Will +7.

Skills: Bluff 10 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 10 ranks.

Feats: Leadership.

Special: Must have at least one spell-like ability that duplicates a spell effect of 4th level or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

The fiend of blasphemy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the fiend of blasphemy prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fiends of blasphemy gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a fiend of blasphemy gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the fiend of blasphemy must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a fiend of blasphemy with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Fiend of blasphemy bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the fiend's Wisdom modifier (if any).

When the fiend gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the fiend of blasphemy gets only bonus spells (in addition to a domain spell slot, which it receives at every spell level).

A fiend of blasphemy without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level except for its domain spell.

The fiend of blasphemy's spell list appears below.

A fiend of blasphemy prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does.

A fiend of blasphemy gains access to two of its patron deity's domains.

A fiend of blasphemy can choose prestige domains (described in Defenders of the Faith) offered by its deity.

As with a cleric, each domain gives the fiend access to a domain spell at each spell level as well as a granted power. The fiend prepares one or the other of the available domain spells at each spell level each day.

Blood Oath (Su): A fiend of blasphemy has the ability to perform a ritual of initiation that binds cult members to the fiend's service.

The ritual forges a magical, mental bond between the fiend and those mortals who participate.

It requires one day of preparation, during which time the fiend must meditate and ready a room in which the ritual will take place.

The ritual itself lasts for 2 hours, plus an additional 10 minutes per mortal initiate.

If either the preparation or the ritual is interrupted, the process is ruined and the fiend must start again.

All creatures in the room (and no more than 60 feet away from the fiend of blasphemy) when the ritual begins or that enter that area during the ritual must make a Will save (DC 10 + fiend's class level + fiend's Cha modifier) or be affected as if by an enthrall spell.

Willing participants in the ritual receive a -4 penalty on this saving throw, while hostile onlookers receive a +4 bonus.

After the first 2 hours of the ritual, each initiate is subjected to the fiend's individual attention for 10 minutes, during which time the bond between the two is formed.

If an initiate wishes to resist the bond, she can attempt a Will saving throw (DC 15 + fiend's class level + fiend's Cha modifier).

Willing participants may voluntarily fail their saving throws.

If an initiate makes a successful saving throw, the fiend of blasphemy is aware that the bond was not properly formed, but this does not interrupt the ritual.

Fiends often allow mortals to believe their resistance went undetected until after the ritual is complete.

Locate Cultist (Su): One effect of the blood oath is a sort of telepathic bond between the fiend of blasphemy and its cultists.

At will, a fiend of blasphemy can use a supernatural power identical to locate creature to sense the location of any creature that has sworn a blood oath with the fiend.

Undetectable Alignment (Su): A fiend of blasphemy's alignment is constantly concealed from all forms of divination, as the undetectable alignment spell.

Transfer Spell-Like Ability (Sp): At 2nd level, a fiend of blasphemy can use a power similar to the cleric spell imbue with spell ability to grant its cult members access to its spell-like abilities.

A fiend can give one creature that has sworn it a blood oath access to as many of its own spell-like abilities as it desires. The cultist can use the ability once per day, with all variable characteristics (including caster level and save DC) determined as if the fiend were using the ability.

When it transfers a spell-like ability, the fiend cannot use the ability as often as usual: It can use abilities normally available at will only 4 times per day, and loses one use per day from other abilities.

A fiend can bestow the same ability on multiple worshipers, or allow worshipers to use the ability more than once per day, but in doing so loses more of its own daily uses of the ability.

For example, a glabrezu fiend of blasphemy can grant two of its cultists the ability to use dispel magic once per day, or grant a single cultist the ability to dispel magic twice per day, but the glabrezu itself can only dispel magic three times per day as long as the cultists retain their ability.

The fiend of blasphemy can revoke the transfer at any time as a free action.

If the cultist had already used the ability during the current day, it counts as if the fiend had used it that day as well.

Sponsor Worshiper (Su): A fiend of blasphemy that has reached at least 3rd level can channel spellcasting ability from its own fiendish master to mortals with levels in the cleric class.

A fiend can sponsor a cleric whose level is no higher than twice the fiend's class level.

Thus, a 3rd-level fiend of blasphemy can sponsor a cleric of up to 6th level, who receives access to the full complement of cleric spells as well as any two domains selected from those offered by the fiend's master.

Scry on Cultist (Sp): At 4th level, a fiend of blasphemy can scry on any creature that has sworn it a blood oath, as if using the scrying spell.

The fiend cannot scry on cultists on other planes.

The fiend can use this ability on any given cultist once per day, but there is no limit to how many cultists it can scry on in a day.

Torture Cultist (Su): At 4th level, a fiend of blasphemy gains the ability to inflict pain on those who have sworn it a blood oath.

Distance is not a factor, but the fiend cannot torture a cultist who is on a different plane.

When the fiend uses this power, the target cultist suffers excruciating pain.

The affected creature takes a -4 penalty on attack rolls, skill checks, and ability checks for 1 round per class level of the fiend.

A successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + fiend's class level + fiend's Cha modifier) lessens the penalty to -2.

Mind Shielding (Su): At 5th level, a fiend of blasphemy gains immunity to detect thoughts and discern lies spells.

Kill Cultist (Su): At 6th level, a fiend of blasphemy gains the ability to kill those who have sworn it a blood oath if they displease it.

Distance is not a factor, but the fiend cannot kill a cultist who is on a different plane.

The affected creature must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + fiend's class level + fiend's Cha modifier) or die.

If the save is successful, the creature takes 3d6+6 points of damage.

This is a death effect.

FIEND OF BLASPHEMY SPELL LIST

Fiends of blasphemy choose their spells from the following list:

1st—bane, bless, cause fear, command, detect chaos, detect evil, detect good, detect law, doom, protection from chaos/evil/good/law, sanctuary, shield of faith.

2nd—aid, bull's strength, darkness, desecrate, endurance, enthrall, hold person, silence, undetectable alignment.

4th—death ward, discern lies, imbue with spell ability, lesser planar ally, poison, sending, spell immunity, status, tongues.

5th—atonement, commune, dispel chaos, dispel evil, dispel good, dispel law, greater command, mark of justice, plane shift, scrying, slay living, spell resistance, true seeing.

FIEND OF CORRUPTION

For a variety of reasons—to win more fodder for an unending Blood War, to gain currency in an infernal economy, or to hold stakes in a cosmic conflict between good and evil—some fiends are preoccupied with corrupting mortals to ensure that their souls end up on the Lower Planes after death.

These fiends delight in finding souls pure and untouched by evil, and leading them astray until they are utterly and irredeemably corrupt.

What they cannot corrupt, they nevertheless hope to claim by virtue of an inviolable bargain that the fiend can inevitably twist toward its own purposes.

Such fiends thrive in the fiend of corruption prestige class. As the name suggests, only fiends can enter the fiend of corruption prestige class.

Some can qualify without any levels in other classes at all, while others gain levels in any character class before joining the prestige class.

A fiend of corruption works best by establishing a one-on-one relationship with an individual mortal, so it generally does its diabolical work independent of other fiends.

On rare occasions, succubus or erinyes fiends of corruption have been known to work in pairs.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fiend of corruption, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Outsider with the evil subtype.

Base Save Bonus: Will +7.

Skills: Bluff 10 ranks, Disguise 10 ranks, Sense Motive 10 ranks.

Special: Must be able to use charm person or charm monster as a spell or spell-like ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The fiend of corruption's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the fiend of corruption prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fiends of corruption gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Alternate Form (Su): A fiend of corruption has the ability to assume any humanoid form of Small to Large size as a standard action.

This ability is similar to the polymorph self spell but allows only humanoid forms.

While using this ability, the fiend gains a +10 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks.

Fiends of corruption typically use this ability to make themselves appear pleasing or even desirable to their intended targets.

It is hard, after all, to manipulate a person who is running away, howling in terror.

Fiends often use sexual temptation as a tool for corruption, but the seduction is simply a means to the eventual end of the mortal's damnation, not an end in itself.

Once drawn into an intimate relationship with a fiend (particularly if this relationship is considered illicit), mortals are more susceptible to further temptations and blackmail.

Fiend's Favor (Su): Once per day, a fiend of corruption can grant a touched creature a +3 bonus to one of the creature's ability scores.

This bonus stacks with any other bonus the creature may already have, and lasts for one day.

When the effect expires, the creature takes a -3 penalty to the same ability score for the next day.

Another application of fiend's favor not only negates the penalty, but restores the full bonus.

Fiends of corruption are quite free with this ability—at least at first.

They often approach people who are in need of a short-term ability boost for a specific situation, offering them the "favor" for free or in exchange for performing a simple task. The next day, when the affected creature is suffering from the penalty, the price for restoring the favor gets slightly higher, and so on—until a power-hungry character is willing to do just about anything in return.

Suggestion (Sp): At 2nd level, a fiend of corruption gains the ability to use suggestion three times per day.

The saving throw DC is 15 + the fiend's Charisma modifier (as though the fiend had Spell Focus [Enchantment]).

The fiend of corruption's class level is its caster level.

If the target of this ability is currently under the influence of a charm person cast by the fiend, she takes a -2 penalty on her saving throw.

A fiend of corruption is generally interested in corrupting mortals and seducing them toward evil.

A mortal who commits an evil act because of a magical compulsion is not fully corrupted, and the taint of evil can easily be removed with an atonement spell.

Even so, using this power can be a useful first step toward the mortal's ultimate damnation.

Once the deed is done, the fiend has a stronger foothold for later temptation or even blackmail.

Mind Shielding (Su): At 2nd level, a fiend of blasphemy gains complete immunity to detect thoughts, discern lies, and any attempt to magically discern its alignment.

This ability solidifies a fiend's disguise, cloaking its thoughts as well as its flesh.

Mark of Justice (Sp): At 3rd level, a fiend of corruption can use mark of justice once per day, though the ability might better be termed "mark of iniquity" when used in this manner.

A fiend of corruption uses this ability to cement a good person's descent into evil.

Once its victim is living an immoral life, the fiend uses mark of justice to ensure that the victim does not return to her old ways or seek atonement.

While good clerics typically place a mark of justice in a visible place on the subject, fiends generally hide their marks in locations that are not obvious.

Fiendish Graft (Su): Once per month, a fiend of corruption of 4th level or higher can bestow a fiendish graft or symbiont (see Appendix 3) on a willing mortal.

Fiendish grafts are offered as rewards to characters who are already well along the path of corruption.

Major Creation (Sp): A 4th-level fiend of corruption gains the ability to use major creation three times per day.

The fiend of corruption's class level is its caster level.

Fiends of corruption use this ability to offer concrete temptation to mortals whose tastes run to material wealth and finery.

Geas (Sp): Also at 5th level, a fiend of corruption can use geas/quest once per day.

As with suggestion, magical compulsion is not an ideal way to accomplish the fiend of corruption's goals, but works admirably as a step along the way.

Temptation (Su): At 5th level, a fiend of corruption gains the ability to offer good creatures the opportunity to change their alignment to evil.

This works like the redemption or temptation function of the atonement spell, and the fiend can use this ability whenever the opportunity arises.

Grant Wish (Sp): A 6th-level fiend of corruption can grant a wish to a mortal (not an elemental, outsider, or nonliving creature) once per day.

Using this ability costs the fiend experience points as if it were casting a wish spell, so fiends never use this ability lightly.

A fiend of corruption typically uses this ability as part of a soul bargain (see below), allowing it to grant its mortal target's every desire in exchange for ownership of the mortal's soul.

Soul Bargain (Su): At 6th level, a fiend of corruption gains the ability to enter a binding agreement with a mortal, at the cost of the mortal's soul.

The mortal victim must enter into the soul bargain willingly.

Upon the mortal's death (by any means), her soul is transferred to a gem (prepared as with the soul bind spell when the bargain is forged), even if the gem and the mortal are not on the same plane at the time.

The bargain requires 1 hour to complete, and is utterly inviolable once forged.

The only way to escape a soul bargain is to recover the gem after the mortal's death and break it, freeing her soul and allowing her to be restored to life through the normal means.

It is quite common for fiends of corruption, as soon as a soul bargain is complete, to return to their native plane and await the mortal's death, or at least deposit the gem in a safe place before returning to the Material Plane to hasten the victim's demise.

FIEND OF POSSESSION

A fiend that rends with claws or smites with a blazing sword is a fearsome foe indeed, but a fiend of possession is harrowing on a far deeper level.

Able to abandon its physical form and inhabit or even control a mortal body, a fiend of possession is an invasive presence that taints the very soul, corrupting from within. As the name suggests, only fiends can enter the fiend of possession prestige class.

Some can qualify without any levels in other classes at all, while others gain levels, often as sorcerers or bards, before joining the prestige class.

Many fiend clerics approach the fiend of possession prestige class as part of their spiritual agenda, viewing the possession of mortals as something of a religious obligation. Fiends with fighter levels tend to prefer a more direct approach to conflict on the Material Plane, and rarely show interest in becoming fiends of possession.

Fiends of possession generally work alone.

Some use their power simply to wreak as much chaos and destruction as they can, experiencing the carnage and debauchery much more intensely because of the nature of mortal flesh.

Others use their mortal hosts as part of a much more insidious plot of corruption.

In any case, their victims never feel clean or safe again.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fiend of possession, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any outsider with the Evil subtype.

Base Save Bonuses: Will +5.

Skills: Hide 6 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The fiend of possession's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex or Int; see below), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis). Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the fiend of possession prestige class.

Saving throws against a fiend of possession's supernatural abilities have a DC of 10 + the fiend of possession's class level + its Charisma modifier, unless noted otherwise in the ability description.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fiends of possession gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Ethereal Form (Su): At will, a fiend of possession can become ethereal, as though using ethereality as cast by a sorcerer of the fiend's total Hit Dice or its sorcerer caster level (when using its spell-like abilities) plus its fiend of possession level, whichever is higher.

Possessing an object or creature effectively ends a use of this ability, so time spent in another body or object does not count against the duration of this ability.

Hide Presence (Ex): A fiend in possession of an object or creature can attempt to hide its presence by making a special Hide check.

This "mental" Hide check uses the fiend's Intelligence modifier instead of its Dexterity modifier.

A successful check allows a fiend of possession to avoid virtually anything that would betray its presence in the possessed creature or object: it can pass through a magic circle against evil, enter a temple warded by forbiddance, or escape detection via detect evil.

The DC for this Hide check is the same as the saving throw DC for the spell the fiend is trying to avoid.

The fiend gains a +4 circumstance bonus on this check if it is not controlling the possessed creature or object at the time of the check.

When possessing a creature, a fiend of possession can make this Hide check to protect the possessed creature from the full effects of alignment-based spells such as holy smite.

If the fiend makes a successful Hide check (against the save DC of the spell), the possessed creature takes damage appropriate to its actual alignment, but if the fiend fails the Hide check, the possessed creature is affected as if it were the fiend.

Making this check is not an action; the fiend can do it in response to another creature's action (such as casting detect evil).

Possess Object (Su): A fiend of possession in ethereal form can possess an object on the Material Plane.

The object must be at least Tiny and no larger than Huge. Magic items and attended items receive Will saving throws. Unattended nonmagical items are automatically possessed. A fiend of possession becomes part of the object it possesses, so it is no longer ethereal.

The fiend is aware of what is going on around the object: It can see and hear up to 60 feet away as if using its normal senses (it does not gain blindsight).

In any round in which it takes no other action (such as using a spell-like ability), it extends its senses to twice its normal range (120 feet).

The fiend is vulnerable to spells that specifically affect outsiders or creatures of the fiend's alignment (such as holy word and holy smite, as well as chaos hammer or order's wrath) and mindaffecting spells or effects, but it is unaffected by physical attacks or standard magical effects (such as fireball). Harming the object does not harm the fiend, although if the object is destroyed, the fiend is forced back into its ethereal form.

While possessing an object, a fiend of possession can use any ability it has that requires no physical action, such as using a spell-like ability or telepathy.

It cannot cast spells (since it can neither speak nor move), attack physically, or perform any other physical action, until it reaches a high enough level to make the possessed object perform these tasks for it.

Curse (Su): At 2nd level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to make a possessed item radiate a corrupt and befouling nature.

Anyone touching the object must make a Will save or fall under the effect of a bestow curse spell.

The affected creature does not know that the curse came from the item, and in fact might not know right away that he or she is affected by the curse.

Nothing about the object's appearance suggests that it is possessed.

The curse lasts until it is removed, even if the fiend vacates the object it possessed.

Magic Item (Su): Also at 2nd level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to make a possessed weapon or armor function as a magic item.

The fiend can bestow powers on the item with a value as an enhancement bonus of up to its class level, so a 3rd-level fiend of possession could make a sword a +3 weapon, a +2 keen weapon, or a +1 wounding weapon, for example.

If the possessed item is already magical, the fiend can increase the powers on the item by the same amount—so a 5th-level fiend of possession could turn a +1 sword into a +1 vorpal sword, for example.

When a fiend uses this power on a nonmagical item, the possessed item does not actually become magical.

Detect magic does not reveal an aura on the item, though detect evil does.

If a fiend possessing an item attempts to possess a creature that uses the item or keeps it on its person, the target's save DC increases by 1 for each day the possessed item has been on its person or in its use, to a maximum of +10.

A character who makes a Search check (DC 25) while examining the possessed item can tell that there is "something strange" about it.

Control Object (Su): When possessing an object with some inherent mobility, a fiend of possession of at least 3rd level can control the object's movement.

The fiend can cause a vehicle or similar object to move at a speed up to the fiend's own land speed in its corporeal form.

Other moving parts—such as a clock's hands or a crossbow's firing mechanism—are under the fiend's control.

Thus, a fiend could make a wagon steer toward a pedestrian, or roll out of a stable without a horse to pull it.

It could make a crossbow cock and fire (but not aim or load itself).

Exerting control is itself a free action, though actually moving an object requires a move action.

Animate Object (Su): At 4th level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to force an object with no inherent moving parts to animate, effectively animating it as with the animate objects spell.

See the description of animated objects in the Monster Manual.

At this level, a fiend of possession can also possess (and animate) Gargantuan objects.

Possess Creature (Su): At 4th level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to possess creatures as well as objects. The fiend must be in ethereal form and adjacent to its target, and must use a standard action to attempt possession.

A protection from evil spell or similar magic wards a creature against being possessed in this manner.

An unprotected target must make a Will saving throw.

Evil creatures take a –2 penalty on this saving throw, as do creatures that are engaged in an evil act at the time the possession attempt occurs (at the DM's discretion).

If the saving throw is successful, that creature is immune to that fiend's possession attempts for one day.

If the saving throw is failed, the creature is possessed, though it is not necessarily aware of this fact.

A fiend possessing a creature becomes a part of the victim, so it is no longer ethereal.

It cannot be targeted by spells or attacks separately from the victim, including attacks from ethereal creatures. Damage taken by the possessed creature has no effect on the fiend.

If the victim dies, the fiend is forced back into its ethereal form.

The fiend can sense anything the victim can, even including the benefits of blindsight or other exceptional senses the victim may have.

At any time, the fiend of possession can communicate with the victim telepathically, projecting words in any language the victim understands directly into the victim's thoughts. The fiend is constantly aware of the victim's current thoughts.

It can also choose to probe the creature's memories as well, but the victim is allowed a Will save.

If this saving throw is successful, the fiend cannot probe that creature's thoughts for one day.

Ally or Enemy (Su): At 5th level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to reward or punish a creature it is possessing.

If the possessed creature is aware of the fiend's presence and willing to host the fiend, the fiend can bestow a +4 profane bonus on any of the creature's ability scores.

This bonus lasts as long as the fiend wants it to: The fiend can retract it as a free action at any time, particularly if the possessed creature starts acting contrary to the fiend's wishes.

Similarly, a fiend of possession can bestow a -4 profane penalty on any of the possessed creature's ability scores, usually when attempts to control the creature have failed or the creature contradicts the fiend's wishes.

As with the bonus, the fiend can remove this penalty at any time, as a free action.

Bestowing either a bonus or a penalty is a free action for the possessing fiend.

Possess Noncontinuous Object (Su): At 5th level, a fiend of possession can use its possess object ability to take control of an "object" more loosely defined: a pool of water, a cloud of dust, or a section of wall or floor.

At this level, a fiend of possession can also possess (and animate) Colossal objects.

Control Creature (Su): At 6th level, a fiend of possession gains the ability to exert direct control over a creature it is possessing.

Attempting to establish control is a standard action for the fiend.

The victim must make a Will saving throw each round until the fiend abandons the attempt, or the victim fails a saving throw and the fiend gains control, or the victim makes three consecutive successful saves, indicating that the fiend cannot control the victim that day (though it remains in possession of the victim).

Each round of struggle, the victim can take only a single move or attack action.

Once the fiend gains control, it automatically maintains it for a number of rounds equal to its class level (6) + its

Charisma modifier, +1 for each previous occasion on which it has controlled this host.

When this time elapses, the fiend can attempt to reassert control or not, as it chooses.

While in control of a victim, the fiend of possession has access to all the creature's abilities, skills, feats, and spell knowledge.

The fiend now acts as though it is the creature in all respects, until it loses or relinquishes control.

The fiend uses its own Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma scores, but adopts all of the possessed creature's physical ability scores.

It can make use of its own spell-like abilities as well.

The fiend retains the creature's type, and is affected by spells and other effects as if it were the possessed creature except in regard to its alignment.

For instance, a cornugon possessing the body of a wolf is subject to spells that affect animals, even though it is far more intelligent than a normal wolf.

A balor possessing the body of a paladin is not subject to unholy blight, however, but is fully affected by holy smite.

The fiend can choose whether the possessed creature retains awareness of its body's senses and actions, in which case it can mentally communicate with the fiend, or simply blacks out for the duration of the control.

Ending Possession: Spells such as dismissal and banishment are among the only effects that can target a fiend of possession separately from the object or creature it inhabits. When these spells are directed against a fiend of possession, the spell effect is resolved as if the fiend were in its normal, corporeal form, using its own Hit Dice, saving throws, ability scores, and so on.

If successful, these spells drive the fiend out of the victim and back to its home plane.

Holy word and similar spells can also drive out a possessing fiend and send it back to its home plane, but a fiend can hide its presence to escape the effects of such spells.

Certain other special abilities (such as the granted power of the Exorcism prestige domain described in Defenders of the Faith) can force a fiend of possession out of a victim and back into its ethereal form.

FIENDISH CODEX 2 (3.5)

HELLBREAKER

"They steal our souls, I steal their stuff. That's fair, right?"

—Trienath Salazar, hellbreaker

Hellbreakers are consummate adventurers.

Called thieves by their detractors and heroes by their apologists, they specialize in infiltrating infernal strongholds and relieving them of their treasures.

To this end, they develop a number of abilities and fighting techniques useful for combating the legions of Hell.

BECOMING A HELLBREAKER

Rogues likely make the best hellbreakers, since they have access to both Bluff and Sense Motive as class skills and gain the fastest sneak attack progression.

Many hell breakers also have ranger levels, since the favored enemy ability complements those gained from this prestige class.

Others dabble in forbidden magic, having one or more levels of binder or truenamer (Tome of Magic) to augment their other class features.

A spellthief (Complete Adventurer) does well in this class too, as does a ninja, though it takes longer for both classes to meet the entry requirements.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks, Sense Motive 8 ranks.

Language: Infernal.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Improved Feint, Undo

Resistance*.

Special: Sneak attack +2d6, skirmish +2d6, or sudden strike +2d6.

* New feat described above.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

A hellbreaker dismantles a creature's magical abilities.

By sacrificing sneak attack damage, she can steal their spell-like and supernatural abilities.

She can foil divination spells and make it harder to cast conjuration spells, and when she needs to slip away, she can catch a ride on another caster's teleportation spell or step onto another plane.

Mantle of Darkness (Ex): You can make Hide checks in any kind of darkness, even when observed by creatures that can see in darkness.

Telepathic Static (Su): Beginning at 1st level, you emit a field of psychic chatter out to a range of 20 feet, negating the telepathy ability of all creatures within range.

In addition, divination spells and spell-like abilities cast or used in the area are impeded.

To use divination magic, a caster must succeed on a Spellcraft check (DC 20 + the level of the spell).

If the check fails, the spell or spell-like ability does not function but is still lost as a prepared spell, spell slot, or daily use.

If the check succeeds, the spell functions normally.

You can suppress this ability for 1 round as a free action.

Steal Spell-Like Ability (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can use a sneak attack to temporarily steal a creature's spell-like ability.

If you hit an opponent with a sneak attack, you can choose to forgo 2d6 dice of sneak attack damage and instead gain one use of one of the target's spell-like abilities.

If the target is willing, you can steal a spell-like ability with a touch as a standard action (you do not need to damage a willing target).

This spell-like ability can originate from the target's class, race, template, or any other source, and can be of any spell level up to a maximum of 1/2 your class level.

You can select a specific spell-like ability to borrow; otherwise, the DM chooses the ability at random.

If the ability has a limited number of uses per day, the target must have at least one such use left, or you can't steal the ability.

If the target can't use its ability (such as a summoned devil's summon ability), you can't steal it.

If you steal and use an ability with limited uses per day, your use of the ability also counts as one use for the target creature.

You can use a stolen spell-like ability once.

For all purposes (caster level, save DC, and so on), treat the spell-like ability as if the creature whose ability you stole were using it.

You must use the stolen spell-like ability within 1 minute of acquiring it, or it is lost.

Until you use the ability (or until 1 minute elapses), the target cannot use the stolen ability.

If you have a similar ability, such as the spellthief's steal spell-like ability (Complete Adventurer 19), you can steal two spell-like abilities at once, but each is subject to its respective spell level restriction.

Once you have stolen a spell-like ability, you cannot use neutralize spell-like ability (see below) until you have used the stolen ability.

Sneak Attack: Beginning at 3rd level, you deal extra damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when a target would be denied its Dexterity bonus to AC.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if a target is within 30 feet.

(See the rogue class feature, PH 50).

This extra damage increases to +2d6 at 6th level and +3d6 at 9th level.

If you have levels in another class that grants sneak attack damage, the extra damage stacks.

Stowaway (Su): From 4th level on, you can hitch a ride on a conjuration (teleportation) spell or spell-like ability cast or used within 30 feet of you.

If the target is unwilling, you must succeed on a level check with a DC of 10 + the caster level of the effect as an immediate action.

If the target is willing, this ability functions automatically.

When the spell is cast, you appear wherever the caster appears, in the same position you were at the time of the spell's casting.

If this would force you to appear in a solid object, you appear in the nearest open available space.

If the conjuration spell has variable results, such as teleport, you suffer the same effect as the caster.

Neutralize Spell-Like Ability (Su): Beginning at 5th level, you gain the ability to neutralize one of a target's spell-like abilities.

This ability functions like the steal spell-like ability class feature, except you do not gain the ability to use the spell-like ability.

Instead, you prevent the target from using the ability for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

You cannot use this ability while holding a stolen spell-like ability.

You can neutralize any number of spell-like abilities.

Foil Summoning (Su): At 7th level, your telepathic static intensifies so that you also impede conjuration (calling) and conjuration (summoning) spells and spell-like effects within 20 feet.

See telepathic static, above, for details.

Steal Supernatural Ability (Su): From 8th level on, you can steal supernatural abilities.

This ability functions like the steal spell-like ability class feature.

While in possession of a stolen spell-like or supernatural ability, you cannot use steal spell-like ability, steal supernatural ability, or neutralize spell-like ability again until you lose access to the stolen ability (by discharging it or after 1 minute, whichever comes first).

Plane Hop (Sp): At 10th level, you can use plane shift as an immediate action once per day.

This ability functions like the spell, but it has a range of personal and a target of you.

PLAYING A HELLBREAKER

You don't put a lot of stock in rules and regulations; you just don't trust them.

Too much order stifles creativity, and worse, encourages tyranny.

That's why you focus your efforts on fighting devils.

You don't pursue this path for moral reasons—well, maybe a little—but because devils are the worst tyrants of all.

These creatures want nothing more than to sink their claws into the souls of innocents, promising them all sorts of wonderful things only to pull the rug out from under them.

When a person finally realizes she has been duped, it's too late—she's already a slave.

Your loathing of devils has led you to other like-minded people.

Now, you're not part of an organization—that requires too much structure.

Instead, you form a loose confederation of adventurers that puts its various talents to good use.

You're all committed to fighting devils, though you know people's motives vary a great deal.

You and your allies raid cult strongholds, hidden enclaves, and even sometimes make expeditions to the Nine Hells.

There, you rob your marks blind and slip away before anyone notices.

You know your actions infuriate the devils, which is what makes spending so much time figuring out ways past their defenses worthwhile.

COMBAT

You can fight devils better than nearly anyone.

Most of your class features are keyed to combat specific advantages found in all devils.

In particular, your steal spell-like ability feature allows you to neutralize key strengths such as summon baatezu or a devastating charm or compulsion spell-like ability that can wreak havoc on an adventuring party.

Once you have neutralized one of a devil's most potent tools, you should work with your allies to set up a flank so you can maximize your damage output.

Don't sell yourself short, though.

You are not a one-trick character.

You are just as effective against other creatures that use spell-like and supernatural abilities.

At low to mid-levels, you can leave a devil crippled and punch holes in its hide, while the heavy hitters in your group pound away.

If one opponent tries to get away, you have the means to catch a ride with it wherever it's going, and finish the creature off.

ADVANCEMENT

Not everyone can be a hellbreaker.

It takes a certain sort of person to commit to a life of fighting devils.

It takes rage, hatred, and a thirst for vengeance.

You, and others like you, despise tyrants.

You might have been a slave at one time, or maybe you suffered along with many other people under a brutal regime.

At some point, you had enough.

You did your research, looking for someone to punish.

There, buried under a heap of planar lore, you found the very authors of tyranny—the devils.

Making the decision to become a hellbreaker wasn't easy, but once you made it, you were sure you were on the right path.

You probably studied under another hellbreaker to learn the trade, but you also learned a lot on your own.

You figured out how to touch the planar harmonics to interfere with telepathic communication.

You learned how to hide from even the most perceptive eyes.

Little by little, you haphazardly picked up how to pluck the most treasured abilities from your opponents and exploit them.

As a hellbreaker, you should invest in feat choices that improve your attack rolls and mobility.

Spring Attack, Mobility, and Weapon Focus all improve your chances at successfully crippling your opponent.

Improved Initiative is also vital, since it allows you to control the battlefield more effectively by striking before a devil is prepared.

Don't neglect Hide and Move Silently, and be sure to keep putting ranks in Tumble, since this skill enables you to maneuver more effectively.

RESOURCES

Being a thief at heart, you travel in shady circles, getting to know all sorts of unsavory types.

The criminal underworld often contains specialists, much like yourself, who concern themselves with bigger prizes.

Fighting devils requires a certain understanding of their society, their thinking, and their interests, so you spend much of your free time studying and learning from people who have crossed devils in the past.

In time, you develop a reputation for such knowledge yourself and other hopeful hellbreakers come to seek you out.

HELLBREAKERS IN THE WORLD

"I've known a few hellbreakers in my time, and I'll tell you, they're all mad.

Oh sure, they start lucid enough, stealing a forbidden tome from a cultist in a city and then drifting over to some village to help a group of mercenaries break up a coven of devil-worshippers.

But at some point, they all break.

They start dreaming bigger than they should.

All they talk about is thwarting some arch devil, Pelor bless us all.

Then, they up and disappear, never seen or heard from again."

—Corby Naysayer, adventurer

Hellbreakers are rare and mysterious individuals.

Though the idea of the hellbreaker spans many different races and cultures, they lack any sort of real organization.

Hellbreakers might sometimes band together for a particularly tough mission, but they are more likely to join up with nonhellbreakers to benefit from a diverse assortment of capabilities.

ORGANIZATION

Hellbreakers, when they do organize into groups, do so for brief stints, usually only for a single mission.

The reason is simple.

Hellbreakers have dangerous enemies, and sticking with the same allies for too long invites disaster. Worse, if a devil gets revenge against several hellbreakers at once, no one remains to pass on the trade.

That said, certain jobs demand a level of cooperation, especially when a mission involves a foray into Hell. In such instances, the highest-level hellbreaker organizes the team.

If she has the plane hop class feature, the other hellbreakers in attendance use their stowaway ability to complete the transit to Baator.

Once there, all the members are stuck in the Nine Hells (or wherever they went) for 24 hours, so they spend several hours scouting the area where the theft will take place, attempting to gauge how long the mission will take, determine the mission objectives, and devise an exit strategy.

Once all the pieces are in place, they strike quickly, grab what they came for, kill a few devils for good measure, and escape back to the Material Plane.

Once home, they go their separate ways to protect the participants of the heist.

NPC REACTIONS

For the most part, no one knows about the hellbreakers; if they did, most folk wouldn't believe the stories anyway. Who could possibly believe a person would make a living robbing devils and their minions?

Those who encounter these audacious individuals find them erratic and unpredictable, making most people who know about them unfriendly at best.

Trafficking with fiends, regardless of the cause, is dangerous work, and most sane people try to distance themselves from reckless fools who bring down such violence on their own heads.

HELLBREAKER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research hellbreakers to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Hellbreakers are thieves who specialize in robbing devils.

DC 15: While hellbreakers can circumvent a devil's keen senses, they are said to come into their own when they can steal a devil's magic.

DC 20: Hellbreakers are known to latch onto teleportation magic, crossing vast distances through little effort of their own.

In fact, the most powerful ones are thought to be able to step onto entirely new planes of existence with nothing more than a thought.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable hellbreaker, the areas where she operates, and the kinds of activities she undertakes.

Tracking down a hellbreaker is not easy; members of the class like to stay hidden.

To locate someone who knows about hellbreakers, a character must succeed on a DC 25 Gather Information check and spend 3d10 gp in bribes.

From there, the character can gain directions to the last known community where a hellbreaker operated.

Upon traveling to this new location, a character must succeed on a DC 20 Gather Information check and spend the same amount in bribes.

This process continues for 1d6 communities until a hellbreaker finally seeks the character out.

HELLBREAKERS IN THE GAME

The hellbreaker class is an excellent avenue for stealth-oriented characters to retain that role, as well as find a place in an adventuring party that actively confronts devils regularly.

This class enables a character to continue to develop sneak attack, while providing interesting uses for such a staple ability.

Be sure to provide opportunities for a hellbreaker to use her class features.

The easiest way to do this is to increase the number of opponents that have multiple spell-like or supernatural abilities.

Each time the player gets to use steal spell-like ability, her character becomes more dynamic and gains extra opportunities to be an effective participant in the game.

If the campaign is not focused on the Nine Hells and its inhabitants, consider using more infernal foes or run a few side adventures to keep the character invested in this class.

ADAPTATION

The hellbreaker class focuses on a character designed to combat devils.

However, you can easily change the emphasis by modifying the flavor text.

A hellbreaker could become an angel hunter, a sinister villain that preys upon good-aligned outsiders.

A hellbreaker could also be a demonslayer, a hardened veteran of the Blood War who uses subterfuge to bring down the Abyss's most psychotic killers.

Alternatively, you could adapt this class to make a hellbreaker a dragonslayer, a character who infiltrates a dragon's lair, takes what he wants, and slips away.

Since a hellbreaker's class features deal with removing spell-like and supernatural abilities, the class is equally effective against any creature that has these abilities.

You might want to make some small changes, though, such as replacing telepathic static with a similar ability that scrambles tongues or some similar continuous effect.

In any event, the hellbreaker is a dynamic class that can be easily adapted to fit your campaign needs.

HELLFIRE WARLOCK

"It is not the weapon that is evil, but the wielder."

—Galena Todrick, hellfire warlock

The hellfire warlocks are a secretive group of specialist warlocks who have mastered hellfire, a dangerous energy found only in the Nine Hells.

By tapping into this infernal power, these characters learn to infuse their eldritch blasts and magic items that they wield with the dark power of hellfire.

BECOMING A HELLFIRE WARLOCK

Prospective hellfire warlocks must fulfill strict requirements to gain entry to the class, making this prestige class exclusive to warlocks.

While most characters who pursue the hell fire warlock class are otherwise single-class warlocks, multiclass warlocks with wizard levels are also common.

Multiclass warlock/rogues, warlock/clerics, or even warlock/fighters are also possible, but entry into the prestige class is restricted until higher levels.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Intimidate 6 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 12 ranks, Spellcraft 6 ranks.

Language: Infernal.

Warlock Invocation: Must know brimstone blast or hellrime blast.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Disguise, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Knowledge (religion), Spellcraft, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

The hellfire warlock class offers great power at the expense of versatility.

This prestige class presents a focused approach to tap the power of the Nine Hells, though often at a grave price.

As they advance, these warlocks can access greater uses of hellfire, including the ability to infuse magic items with the power of hellfire and lash out with the fires of Hell against any foe that strikes them.

Hellfire Blast (Sp): Whenever you use your eldritch blast ability, you can change your eldritch blast into a hell fire blast.

A hellfire blast deals your normal eldritch blast damage plus an extra 2d6 points of damage per class level.

If your blast hits multiple targets (for example, the eldritch chain or eldritch cone blast shape invocations), each target takes the extra damage.

This damage is not fire damage.

Hellfire burns hotter than any normal fire, as described in the sidebar on page 119.

Each time you use this ability, you take 1 point of Constitution damage.

Because the diabolical forces behind the power of hellfire demand part of your essence in exchange for this granted power, if you do not have a Constitution score or are somehow immune to Constitution damage, you cannot use this ability.

Invoking: At each level, you gain new invocations known, increased damage with eldritch blast, and an increase in invoker level as if you had also gained a level in the warlock class.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

Resistance to Fire 10 (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain resistance to fire 10.

This resistance stacks with any resistance to fire you have gained from warlock class levels.

Hellfire Infusion (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can infuse magic items that you wield with the power of hellfire.

Whenever you use a charged magic item (such as a wand or a staff), you can apply one of the following metamagic effects to your next use of the item: empower, enlarge, widen, or energy substitution.

These effects work just like the metamagic feats of the same name (the Energy Substitution feat is described on page 79 of Complete Arcane).

Using hellfire infusion is a swift action.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum one).

When you infuse an item with hellfire, it glows briefly with fiery symbols that are disturbing to look upon.

Hellfire Shield (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, you can call up hellfire to surround yourself with a protective barrier.

Whenever someone directs a melee attack against you, you can, as an immediate action, aim a blast of hellfire at that creature.

This blast deals damage equal to your eldritch blast (including bonus damage from the hellfire blast ability).

This blast automatically strikes the target, which can attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Cha modifier).

Each time you use this ability, you take 1 point of Constitution damage.

Because the diabolical forces behind the power of hellfire demand part of your essence in exchange for this granted power, if you do not have a Constitution score or are somehow immune to Constitution damage, you cannot use this ability.

PLAYING A HELLFIRE WARLOCK

You walk a dangerous path.

Each use of hellfire brings you ever closer to death.

You must be vigilant in your resolve and resist using this terrible magic recklessly.

Since you wield the power of Hell itself, others are suspicious at best and downright hostile at worst.

They fail to understand why you would use such power willingly and how you can resist its allure.

COMBAT

Using the abilities granted by this prestige class carries dangerous consequences.

The Constitution damage that results from the use of your powers can be healed, and many hellfire warlocks carry wands of lesser restoration to compensate for the draining nature of their power.

However, the hit point loss that results from Constitution damage can be the difference between living and dying in a close-fought combat, so restrict use of these abilities to when you are confident doing so will have a meaningful effect on a battle's outcome.

ADVANCEMENT

Hellfire warlocks enter this class after being exposed to some infernal agency.

Witnessing the power inherent in hellfire creates a strong attraction many find too strong to resist.

It's possible you were one of these types, or maybe you stumbled across hellfire while experimenting with eldritch blast.

Once you take your first level in this class, it's best to invest in the Use Magic Device skill so you can easily use items that heal the Constitution damage that you take.

RESOURCES

Hellfire warlocks lack any formal community, since they are often loners by nature, sequestering themselves away to further study and refine their techniques.

Baatezu target you and your colleagues with promises of assistance, magic, and even combat support.

Their motives are clear, but they offer great power and often compelling reasons to join them.

HELLFIRE WARLOCKS IN THE WORLD

“The offering of hellfire is yet one more way the fiends have worked their claws into our world.

Each mortal who thinks to master this fell power is yet one more fool offering his soul to the Lord of the Eighth.”

—Alód the Traveler, planeshifter

Most hellfire warlocks whom the PCs encounter have likely already succumbed to the temptations of evil.

Usually minions in the service of an infernal cult, they lead groups of thugs or devils against good organizations or to hunt down and destroy adventurers.

Only in the rarest circumstances does a hellfire warlock resist these temptations and use her power to advance the cause of good.

ORGANIZATION

Since hellfire warlocks are nearly universally reviled, these characters keep to themselves.

Their isolation pushes them to test the limits of their morality, and in time, most succumb to the darkness blooming within them.

Hellfire warlocks are jealous and petty.

They see others who practice their dark art as threats to their prominence and power, so these characters are swift to destroy their rivals.

Some hellfire warlocks attach themselves to infernal cults, believing that through service to an archfiend, they can increase their knowledge and skill.

Hellfire warlocks act as guardians and enforcers in such organizations, valued for their combat capabilities.

NPC REACTIONS

Even those hellfire warlocks who shy away from evil in the face of such wickedness meet scorn and derision in the world.

Warlocks are generally not trusted, and those who willingly use the tools of evil for any reason are tantamount to the fiends themselves in the minds of most folk.

Hence, most hellfire warlocks conceal their natures, using their infernal powers only when forced.

So long as a hellfire warlock maintains her anonymity, she finds others are indifferent.

Those who become aware of her capabilities immediately become unfriendly, seeing her as a menace.

This animosity extends even to evil creatures, which are often unsure what to make of such a curious character—or see her as a rival to be destroyed.

HELLFIRE WARLOCK LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research hellfire warlocks to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Hellfire warlocks use the flames of Hell to power their abilities.

DC 15: Hellfire is a cruel mistress, weakening those who court her.

DC 20: Though hellfire itself is anathema to good, not all who wield it are evil.

Some manage to temper the corrupting effects with a strong will and steadfast resolve.

The mightiest among them even bend hellfire to serve the forces of good.

Hellfire warlocks are reclusive.

They refrain from revealing themselves to the public, lurking at the fringes of society and only emerging when circumstances demand it.

Player characters trying to locate a hellfire warlock need to succeed on a DC 25 Gather Information check.

If a PC looks for a hellfire warlock in a community whose alignment is predominantly evil, he gains a +2 circumstance bonus on the check.

HELLFIRE WARLOCKS IN THE GAME

A hellfire warlock is a natural extension of the warlock class.

One can be a new agent in the armies of the Nine Hells or an established occultist who dabbles in the forbidden.

Hellfire warlocks are particularly attractive to players who enjoy playing antiheroes.

This prestige class grants access to otherwise forbidden abilities.

This class is also specifically intended for the warlock class, enabling you to expand this potent class in new directions.

ADAPTATION

As written, a hellfire warlock serves as an extension of the warlock class from Complete Arcane.

If you don't use this class, you can adapt this prestige class for use with other characters.

Exchange the invocations requirement with the ability to cast fireball.

Instead of improving invocations known, the hellfire warlock improves the character's arcane spell casting ability by one level per class level.

Instead of gaining hell fire blast, the character can deal an extra 1d6 points of damage per class level with evocation spells that deal damage.

This ability costs the character 1 point of Constitution just like the hellfire blast class feature.

The character gains the fire resistance, hellfire infusion, and hellfire shield abilities as normal.

TABLE 3-3: THE HELLFIRE WARLOCK HIT DIE: D6

HELLREAPER

"I cannot stand by while wickedness spreads, while the fiends destroy our families and our lives.

The time for prayer is past.

Now is the time for action!"

—Camren Lighbringer, Hellreaver

Devils and their ilk can go only so far before their actions demand a response.

At some point, a devil will destroy enough lives that someone has to take a stand.

That someone is often a hellreaver—a warrior whose outrage at the actions of the fiends and their ability to corrupt and seduce without consequence fuels an array of combat abilities.

These potent options make these warriors tremendously effective combatants of the baatezu.

BECOMING A HELLREAPER

Though entry into this prestige class demands cross-class skill point expenditures, barbarians gain the most by taking levels in this prestige class.

A barbarian's rage ability works well with the holy fury abilities granted by the hellreaver class.

Likewise, paladins who become hellreavers find that the class features complement their paladin abilities even though it means abandoning their former class.

Good-aligned fighters and rangers might also seek out this class.

Finally, some monks and martial clerics find a powerful assortment of abilities that augment their innate capabilities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack.

Special: Must slay an outsider with the evil subtype.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Sense Motive, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As a hellreaver, you tap into your rage and frustration to augment your fighting abilities.

From your first class level, you can deal impressive damage to evil creatures, but as you attain more levels, you gain the ability to heal, boost your Armor Class, and improve your saving throws.

At the highest levels, you can carve through evil outsiders with impunity.

Holy Fury (Ex): When you face your enemies, a raging anger fills your mind.

Avenging, divine power surges through you, allowing you to generate magical effects.

Entering this state is a free action.

While in a holy fury, your melee attacks are good-aligned.

You also gain immunity to fear effects.

In addition, you gain a number of holy fury points equal to your hellreaver level plus your Charisma modifier.

You spend these points to activate many of your hellreaver class abilities.

You can use holy fury once per encounter.

It lasts until the end of the encounter.

Furious Strike (Su): As a swift action, you can spend 1 holy fury point to pour divine energy into your weapon.

Your blade crackles with a divine aura that is baneful to your foes.

You gain a +2 bonus and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage on your next attack.

These bonuses apply only to an attack that targets an evil creature.

If you accidentally use furious strike against a creature that is not evil, or your attack misses, the furious strike has no effect, but the holy fury point is still spent.

At 4th level, these bonuses increase to +4 on your attack roll and an extra 2d6 points of damage.

At 7th level, these bonuses increase to +6 on your attack roll and an extra 3d6 points of damage.

At 10th level, these bonuses increase to +8 on your attack roll and an extra 4d6 points of damage.

Divine Succor (Su): Just as your divine power can slay evil creatures, it can also mend wounds suffered by the just.

Beginning at 2nd level, as a swift action, you can spend 1 holy fury point to heal 10 points of damage.

You can apply this healing to yourself or any good-aligned creature within 20 feet.

At 5th level, you can heal 20 points of damage.

At 8th level, you can heal 30 points of damage.

Divine Resolve (Su): From 3rd level on, you can draw upon your fury to push aside the effect of a spell cast by your foes, a monster's poison, and so forth.

As an immediate action, you can spend 1 holy fury point to gain a +2 bonus on your next saving throw.

You can use this ability after attempting a save but before you learn whether it succeeded or failed.

Divine Shield (Su): When you attain 3rd level, you can focus your divine power into a shield that knocks aside a foe's attack with a mighty shout.

As an immediate action, you can spend 1 holy fury point to gain a +2 bonus to your AC against the next attack you face.

You can use this ability after a foe attacks you but before you learn whether this attack hit or missed.

Mettle (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, if you make a successful Fortitude or Will save that would normally reduce (rather than negate) a spell's effect, you suffer no effect from the spell at all.

Only those spells with a Saving Throw entry of "Will partial", "Fortitude half", or similar entries can be negated through this ability.

Heroic Sacrifice (Su): From 5th level on, as a swift action, you can voluntarily take 2 points of Constitution damage to fully replenish your holy fury points.

Call to Judgment (Su): With your foe near defeat, you cry out to the gods for justice.

Gleaming white chains appear around your enemy, preventing it from using dimensional travel.

At 6th level and beyond, as a swift action, you can spend 3 holy fury points to charge your weapon with divine power.

If your next melee attack hits an evil outsider, the target suffers the effect of a dimensional anchor spell, with a caster level equal to your hellreaver level.

Improved Divine Resolve (Su): At 9th level, your divine resolve ability improves.

This ability functions like the divine resolve class feature, except that you can now spend 2 holy fury points as an immediate action to gain a +4 bonus on a saving throw.

Improved Divine Shield (Su): When you reach 9th level, your divine shield grows stronger. This ability functions like divine shield, except that you can now spend 2 holy fury points as an immediate action to gain a +4 bonus to AC.

Divine Retribution (Su): By channeling divine energy into an evil outsider, you can destroy its physical form in a spectacular explosion.

As your weapon cuts into its body, you funnel holy energy into it.

At 10th level, once per day as a swift action, you can spend 4 holy fury points to imbue your next attack with a mighty aura of avenging divine power.

If this attack hits an outsider that has the evil subtype, the target must attempt a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Cha modifier).

If it fails this save, the target explodes in a flash of light.

It is slain, and all evil creatures in a 60-foot-radius burst around it are blinded for 1 round.

There is no saving throw to resist this blindness.

On a successful save, the target instead takes 10d6 points of damage as holy energy burns through its body, and the blinding effect does not trigger.

This damage is in addition to your attack's normal damage.

PLAYING A HELLREAYER

You have had enough.

It's time to make these fiends pay.

Someone must stop the baatezu, and that someone is you.

You have heard all the stories about how the gods have some sort of special deal with the devils that allows them to harvest evil souls, but you're confident that such an arrangement didn't include actively working to seduce mortals into signing misleading contracts.

Let the clerics and their ilk fret about the immortal soul.

Warning folks doesn't do a thing but make them want to dabble in darkness even more.

If you're going to deal with fiends, the best way to do so is to butcher them—and their mortal allies—wherever you find them.

Those fools who are in cahoots with devils had better not expect mercy from you, because you have none to spare.

COMBAT

You are a frontline warrior.

Since your holy fury abilities can all be activated quickly, try opening with a charge attack to put your enemy on the defensive.

Using your holy fury abilities early lets you improve your combat abilities from the outset.

Be sure to keep at least 1 or 2 holy fury points in reserve to respond to spells and attacks as needed.

ADVANCEMENT

One brush with infernal power, and you knew the shape of your destiny.

The existence of creatures such as devils enraged you.

The thought of an entire race of creatures that served no other purpose than to harvest mortal souls and deny them their heavenly reward filled you with so much outrage that you had to take action.

Once you committed yourself to the path of the hellreaver, strange things began to happen.

When you fought, you could draw power from that inner reservoir, that wellspring of hate that impels you to greater and greater acts of daring.

At first, you were able to shrug off minor injuries.

In time, you found you could pierce your enemies' defenses, ignore their attacks, and more.

Through it all, you have learned you must keep the fires of your wrath stoked lest you falter in your mission.

Though Strength and Constitution are important, Charisma is vital for your holy fury abilities.

In addition to investing in magic items that augment your physical abilities, be sure to pick up a cloak of Charisma.

As for feat choices, don't overlook Ability Focus at higher levels to boost the DC of divine retribution.

Also, tried and true combat feats, such as Power Attack and Cleave, aid a hellreaver in her goals.

RESOURCES

Few share your direct and violent approach to dealing with devils.

Certainly, most good individuals see fighting the baatezu as proper, but your enthusiasm is intimidating.

As a result, you have a difficult time forging long-term associations with organized groups that fight fiends.

Instead, you rely on your cadre of companions for support and aid.

Your allies likely share your vision and do their part to help defeat your chosen foes.

HELLREAYERS IN THE WORLD

"Hellreavers are as dangerous as the devils they fight.

Their reckless assault lacks the subtlety needed to fight such intelligent foes.

Certainly, these warriors have their uses, but they are thoroughly unsuited to missions requiring a gentle hand."

—Estella Montenegro, Knight of the Chalice

At the forefront of a righteous horde, leading ranks upon ranks of holy warriors into the teeth of fell infernal armies, rides the hellreaver.

More a holy avenger than a paragon of virtue, the hellreaver lives to fight, and often dies in battle.

Many hellreavers are celestials; hound archons turn to this class after facing fiends one time too many.

Astral devas who failed in their efforts to protect mortals sometimes abandon their duties to take up arms against the devils.

However, no hellreaver is as feared as a solar that has taken up this path to batter the walls of Hell with its wrath.

Mortal hellreavers are rare, since the mortality rate is high.

Eventually, a hellreaver's path leads him to the Lower Planes, where he takes the fight to his enemies.

On occasion, he gathers a host of like-minded zealots to accompany him on his mission.

While courageous, such forays are nearly always doomed to fail.

ORGANIZATION

Mortal hellreavers attract fanatics and zealous followers.

Though they don't operate in large organizations, word of their exploits attracts members of fringe religious groups that hope to join their struggle.

While a hellreaver's mission never changes, those who rally to her banner extend their enmity to others they perceive as wicked and evil.

In time, this opposition to devils and their mortal servants extends to others who might or might not share the creed of the fiends, and who might not be evil at all.

As a result, hellreavers often try to dissuade others from joining their crusade.

NPC REACTIONS

Clerics of most good and neutral religions regard hellreavers warily, being indifferent at best. They see these individuals as reckless warriors who are willing to sell their lives cheaply in the face of the monolithic evil they oppose.

Superstitious back water types might flock to hellreavers, regarding them as heroes of legend.

Friendly, if not helpful, they abandon their homes to follow a hellreaver out of some genuine offer of assistance or to further their own, often darker, ambitions.

HELLREAYER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research hellreavers to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some men and women have taken the assault of devils on our world personally.

These individuals are dangerous, and possibly insane, but their motives seem pure.

DC 15: A hellreaver draws strength from her moral outrage, from a deep and abiding hatred of those who prey on mortals.

I heard of one hellreaver who stood against a dozen devils by herself.

They say that she couldn't be killed, that her anger kept her standing despite many grievous wounds.

DC 20: Hellreavers derive their power from their outrage over infernal plots and the devils' manipulations of mortals.

They use this anger to great effect, growing stronger, tougher, and more dangerous.

The most powerful of them can channel divine power with their fury and make devils explode.

Though tales of their efforts might be heard in taverns and pubs across the land, a specific hellreaver is tough to track down, since she is constantly on the move.

A character can pick up a hellreaver's trail by succeeding on a DC 20 Gather Information or Knowledge (local) check.

HELLREAYERS IN THE GAME

Since hellreavers are so few, they might have existed in a campaign for a long time.

Famous religious figures, especially saints and martyrs, might have been hellreavers in life, a fact the PCs might have only recently discovered.

In any event, so long as devils exist as a cohesive force in your campaign, hellreavers have a place.

Players who appreciate the tactical side of combat will be attracted to this prestige class, since it requires quite a bit of resource management.

The class is also appealing to players who take an attack first approach to combat and have little use for the subtleties of character interaction.

On the other hand, hellreavers make for great doomed champions, and they might be a fine alternative for quest-driven adventurers.

ADAPTATION

The hellreaver is a specialized warrior with a wide array of abilities to aid her when facing devils.

For campaigns featuring some other kind of adversary, a hellreaver can be thematically changed to deal with all sorts of threats.

So long as an enemy is evil, most of a hellreaver's abilities continue to be effective.

TABLE 3-4: THE HELLREAYER

SOULGUARD

"Your claim on this soul is unjust.

Free him at once, lest I take him by force."

—Halagrad Doomhammer, soulguard

Hell's devils are crafty fiends, always angling for some way to steal the souls of the unwary.

Whether cementing deviously foul bargains with mortals or stealing souls as they travel to their final rest, they use whatever means they can to feed their own power through the misery and corruption of mortals.

Soulguards openly oppose these practices by the baatezu and go to great lengths to protect those beset by the power of Baator.

BECOMING A SOULGUARD

Soulguards are almost always clerics or paladins who recognize the balance between the gods and the devils, but also know that the baatezu work to circumvent the agreement binding them.

These characters have a profound understanding of Hell's politics and the beings that control the plane.

Clerics have the easiest time gaining access to the class, but druids sometimes abandon their duties as stewards of nature to right the greater imbalance in the planes.

Favored souls (Complete Divine) prefer a more warlike approach to the battle against fiends, but they cannot gain entry to this class until higher levels.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 9 ranks,

Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks.

Language: Infernal.

Feat: Iron Will.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Sense Motive, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As you gain levels in this class, you sacrifice some degree of your spellcasting potential to develop the necessary abilities to free souls from Hell.

Spellcasting: At each level above 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a soulguard, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Pierce Deception (Sp): You gain the ability to channel your spell power to pierce all deceptions.

For a number of times per day equal to your Wisdom modifier (minimum one), as a standard action, you can sacrifice a prepared spell or spell slot to use true seeing, as the spell (no material component needed).

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to the level of the spell sacrificed, and you can target only yourself with this spell-like ability.

The caster level equals your caster level.

Divine Rebuke (Su): Starting at 2nd level, as a swift action, you can sacrifice a spell slot or a prepared spell to rebuke an evil outsider within 30 feet.

The outsider must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + level of the spell sacrificed + your Cha modifier) or cower for a number of rounds equal to the spell slot of the spell sacrificed.

The effect ends if the fiend is attacked.

Immunity to Charm (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain immunity to enchantment (charm) spells and effects.

Dispel Evil (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, you can use a dispel evil effect once per day.

Your caster level equals your divine caster level.

The save DC is Charisma-based.

(See the spell, PH 222).

At 6th level, you can use this ability twice per day.

At 9th level, you can use this ability three times per day.

Absolution (Sp): Starting at 4th level, you gain the ability to use atonement once per day as a spell-like ability.

Alternatively, if you are using the corruption mechanics from this book, you can purify a creature to redeem it from evil.

Only a creature that desires absolution can be affected.

Furthermore, any gains (monetary, political, personal, and so on) a creature has attained through evil acts must be abandoned.

If the target creature has 3 or fewer corruption points, they are all removed.

If the creature has 4 or more corruption points, you can reduce the total by 1.

A single creature cannot receive the benefit of absolution more than once unless the DM permits it for exceptional story-driven reasons.

For more information on corruption, see page 30.

Immunity to Compulsion (Ex): At 5th level, you gain immunity to enchantment (compulsion) spells and effects.

Purging Radiance (Su): At 7th level and higher, you can spend a daily use of your turn undead ability to deal damage to nearby fiends.

As a standard action, the area around you fills with a pure, holy energy that deals 1d6 points of damage per class level to evil outsiders within 30 feet.

This ability does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

If you do not have the turn undead ability, this ability has no effect.

Resistance Aura (Su): From 8th level on, you and all allies within 20 feet of you gain a +2 bonus on saving throws against spells and effects generated by evil outsiders.

Dimensional Anchor (Su): At 10th level, your presence blocks the teleportation abilities of evil outsiders.

No evil outsider can use a teleportation spell or effect while within 20 feet of you.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a soulguard can continue advancing as a paladin.

PLAYING A SOULGUARD

The merest suggestion that good souls are imprisoned and languishing in the Nine Hells infuriates you.

But your anger is a quiet, simmering rage, one that sharpens your senses and firms your resolve to battle devils wherever you find them.

Though your life is committed to freeing the wrongly held, you sometimes deal with fiends to get the information you need.

Devils are treacherous, readily selling out their peers in the hopes of securing a better place among the baatezu hierarchy.

Soulguards work closely with religious organizations, especially the churches of Heironeous, St. Cuthbert, Moradin, and Wee Jas.

At low levels, they tap into the church's resources to gain information about local cults, as well as obtain supplies and reinforcements for forays against Hell's minions on the Material Plane.

At higher levels, a soulguard can gather volunteers to accompany him into the Nine Hells itself, taking the fight directly to the fiends' doorstep.

COMBAT

Though you are a capable combatant, you lack the versatility of purely martial characters.

You have obtained a selection of abilities to aid you in destroying evil outsiders.

When facing foes of this kind, you should bring your considerable power to bear to help your allies.

At higher levels, you can use dispel evil to protect yourself, as well as force a devil to return to its plane.

Your dimensional anchor ability allows you to counter the powerful advantage that devils gain through their teleportation abilities.

ADVANCEMENT

The very existence of Hell is bad enough, but it, like all the planes, fulfills an important function.

As a prison, it does its job well, but the devils are not content with simply doing their duty.

They insist on ranging out to seduce mortals or even steal their souls outright.

Imprisoning an innocent is wrong, but imprisoning an innocent soul for eternity is a grave travesty.

Once you learned that this activity occurs frequently, you began to seek justice for these souls.

Now that you have worked as a soulguard, you have uncovered more corruption and despair than you thought possible.

The devils aren't just casually working to unravel morality—they're making a concerted effort to seduce mortals.

Your work has introduced you to some of the greatest evils, but also to powerful heroes, bold inquisitors, and dedicated exorcists.

The more you learn, the more your resolve hardens. You should never flag in your studies, so be sure to invest in Knowledge (the planes), one of your most potent weapons when fighting fiends.

To complement your powerful class features, consider picking up the Ability Focus feat to boost divine rebuke. If you use Book of Exalted Deeds, Consecrate Spell and Sanctify Martial Strike are also excellent feat choices.

RESOURCES

Continued work alongside good organizations endears you to others who are committed to fighting evil.

In time, you develop a strong rapport with good churches (other than your own, if you belong to one).

These organizations might see you as a rogue element, but they cannot ignore your importance as an ally.

Such groups might provide discounts on spells and disposable magic items, depending on how much you have helped them in the past.

Also, your experience with planar agencies makes you something of an expert when dealing with fiends.

You gain a reputation for being a sage in matters pertaining to the baatezu, and others might seek you out for advice or help.

In most cases, such meetings are fortuitous, since they can put you on the trail of yet another enemy.

SOULGUARDS IN THE WORLD

"Renegades each and every one—they dabble in matters best left for the gods to sort out."

—Albrien Matterly, seeker of virtue

Soulguards are excellent additions to campaigns involving extensive planar travel, vile enemies and exalted heroes, or any adventures that feature devils as adversaries.

ORGANIZATION

While not part of an organization, soulguards occasionally meet to exchange important information and assist each other on missions.

When a group of soulguards assembles, they usually bring along cohorts and other likeminded companions.

Once assembled, the most experienced soulguard takes charge and directs the meetings, allowing each member to report any findings.

Should a soulguard need assistance, he can make his case, laying out any evidence of fiendish activity to convince his peers.

The most important meetings are those in which a group plans a raid to recover a wrongfully imprisoned soul.

An experienced soulguard starts such a group by making a call to his peers through good-aligned churches and organizations.

The group meets in secret, almost always in a temple, where they can plan and gather their forces.

Once they have agreed on strategy, each soulguard capable of plane shifting takes a strike team to the Nine Hells to reach the intended captives.

NPC REACTIONS

Soulguards are scary.

Their trappings, the nature of their business, and their righteous authority can be intimidating to common folk.

Still, people who know what soulguards are about tend to be friendly, if not helpful.

The favored outlook doesn't always extend to others though.

Clerics of gods of death see soulguards as meddlers, people who interfere with the proper order of the multiverse.

While they don't oppose the soulguards, at least not openly, they tend to be indifferent.

For obvious reasons, evil creatures detest soulguards.

Disciples of archdevils actively work against these individuals.

Half-fiends, some tieflings, and other characters with fiendish heritage are typically unfriendly.

SOULGUARD LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) can research soulguards to learn more about them.

When a character succeeds on a skill check, the following lore is revealed, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Soulguards are heroic individuals who fight on behalf of those wronged by evil.

DC 15: These individuals oppose the wrongful acquisition of souls by devils.

DC 20: Devils can't abide the righteous stare of soul guards and flee before them.

Soulguards can see right through the lies of devils, and seek to expose their evil wherever they can.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable soulguard, the areas in which he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Soulguards make a special effort to be available to those who need them, so tracking one down is rarely a problem.

Characters looking for a soulguard have little trouble so long as they are in a large town or larger community.

To find one, they must succeed on a DC 15 Gather Information check.

If a soulguard lives in the community, they learn his whereabouts.

If not, they find someone who knows how to get in touch with one nearby.

SOULGUARDS IN THE GAME

Wherever devils plot to snatch souls, a soulguard is likely to be found working against them.

Introducing soul guards into an ongoing campaign is simple, because they are likely to have been there all the time, fighting devils behind the scenes.

PCs who have come up short in an encounter with a devil might find this class appealing.

Of all the classes, clerics and paladins are the most likely to branch into soulguard.

However, rangers who select evil outsiders as a favored enemy, druids, and even favored souls might find sufficient cause to lay aside their normal class progression to take up a fight against the devils.

ADAPTATION

Though designed to address the capabilities and techniques employed by baatezu, soulguards can be adapted to oppose other types of outsiders.

For example, in campaigns featuring slaadi as principal opponents, you can change the class features so that they specifically affect chaotic outsiders.

Dispel evil becomes dispel chaos, and purging radiance would deal damage to chaotic outsiders rather than evil outsiders.

FORGOTTEN REALMS CAMPAIGN SETTING (3.0)

ARCANE DEVOTEE

Every major faith numbers sorcerers and wizards among its fervent followers.

While some wizards ally themselves with churches close to their own beliefs out of caution and convenience, others are devout representatives of their faith and willingly subordinate their own causes to those of their patron deity, becoming arcane devotees.

Arcane devotees complement the divine magic of a church's clerical leaders and are among the most important and respected members of a deity's following.

They provide much of the magical firepower of their faith and collaborate with the church's clerics in the creation of magic items requiring both arcane and divine spells.

Arcane devotees provide support for the church's armies in time of war, divine the intentions of the enemies of the faith, and often take the front line to decimate enemy troops or destroy spellcasters of rival faiths.

Naturally, arcane devotees are always arcane spellcasters. Sorcerers and wizards are the most common type, but some music-oriented deities tend to have more bard devotees, and a rare few of the more evil deities have been known to have assassin devotees that focus on cruel and terrible forms of death magic.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane devotee (Dev) of a particular deity, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane spells.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Enlarge Spell.

Patron: An arcane devotee must have a patron deity, and it must be the deity of which she is a devotee.

CLASS SKILLS

The arcane devotee's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the arcane devotee prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arcane devotees gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: An arcane devotee's training focuses on arcane spells.

Thus, when a new arcane devotee level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of arcane devotee to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became an arcane devotee, he must decide to which class he adds each level of arcane devotee for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Enlarge Spell: The arcane devotee may cast a spell as if it were under the effects of the Enlarge Spell feat.

He does not need to prepare this spell in advance, and it does not increase the casting time or use a higher spell slot. This ability can be used a number of times per day equal to 1 + the arcane devotee's Charisma bonus (minimum of once per day).

Sacred Defense: Add this value (+1 at 2nd level, +2 at 4th level) to the arcane devotee's saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

Alignment Focus: A 2nd-level arcane devotee chooses one component of his deity's alignment.

He now casts spells of that alignment at +1 caster level.

If his deity is neutral, he chooses one component of his alignment for this focus.

If the arcane devotee and his deity are neutral, the character chooses chaos, evil, good, or law for his focus.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd level, an arcane devotee can choose any one item creation feat or any feat from the following list: Spell Focus, Greater Spell Focus, Spell Penetration, Greater Spell Penetration, Improved Counterspell, Magical Artisan, or Shadow Weave Magic (devotees of Shar only).

Divine Shroud (Su): Once per day, a 5th-level arcane devotee may surround himself with a shroud of glowing divine power that protects him against enemy spells.

The shroud is of a color appropriate to the arcane devotee's patron's alignment: constant blue for law, shimmering white for good, wavering black for evil, or flickering yellow for chaos.

The shroud grants spell resistance of 12 + the character's caster level as if he were under the effects of a spell resistance spell.

This ability can be invoked as a free action and lasts a number of rounds equal to the arcane devotee's Charisma bonus + 5.

ARCHMAGE

The highest art is magic—often referred to as the Art. Its most advanced practitioners are frequently archmages, bending spells in ways unavailable to other spellcasters. The archmage gains strange powers and the ability to alter spells in remarkable ways, but must sacrifice some of her spell capability in order to master these arcane secrets.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an archmage (Acm), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 7th-level arcane spells, knowledge of 5th-level or higher spells from at least five schools.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 15 ranks, Spellcraft 15 ranks.

Feats: Skill Focus (Spellcraft), Spell Focus in two schools of magic.

CLASS SKILLS

The archmage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the archmage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Archmages gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new archmage level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of archmage to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before she became an archmage, she must decide to which class she adds each level of archmage for the purpose of determining spells per day.

High Arcana: The archmage learns secret lore unknown to lesser wizards and sorcerers.

She gains the ability to select a special ability from among the following by permanently eliminating one spell slot.

For example, a 15th-level wizard normally can cast two 7th-level spells per day (not counting bonus spells for specialization or high Intelligence).

A Wiz13/Acm2 who chooses the arcane reach ability forfeits one 7th-level spell, and so can only cast one 7th-level spell per day, not counting bonus spells.

The archmage may choose to eliminate a spell slot of a higher level than that required to acquire the high arcana in question, if she so desires.

Arcane Fire (Su): The archmage gains the ability to channel arcane spell energy into arcane fire, manifesting as a bolt of raw magical energy.

The bolt is a ranged touch attack with long range (400 feet + 40 feet/level of archmage) and deals 1d6 points of damage per level of archmage plus 1d6 points of damage per level of the spell channeled to create the effect.

Therefore, a 5th-level archmage that channels a 7th-level spell into arcane fire deals 12d6 points of damage to the target if it hits.

This ability costs one 9th-level spell slot.

Arcane Reach: The archmage can use touch spells on targets up to 30 feet away.

If the spell requires a touch attack (melee or ranged), the archmage must make a ranged touch attack.

If selected a second time as a special ability, the range increases to 60 feet.

This ability costs one 7th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Counterspelling: When the archmage counterspells a spell, it is turned back upon the caster as if it were fully affected by a spell turning spell.

If the spell cannot be affected by spell turning (for example, if it is an area or effect spell), then it is merely counterspelled.

This ability costs one 7th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Elements: The archmage can alter an arcane spell when cast so that it utilizes a different element from the one it normally does.

For example, an archmage could cast a fireball that does sonic damage instead of fire damage.

This ability can only alter spells with the acid, cold, fire, electricity, or sonic descriptors.

The spell's casting time is unaffected.
The caster decides whether or not to alter the spell's energy type and chooses the new energy type when she begins casting.

This ability costs one 8th-level spell slot.

Mastery of Shaping: The archmage can alter area and effect spells that use the following categories: burst, cone, cylinder, emanation, or spread.

The alteration consists of creating spaces within the spell's area or effect that are not subject to the spell.

The minimum dimension for these spaces is a 5-foot cube.

For example, the archmage could cast a fireball and leave a hole where her ally stands, preventing any fire damage.

Furthermore, any shapeable (S) spells have a minimum dimension of 5 feet instead of 10 feet.

This ability costs one 6th-level spell slot.

Spell Power +1: This ability increases the DC for saving throws against the archmage's arcane spells and caster level checks for her arcane spells to overcome spell resistance by +1.

This ability can only be selected once, and stacks with spell power +2 and spell power +3, as well as spell power effects from other sources, such as from the Red Wizard prestige class.

This ability costs one 5th-level spell slot.

Spell Power +2: As spell power +1, except the increase is +2 instead of +1.

This ability can only be selected once, and stacks with spell power +1 and spell power +3, as well as spell power effects from other sources.

This ability costs one 7th-level spell slot.

Spell Power +3: As spell power +1, except the increase is +3 instead of +1.

This ability can only be selected once, and stacks with spell power +1, spell power +2, as well as spell power effects from other sources.

This ability costs one 9th-level spell slot.

Spell-Like Ability: The archmage can use one of her arcane spell slots (other than the slot expended to learn this high arcana) to permanently prepare one of her arcane spells as a spell-like ability that can be used twice per day.

The archmage does not use any components when casting the spell, although a spell that costs XP to cast still does so and a spell with a costly material component instead costs her 10 times that amount in XP.

This ability costs one 5th-level spell slot.

The spell-like ability normally uses a spell slot of the spell's level, although the archmage can choose to make a spell modified by a metamagic feat into a spell-like ability at the appropriate spell level.

For example, the archmage can make lightning bolt into a spell-like ability by using a 3rd-level spell slot to do so, or a maximized lightning bolt into a 6th-level spell-like ability.

The archmage may use an available higher-level spell slot to be able to use the spell-like ability more often.

Using a slot three levels higher than the chosen spell allows her to cast it four times per day, and a slot six levels higher lets her cast it six times per day.

For example, Hezark (Wiz15/Acm2) is a pyromaniac and never wants to be denied the ability to cast fireball, so she permanently uses a 9th-level spell slot to get fireball as a spell-like ability usable six times per day.

She forfeits a 5th-level spell slot to master the ability.

If selected more than one time as a special ability, this can apply to the same spell or to a different spell.

DIVINE CHAMPION

Divine champions are mighty warriors who dedicate themselves to their deity's cause, defending holy ground, destroying enemies of the church, and slaying mythical beasts and clerics of opposed faiths.

For deities that do not count paladins among their followers, divine champions fill the role of the church-sponsored warrior.

Most divine champions come from a combat or military background.

Barbarians, fighters, monks, paladins, and rangers are the most common divine champions, but some of the more militant clerics and druids decide to become divine champions.

Bards, rogues, sorcerers, and wizards rarely become divine champions unless they are particularly devout and skilled in warfare.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine champion (Chm) of a particular deity, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks.

Feats: Weapon Focus in the deity's favored weapon.

Patron: A divine champion must have a patron deity, and it must be the deity of which she is a champion.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine champion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the divine champion prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A divine champion is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

Lay on Hands (Sp): As a defender of the faith, a divine champion may lay on hands to heal herself or another creature following the same patron deity as himself. The ability works like a paladin's ability to lay on hands, except the divine champion may heal 1 point of damage per divine champion level times her Charisma bonus.

If the divine champion is a paladin, she can combine this healing with her paladin class's lay on hands ability.

Fighter Feat: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, a divine champion may choose any one feat (except Weapon Specialization) from the fighter class bonus feat list in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook or any feat with the [Fighter] designator in this chapter.

Sacred Defense: Add this value (+1 at 2nd level, +2 at 4th level) to the divine champion's saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

Smite Infidel (Su): Once per day, a divine champion may attempt to smite a creature with a different patron deity (or no patron deity at all) with one normal melee attack. She adds her Charisma bonus to the attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per divine champion level.

If the divine champion accidentally smites someone of the same patron, the smite has no effect but is still used up for that day.

If the divine champion is also a paladin, she may use smite evil and this ability separately or combine them into a single strike if the target is evil and of a different faith.

Divine Wrath (Su): The divine champion channels a portion of her patron's power into wrath, giving her a +3 bonus on attack rolls, damage, and saving throws for a number of rounds equal to her Charisma bonus.

During this time, the divine champion also has damage reduction 5/–.

This ability can be used once per day and is invoked as a free action.

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+2	+0	Lay on hands
2nd	+2	+3	+3	+0	Fighter feat, sacred defense +1
3rd	+3	+3	+3	+1	Smite infidel

DIVINE DISCIPLE

The most zealous, devout, and pious clerics, druids, and paladins possess the ability to serve their deity as intermediaries between the deity's mortal and divine servants.

They interpret the divine will, act as teachers and guides to other members of the clergy, and arm the lay followers of their deity with the power of their patron.

Eventually they transcend their mortal nature and embody the divine on the face of Toril.

Divine disciples are always divine spellcasters.

Clerics and druids are the most common candidates for becoming divine disciples, but paladins and rangers have been known to become divine disciples, and evil deities such as Bane have been known to elevate blackguards as divine disciples in the ranks of their dark faiths.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine disciple (Dis) of a particular deity, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 4th-level divine spells.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Patron: A divine disciple must have a patron deity, and it must be the deity of which she is a divine disciple.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana), (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the divine disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine disciples gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A divine disciple's training focuses on divine spells.

Thus, when a new disciple level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of divine disciple to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a divine disciple, she must decide to which class she adds each level of divine disciple for the purpose of determining spells per day.

New Domain: The divine disciple may choose a new domain from her deity's available domains.

The divine disciple receives the domain's granted power and may choose the domain's spells as domain spells.

(The disciple now has three choices each level for domain spells instead of two).

Divine Emissary: Divine disciples can telepathically communicate with any outsider within 60 feet, as long as that outsider serves the disciple's deity or has the same alignment as the disciple.

Sacred Defense: Add this value (+1 at 2nd level, +2 at 4th level) to the divine disciple's saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

Imbue With Spell Ability (Sp): As the spell, except a divine disciple does not need to use any 4th-level (or higher) spell slots to activate this ability.

(She transfers currently prepared spells to her targets on a one-for-one basis without having to use a spell slot for the imbue with spell ability spell).

The only limit to the number of spells the divine disciple can transfer is the disciple's available 1st- and 2nd-level spells.

Transcendence: The divine disciple, through long association with her deity's outsider servants and direct intervention by her deity, transcends her mortal form and becomes a divine creature.

Her type changes to outsider, which means that she acquires some immunities and vulnerabilities based on her type (see Native Outsider, under the planetouched race description).

As a free action she can ward herself with a protection from chaos/evil/good/law spell.

(She chooses which form to have when she gains the transcendence power and cannot change it thereafter).

Upon achieving transcendence, the divine disciple's appearance usually undergoes a minor physical change appropriate to her alignment and deity.

For example, the eyes of a disciple of Lathander, the Morninglord, might change to glowing gold.

Anyone who shares the disciple's patron, including outsider servants of her patron, immediately recognize her transcendent nature, and she gains a +2 bonus on all Charisma-based skill and ability checks in regard to these creatures.

TABLE 1-10: THE DIVINE DISCIPLE

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spells per Day
1st	+0	+2	+0	+2	New domain, divine emissary	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class

DIVINE SEEKER

Sometimes a church cannot act openly, either because of political constraints, bureaucracy, or because it doesn't want its presence known in an area.

During these times, the abilities of discretion, stealth, and speed are more valuable than the direct manifestation of power.

The divine seeker fills this role, infiltrating dangerous places to rescue prisoners, reclaim stolen relics, or eliminate enemy leaders.

Quiet and protected by the power of her deity, a divine seeker can often accomplish what a direct assault could not. Divine seekers may be of any class, though they favor monks, rangers, and rogues.

Barbarians and bards often have the skills to become divine seekers, but they tend to be too undisciplined or have abilities that rely on noise.

Sorcerers and wizards with subtle and stealthy magic sometimes become divine seekers, but they are rare.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine seeker (Skr) of a particular deity, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Hide 10 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Patron: A divine seeker must have a patron deity, and it must be the deity of which she is a divine seeker.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine seeker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the divine seeker prestige class.

All of the divine seeker's spell-like abilities function as if cast by a cleric with a caster level of the divine seeker's class level plus her Charisma bonus.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine seekers gain proficiency in all simple weapons and light armor.

Sanctuary (Sp): Once per day a divine seeker can ward herself with a sanctuary spell.

Thwart Glyph: A divine seeker gains a +4 bonus on all Search and Disable Device checks to locate, disable, or bypass magic glyphs, runes, and symbols.

Sacred Defense: Add this bonus (+1 at 2nd level, +2 at 4th level) to the divine seeker's saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

Sneak Attack: As the rogue's ability.

This stacks with any sneak attack ability from another class.

Locate Object (Sp): Once per day, a divine seeker can use the locate object spell.

Obscure Object (Sp): Once per day, a divine seeker can use obscure object, which prevents her from being tracked by locating a stolen item she carries.

Locate Creature (Sp): Once per day, a divine seeker can use the locate creature spell.

Divine Perseverance: Once per day, if the divine seeker is brought to -1 or lower hit points, she automatically is cured of 1d8+5 points of damage.

GUILD THIEF

Guild thieves are thieves who operate in urban areas as part of an organized thieves' guild.

They control and manipulate almost all the crime in their home cities.

Guild thieves are usually organized into divisions (assassins, beggars, bounty hunters, burglars, con artists and tricksters, cutpurses and pickpockets, enforcers and thugs, racketeers, scouts and spies, and fences, pirates, and smugglers), each of which is led by a guildmaster responsible for crimes of that type.

The guildmasters report to a head guildmaster.

Guild thieves generally only know their own minions, their coworkers, and their superior.

This web of secrecy preserves the organization, because any that are captured can only sell out a few others.

Most guild thieves are rogues, although specialists in some divisions are more likely to be fighters or rangers.

Clerics of evil deities (particularly Mask and Shar) take roles in many divisions, and sorcerers and wizards also have important roles, but their prominence is dependent on the land in which they operate.

(Some lands have few sorcerers and wizards or discourage them from staying or developing by placing many restrictions on them).

Guild thieves excel at working with others, intimidating common folk, administering punitive beatings, and acquiring important contacts.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a guild thief (Gld), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Gather Information 3 ranks, Hide 8 ranks,

Intimidate 3 ranks, Move Silently 3 ranks.

Special: Membership in a thieves' guild.

CLASS SKILLS

The guild thief's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Dex), Forgery (Int), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the guild thief prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Guild thieves gain proficiency in all simple weapons and light armor.

Sneak Attack: As the rogue's ability.

This stacks with any sneak attack ability from another class.

Doublespeak: A guild thief gains a +2 bonus on all Bluff, Diplomacy, and Innuendo checks.

Bonus Feat: A guild thief gains a feat from the following list: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Cosmopolitan, Education, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (hand crossbow), Leadership, Lightning Reflexes, Track, Skill Focus (any guild thief class skill), Still Spell, Street Smart, Weapon Finesse, Weapon Focus.

Uncanny Dodge: As the rogue ability.

If a guild thief has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant the ability and determine the character's uncanny dodge ability on that basis.

Reputation: Add this value to the character's Leadership score (see the Leadership feat in Chapter 2 of the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide).

Most guild thieves with an interest in collecting followers have a permanent base of operations within a city, which gives an additional +2 bonus on their Leadership score according to Table 2–26: Leadership Modifiers in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide.

TABLE I—12: THE GUILD THIEF

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+2	+0	Sneak attack +1d6, doublespeak
2nd	+1	+0	+3	+0	Bonus feat, uncanny dodge (Dex bonus to AC)
3rd	+2	+1	+3	+1	Sneak attack +2d6, reputation +1
4th	+3	+1	+4	+1	Bonus feat, reputation +2
5th	+3	+1	+4	+1	Sneak attack +3d6, uncanny dodge (can't be flanked), reputation +3

HARPER SCOUT

Harper scouts are members of the Harpers, a secret society dedicated to holding back evil, preserving knowledge, and maintaining the balance between civilization and the wild. Harper scouts learn arcane spells and many skills to help them in their duties of espionage, stealth, and reporting information.

Many Harper scouts are bards, but by no means all.

Ranger, rogue, sorcerer, and wizard are common vocations for Harper scouts, since these classes tend to have versatility and mobility.

All have some skill at manipulating others, a resistance to outside mental influences, acute abilities of perception, and a talent for solving problems.

Not all Harpers are members of the Harper scout prestige class, and rank within the organization does not depend on a character's level in this or any other class.

However, most of the higher-ranked Harpers have at least one level in the Harper scout prestige class.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Harper scout (Hrp), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Diplomacy 8 ranks, Knowledge (local) 4 ranks, Perform 5 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks, Wilderness Lore 2 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Iron Will.

Special: Sponsorship by a member of the Harpers, approval of the High Harpers.

CLASS SKILLS

The Harper scout's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (Int), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Harper scout prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Harper scout is proficient with all simple weapons and light armor.

Spells per Day: Beginning at 1st level, a Harper scout gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

The Harper scout's ability to cast these spells works exactly like a bard's ability to cast spells.

(They are Charisma-based and do not need to be prepared).

A 1st-level Harper scout learns two spells from the Harper scout 1st-level spell list.

She learns two new Harper scout spells of any spell level she can cast at each Harper scout level thereafter.

There is no limit to the number of these spells the Harper scout can know from this list.

She may learn more by studying arcane scrolls or spellbooks.

HARPER SCOUT SPELL LIST

1st level—change self, charm person, comprehend languages, erase, feather fall, jump, light, message, mount, read magic, scatterspray, sleep, spider climb.

2nd level—cat's grace, darkvision, detect thoughts, eagle's splendor, invisibility, knock, locate object, magic mouth, misdirection, see invisibility, shadow mask.

3rd level—clairaudience/clairvoyance, nondetection, suggestion, tongues, undetectable alignment.

Harper Knowledge: Like a bard, a Harper scout has a knack for picking up odds and ends of knowledge.

This ability works exactly like the bardic knowledge ability of the bard class.

If a Harper scout has bard levels, her Harper scout levels and bard levels stack for the purpose of using bardic knowledge.

Favored Enemy: A Harper scout selects a favored enemy from the following list of evil organizations that oppose the Harpers' goals: the Church of Bane, the Cult of the Dragon, the Iron Throne, the malaugryms, the Red Wizards, or the Zhentarim.

This ability works exactly like the favored enemy ability of the ranger class.

If a Harper scout with ranger levels chooses a favored enemy that she already has chosen as a ranger, the bonuses stack.

When the Harper scout reaches 4th level, the bonus against her first favored enemy increases to +2, and she gains a new favored enemy at +1.

Deneir's Eye (Su): A Harper scout gains a +2 holy bonus on saving throws against glyphs, runes, and symbols.

Skill Focus: A Harper scout gains the Skill Focus feat for her Perform skill and any one other Harper scout class skill.

Tymora's Smile (Su): Once per day, a Harper scout can add a +2 luck bonus on a single saving throw.

This bonus can be added after the die is rolled and after success or failure of the unmodified roll is determined.

Lliira's Heart (Su): A Harper scout gains a +2 holy bonus on saving throws against compulsion and fear effects.

Craft Harper Item: A specialized form of the Craft Wondrous Item feat, this allows a Harper scout to create magic musical instruments, Harper pins, and certain potions (Charisma, detect thoughts, glibness, tongues, and truth). This ability replaces the need for any other item creation feat for the item.

The Harper scout's casting level for these items is her Harper scout level plus all other caster levels from her other spellcasting classes.

All the normal requirements for an item (such as race or spells) remain the same.

All other rules for creating wondrous items or potions apply.

EX-HARPER SCOUTS

It is possible for a character to violate the code of conduct of the Harpers, endanger other Harpers through negligence or deliberate action, or intentionally turn away from the Harpers.

Such an individual quickly gains a reputation among the other Harpers and can no longer progress in the Harper scout prestige class.

Furthermore, the former Harper scout can no longer use the Deneir's eye, Lliira's heart, or Tymora's smile abilities.

A petition to the High Harpers, a suitable quest decided upon by that group, and an atonement spell from a deity chosen by the High Harpers brings the former Harper scout back into good standing, and she can thereafter gain levels in the prestige class.

TABLE 1-13: THE HARPER SCOUT

HATHRAN

Hathrans comprise an elite sisterhood of spellcasters who lead Rashemen.

They are also known as the Witches of Rashemen.

Within the borders of Rashemen, their powers are greater than other spellcasters of their level.

In Rashemi society, hathrans occupy the place reserved for powerful clerics in most Faerûnian cultures.

They heal the sick and wounded, care for the souls of their followers, recruit champions from other planes, and raise the dead.

Within the hathran class (which means “learned sisterhood” in the language of Rashemen), 1st-level characters are called blethran (“sisterkin”).

The 9th- and 10th-level hathrans are called othlor (“true ones”) and have complete authority over all other Witches. Hathrans have the power of life and death over all citizens of Rashemen, although to misuse this authority is a serious offense against the sisterhood.

When traveling in Rashemen, hathrans always wear masks. Many are sent outside their homeland to study other cultures and keep watch on important figures.

To be a hathran requires a certain depth of knowledge in arcane and divine magic.

Usually hathrans are cleric/wizards, but some of the sisters have developed their powers as bards, druids, rangers, or sorcerers.

The concept of rivalry between spellcasters is considered insane by hathrans, and they share spells with any hathran they deem able to handle the responsibility.

In Rashemi society, the creation of magic items is left to the male spellcasters, and hathrans are not allowed to learn item creation feats.

(To do so causes expulsion from the sisterhood and banishment from Rashemen, so great is the social stigma).

The only exceptions are scrolls, which are used to train lesser members in arcane and divine magic.

Rashemi wizards who hope to become hathran use their bonus feats for metamagic feats or Spell Mastery.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hathran (Hth), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good, lawful neutral, or neutral good.

Race: Human female of Rashemen or Rashemi descent.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells and 2nd-level divine spells.

Feats: Ethran.

Patron: Chauntea, Mielikki, or Mystra.

Special: Member in good standing of the Witches of Rashemen.

CLASS SKILLS

The hathran's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Swim (Str), Speak Language, Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hathran prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hathrans gain Exotic Weapon Proficiency (whip).

They gain proficiency in no new armor.

Spells per Day: A hathran's training focuses on arcane or divine spells.

Thus, when a new hathran level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained one level in a spellcasting class (her choice) she belonged to before becoming a hathran.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of hathran to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

Since all hathrans are multiclass spellcasters, some choose to expand their skill in the arcane, others the divine, and the remainder strike a balance between the two.

The hathrans also have a short custom spell list.

These spells are arcane spells and must be acquired like any other arcane spell.

They use spell slots of the appropriate level in the hathran's arcane spellcasting class.

HATHRAN SPELL LIST

1st level—scatterspray.

2nd level—moonbeam.

3rd level—flashburst, moon blade.

5th level—moon path.

Cohort: The hathran gains a cohort as if she had the Leadership feat (see Chapter 2 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide).

This cohort is either a Rashemi female with the Ethran feat or a Rashemi male with at least one level of barbarian.

This cohort does not count against any cohorts (or followers) the hathran may acquire by taking the Leadership feat.

Place Magic: The hathran's ties to the land of Rashemen are so strong that when in her homeland, she can draw upon the power of the land and its spirits to allow her to cast spells without preparing them.

When using place magic, she may cast any arcane spell she knows or any divine spell on her spell list.

The spell uses spell slots as normal.

Casting with place magic is a full-round action.

If the spell has a casting time of 1 action or longer, 1 full round is added to the casting time of the spell.

If the hathran wishes to use a metamagic feat she knows on a place magic spell, 1 additional full round is added to the casting time of the spell.

Note that when on her home soil, a hathran may use divine spell slots of the appropriate level to cast any of the spells on the hathran spell list, even if she doesn't know the spell as an arcane spell.

Fear (Su): A hathran can cast fear as a sorcerer of her highest spellcasting level.

The ability is usable once per day at 3rd level, twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 8th level.

Circle Leader: The hathran gains the ability to become a circle leader, who is the focus person for hathran circle magic.

See Chapter 2: Magic for a description of circle magic.

Greater Command (Su): The hathran can cast a quickened greater command once per day as a sorcerer of her highest spellcasting level.

HIEROPHANT

A divine spellcaster who rises high in the service of his deity gains access to spells and abilities of which lesser faithful can only dream.

The hierophant prestige class is open to powerful divine spellcasters who are approaching access to the strongest and most difficult divine spells.

They delay the acquisition of these greatest gifts in exchange for a deeper understanding of and ability to control the power they channel.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hierophant (Hie) of a particular deity, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 7th-level divine spells.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) or Knowledge (nature) 15 ranks.

Feat: Any metamagic feat.

CLASS SKILLS

The hierophant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hierophant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hierophants gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells and Caster Level: Levels in the hierophant prestige class, even though they do not advance spell progression in the character's base class, still stack with the character's base spellcasting levels to determine caster level.

Special Ability: Every level, a hierophant gains a special ability of his choice from among the following: Blast Infidel: The hierophant can use negative energy spells to their maximum effect on creatures with a different patron from the hierophant.

Any spell with a description that involves inflicting or channeling negative energy (inflict spells, circle of doom, harm) cast on such creatures works as if under the effect of a Maximize Spell feat (without using a higher-level spell slot).

Undead affected by this ability heal the appropriate amount of damage, regardless of their patron (if any).

Divine Reach: The hierophant can use touch spells on targets up to 30 feet away.

If the spell requires a melee touch attack, the hierophant must make a ranged touch attack instead.

If selected a second time as a special ability, the range increases to 60 feet.

Faith Healing: The hierophant can use healing spells to their maximum effect on creatures with the same patron as the hierophant (including the hierophant himself).

Any spell with the healing descriptor cast on such creatures works as if under the effects of a Maximize Spell feat (without using a higher-level spell slot).

Any creature that falsely claims to be a follower of the hierophant's patron in hopes of gaining extra benefit instead receives none of the effects of the spell and must make a Will save (against the spell's DC) or be stunned for 1 round.

Gift of the Divine: The hierophant may transfer one or more uses of his turning ability to a willing creature.

(Hierophants who rebuke undead transfer uses of rebuke undead instead).

The transfer lasts anywhere from 24 hours to a tenday (chosen at the time of transfer), and while the transfer is in effect, the number of turning attempts per day allowed to the hierophant is reduced by the number transferred.

The recipient turns undead as a cleric of the hierophant's cleric level but uses her own Charisma bonus.

Mastery of Energy: The hierophant channels positive or negative energy much more effectively, increasing his ability to affect undead.

Add a +4 bonus to the hierophant's turning checks and turning damage.

Metamagic Feat: The hierophant can choose a metamagic feat.

Power of Nature: Available only to hierophants with druid levels, this ability allows the hierophant to temporarily transfer one or more of his special druidic powers to a willing creature.

The transfer lasts anywhere from 24 hours to a tenday (chosen at the time of transfer), and while the transfer is in effect, the hierophant cannot use the transferred power. He can transfer any of his druidic special abilities except spellcasting and animal companions.

The wild shape ability can be partially or completely transferred.

For example, he may transfer the ability to wild shape once per day to the recipient and retain the rest of his uses for himself.

If the hierophant can assume the form of Tiny, Huge, or dire animals, the recipient can as well.

As with the imbue with spell ability spell, the hierophant remains responsible to his deity for any purpose the recipient uses the transferred abilities.

Spell Power +2: This ability increases by +2 the DC for saving throws against the hierophant's divine spells and for caster level checks for his divine spells to overcome spell resistance.

This ability can be selected multiple times, and stacks with itself and other spell power effects that affect divine spells.

Spell-Like Ability: The hierophant can use one of his divine spell slots to permanently prepare one of his divine spells as a spell-like ability that can be used two times per day.

The hierophant does not use any components when casting the spell, although a spell that costs experience points to cast still does so, and a spell with a costly material component instead costs him 10 times that amount in experience points.

The spell normally uses a spell slot of the spell's level (or higher if the hierophant chooses to permanently attach a metamagic feat to the spell chosen).

The hierophant can use an available higher-level spell slot to use the spell-like ability more than twice per day.

Allocating a slot three levels higher allows him to cast the spell four times per day, and a slot six levels higher lets him cast it six times per day.

For example, Lonafin the hierophant is a follower of Velsharoon and wants to be able to create undead whenever he has the opportunity, so he permanently uses a 9th-level spell slot to get animate dead as a spell-like ability usable six times per day.

If selected more than one time as a special ability, this ability can apply to the same spell or to a different spell.

PURPLE DRAGON KNIGHT

The famous Purple Dragons of Cormyr are regarded across Faerûn as exemplars of disciplined, skilled, loyal soldiers. Their reputation is deserved partly because of the heroic actions of their leaders, the Purple Dragon knights. Purple Dragon knights develop uncanny skills related to coordinating and leading soldiers.

Most are fighters, rangers, or paladins, but a few bards, clerics, and rogues have been known to become Purple Dragon knights.

Sorcerers and wizards tend to join the War Wizards, Cormyr's elite brigade of fighting spellcasters, while barbarians are too undisciplined, and druids and monks too "uncivilized" in Cormyr to enter this career.

In general, NPC knight commanders are responsible for leading the troops of the nation of Cormyr.

Player character knights either are retirees, special liaisons to the army, or recipients of honorary titles.

A character's level in this prestige class is irrelevant to his rank in the military, although higher-ranked knights tend to be of higher level.

It is not necessary to have this prestige class to serve in the Purple Dragons at large.

This prestige class can be used as a model for officers in other countries, members of knightly orders, and so on.

It is not necessary to have this prestige class to be an officer of the Purple Dragons, but most high-ranking officers do.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Purple Dragon knight (Prp), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil and nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Diplomacy or Intimidate 1 rank, Listen 2 ranks, Ride 2 ranks, Spot 2 ranks.

Feats: Leadership, Mounted Combat.

Special: Membership in the Purple Dragons.

CLASS SKILLS

The Purple Dragon knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Purple Dragon knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Purple Dragon knight is proficient with all simple weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

Rallying Cry (Su): The knight can utter a powerful shout (typically "For Cormyr!") that causes all allies within 60 feet to gain a +1 morale bonus on their next attack roll and increases their speed by 5 feet until the knight's next turn. Traditionally, the rallying cry is used when a formation of soldiers is about to charge.

This mind-affecting ability may be used up to three times per day.

Heroic Shield: A knight can use the aid another action (see Chapter 8 of the Player's Handbook) to give an ally a +4 circumstance bonus to AC instead of the normal +2.

Inspire Courage (Su): This ability has the same effect as the bard ability of the same name.

The knight makes an inspirational speech, bolstering his allies against fear and improving their combat abilities. To be affected, an ally must hear the knight speak for a full round.

The effect lasts as long as the knight speaks and for 5 rounds after the knight stops speaking (or 5 rounds after the ally can no longer hear the knight).

While speaking, the knight can fight but cannot cast spells, activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls), or activate magic items by magic word (such as wands). Affected allies receive a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

Fear (Su): Once per day, a knight can evoke a fear effect (DC 13 + the officer's Charisma modifier).

His allies are immune to the effect.

Oath of Wrath (Su): Once per day, a knight can select a single opponent within 60 feet and swear an oath to defeat him.

For the duration of the encounter, the knight has a +2 morale bonus on melee attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saves, and skill checks made against the challenged target. The effect is negated immediately if the knight makes an attack or casts a spell targeted at any creature except the challenged opponent (attacks of opportunity do not count) or if the knight uses a full-round action to move away from the challenged opponent.

Final Stand (Su): Once per day, a knight can inspire his troops to a heroic effort, temporarily increasing their vitality.

All allies within 10 feet of the knight gain 2d10 temporary hit points.

This ability affects a number of creatures equal to the knight's class level + his Charisma modifier and lasts an equal number of rounds.

RED WIZARD

The Red Wizards are the masters of Thay, the conquerors of that land's native Rashemi, and the would-be magical overlords of Faerûn.

They focus on a school of magic more intently than any specialist, achieving incredible mastery of magic within a very narrow focus.

Seen as cruel and evil tyrants by people across Toril, a few choose to leave their region, assume secret identities, and practice magic without having to worry about political alliances and possible slave uprisings.

Early in their careers, would-be Red Wizards specialize in a school of magic and acquire the Tattoo Focus feat that prepares them for entry into the full Red Wizard prestige class.

All Red Wizards have some skill as a specialist wizard, and most follow that path exclusively, but a few dabble in other sorts of learning (such as combat or divine magic).

While it is possible for a sorcerer or bard to become a Red Wizard, such misfits are ridiculed in their homeland and are incredibly rare.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Red Wizard (Red), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Race: Human from Thay.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Skills: Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Tattoo Focus and a total of three metamagic feats or item creation feats.

CLASS SKILLS

The Red Wizard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Red Wizard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Red Wizards gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A Red Wizard's training focuses on arcane spells.

Thus, when a new Red Wizard level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of Red Wizard to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became a Red Wizard, he must decide to which class he adds each level of Red Wizard for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Enhanced Specialization: Upon becoming a Red Wizard, the character increases his devotion to his wizard school of specialization.

In exchange for this, the Red Wizard must sacrifice study in one or more schools.

The Red Wizard must choose an additional prohibited school or schools using the rules in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook.

He can never again learn spells from those prohibited schools.

He cannot choose the same prohibited schools he chose as a 1st-level wizard.

He can still use the prohibited spells he knew prior to becoming a Red Wizard, including using items that are activated by spell completion or spell trigger.

For example, Ghorus Toth is specialized in the school of Transmutation.

His prohibited schools are Abjuration and Enchantment (option 3).

When he becomes a Red Wizard, he must choose one of the other categories of prohibited schools for Transmutation listed in the School Specialization sidebar the Player's Handbook.

His options are (1) Conjunction, (2) Evocation, or (4) any three schools.

He cannot choose option (3) because there is no way to select that option without selecting schools from which he is already prohibited.

If he chooses option (4), he cannot choose Abjuration or Enchantment because those are already prohibited schools for him.

He decides to select Conjunction as his additional prohibited school.

Specialist Defense: Add this value to the Red Wizard's saving throws against spells from his specialist school.

Spell Power: For spells involving the Red Wizard's specialist school, add this value to the DC for saving throws and to caster level checks to overcome spell resistance.

The value starts at +1 at 1st level and goes up to +2 at 4th level, +3 at 6th level, +4 at 8th level, and +5 at 10th level.

This ability stacks with other spell power effects that affect spells from the Red Wizard's specialist school.

Bonus Feat: The Red Wizard can choose an item creation feat, metamagic feat, or Spell Mastery (see Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Circle Leader: The Red Wizard gains the ability to become a circle leader, who is the focus person for Red Wizard circle magic.

See Chapter 2: Magic for information on circle magic.

Scribe Tattoo: The Red Wizard gains the ability to place the Thayan wizards' magic tattoos upon qualified novices, allowing them to select the Tattoo Focus feat and inducting them into his circle.

Great Circle Leader: The Red Wizard can be the center of a great circle, which can have up to nine assistants instead of just five.

See Chapter 2: Magic for information on circle magic.

RUNECASTER

A skill originally developed by the dwarves and giants, the ability to create runes of power has spread beyond the hills and mountains.

Those that choose to master this ability are runecasters, creating incredibly potent symbols that last for multiple uses and can be triggered without being touched.

An established runecaster's goods are usually adorned with many runes, making his equipment very impressive-looking and a true threat to thieves.

Most runecasters are clerics or adepts because a majority of the practitioners of this ability are dwarves and giants.

Some rangers and paladins have chosen to become runecasters, particularly since the Thundering has resulted in many young dwarves leaving home to explore the wilderness.

A few rare druids have chosen the path of the runecaster as well, although generally only in areas where druids are so scarce that they have to rely on runes to protect a large area. Runecasting clerics and paladins use their abilities to protect their temples and holy items, while ranger runecasters use them to guard trails, lairs of threatened animals, and natural refuges.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a runecaster (Rnc), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Skills: Spellcraft 8 ranks, Craft 8 ranks (see the Rune Magic section of Chapter 2: Magic for appropriate Craft skills).

Feats: Inscribe Rune.

CLASS SKILLS

The runecaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana), (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the runecaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Runecasters gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A runecaster's training focuses on divine spells.

Thus, when a new runecaster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of runecaster to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly. If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a runecaster, he must decide to which class he adds each level of runecaster for purposes of determining spells per day and caster level.

Rune Craft: Add this bonus to the runecaster's Craft checks made to inscribe runes.

Improved Runecasting: As a runecaster rises in level, he can create runes that function more than once and have different means of being triggered.

The extra features increase the cost of the rune, however, as shown on the table below.

Number of Uses/Trigger	Runecaster Base Price	Level
One	Spell level* × caster level × 50 gp	—
Chargest	Spell level* × caster level × charges × 50 gp	3
Charges per day†	Spell level* × caster level × charges × 400 gp	8
Permanent (until dispelled)††	Spell level* × caster level × 2,000 gp	8
Works when touched	Base cost	—
Works when read or passed	Base cost × 2	3

*A 0-level spell counts as 1/2 level.
 The minimum runecaster level to inscribe a rune of this type. "—" indicates the default ability granted by the Inscribe Rune feat.
 †If the spell has a component or XP cost, add that cost times the number of charges to the base price of the rune.
 ††If the spell has a component or XP cost, add 100 times that cost to the base price of the rune.

Works When Read or Passed: Any attempt to study, identify, or fathom a rune's meaning counts as "reading" the rune.

Passing through a portal that bears a rune counts as "passing" the rune.

A rune must have an unbroken line of effect to a target to affect that target, and the target must be within 30 feet.

A rune that is triggered when passed can be set to almost any special conditions the runecaster specifies.

Runes can be set according to physical characteristics (such as height or weight) or creature type, subtype, or species (such as "drow" or "aberration").

Runes can also be set with respect to good, evil, law, or chaos, or patron deity.

They cannot be set according to class, Hit Dice, or level.

Runes respond to invisible creatures normally but are not triggered by those who travel past them ethereally.

When placing a rune with a "pass" trigger, a runecaster can specify a password or phrase that protects a creature using it from triggering the rune.

Rune Power: For runes created by the runecaster, add this value to the DC of all saves and attempts to erase, dispel, or disable the rune, and to caster level checks to overcome the spell resistance of a target.

Maximize Rune: The runecaster can create runes that are maximized, as if under the effects of a Maximize Spell feat, without altering the level of the spell being used to create the rune.

Maximizing a rune adds +5 to the DC of the Craft check required to inscribe it.

Rune Chant: Whenever the runecaster casts a divine spell, he may trace a rune in the air as an extra somatic component for the spell.

This allows the runecaster to gain the benefit of his rune power ability for the spell.

For spells with a casting time of 1 action, this increases the casting time to 1 full round.

All other spells have their casting time increased by 1 round.

This ability cannot be used on stilled spells, and it does not function with the maximize rune ability.

SHADOW ADEPT

Some spellcasters who discover the existence of the Shadow Weave are cautious, altering their magic slowly. Others are more reckless, and hurl themselves into the abyss of the Shadow Weave, immediately acquiring all the gifts available to the casual student and discovering secrets unavailable to all but the most dedicated.

These spellcasters are the shadow adepts, who make great sacrifices in some aspects of the Art in order to reap greater benefits elsewhere.

Most shadow adepts are sorcerers or wizards, and they gain the greatest power from this path.

However, any spellcaster can tap the Shadow Weave, and a few bards, druids, and rangers have been known to make this choice.

Among clerics, only the followers of Shar are common in the ranks of the shadow adepts.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadow adept (Sha), a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Shadow Weave Magic and any metamagic feat.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadow adept's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the shadow adept prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadow adepts gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A shadow adept's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a new shadow adept level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of shadow adept to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a shadow adept, he must decide to which class he adds each level of shadow adept for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Shadow Feats: A shadow adept gains the Insidious Magic, Pernicious Magic, and Tenacious Magic feats.

Low-Light Vision (Su): A shadow adept gains low-light vision if he doesn't already have it.

Shadow Defense: Add this value to a shadow adept's saving throws against spells from the schools of Enchantment, Illusion, and Necromancy, and spells with the darkness descriptor.

Darkvision (Su): A shadow adept can see in the dark as though he were permanently affected by a darkvision spell.

Metamagic Feat: The shadow adept can choose any one metamagic feat.

Spell Power: Add this value to the DC for saving throws and to caster level checks to overcome spell resistance for spells the shadow adept casts from the schools of Enchantment, Illusion, or Necromancy, and spells with the darkness descriptor.

This stacks with other spell power effects that affect the specified spells.

Shield of Shadows (Su): A shadow adept can create a mobile disk of purple-black force as a standard action.

The shield of shadows has the effects of a shield spell and also provides three-quarters concealment (30% miss chance) against attacks from the other side of the shield. As with the shield spell, the shadow adept can change the defensive direction of the shield of shadows as a free action once per round on his turn.

The shadow adept can see and reach through the shield, so it does not provide cover or concealment to opponents.

The shield of shadows lasts 1 round per caster level per day and need not be used all at once.

Creating or dismissing the shield of shadows is a standard action.

At 8th level, the shield also grants spell resistance of 12 + the character's shadow adept level on attacks against the shadow adept that originate from the other side of the shield, as if the shadow adept were under the effect of a spell resistance spell.

Shadow Walk (Sp): A shadow adept can cast the shadow walk spell once per day.

Shadow Double: Once per day, a shadow adept can use a standard action to create a double of himself woven from shadowstuff.

The double has the ability scores, base AC, hit points, saves, and attack bonuses as its creator, but no equipment.

(Any apparent clothing or equipment is nonfunctional).

The double can attack the creator's enemies if given a weapon or items (since it can use anything its creator can) or function as the target of a project image spell, duplicating the creator's actions and acting as the origin of the creator's spells when it is within a direct line of sight.

Mentally commanding the double is a free action.

Using it as the originator of a spell counts as an action for the creator and the double.

Causing the creator or the double to leave the plane they share dismisses the double.

The double lasts 1 round per caster level.

The death of the double does not affect the shadow adept or vice versa.

The double still lasts to the end of its duration if its creator dies.

FROSTBURN (3.5)

CLOUD ANCHORITE

The remote mountaintops of the world represent one of the harshest incarnations of the frostfell, for in these locations not only does one struggle for shelter, food, and warmth, but also for the air itself.

Yet for many, the isolation and beauty of the tallest mountains is an irresistible draw, especially to those who seek to hone and perfect their own bodies and minds far from the busy distractions of civilization.

The cloud anchorites are just such an order of monastic recluses who have established monasteries on the slopes of many high mountains.

Cloud anchorite monasteries are never constructed at altitudes of less than 12,000 feet.

There, they train in the rarefied chill air under the belief that conditions in lower altitudes and warmer climates serve only to accelerate the aging process and quell the quest for self-perfection.

A cloud anchorite is quick to point out how the body of a person who dies in the tropics quickly rots away into corruption, but if the same person were to die atop one of the tallest mountain peaks, his body would become preserved for the ages.

The cloud anchorite simply seeks a way to achieve this immortality while maintaining life and awareness.

Although most cloud anchorites were at one point in their lives monks, this is not a strict requirement to join one of their remote monasteries.

All the cloud anchorites require of prospective members is a proven self-sufficiency and a willingness to seek immortality.

Nevertheless, their teachings are natural extensions of many of the more common place monastic orders' teachings.

Rangers, bards, and rogues can qualify for this prestige class fairly quickly as well, but the skill requirements make it difficult for most other classes to join a cloud anchorite monastery.

NPC cloud anchorites can be found in their monasteries on distant mountaintops, from which they only rarely leave to return to the lowlands.

Those few cloud anchorites who do travel to lower altitudes do so to seek out prospective students, to gather necessary supplies for the monastery, or rarely, to bring the knowledge they have learned to the lowlanders in an attempt to open their eyes to the dangers of life below the treeline.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cloud anchorite, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Base Fortitude Save: +5.

Skills: Climb 9 ranks, Jump 9 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 9 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feats: Improved Unarmed Combat, Mountaineer.

Special: The prospective student must live for a week on her own in a wilderness region, during which time she can travel no lower than 12,000 feet in altitude.

CLASS SKILLS

The cloud anchorite class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the cloud anchorite prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cloud anchorites gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor or shield.

Monk Abilities: A cloud anchorite's class levels stack with her monk levels for determining her unarmed damage and AC bonus.

Climb Speed (Ex): At 1st level, a cloud anchorite gains a climb speed of 10 feet.

She gains a +8 racial bonus on all Climb checks.

A cloud anchorite must make a Climb check to climb any wall or slope with a DC of more than 0, but she can always choose to take 10, even if rushed or threatened while climbing.

She cannot use the run action while climbing.

She retains her Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (if any) while climbing, and opponents get no special bonus on their attacks against her while she is climbing.

A cloud anchorite in armor (even light armor) or carrying a medium or heavy load loses this extra speed.

As the cloud anchorite gains levels, her climb speed increases.

At each odd-numbered level, she gains a +10-foot bonus to her current climb speed.

If the cloud anchorite already possesses a climb speed (for example, if she possessed a racial climb speed before becoming a cloud anchorite), these bonuses stack with her current climb speed.

Wisdom of the Mountain (Ex): A cloud anchorite adds her Wisdom modifier on Balance, Climb, and Jump checks made in mountain terrain.

In addition, the cloud anchorite can always take 10 on a Balance, Climb, or Jump check, even if circumstances would normally prevent her from doing so.

Slow Breath (Ex): At 2nd level, a cloud anchorite's breathing slows to a fraction of what it used to be.

She can hold her breath twice as long as normal, and gains a +2 bonus on all Fortitude saving throws against inhaled poisons, fatigue caused by high elevation, and altitude sickness.

At 6th level, her bonus on these Fortitude saving throws increases to +6.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd level and again at 7th level, a cloud anchorite gains a bonus feat.

This feat must be selected from the following list, and she must qualify for any prerequisites the feat to be chosen might require: Acrobatic, Agile, Athletic, Cold Endurance, Endurance, Great Fortitude, Improved Cold Endurance, Self-Sufficient, Skill Focus (in any class skill), or Track.

Resistance to Cold (Su): At 4th level, a cloud anchorite gains resistance to cold 5.

This increases to resistance to cold 10 at 8th level.

Fast Movement (Ex): At 4th level, a cloud anchorite gains a +10-foot enhancement bonus to her land speed.

A cloud anchorite in armor (even light armor) or carrying a medium or heavy load loses this extra speed.

At 8th level, this bonus increases to +20 feet.

Empty Stride (Su): At 5th level, a cloud anchorite's stride is nearly weightless.

She gains a +4 bonus on all Balance checks.

More impressively, she can walk on the surface of any material into which she would normally sink, such as powdery snow, thin ice, and even water.

She may continue to walk on this surface as long as she makes a DC 15 Concentration check.

Normally, the Concentration check for this activity is a standard action, so a cloud anchorite may make one move action per round while using her empty stride ability.

If she makes a DC 30 Concentration check, she may concentrate on her Empty Stride ability as a move action instead, allowing her to use it and still take one standard action in a round.

She does not trigger traps that use pressure plates while using empty stride, nor is her speed impacted by deep snow.

Acrobatic Charge (Ex): At 6th level, a cloud anchorite gains the ability to charge in situations where others cannot. She may charge over difficult terrain that normally slows movement.

This enables her to run down steep rock faces, leap down from an outcropping, or tumble over small boulders to get to the target of her charge.

Depending on the circumstances, she may still need to make appropriate checks (Jump or Tumble checks in particular) to successfully move over the terrain.

Walk on the Clouds (Su): At 9th level, a cloud anchorite can use her empty stride ability as a free action at all times.

Additionally, once per day she may use air walk as a quickened spell-like ability.

This effect manifests at a caster level equal to her cloud anchorite level.

Immortality of the Mountain (Su): Upon reaching 10th level, a cloud anchorite has achieved the apotheosis she has sought.

She no longer has a maximum age, and will never die of old age.

Additionally, she no longer has to make saving throws to avoid altitude sickness or fatigue from thin air, and gains a +2 sacred bonus on all Wisdom checks and all saving throws while in mountain terrain.

CRYOKINETICIST

The cryokineticist is the master of cold psionic energy. He finds beauty in the crystalline structure cold imposes on all it touches, and has learned to harness the life-altering power of this much-overlooked source of dire energy.

A cryokineticist calls on the power of cold for protection, transfiguration, and attack, developing his abilities to the point where he can harness the most pure elemental cold for his bidding.

Few psionicists are drawn to the life of a cryokineticist, for many who come from temperate climates fail to see the hidden power in seasonal—and therefore ephemeral—cold and ice.

Most who become cryokineticists come from frostfell environments, typically polar civilizations or planar cities that exist in areas dominated by elemental cold or ice where the frigid temperatures continually reveal the limitless power of cold.

NPC cryokineticists spend most of their time in freezing regions, and therefore are rarely found in temperate climes.

Some bring their unique control of cold to warm or even hot environments, charging dearly for their cold-generating powers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cryokineticist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Craft (alchemy) 1 rank,

Knowledge (psionics) 2 ranks.

Powers: Able to manifest the energy emanation power.

CLASS SKILLS

The cryokineticist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (psionics), and Psicraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook or Chapter 3 of the Expanded Psionics Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the cryokineticist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cryokineticists gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Glacial Ray (Ps): A cryokineticist can launch a frigid ray that freezes water and damages living creatures.

The ray does 1d12 points of cold damage to any living creature on a successful ranged touch attack (up to 15 feet).

The ray also freezes one pint of water per level of cryokineticist.

Cold Adaptation (Ex): At 2nd level, the cryokineticist becomes resistant to cold, gaining a +4 bonus on all saving throws against cold and cold spells and spell-like abilities.

In addition, the cryokineticist gains resistance to cold 10.

Frozen Fist (Ps): At 2nd level, the cryokineticist can activate this psi-like ability as a move action.

One of the cryokineticist's clenched fists freezes into a solid block of ice that does him no harm, but causes his unarmed attacks to be treated as armed.

A Medium cryokineticist deals 1d6 points of bludgeoning damage and 1d8 points of cold damage instead of any other special damage from the unarmed attack.

The bludgeoning damage changes based on size, but the cold damage remains 1d8.

This ability lasts a number of rounds equal to the cryokineticist's class level.

Bolt of Cold (Ps): Beginning at 3rd level, three times per day, the cryokineticist can launch a bolt of psionically manifested cold up to 60 feet at any target in line of sight as a standard action.

This psi-like ability is treated as a ranged touch attack and deals 3d6 points of cold damage.

Weapon Frost (Ps): At 4th level, as a move action, the cryokineticist can cause a melee weapon he wields to become sheathed in a layer of intense cold, granting the weapon the frost special ability (+1d6 points of cold damage on a successful strike).

If he lets go of the weapon, the frost dissipates immediately, otherwise it lasts for a number of rounds equal to his cryokineticist class level.

Frostfell Creature Insight (Ex): At 5th level, the cryokineticist gains a +2 insight bonus on attack and damage rolls against all creatures with the cold subtype.

Cold Walk (Ps): Starting at 6th level, the cryokineticist can walk on air that is 32° F or colder (cold, severe cold, extreme cold or unearthly cold temperatures).

He moves at his normal speed in all directions, including vertically, but cannot move more than double his speed in a single round.

A coldwalker leaves footprints of coldfire in the air that disperse in 2 rounds, but his tread does not deal damage.

He must pay 1 power point per round traveled in this fashion.

Fear No Cold (Ex): At 7th level, the cryokineticist is perfectly at home in cold temperatures.

He now has a +8 bonus on all saving throws against cold and cold spells and spell-like abilities, and resistance to cold 20.

Greater Weapon Frost (Ps): At 8th level, the cryokineticist's weapon frost ability improves, dealing +2d6 points of cold damage on a successful strike.

In addition, the cryokineticist can instead choose to apply this ability to his frozen fist (see above), which increases the cold damage of frozen fist from 1d8 to 2d8.

Wall of Ice (Ps): At 9th level, the cryokineticist gains the ability to create walls of ice, as the spell wall of ice.

It is a full-round action to use this psi-like ability, and the cryokineticist must expend his psionic focus.

The cryokineticist manifests this as a psi-like ability but otherwise it is just as if a 9th-level sorcerer cast the spell wall of ice.

Bone Chill (Ps): At 10th level, the cryokineticist gains the ability to create a massive burst of supernal cold around him, flash-freezing everything in the area.

Once per day, the cryokineticist can use this psi-like ability to deal 9d6+21 points of cold damage in a 30-foot-radius burst emanating from himself (Fortitude save DC 15 + Cha modifier for half damage).

Any creature failing its Fortitude saving throw against bone chill must succeed on a second Fortitude saving throw at the same DC or die due to the extreme shock of the intense cold.

DISCIPLE OF THRYM

Thrym, Lord of the Frost Giants, rules from his colossal ice citadel in Jotunheim.

His servants include a dedicated clergy that travels the multiverse preaching about Fimbulwinter, an enduring cold that heralds the end of the world.

Aside from predictions of Ragnarok, disciples of Thrym spend a large portion of their time undermining those who serve Thor and Loki, the deities who conspired against Thrym, thwarting his efforts to win the goddess Freya as his bride.

This ancient grudge still stands, and all who venerate Thrym take every opportunity to settle the score against the enemies of the Lord of the Frost Giants.

Given Thrym's moniker, it comes as little surprise that the majority of those who become his disciples are frost giants. A few rare individuals of various races, especially barbarians hailing from frostfell environments, join the ranks of Thrym's clergy, finding strength and security in his temples, which relentlessly prepare for the end of the multiverse.

Only those who stand with Thrym will survive into the frozen world that follows.

As NPCs, disciples of Thrym are almost always found in the enormous fortresses and secret temples dedicated to the deity.

In these locations, forges fueled by coldfire operate day and night crafting arms and armor for the final battle.

A few disciples of Thrym may be found venturing through the planes hunting down new sources of coldfire or carrying out missions against the followers of Thor and Loki.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a disciple of Thrym, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Feat: Weapon Focus (greataxe).

Special: Cold Endurance feat or cold subtype.

CLASS SKILLS

The disciple of Thrym's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (none), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the disciple of Thrym prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Disciples of Thrym are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Spells per Day: A disciple of Thrym can cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the disciple must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

The disciple of Thrym's spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the disciple's Wisdom modifier.

A disciple of Thrym otherwise casts spells as a cleric does, although he cannot swap out prepared spells to spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells.

The disciple's spell list appears at the end of this prestige class description; when he prepares spells, he may select from any of the spells on this list.

Detect Fire (Sp): At 1st level, the disciple of Thrym can detect fire at will as a cleric of a level equal to his class level.

Protection of Winter (Su): At 1st level, the disciple of Thrym gains greater protection based on the local temperature.

In cold areas (temperature at or below 40° F), he gains +1 sacred bonus on all saving throws and a +1 bonus to Armor Class.

In areas of extreme cold (below -20° F), the sacred bonus is increased to +2 on all saves and AC.

Resistance to Fire (Ex): At 2nd level, the disciple of Thrym gains resistance to fire 5.

At 6th level, this increases to resistance to fire 10.

Powerful Grip (Ex): At 3rd level, the disciple of Thrym gains a damage bonus equal to half his Strength bonus when he attacks with a greataxe.

This means he adds 2 times his Strength bonus on his damage rolls instead of 1-1/2 times his Strength bonus when wielding the weapon in two hands.

Frost Greataxe (Sp): At 4th level, as a move action, the disciple of Thrym can cause a greataxe he wields to become sheathed in a layer of intense cold, granting the axe the frost special ability (+1d6 points of cold damage on a successful strike).

If he lets go of the axe, the frost dissipates immediately; other wise it lasts for a number of rounds equal to his class level.

Agonizing Strike (Su): At 5th level, the disciple of Thrym gains the ability to focus all the anger and hatred in his frozen heart into a single blow once per day.

He makes a normal melee attack; if he hits, he deals +1d6 points of cold damage for every two class levels (+2d6 at 5th, +3d6 at 6th, +4d6 at 8th, and +5d6 at 10th level).

If the attack misses, the agonizing strike is still used up for the day.

At 9th level, the disciple can perform this strike twice per day.

Dispel Fire (Sp): At 7th level, the disciple of Thrym can dispel fire as a cleric of the same level a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma modifier.

Icy Greataxe (Sp): At 8th level, as a move action, the disciple of Thrym can cause a greataxe he wields to become sheathed in a layer of intense cold, granting the axe the icy burst special ability (+1d6 points of cold damage on a successful strike, plus an extra 2d10 points of cold damage on a successful critical).

If he lets go of the axe, the frost dissipates immediately, otherwise it lasts for a number of rounds equal to his class level.

Immunity to Fire (Ex): At 10th level, the disciple of Thrym gains immunity to fire, becoming prepared for the burning flames of Surtur that will destroy the multiverse.

DISCIPLE OF THRYM SPELL LIST

Disciples of Thrym choose their spells from the following list:

1st Level: cause fear, corrupt weapon, *detect fire, divine favor, doom, *ease of breath, *lesser frostburn, magic weapon, obscuring mist, protection from good/law, *lesser shivering touch.

2nd Level: *blood snow, bull's strength, chill metal, *conjure ice object, eagle's splendor, fog cloud, *frost weapon, *zone of glacial cold.

3rd Level: *binding snow, *ice shape, *lesser aura of cold, *meld into ice, *shivering touch, sleet storm.

4th Level: *boreal wind, *glacial globe of invulnerability, *frostburn, *hibernal healing, *summon giants.

5th Level: *dispel fire, dispel good/law, *entomb, *frostbite, ice storm, stoneskin, wall of ice.

* New spell described in Chapter 5.

FROST MAGE

Frost mages usually hail from lands of cold, snow, and ice: tundra, glaciers, even outer planes perpetually shrouded in winter.

Others become obsessed with the power of glacial cold and focus all their energy into discovering the mysteries of the frostfell and its magic.

All frost mages, however, eventually become adapted to cold environments as their skin slowly turns to frost.

They learn to take advantage of the natural or magically enhanced frostfell environment, harnessing the existing cold to further empower their own spells.

As members of this prestige class must have the ability to cast arcane spells, frost mages come from a narrow group, usually bards, sorcerers, and wizards.

Some frost mage sorcerers believe silver dragon blood runs in their veins, while others feel they possess an innate talent for works of cold and ice magic.

Most wizards who become frost mages see the frostfell as a mysterious and undiscovered frontier of arcane power, one from which they can draw strong magic for their own purposes.

As NPCs, frost mages live and study in complexes of ice caverns, towers constructed in frozen reaches of the outer planes, or within dungeons they have magically altered into frostfell environments.

Sometimes they serve more powerful evil characters singly or in a group, such as frost giants, cryohydras, or deities of cold or ice.

More often, the evil frost mage commands his own forces of ice and cold, growing a frostfell army as he prepares to bring about a new ice age and become overlord of a frozen world.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a frost mage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Feats: Frozen Magic.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

Special: The character must spend 24 hours unprotected in a blizzard.

CLASS SKILLS

The frost mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (alchemy) (Int),

Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the frost mage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Frost mages gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At every level gained in the frost mage class, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation bonus feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character has more than one spellcasting class before becoming a frost mage, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day and spells known.

Natural Armor Increase (Ex): At 1st, 4th, 7th, and 10th level, a frost mage's body becomes more like the ice he venerates.

His skin turns whiter and colder to the touch as the permanent layer of frost grows deeper.

This provides an increase to the character's existing natural armor, as indicated on Table 3-5 (the numbers represent the total increase gained to that point) and he takes no damage from cold environments.

In warm temperatures, the frost continually evaporates and replenishes itself, enshrouding the frost mage in a wispy vapor.

Resistance to Cold (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, the frost mage's icy skin grants him resistance to cold 10.

Gain Knowledge (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the frost mage gains knowledge of the spell conjure ice beast I, if he does not already have it.

Former wizards get to add this spell to their spellbooks for free, and former sorcerers and bards get to add this spell to their spells known, even if this takes them over their normal limit.

For each two levels gained in the prestige class, he gains knowledge of the next higher level in the conjure ice beast spell progression (conjure ice beast II at 5th level, conjure ice beast III at 7th level, and conjure ice beast IV at 9th level).

At 7th level, in addition to gaining conjure ice beast III, the frost mage gains animate snow as a spell known.

At 9th level, in addition to gaining conjure ice beast IV, the frost mage gains frostfell as a spell known.

This class feature does not change the level of the spell.

A frost mage still must have a spell slot of the appropriate level to prepare or cast a spell acquired through the gain knowledge ability.

Piercing Cold: At 4th level, the frost mage gains Piercing Cold as a bonus metamagic feat.

In addition to the normal benefits of the feat, the frost mage bypasses all resistances and immunities to cold granted by spells and spell-like effects of magic items (for example, a ring of minor energy resistance [cold]).

One with Cold (Ex): At 10th level, the frost mage's body has become perfectly adapted to cold energy.

He gains the cold subtype, granting him immunity to cold.

His oneness with cold, however, makes him more susceptible to flame.

Just like any other creature with the cold subtype, he gains vulnerability to fire, which means he takes half again as much (+50%) damage as normal from fire, regardless of whether or not a saving throw is allowed, or if the save is a success or a failure.

FROSTRAGER

Many barbarian tribes have members whose ferocity and rage impress and terrify even their fellow barbarians, and the tribes of the frostfell are no different.

The frostragers are powerful and dangerous warriors believed by some to be gifted from (and others cursed by) the frost giant deity Thrym with an unstable but powerful supernatural battle rage.

This terrible fury not only causes the frostrager to increase in size when he enters his battle rage, but infuses his fists and weapons with cold shards of ice.

Those tribes that view a frostrager's prowess as a gift point to the fact that their skills in battle can be matched by few, while those that view these abilities as a curse point to the fact that while in a rage, frostragers tend to revel in destruction and slaughter a little too much to make them trustworthy.

In truth, frostragers retain control of their actions while in a frostrage...the simple fact is that most frostragers enjoy causing mayhem and destruction.

All frostragers are barbarians to some degree, although many are multiclass barbarian/druids.

Stories of such characters who activate their frostrage and wild shape abilities in succession abound in the frostfell; a frostraging character in the shape of a dire bear is a terrible opponent indeed.

Other barbarians pick up some levels of fighter or ranger to further focus their combat prowess before becoming frostragers, and a rare few barbarian/sorcerer frostragers exist in some tribes that embrace arcane magic, but other combinations are virtually unknown.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a frostrager, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feats: Frozen Berserker, Improved Unarmed Strike, Power Attack.

Special: Rage as a class ability.

Special: The character must have been reduced to fewer than 0 hit points by cold damage (either from magical cold attacks or by taking enough damage from exposure to extreme cold environments).

Whether or not this trauma is what allows the frostrage to take root in the character's soul, or if the trauma merely unhinges the character's mind enough that he decides to become a frostrager, is unknown.

CLASS SKILLS

The frostrager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the frostrager prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Frostragers gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shields.

Frostrage (Su): While raging, the character grows larger and more massive, and his freezing sweat forms icicles as it streams out of his pores, coating his body in a glittering crust of ice.

The frostrager's actual size category does not change (nor does his space/reach), but he does gain a +4 natural armor bonus to Armor Class from the sheets of ice that form over his body.

In addition, a frostrager's unarmed attacks deal 1d6 points of damage plus 1d4 points of cold damage on a successful hit.

If the frostrager is Small, his unarmed attack deals 1d4 points of damage, and if the frostrager is Large, his unarmed attack deals 1d8 points of damage.

Freezing Blood (Su): At 1st level, a frostrager's blood becomes freezing cold.

His wounds instantly freeze over and stop bleeding; he is immune to attacks that cause wounding effects.

If reduced to negative hit points, he automatically stabilizes.

He still takes 1 point of damage if he takes any actions while at 0 or negative hit points, however.

One-Two Punch (Ex): At 2nd level, while making an unarmed attack, the frostrager may make one extra attack in a round at his highest base attack bonus, but each attack made in that round (the extra one and the normal ones) take a -2 penalty.

Absorb Cold (Su): At 3rd level, while raging, the frostrager not only gains immunity to cold, but it heals him.

For every 2 points of cold damage that would have otherwise have been dealt by an attack, the frostrager heals 1 point of damage.

Improved Frostrage (Su): At 4th level while raging, the frostrager's natural armor bonus increases to +6.

His unarmed attacks deal 1d8 points of damage plus 1d6 points of cold damage on a successful hit.

If the frostrager is Small, his unarmed attack deals 1d6 points of damage, and if the frostrager is Large, his unarmed attack deals 2d6 points of damage.

Rend (Ex): At 5th level, a frostrager gains the ability to rend a target.

In any round that the frostrager hits the same foe with two or more unarmed attacks, he immediately deals an additional 2d8 points of damage (plus 1-1/2 times his Strength bonus), plus an additional 1d6 points of cold damage.

If he is Small, his rend deals 2d6 points of damage; if he is Large, his rend deals 3d8 points of damage.

KNIGHT OF THE IRON GLACIER

Many mercenary companies operate in the frostfell regions of the world, but most of them are poorly organized groups of thugs and exiled soldiers who bring no sense of duty or honor to their post.

A few groups have risen above this level, though, and of those none have achieved the same magnitude of respect and ire as the Knights of the Iron Glacier.

This order was founded nearly two hundred years ago by an exiled general named Aengrist and his loyal band of knights and followers.

Forced to flee their homeland after a particularly vicious coup, these knights spent several years wandering from outpost to outpost in the frostfell.

They helped protect settlers against attacks by barbarians and orcs, but this activity was as much a justification for their continued purpose as anything else.

As they traveled, word of their deeds grew.

The knights gratefully accepted monetary rewards for their work but never demanded them.

It was at this time that a large band of orc barbarians, hungry for the knights' defeat, ambushed the group atop a vast glacier that carried inside it swaths of iron ore.

The ambush was expertly laid, and General Aengrist died in the first moments of the battle.

The death of their leader only enraged the knights, and they fought back with a fury that surpassed the rage of the orc barbarians and defeated them to the last.

It was only in the aftermath that despair began to overtake the knights, until one charismatic knight by the name of Sarah Korlaskin rallied her fellow troops.

She called upon them to honor the death of their general and this final great battle by putting an end to their wandering.

She called upon them to build a great fortress at the edge of the iron-filled glacier, a fortress that would serve as both a memorial to their losses and as a bastion for fellow exiles and wandering warriors.

On that battlefield, the order of the Knights of the Iron Glacier was born.

Since that day, Knights of the Iron Glacier continued to honor the memory of General Aengrist in their deeds and actions.

In time, this hero-worship had an amazing result; some few devout knights began to receive spells in response to their prayers to Aengrist.

Today, Aengrist represents a relatively young deity whose influence in the frostfell is growing with surprising speed.

The Knights of the Iron Glacier continue to operate in the frostfell, and have established many smaller fortresses throughout the frostfell.

They have no illusions that they can bring order to the frostfell, but they do realize that they can provide pockets of shelter and law for those forced for whatever reason to flee into the harsh frozen lands.

They also regularly patrol known trade routes between outposts and other civilized fortresses, riding atop war-trained megaloceroses and constantly seeking wrongs to right and people to aid.

In honor of Aengrist's favored weapon, all Knights of the Iron Glacier train extensively with the bastard sword, although they are not expected to always use the weapon in combat.

They must also be excellent riders, often a difficult task in frostfell environments.

Most Knights of the Iron Glacier have some training as fighters, since the requirements for entry into the order are difficult for those who don't have much martial skill.

Rangers and clerics of martial deities can also qualify, but the paladins of the Iron Glacier remain the most iconic members of the group.

Paladins of the Iron Glacier remain the most respected members of the order, and are often granted privileges and honors reserved only for the highest-ranking members.

A paladin can freely take levels in the Knight of the Iron Glacier prestige class and still take paladin levels at a later time if she wishes.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Knight of the Iron Glacier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Skills: Handle Animal 5 ranks, Ride 9 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feats: Animal Affinity, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (bastard sword), Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack.

Special: Before a character is accepted into the Order of the Iron Glacier, she must first prove to the order that her intentions are noble and true.

Typically, this means the character must undertake some form of task or quest in a region of the frostfell, such as defending a remote village from an attack by orcs or slaying a white dragon that has been menacing a region.

Usually, high-ranking knights will send aspiring knights on a particular quest, but sometimes they waive this requirement for someone they have seen upholding Iron Glacier ideals even though she has not herself approached the order for membership.

CLASS SKILLS

The Knight of the Iron Glacier class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Wis), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.
Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Knight of the Iron Glacier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knights of the Iron Glacier gain no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Warmount: Upon becoming a Knight of the Iron Glacier, the character is awarded his own specially bred and trained mount, a war megaloceros.

The character is expected to care for, feed, and protect his warmount; when a mission does not require the aid of the warmount, it can be stabled at no cost at any Iron Glacier stronghold.

War Megaloceros: Large animal; HD 7d8+28; hp 59; Init +1; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 10, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +5; Grp +15; Atk or Full Atk +10 melee (1d8+9, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA improved grab, stampede, toss; SQ combative mount, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +10, Ref +8, Will +6; Str 23, Dex 12, Con 19, Int 2, Wis 13, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Listen +9, Spot +9; Alertness, Lightning Reflexes, Run.

Combative Mount (Ex): A rider on a war megaloceros gains a +2 circumstance bonus on all Ride checks.

A war megaloceros is trained for war.

Skills: A war megaloceros gains a +1 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

If the knight has enough paladin levels that he has a paladin's special mount, the character has the option of dismissing his current special mount and replacing it with a war megaloceros special mount.

In this case, the warmount functions identically to the paladin's special mount except for the improved base statistics given above.

The character's paladin levels and Knight of the Iron Glacier levels stack for purposes of determining what sort of bonus Hit Dice, natural armor adjustments, Strength adjustments, base Intelligence, and special abilities the special mount gains.

Frostfell Awareness (Ex): A Knight of the Iron Glacier trains extensively on how to notice signs of danger in the frostfell, and is quite adept at spotting ambushes and similar danger.

Starting at 2nd level, as long as he is in the frostfell, he gains a +2 competence bonus on all Initiative, Listen, and Spot checks.

This bonus increases to +4 at 5th level and to +6 at 8th level.

Rally the Troops (Su): At 4th level, the Knight of the Iron Glacier's ability to inspire allies has become so potent that his words take on a supernatural divine power.

Once per day, the knight may speak to a number of listeners equal to his class level plus his Charisma modifier. He must speak for at least one minute, after which all listeners are filled with hope and bravery.

For the next hour, these creatures gain a +2 morale bonus on attack rolls and Will saving throws, and have immunity to fear (magic or otherwise).

Oath of Wrath (Su): Beginning at 7th level, as a free action, the Knight of the Iron Glacier may select a single opponent within 60 feet and swear an oath to defeat him.

For the duration of the encounter, the knight gains a +2 morale bonus on melee attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saving throws, and skill checks made against the challenged target.

This effect ends immediately if the Knight of the Iron Glacier makes an attack or casts a spell targeted at any hostile creature other than the challenged target.

Attacks of opportunity and spells cast on allies do not end the effect, nor do area spells such as fireball that catch other creatures in the area (as long as the challenged target is included in the area).

The Knight of the Iron Glacier can use oath of wrath once per day.

Overwhelming Odds (Ex): A 10th-level Knight of the Iron Glacier has expelled from his mind and soul the very notion of a hopeless battle; no matter how slight, there is always a chance for victory.

Whenever the Knight of the Iron Glacier faces an enemy in combat that has 3 or more Hit Dice or levels than he does, the knight's faith that he shall prevail grants him damage reduction 3/- and a +2 insight bonus to his Armor Class and all saving throws.

These benefits apply only against attacks made against the knight from a creature whose levels or Hit Dice exceed the knight's by 3 or more; if a creature with fewer Hit Dice or levels attacks the knight, he does not receive these benefits.

PRIMEVAL

The primeval is a warrior who has tapped into his racial memories to find and forge a bond with an ancient creature.

He draws incredible power and strength from this bond, and finds that he can change his form into this creature with increasing skill.

Many neanderthal tribes count primevals among their strongest warriors.

Primevals completely eschew spells and special training, instead embracing the inherent strength and quickness of their animal nature.

They often find themselves in conflict with civilization when it encroaches into their territory; a fair number of rumors about lycanthrope attacks on frontier towns are probably based on the actions of a primeval.

Just as often, though, a primeval manages to control or hide his alternate form and remain a helpful and valued member of a society.

In any case, he retains full capacity of his actions and mental state in his alternate form.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a primeval, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +8.

Skills: Handle Animal 5 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Self-Sufficient, Toughness.

CLASS SKILLS

The primeval class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the primeval prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Primevals gain no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

(They are proficient with their natural weapons while in primeval form, though).

Primeval Form (Su): The primary ability of the primeval is the supernatural ability to assume an alternate form.

This functions similarly to the druid's wild shape ability, except the alternate form chosen must be selected when the character takes his first level of primeval and cannot be changed after that.

Each time the character changes form with this ability, he assumes the same form.

At 1st level, he may change shape into his primeval form once per day.

He can use this ability one additional time each day at 4th level, 7th level, and again at 10th level.

This ability functions like the polymorph spell, except as noted here.

It lasts for 1 minute per primeval level, or until he changes back.

Changing form (into either form) is a standard action and doesn't provoke attacks of opportunity.

The primeval does not assume the animal's physical ability scores.

Instead, he adds the animal's ability score –10 (for even scores) or –11 (for odd scores) to his own ability scores.

For example, a primeval with a Strength score of 16 who assumes the form of a dire lion (Strength 25) adds +14 to his normal Strength of 16 to determine his Strength score in his primeval form.

Remember, items that enhance the character's ability scores may be rendered inoperative by his change in form. The primeval loses his ability to speak while in primeval form because he is limited to the sounds that the form can make naturally.

The primeval form chosen must be a prehistoric animal of some sort (dinosaur, dire animal, or other creature approved by the DM).

The primeval form chosen must have no more than 8 HD and cannot be more than one size category larger than the primeval (so a Small character is limited to Medium animals or smaller, and a Medium character is limited to Large or smaller animals).

The primeval form can be from any terrain familiar to the character.

Appropriate primeval forms for a frostfell environment from the Monster Manual and this book include the dire lion, dire wolf, dire wolverine, and megaloceros.

If the primeval has the wild shape ability from other class levels, he may use wild shape to assume his primeval form. He cannot use his primeval form ability to wild shape, however.

Animal Empathy (Ex): In any form, the primeval can communicate with animals of his chosen primeval form (or related types).

For example, a primeval whose primeval form is a dire wolf may communicate with wolves and dire wolves.

He gains a +4 bonus on Charisma-based checks against animals of his chosen primeval form and related animals.

Regression (Su): As a primeval gains levels, he begins to physically regress into a more primal, feral version of himself.

At 2nd level, the primeval reduces his Intelligence and Charisma scores by 1 point (to a minimum of 3) and gains 1 point of Strength, Dexterity, Constitution, and Wisdom.

At 5th level, he repeats his regression, losing an additional point of Intelligence and Charisma, and gaining an additional point to the rest of his ability scores.

At 8th level, the primeval regresses again, losing a third point of Intelligence and Charisma but gaining a third point to the rest of his ability scores.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): In any form, the primeval gains low-light vision at 2nd level.

He can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

He retains the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

If the primeval already has racial low-light vision, he can instead see four times as far as a human.

Feral Power (Ex): As the primeval gains levels, his primeval form grows stronger and tougher, as shown below:

Characteristic	Primeval Class Level
	3rd	6th	9th
Strength	+2	+4	+6
Dexterity	+2	+2	+2
Constitution	+2	+4	+4
Natural armor	+2	+4	+8

These bonuses are not cumulative.

For example, a 6th-level primeval whose primeval form is a dire lion has Str 29, Dex 17, Con 21, and a natural armor bonus of +8, instead of Str 25, Dex 15, Con 17, and natural armor +4.

Scent (Ex): At 5th level, the primeval form gains the scent special quality in any form.

Fast Movement (Ex): As he grows closer to his animal spirit, the primeval becomes quicker in his humanoid form. At 8th level, his base land speed improves by 10 feet.

This benefit does not apply if the primeval is wearing heavy armor or carrying a heavy load.

Primeval Shapechanger (Su): The primeval unites with his animal spirit at 10th level.

His type changes to magical beast (shapechanger), which means that he is no longer subject to spells that affect humanoids.

In addition, he gains damage reduction 10/magic in any form.

His natural attacks (but not weapon attacks) overcome damage reduction as if they were magic weapons.

RIMEFIRE WITCH

Untold ages ago, a powerful uldra deity of the frostfell by the name of Hleid was defeated by her nemeses Iborighu. But Iborighu failed to destroy her existence completely, and the last fragments of her being scattered into the polar seas in a desperate attempt to escape destruction.

These spheres of magical cold energy were the first rimefire eidolons, and as they struck the seas they manifested great icebergs to further hide and protect themselves from Iborighu and his minions.

They waited, patient but potent, for the time to come when Hleid could be reborn and vengeance against Iborighu could be realized.

The rimefire eidolons strive to achieve this goal by sending out hidden signals to touch the last few devoted worshipers of Hleid in hope of recruiting their aid.

A character who follows this mysterious call to its source, the core of a rimefire iceberg, becomes infused with great power by the rimefire eidolon.

This action forms a powerful bond between the character and the eidolon; once this bond has been created, the character can draw magical power and strength from the iceberg surrounding the eidolon.

This grants her several magical abilities, including the ability to channel rimefire as a ranged attack.

At the same time, she slowly begins to take on aspects of the rimefire eidolon itself, transforming over time into a devoted guardian of the eidolon to which she has become bonded.

These fey guardians represent the final apotheosis of the rimefire witch.

The only people who have been able to follow the rimefire call and forge a bond with the eidolon within are worshipers of Hleid, and among them, females are the most likely to hear the call of the rimefire, since the priesthood of Hleid is typically made up of women. Males who answer this call are not unknown, but are much less common; they are known as rimefire warlocks. Originally, uldras were the only worshipers of Hleid, but since her near destruction she has opened her arms to any who would revere her.

Rimefire witches are not bound to remain physically on the iceberg home of their bonded eidolon; in fact, many rimefire witches rarely visit their eidolon.

Instead, they spend much of their time crusading against the cult of Iborighu or researching methods to restore Hleid to her proper glory.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a rimefire witch, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 6 ranks, Knowledge (history) 6 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 9 ranks, Spellcraft 6 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Mark of Hleid.

Spells: Able to cast 1st-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Hleid.

Special: Once a character meets all the requirements listed above, she soon has a vivid dream in which she receives a call from a rimefire eidolon.

Once she wakes from the dream, she knows the most direct route to the rimefire eidolon's iceberg, as if she had cast discern location to find it.

This call does not force the character to answer, but until she travels to the iceberg and accepts the bond of the rimefire eidolon that dwells within, she cannot take any levels of rimefire witch.

The journey to the iceberg should be played out as a minor quest, perhaps with some encounters with Iborighu cultists bent on preventing the rise of a new rimefire witch.

CLASS SKILLS

The rimefire witch's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the rimefire witch prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Rimefire witches gain proficiency with the trident.

The trident is the favored weapon of Hleid, and many rimefire witches choose to wield tridents as well.

They gain no other proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new rimefire witch level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spell-casting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a rimefire witch, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day and spells known.

Rimefire Bond (Su): A rimefire witch becomes bonded on a deeply spiritual level with the rimefire eidolon that selected her as its guardian.

Both the witch and the eidolon are constantly aware of the other's location and condition, as if both were under the effects of a status spell.

This is a permanent effect that cannot be dispelled or destroyed.

The bond also shores up the mind and will to live of the witch and her eidolon; both gain a +2 morale bonus on all saving throws against mind-affecting and death effects while the other is alive.

A rimefire bond is powerful enough that it even extends across planes.

If a rimefire witch or her eidolon is killed, this bond is broken.

A surviving rimefire witch loses all her supernatural and spell-like abilities granted by this class (but not her spellcasting ability) until she restores the slain eidolon to life and returns it to its iceberg.

A surviving eidolon does not lose any of its abilities, and typically waits for a year before sending out a call for a new guardian.

If the slain member of the bond is brought back to life within a year of death, the rimefire bond instantly reforms itself despite any physical distance between the two.

If more than a year has passed, the rimefire witch does not regain her powers but within a week she is contacted in her dreams by a new rimefire eidolon; once she travels to its iceberg and accepts its bond of rimefire she immediately regains her lost powers.

Detect Minion of Iborighu (Sp): A rimefire witch possesses the spell-like ability to detect minions of Iborighu at will. This spell-like ability functions like detect evil, except that it detects the presence or absence of devotion to Iborighu in a living creature's aura and soul.

Undetectable alignment can block this ability, as can certain magic items that have similar effects, such as the mantle of hidden faith.

Rimefire Bolt (Su): At 3rd level, a rimefire witch's bond with her eidolon becomes powerful enough that she can summon and direct a bolt of rimefire, as long as she is currently in the boundaries of a frostfell.

Summoning and directing a rimefire bolt is a standard action.

Rimefire bolts have a range of 30 feet and attack as ranged touch attacks, dealing damage equal to 1d6 + the witch's Charisma modifier.

Half this damage is cold damage and half is fire damage; for more information on rimefire, see page 17.

At 6th level, a rimefire witch deals cold damage equal to 2d6 + her Charisma modifier with her rimefire bolt.

At 9th level, a rimefire witch deals cold damage equal to 3d6 + her Charisma modifier with her rimefire bolt.

Ice Skate (Sp): At 4th level, a rimefire witch gains the ability to use ice skate as a spell-like ability.

She can use this ability a number of times each day equal to her Charisma modifier (minimum of once per day), at a caster level equal to her rimefire witch level.

Word of Recall (Sp): At 7th level, a rimefire witch gains the ability to use word of recall as a spell-like ability.

She can use this ability once per day, and it always recalls her to the chamber of her bonded rimefire eidolon.

Iceberg (Sp): At 10th level, a rimefire witch gains the ability to use iceberg as a spell-like ability.

She can use this ability once per day, at a caster level equal to her rimefire witch level.

Rimefire Apotheosis (Su): Upon achieving 10th level, a rimefire witch undergoes a dramatic transformation as the bond with her eidolon physically changes her into a fey creature.

Her type immediately changes to fey, and she can no longer be affected by effects that target her old type; she does become susceptible to attacks and effects that harm or aid fey.

She gains low-light vision, damage reduction 5/cold iron, and a +2 racial bonus to her Charisma score as her skin and hair become light blue or white in color.

Once she undergoes rimefire apotheosis, the death of her bonded eidolon does not cause the loss of her supernatural or spellcasting abilities.

STORMSINGER

The stormsingers have learned secret methods of harnessing the magic powers of music to influence and control the weather.

These songs seem to have greater effects and potency in the frostfell than in more temperate or tropical regions, so most stormsingers prefer to dwell in the frostfell so they can practice their special form of magic.

Ships that ply the seas of the frostfell often hire on a stormsinger partially to serve as entertainment for long sea voyages, but mostly so the stormsinger can protect the ship from powerful storms.

The music used by stormsingers to control the weather derives from a specific form of bardic music; as a result, all stormsingers have at least a little bit of training as bards.

Many of them are actually multiclass bard/druids, although bard/clerics and bard/sorcerers make excellent stormsingers as well.

They depend upon their sharp wits and ability to control weather for protection, so it is fairly unusual to encounter a stormsinger with any levels of fighter or similar classes.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stormsinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (geography) 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Perform (sing) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Magical Aptitude, Storm Magic.

Special: The stormsinger must have the bardic music class ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The stormsinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the stormsinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stormsingers gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each stormsinger level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a stormsinger, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bardic Music: A stormsinger's class level stacks with any levels of bard she has for purposes of determining the number of times per day she may use bardic music.

Many of the stormsinger's high-level abilities require her to use bardic music as well.

When a stormsinger uses her bardic music ability to create a stormsong effect (see below), it counts as one (or more) uses of her bardic music for the day.

Stormsong: The stormsinger can use her bardic music ability to create various storm-related effects in addition to the normal uses of bardic music.

Additionally, the stormsinger can detect the approach of a natural storm 24 hours in advance of it reaching the character's current location.

Gust of Wind (Sp): A stormsinger of 1st level or higher with 9 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to generate a gust of wind, as the spell of the same name. Her caster level is equal to her ranks in Perform (sing), with a maximum caster level of 20th.

Thunderstrike (Su): At 3rd level, a stormsinger with 11 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to unleash a deadly thunderbolt.

The bolt can be targeted at any one creature within 60 feet, and the stormsinger must make a successful ranged touch attack to hit the target.

If she hits, the stormsinger then makes a Perform (sing) check; the result indicates how much electricity damage the thunderbolt deals.

A Reflex save (DC 10 + stormsinger's class level + Cha modifier) halves the damage.

If the creature fails its Reflex save, it must make a Fortitude save (same DC) or be deafened for a number of rounds equal to the damage dealt.

Control Winds (Sp): At 5th level, a stormsinger with 13 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to cast control winds.

This functions like the spell of the same name, except that the duration of the effect is concentration plus 3 rounds, and the save DC is 10 + the stormsinger's class level + Charisma modifier.

The stormsinger's caster level is equal to her ranks in Perform (sing), with a maximum caster level of 20th.

Winter's Ballad (Su): At 7th level, a stormsinger with 15 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to cast control weather.

This functions like the spell of the same name, except that the duration of the effect is concentration plus 1d6 hours.

The stormsinger's caster level is equal to her ranks in Perform (sing), with a maximum caster level of 20th.

Great Thunderstrike (Su): At 9th level, a stormsinger with 17 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to unleash a terrible stroke of lightning, followed by a deafening clap of thunder.

The great thunderstrike affects a line 60 feet long from the stormsinger.

The stormsinger makes a Perform (sing) check; the result indicates how much electricity damage the great thunderstrike deals.

A Reflex save (DC 10 + stormsinger's class level + Cha modifier) halves the damage.

If a creature fails its Reflex save, it must make a Fortitude save (same DC) or take an additional 2d6 points of sonic damage and be permanently deafened.

The great thunderstrike is very strenuous, and uses up two of the stormsinger's bardic music uses for the day.

Storm of Vengeance (Sp): At 10th level, a stormsinger with 18 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use bardic music to cause a storm of vengeance, as the spell of the same name (DC 10 + stormsinger's class level + Cha modifier).

Her caster level is equal to her ranks in Perform (sing), with a maximum caster level of 25th.

This potent ability is quite exhausting to use; each time it is activated, the stormsinger uses four of her bardic music uses for the day.

Stormpower (Ex): At 2nd level, a stormsinger gains a +2 bonus on Perform (sing) checks made to use her stormsong powers and adds a +2 bonus to her caster level with stormsong powers when the temperature is cold or colder (40° F or lower) or when she is in a storm.

For information on storms, see Table 3–24: Wind Effects, page 95 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Resistance to Electricity (Ex): At 4th level, a stormsinger gains resistance to electricity 5.

This increases to resistance to electricity 10 at 6th level, and resistance to electricity 15 at 8th level.

WINTERHAUNT OF IBORIGHU

The cult of Iborighu is a menace not only in the frostfell, but in any region they target with their cold desires. As minions of the Frozen King, the winterhaunts of Iborighu lust for nothing less than eternal winter; they aim to bring down upon the world an eternal ice age, a never-ending winter ruled and maintained by their dread deity. While such grand designs might make one dismiss the cult of Iborighu as a collection of harmless lunatics, the terrible truth is that they have made significant strides in the frostfell areas of the world...many of which were actually created by the cult.

Winterhaunts are especially feared in the frostfell for their ability to wield cold magic so powerful in nature that it can even harm creatures normally immune to cold.

Most winterhaunts were either clerics of Iborighu or druids, although a fair number also take several levels of barbarian or ranger to enhance their combat prowess. The most sought-after winterhaunts, though, are wizardly winterhaunts, for the magic they wield is especially potent. Iborighu is traditionally a deity of the uldra, although he has always accepted worshippers of all races.

Evil uldras remain his most common worshipers, but a fair number of humans, neanderthals, and frost giants worship the Frozen King as well.

All prospective winterhaunts must first prove their skill to the Frozen King's cult by successfully crafting an iceheart, a magic item capable of maintaining supernatural cold in an area and bestowing resistance to cold upon its owner.

Supplicants gain the ability to craft this item, even if they are not uldras.

Winterhaunts generally build fortified temples into the sides of glaciers, icebergs, and permanently frozen lakes, constructing huge ice buildings and dungeons in which to dwell.

From these icy temple-fortresses they launch attacks on the frostfell, seeking suitable sacrifices for Iborighu.

In particular, they seek out rimefire witches in an eternal holy war to finish the job that their deity began so long ago—the final eradication of the cult of Hleid from the ice.

Lone winterhaunts are often encountered far from the naturally occurring frostfell regions, in temperate and even tropical regions where they use icehearts to seed magically sustained miniature frostfell areas in their ongoing project to bring down perpetual winter to the world.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a winterhaunt of Iborighu, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic neutral, chaotic evil, or neutral evil.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feats: Chosen of Iborighu, Craft Wondrous Item, Piercing Cold.

Spells: Able to cast 1st-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Iborighu.

Special: The character must successfully create an iceheart.

This can be either a minor iceheart or a major iceheart; most prospective cultists opt to create a minor iceheart, naturally. The iceheart, once created, serves as the winterhaunt's badge of office in the cult; if it is lost or destroyed, he must replace it with a new one within a week.

Failure to do so results in the loss of all spellcasting and supernatural abilities granted by this prestige class.

Regaining these abilities is possible only if the winterhaunt gains a new iceheart and then receives an atonement spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The winterhaunt of Iborighu's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the winterhaunt of Iborighu prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Winterhaunts of Iborighu gain proficiency with all simple weapons, as well as proficiency with the scythe (the favored weapon of Iborighu).

Winterhaunts are proficient with light armor, but not shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new winterhaunt level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a winterhaunt, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day and spells known.

Cloak of Winter's Chill (Su): As a free action, a winterhaunt can shroud himself in a sphere of cold a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

This cloak of winter's chill lasts for a number of rounds equal to the winterhaunt's class level + his Charisma modifier.

While cloaked in winter's chill, the winterhaunt gleams with a frosty radiance that is both alluring and terrifying. He gains a +2 profane bonus on Will saving throws and all Charisma-based checks, including all Charisma-based skills and rebuke or command undead checks.

Resistance to Cold (Ex): A winterhaunt gains resistance to cold 5 at 2nd level.

This increases to resistance to cold 10 at 5th level.

This resistance to cold granted to this ability stacks with a character's natural cold resistance, if any.

Frozen Skin (Su): At 3rd level, the winterhaunt's skin becomes as hard (and cold) as frozen flesh, while retaining its flexibility.

His skin appears to be coated with a fine layer of frost, and flecks of snow seem to float from his flesh at times.

He gains a +2 natural armor bonus to his Armor Class, which increases to +4 while he is cloaked in his winter's chill ability.

Coldstrike (Su): Starting at 4th level, every time a winterhaunt deals cold damage with a spell, spell-like ability, or supernatural ability (including an uldra's icy touch or a white dragon's breath weapon), he deals an additional 1d6 points of cold damage.

Magic weapons that deal cold damage (such as frost weapons) do not trigger this additional cold damage, since the source of the cold damage is the weapon itself, not the winterhaunt.

The winterhaunt's coldstrike damage increases to +2d6 points of cold damage at 8th level.

When his cloak of winter's chill is active, he adds an additional 1d6 points of damage with his coldstrike ability (to a total of +2d6 at 4th level and +3d6 at 8th level).

Constant Piercing Cold (Su): At 6th level, all spells with the cold descriptor cast by the winterhaunt are automatically enhanced by the Piercing Cold feat, with no change to the spell's actual level.

Cold Subtype (Ex): At 7th level, the winterhaunt gains the cold subtype.

He gains immunity to cold, but also has a vulnerability to fire, which means he takes half again as much (+50%) damage as normal from fire, regardless of whether or not a saving throw is allowed, or if the save is a success or a failure.

Summon the Entombed (Sp): At 9th level, a winterhaunt gains the spell-like ability to summon one of the entombed to do his bidding.

Treat this as a summon monster IX spell, except that the winterhaunt can only summon entombed with it. The caster level of this ability is equal to the winterhaunt's class level plus his Charisma modifier. The winterhaunt may use this spell-like ability once per day.

For more information on entombed, see page 128.

Wintry Apotheosis (Su): At 10th level, the winterhaunt undergoes a powerful and unholy transformation as his flesh and bones become consumed by the frozen wrath of Iborighu, only to be replaced by snowy flesh and icy bones. The winterhaunt has become a powerful supernatural servant of Iborighu.

Once this apotheosis takes place, the winterhaunt's type changes to elemental, and he gains the evil subtype. As a being composed of living, profane ice and snow, he is immune to poison, sleep effects, paralysis, and stunning. He is also not subject to extra damage from critical hits or flanking.

The winter haunt cannot be raised, reincarnated or resurrected (though a limited wish, wish, miracle, or true resurrection spell can restore life).

The winterhaunt also gains dark vision out to 60 feet. The winterhaunt's natural weapons, as well as any weapons he wields, are treated as evil-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

GHOSTWALK (3.0)

ARBOREAL GUARDIAN

Within the Spirit Wood are the Arboreal Guardians, men and women dedicated to protecting and ministering the living repositories of elf and half-elf spirits.

The Guardians are the wood's first line of defense against outsiders and act as the hands and eyes of the spirit trees, vowing to protect a particular tree with a mystical pledge called a Green Bond.

Mystically linked with a chosen tree, an Arboreal Guardian sees the recipient of her Green Bond as the closest member of her family, someone worth dying for.

This bond extends to a lesser extent to any other spirit tree. Most Arboreal Guardians are druids or rangers.

A few clerics of Galaedros become Guardians, as does the occasional multiclassed barbarian, but only those with close ties to nature consider taking the Green Bond.

Arboreal Guardians are a well-known but little-understood secret society in the Ghostwalk campaign.

While they guide people through the Spirit Wood to the city of Manifest, they are completely ruthless when it comes to dealing with violators of the forest.

They may bicker among themselves over the proper way to nurture and preserve the Spirit Wood, but they are united in their oath to preserve it at all cost.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an Arboreal Guardian, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

A creature of another race who does a great service for the Arboreal Guardians or the spirit trees may be allowed to join this elite society of protectors.

Skills: Intuit Direction 5 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks, Wilderness Lore 8 ranks.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Green Bond, Point Blank Shot.

Spells: Able to cast entangle.

Patron Deity: Any but Nessesk or Orcus.

CLASS SKILLS

The Arboreal Guardian's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Arboreal Guardian prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arboreal Guardians gain proficiency with shortbows (but not composite shortbows). A druid who becomes an Arboreal Guardian can use a shortbow without violating her spiritual oaths.

Arboreal Guardians gain no proficiency with any armor or shields.

Spellcasting: An Arboreal Guardian continues training in magic.

Thus, at every other Arboreal Guardian level starting at 2nd, the character gains new spells known and spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, additional uses of wild shape, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of Arboreal Guardian to the level of some other divine spellcasting class she has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

Bond's Call (Su): An Arboreal Guardian may make an Intuit Direction check (DC 15) to determine the direction to her spirit tree.

This can be done once per round.

Forestwalk (Su): When an Arboreal Guardian is within the Spirit Wood, her land speed increases by 10 feet.

This benefit stacks with any other bonuses to speed the character may have.

Nature's Water (Ex): An Arboreal Guardian of 2nd level or higher can acquire potions from her bonded spirit tree if she provides the necessary herbs and ingredients.

Essentially this means she can purchase potions from her tree for the cost to create instead of the market price.

Natural Armor (Ex): At 2nd level, an Arboreal Guardian gains a natural armor bonus to her Armor Class.

When this bonus improves to +3 (at 6th level), her skin gains the coloration of her spirit tree, although this does not provide any additional benefit.

Unhindered Charge (Ex): When making a charge or taking the run action, an Arboreal Guardian of 3rd level or higher can pass unhindered through normal inanimate living plants, similar to a druid's woodland stride ability.

Unlike woodland stride, she can also pass unhindered through larger plants such as trees, including her own spirit tree, when using this ability.

Wood Speech (Su): An Arboreal Guardian of 3rd level or higher can telepathically communicate with her spirit tree or with any of its other Arboreal Guardians at a range of 1 mile.

This allows the Guardian to initiate the telepathic contact (previously she could be contacted by her spirit tree, but could not initiate this contact).

Hunter's Mercy (Su): Once per day as a standard action, a Guardian of 5th level or higher can focus her concentration so her first successful attack with a bow in the next round is automatically a critical hit.

This works like the hunter's mercy spell, except that activating this ability does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Blindsight (Su): Like her bonded spirit tree, a Guardian of 5th level or higher can sense creatures without using her eyes, giving her the blindsight ability with a range of 30 feet.

She can activate this ability once per day as a free action, lasting a number of rounds equal to her class level.

Nature's Defender (Ex): A Guardian of 7th level or higher gains a +1 morale bonus on attack rolls, weapon damage, checks, and saving throws when within 500 feet of her bonded tree.

Quench (Sp): A Guardian of 7th level or higher can use the quench ability (as the spell) once per day.

Tree Stride (Sp): A Guardian of 9th level or higher can use the tree stride ability (as the spell) once per day.

THE GREEN BOND

Each of the Arboreal Guardians is linked to a particular spirit tree, and through this tree to a handful of other Arboreal Guardians. Each of these groups acts like a family; Guardians of the same tree generally get along well and can call upon each other in times of need. Likewise, the Guardians love and protect their chosen tree (and the elf and half-elf spirits within it) like a respected senior member of the family. The Green Bond is a very strong emotional link to another being, stronger than the link to a twin. A Guardian is expected to be loyal to his tree (and its other Arboreal Guardians) first and all others second. Those who ignore the needs of the tree in order to travel the world or adventure are likely to be ostracized by the other Guardians and may (if this behavior is not curtailed) eventually break their bond and lose all abilities of this prestige class. Fortunately, each spirit tree has several Arboreal Guardians, so each tends to get a reasonable amount of free time to devote to personal matters.

Characters who have a Green Bond but are not Arboreal Guardians are called bondfellows and are like extended members of the spirit tree's family. They are on friendly terms with the Arboreal Guardians but do not have the same requirements of devotion that the Guardians do, although if their spirit tree is in danger, they are expected to come to its aid.

Having a Green Bond is a mixed blessing in terms of cohorts and followers. Bondfellows of the same spirit tree (and druids and rangers unassociated with other spirit trees) treat the bonded character as if she had a special power (Leadership modifier +1). All other characters treat the bonded character as if she had a familiar, a paladin's warhorse, or an animal companion (Leadership modifier -2). Thus, it is easier for a bonded character to recruit cohorts and followers who are themselves bonded or at least respect the bond with nature, but it is harder to recruit those who have little or no interest in nature or are prejudiced against those who devote themselves to plants over civilized beings.

BONE COLLECTOR

A bone collector is a person who draws personal power from the destruction of undead.

Bearing tokens and trophies of her kills, the bone collector is often mistaken by the ignorant for a common necromancer, when in truth most oppose necromancy and seek to undo its works.

A rare few are parasites to necromancers, using cast-off bits of discarded experiments in undeath to increase their own power.

A bone collector is usually a fighter, cleric, or paladin, although some good-aligned beings avoid this career because of the constant association with undead and negative energy.

Some rogues, bards, and monks become bone collectors, adorning themselves with strange icons to advance their other skills.

Rarely do barbarians, druids, rangers, sorcerers, or wizards become bone collectors, either opposing the gathering of residual undead energy or else having more effective ways to do so.

Bone collectors are usually loners, although in places where undead are more common, they sometimes gather in groups to plan their attacks and trade items.

Such groups either oppose (if good) or ally with (if evil) active groups of necromancers and undead.

More than once has a cabal of necromancers been undone from within by their supposed allies who found a sudden need for undead parts.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bone collector, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Alchemy 2 ranks, Concentration 3 ranks, Craft (armorsmithing, bowmaking, or weaponsmithing) 1 rank, Heal 5 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 3 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Great Fortitude.

Special: The character must have been knocked unconscious or killed by an undead creature or necromancy spell, or must have received a negative level or ability damage or drain from an undead or a necromancy spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The bone collector's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bone collector prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bone collectors gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells: A bone collector has the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, the bone collector must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a bone collector with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Bone collector bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the bone collector's Wisdom modifier (if any). When the bone collector gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, she gets only bonus spells. The bone collector's spell list appears below.

A bone collector prepares and casts spells just as a cleric does.

Recognize Undead (Ex): A bone collector has trained her senses to such an extent that she can more easily recognize an undead creature for what it is.

She gains a +4 bonus on Spot checks or Will saving throws to penetrate an undead's disguise or an illusion spell that changes its appearance.

If an undead creature is not attempting to disguise its nature or naturally appears much like a living creature, the bone collector gains a Spot check (DC 10 + undead's Cha modifier) to realize the creature is undead.

See the description of the Disguise skill in the Player's Handbook for information on repeat attempts to penetrate a disguise.

Lesser Bone Armor: Using her knowledge of undeath and magic, a bone collector can craft certain kinds of magical armor (including shields) that imitate or hamper undead abilities.

She can craft armor with a +1 enhancement bonus or imbue magic armor with any of the following properties: death ward, energy drain, shadow, silent moves.

This ability works as if she had the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat and met all prerequisites for the abilities being added (so she could create shadow armor even if she didn't otherwise have access to the invisibility prerequisite of the shadow property).

All other rules for creating magic armor apply (cost to create, creation time, and so on).

Any armor the bone collector crafts bears a noticeable motif of death; it may be decorated with actual bones, bear images of skulls, and so on.

A bone collector with another spellcasting class and the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat adds her class level to her other spellcasting class level to determine her effective caster level for meeting the special requirement for crafting armor with enhancement bonuses, so a Clr8/Bone collector 4 is counted as a 12th-level spellcaster for the purpose of crafting magic armor and therefore could craft armor with a +4 enhancement bonus (see Creating Armor in Chapter 8 of the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide).

Lesser Bone Weapon: In a fashion similar to the lesser bone armor ability, a bone collector of 2nd level or higher can craft certain kinds of magic weapons that imitate undead attacks or harm undead.

She can craft weapons with a +1 enhancement bonus or can imbue magic weapons with any of the following properties: flaming, ghost touch, truesilver.

This ability works as if she had the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat and met all prerequisites for the abilities being added (so she could create a flaming weapon even if she didn't otherwise have access to the fireball prerequisite of the flaming property).

All other rules for creating magic weapons apply (cost to create, creation time, and so on).

Any weapon the bone collector crafts bears a noticeable motif of death; it may be decorated with actual bones, bear images of skulls, and so on.

A bone collector with another spellcasting class and the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat adds her class level to her other spellcasting class level to determine her effective caster level for meeting the special requirement for crafting weapons with enhancement bonuses, so a Clr8/Bone collector 4 is counted as a 12th-level spellcaster for the purpose of crafting magic weapons and therefore could craft a weapon with a +4 enhancement bonus (see Creating Weapons in Chapter 8 of the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide).

Negative Energy Shroud (Su): By surrounding herself with a weak aura of negative energy, a bone collector of 3rd level or higher can confuse attempts to discern her living nature. Undead creatures perceive her as a fellow undead, spells such as detect undead and deathwatch perceive her as an undead creature, and so on.

Mindless undead ignore her unless they have specific orders to attack other undead creatures, and intelligent ones are likely to assume she is a vampire or other sort of undead that looks alive.

The shroud gives her a +2 bonus on saving throws against attacks based on negative energy (such as enervation and inflict spells), but causes all healing spells cast upon her to cure only half the normal damage.

Actions by the bone collector may give observers clues to her living state (such as reacting to pain or holding her breath when entering water).

Attacking an undead creature causes this ability to end immediately.

This ability may be used once per day and lasts up to 10 minutes per class level.

Greater Bone Armor: In a fashion similar to the lesser bone armor ability, a bone collector of 4th level or higher can craft armor (including shields) with up to a +3 enhancement bonus or with the following properties: absorbing, cold resistance, etherealness, ghost touch.

Greater Bone Weapon: A bone collector of 5th level or higher can craft weapons with up to a +3 enhancement bonus or with the following properties: disruption, flaming burst, ghost bane, undead bane, vampiric.

Undead Channel (Su): Once per day, a 6th-level bone collector may absorb any one magical effect from an undead creature's attack, such as an ability score drain or damage, a negative level, a corrupting touch, or a paralyzing touch.

This absorption does not require a readied action and can be activated by a bone collector in response to an attack by an undead.

The absorbed attack has no effect upon the bone collector, but remains as a stored magical effect within her body up to 24 hours after the attack.

She may activate this stored effect as a free action and discharge it upon a target by making a touch attack, affecting the target as if the original undead creature were making the attack.

Once activated, the stored effect works like a touch spell and triggers upon the next creature or object she touches.

For example, Shelda the bone collector is attacked by a vampire and decides to use her undead channel ability to absorb the creature's energy drain attack.

She later slays the vampire and hunts down Tellon the enchanter, with whom she has an old grudge.

Finding him, she activates the latent energy drain within her and makes a successful touch attack.

Tellon immediately gains two negative levels, just as if the vampire had struck him personally.

BONE COLLECTOR SPELL LIST

Bone collectors choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: bonerattle, chill touch, cure light wounds, detect undead, disrupt undead, invisibility to undead, magic stone, protection from possession.

2nd Level: consecrate, endurance, ghoul touch, ghost touch armor, lesser restoration, shroud of undeath.

3rd Level: forced manifestation, negative energy protection, searing light, vampiric touch.

DEATHWARDEN CHANTER

The Deathwarden chanters are the most prestigious, respected, and mysterious members of the dwarven Deathwarden clan.

They lead the rituals to prepare bodies for their journey into the afterlife (the Hallowing), and they direct the actions of other dwarves when the physical remains of their charges or the Veil of Souls itself is threatened.

Most chanters are clerics or fighter/clerics.

Sometimes a dwarf bard takes up the mantle of the Deathwarden chanter, and even less common are the paladins or rangers that become chanters.

Members of other classes are either too undisciplined, too focused on the world of the living, or have incompatible philosophies with the Deathwardens.

The chanters, like the Deathwardens as a whole, are an enigma to most people of Manifest.

The common folk know that the dwarves protect the bodies of the fallen and guard the Veil of Souls, but none know their methods or why guarding the gate against the living is so important.

As the leaders of the clan, the chanters are more aloof and reserved toward outsiders than all others and go about their strange business without feeling the need to explain themselves to those outside the clan.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Deathwarden chanter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Knowledge (ghost lore) 3 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 3 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks, Perform (sing).

Feats: Iron Will, Spell Focus (Evocation).

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Any but Orcus.

Special: Must have participated in a Hallowing with the permission of the Deathwarden dwarves; must have destroyed one undead of 3 HD or more through the use of positive energy.

CLASS SKILLS

The Deathwarden chanter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (ghost lore) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Scry (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Deathwarden chanter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Deathwarden chanters gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spellcasting: A Deathwarden chanter continues training in divine magic.

Thus, when a new Deathwarden chanter level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional uses of wild shape, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of Deathwarden chanter to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

Smite Undead (Su): With this ability, a chanter can attempt to smite undead with a normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per class level.

This extra damage is from positive energy and is not affected by damage reduction.

If the chanter accidentally smites a creature that is not undead, the smite has no effect but is still used up.

If the chanter has a smite ability from another class (such as paladin), he may use that smite ability separately or combine them into a single strike if the target meets all criteria for all smites (such as evil and undead for a paladin/chanter).

Undead's Foe: A chanter's class level stacks with his cleric and paladin levels for the purpose of turning undead.

Iron Soul (Ex): Upon attaining 2nd level, a Deathwarden chanter gets a +4 bonus on saving throws against death effects and on saving throws to remove a negative level.

Great Rune (Sp): Deathwarden chanters come to understand how to create powerful runes, which they can inscribe on items and locations.

At 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, the chanter chooses one rune from Table 1–6: Deathwarden Chanter Runes.

TABLE 1–6: DEATHWARDEN CHANTER RUNES

Level + Wis Modifier	Rune
1	Spell rune
2	Ward rune
3	Turning rune
4	Armor rune
5	Thunder rune
6	Law rune
7	Clan rune
8	Veil rune
9	Song rune
10	Ancestor rune

His level + Wisdom modifier determines how many runes he can choose from at any given time.

He can't choose the same rune twice.

A rune must be drawn, painted, or engraved on a solid surface or object.

Some are active runes, which begin functioning as soon as they are completed, while others are passive runes, triggered by certain conditions set at the time of the rune's creation.

Passive runes are given triggering conditions similar to a glyph of warding and protect an area up to 5 square feet per caster level.

This area may be a flat surface, an object, a doorway, or a section of corridor.

Some runes require a sacrifice by the chanter.

For example, a rune that functions like a spell glyph from a glyph of warding requires the chanter to use one of his spell slots to power that rune.

Until the rune is triggered or negated, the chanter cannot use that spell slot.

Once the rune is triggered or negated, the chanter can once again prepare spells with that slot after his next period of rest and time of prayer.

Drawing a rune takes 10 minutes and requires concentration, just as if the chanter were casting a spell.

A chanter can finish all but the last symbol of a rune, allowing him to finish it later as a single standard action (a chanter can complete another chanter's rune only if he knows that rune and succeeds on a Spellcraft check against DC 20).

However, an incomplete rune is vulnerable to outside interference—any creature walking upon or disturbing the incomplete rune negates it entirely, just as if it were a spell that had been interrupted during casting.

A completed rune is anywhere from 1 to 5 feet in diameter, depending on the desires of the chanter who created it.

Once completed, a rune is no more difficult to notice than an ordinary drawing.

Safely removing a rune requires the use of dispel magic or a similar spell (the dispel check is made against the caster level of the chanter who created it) or a Disable Device check (DC 25 + 1/2 chanter's class level + chanter's Wis modifier).

For runes that have saving throws, the DC of the save is equal to 10 + 1/2 chanter's class level + chanter's Wis modifier.

A chanter can dissipate one of his own runes by touching it and spending a standard action concentrating on it.

If the dissipated rune requires a sacrifice to create it (such as a spell slot), the sacrificed ability cannot be used until the rune is discharged or dissipated, after which it returns at the normal rate for its type (such as after 8 hours of rest, when other spells are prepared).

All runes have a duration of “permanent until discharged” unless otherwise stated.

Ancestor Rune (Active): This powerful rune calls one of the chanter's dead ancestors back from beyond the Veil to fight on his behalf.

The rune acts as a planar ally spell, but always summons a dwarf cleric or fighter with the celestial or fiendish template and with a class level no greater than the chanter's caster level.

Completing this rune is very draining, and for an entire week after its completion, the chanter gains two negative levels.

These negative levels never result in actual level loss and cannot be removed in any way (including by restoration spells) before the week is over.

During the creation of this rune, the chanter sacrifices 100 gp worth of treasure or magic items per level of the ancestor called.

The ancestor remains for no more than 6 hours.

A chanter can use this rune no more than once per week.

Armor Rune (Active): When completed, the rune emanates a magic vestment spell to a radius of 5 feet, affecting all allies of the chanter within this emanation.

The power of the rune lasts 12 hours.

A chanter can have only one of these runes in effect at any time; creating a second one causes the first one to dissipate.

Clan Rune (Active): All dwarves within 30 feet of this rune gain a +2 luck bonus on attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saves, and skill checks.

This effect begins once the rune is inscribed and lasts 24 hours.

A chanter can have only one of these runes in effect at any time; creating a second one causes the first one to dissipate.

Law Rune (Active): This rune affects creatures within 60 feet of it, providing all lawful beings a +2 competence bonus on saving throws and increasing the DC of all law spells cast from within this area by 2.

A chanter can have only one of these runes in effect at any time; creating a second one causes the first one to dissipate.

Song Rune (Active): This rune constantly emits a low chant in the language of the Deathwardens.

All allies of the chanter within 60 feet of the rune gain three benefits.

First, they are immune to fear effects.

Second, they stabilize automatically when their hit points drop to -1 or lower (as if wearing a periapt of wound closure).

Third, they gain a +2 bonus on saves against sonic effects.

The rune lasts 1 minute per class level.

A chanter can have only one of these runes in effect at any time; creating a second one causes the first one to dissipate.

Spell Rune (Passive): This rune functions like the spell glyph version of a glyph of warding.

The chanter sacrifices a cleric spell slot of the stored spell's level to power the rune, so a rune of hold person would use one of the chanter's 2nd-level cleric spell slots.

The target's save DC is based on the chanter's rune save DC and not the save DC of the spell.

Thunder Rune (Active): When this rune is completed, a loud peal of thunder erupts from it.

All enemies within 60 feet of the rune are dazed for 1 round and must make Fortitude saves or be deafened.

This is a sonic effect.

The deafness is similar to that caused by a thunderstone (permanent, but cannot be negated with dispel magic or similar spells, although remove deafness works).

A chanter can draw this rune once per day.

Turning Rune (Passive): A chanter must sacrifice one use of his turn undead ability to create this rune.

When triggered, the rune activates as if the chanter himself were using his turn undead ability at that location.

This rune is often used to protect sites that suffer frequent attacks by undead that otherwise would not have a cleric protecting them.

Veil Rune (Active): This rune draws upon the power of the Veil itself.

Living creatures within 60 feet of the rune are fatigued as the power of the Veil saps their life energy (leaving the area negates the fatigue).

Ghosts within 60 feet of the rune must make a Will saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 chanter's class level + chanter's Cha modifier) every round or succumb to the Calling.

Up to 20 creatures can be excluded from this effect; the names of these creatures are written into the rune during its creation.

A chanter can draw this rune once per day.

Ward Rune (Passive): A chanter must have the deep chant ability to learn this rune.

The ward rune is a powerful alarm with two effects.

First, the creature that triggers the rune must make a Fortitude save or be stunned for 1d6 rounds.

Second, the rune acts as the first form of the deep chant ability (see below), transmitting a short message to all Deathwarden dwarves within 1 mile.

A chanter can have only one of these runes in effect at any time; creating a second one causes the first one to dissipate.

Deep Chant (Su): This ability, gained by a chanter at 5th level, has two different functions, both of which require a full-round action and only one of which can be used per day.

First, it can be used to send a telepathic message to all Deathwarden dwarves within a 1-mile radius of the chanter's location.

This message can be no more than ten words long.

Second, a deep chant can act as a boosted turn undead attempt, as if the chanter had the Divine Energy Focus feat. This does not count toward his normal number of turning attempts per day and does not stack with the Divine Energy Focus feat.

Shepherd Soul (Su): Once per day, a chanter of 7th level or higher can force a ghost within 50 feet to depart the Material Plane and enter the True Afterlife, as if using a dismissal spell.

The chanter uses his caster level, not his chanter level, to determine the modifier to the effect's save DC.

This ability works even if the ghost is within the Manifest Ward.

GHOST SLAYER

Within and near the city of Manifest, the disembodied souls of the dead walk among the living.

Some people think this is unnatural and wish the dead would take their proper places in the True Afterlife.

The ghost slayer is such a person, one who studies ghosts so that they can be easily dispatched and no longer bother the living with their presence.

Most ghost slayers are barbarians, fighters, rangers, or rogues, although there is at least one religious cult that feels ghosts are an abomination and must be driven out.

Few sorcerers or wizards become ghost slayers, since they have more effective means of dealing with ghosts.

Ghost slayers are not necessarily evil; some focus on eliminating only evil ghosts, while others consider any kind of ghost an obscene mark upon the face of the earth.

Ghost slayers are never themselves active as ghosts, although one may remain around long enough to inform others of his death, of the location of his body, and that he wishes to be raised from the dead.

While there are folk in Manifest that would rather see fewer ghosts, only madmen suggest killing them all to restore the proper state of things.

Therefore, ghost slayers, like assassins, must conceal their nature and goals.

Some work alone, some are members of a secret organization such as the Knights of the Quiet, and others work with outside factions such as the yuan-ti and undead to promote their cause.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a ghost slayer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Gather Information 4 ranks, Innuendo 4 ranks,

Knowledge (ghost lore) 5 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Feats: Alertness plus either Ghost Fighting or Incorporeal Spell Targeting.

Special: Must have been knocked unconscious by or failed a saving throw against an attack from a ghost; a character who is a ghost cannot take the ghost slayer prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The ghost slayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Knowledge (ghost lore) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Read Lips (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ghost slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ghost slayers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Untainted Spirit (Ex): A ghost slayer is immune to all forms of possession.

Silver Aura (Su): Once a slayer has attained 2nd level, all of his melee weapons (including unarmed strikes) are treated as silver for the purpose of their ability to stun a ghost with a successful critical hit or sneak attack.

Protected Vessel (Ex): A slayer of 3rd level or higher gains a +3 bonus on all saving throws against ghost powers.

Furthermore, he reduces ability damage or drain caused by ghost powers by 1 point for each attack (minimum 0).

Detect Ghost (Sp): At 4th level and higher, a ghost slayer can use detect ghost at will as a spell-like ability.

Ghost Touch Aura (Su): As a move-equivalent action, a ghost slayer of 4th level or higher can cause his weapon to glow with a dull violet aura for 1 round (if unarmed strike is the weapon chosen, the aura affects one of the slayer's limbs).

This aura makes the weapon act as if it had the ghost touch property.

A slayer may use this ability at will.

Ghost Bane Fires (Su): As a free action, a 5th-level ghost slayer may invoke blue flames upon his weapon that last for 1 round (if unarmed strike is the weapon chosen, the aura affects all of the slayer's limbs, allowing all unarmed strikes by the slayer to be affected).

These flames grant the weapon the ghost bane property.

This ability can be used a number of times per day equal to the slayer's class level + his Charisma modifier.

HEROES OF BATTLE (3.5)

COMBAT MEDIC

"My mission is pretty straightforward: Make sure they all come back alive."

—Cradle, a combat medic

On the front lines of battle, injury is inevitable.

Where the carnage is at its worst, the combat medic can be found, keeping her allies alive and tending to the fallen.

For a combat medic, the goal is not to kill the enemy but to make sure the enemy does not kill her troops.

Her ability to keep forces fighting makes her invaluable to an army.

She is entrusted with the care of the best forces available, sometimes even assigned to elite strike teams.

BECOMING A COMBAT MEDIC

Clerics of the gods of healing and war are the quickest to adopt the abilities of the combat medic, since clerics have Heal as a class skill.

The spontaneous healing ability she gains from the cleric class allows her more opportunities to use her new combat medic class features.

Bards are also very good candidates for the combat medic class, because they spontaneously cast spells as well.

The bard's support abilities mesh nicely with the abilities of the prestige class, but a bard needs to multiclass into a class that offers Heal as a class skill if he wants to be a combat medic as a mid-level character.

Healers (see the Miniatures Handbook) make fine combat medics as well.

Rangers and paladins can pursue the path of the combat medic, though they must sacrifice some of their martial prowess to do so.

Wisdom is the key ability for most combat medics, since it impacts their Heal skill modifier and (typically) their spellcasting ability.

Combat medics typically have a good Dexterity score as well, since Armor Class is important for all who find themselves near a battle.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Heal 8 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge.

Spells: Ability to cast cure light wounds.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Ride, Spellcraft, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As she advances in level, a combat medic gains abilities that enhance her healing skills.

She also continues to gain spellcasting power.

Spellcasting: As you attain more levels, you continue your training in your chosen spellcasting field.

You get new spells per day, spells known, and an increase in caster level as if you had also gained a level in any one spellcasting class that includes cure light wounds on its spell list, provided you belonged to that class previously.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

This essentially means that you add the level of combat medic to the level of whatever eligible spellcasting class you have, and then determine spells per day and caster levels accordingly.

If you had more than one eligible spellcasting class before becoming a combat medic, you must decide to which class you add each level of combat medic for the purposes of determining spells per day, spells known, and caster level.

Healing Kicker (Su): You hate to see your careful work ruined by an attack made right afterward.

Thus, you can choose to add a short-term protective effect to your healing spells, allowing a healed target to more easily survive the rigors of combat.

Whenever you cast a conjuration (healing) spell on an ally, you can choose to imbue the spell with a secondary effect as described below.

You can use this ability once per round, up to a total number of times per day equal to your class level + your Wisdom modifier (minimum once per day).

In each case, the secondary effect lasts for 1 round unless otherwise noted.

Only one secondary effect can be imbued into any single spell.

You can't apply this secondary benefit to yourself.

At 1st level, you can imbue a healing spell with a sanctuary effect (as the spell).

The Will save DC to overcome this effect is equal to 15 + class level + Wisdom modifier.

At 3rd level, you can grant the target of your healing spell a competence bonus on Reflex saves equal to your class level.

At 5th level, you can imbue a healing spell with a maximized aid effect (as the spell, but the quantity of temporary hit points granted is equal to 8 + your class level).

This effect lasts for 1 minute or until the temporary hit points are depleted, whichever comes first.

Defensive Casting (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you are capable of spellcasting even under the most dangerous circumstances.

You gain a competence bonus equal to your class level on Concentration checks made to cast spells defensively.

Field Healer (Ex): At 2nd level, you become adept at administering first aid quickly and while under duress. You can make a Heal check to provide first aid as a move action (rather than a standard action) and can take 10 on such checks even when stress or distraction would normally prevent you from doing so.

Mobility: You frequently find it necessary to dive into a pitched melee in order to heal a comrade.

As a result, you gain Mobility as a bonus feat at 3rd level.

Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save.

See the monk class feature, page 41 of the Player's Handbook. Spontaneous Heal: At 5th level, you gain the ability to "lose" any prepared spell or spell slot of 6th level or higher in order to cast heal, even if that spell is not normally on your spell list.

If you do not have the ability to cast 6th-level spells, you can't use this class feature.

This ability otherwise functions identically to the cleric's spontaneous casting class feature (see page 32 of the Player's Handbook).

PLAYING A COMBAT MEDIC

Nobody stays down, nobody gets left behind.

The lives of your comrades are in your hands, and each life is as important as your own.

The longer your allies stay alive, the more war they can wage.

You employ your skills and magic to help your comrades overcome their foes in battle, but should one of your own be grievously wounded or fall, you shift your attention from the enemies at hand to the true enemy—death. Most combat medics begin their careers by volunteering to serve in an army to support the troops.

As an officer in the military, you are allocated to a particular regiment and you report to the commander of that force. All too often, your army will have only a few true combat medics and accordingly will group them with key personnel or units while they assign lower-level clerics to assist the rank and file.

As you succeed in bringing back your comrades after a battle, your responsibilities will grow, and you'll be assigned to more important (and dangerous) missions. Alternatively, you might have learned the way of the combat medic from a retired veteran, and you apply the same principles to your comrades in arms while you adventure in a more traditional way.

Nevertheless, when war is imminent, your mentor might call on you, enlisting your aid in the cause.

COMBAT

As a combat medic, try to stay close to your allies.

Use your spells defensively, to reduce the number of blows taken by your comrades.

If you are primarily a cleric or paladin who wears heavy armor, position yourself near the front ranks.

If you are a lightly armored ranger or druid, stay behind the front ranks, attacking those foes who break through.

If you are a bard, provide support from a more central position, where the largest number of your company is in range of your songs and spells.

Constantly scan the battlefield, keeping track of the health of your group.

When you are entrusted to watch over a large group in a pitched battle, move among them, trusting to your defensive abilities while you tend to those that are injured or have fallen.

As a combat medic, you are still an effective combatant, especially when using your spells and abilities to enhance your combat capability.

After all, if you reduce the number of attacking enemies, then that means fewer potential sources of damage.

If your attack bonus isn't that high, fight defensively or help out your allies by using the aid another action while in a flanking position.

ADVANCEMENT

An army intent on getting the most out of its soldiers will assign acolytes of war or healing gods to each of its combat units.

Just as heroism and victory are rewarded for soldiers, so too are the most skilled of these healers rewarded for their success.

When you start on the path of the combat medic, you have already shown your ability to keep your fellows breathing. You undergo training by experienced officers and by war-trained clergy, and that training enhances your ability to respond to injury.

Initially, your experience as a combat medic is much like that of any other healer in battle.

However, the groups you march with henceforth will tend to be more experienced and usually have more tactical responsibility.

Instead of walking through the aftermath of battles looking for survivors, you will find yourself in the center of the melee, providing support where the fighting is thickest. You spend some of your time healing those who can continue the fight, and some of it wrapping bandages about the fallen.

Eventually you will be assigned to smaller, more mobile strike teams or ordered to protect officers or high-ranking advisors.

During times of peace, you yearn for action and fill your time seeking adventure with likeminded companions. Nevertheless, you periodically check in with your commander to see if any other opportunities require your specific skills.

RESOURCES

Throughout your career, you save many lives.

Some of these people might be scions of nobility, members of important merchant guilds, or simply good people who value their lives.

They will never forget who saved them and will gladly help with favors in the future.

(Consider their starting attitude friendly; see page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Your military connections can also provide information or leads on quests and the like.

During missions sponsored by the military, you will usually be provided with wands or scrolls of healing magic to aid you in achieving your objectives.

A well-funded army or church might even grant the use of a staff of healing or an equivalent item if your team or mission is of supreme importance.

COMBAT MEDICS IN THE WORLD

"I should be dead.

At least twice.

And that was just last week.

I owe all my lives to those combat medics!"

—Lieutenant Wellast Huldane, of the Nyrondal Cavalry 1st Regiment

A well-equipped army should have at least a few combat medics, and PCs who fight in a few skirmishes or battles might benefit from readily available healing.

If the PCs take on missions as mercenaries, the leaders might provide a combat medic to assist them if the mission is vital.

Combat medics are a good source of information about a battle or a war, since they circulate through an army and tend to gather up news from soldiers they treat.

ORGANIZATION

Combat medics are part of a military organization.

Though many of them are officers, few actually command troops in battle.

While an army might have many combat medics, each typically works alone, with one combat medic supporting a group of up to fifty soldiers.

High-level combat medics find themselves assigned to key forces, such as cavalry or strike teams.

During peacetime, combat medics like to travel with adventuring companies, to keep their healing skills honed. Nevertheless, they are quick to answer the call if the military once again requires their services.

As members of a military hierarchy, combat medics defer to the chain of command.

Within an army, the highest-ranking cleric is the Commander Hospitaler.

In addition to serving as the spokesperson for all combat medics, the Commander Hospitaler assigns duties to the combat medics and other clerics who might report to him or her.

Formally referred to as the Officers Hospitaler, this organization is charged with tending the wounded during and after a battle.

Orders of the Commander Hospitaler carry the same weight as orders from any superior officer, but in matters related to healing they can override the orders of anyone but the general of the army.

When an army is on the road, combat medics move among the rank and file, using their skills to help make travel easier for the weary soldiers.

When battle is joined, they stand with their assigned troop and try to keep as many alive as possible.

In the aftermath of a battle, they search through the battlefield for survivors and set up field hospitals to care for the wounded.

The healing magic at their disposal can get most soldiers who survive the initial combat back on their feet by the next dawn.

Combat medics labor to stave off death, so their most abhorred enemy is the undead.

A skeleton or zombie represents a life that could not be saved, and a perversion and desecration of what that life once was.

Other more powerful undead such as shadows or wraiths are worse; they not only bring death but also spread undeath when they create spawn from their victims.

Combat medics do not hesitate to take the fight to undead foes if their help is needed, using the positive energy they exude to destroy these perversions for once and for all.

NPC REACTIONS

Current soldiers or veterans who have served with combat medics usually have a starting attitude of friendly toward a member of the class, though some might be bitter about comrades who could not be saved.

Officers, especially, see the value of a combat medic and will do what they can to recruit one into their force.

If a combat medic is captured by human or humanoid forces, she is usually treated with respect, and not harmed, unless the captors are particularly cruel or vile; occasionally she might even be pressed into service by her captors.

NPCs with no particular affiliation to an army still treat a combat medic with the deference due a cleric of healing, having a starting attitude of indifferent.

Any creature or person with a tie to death or evil will be unfriendly to combat medics, if not outright hostile.

This group includes sentient undead as well as clerics of those dark domains.

COMBAT MEDIC LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) can research combat medics to learn more about them.

When a character makes the skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Most larger armies have clerics moving with the regular troops.

The best ones of those are called combat medics".

DC 15: "Combat medics are highly valued on the battlefield because they imbue their healing with extra protection, like casting more than one spell at a time!

They call themselves Officers Hospitaler".

DC 20: Characters who achieve this level of success learn which armies of the region employ combat medics and know tales of prominent combat medic exploits.

A PC attempting to contact the Officers Hospitaler should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the nearest post where a combat medic might be stationed, or a DC 25 check to find where a retired veteran combat medic might live.

A PC already in a military organization that includes Officers Hospitaler need not make any skill checks and instead can request contact through his or her chain of command.

A DC 20 bardic knowledge check could be employed to recall tales of combat medics, perhaps even supplying the name of a prominent Officer Hospitaler, while a DC 20 Knowledge (local) check reveals whether any combat medics call the area home.

COMBAT MEDICS IN THE GAME

Combat medics can easily be added to an ongoing campaign.

The Officers Hospitaler might have been recently employed by the PCs' superiors, or a similar group of healers could be a new offshoot of a healing god's priesthood organized to meet a wartime crisis.

The combat medics could be serving in a different army recently allied with the PCs' own, or a grizzled veteran might come out of retirement to pass on combat medic lore to the PCs.

On its surface, the prestige class appeals to players who want to provide more healing options within the party.

As a combat medic increases in level, her abilities help to make her healing powers more efficient, which means that fewer of her spells are used up by healing attempts, and thus more of her spells can be used for purposes other than healing.

ADAPTATION

The combat medic can fit into most standard fantasy worlds.

If your world does not have massive armies that employ high-level clerics, the combat medic might instead be a tradition taught to a select few clerics of a healing god, and the trappings of the military need not be used.

DREAD COMMANDO

“Get in, do the job, get out.

If they’re lucky, they won’t know I’m there.

If not, they’ll wish I wasn’t.”

—Gregor Antus, of the 1st Scouting Regiment

Dread commandos are the elite scouts and strike force of a well-trained mercenary band.

They combine stealth with protection, quickly moving through the battlefield even while heavily armored, and they are deadly when they catch an opponent unawares. Dread commandos are called upon when a mission requires an excursion deep into enemy territory and conflict is inevitable.

BECOMING A DREAD COMMANDO Most dread commandos begin their adventuring careers as rangers or rogues, since those classes have the requisite class skills. Barbarians and fighters make good dread commandos, though they typically multiclass as rangers or rogues to gain the requisite stealth.

Monks also function well in this class, so long as they are willing to give up improvement in many of their key class features.

The scout and ninja classes (from Complete Adventurer) also find the path of the dread commando to their liking.

Dexterity is a key ability score, since the dread commando relies on agility for many of his class skills (as well as his Armor Class).

A dread commando who finds himself frequently in melee combat wants high Strength and Constitution scores, while one who prefers skilled and subtle incursion favors a high Intelligence and/or Wisdom score.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 6 ranks, Move Silently 6 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (geography), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession, Search, Spot, Swim, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As he advances in level, a dread commando gains abilities that steadily increase his effectiveness against unsuspecting foes, while at the same time increasing his maneuverability while armored.

He becomes an even more capable infiltrator or member of a shock troop as he advances in level.

Sudden Strike (Ex): If you can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from your attack, you can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Whenever your target is denied her Dexterity bonus to AC against your attack (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus to Armor Class or not), you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage with your attack.

The extra damage increases to 2d6 at 3rd level and to 3d6 at 5th level.

Ranged attacks count as sudden strikes only if the target is within 30 feet; you can’t strike with deadly accuracy from beyond this range.

You can only use sudden strike against living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Any creature that is immune to extra damage from critical hits is not vulnerable to sudden strike damage.

You must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

You cannot make a sudden strike while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are out of reach.

You can’t use sudden strike to deliver nonlethal damage.

Weapons capable of dealing only nonlethal damage don’t deal extra damage when used as part of a sudden strike.

The extra damage from the sudden strike ability stacks with extra damage from a sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target.

SUDDEN STRIKE AND SNEAK ATTACK

For the purpose of qualifying for feats, prestige classes, and similar options that require a minimum number of sneak attack damage dice, treat the dread commando’s sudden strike ability as the equivalent of sneak attack.

Team Initiative Bonus (Ex): You are skilled at keeping a team organized and ready for danger.

All allies within 30 feet who can see you (including yourself) gain a competence bonus on initiative checks equal to your class level.

Armored Ease (Ex): You learn to adapt your movements to the restrictive nature of armor.

Beginning at 2nd level, you reduce the armor check penalty of any armor with which you are proficient by 2 (to a minimum of 0).

At 4th level, this reduction increases to 4 points (to a minimum of 0).

Stealthy Movement (Ex): You learn to remain quiet and hidden even while mobile.

Beginning at 4th level, you take no penalty on Hide or Move Silently checks while moving at up to your normal speed, and you take only a –10 penalty on Hide and Move Silently checks when running or charging (instead of the usual –20).

PLAYING A DREAD COMMANDO

Your mission is clear.

You have to reach your objective as quickly as possible, perform your task, and get out alive.

You take on rescue missions, demolition missions, raids, scouting, or anything else that lets you do your work. Let the rank and file slog it out on the front lines while you scale the castle wall and set fire to the enemy's artillery. The best missions for you are those that put you behind enemy lines.

A few dread commandos work alone, but most operate in teams consisting of other commandos.

Away from the hierarchy of an army, a dread commando might journey with a typical adventuring party, since the goals and methods of such groups fit the class's mindset. Dread commandos are a bit more independent-minded than a typical soldier, but you still report to, and receive your missions from, a ranking officer.

Such missions typically have a simple goal, and how you accomplish it is left for you to determine.

COMBAT

You are most effective when you can attack first or from hiding.

As soon as you can afford it, invest in magic or masterwork breastplate or scale mail (mithral is best).

You can then use your ranger or rogue abilities (such as combat style and evasion) while enjoying good protection, with your armored ease ability reducing or negating any armor check penalty.

You'll be more heavily armored than a typical ranger or rogue, so you can survive a bit longer when foes rush into melee.

If you have both the ranger's woodland stride ability and the Spring Attack feat, use them together to leap out of undergrowth, attack, and then rush back into concealment without allowing a full round of retaliatory attacks by your opponent.

ADVANCEMENT

When you begin the path of a dread commando, you have already spent time developing your hit-and-run skills. An army's commander monitors the progress of each of her scouts and determines which ones would work best as a member of an elite group.

Once you are chosen, you are sent on missions that test your skill and ensure you fit the mold.

When you've taken 1st level in the dread commando class, you should feel ready for anything.

Your first missions will be straightforward.

Typically, you are ordered to take out a fortification or artillery emplacement while a battle is underway.

These missions are especially dangerous because the enemy is alert and on guard, but you can use the battle as a distraction, getting you closer to your goal.

As you advance in the dread commando prestige class, your assignments become more covert and require you to utilize the stealth and speed you've been developing.

You might be assigned to rescue a prisoner, sent to destroy a heavily guarded depot, or tasked with obtaining maps or plans from the enemy's command tent.

You will want high modifiers in Hide and Move Silently to ensure that you remain undetected until battle erupts.

Open Lock, Disguise, and Search are valuable if your missions focus on infiltrating enemy encampments.

Disable Device not only helps you bypass traps but allows you to sabotage siege engines.

Gloves of Dexterity and items that provide a bonus to Hide or Move Silently, such as boots or a cloak of elvenkind, are ideal for a dread commando.

Your constant movement about the battlefield increases the value of weapons that deal extra damage, such as bane weapons and holy weapons, so you can maximize your effectiveness with a single attack when you don't have time to take a full attack action (Power Attack also helps in this regard).

Your familiarity with armors makes mithral armor particularly valuable: a high-level dread commando with mithral full plate would have no armor check penalty and could use up to a +3 Dexterity bonus to AC.

RESOURCES

When you are given an assignment, your superiors supply you with as much intelligence as they can regarding your objectives.

You can expect to know guard schedules, typical foes, distances to targets, and so on.

When the mission is important enough, your commander will furnish you with gear appropriate to its completion.

For example, when you are sent on a demolition mission, you will typically have blast disks (see page 131) allocated to your team.

In the same manner, potions of invisibility might be provided for scout missions.

The very best is expected of you, and so the very best is supplied to you.

You might also receive gold or items as a reward for a mission accomplished.

In addition, your organization could fund freelance activities, such as adventuring, if they help increase your breadth of experience.

DREAD COMMANDOS IN THE WORLD

"Just before dawn that ballista battery went up in a ball of fire. Those explosions removed the danger of artillery fire on the approach to the gatehouse and cleared the way for our troops, giving us our only chance of victory."

—General Haus Ballard, commander of the Army of the Alliance

Strike teams and covert forces are likely places to find dread commandos.

PCs working as mercenaries for a military force might be assigned a dread commando to help guide them behind enemy lines or to toughen up their unit for work as a heavy strike force.

ORGANIZATION

Dread commandos work alongside, but slightly outside of, the standard military structure, reporting to a chief lieutenant of the army's commander.

While they might work with other troops and units of the army, they do not adhere to the typical chain of command.

Each group of commandos adopts an evocative name, such as the Rugged Rangers, the Wolfpack, Varduun's Company, or Grunnag's Gang.

In many cases these outfits are not actually commissioned military units.

Instead, they are hired by an army as a mercenary band would be, with the commandos' leader taking an advisory role to the general or commander of the army.

The leader of the commando forces in an army is a soldier who has survived many commando missions, earning the respect of his colleagues and his superiors.

He outlines missions for the dread commandos who serve under him and arranges for resources to help in mission completion.

He is also responsible for selecting strike teams for each mission, employing mercenaries as appropriate. The Rugged Rangers are a prototypical organization of dread commandos and their compatriots. The Rangers are led by Denkar, the best of the best. Denkar keeps five strike teams ready for action; each team consists of at least one dread commando along with others appropriate to the mission at hand. Denkar enlists the aid of the scouting corps (itself led by a former Rugged Ranger) for overland missions, but the Rangers have rogues and other specialists available for urban undertakings.

At any time, up to three teams might be in the field simultaneously, completing missions both covert and overt. Gregor Antus is a rogue who received training as a dread commando.

His specialty is eliminating enemy siege engines. He claims to have pulled the wheels off a siege tower when it was being moved into position, and he enjoys taunting enemy engineers after he has disabled their catapults. Most of the other Rugged Rangers enjoy hearing of his exploits but fear that eventually he's going to make a mistake that could be costly for the team—and on the battlefield, the currency is blood.

In other less reputable organizations, Gregor might eventually be sent on a mission from which he would be unlikely to return, a probability that would be increased if key pieces of information were left out of the mission briefing.

He would be sent out with a group of expendable mercenaries and then forgotten.

However, Denkar doesn't run his operation that way. He sees the value in every commando, even those as brash as Gregor.

Regardless of experience, most dread commandos within a group see each other as equals, elite brothers and sisters a step above members of more common classes.

Separate outfits, however, could see each other as rivals. These groups sometimes try to outdo each other, taking on ever more dangerous missions to show up the other team and in some cases even sabotaging their competitors in various ways.

In addition, subcommanders in the larger military force might disprove of the relative independence that dread commandos enjoy and so try to undermine them. Particularly ruthless officers might not be above taking actions likely to lead to the injury or death of commandos when it means fewer losses among their own troops.

NPC REACTIONS

Officers and other soldiers in the military tend to be wary of dread commandos and have a starting attitude of indifferent toward them (particularly distrustful officers should be considered unfriendly).

By contrast, locals at the tavern love to hear about the exploits of dread commandos because such tales are filled with harrowing escapes, spectacular battles, and odds-defying victories.

The enemies of the dread commandos are those on the other side of the battlefield.

Dread commandos form quick and mobile strike teams, and any opponent who learns that these tactics are being implemented will surely organize a shock troop of their own to counter the commandos, who become hunters and hunted all at once.

DREAD COMMANDO LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) can research the dread commandos to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Some armies have commando teams that can cover great distances even when heavily armed and armored".

DC 15: "I heard a tale of a dread commando that snuck past a picket line, knocked out the guards at the enemy's command tent, stole the troop movement maps, and fled into the night.

While wearing full plate.

And when they tried to hit him with catapult shots as he fled, the weapons all misfired".

DC 20: Characters who get a result this high will learn the names of prominent commando teams and the armies they might work for.

DC 30: A character with this level of success learns the names of the leaders of commando troops who serve in the region.

A PC with ties to the military can make use of her contacts within an organization to gain a +5 bonus on Knowledge checks related to dread commandos.

Bards can also uncover the DC 20 and DC 30 information through the use of bardic knowledge.

DREAD COMMANDOS IN THE GAME

Dread commandos could be an existing institution in your campaign world, one that the PCs are introduced to when they begin working more closely with a military organization.

Alternatively, dread commandos could travel in exclusive troops, such as the Rugged Rangers, who might coincidentally be arriving in the region to ally with local armies.

A mentor of the PCs might have once been a dread commando and now shares his secrets in the hopes that a PC carries on the tradition.

This prestige class appeals to players who like their characters to sneak around a bit but also like to engage in pitched battles.

The DM should allow a dread commando character plenty of opportunities to utilize his stealth abilities prior to the commencement of hostilities.

If not all the PCs are good at moving quietly, the party might be able to come up with a plan that allows the sneaky PCs to move around to a rear or flank position while the others draw out the enemy.

ADAPTATION

The dread commando is a heavily armored quick-strike specialist.

For characters who are not strong enough to avoid being encumbered by heavy armor, you could replace the class's armor abilities with a concealment progression, in which dread commandos benefit from a cumulative 5% miss chance per level when in natural terrain.

This benefit allows unarmored or lightly armored commandos an opportunity to join a quick-strike team and provides them a defensive benefit to make up for their lack of the heavier armor.

Table 5-3: The Dread Commando Hit Die: d8

Level	Base				Special
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+1	+0	+2	+0	Sudden strike +1d6, team initiative bonus
2nd	+2	+0	+3	+0	Armored case 2
3rd	+3	+1	+3	+1	Sudden strike +2d6
4th	+4	+1	+4	+1	Armored case 4, stealthy movement
5th	+5	+1	+4	+1	Sudden strike +3d6

LEGENDARY LEADER

"Hold your lance up, keep your shield steady, and follow me to victory!"

—Henrik Yensen, of Henrik's Horseriders

Legendary leaders are the stuff of bards' tales come to life. Their heroic exploits bring followers to their side, and they create groups that embody their ideals.

Members of this class represent not only the knight in shining armor atop the battlefield hill but also the cunning prince of thieves leading his own guild and the swashbuckling privateer captain with his hand-picked crew.

Legendary leaders recruit like-minded individuals to their cause and become familiar with the politics and intrigue of running a small organization.

BECOMING A LEGENDARY LEADER

Any character with an above-average Charisma score can enter the legendary leader prestige class at 7th level if he has taken the Leadership feat at 6th level.

A high Charisma increases a character's Leadership score, allowing him to recruit even more followers; hence, bard is an effective entry path for becoming a legendary leader. Paladins and fighters also make good legendary leaders, gaining a significant number of benefits for the sacrifice of a bit of base attack bonus.

Rogues are effective as well when focused on interaction skills such as Bluff, Diplomacy, and Sense Motive, but their ability to get past locks and traps will suffer (spending skill points cross-class mitigates the problem).

A member of the marshal class (from the Miniatures Handbook) also makes a fine legendary leader.

Few spellcasters enter the class; the sacrifice of spell progression is seen as too high a cost for most, even though sorcerers make excellent leaders.

Charisma (for interpersonal skills and Leadership score) is a key ability for the class, but the other high ability scores a legendary leader could have depends on the type of leader the character is best suited to be: the mighty warrior, the plotting master spy, the outgoing bard, and the wise mentor are all examples of legendary leaders.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Feats: Iron Will, Leadership.

Special: Base Leadership score of 7 or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Craft, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (nobility and royalty), Profession, Ride, Sense Motive.

CLASS FEATURES

As legendary leaders advance in level, they gain abilities that help them perform deeds worthy of the songs of bards. The confidence a legendary leader exudes is manifested in the loyalty of his allies.

Many legendary leaders are more capable than other leaders and commanders in recruiting cohorts and followers.

Fearless (Ex): Because of their supreme confidence in their own abilities, legendary leaders are not subject to effects that would shake others' resolve.

When you enter this class, you become immune to fear effects.

Hero's Luck (Ex): Upon becoming a legendary leader, you gain a +1 luck bonus on all saving throws.

This bonus improves to +2 at 3rd level and to +3 at 5th level.

Natural Commander (Ex): As a legendary leader, your commander rating equals your class level (unless your rank would normally grant you a higher commander rating).

See page 75 for information on commander ratings.

Legendary Reputation (Ex): As you advance in the prestige class, tales of your exploits begin to circulate.

When people match your face with your reputation, they are more likely to be friendly toward you.

You add your class level to any Diplomacy check you make to influence the attitude of any NPC who is not already unfriendly or hostile.

Greater Command (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, you can focus your powers of persuasion to use greater command (as the spell) once per day (save DC 16 + Cha modifier).

At 4th level and higher, you can use this ability twice per day.

Quick Rally (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you can perform a rally check (see page 73) as a free action once per round.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd level, you gain a bonus feat from among the feats with the leader type (see page 96).

You must meet the normal prerequisites for the feat.

Heroic Success (Ex): When you reach 4th level, your deeds become truly legendary, and you demonstrate your ability to beat the odds even when the situation looks bleak.

Once per day, you can choose to automatically succeed on a single saving throw instead of rolling the dice.

Additional Commander Aura (Ex): At 5th level, you can select a secondary commander aura, which can be any commander aura for which you qualify (see page 75 for more information on commander auras).

Your followers benefit from both commander aura effects, though any bonuses granted follow the normal rules for stacking.

If you further increase your commander rating at another time and choose to gain a new commander aura, you can replace either of your existing commander auras.

To Hell and Back (Ex): Your followers will accompany you to the ends of the world, and beyond.

When you reach 5th level, any followers or cohorts gained from your Leadership feat are immune to fear effects (including morale checks) when they have line of sight to you.

PLAYING A LEGENDARY LEADER

As a legendary leader, you have many followers who look up to you and follow your example.

As a result, you must always attempt to maintain that ideal. When you take action, you proceed swiftly and decisively. Even when you aren't sure of yourself, it's important that others perceive that you know what you're doing.

You strive to provide examples of acts and traits to which your disciples should aspire, acts that are legendary in their own right.

Your cohorts and followers are your family, and you care for them as you would your brothers or sisters.

You trust them with your life.

Legendary leaders do not so much belong to an organization as they begin an organization.

You are defined by how you lead others.

From the moment your first cohort is recruited, you create a band of like-minded followers who adhere to your principles.

You aren't restricted to any particular ethos, and the group you lead could be a mercenary warrior troop, a team on a religious crusade, or the core of a new thieves guild.

Many of your followers will be of your previous profession, but nothing stops you from recruiting new members from other classes.

COMBAT

Legendary leaders always strive to perform heroic acts in battle.

You seek out the most powerful opponent in a fight or the most difficult task to perform—within reason, of course.

You are not bound to any code of honor that might require you to defeat a foe in single combat, so you use the abilities at your disposal to quickly eliminate the enemy, whether through spells, uses of smite evil, sneak attacks, or some other ability.

The benefits you gain from the legendary leader prestige class can affect nearby allies, so you should fight closely with your cohorts.

When the time is right, you gird yourself to perform a heroic exploit that turns the tide of battle.

As you advance, you can help your allies even more.

You can stand in the face of fear and prevent the morale of your allies from flagging.

Your cohorts become more valuable as they keep pace with your level, and you should take advantage of their new abilities—for example, setting up a rogue cohort with a flanking opportunity or stepping aside so your halfling outrider can make a spirited charge.
