Wildrunners often are the first to detect and block schemes that evil druids or rangers hatch.

Barbarians often admire wildrunners for their free-spirited ways and their ability to survive in the wild, but many barbarians regard wildrunners as sneaky or evasive.

Most barbarians find a wildrunner's devotion to nature at least a little bit crazy.

Elves and halflings generally honor wildrunners for their accomplishments and stewardship of the land.

Wild elves in particular find a wildrunner's return to his primal roots noteworthy and admirable.

Raptorans agree that wildrunners have accomplished much, but they don't regard that as anything special; still, they welcome wildrunners as people who have learned to live with nature.

WILDRUNNER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (nature) can research wildrunners to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Many pristine wildernesses are haunted by woodland warriors known as wildrunners.

Wildrunners forsake civilization and society.

They have the keen senses and blind fighting fury of wild predators".

DC 15: "Groups of wildrunners are called packs, and they usually include all the wildrunners in a certain locale.

Wildrunner packs are loosely organized under a single leader whose position is mostly honorary.

The pack leader may rouse the pack from time to time to accomplish some purpose but otherwise has little real authority".

DC 20: "Wildrunners serve as unofficial guardians of the land where they live, and of all things that dwell there.

They usually oppose any attempts to tame or clear wild lands but may support limited and prudent efforts to extract wild resources".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about the specific packs in your campaign, including notable members and what tasks they choose to undertake.

PCs trying to establish contact with a pack of wildrunners can make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the necessary intermediaries or meeting places.

Just talking to a wildrunner encountered in the wild might work, or it might not, because few members of a pack know the identities of members senior to them.

WILDRUNNERS IN THE GAME

As a rustic character free from the burdens and concerns of civilization, a wildrunner can provide the DM with many entertaining roleplaying opportunities.

A wildrunner can provide struggling PCs with useful guidance or information and can help the DM advance an adventure's plot.

A wildrunner who has completely reverted to his animal nature might stalk and attack PCs just as any other predator might do, forcing the PCs to deal with an intelligent and capable foe that thinks of them as nothing more than prey.

Because they keep mostly to themselves and sometimes work undercover, it's easy to add wildrunners to an ongoing campaign—they've been there all along, going about their business unbeknownst to the PCs.

This prestige class appeals to players who like to reflect on how their characters think and what they do when they're not adventuring, and to players who understand outdoor life.

A wildrunner also has a few secrets to keep from other characters, and that can prove irresistible to some players. When a player decides to enter the wildrunner class, prepare one or two NPCs who can serve as the PC's mentors, and give some thought to the setting and mood for the character's acceptance ceremony (if any).

A secret glade deep in the woods full of night sounds, a hidden cave filled with ghostly echoes, or similar setting works well.

ADAPTATION

The wildrunner class is suitable for characters of any race, and you could adapt this class accordingly by simply dropping the racial requirement.

You might wish to limit the class to certain tribes or regions in order to define a particular corner of your campaign. The class would also work well for evil wilderness warriors; a clan of murderous orc wildrunners would make for memorable foes indeed.

TABLE 5–8: THE WILDRUNNER HIT DIE: D10

Level	Base				Special
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+1	+2	+2	+0	Fast movement, trackless step

SANDSTORM (3.5)

ASHWORM DRAGOON

“Only the desert has a fascination: to ride alone—in the sun of the forever unpossessed country—away from man.

That is a great temptation.”

—Nebkhas, an ashworm dragoon

Some of the sand-hardened folk who have lived in the desert for millennia have come to appreciate the qualities of the ashworm.

The skill of training ashworms as mounts has become popular, but you have been able to form a bond with a single ashworm so strong that the ashworm serves almost as an extension of your will.

You, and talented riders like you, are known as ashworm dragoons.

As an ashworm dragoon, you ride across the vast desert sands (and sometimes beneath or beyond).

You choose your own path, whether that involves defending your people, taking service with a patron, or striking out in search of adventure.

BECOMING AN ASHWORM DRAGOON

Most ashworm dragoons are fighters, though some barbarians and rangers, and even a few rogues, might take a few levels in this class.

The required Mounted Combat and Ride-By attack feats, as well as ranks in Ride and Handle Animal, are important to capitalize on the class's abilities and show devotion to the path.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Handle Animal 4 ranks, Ride 8 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack.

Special: Must have ridden an ashworm.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Profession, Ride, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ashworm dragoon prestige class.

Ashworm Mount (Ex): You have the service of a loyal ashworm that serves you as a mount.

Unlike the ashworms sold as regular mounts, this ashworm's poison stinger is not clipped.

Moreover, it never tries to submerge when it reaches open sand, as ashworms sold as mounts do.

Finally, your ashworm serves readily as a combat steed.

To ride your mount, you need special tack, harness, and an exotic saddle, all of which costs 70 gp.

Your ashworm is so loyal to you that it bears you without complaint on the surface of the sand, as well as on other surfaces found in nonwaste regions, for months or even years at a time.

Your ashworm is more powerful than a typical representative of its species, and it grows stronger as you gain ashworm dragoon levels.

See the table below for details.

ASHWORM ADVANCEMENT

Dragoon Level	Bonus HD	Natural Armor Adj.	Str Adj.
1st–2nd	+2	+4	+1
3rd–4th	+4	+6	+2
5th–6th	+6	+8	+3
7th–8th	+8	+10	+4
9th–10th	+10	+12	+5

If your ashworm mount is slain, you can obtain a new mount after a day of searching in any appropriate waste area.

Saddle Bonus (Ex): You gain a competence bonus equal to your class level on all Handle Animal and Ride checks associated with your ashworm while you are mounted.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd and 9th level, you can choose a bonus feat from the fighter bonus feats given in the Player's Handbook.

Heightened Sting (Ex): Wild ashworms, and ashworms chosen as mounts by dragoon characters, have a poisonous stinger (normal saddle-broken ashworms sold as mounts have their stinger clipped for the rider's safety).

At 3rd level and higher, you can induce your mount to make a heightened sting attack in conjunction with your regular attacks that round.

When making a heightened sting attack, the ashworm's attack roll modifier is equal to your base attack bonus + the ashworm's Str modifier.

On a successful hit, the victim's Fortitude save DC to resist the poison is $10 + 1/2$ your character level + the ashworm's Con modifier.

This is a special attack, and it can be made only once per round, and a total number of times per day equal to your class level.

In rounds when you choose not to make a heightened sting attack, the ashworm can make a normal sting at its regular attack bonus, and the DC to resist the poison is determined normally.

Relentless Shield (Ex): At 4th level and higher, you can make a Ride check after any attack that successfully strikes your ashworm mount, in an attempt to negate the hit on your ashworm.

Normally, the Mounted Combat feat allows you to make this attempt only once per round.

See the Mounted Combat feat, page 98 of the Player's Handbook, for details.

In addition, you gain a +2 bonus on Ride checks made to negate an opponent's attack roll.

This ability does not extend to any other type of mount.

Stamp into the Sand (Ex): At 5th level, you gain Trample as a bonus feat.

Instead of using a hoof, the ashworm makes one sting attack against the knocked-down target.

If you already have the Trample feat (or gain it later), you gain an extra benefit: When mounted on your ashworm, a foe you have knocked down using Trample is so thoroughly flattened that rising from a prone position requires a full-round action instead of a move action.

Sand Rider (Su): Upon reaching 6th level, you have formed such a close bond with your mount that you are able to stay with the ashworm when it travels beneath the sand.

During these trips, you have learned the trick of tightening your harness, just so, while at the same time guiding your sandswimming mount in an expert manner that allows you to cling to the ashworm's back without being swept off, and without fear of suffocation.

This ability does not allow you to remain attached when the ashworm burrows through solid earth (but see the earth rider class feature, below), and you can travel in this manner for 1 minute per class level at a time before you and your mount must surface for air.

Full Mounted Attack (Ex): Beginning at 7th level, you can make a full attack when your mount moves more than 5 feet but no farther than its speed as a single move action.

You cannot combine this full attack with a charge action.

Spirited Worm (Ex): You gain Spirited Charge as a bonus feat at 8th level.

If you already have Spirited Charge (or gain it later), you gain an extra benefit: When mounted on your ashworm and using the charge action, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage (or 2d6 with a lance).

This ability does not extend to any other type of mount.

Earth Rider (Su): At 10th level, your bond with your mount is so close that you are able to stay with the ashworm even when it travels beneath packed earth.

During these trips, you have learned the trick of quickly adjusting your harness, while at the same time guiding your burrowing mount in an expert manner that allows you to cling to the ashworm's back without being swept off, and without fear of suffocation.

You can travel in this manner for 1 minute per class level at a time before you and your mount must surface for air.

An ashworm cannot burrow through solid rock.

If it is forced to stop burrowing (such as if it is slain) while you are on its back, you are subject to the normal hazards of being buried alive.

PLAYING AN ASHWORM DRAGOON

The aptitude, strength, and form of the ashworm, both in its ability to swim below earth and sand, as well as its lethal sting in conflict, are noble and even beautiful.

The bond you form with your mount is in part dependent on this appreciation.

The bond also relies upon the trust your ashworm mount places in you—it depends on you to provide adequate food, shelter, and care, and to use your skills to protect it in combat.

In return, you trust your mount to bear you without complaint, to stand brave when danger threatens, and to fight with a fury that matches your own when conflict inevitably descends.

The life of the ashworm dragoon is that of a wanderer. As a result, you must often leave the desert sands behind from time to time.

An ashworm, confident in its rider, will bear you equally well across packed earth, stone, or even cobbled city streets. When you travel away from the heat and sands, you must perforce deal with those who have never seen an ashworm, let alone a dragoon.

It is your burden to accept the gaping looks, the comments (some unkind), and other related behavior of the creatures you meet with dignified calm.

Your dignity goes to show the narrow-minded how noble the ashworm can be.

While a common mount, no matter how well trained, still requires a touch of the whip, your ashworm needs only a subtle hint to know your desire.

So, too, can you recognize the signs and postures of your ashworm, which lets you know when it is hungry, tired, or has a particular interest in some bit of the environment.

Letting the ashworm have its head from time to time is as important as expecting its complete loyalty in desperate situations.

COMBAT

You are an accomplished warrior in your own right, but with your ashworm mount, you are an even more potent force.

Merely riding your mount against nonmounted foes grants you a +1 attack bonus on all your melee attack rolls from higher ground (see page 157 of the Player's Handbook for details on mounted combat), a boon that cannot be overlooked.

Of course, you must keep your mount safe from reprisal attacks.

To that end, it should always be in the front of your mind to use your Mounted Combat feat.

This becomes all the easier when you reach 4th level and gain the relentless shield ability, and you can attempt to negate every attack against your mount, instead of just one attack per round.

At 3rd level, your bond with your ashworm mount becomes so refined that through clever use of the reins and positioning of your mount, the ashworm can make attacks boosted by your own base attack bonus.

Energized by the heat of battle, the ashworm produces even more potent poison for these particular attacks.

At 6th level, you can use the sand rider ability to sneak up behind enemies, position yourself for a charge, and otherwise use terrain to your advantage.

Consider wielding a lance—a charging ashworm can cause even the strongest foe to tremble, especially if you've taken the Spirited Charge feat and reached 8th level, when you gain the spirited worm class feature.

ADVANCEMENT

You fight from the exotic saddle of your ashworm.

To this end, use the feats you gain every four levels, as well as the bonus feats offered by the dragoon class, to enhance your mounted fighting ability.

Getting the Trample and Spirited Charge feats are good ways to leverage the abilities offered by the class, though of course you could just rely on getting them by way of the stamp into the sand and spirited worm class features, and use feat slots to build on another fighting strategy.

Socially, ashworm dragoons are considered somewhat akin to knights among desert people—they wander and take up quests, doing good (or evil), and otherwise engage in high adventure.

Often, these adventures lead away from the desert, especially if you team up with a group of likeminded wanderers who hail from greener lands.

RESOURCES

The obedient ashworm class feature assures that you will always be able to obtain a mount.

However, your best bet for procuring custom harness and tack, barding, and other particulars associated with the ashworm is from the roving communities of desert people most strongly associated with ashworms: the painted elves. The painted elves can provide you with this equipment at the prices you would expect to pay for a horse's accoutrements in a temperate region (roughly 60 gp).

ASHWORM DRAGOONS IN THE WORLD

Ashworm dragoons hail from the hot sands of desert regions, but many end up venturing far from where they first learned the art of husbanding an ashworm.

Without the ashworm herders, an ashworm dragoon would lack someone to teach him his skills.

ORGANIZATION

Several nomadic tribes, not all of them of the same race (but including some human tribes and several painted elf tribes), follow great herds of ashworms across the desert. While some desert nomads rely on raiding or hunting to survive, these “pastoralists” rely on the ashworm to meet all their needs.

Ashworm herders follow the creatures' seasonal migration patterns, which can vary from year to year.

The timing and destinations of migrations are determined primarily by the needs of the herd for water and food.

These nomadic societies do not create permanent settlements, but live in tents or other easily constructed dwellings year round.

Herding nomads are self-sufficient in procuring most other necessities.

Ashworms are rarely killed for family use alone.

Fresh meat is distributed throughout the community.

The tribes usually do not have the capability of adequately preserving meat, making this practice the most efficient use of the animals.

Not only does this tradition ensure that no spoilage takes place but also sets up numerous obligations to reciprocate within the community, promoting cooperation and solidarity.

The slaughter of an ashworm has become a ritual occasion to feed both the deities and the people.

Ashworm herders have distinct personality traits: They tend to be cooperative with each other and aggressive toward outsiders.

They make important decisions quickly and act on them independently.

Most important, they have a profound attachment to their animals.

An ashworm herder leader is someone who can direct the movements of the herd and decide on an optimum strategy for using scarce resources without having to consult others. The leader aggressively defends the herd by expanding territory at the expense of other tribes.

Members of herder tribes often acquire prestige and power by being brave and successful in raids, as well as by accumulating large ashworm herds.

As a result, there is often a great gap in status between a young man or woman and an elder of the herding tribe.

Unless bonding comes naturally, those interested in learning how to become an ashworm dragoon must travel awhile with a particular herding tribe to learn the secrets of ashworm bonding from a nomad elder.

NPC REACTIONS

Depending on the season, ashworm herders are either eagerly sought (during the trading season), or feared and fled from (during the raiding season).

However, ashworm dragoons stay separate from any one nomadic community more often than not, and popular accounts ascribe ashworm dragoons as following personal codes of knightlike honor.

Because of the stories of personal bravery and supposed honor, those with troubles in need of resolution sometimes seek out ashworm dragoons.

While not every dragoon follows a personal code of chivalry, most are happy to accept dangerous tasks in return for suitable recompense.

ASHWORM DRAGOON LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), or Gather Information can research the ashworm dragoons to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs when a higher result is rolled.

DC 10: Anyone can buy ashworms that are broken to the saddle, though they are somewhat skittish and their temperament suffers when their poisonous stinger is clipped.

DC 15: Some very skilled individuals learn how to ride wild ashworms with exceptional skill.

These ashworm dragoons ride a better breed of ashworm, and do not fear their own mount's sting.

DC 20: Those who seek to train as an ashworm dragoon must seek an elder of one of the nomadic herding tribes—an elder of the tribe is usually predisposed to train those who first offer a significant gift.

DC 30: The master ashworm dragoon can ride an ashworm below the sand without harm, and even through solid earth.

PCs trying to establish contact with an ashworm dragoon (for whatever reason) are best served by first finding one of the large tribes that herd ashworms.

Someone in the tribe will have the skills of a dragoon, or know where dragoons can be found.

ASHWORM DRAGOONS IN THE GAME

DRAGOON PALADINS

Ashworms have a poison attack, but many paladins forswear the use of poison. As such, most paladins who become ashworm dragoons go through a lengthy ritual known as the Consecration of the Sifting Sand. The daylong ritual includes wilderness fasting, prayer, and the removal of the ashworm's poison-producing glands (followed by cure spells so the ashworm doesn't suffer).

LORD OF TIDES

*"I am a physician with my finger on the pulse of the earth."
—Hintak'anai, a lord of tides*

Survival in the waste depends on the ability to locate drinkable water, and many desert dwellers have this innate sense.

The abilities of the lord of tides go beyond this basic need. You are in touch with the power of Kikanuti; as you grow in experience and power, you gain control over the lifeblood of the world.

You can sense the movement of magma, summon beings of elemental might, and even open portals to the Elemental Planes.

BECOMING A LORD OF TIDES

The ranger or druid class is the most likely to produce a lord of tides; Knowledge (nature) and Survival are class skills for you.

Clerics also enter this class, particularly those who specialize in magic dealing with water, although they must usually take ranks in Survival as a cross-class skill.

Wisdom is the most important ability for the class, both for Survival-related checks and spellcasting).

Questing dragoons can spread forth from the desert, and are potentially found in all arid and temperate environments.

This prestige class is for those who like an honest, stand-up fight, and it is most suited to fighters.

While the keeping and stabling of a mount might seem onerous to some, the benefits of a mount should not be dismissed lightly.

Moreover, because an ashworm can climb even sheer walls, no dragoon should worry about bringing an ashworm into a dungeon environment because of potential obstacles.

ADAPTATION

The ashworm dragoon should fit into any campaign with little or no customization.

TABLE 3-2: THE ASHWORM DRAGOON

HIT DIE: d10

Level	Base				Special
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Ashworm mount, saddle bonus
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Bonus feat
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Heightened sting
4th	+4	+4	+1	+1	Relentless shield
5th	+5	+4	+1	+1	Stamp into the sand
6th	+6	+5	+2	+2	Sand rider
7th	+7	+5	+2	+2	Full mounted attack
8th	+8	+6	+2	+2	Spirited worm
9th	+9	+6	+3	+3	Bonus feat
10th	+10	+7	+3	+3	Earth rider

When the Consecration of the Sifting Sand is complete, the ashworm has permanently lost its poison attack, but a mystic bond has developed between the ashworm and the paladin/dragoon. The ashworm gains the benefits of being a paladin's special mount (as described on page 44 of the Player's Handbook), and the dragoon can now call the ashworm from the celestial realms in which it now resides (often the white sands of the Mithardir layer of Arborea, despite that plane's chaotic tendencies).

Charisma is also important, since this class entails leadership responsibilities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Scorpion's Resolve.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: You must undergo an initiation ritual and return with a relic (see Playing a Lord of Tides, below).

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (geography), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Profession, Search, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the lord of tides prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a lord of tides, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Locate Potable Water (Su): This ability is similar to the locate water spell (see page 117), but in addition to determining the size and distance of water bodies, you can tell whether the water is drinkable.

If it is not drinkable, you can sense the reason, such as salt, poison, infectious organisms, or magical fouling.

The ability takes a full-round action to initiate and lasts for 10 minutes.

Heat Endurance: You gain Heat Endurance as a bonus feat.

If you already have the Heat Endurance feat, you instead gain Improved Heat Endurance.

Release the Water Within (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, you can painfully extract water from living creatures once per day, creating a puddle at their feet.

When you use this ability, a living creature you target within 30 feet must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + lord of tides level + your Wis modifier) or take 1d8 points of desiccation damage per lord of tides level.

This desiccation damage cannot be healed (even with cure magic) until the creature drinks at least 1 quart of water.

Creatures that fail their saves take damage and are fatigued until they drink a quart of water.

If you kill a living creature with this ability, the puddle of water around the body animates 1 round later into a water mephit, which you can control for up to 1 minute per lord of tides class level.

After the duration has expired, the mephit collapses back into a puddle of inanimate water.

At 4th, 7th, and 10th level, you gain more daily uses of this ability.

Burrow (Ex): On attaining 3rd level, you gain a burrow speed of 5 feet.

This ability allows movement only through relatively soft materials, such as earth and sand.

Many dungeon floors and buildings are made of stone, which you cannot pass through with this ability.

You do not gain any special ability to avoid suffocation.

Summon Elemental (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, you are able to summon a Large elemental once per day, which must have the water subtype.

The ability is otherwise identical to the summon monster VI spell (see page 287 of the Player's Handbook).

When you reach 8th level, this ability improves: You can summon either an elder elemental once per day or a Large elemental three times per day, which can have the water or fire subtype.

The ability is otherwise identical to the summon monster IX spell (see page 288 of the Player's Handbook).

Your effective caster level for this ability is equal to 10 + your lord of tides class level.

Elemental Jaunt (Su): At 9th level you gain the ability to shift to an elemental plane for short times, once per day as a standard action.

This ability is similar to the plane shift spell (see page 262 of the Player's Handbook), but you and up to eight willing creatures remain on the elemental plane for up to 1 minute per lord of tides class level.

This ability grants no protection against the environmental hazards of the chosen plane.

Elemental Portal (Su): This ability is the pinnacle of the art embodied in the lord of tides class.

When you reach 10th level, you can create a limited-use portal between the Material Plane and a location of your choice that you have visited on any elemental plane.

The portal appears as a two-dimensional circular aperture with a radius of 10 feet, which resembles an eddy of colored water standing vertically in the air.

The color of the water depends on the plane to which the portal connects: pale blue for the Elemental Plane of Air, green for the Elemental Plane of Earth, red for the Elemental Plane of Fire, and deep blue for the Elemental Plane of Water.

The portal you bring into being is usable twice per day and is keyed to a special object you make as part of the creation process.

The possessor of this portal key can activate the portal and pass through it as a standard action.

Any other creatures wishing to pass through must do so within 1 round after the key-holder opens it.

Once the portal is open, touching or passing through it instantly transports a creature to the elemental plane, provided the creature fits within its physical dimensions.

The portal grants no protection against the environmental hazards of that plane.

A solid object at the destination point prevents the portal's operation, but not the presence of a creature (the traveler is instead transported to the closest possible space to the original destination).

Unattended objects cannot pass through a portal, but a traveler can carry up to 850 pounds of equipment.

To create the portal, you must assemble raw materials (gold dust, precious stones, and refined alchemical substances) costing at least 30,000 gp; this cost is halved if the portal connects to the Elemental Plane of Water.

These materials must include a portion of the substance of an elemental from the desired plane, which is the main ingredient in the portal key.

Crafting the portal takes 1 day per 500 gp of materials expended, so a portal to the Elemental Plane of Water would require 30 days to complete, while other portals would take 60 days.

PLAYING A LORD OF TIDES

As a lord of tides, you are the spiritual center of your people.

They depend on you to find precious water and defend that resource from hostile beings.

You also hold the power of life and death—the wrath of elemental beings is at your command, and you do not brook disrespect or disobedience.

You are not capricious or cruel, though.

Life in the waste is harsh, and your followers must understand that.

Among the bhuka, a lord of tides usually heads up the group of shamans responsible for weather magic and paying proper honor to Kikanuti and her children.

You lead the seasonal ceremonies and initiate new members, and you have an honored seat at the council of elders.

Nevertheless, you answer to the community's Grandmother, who is generally the highest-level druid in the community.

Some bhuka shamans who grow too proud rebel against the Grandmother's authority, only to find that their elemental magic cannot hold against that of one blessed by Kikanuti.

They are cast out into the wilderness, becoming bitter wanderers who long to take vengeance on any isolated bhuka they might find.

Sometimes an outcast lord of tides sells her services to others, especially enemies of the bhuka, or attempts to start her own cult.

On rare occasions, bhuka shamans train particularly gifted members of other races to become lords of tides.

This selection is a singular honor, and a particular community usually only confers this honor on one outsider in its history.

COMBAT

A lord of tides is not a front-line combatant.

Your strength lies in supporting your companions by directing them to important resources and summoning powerful elemental creatures to assist them in battle.

Existing combat and spellcasting abilities from your original class are still valuable, especially if you have magical healing.

You can use your burrowing ability to set up ambushes or to move stealthily beneath opponents, then surface to set up flanking opportunities.

Alternatively, you can hang back behind the front lines, bringing elemental allies into combat to harry and flank enemies.

Your elemental jaunt ability is a great last-ditch escape if things go badly for the party.

If you are fighting on your home turf, it pays to have set up an elemental portal.

Since it is keyed to you, enemies will not be able to follow easily—and if they do, you and your party can return, using summoned creatures to hold off enemies so that they are stranded on the elemental plane.

ADVANCEMENT

Among the bhuka, a character aspiring to a career as a lord of tides always begins as a lesser druid (shaman) serving the tribe.

The current leader of the shamans directs your tasks, which usually support the community's water needs.

You and the tribe's other druids perform ritual magic to help crops and moderate the weather.

As you become more experienced, you begin to lead some of the lesser rituals and participate in decision-making at the shamans' circle.

Most shamans continue along this ceremonial path and grow in spellcasting ability in the usual fashion.

A given community only has one lord of tides.

When it is time to choose a new lord of tides, usually because the present one has set out to found a new settlement or is dying of old age, any candidate undertakes a special quest.

You must go into the desert with no food, water, or other supplies aside from basic protection from the sun, and you must survive there unaided for a month.

You also must commune with Kikanuti's children and return with proof of this in the form of a sacred object.

In practice, this quest entails summoning or otherwise contacting an elemental and asking for a portion of its substance to craft a fetish (a sort of talisman) in the form of your phratry's Emergence relic (see the bhuka description, page 39).

When you return to the community, you present this fetish to the Grandmother, who acknowledges your achievement. You wear the fetish constantly from that point on.

If you advance far enough to craft an elemental portal, the fetish becomes the key that allows you to open it.

A key is passed down through generations after the death of a portal's creator.

Nonbhuka lords of tides are expected to return to a bhuka community from time to time to relate their exploits to the gathered listeners.

RESOURCES

As a member of the shamans' circle, you have access to the shared knowledge of the community's ancestral shamans. You also have the ear of the elders and particularly the community's Grandmother.

If you need something, your influence is likely to work in your favor.

Sometimes you will have to go out adventuring to deal with a threat to the community or to establish a new community by locating untapped resources, or perhaps to set up an elemental portal around which a settlement can be built.

In such cases, you are accompanied by other shamans, who are mid- to high-level druids themselves, as well as rangers and other warriors—a formidable force to challenge.

Nonbhukas that do not dwell full-time in a community have access to these resources only when they return to the community where they gained their training.

LORDS OF TIDES IN THE WORLD

In the waste, water is more precious than gold.

A desert-dwelling community needs a lord of tides to establish itself if it lacks access to a river or a year-round supply of water.

Wandering lords of tides sell their services dearly to those who need them.

If adventurers who are not native to this harsh realm want to find a lord of tides, they usually need to negotiate with the followers of a "freelance" member of the class.

A bhuka community does not hire out the services of its resident lord of tides.

If the DM runs a planes-hopping setting, the presence of a lord of tides allows for the creation of a waste environment peppered with elemental portals.

Since each portal is keyed to its creator, using them is a challenge that probably involves dealing with the lord of tides who controls the portal—or seizing the key by force from hostile cultists.

An adventuring party that includes a lord of tides can found its own base of operations, serving as a source of adventure seeds and challenges from hostile creatures that wish to seize the portal.

ORGANIZATION

As a lord of tides in a bhuka community, your unique status ensures that you are an important member of any bhuka gathering, next to only the Grandmother in power even if not a member of the bhuka race.

Many lords of tides delegate their responsibilities to others while they are absent from the community.

In the community, it is your responsibility to set the schedule for ceremonies in observation of the Emergence. These times correspond roughly to midsummer but do not always fall on the same day each year.

Your sensitivity to the movement of the deep earth allows you to determine the optimum moment for harmony with Kikanuti.

You are the caretaker of the ritual pit or sacred cave, and you lead any rites that take place there (see the bhuka description, page 39).

If the community contains an elemental portal (whether created by you or by a previous lord of tides), you control access to it by always wearing the portal key.

You might also embark on missions to locate needed resources or learn about threats that face the community. You begin each day leading ritual salutations to Kikanuti and call upon her children to live peaceably among your people.

The entire village participates in this observance, which takes place in the central plaza and culminates with the passing of a communal bowl of fresh spring water. During the day, you check on the community's water supply, ensuring that it remains clean and abundant, and sensing whether changes in the underground environment could pose a threat.

You consult with the shamans and the Grandmother on matters of ritual and social importance.

If the community has grown too large, you plan a migration to found a new one, which includes locating a suitable supply of water and ensuring it is free of threats.

If you are an outcast lord of tides, you have usually severed your connection to Kikanuti, instead attempting to spread your influence by means of power over the elements, especially water.

You might find service as a priest of a cruel desert deity, such as Azul or Set, claiming the deity's favor and demanding sacrifices on his behalf.

Primitive tribes of the waste are likely to fall under your influence because of your status as an outcast lord of tides.

REACTIONS

Bhuka communities are deeply respectful of a lord of tides. The populace has a generally friendly attitude, and its shamans are usually helpful.

Whenever you travel to another village, you will be greeted with feasting and an invitation to lead a welcoming ceremony.

If you lead a migration to found a new settlement, you are conferred the highest honor by any bhuka group you encounter.

On the other hand, an outcast lord of tides is seen as an object of fear and is shunned by all bhuka.

The shamans and the Grandmother of any bhuka settlement are automatically hostile.

Even wandering bhuka who are not part of communities distrust a shunned lord of tides and are generally unfriendly—even these wanderers retain a sense of connection to Kikanuti and despise those who have obviously rejected her.

Enemies of the bhuka people, or those who compete with them for scarce resources, know that a lord of tides is the key to a community's viability.

Crude waste-dwellers, especially scabland orcs, resent a lord of tides's power and often try to capture one for their own benefit, or else try to kill her to deprive their enemies of her strength.

LORD OF TIDES LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (geography) can research the lords of tides to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs when a higher result is rolled.

DC 10: The bhuka people have powerful leaders called lords of tides, who have the power to find and control water.

DC 15: A lord of tides can summon elementals and even travel to the elemental planes.

DC 20: A lord of tides can open portals to elemental planes and controls all access to these portals.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific lord of tides in a bhuka community, or learn about an outcast lord of tides who has set up a cult in the waste.

LORDS OF TIDES IN THE GAME

An NPC lord of tides can provide a great adventure hook if she is leading a migration to a new community.

The bhuka are not a warlike people, so they might need to hire combat experts to protect the expedition as it crosses hostile territory.

If a threat emerges from the elemental planes, an NPC lord of tides might seek adventurers to enter a portal and deal with the threat.

A fanatical cult in the train of an outcast lord of tides makes a great ongoing adversary for a party.

As a lord of tides, a player character might be a go-between for the adventurers and a bhuka community, which could serve as an important waypoint or outpost for several adventures set in and around the waste.

Alternatively, she might be an exile seeking to regain her status by doing great deeds in the world.

Another possibility is a lord of tides who has lost her community for some reason, which might be the case if warring neighbors destroy a community.

The search to find a new community and return life to the blasted waste can be the ongoing motivation for a member of the prestige class.

ADAPTATION

The lord of tides prestige class can be adapted to different sorts of environments if the campaign is not set primarily in the waste.

The ability to locate water is less important in the jungle or the frostfell, but being able to tell if water is good to drink still matters, and the ability to summon and control elementals can be adapted to any setting.

SAND SHAPER

“Sand shapers have been dead for three thousand years.

They are a myth—a legend to frighten small children and weak-hearted cowards.

They are ghosts.

Mirages.

But, still, I don't like to go out into the ruins where they once ruled...too dangerous.”

Once dreaded throughout the waste, and long thought vanished from the face of the world, sand shapers use the power of the desert itself to conquer and rule an empire in the heart of the desert.

Though they did die out, the secret of their power remains for those with the courage to find it and the mettle to prove themselves worthy to wield it.

You few who walk the path of the sand shaper are living legends to your allies, or nightmares reborn to your enemies.

You are part prophet, part priest, part magician, and part assassin.

In time, you might even be a conqueror, as well—the first in a new dynasty of sand shapers.

BECOMING A SAND SHAPER

Because the class offers advancement of a character's existing arcane spellcasting, typically only bards, wizards, and sorcerers become sand shapers.

More wizards than sorcerers take the prestige class, because sorcerers have to buy ranks in both Knowledge (nature) and Survival as cross-class skills, and they usually lack the wizard's extra skill points from a high Intelligence score.

Bards qualify for the class easily, but they give up improvement of their bardic music to do so.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any neutral.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feat: Touchstone (City of the Dead).

Spells or Spell-Like Abilities: Arcane caster level 5th.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Heal, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (nature), Listen, Profession, Ride, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sand shaper prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 9th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a sand shaper, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Dust Magic (Ex): Your magic is more powerful in wastelands environments.

When casting arcane spells in any sort of waste terrain, your caster level is considered to be one level higher than your actual caster level.

Even in nonwaste environments, as long as you carry 15 or more pounds of sand as part of your equipment, you gain the benefit of this class feature.

Desert Insight: As a member of this class, you gain knowledge of additional spells (see the list below).

If you were a caster who previously prepared spells (such as a wizard), you can prepare these spells like any other spell to which you have access.

If you are a spontaneous caster (such as a sorcerer), these spells are available to you like any other spell you know. You cannot cast a spell of higher level than the maximum spell level you can cast.

These spells become options for you when you gain access to the appropriate spell level.

1st—bear's endurance, bull's strength, cat's grace, endure elements, parching touch†, speak with animals, summon desert ally I†.

2nd—eagle's splendor, fox's cunning, heat metal, owl's wisdom, resist energy, summon desert ally II†, summon swarm.

3rd—control sand†, desiccate†, dispel magic, dominate animal, haboob†, slipsand†, summon desert ally III†, sunstroke†, tormenting thirst†, wind wall.

4th—blast of sand†, summon desert ally IV†, wall of sand†, wither†.

5th—choking sands†, flaywind burst†, flesh to salt†, summon desert ally V†, transmute sand to stone†, transmute stone to sand†.

6th—awaken sand†, mummify†, sandstorm†, summon desert ally VI†.

7th—mass flesh to salt†, summon desert ally VII†.

8th—summon desert ally VIII†, whirlwind.

9th—summon desert ally IX†.

† New spell described in Chapter 5.

Sand Shape (Sp): All sand shapers know how to magically sculpt the soil of the waste (generally desert sand, dust, or gravel) into mundane objects.

You can create any solid object you can imagine, provided you have access to a sufficient quantity of the appropriate soil and you can successfully make a caster level check. The DC of the check is determined by the size and complexity of the item:

Item Size	DC
1 cu. ft. or less	-5
1.1–2.0 cu. ft.	0
2.1–4.0 cu. ft.	5
4.1–8.0 cu. ft.	10
8.1–12.0 cu. ft.	15
12.1–16.0 cu. ft.	20
16.1–24.0 cu. ft.	25
24.1–30.0 cu. ft.	30

Item Complexity	Modifier
Fine details	+2
Functioning tool	+2
Functioning armor/weapon	+5
Multiple parts	+5
Masterwork version	+10
Moving parts	+10

For example, Osrutek, a 6th-level wizard/8th-level sand shaper, decides to use his sand shape ability to create barding for his horse.

The DM determines that the total volume of the barding is about 6 cubic feet, and so assigns his attempt a base DC of 10.

Because barding is armor (+5), and consists of multiple parts (+5), the DM assigns an additional +10 modifier to the DC, bringing it up to 20.

Osrutek's caster level check bonus is +13, so he must roll a 7 or higher to complete the barding.

Each attempt to create an item requires a number of minutes equal to the DC.

(Osrutek's attempt to create horse barding would require 20 minutes).

You can take 10 on this check.

Created items persist for 10 minutes per sand shaper level, and can only be solid objects; you cannot use this ability to create liquids, gases, or living matter.

The objects created have no magical properties, though they radiate faint transmutation magic.

You can create and maintain a number of objects equal to your sand shaper level.

If you create an additional item, the item that has been in existence the longest reverts back to sand.

Items you create using this ability otherwise persist for the duration of this use of the ability, regardless of their distance from you.

If you use the alchemical item shapeland (see page 102) to create an item, you do not count that item against your limit, in addition to the other benefits provided by shapeland.

All items created in this fashion have hardness 5 and hit points according to their size: Fine 1; Diminutive 2; Tiny 3; Small 5; Medium 8; Large 10; Huge 15; Gargantuan 20; Colossal 25.

Sandform (Sp): At 2nd level and higher, you have the ability to transform your body into animated sand, along with all your gear, once per day for up to 1 minute + 1 round per sand shaper level.

This ability works in all other respects like the spell of the same name (see page 119).

Sand Stride (Sp): At 3rd level and higher, you can fly as by means of the overland flight spell once per day.

You must begin and end your flight on a square of waste terrain; if your movement crosses a different type of terrain, your flight ends immediately, dropping you abruptly (albeit safely) to the ground.

Improved Sand Shape (Sp): At 4th level, you learn to magically sculpt the soil of the waste (generally desert sand, dust, or gravel) into animate objects.

You can create one of the creatures described below, provided a sufficient quantity of the appropriate soil (3 cubic feet unless otherwise noted) is available and you can successfully make a caster level check; the DC is based on the specific creature.

Every creature you create has damage reduction 5-, but sand shaped creatures reduced to 0 hit points are destroyed.

Each attempt to create a creature requires a number of minutes equal to the DC indicated for the creature.

You can take 10 on this check.

Created items persist for 1 minute + 1 round per sand shaper level.

You can create and maintain a number of creatures and objects (when using sand shape and improved sand shape simultaneously) equal to your sand shaper level.

If you create an additional creature or item, the creature or item that has been in existence the longest reverts to sand. Creatures you create using this ability otherwise persist for the duration of this use of the ability (unless otherwise noted), regardless of their distance from you.

Available creatures include the following.

Desert Eagle (DC 20): With its superior vision and ability to range far ahead and above, the desert eagle is the perfect scout.

It responds to your mental commands, and you can, as a full-round action, see things from the eagle's perspective (using the eagle's Spot modifier and point of view).

It is in all other respects identical to a normal eagle (see page 272 of the Monster Manual).

Dust Jackal (DC 15): A dust jackal is a master of stealth and cunning; it can creep virtually undetected into hidden places and enemy encampments, and there either carry out attacks or retrieve small items.

A dust jackal is otherwise the same as an ordinary jackal (see the small dog entry, page 271 of the Monster Manual).

Golden Camel (DC 15): A golden camel is the animal of choice for bearing burdens.

It responds only to your mental commands.

Otherwise, it is identical to an ordinary camel (see page 270 of the Monster Manual).

Unlike other creatures created with this ability, a golden camel persists for 10 minutes per sand shaper level.

It appears equipped with a saddle, tack, and harness.

Creating this sand-shaped creation requires 10 cubic feet of soil.

Mirage Hound (DC 15): A mirage hound is a faithful companion that fearlessly guards its creator at all times. It can be commanded to attack, but it does so only if it can remain within 20 feet of you.

A mirage hound is otherwise the same as an ordinary small dog (see the small dog entry, page 271 of the Monster Manual).

Sand Scorpion (DC 20): A sand scorpion is identical to a Tiny monstrous scorpion (see page 287 of the Monster Manual). You can mentally command it, and it is most often used as a tool of assassination.

Creating this sand-shaped creation requires only 1 cubic foot of soil.

Sun Steed (DC 15): A sun steed is a courageous mount that can be ridden into battle as though it were a light warhorse (see page 274 of the Monster Manual).

It appears equipped with a saddle, tack, and harness.

Creating this sand-shaped creation requires 10 cubic feet of soil.

Improved Dust Magic (Ex): At 5th level, your affinity with the waste increases, and your spells grow even more potent. Three times per day, when you cast an arcane spell in any sort of waste terrain, you can empower, enlarge, extend, silence, or still your spell, as the appropriate metamagic feats.

These options have the same general effect as the metamagic feats of the same name, except that they do not use up higher-level spell slots, and even if you prepare spells, you can decide to alter them with this ability as you cast a spell.

None of these abilities stack with the benefits of the metamagic feats of the same name—for example, you cannot use improved dust magic to empower an empowered fireball.

You can, however, maximize a spell already modified by a different metamagic feat.

Using this ability with a spontaneously cast spell increases the casting time as described on page 88 of the Player's Handbook.

You gain an additional use of this ability at 7th level and at 9th level.

At 9th level and higher, uses of this ability count as uses of greater dust magic (see below).

Desert Slumber (Ex): At 7th level and higher, if you lie in the soil of the waste (generally desert sand, dust, or gravel), you regrow severed body members, mend broken bones, and restore ruined organs as though a regenerate spell had been cast upon you.

The soil must be at least deep enough, and occupy a large enough area, to cover all but your face.

You can use this ability once per day.

Greater Dust Magic (Ex): By 9th level, your affinity with the waste has almost reached its peak.

Five times per day, when you cast spells in any sort of waste terrain, you can choose to maximize or widen your spell. Uses of this ability and of improved dust magic (see above) come from the same pool, so you can use both abilities a total of five times per day.

For example, you could empower four times per day and maximize once, or widen three times and enlarge two times.

These options have the same general effect as the metamagic feats of the same name, except that they do not use up higher-level spell slots, and even if you prepare spells, you can decide to alter them with this ability as you cast a spell.

None of these abilities stack with the metamagic feats of the same name; that is, you cannot use greater dust magic to maximize a maximized ice storm, for example.

You can, however, maximize a spell already modified by a different metamagic feat.

You can also combine greater dust magic with improved dust magic—maximizing an enlarged ice storm, for example. Using this ability with a spontaneously cast spell increases the casting time as described on page 88 of the Player's Handbook.

Desert Shroud (Ex): At 10th level, you gain the ability to come back to life under certain conditions.

If the remains of your deceased body lie in the soil of the waste (generally desert sand, dust, or gravel) for 10 minutes, you are restored to life as though a resurrection spell had been cast upon you, provided you have not been dead for more than one hundred years.

The soil must be deep enough, and occupy a large enough area, to cover your entire body (based on your size when the effect is complete).

PLAYING A SAND SHAPER

While it's sometimes helpful for the purpose of group cooperation to let others believe otherwise, you are in charge.

You are in command of the arcane secrets of ancient rulers, so why shouldn't you rule today?

Granted, some of the reason for this attitude might simply be the voices of your sand shaper predecessors talking through you, but their acceptance of you as one of their own is proof enough that you were born to command others.

Of course, the strength of your convictions fades somewhat as you leave the waste.

The power of the sand shapers extends only to the lands they once ruled—the deserts—and if you roam too far from their former empire, your power and influence wane. You become little more than the spellcaster you were before, albeit still with the magic of sand shaping at your disposal.

Your overall goal is to ensure that you seek adventuring in the place where you are strongest: in the waste.

COMBAT

Subtlety only impresses those who are subtle themselves. To truly awe your subjects, you must use the full power at your command.

Hurl the very wrath of the waste against your foes—but reserve your greatest powers for your greatest enemies. Others can rely on surprise and sneak attacks; you work through fear and intimidation.

In fact, your first action in any combat situation should be to take as much fight out of your opponents as possible, leaving them easy prey for your allies.

Always be prepared to fight to the death; if you retreat, those enemies—and anyone else they talk to—will not fear you next time.

At 4th level, when you learn to shape the sand, you never need fear being without your equipment.

You can actually allow your foes to “capture” you—then destroy them from within.

In fact, your only major concern is likely to be that your enemies might immediately execute you, out of fear that you will live up to your reputation.

Since you probably do not rely much on armor, and your hit points are not likely to be high, the attacks of those too ignorant to fear you—which includes a great many beasts and animals—could prove to be your undoing.

Once you reach 7th level, you truly begin to draw upon your full legacy of power.

Your ability to regenerate means that even your lack of hit points is less of a problem.

You really only need to fear losing your head—though a sufficient quantity of blows can still destroy you, if you have no opportunity to lie in the soil and restore your body to its proper, healthy shape.

When you reach 10th level, even losing your head holds no real danger for you; the desert can bring you back to life, even if all that is left of you is dust.

ADVANCEMENT

You advance in the ranks of the sand shapers—both those living and long dead—by surpassing their achievements. Considering that the oldest sand shapers once built an empire, you had better be prepared for a long and arduous trek to your goal.

Initially, focus on consolidating your power.

Curry favor with your allies.

Make short work of your enemies.

If you have time, seek out other sand shapers and work with them to plan a return to the glory days of the sand shaper empire.

Locate and retrieve lost sand shaper artifacts.

Above all else, leave your mark on the world.

Remind everyone of the power of the sand shapers.

Your overall goal is to develop a following.

No matter how powerful you become as a sand shaper, dead is dead—unless you have loyal followers willing to locate your remains and use them to restore you to life.

Hone your skill in Diplomacy and Intimidate foremost, and remember to spend skill points on Sense Motive.

It never hurts to ensure that your loyal subjects are as loyal as you believe them to be.

Spending some of your accumulated treasure on them couldn't hurt, either; just because you wield the power of ancient emperors does not mean that you command as many subjects as your predecessors.

RESOURCES

The desert is your greatest resource, so you should develop ways of keeping it close.

You might use anything from a helm of teleportation to a fast horse, but it is important to have a ready means of reaching the place where your dust magic serves you best.

Even more to the point, you need to know that should you become a 10th-level sand shaper, you can lie down to die in the sands—when the sands blow over you, you will be brought back to life to carry on with the restoration of the sand shaper empire.

Otherwise, the extent of your empire is what you carve out of the world around you.

No one is simply going to give you a palace, a treasury, and an army of followers to guard them, so you have to take or make them.

SAND SHAPERS IN THE WORLD

Sand shapers no longer have much of a place in the world; their empire died out a few thousand years ago.

Those who have since become sand shapers are but remnants of the former power and glory of that empire.

Any drive they feel to restore that empire is either some misguided urge to write themselves into the sand shaper legend—or some more sinister influence, perhaps exerted by the long-dead spirits of the original sand shapers.

ORGANIZATION

Sand shapers rarely work together.

They might strive for common goals from time to time, but only for short periods.

Each sand shaper feels some urge to be in charge, and that does not include sharing command.

Conversely, sand shapers feel no qualms about assembling a band of companions who share a more or less equal role in adventures.

(A sand shaper might even reward them with ministerial posts once he has reestablished the sand shaper empire).

The only real organization that a sand shaper will work with is a corps of loyal servants and followers: subjects for his new empire.

The most successful new sand shaper so far, Osrutek the First, divides his time between seeking relics of the first sand shapers and ruling over the small kingdom of outlaws and peasants he has subjugated since first becoming a sand shaper.

Osrutek, a wizard, is the most powerful of the known sand shapers, though he has not yet learned how to rise from the dead.

Until he does, he travels nowhere without a retinue of servants and guards, all of whom are devoted—mostly through sheer fear of him—to protecting him from harm. Osrutek has promised the most skilled among his followers (and therefore, the most dangerous to him) portions of his empire to rule to ensure their loyalty.

He has no intention of keeping those promises, however. Osrutek needs these lieutenants because he is on a crusade to eliminate all other sand shapers, whom he considers “pretenders to his dynasty”.

Thus far, he has slain three and claimed their riches for his treasury.

His single-minded attitude toward this end might prove his undoing, however; each sand shaper he slays is more incentive for others to band together against him.

NPC REACTIONS

Commoners fear sand shapers, perhaps because sand shapers do not seem to care what happens to the common folk—so long as the sand shapers get what they want.

Most waste-dwellers have no treasures worth taking, and they serve better alive than dead.

Nobles have much more to fear—especially if they count relics of the sand shaper empire among their wealth.

Most people tend to stay out of a sand shaper's way (if they recognize him).

While sand shapers might be obsessed with resurrecting their ancient empire, they generally do not attack anything that moves.

They become violent only when they have a reason to do so—though, unfortunately, they count “being interfered with” among such reasons.

Since most people never know what a sand shaper's business is, nearly anything could constitute interference.

Thus, the best policy is to leave a sand shaper alone—unless, of course, he shows up at the city gates with an army.

The possibility that a sand shaper has targeted a kingdom for conquest is really the only good reason to offer resistance.

It is important to be certain; antagonizing a sand shaper out of fear that he might attack you might turn out to be a self-fulfilling prophecy.

SAND SHAPER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) can research the sand shapers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs when a higher result is rolled.

DC 10: The sand shapers were a cult of spellcasters that created an empire in the waste three thousand years ago. They were eventually defeated, and their cities and palaces are now nothing more than ruins.

Rumors say that some of them survived, though these are probably superstitions.

DC 15: The sand shapers were ruthless conquerors, slaying those who opposed them and enslaving those too weak to fight back.

They were able to use powerful magic that drew upon the waste to call down sandstorms and bury their enemies.

DC 20: The magic of the sand shapers lives on, slumbering in the ancient ruins.

It is said that those brave enough to journey to the City of the Dead can unlock the secret of the sand shapers' dust magic and become sand shapers themselves.

DC 30: Over the centuries, many people have unlocked the secrets of the sand shapers and become sand shapers themselves.

Some have been defeated, others have vanished into the wastes, and one or two are rumored to have disguised themselves as mighty wizards, even now serving as court magicians to mighty rulers—though they are most likely waiting for the right time to strike.

The only known sand shaper is Osrutek, who occupies the ancient ruins at Sohlak; he is clearly building an army, and a war of conquest is inevitable.

The only question is when it will come.

PCs trying to establish contact with a sand shaper (for whatever reason) should make a DC 25 Gather Information check to track one down.

Whether or not the sand shaper is willing to listen depends largely on his alignment.

However, if the PCs have some artifact of the original sand shapers, give them a +2 circumstance bonus on the check. A sand shaper who is any alignment but neutral good is not willing to work for the PCs, though he might agree to work with them for a time—especially if it means expanding his own personal empire.

SAND SHAPERS IN THE GAME

Sand shapers play a role in a running subplot in a campaign—the sand shapers' desire for conquest—and so might be a bit difficult for a DM to wedge in. Still, their desire to recover ancient treasures can certainly drive a traditional dungeon-crawl campaign set in the wastes.

This prestige class is likely to appeal to players who enjoy head-on confrontations and empire-building.

DMs should give a sand shaper plenty of opportunities to flex his magical muscles, substituting a little real estate and a few followers for gold and magic items now and again.

A DM's hardest job in a campaign involving a sand shaper will be making sure the sand shaper doesn't dominate the spotlight.

The DM should give other PCs plenty of reasons to adventure outside the wastes (where the sand shaper's powers are less potent), and perhaps even plan the campaign around the idea that the other PCs might one day have to stop their sand shaper companion from conquering the surrounding land.

ADAPTATION

The sand shaper is a waste specialist, and as such is not well suited to campaigns that don't take place in a desert environment.

Adapting this prestige class mostly involves altering its waste-dependent abilities, such as dust magic, and replacing them with those appropriately suited to a prominent environment type in the campaign.

The core mechanics of the abilities can remain the same; generally, only the flavor of the abilities needs to be changed.

SCION OF TEM-ET-NU

"You have abused the gifts of Tem-Et-Nu by using the rivers to make war upon her people.

I am sent by the high priestess to put a stop to your depredations. So, to answer your question, that thrashing you hear from the bowels of this vessel is the sound of an enraged crocodile tearing a hole in the bottom of your war barge."

—Karlott, a scion of Tem-Et-Nu

Paladins of the temple of Tem-Et-Nu are sometimes selected to become the guardians of the rivers. The waterways of the wastelands are sacred to the river deity, and the source of life and livelihood for the plains people.

It is given to you to enforce the deity's laws and ensure that those who misuse the river are punished.

To that end, you can draw upon your ever-increasing martial skills, but you must also learn the many ways of the river, its strengths, and how to tap those strengths when you need its power most.

BECOMING A SCION OF TEM-ET-NU

The paladin class is the most straightforward path to becoming a scion of Tem-Et-Nu; Diplomacy is a class skill, and the base attack bonus requirement keeps many classes out until they reach at least 7th level.

However, you need not have all of your levels devoted to paladin; there is just enough wiggle room to take a level in another class, such as cleric.

Strength and Constitution (for combat) and Charisma (for your spells and interpersonal skills) are key abilities for you.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks, Swim 4 ranks.

Special: You must be blessed by Tem-Et-Nu in a ritual held in one of her temples.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Handle Animal, Heal, Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Ride, Sense Motive, Survival, and Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the scion of Tem-Et-Nu prestige class.

Buoyancy (Ex): Upon entering this class, you become buoyant in water, giving you a +4 circumstance bonus on Swim checks.

Additionally, your armor has been blessed by a cleric of Tem-Et-Nu, which means the armor check penalty for your armor is not doubled for the purposes of Swim checks.

If you ever lose your armor, or if you want a new suit blessed, a cleric of Tem-Et-Nu can perform the ceremony to bless your armor at any temple devoted to your patron deity.

The blessing is free of charge for scions.

River Mastery (Ex): As a member of this class, you gain a +1 insight bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls against river-dwelling aquatic creatures.

Spellcasting: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a scion of Tem-Et-Nu, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

River's Vigor (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can emulate the vigor and unstoppable power of the river during a spring flood, gaining 5 temporary hit points per scion class level for 1 minute per scion class level once per day.

From 6th level on, you can use river's vigor two times per day (the temporary hit points gained with each use of this ability do not stack).

River Walk (Sp): At 3rd level and higher, you can tread on river water as though you were affected by a water walk spell from.

You can use this ability once per day for every three scion of Tem-Et-Nu levels.

Your caster level for this ability is equal to your class level.

The River's Life Is Mine (Su): At 3rd level and higher, you gain fast healing 5 whenever you begin your turn in or adjacent to a square containing a river.

Smite Evil (Su): Beginning at 4th level, once per day you can attempt to smite evil with one normal melee attack. You add your Charisma bonus (if any) to your attack roll and deal an extra 1 point of damage per class level.

If you accidentally smite a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for the day.

You must declare the use of the smite before making the attack roll.

Starting at 8th level, you can smite twice per day.

If you have levels in a class that grant a smite evil ability (such as paladin), you gain extra uses of that ability, and the levels of that class stack with your scion of Tem-Et-Nu class levels to determine the power of your smite evil ability.

Divine Power (Sp): At 5th level, you gain the benefit of divine power, as the spell, once per day.

Your caster level is equal to your class level.

If you activate this ability while submerged up to your waist (or deeper) in a river, the amount of time you benefit from the ability does not count toward the duration of the effect until you move out of water of this depth.

Once the duration begins to count down, however, it does not stop even if you proceed to immerse yourself in waist-deep water.

At 10th level, you can use this ability twice per day.

Control Water (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, you can use control water, as the spell, three times per day.

Your caster level is equal to your class level.

Restoring Immersion (Sp): When you attain 7th level, you become able to draw upon the power of Tem-Et-Nu once per day to benefit from a restoration effect if you immerse yourself completely in water for a short time.

Restoring negative levels requires that you be immersed for 1 minute per negative level.

Curing ability score damage requires 5 rounds per point, and restoring drained ability score points requires 1 minute per point.

You can receive more than one benefit during each period of immersion you undergo.

For example, you could restore three negative levels and four drained ability points by remaining immersed for 7 consecutive minutes.

Your caster level for this ability is equal to your class level.

Divert River (Sp): At 9th level, you become capable of changing the course of a river for a short time.

With slow-moving rivers, this is the equivalent of casting both versions of control water simultaneously: lower water downstream of your location, and raise water aimed at where you divert the river.

Water overflows the river's bank where you specify, rather than following the natural contours of the river.

With fast-moving rivers, the effect is more dramatic: The river downstream is affected as though the lower water version of control water had been cast, and a flashflood effect, as the spell (see page 114), originates at the point on the river that you specify.

Regardless of the speed of the river, the effect lasts for 2 hours unless you choose to end it sooner.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a scion of Tem-Et-Nu may continue advancing as a paladin.

PLAYING A SCION OF TEM-ET-NU

Your top priority in any mission is to ensure that no mortal agency does damage to the waterways or preys upon those who depend on the rivers.

Beyond that, you are free to wander far and wide, though you need to be cognizant of your duty to your deity and make sure that your adventuring does not interfere with that duty.

If possible, enlist your allies to help you.

Strike a bargain, if necessary, to aid them in their adventuring if they help you achieve your greater goal of serving Tem-Et-Nu.

Even though you might be the only one in your group who serves Tem-Et-Nu, you need not play the loner; the wise warrior knows when to seek the aid of friends and allies.

Of course, the cult of Tem-Et-Nu would prefer that you work with those who worship the river deity, but it is willing to overlook such a small matter—provided none of your allies are evil.

COMBAT

Although paladins of Tem-Et-Nu have a reputation for straightforward combat tactics, this reputation is undeserved, and scions of Tem-Et-Nu drive that point home.

You might agree to meet an enemy alone in single combat, but that doesn't mean you haven't planned for a betrayal on the enemy's part.

Most of the features of the scion of Tem-Et-Nu class are not designed to improve your combat prowess, but rather to increase your versatility.

The ability to walk upon water (gained at 3rd level) allows you to approach vessels on the river while wearing full armor.

The ability to raise and lower water (gained at 6th level) allows you to aid or hinder the movement of boats, or perhaps to expose aquatic enemies to one's nonswimming allies.

Finally, the 9th-level ability to temporarily divert an entire river allows you to direct water where it is needed most (for crops and such), and also to beach enemy ships.

ADVANCEMENT

Your advancement is in the hands of the clerics of Tem-Et-Nu; you are their servant.

Initially, you travel up and down the river, visiting farms and fishing villages, helping them where and how you can. When you take your first level in the scion prestige class, you act as a river marshal, not only helping out but also actively taking part in the communities you visit, as though each one were your home.

As time passes, you are expected to teach and organize these communities so they can operate without your direct supervision.

The goal is to eventually select a likely community in which to build another temple to Tem-Et-Nu, thus spreading the river deity's influence even further.

RESOURCES

Your best resource as a scion of Tem-Et-Nu is the temple of Tem-Et-Nu.

Although the temple cannot provide everything for you, its clerics can bless your armor (helping you maintain your buoyancy class feature), provide you with information (both on current events and ancient lore), and heal your injuries (and those of any individuals aiding you) free of charge.

So long as you adventure close to Tem-Et-Nu's riverside temples, you always have a place to rest for the night without worrying about being ambushed by wandering villains.

If you travel upon the river, you can always borrow passage on one of the temple's river barges—though they only make stops at other temples.

So long as your companions are not evil, and you vouch that they are assisting your work in some way, these resources are also available to them.

SCIONS OF TEM-ET-NU IN THE WORLD

If the PCs adventure on or near a major waterway in the waste, they will eventually encounter a scion of Tem-Et-Nu. Such individuals are potentially helpful allies (or at least temporary resources), assuming the PCs are not evil; evil PCs can expect to be treated with suspicion or outright hostility.

They might be asked to move on or simply be attacked, depending on how powerful they are (or appear to be).

ORGANIZATION

Scions of Tem-Et-Nu usually work alone or with a small group of allies, but if they are operating on a waterway, other scions are not far off.

The scions report their activities and investigations at every temple of Tem-Et-Nu they come across, and the temples impart that information to the other scions who visit. This passing of information might include a call for reinforcements.

Such a call generally garners 1d3+1 other scions, arriving at a rate of one per day; these other scions are of a level comparable to the scion who requested their aid.

A typical scion of Tem-Et-Nu is Karlott, who specializes in coming to the aid of other scions.

Though she puts in a requisite amount of time helping farmers with irrigation issues and tracking down smugglers on the river, Karlott is far more interested in rumors of scions seeking additional comrades-in-arms.

She drops everything to rush to the scene and pledge her blade to the cause.

Other more experienced scions think of her as something of a loose cannon, but they cannot fault her performance in combat.

NPC REACTIONS

The average law-abiding citizen who lives or works on a waterway is generally quite happy to see a scion of Tem-Et-Nu; the scions are always ready to lend a hand and frequently pass out gold coins as a gesture of charity (a practice the scions call "cutting loose the ballast").

Nobles are a little less happy to see scions, because while a visit from a scion might be merely a courtesy call, it could also be a request for funds or some other costly form of aid.

A noble's refusal to provide such aid—even on perfectly legitimate grounds—almost always leads to an uncomfortable silence during which the noble suspects that the scion is using her powers to determine whether or not the noble is refusing out of evil intent (through the medium of detect evil).

Some nobles—perhaps those with guilty consciences—have spoken out against this practice, and in response the scions generally deny subjecting nobles to divination spells without their permission; the scions claim they are merely remaining silent while considering an alternate form of persuasion.

Although scions of Tem-Et-Nu are a kind of law unto themselves as far as the rivers are concerned, they do not consider themselves apart from the law.

For one, they have no prison facilities; anyone they arrest must be handed over to the normal authorities.

In fact, most appointed officers of the law see the scions as a type of “citizens’ watch” group, and they trust the scions’ scrupulous adherence to the law and their care for the welfare of the community.

Authorities often consult with the scions regarding crimes committed on or across rivers (though most scions have no particular ability to track down clues, in the water or anywhere else).

The only real clashing point is jurisdiction.

The scions believe it is in their mandate to confiscate illegal goods found in or on the water, and then give them to the temples to sell (or in some cases destroy) to raise funds.

Since most authorities earn their living by levying fines, they see the scions’ policy of confiscation as taking food out of their families’ mouths.

The scions relent, giving up some of what they have confiscated, when there is too much for them to carry themselves, but otherwise they refer the authorities to the temples—at which point most law officers simply give up. The clerics are notoriously difficult to convince once the treasure is locked up in their vaults.

SCION OF TEM-ET-NU LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) can research the scions of Tem-Et-Nu to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs when a higher result is rolled.

DC 10: The scions of the river deity are guardians of the river.

They keep the waterways clear of smugglers and pirates, and they’re never too busy to help mend a dam or rescue livestock from the water.

They sometimes even hand out money, if they think you need it.

DC 15: The scions of Tem-Et-Nu travel from temple to temple, reporting on conditions along the river and looking for news of trouble spots.

They generally travel on boats or barges, but some of them have mounts.

DC 20: The scions have a strict code of honor, and that applies to how they fight, as well.

One rarely turns down a challenge to single combat, even if it’s clearly a trap.

Only if a life is in danger elsewhere or a scion is engaged on an important mission will she turn a challenger away; even then, she usually comes back to the challenge eventually.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific scions of Tem-Et-Nu in your campaign, including notable allies and companions. PCs who try to establish contact with a scion of Tem-Et-Nu usually must visit the nearest temple of the river deity and inform the clerics there.

Word will eventually reach the scion in question.

If the PCs are trying to enlist the scion’s services, give them a +2 circumstance bonus on the check if the mission involves a waterway, and another +2 bonus if the PCs make a suitable donation to the temple.

SCIONS OF TEM-ET-NU IN THE GAME

Scions of Tem-Et-Nu aren’t particularly invasive—they’re almost monklike in their single-minded devotion to their duties—so adding them to a campaign should be relatively easy.

The scions could have been around all along: They were those friendly river marshals the PCs saw helping farmers and fishers.

This prestige class appeals to players who appreciate the paladin lifestyle but want to take it in a more specific direction.

A DM with a scion of Tem-Et-Nu in his campaign should try at least some of the time to play to the scion’s strengths. The DM should set adventures on or near rivers so the scion can use her powers.

A DM should feel free to occasionally remind the scion’s player that temple accommodations extend to the scion’s companions as well—meaning free room and board in a safe environment so long as the party sticks close to the rivers and waterways.

ADAPTATION

The scion of Tem-Et-Nu is built around the idea of protecting important waterways.

If the campaign has such regions, the scion is an excellent fit.

Otherwise, simply alter the focus of the class to another vital feature of the setting.

For example, a scion of Fharlanghn might protect frequently used roads in the campaign, and a scion of Moradin might protect key mountain passes.

Abilities that focus on water need to be altered slightly to take the new terrain element into play.

Buoyancy might instead be called sturdiness and provide the scion of Moradin a +4 bonus on Balance checks in mountainous regions.

Likewise, river mastery might become plains mastery, providing the scion of Fharlanghn a +1 bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls against plains-dwelling creatures.

SCORPION HERITOR

"Beneath every stone lurks a scorpion."

—Anekhet, a scorpion heritor

The desert scorpion is thought to symbolize revenge, and sometimes cruelty.

In the waste, the scorpion also symbolizes stealth, passion, and perseverance in the face of extinction.

By emulating the essence of the scorpion and becoming one with the scorpion's strength, desert people can tap into the scorpion's vitality.

Scorpion heritors, through a special relationship with the scorpion spirit, gain the mystical abilities of the scorpion, and can even take its shape.

BECOMING A SCORPION HERITOR

Only characters who already revere the scorpion, who know something of its ways, who know how to survive in the desert, and who have taken the scorpion's venom into their blood can become scorpion heritors.

Rogues are most often associated with the scorpion heritor class, but it isn't unheard of for barbarians, rangers, or even fighters to pick up a few levels of the prestige class.

Most classes have to buy at least some ranks in required skills as cross-class skills.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feat: Scorpion's Resolve.

Special: Must have survived the venomous sting of a monstrous scorpion.

CLASS SKILLS

(8 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Escape Artist, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Knowledge (nature), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Perform, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Survival, Swim, Tumble, Use Magic Device, and Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the scorpion heritor prestige class.

Scorpion's Instincts: You gain Scorpion's Instincts (see page 53) as a bonus feat.

Sneak Attack: Beginning at 2nd level, you deal extra damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus to AC.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook. This damage increases at 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th level.

Scorpion Form (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can take the form of a Tiny monstrous scorpion once per day, as if using the polymorph spell, for up to 1 minute.

Envenom Blade (Ex): At 5th level, your saliva becomes venomous.

As a free action three times per day, you can envenom your melee weapon, a thrown weapon, or a piece of ammunition for a ranged weapon.

Using this ability does not provoke attacks of opportunity. The Fortitude save DC of the venom is equal to 15 + your Wis modifier.

The venom deals 1d4 points of Constitution damage as its primary and secondary damage.

If you already have a bite attack, you can choose to envenom your bite as a use of this ability.

Immunity to Scorpion Venom (Ex): At 5th level, you gain immunity to all scorpion poisons (but not to the poison of other creatures).

Scorpion's Sense: At 7th level, you gain Scorpion's Sense (see page 53) as a bonus feat.

Tail of the Scorpion (Su): At 9th level, you learn to grow a dark, translucent scorpion's tail once per day, which magically emerges from whatever clothing or armor you're wearing.

The stinger on the end of the tail deals the damage indicated on the table below, + 1/2 your Strength bonus (if any).

Scorpion Heritor Size	Stinger Damage	Poison Damage (initial and secondary)
Small	1d3	1d2 Con
Medium	1d4	1d3 Con
Large	1d6	1d4 Con

The DC for the poison save is 10 + 1/2 your Hit Dice + your Con modifier.

You can wield a weapon in one or both hands at your normal attack bonus and make a secondary natural attack with the tail at a -5 penalty.

The tail of the scorpion lasts for 1 hour or until you dismiss it.

Growing or dismissing the tail is a standard action.

PLAYING A SCORPION HERITOR

You hold a deep reverence for scorpions, both of the normal and monstrous varieties.

You know that the scorpion has much to teach, if only you could see the lessons it can provide.

It is a survivor, preferring to strike suddenly from hiding. If forced into open combat, it is still a vicious, dangerous foe—like you.

Though you would not willingly kill your lesser brethren, the monstrous scorpions that range the desert are tests—by slaying them, you gain their strength and increase your own skill.

Sometimes you take it upon yourself to explain to your friends the lessons the scorpion has to teach, if they seem as if they have open minds.

You don't particularly enjoy having proverbs thrown back in your face, especially the untruthful tale of the Frog and the Scorpion.

You prefer truisms such as, "In ten thousand years the lands now green will be dry and dead, home of the scorpion", or, "When you least expect it, you may find the desert in the heart of your brother.

When you do, weather the storm like the scorpion. If necessary, seek vengeance afterward".

COMBAT

Like the scorpion, you are swift, stealthy, and lethal.

You are most effective when your enemies least expect your presence.

Where others depend on charge attacks and direct strength of arms, you pick your moments, delivering your deadly attacks from the shadows.

In most cases, you should allow your brawnier companions, if any, to engage in conflict first, thus drawing the attention (and attacks) of your enemies.

Once so engaged, your foes become easy prey for you. Even if you accidentally draw a few attacks from your enemies, in most cases your allies have already softened up the enemy sufficiently so that your assaults will be sufficient to finish the task.

At 3rd level, you become able to briefly take the form of a scorpion.

Tiny in size, you can slip into places unguessed by your foes, wait in hiding for your moment to strike, or spy out secrets that you could never have learned otherwise.

At 5th level and higher, you can envenom your weapons with the scorpion's poison.

Use this ability against your most potent foes, weakening them enough for your physical attacks to bring the final darkness.

ADVANCEMENT

For the children of the scorpion, advancement is straightforward: Continue to focus on skills such as Hide, Move Silently, and Tumble.

Spend discovered treasure hoards on poison, magic weapons, and protective magic.

The Mobility feat is good to consider, as is Two-Weapon Fighting.

As a scorpion heritor, you can choose to walk your own path as you increase in power, or you can link your fortunes with the Lodge of the Scorpion (see Scorpion Heritors in the World, below), an organization that exists in some of the deep deserts of the world.

RESOURCES

You have to rely on yourself more than anything else. Alone but hidden, your strength is magnified.

However, if you do join the Lodge of the Scorpion (or are already a member, having gained your training in this prestige class from that organization), you discover that the lodge helps its own, providing a place to rest, relax, and heal from past exploits.

Other groups in the desert that revere the scorpion, such as the asherati and certain desert nomads, will also aid you if you are in distress, should you reveal your affiliation.

On the other hand, stay clear of bhuka and common merchant caravans moving through the desert, which revile the scorpion as vermin.

SCORPION HERITORS IN THE WORLD

If the PCs venture into the waste, they will eventually encounter those who revere the scorpion for its ability to survive the harshest of climates.

Wherever those who honor scorpions are found, scorpion heritors likely hide in the sands.

ORGANIZATION

In all the deserts of all the worlds, many groups have chosen to revere a particular desert creature, extolling its ability to survive and seeking to learn from the lessons that the creature's mere existence can reveal.

These groups are referred to as lodges.

A lodge represents an association that goes beyond village or even desert borders, and a member of a given lodge can often find associates and a place to rest in the appropriate lodgehouse in another location.

In addition to providing a safe house and gathering point for its members, a lodge also focuses on skills, conferred abilities, and extraordinary powers based on the creature from which the lodge takes its name.

The Lodge of the Scorpion is the most pervasive, yet because of its secrecy and focus on stealth, it might be the least well known.

A typical lodgehouse for the Lodge of the Scorpion serves as a boarding house, meeting place, and training hall for its members.

Many members live within its walls year round.

Each lodgehouse is governed by an Elder of the Lodge, who sees to it that those who stay within the space abide by the rules.

To join the Lodge of the Scorpion, a character must submit to the initiation—being stung on the palm by a scorpion and surviving the experience.

Some knowledge of the scorpion must also be demonstrated (Knowledge [nature] 1 rank), though someone usually joins a lodge for the purpose of learning more.

Each scorpion lodge has a particular quality associated with its reverence for a creature type, which is often linked with a feat (see Chapter 2).

Scorpion's Resolve is the feat associated with the Lodge of the Scorpion.

NPC REACTIONS

Whether folk fear or admire the scorpion, all respect its potential for danger.

The same is true for one who openly bears the scorpion insignia.

On the whole, though, commoners fear scorpions, and in situations where the scorpion heritor reveals his scorpionlike abilities, he is greeted with that same fear.

Of course, scorpion heritors need not adorn themselves with the scorpion motif, and might instead choose subtlety over dramatics.

Stealth—and likely a scorpion heritor's mission—requires that he not stick out as a potential danger.

Those who know that a character is a scorpion heritor give that individual a wide berth.

One never knows what might cause a scorpion to sting, and many wonder if the same might not be true for the scorpion heritor.

SCORPION HERITOR LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), or Gather Information can research the scorpion heritors to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs when a higher result is rolled.

DC 10: Some think the scorpion's survival in the desert is a worthy feat.

These individuals are called scorpion heritors.

DC 15: The scorpion heritors are trained by an organization dedicated to revering the scorpion, called the Lodge of the Scorpion.

DC 20: Those who seek to become a member of the Lodge of the Scorpion or a scorpion heritor must submit to the sting of a scorpion.

DC 30: Scorpion heritors emulate the scorpion, gaining more than that creature's resolve and ability to sense things normally unseen—their saliva is venomous, and they possess the scorpion's tenacity and deadly stealth.

PCs who try to establish contact with a scorpion heritor (for whatever reason) should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to find a lodgehouse for the Lodge of the Scorpion, through which contact can be arranged, or a DC 25 Gather Information check to track a scorpion heritor down directly.

If the PCs are trying to hire a scorpion heritor to infiltrate or slay an enemy in the desert, give them a +2 circumstance bonus on the check.

SCORPION HERITORS IN THE GAME

Scorpion heritors are there if you need them, ranging the deep desert in search of prey or sometimes helping those in need.

Other scorpion heritors leave the desert entirely, roaming in more verdant realms but still relying on their desert-bred abilities.

ADAPTATION

This prestige class is most suited to those who prefer stealth to direct confrontations.

They might have strange habits, such as a predilection for keeping dangerous pets (typically normal scorpions), that set them apart from others.

Despite their differences, scorpion heritors probably do not require any great stretch on the DM's part to include in the game, since their abilities are self-contained and in accord with the standard rogue class.

WALKER IN THE WASTE

"The waste is a monument filled with eternal reminders."

—Abesukh Habah, a walker in the waste

A walker in the waste embodies the harsh, unforgiving nature of the desert.

The waste's dryness can perfectly preserve a royal city, a wondrous creature, or a towering forest—caught at the very moment of death, before age and decay can spoil it.

Maybe you want to protect your chosen environment and warn away those who would intrude.

For you, most living things are nothing more than potential exhibits, and your soul is as parched as the sands that surround you.

BECOMING A WALKER IN THE WASTE

Clerics who serve deities of thirst are the most common characters to take levels in this class.

You already worship a harsh deity, and the magic of the dry and deadly waste comes readily to you.

If you're a desert druid of a harsh bent, you might take up this path as well.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nongood.

Feat: Heat Endurance.

Spells: Ability to cast at least three spells of the Sand or Thirst domain as divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft (alchemy), Decipher Script, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (geography), Knowledge (nature), Profession, Spellcraft, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the walker in the waste prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 10th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a walker in the waste, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Improved Heat Endurance: You gain Improved Heat Endurance (see page 50) as a bonus feat.

If you already have the Improved Heat Endurance feat, you can choose another feat.

Desiccating Touch (Su): As a touch attack, you can drain moisture from a living creature.

At 1st level, this ability deals 1d6 points of desiccation damage, or 1d8 points to plant creatures or elementals with the water subtype.

At every odd-numbered level thereafter, the desiccation damage increases by 1d6 (or 1d8), to a maximum of 5d6 (or 5d8) at 9th level.

The touched creature can make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + walker in the waste level + your Wis modifier) for half damage.

The Wasting (Su): On reaching 2nd level, you can transform a handful of dust or sand into a terrible disease. Once per day, you can blow sand into the face of a living opponent within 20 feet.

Using this ability is a standard action that provokes attacks of opportunity.

You can pick up dust from the ground as a move action or take it from a pouch as a free action.

The opponent is entitled to a Reflex save (DC 10 + walker in the waste level + your Wis modifier) to avoid inhaling the dust.

On a success, the dust has no effect and drifts harmlessly to the ground.

An opponent who fails this save contracts the wasting, a supernatural affliction that gradually mummifies its victims (see Disease, page 21).

Local Drought (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can produce desert conditions in a 20-foot-radius emanation with you at the center.

The temperature band in that area rises by one step or to hot, whichever produces the hotter result.

(See Heat Dangers and the effects of natural dehydration in Chapter 1).

You can suppress this effect for 1 round as a free action, but it renews automatically on your next turn unless you consciously suppress it again.

Withered Toughness (Ex): When you attain 4th level, your body becomes inured to the arid conditions in which you thrive.

Your flesh grows leathery and tough, and your natural armor bonus improves by 2.

In addition, you gain immunity to the effects of dehydration (although not the effects of magical desiccation damage) and heat dangers (such as heat exhaustion and sunstroke), sun glare, and sunburn, although fire damage affects you normally.

Pillar of Salt (Sp): At 5th level and higher, you can use flesh to salt once per day, duplicating the effect of the spell (see page 116).

Your caster level for this ability is equal to your class level.

Create Sand Golem (Ex): At 6th level, you learn the secret of creating a sand golem (see page 182).

You do not need the Craft Golem feat to create a sand golem, as you normally would, but you cannot use this ability to create any other type of golem.

Create Salt Mummy (Su): At 8th level, you learn a specialized form of the ancient art of mummification.

Invested with the dark power of the waste, you are able to preserve and animate a corpse.

You also add to it the essence of dehydration to produce a horrid salt mummy (see below).

Greater Drought (Su): Beginning at 9th level, you can produce extreme desert conditions in a 100-foot-radius emanation with you at the center.

The temperature band in that area rises by two steps or to severe heat, whichever produces the hotter result.

(See Heat Dangers and the effects of natural dehydration in Chapter 1).

You can suppress this effect for 1 round as a free action, but it renews automatically on your next turn unless you consciously suppress it again.

This effect supersedes that of the local drought ability.

Dry Lich: On reaching 10th level, you learn to apply the secrets of waste preservation to your own body, becoming a dry lich.

You must undergo the Sere Rite, overseen by another dry lich, which includes preserving your flesh, removing your organs and storing them in special canopic jars, and imbuing your body with foul magic to make it undying.

See the dry lich template, page 155, for more information.

As a dry lich, you cannot be permanently killed unless the canopic jars containing your life essence are destroyed.

PLAYING A WALKER IN THE WASTE

However you got here, you're a loner.

You bring the desert with you, and you maintain it where it already exists.

Not many understand your pure, dry desire to preserve.

They think it is evil or perverse.

But you know the truth: Someone needs to keep a record of what was.

There is no higher calling.

At times you must join forces, at least temporarily, with others.

A loose fellowship of walkers, called the Dusty Conclave, occasionally gathers to discuss mutual threats and plan action for the coming years.

You sometimes work with desert-dwelling tribes and groups of druids, rangers, or barbarians to repel those who would threaten your waste and destroy the creation you have labored so hard to craft.

You might use fear to coerce such service, but the desert also has its riches, and gold always speaks the right language.

COMBAT

You are a spellcaster primarily, not trained for hand-to-hand combat, but your enemies might underestimate your deadliness in melee.

The thickest armor is no defense against your desiccating touch.

Just getting close enough to make that attack puts opponents under the effect of your local drought ability, possibly weakening and damaging them.

You retain impressive spellcasting power, and once you have created golem servants, direct attacks against you become more difficult.

After you have learned the art of creating salt mummies, you "seed" them about the waste to maintain permanent vigilance.

You always have at least one by your side as protection or to strengthen your bargaining position.

Your tactics are straightforward: Send in the monster, then use spells and devastating touch attacks against distracted foes.

When working with a group, it's best to maintain your distance so as not to catch your allies in the local drought that surrounds you.

You might advance, taking cover from one or more golem or mummy companions, weakening your foes while allies lob in ranged attacks.

Alternatively, you might stand back and use pillar of salt to remove your most powerful foe, then let your companions finish off any remaining threats.

Once you have attained the pinnacle of your career, you are a fearsome monster in your own right.

Those who do not quail before your terrible presence only hurt themselves when they try to harm you.

Your vulnerabilities are few, and the armies of servants you can create keep all but the mightiest challengers from ever facing you.

Only the hated touch of water is a true threat—you take extensive precautions to keep it from entering your domain.

ADVANCEMENT

A walker is not recruited so much as awakened.

You are filled with a profound, all-consuming love for the arid beauty of the waste.

You would do anything to be closer to that essence, to spread its cleanliness across the world.

You spend more and more time wandering the deserts, practicing your magic and growing increasingly acclimated to the environment.

Eventually, you encounter another who is equally dedicated to the waste.

That one tells you of the fraternity of those who love the desert as you do, and you are introduced to the Dusty Conclave.

If you are deemed worthy of the mysteries, you become a full-fledged walker in the waste and are expected to do the conclave's work assiduously.

This task is not too hard, since all in the Dusty Conclave have the same goal—to spread the waste to every part of the world.

You must expand the borders of your patrol and leave clear warnings to all who would interfere.

You must defend the waste, whether personally or through the artificial guardians you create.

If the conclave calls, you go to war.

RESOURCES

Your own nature leads you down the walker's path, and you attain the class's lesser abilities through your own efforts.

To craft the sand golems and salt mummies that are so indispensable to your work, you need the ancient lore of the Dusty Conclave.

That organization is the source of the special materials needed to create these servants.

The Sere Rite of your ultimate preservation also requires the participation of a dry lich, and only these most ancient walkers possess the knowledge of the materials and magic needed for that transformation.

If your patrol is threatened by those who would harm the desert, you are expected to deal with the interlopers.

Even a novice in the class has power enough to destroy or dissuade enemies.

Against greater threats, the conclave moves together.

Each walker has a scarab amulet that is attuned to the others—a mental call for help brings others swiftly.

Each sand golem also has such an amulet, and its creator can send the creature to the aid of any other who calls for it.

WALKERS IN THE WORLD

The existence of walkers in the waste offers a way to bring the desert environment to the PCs instead of forcing them to travel to a new location.

ORGANIZATION

The Dusty Conclave has few members, so each walker patrols a large tract of the waste.

They gather at most once a year, usually at midsummer noon to participate in ritual magic, exchange news, and address pressing issues.

The conclave also maintains and passes on the knowledge of crafting sand golems and animating salt mummies to those deemed worthy of such knowledge.

To demonstrate your worthiness, you must undertake a mission for the conclave.

Usually this mission involves furthering the spread of the waste in some way: drying up a village's water supply to force the inhabitants out, making a pilgrimage and an offering to a desert dragon, or establishing diplomatic ties with efreet or other dangerous waste spirits.

If the conclave is satisfied that you have performed the task well, it introduces you to the higher mysteries.

Otherwise, the conclave withholds the secrets of mummification and immortality (in game terms, you do not progress beyond 7th level in the prestige class).

REACTIONS

Most other waste-dwellers fear the walkers.

They see you and your comrades as heartless monsters who cruelly destroy life, but they don't understand.

People who inhabit the borders of a waste truly loathe walkers, for it is their land that is most in danger of "preservation".

If a walker is known to have entered the region, the leaders of desert-bordering settlements waste no time in assembling a force to combat the threat.

Experienced adventurers are in great demand when such a threat looms.

Savage desert beings, such as scablands orcs, might offer a form of worship to a walker.

They make excellent agents to clear the way of unnecessary life as you approach.

Such creatures, though, have little sense of the value of history.

Their looting destroys most items worthy of preservation, so they are best used only as shock troops; the more controllable golems can finish the job.

Bhukas hate walkers in the waste with a deep passion.

They view such beings as the antithesis of their mother deity, since the walkers seem dedicated to undoing her great works.

The presence of a walker is one of the few things that drive this peaceable race to take up arms.

WALKER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research walkers in the waste to learn more about them.

DC 10: A terrible creature brings the desert with it wherever it travels.

DC 15: Certain spellcasters devoted to the magic of thirst are able to create new desert and leave behind dried husks of living things.

DC 20: Walkers in the waste are able to create hideous monsters of sand and salt, and the most powerful of them are undead creatures themselves.

DC 30: The walkers form a loose organization called the Dusty Conclave; their goal is to transform the world into desert.

The most powerful members of this group are dry lichs, undead beings that embody dryness.

Their high ceremonies are held at midsummer noon.

WALKERS IN THE GAME

An NPC walker in the waste presents an ongoing threat to civilization, which can form the basis of an entire story arc. Integrating a PC walker into the game is more difficult, since such beings are solitary by nature; however, a party of nongood characters could form the retinue of a walker, traveling together to spread the waste to other parts of the world.

Alternatively, adventuring with a walker can appeal even to good PCs if the walker's goal happens to support a worthwhile endeavor (such as drying up the swamps of evil lizardfolk).

ADAPTATION

If the idea of a solitary walker in the waste is not appealing as a prestige class choice, you can modify the concept. Instead of heartlessly spreading the desert, the walker is instead an environmental champion, a militant druid dedicated to protecting the waste against the encroachment of civilization or holding off the advance of hostile beings. Such a concept omits the nongood alignment requirement for the class.

Such a walker might lead or hire an expedition to defend her homeland, or come to the aid of desert folk who are under attack.

NEW MAGIC ITEM: CANOPIC JARS

To become a dry lich, a walker in the waste who has reached 10th level in that prestige class must undergo the Sere Rite.

This ritual requires the participation of at least one other dry lich, and the prospective dry lich must also craft a set of five canopic jars in which to preserve his internal organs. Each canopic jar has a specific likeness, as given below.

Organ	Canopic Jar
Lungs	Baboon
Stomach	Jackal
Liver	Vulture
Intestines	Falcon
Heart	Human

These jars retain the dry lich's life force, and unless they are destroyed, a slain dry lich resurrects within 1d6 weeks after its destruction.

The jars are Tiny objects, made of magically hardened clay or ceramic having 40 hit points, hardness 20, and a break DC of 40.

Canopic Jar: Strong necromancy; CL 14th; Craft Wondrous Item, 9th-level walker in the waste; Price 20,000 gp.

NEW MONSTER: SALT MUMMY

The salt mummy is a particularly horrid undead creature whose creation is a secret of the Dusty Conclave.

Salt Mummy: CR 8; Medium undead; HD 12d12 plus 36; hp 114; Init -1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 9, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +6; Grp +13; Atk +9 melee (2d6+17 plus dehydrating impact, slam); Full Atk +9 melee (2d6+17 plus dehydrating impact, slam); SA dehydrating impact; SQ darkvision 60 ft., fast healing 10, undead traits, unholy toughness, water weakness; AL CE; SV Fort +4, Ref +3, Will +8; Str 27, Dex 8, Con —, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 16.

Skills and Feats: Hide +7, Listen +9, Move Silently +7, Spot +9; Alertness, Cleave, Improved Natural Weapon (slam), Improved Toughness, Power Attack.

Dehydrating Impact (Su): Each time a salt mummy touches a living creature, the creature must make a DC 19 Fortitude save or take 4d6 points of damage as moisture is evaporated from its body.

This impact is especially devastating to plants and creatures with the water subtype (such as water elementals), which instead take 4d8 points of damage.

Even on a successful save, a creature still loses moisture, taking half damage.

The save DC is Charisma-based.

Unholy Toughness (Ex): A salt mummy gains a bonus to its hit points equal to its Charisma modifier times its Hit Dice.

Water Weakness: All water deals damage to a salt mummy as if it were holy water.

SAVAGE SPECIES (3.0)

EMANCIPATED SPAWN

Wretched slaves of undead, bonded eternally by unnatural death, various kinds of spawn haunt the night.

Once in a great while, one of these unfortunates finds herself freed when the undead creature that created it is destroyed.

Now, though still cursed with undeath, the emancipated spawn begins to recall her former life and perhaps finds some measure of redemption.

The unlife of an emancipated spawn is a lonely one. Few creatures she meets are likely to perceive that she is searching for old memories and simply try to destroy her as quickly as possible.

An emancipated spawn might be found in the company of her former adventuring friends (who may even have been her liberators), who are unwilling to abandon their former companion.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an emancipated spawn, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Intelligent undead created by another undead using its create spawn ability.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Special: Must have been created as a spawn by an undead creature that has since been destroyed.

CLASS SKILLS

The emancipated spawn's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the emancipated spawn prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Emancipated spawn are proficient with all simple weapons, and otherwise neither gain nor lose any weapon, armor, or shield proficiencies by gaining levels of this class.

Turn Resistance (Ex): An emancipated spawn gains an additional +2 turn resistance at each level.

This stacks with any inherent turn resistance of the undead creature; for example, an emancipated ghoul at 1st level would benefit from a total turn resistance of +4 (+2 for being a ghoul and +2 for the prestige class).

Recall Feats (Ex): At 1st level, an emancipated spawn remembers several aspects of her former existence.

She regains all the feats she had as a living character, provided she meets their prerequisites.

These remembered feats are in addition to any feats gained for advancing a level.

Recall Class Features (Ex): At 2nd level, an emancipated spawn remembers more of her former existence.

She now can use all the class features of one former class, as a character of that former class's level.

If the former class was a spellcasting class, the emancipated spawn is able to cast one spell of each level available to the character (if she was a wizard, she must still consult her spellbook, or learn from scrolls if her spellbook was lost when she became a spawn).

If the character had a familiar, the empathic link between her and the familiar is reestablished.

Rediscovery (Ex): At 3rd level, the emancipated spawn comes fully into her heritage.

She recalls all her former class features and abilities, regains her former base attack bonus, base saving throw bonuses gained from class levels, hit points, and all other class benefits, and can now advance again in any of her former classes.

This applies even if a former character class does not normally allow free multiclassing, provided the character did not leave the path prior to her transformation into an undead spawn.

Thus, a former paladin could continue to gain levels as a paladin (effectively multiclassing as a monster/paladin), but if she had left the path of paladinhood before her transformation, she is still ineligible to return to that class.

In addition, a 3rd-level emancipated spawn receives the benefit of a sudden jump in ECL.

If a character takes all three levels of the emancipated spawn prestige class, its ECL becomes the sum of its monster ECL + its three levels of emancipated spawn + the character's former class levels.

For example, Yvine was a 10th-level fighter who became a ghoul spawn and then was freed.

He adventures as an ECL 5 character and then takes one level of emancipated spawn, becoming ECL 6.

His next level is also emancipated spawn, making his ECL 7.

When he next takes the 3rd level of emancipated spawn, his ECL becomes 18 (5 for ghoul + 3 for emancipated spawn + 10 for fighter).

TABLE 7-1: THE EMANCIPATED SPAWN

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	+2 turn resistance, recall feats
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	+4 turn resistance, recall class abilities
3rd	+2	+1	+1	+3	+6 turn resistance, rediscover

FREED SPAWN

If an undead spawn's creator is destroyed, the spawn is no longer controlled by that creature. If the freed spawn was a player character when alive, it can now adventure like a character with an ECL equivalent to the creator's. For instance, a freed ghoul spawn has an ECL of 5, and a freed shadow spawn's ECL is 10.

When the mental link that binds it to its creator is broken, a freed spawn is instantly aware of that fact. It can choose to revert to the alignment the character had when he or she was alive. Whether it does this or retains its current alignment as an undead creature, a freed spawn has basic memories of its past (what sort of character it was in life, who his or her friends were, and so forth). These basic memories can help the freed spawn find and rejoin its old adventuring party, if that's what the character wants to do.

A freed spawn can gain experience points through adventuring, adding them to the XP total the character had when alive. When it becomes eligible to advance a level, it can add class levels as normal or pursue the emancipated spawn prestige class, which eventually enables the spawn to recall all the abilities it had before it became an undead.

ILLITHID SAVANT

Mind flayers are connoisseurs of brains, but some take this taste to the next level.

The illithid savant is an academic who deals in applied science, acquiring new knowledge from the brains he consumes.

Often an illithid savant specializes in the arcane arts, usually as a wizard since he tends toward scholarly pursuits. Bards, with their insatiable quest for knowledge, frequently gravitate to this career.

Less often, a nonclassed mind flayer stumbles onto the path of the savant through consuming a particularly noteworthy brain.

Illithid savants make excellent support members for just about any group, although they prefer the company of other mind flayers.

They usually bring several thralls of desired classes or creature types for consumption as needed.

A savant often heads up an inquisition or even a cult to pursue his ends.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an illithid savant, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Mind flayer.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks.

Special: Must have consumed the brain of a creature of CR 9 or greater.

CLASS SKILLS

The illithid savant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Scream (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the illithid savant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Illithid savants neither gain nor lose proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields by gaining levels in this class.

Acquire Skill (Ex): At 1st level, an illithid savant can acquire one skill known by a creature whose brain he has consumed, chosen at the time of consumption.

He permanently gains all of the creature's ranks in that skill (but not racial or ability score bonuses to the skill modifier) even if his new total is more ranks than the illithid savant's current character level would normally allow.

This skill becomes a class skill for the illithid savant, and he may buy more ranks in the skill if the new ranks do not cause him to exceed his maximum ranks in the skill.

At 4th, 6th, and 8th level, the illithid savant can acquire and use one additional skill from a brain.

Lore (Ex): At 1st level, an illithid savant gains the ability to make a special lore check twice per day to recall esoteric information from the brains of those he has consumed.

Just as with a bardic knowledge check (see Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook for more on this ability and typical check DCs), the illithid savant adds his level in this prestige class and his Intelligence modifier as bonuses on any attempt to learn something unusual.

At 2nd, 5th, and 9th level, the illithid savant can make a special lore check two additional times per day.

Acquire Feat (Ex): At 2nd level, an illithid savant permanently acquires one of the feats of a consumed creature, provided he meets that feat's prerequisites.

At 4th, 6th, and 8th level, the illithid savant can acquire and use one additional feat from a consumed brain.

Acquire Class Feature (Ex): At 3rd level, an illithid savant permanently gains one class feature of a consumed brain's owner, as a character of that creature's level in that class.

If the former character was a spellcaster, the illithid savant is able to cast one spell of each level available to the character (if the victim was a wizard, the mind flayer must still consult a spellbook or learn from scrolls), as well as any bonus spells provided by the illithid savant's ability scores. If the illithid savant already has spellcasting levels, these spells are in addition to those granted by the illithid savant's spellcasting class levels.

At 7th level and again at 10th level, the illithid savant can gain another class feature from a consumed brain.

Acquire Special Attack or Special Quality (Ex): At 5th level, the illithid savant permanently gains one special attack or special quality of a consumed brain's owner.

The chosen ability must not rely on a physical feature of the consumed creature, such as a gaze attack, a breath weapon, flight, or a natural attack with an appendage not possessed by the mind flayer.

If the ability allows a saving throw, the illithid savant uses his own ability score modifier to determine the DC.

At 9th level, the illithid savant can gain another special attack or special quality from a consumed brain.

MASTER OF FLIES

Ravings from fevered explorers describe an unstoppable horror, a swarming mass that creeps under doors and through window frames to drain the life from its hapless prey.

Such stories are usually dismissed, but they do contain a kernel of truth.

The master of flies is an intelligent swarm that can form a massive being at need, or a single creature that can dissolve into a cloud of vermin.

A master of flies may be a creature having an affinity with vermin, such as a drider or an aranea.

Sometimes she is a being who has an innate ability to summon creatures, such as a vampire.

The master of flies is a favorite prestige class of demons, who revel in the horrific.

Sometimes even a druid may follow this path.

Becoming a master of flies usually appeals to a depraved personality intent on horror and destruction.

Such beings shun all contact with others except to insinuate themselves into a group of potential prey.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of flies, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Escape Artist 5 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks.

Feats: Quick Change (see Chapter 4).

Special: Must possess the ability to change form, such as from an alternate form ability, the shapechanger subtype, or a wild shape ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of flies' class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Control Shape (Wis), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master of flies prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A master of flies neither gains nor loses proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields by gaining levels of this class.

Summon Swarm (Sp): A master of flies can use summon swarm as a sorcerer of her character level.

She can use this ability once per day per level she has attained in this prestige class.

The creatures summoned must be vermin; roll 1d20 on the following table.

d20	Swarm Type
1-6	Spiders (vermin, poisonous)
7-13	Centipedes (vermin, poisonous)
14-20	Flying beetles (vermin)

Swarm Shape (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, a master of flies can take the form of a swarm of vicious little vermin and return to her own form.

This effect is similar to that of a summon swarm spell, except that the swarm is of the same size category as the caster (and it has the same face statistic as the caster).

The master of flies can choose the type of vermin from the table above.

In swarm shape, she can move at a speed of 15 feet, or up to 45 feet if the swarm flies (poor maneuverability).

The swarm has the same number of hit points as the original creature and can be damaged by fire and area-effect spells and abilities.

If the swarm is dispersed (by gust of wind, for example), the master of flies must return to her own shape.

To do so, the dispersed creatures must first coalesce (at the swarm's speed); the master of flies must take a standard action on the following round to transform.

A master of flies can use this ability once per day at 2nd level and more times per day at 3rd, 4th, 6th, 7th, and 9th level, as shown on Table 7-3: The Master of Flies.

At 5th level, a master of flies is able to take the shape of a swarm identical to that produced by an insect plague spell, except that the swarm can be no more than one size larger than the master of flies (you can choose the face if more than one is available).

This swarm can move at half the master of flies' normal speed and can fly at the same speed (clumsy maneuverability).

At 8th level, a master of flies is able to take the shape of a swarm identical to that produced by a creeping doom spell, except that the swarm can be no more than two size categories larger than the master of flies (you can choose the face statistic if more than one is possible).

This mass of vermin can only move at 10 feet per round and cannot fly.

In all other respects, the swarm shape ability is identical to the druid's wild shape ability (see Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Pied Piper (Su): At 3rd level, a master of flies is able to influence vermin to a limited extent.

She can use this ability once per day per level in this prestige class to charm a number of Hit Dice of vermin equal to or less than her character level, starting with the lowest Hit Dice vermin within range and moving up in Hit Dice until the limit is reached.

The range of this effect is 10 feet × the master of flies' level. The vermin are allowed Will saves against this effect (DC 14 + Cha modifier), and any that make their save cannot be affected again by the pied piper ability of that master of flies for one day.

Charmed vermin move toward the master of flies at their land speed, taking the most direct path available.

If the path leads into a dangerous area, the creatures get another saving throw.

Charmed vermin can take no actions other than to defend themselves.

If the master of flies moves, the charmed vermin follow.

This effect lasts for as long as the master of flies concentrates.

Once concentration is broken, those vermin cannot be affected again by the pied piper ability of that master of flies for one day.

Insect Plague (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, a master of flies can use the spell-like ability insect plague as a sorcerer of her class level.

She can use this ability once per day per level in this prestige class.

Flyblown (Su): At 7th level, a master of flies can shift to a swarm shape and back as a free action.

Creeping Doom (Sp): Beginning at 8th level, a master of flies can use the spell-like ability creeping doom as a sorcerer of her class level.

She can use this ability once per day per level in this prestige class.

Awaken Vermin (Sp): At 9th level, a master of flies gains the ability to awaken humanlike sentience in a vermin.

She can use this ability once per week.

This ability is identical to the 5th-level druid spell awaken, except that only vermin can be affected and there is no XP cost.

Swarm Leap (Su): At 10th level, a master of flies becomes completely attuned to the throb and hum of vermin swarms, gaining the supernatural ability to instantaneously transport herself over great distances through that medium. Once per day as a standard action, she can enter any swarm of mundane vermin whose size equals or exceeds her own and travel to another such swarm in a single round, regardless of distance.

The master of flies merely designates a distance and direction ("a swarm 50 miles south of here"), and the swarm leap ability transports her to a destination swarm as close as possible to the desired location.

She can attempt to name a specific swarm ("a beehive in an apiary just outside the city of Greyhawk"), but if no such target exists, the ability fails and the master of flies is ejected from the entry swarm.

Both the entry swarm and the destination swarm must be alive, but they can be either naturally occurring or summoned.

A master of flies in swarm shape cannot use herself as the entry point, but she could enter through an insect plague she created in a previous round.

She could even use another master of flies in swarm shape as the entry or destination swarm.

When exiting a swarm, the master of flies must choose an adjacent 5-foot-by-5-foot space in which to appear (or a correspondingly larger space if it is larger than Medium-size).

Except as noted here, this ability functions like the 6th-level druid spell transport via plants.

SCALED HORROR

Scaled horrors are elite amphibious soldiers.

They specialize in guarding the watery borders of lizardfolk domains.

Striking abruptly from the water's edge, they leave fear and destruction in their wake.

Many an unwary intruder is last seen as a trail of bubbles in the marsh waters, taken below by scaled horrors.

Lizardfolk are the most common scaled horrors, but locathahs, merfolk, and sahuagin sometimes have similar guardians.

Occasionally kuo-toas train as scaled horrors as well.

As NPCs, scaled horrors work in squads of 2–5 members along the edges of their people's domains.

They sometimes serve other races as mercenaries, but always in situations where they can fight from the water. They rarely work alone, but even a solitary scaled horror is a skilled guerrilla.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a scaled horror, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Character must have either the aquatic or the reptilian subtype.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, plus either Swim 5 ranks or a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks.

CLASS SKILLS

The scaled horror's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex),

Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).
Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the scaled horror prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Scaled horrors are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, shields, and light armor.

Otherwise they neither gain nor lose weapon, armor, or shield proficiency by taking levels in this class.

Improved Grab (Ex): If a scaled horror hits with its natural weapons or unarmed attack, it deals normal damage and attempts to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

The ability works only against opponents of the same size or smaller.

The scaled horror has the option to conduct the grapple normally, or simply use its natural weapons or unarmed attack to hold the opponent.

Each successful grapple check it makes during successive rounds automatically deals damage given for the attack that established the hold.

Keen Scent (Ex): A scaled horror can notice creatures by scent in a 180-foot radius, provided both the scaled horror and the creature are in the same body of water, and can detect blood in the water at a range of up to 1 mile.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a scaled horror gains the ability to cast divine spells from the ranger spell list (see Chapter 11 of the Player's Handbook).

To cast a spell, the scaled horror must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a scaled horror with a Wisdom of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Scaled horror bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the scaled horror's Wisdom bonus.

When the scaled horror gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the scaled horror gets only bonus spells.

A scaled horror without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

A scaled horror prepares and casts spells just as a ranger does (though the scaled horror's caster level is the same as its class level).

Freedom of Movement (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a scaled horror moves and fights underwater as if subject to the spell freedom of movement.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a scaled horror gains the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 2 from the damage the scaled horror takes each time he is dealt damage.

At 10th level, this damage reduction rises to 4/–.

Damage reduction cannot reduce damage to less than 0.

Spring Attack (Ex): At 5th level, a scaled horror gains Spring Attack as a bonus feat.

Silent Spell: At 7th level, a scaled horror gains Silent Spell as a bonus feat.

Still Spell: At 8th level, a scaled horror gains Still Spell as a bonus feat.

SIREN

Some harpies hone their mind-affecting songs to add new effects.

A harpy siren is an artist who constantly seeks to expand and improve upon her innate sonic ability.

Any creature with a mind-affecting sonic ability could take this prestige class, but few other than harpies are intelligent enough.

Cloakers sometimes hone their already impressive sonic abilities.

A rare gibbering mouther or yeth hound may follow this path, but only exceptional individuals.

Sirens can be problematic in a party, since their sonic abilities are often indiscriminate.

With increasing expertise, however, they can focus their talents to become excellent support for combat specialists, softening up opposition for killing strokes.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a siren, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Bluff 6 ranks, Intimidate 6 ranks, Perform 8 ranks (includes either ballad, buffoonery, chant, epic, limericks, melody, ode, or storytelling).

Special: Must possess an innate sonic, mind-affecting ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The siren's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (any) (Wis), Search (Int), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the siren prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sirens neither gain nor lose proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields by gaining levels in this class.

Reverberation (Su): At 1st level, the siren gains Reverberation (see Chapter 4) as a bonus feat.

Song of Despair (Su): At 2nd level, a siren begins to enhance her already formidable sonic abilities with additional effects.

Once per day, she can overlay a despair effect on her sonic attack identical to that of an emotion spell.

Those affected by the sonic attack make their saving throws for that attack before resolving the despair effect.

The Will save DC to resist this effect is 12 + the siren's level + the siren's Cha modifier.

The despair effect lasts 1 round per siren class level.

Charisma Bonus (Ex): At 3rd level, a siren gains a +2 inherent bonus to her Charisma score.

This bonus rises to +4 at 6th level and to +5 at 8th level.

Song of Nightmare (Su): At 4th level, a siren gains a new sonic ability.

Once per day per level in this prestige class, she can overlay a terrifying effect on her sonic attack.

This is identical to the effect of a phantasmal killer spell, affects all creatures within range of the siren's sonic attack, and has instantaneous duration.

The Will and Fortitude saves to resist this effect have a DC of 12 + the siren's level + the siren's Cha modifier.

Song of Idiocy (Su): At 5th level, a siren gains a new sonic ability.

Once per day per level in this prestige class, she can overlay an Intelligence-damaging effect on her sonic attack.

This is identical to the effect of a feblemind spell, affects all creatures within range of the siren's sonic attack, and has instantaneous duration.

The Will save to resist this effect has a DC of 12 + the siren's level + the siren's Cha modifier, and arcane spellcasters and creatures that use arcane spell-like abilities take a -4 penalty on their saves.

Song of Weakness (Su): At 7th level, a siren gains a new sonic ability.

Once per day per level in this prestige class, she can overlay a level-draining effect on her sonic attack.

This is identical to the effect of an enervation spell, except that all creatures within range of the siren's sonic attack are entitled to a Fortitude save to resist the effect, and it has instantaneous duration.

The Fortitude save to resist this effect, and to remove the negative levels, has a DC of 12 + the siren's level + the siren's Cha modifier.

Song of Stone (Su): At 9th level, a siren gains a new sonic ability.

Once per day per level in this prestige class, she can overlay a flesh to stone effect on her sonic attack.

This is identical to the spell, affects all creatures within range of the siren's sonic attack, and has instantaneous duration.

The Fortitude save to resist this effect has a DC of 12 + the siren's level + the siren's Cha modifier.

Song of Death (Su): At 10th level, a siren's sonic attack reaches its zenith.

Once per day, she can overlay a power word, kill effect on her sonic attack.

This is identical to the spell cast as an area spell and has instantaneous duration.

SLAAD BROODER

Slaadi are chaos personified—no two are exactly identical. Only a few of the baser sorts live long enough to advance to the rank of gray slaad or death slaad, but the slaad brooder is another path of development.

The brooder's sole purpose is to implant as many egg pellets as he can to produce the widest possible range of progeny. Only red slaadi can naturally implant egg pellets, but they are the most common and the most widespread of their ilk. Those not gifted with the ability may acquire it by taking this prestige class.

A superior brooder can aspire to a rank of great respect in slaad society, second only to gray slaadi in power.

The path, though, is one whose end few survive to attain.

Slaadi don't get along well with one another, let alone with nonslaadi.

Slaad brooders are always loners, roving through Limbo and traveling to other planes to establish rookeries.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a slaad brooder, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any slaad.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Skills: Concentration 10 ranks.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Improved Multiattack.

CLASS SKILLS

The slaad brooder's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the slaad brooder prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A slaad brooder neither gains nor loses proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields by gaining levels in this class.

Implant (Ex): A slaad brooder gains the ability to implant pellets with any of his natural attacks.

If he previously had a similar ability (red slaad's implant ability or blue slaad's disease ability), he can now use that ability with any of his natural attacks.

The affected creature must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + slaad brooder's character level + slaad brooder's Con modifier) to avoid implantation.

The egg gestates for one week before hatching into a slaad that eats his way out, killing the host.

Twenty-four hours before the egg fully matures, the host falls extremely ill (-10 to all ability scores).

A remove disease spell rids a host of the pellet, as does a successful Heal check (DC 20).

If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt (successful or not) deals 1d4 points of damage to the patient.

If the brooder is a blue slaad, the pellet hatches into a red slaad.

If the brooder is a red slaad, the pellet hatches into a blue slaad.

If the host is an arcane spellcaster, the egg pellet instead hatches into a green slaad.

Improved Grab (Ex): If a slaad brooder hits with one or more claw or rake attacks, it deals normal damage and attempts to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

The ability works only against opponents of the same size or smaller.

The slaad brooder has the option to conduct the grapple normally, or simply use its natural weapons to hold the opponent.

Each successful grapple check it makes during successive rounds automatically deals bite damage.

Imbue Pellet (Su): At 2nd level, a slaad brooder imbues a single egg pellet with an additional feature randomly determined from the options described below (roll d4 and apply the appropriate feature).

This feature affects the host as indicated.

Where a save is permitted, the DC is equal to 10 + slaad brooder's character level + slaad brooder's Con modifier. Roll separately for each implant attack.

1. Burn: The pellet deals 1d6 points of heat damage to the host on the round of implantation.

A successful Fortitude save halves the damage.

The pellet deals an additional 1d6 points of heat damage on the next round unless the host makes a successful Fortitude save.

2. Caustic: As the burn feature, except that the damage is acid damage.

3. Chill: As the burn feature, except that the damage is cold damage.

4. Shock: As the burn feature, except that the damage is electricity damage.

Deep Implant (Ex): At 3rd level, a slaad brooder can implant his pellet more deeply within the host's body, adding +2 to the DC of the Fortitude save to resist implantation.

In addition, repeated Heal checks after the first to remove the pellet deal 1d6 points of damage to the patient instead of the usual 1d4 points, as the healer must cut more deeply into the host's body.

Rapid Hatching (Ex): On reaching 4th level, a slaad brooder gains the ability to transfer some of his own vitality into the egg pellet, allowing it to mature more quickly.

The egg hatches in 24 hours instead of 1 week.

Six hours before it hatches, the host comes down with the severe illness, losing 10 points from each ability score.

Chaos Focus (Su): At 5th level, a slaad brooder's imbue pellet ability becomes more potent: The DC to halve or negate the damage from the additional feature of the pellet (burn, caustic, chill, or shock) increases by +2.

Multiple Implant (Ex): At 6th level, a slaad brooder can implant more than one pellet within the host's body. Each of his natural attacks that hits can implant an egg pellet.

Color Choice (Ex): At 7th level, a slaad brooder can choose the color of his spawn.

He can produce a green slaad even if the host creature is not an arcane spellcaster.

He can determine the color of each pellet's spawn if he has implanted more than one in the same host.

Heighten Chaos (Su): At 8th level, the DC to halve or negate the damage from the additional feature of an egg pellet increases by +2.

This bonus stacks with the bonus provided by the chaos focus ability.

Corporeal Instability (Su): On reaching 9th level, a slaad brooder can effect a terrible transformation on the host creature.

Unless she makes a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + slaad brooder's level + Slaad brooder's Con modifier), the host's shape melts into a formless mass.

She cannot hold or use any item, nor can she wear clothing or armor.

Her speed drops to 10 feet or one-quarter normal, whichever is lower.

She can no longer cast spells or use magic items, and she cannot distinguish between friend and foe, attacking blindly (-4 penalty on attack rolls, 50% miss chance).

For each round the host spends in an amorphous state, she takes 1 point of permanent Wisdom drain from mental shock.

If the creature's Wisdom score falls to 0, she becomes catatonic and unresponsive.

A creature can regain her own shape for 1 minute with a successful Charisma check (DC 15).

On a failure, the creature can still repeat the check each round until successful.

A shapechange or stoneskin spell fixes the affected creature's form for the duration of the spell, although it does not cure the affliction.

The corporeal instability can be removed with a restoration, greater restoration, or heal spell; a separate restoration spell is required to restore Wisdom drain.

Death Spawn (Ex): At 9th level, a slaad brooder's extraordinary vitality gives his egg pellets the ability to hatch even from a host that has died (the death of a host becomes an increasingly likely event as a brooder becomes more powerful).

Neither remove disease spells nor Heal checks can destroy the pellets growing in a dead host, but destruction of the body by fire, acid, disintegrate spells, and the like will do so. Dominate Spawn (Sp): On reaching 10th level, the slaad brooder becomes the undisputed master of spawn. If he is present at the hatching of a red, blue, or green slaad, he can take control of the newborn as with a dominate monster spell.

SURVIVOR

During their adventuring career, heroes—especially monster heroes—may find themselves the victims of mental domination, spells, and special attacks. Monster characters may prove especially vulnerable to magical attacks, given that their saving throws often lag significantly behind those of standard-race characters. For this reason, more than a few heroes set up training programs and academies where a character willingly undergoes a program of pain and torture. The students are subjected to frequent assaults to their bodies with cunning traps that challenge agility, psionic torment through mind-affecting spells and hired nonhumanoids, frequent draining attacks by controlled undead, and steady doses of weak poisons. Those who survive the program emerge a few weeks later—tougher, faster, and less vulnerable to attacks. A survivor's past may lie in any class, as may his future. All that is required is mental and physical focus. Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a survivor, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Save Bonus: Highest base save bonus must be lower than character level.

Special: The path of the survivor requires a concentrated month of study to enter the prestige class.

During this month, the character must stay in one place and spend all his waking hours in study, practice, and meditation.

CLASS SKILLS

The survivor can spend his skill points to purchase any skills that any of his previous classes (or his base monster race) have made available as a class skill (though not exclusive skills), or any skill that is eligible as a cross-class skill.

The survivor prestige class does not add new skills to a character's list of class skills.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

The effect lasts one day per slaad brooder's character level. The hatchling can resist the effect with a successful Will save (DC 10 + slaad brooder's level + slaad brooder's Con modifier).

A slaad brooder that has reached this level of power is a threat to the dominance of death slaadi, who are his implacable enemies.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the survivor prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A survivor neither gains nor loses proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shields by gaining levels in this class.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): A survivor gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker (he still loses his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class if immobilized).

At 3rd level, the survivor can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the survivor.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the survivor can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level, a survivor gains evasion.

If exposed to any effect that normally allows a character to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage (such as a fireball), he takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

Evasion can only be used if the survivor wears light armor or no armor.

Improved Evasion (Ex): This ability, gained at 4th level, works like evasion, except that while the survivor still takes no damage on a successful Reflex save against spells such as fireball or a breath weapon, he now takes only half damage on a failed save.

The survivor's training allows him to get out of harm's way with incredible speed.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 5th level, a survivor gains the ability to shrug off 5 points of damage from each blow or attack.

Subtract 5 from the damage the survivor takes each time he is dealt damage.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not less than 0.

This damage reduction stacks with any other damage reduction of the “x/–” type (such as the damage reduction that is a class feature of the barbarian).

SYBIL

Steeped in ancient lore, or maddened by divine inspiration, the sybil is a reclusive prophet.

Questers make the difficult journey to a sybil's remote and hidden lair to ask for a glimpse of the future.

A sybil is exceptionally talented in divination, not through arcane study or devoted service to a deity, but through a mystical focus that borders on insanity.

The traditional exemplar is the sphinx with its famous riddle, but any being with the innate talent for prognostication might follow this path.

Some fey, celestials, and even devils become sybils; these last do so largely to torment and mislead mortals.

The sybil is by her very nature solitary.

Such beings rarely if ever leave their lairs, although a mysterious purpose may send one in search of lost knowledge.

In these rare instances, sybils might form temporary alliances to meet the immediate objective.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sybil, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Neutral.

Skills: Concentration 10 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Sense Motive 8 ranks.

Feats: Empower Spell-Like Ability.

Special: Must have an innate spell-like divination ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The sybil's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (any) (Wis), Scry (exclusive skill, Int), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sybil prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A sybil neither gains nor loses proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields by gaining levels in this class.

Divine Insight (Su): A sybil is able to touch the essence of reality, albeit in a mind-bending way.

She gains an “insight score” equal to her level in this prestige class that has three effects.

1. Add the insight score to Wisdom when determining bonus spells or save DCs when casting divine spells or using divine spell-like abilities.

2. Subtract this score from her Wisdom score when making any other checks or saving throws involving Wisdom alone.

3. Once per day, the sybil can add her insight score to Wisdom when making a check or save.

She must choose to use this power before making the roll. Reclusive Insight (Su): At 2nd level, a sybil learns to focus inwardly and discern hidden truths.

By spending 24 hours in complete solitude, she gains two additional effects of her insight score for the next 24 hours.

1. This score is added to her Intelligence score when making any checks that depend on Intelligence, such as Scry or bardic knowledge.

2. This score is subtracted from Intelligence to determine bonus spells or save DCs when casting arcane spells or using arcane spell-like abilities.

Riddle (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a sybil gains the gift of prophecy and can see more clearly as she increases in experience.

However, the truths she sees are couched in mystery.

These revelations are always accurate and carry no cost in experience points or material components, but demand a price be paid—answer the sybil's riddle.

A correct answer earns the questioner the benefit of the specified divination spell, with no chance of failure.

An incorrect answer, however, carries a penalty, which is more severe the more difficult the riddle becomes.

Conundrum: At 3rd level, a sybil begins to express her gift of prophecy.

The riddle is a simple one.

A correct answer earns the benefit of an augury spell, with no chance of failure.

An incorrect answer causes the questioner to take 1 point of temporary damage to an ability score of the sybil's choice.

The sybil can use this ability once per day per class level.

Mystery: At 5th level, a sybil's prophecy becomes more precise.

The riddle is moderately challenging.

A correct answer earns the benefit of a divination spell, with no chance of failure.

An incorrect answer causes the questioner to take 2 points of temporary damage to an ability score of the sybil's choice.

The sybil can use this ability once per day per class level.

Koan: At 7th level, a sybil's prophecy is uncanny.

The riddle is challenging.

A correct answer earns the benefit of a commune spell as cast by a cleric of the sybil's character level (the sybil contacts a powerful extraplanar being of like philosophical bent).

An incorrect answer causes the questioner to take 2 points of temporary damage to each ability score.

The sybil can use this ability once per day per two class levels (round down).

Enigma: At 8th level, a sybil can supplement prophecy with preternatural knowledge.

The riddle is difficult.

A correct answer earns the benefit of a legend lore spell, but it requires only 1d4×10 rounds to gain an answer about a person or item at hand.

Detailed information about a person, place, or thing requires 1d4×10 minutes to retrieve, while rumors require 1d10 days to garner details.

An incorrect answer causes the questioner to take 2 points of temporary damage to each ability score, to a maximum of -8.

Ability scores are not reduced below 1.

The sybil can use this ability no more than three times per week.

Apocrypha: At 10th level, a sybil's preternatural clarity is near infallible.

The riddle is nearly impossible.

A correct answer earns the benefit of a discern location spell, but the sybil need not have come into contact with the person or thing sought.

An incorrect answer bestows 2d6 negative levels on the questioner.

The sybil can use this ability once per week.

Lesser Geas (Sp): At 4th level, a sybil can use lesser geas once per day as a divine spell cast by a cleric of her class level (include any cleric levels).

Mysterious Lore (Ex): At 4th level, a sybil gains access to a special lore check much like that of bards and loremasters, but she is restricted in how it can use this ability.

She adds her insight score (see Divine Insight, above) to the die roll, which stacks with any levels in bard or loremaster, but on a failure she loses the benefit of her reclusive insight ability until she can spend another 24 hours in solitude.

Geas/Quest (Sp): At 6th level, a sybil can use geas/quest once per day as a divine spell cast by a cleric of her class level (include any cleric levels).

Limited Wish (Sp): At 9th level, a sybil can use limited wish once per year as a divine spell cast by a cleric of its class level (include any cleric levels).

HANDLING RIDDLES

One of the most difficult tasks in roleplaying, whether as DM or player, is using riddles effectively. Too often, a riddle is either childishly easy—or worse, a hoary cliché—or so obscure as to be incomprehensible to any but the creator. Here are some ideas on how to present effective, challenging riddles that are appropriate to the situation's difficulty.

Look to examples from myth, folklore, and even popular entertainment. (Don't forget the challenge of the Keeper at the Bridge of Death in Monty Python and the Holy Grail!)

The sphinx's riddle is well known and therefore unsuitable, but consider lesser known sources, such as pronouncements by the Oracle of Delphi. An example is the Oracle's answer to the Athenians who came seeking advice against the Persian conqueror Xerxes: "The wooden wall will save you and your children." The statement is ambiguous, but the solution Athens came up with—building a fleet that ultimately turned the Persians back—fulfilled one interpretation of it. A riddle need not have only one answer, and the way it is interpreted can be the foundation for adventure.

In the divination spell, the Player's Handbook contains useful advice on prophecy that can help you cast a riddle or oracular pronouncement in an appropriate way. The Defenders of the Faith class book for clerics and paladins supplements this, and can be helpful (if you have the book).

Fairy tales are a wonderful source of inspiration for riddles and prophecies. Often the hero is required to answer a question or solve a mystery, which makes a great adventure theme to place in the mouth of a sybil. You can find numerous folktales resources on the Web, including many non-European tales (which are likely to be less well known to American or European players). Riddles are often a topic of interest for mathematicians; for example, the works of Douglas Hofstadter (Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid), Lewis Carroll (The Universe in a Handkerchief), and Martin Gardner (various) contain many useful conundrums.

Finally, collections of riddles and puzzles (often aimed at children, but not necessarily) are available in bookstores, online, and in libraries. They are a good place to start when constructing a riddle of your own, and a great source of simpler questions.

Examples of Riddle Types

Conundrum: This is an easy riddle, and a "chestnut" can do well here. For example, this is a traditional Haitian riddle: "They serve it food, it stands on four feet, but it can't eat." The answer: a table. This riddle could be used to drop a hint to the party about an altar.

Mystery: A somewhat more difficult form, examples of mysteries can be found in folklore and literature. One of the riddles told to Bilbo by Gollum in J.R.R. Tolkien's The Hobbit is: "What has roots as nobody sees,/ Is taller than trees./ Up, up it goes,/ And yet never grows?" The answer: a mountain. This might lead a party to a lost dwarven city or a dragon's lair.

Koan: Now things are getting tricky. The best source for inspiration for this riddle type, not surprisingly, is a collection of Zen fables or real-life koans. As an example: Draw a line and tell the questioner to make the line shorter without touching any part of it. (The usual answer is to draw a second, longer line.) A lateral thinking puzzle works just as well, though, such as this classic: "A woman has a brother who was born at the same time on the same day in the same year. Yet they are not twins. How is this possible?" Answer: They are two of a set of triplets. These puzzles should ideally force the listener to think in an unaccustomed way and can help present an offbeat sort of adventure.

Enigma: Such posers ought to be very difficult to answer, and a good one requires some thought and research. Philosophical and religious riddles are good models for enigmas, since they are intended to lead the solver to a higher awareness. Here is a Mongol example, which refers to particular stars in the sky and might hint at a cross-planar expedition. (In this case you would probably replace the specific real-world references with equivalents found in the game world.)

Behind the Altai and Khangai Mountains

There are a hundred thousand horses, they say.

There is a group of seven loners, they say.

There is a group of six which flock together, they say.

There is a group of three which form a file, they say.

There are two which set black and white apart, they say.

There is one left behind, they say.

(The "hundred thousand" is a reference to all the stars in the sky. The "seven loners" are the stars that make up the constellation Ursa Major, or the Big Dipper. The number of stars is reduced in each line of the riddle. The "one left behind" is the North Star, which can be found in the night sky by extending one side of the Ursa Major trapezoid.)

Apocrypha: A "nearly impossible" riddle is even trickier to construct than to solve! One way around the problem is to present a riddle that is no riddle at all, such as Bilbo's famous stumper to Gollum in The Hobbit: "What have I got in my pocket?" By all standards, Bilbo cheated—but Gollum accepted the question and tried to answer, thereby validating the challenge. Similarly, the challenge of Rumpelstiltskin to name him is virtually impossible, perhaps not really a riddle at all—but with immense reward. If you don't feel like breaking the rules, try referring to unusual items or an unfamiliar culture, perhaps adapting a real-world riddle to subjects found in the game world. This is a great way to begin a search for an artifact or a piece of ancient, lost lore—something to build a whole campaign around.

WAVERIDER

Undersea folk have their own champions, experts at mounted combat from the backs of allied sea creatures. The waverider and her companion animal defend their city with a vigor that exceeds either's individual powers. Waveriders are often merfolk or tritons who enter military service to defend their communities.

Occasionally aquatic elves join this profession, although their independent nature does not tend to produce large settlements.

Locathah and even kuo-toa waveriders are not unknown.

Rarely, sahuagin take this prestige class, but their ferocious and xenophobic nature does not lend itself readily to such a partnership.

Waveriders work well in groups and are often encountered in military-style organizations.

Adventuring parties of aquatic beings often include one or more waveriders.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a waverider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Fey, humanoid, monstrous humanoid, or outsider with the aquatic subtype.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Ride (an aquatic animal) 6 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Archery, Mounted Combat.

CLASS SKILLS

The waverider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Profession (any) (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the waverider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Waveriders are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Waverider Mount: A waverider can call a special aquatic mount to serve her.

This may be a hippocampus (see sidebar), sea lion, shark, porpoise, elasmosaurus, or whale.

HIPPOCAMPUS

Skills: Hide -2, Listen +8, Sense Motive +5, Spot +8, Survival +5

Feats: Iron Will

Climate/Terrain: Temperate and warm aquatic

Organization: Solitary, pair, or pod (5-20)

Challenge Rating: 2

Treasure: None

Alignment: Always chaotic good

Advancement: 5-8 HD (Large); 9-12 HD (Huge)

A hippocampus is a thoroughbred steed for aquatic riders. It is prized as an underwater mount and gladly serves good causes.

A hippocampus looks like a horse gone native underwater with coloration ranging from black to aquamarine. The front half resembles a horse with short hair, except that fins replace hooves and mane. The hindquarters are those of a great fish, with scales and a muscular tail fanning out into a large fin.

Wild hippocampi race through open water, living wild and free. Though fairly intelligent, they are simple creatures. They enjoy races and displays of strength and endurance.

This creature is stronger and more intelligent than others of its type.

A waverider may have only one mount at a time.

Hippocampi do not get bored or restless as long as they stay moving and have a challenge or competition. Winning does not seem to be the most important part of a race or test for hippocampi; simply striving is their joy. Marathon relay races and long-distance scavenger hunts are favorite forms of competition.

While they do not take naturally to domesticated life, hippocampi can be convinced that living among an underwater civilization is a good idea. Even domesticated, a hippocampus tries to make a contest out of everyday tasks. If another hippocampus is nearby to challenge, so much the better. Hippocampus trainers try to discourage this behavior, because hippocampi can become quite reckless in the heat of a race.

Hippocampi speak Aquan.

Combat

Hippocampi bash foes with their muscular tails, then attempt a nasty bite before the opponent can recover. A wild hippocampus will generally retreat rather than fight on if it takes significant damage, unless its foals are at risk, in which case it will fight to the death.

Training a Hippocampus

Training a hippocampus as a mount requires a successful Handle Animal check (DC 22 foal, DC 29 adult). Hippocampus foals are worth 2,500 gp on the open market. Professional trainers charge 1,000 gp to rear or train a hippocampus. Riding a trained hippocampus requires an exotic saddle. A hippocampus can fight while carrying a rider, but the rider cannot also attack unless he or she succeeds at a Ride check.

Carrying Capacity: light load, up to 459 pounds; medium load, 460-918 pounds; heavy load, 919-1,380 pounds.

If the mount is slain, the waverider can call another one after a year and a day.

See the Waverider Mount sidebar for more information.

WAVERIDER MOUNT

The waverider's mount differs from a standard creature of its type in a number of ways. A Medium-size waverider typically rides a hippocampus, sea lion, Large shark, killer whale, or porpoise. A Tiny or Small waverider usually chooses a Medium-size shark, while a Large waverider favors an elasmosaurus, Huge shark, or cachalot whale. This mount is a magical beast, not an animal. It has a number of special abilities, as shown below.

Character Level	Bonus HD	Natural Armor	Str Adj.	Int	Special
7 or less	+1	+1	+1	5	Improved evasion, share spells, empathic link, share saving throws
8–10	+2	+2	+2	6
11–14	+4	+4	+3	7	Speak with creatures of its kind
15–18	+6	+5	+4	8	Fast movement
19–20	+8	+6	+6	9	Spell resistance

Character Level: The character level of the waverider.

Bonus Hit Dice: These are extra d8 Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier as normal. Extra Hit Dice improve the mount's base attack and base save bonuses, as usual (see the Monster Manual for rules on advancing magical beasts).

Natural Armor: This is an increase to the mount's natural armor bonus.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the mount's Strength score.

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the waverider's mount is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage if it makes a successful saving Mounted Weapon Bonus (Ex): At each level, a waverider gains the indicated bonus on her attack roll with the designated weapon while mounted.

Trident Charge (Ex): A waverider can use a trident to deal double damage when used from the back of a charging mount.

The Spirited Charge feat can be used to increase the damage multiple to triple normal.

Ride Bonus (Ex): At 2nd, 5th, 7th, and 9th level, a waverider gains the indicated bonus on Ride checks.

Breach (Ex): On reaching 3rd level, a mounted waverider can make a leaping charge to attack opponents out of the water.

The mount makes a Jump check using its own ranks in the skill or the waverider's, whichever is better, to make a "running" high jump as part of a charge, with a maximum height distance of twice its length.

If it contacts an opponent during the jump, the waverider gains the normal +2 bonus on her attack roll.

At the end of the jump, waverider and mount are once again submerged and thus do not take the -2 penalty to Armor Class against opponents out of the water (those underwater are still able to take advantage of the waverider's being temporarily off balance).

A waverider cannot use this ability in two consecutive rounds.

Sound (Ex): On reaching 4th level, a waverider can dive at high speed as part of a charge when attacking opponents underwater.

throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Share Spells: At the waverider's option, she may have any spell that she casts on herself (if she is a spellcaster) also affect her mount. This also applies to spell-like abilities. The mount must be within 5 feet. If the spell or spell-like ability has a duration other than instantaneous, the spell stops affecting the mount if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the mount again even if the mount returns to the waverider before the duration expires. Additionally, the waverider may cast a spell or use a spell-like ability with a target of "You" on her mount instead of on herself. The waverider and her mount can even share spells that normally do not affect creatures of the mount's type (magical beast).

Empathic Link (Su): The waverider has an empathic link with her mount out to a distance of 1 mile. The waverider cannot see through the mount's eyes, but the two can communicate telepathically. Even intelligent mounts see the world differently from their riders, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Share Saving Throws: The mount uses its own base saves or the waverider's, whichever is higher.

Speak with Creatures of Its Kind (Su): The mount can communicate with aquatic animals or with creatures of approximately the same kind. A whale or porpoise can speak with any whale or porpoise, while a shark can speak with other fish, and a frog can speak with amphibians.

Fast Movement (Ex): The mount's swim speed increases by 5 feet if Small, and by 10 feet if Medium-size or larger.

Spell Resistance (Ex): The mount gains spell resistance equal to the waverider's class level + 5. To affect the mount with a spell, a spellcaster must make a level check (1d20 + caster level) at least equal to the mount's spell resistance.

The mount makes a Jump check using its own ranks in the skill or the waverider's, whichever is better, to make a "running" long jump as part of a charge, with a maximum distance of six times its length.

If it contacts an opponent during the dive, the waverider gains a +4 bonus on her attack roll and increases the damage multiplier with her mounted weapon one more step (double to triple, triple to quadruple) but takes a -4 penalty to Armor Class for the next round.

A waverider cannot use this ability in two consecutive rounds.

Improved Mounted Archery (Ex): At 5th level, a waverider is better able to use a crossbow, harpoon, javelin, trident, or shortspear while mounted.

When making ranged attacks with any of these weapons while mounted, she takes only a -1 penalty on ranged attacks if the mount is making a double move, and -2 if the mount is running.

Full Mounted Attack (Ex): At 6th level, a waverider may attack as a standard action when its mount moves more than 5 feet rather than as a partial action.

Skim (Ex): On reaching 7th level, a mounted waverider can make more effective charges against opponents out of the water, skimming over the surface like a flying fish.

The mount makes a Jump check using its own ranks in the skill or the waverider's, whichever is better, to make a "running" long jump as part of a charge, with a maximum distance of four times its length, and a "running" high jump with a maximum vertical distance of twice its length. (Use the same roll to determine both height and length).

If it contacts an opponent during the jump, the waverider gains the normal +2 bonus on its attack roll.

At the end of the jump, waverider and mount are once again submerged and thus do not take the -2 penalty to Armor Class against opponents out of the water (those underwater are still able to take advantage of the waverider's being temporarily off balance).

A waverider cannot use this ability in two consecutive rounds.

Superior Mounted Archery (Ex): At 8th level, a waverider takes no penalties when making ranged attacks with a crossbow, harpoon, javelin, trident, or shortspear while mounted.

Wavedancing (Ex): On reaching 9th level, a mounted waverider can maneuver very effectively out of the water. Rider and mount can move up to four times the mount's swim speed out of water and can make charges, including Ride-By Attacks if the waverider has this feat (normal charge rules apply).

In addition, she can now use her breach, sound, and skim abilities in consecutive rounds.

Call of the Deeps (Su): At 10th level, a waverider can summon one or more water elementals once per day, as with a planar ally spell.

YUAN-TI CULTIST

The deep jungles hold secret temples to the evil deities of the yuan-ti.

The mysteries of these deities are hidden to outsiders, but the yuan-ti cultist masters their rituals to gain personal power.

A yuan-ti cultist can enter the service of Merrshaulk, the yuan-ti's chief deity, upon reaching adulthood.

After passing the coming-of-age ritual, the prospective candidate enters the temple warrens and rarely if ever leaves the complex again.

Ritual and rote learning fill his waking hours, and foul visions steep his dreams.

Sacrificial rituals and bloody ceremonies line the road to the ultimate goal, becoming an immortal emissary of Merrshaulk.

The yuan-ti cultist is bound to his temple, but on very rare occasions one might set out on a quest—generally to found a new shrine—accompanied by large numbers of pureblood yuan-ti.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a yuan-ti cultist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Yuan-ti halfblood or abomination.

Alignment: Any evil.

Patron: Merrshaulk.

Skills: Craft (alchemy) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 10 ranks, Perform (chant) 1 rank.

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The yuan-ti cultist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (architecture) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Perform (chant) (Wis), Profession (any) (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the yuan-ti cultist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A yuan-ti cultist is proficient with all simple weapons and with shields.

Otherwise, a cultist neither gains nor loses any weapon, armor, or shield proficiency by gaining levels in this class.

Spellcasting: A yuan-ti cultist continues training in magic. Thus, when a new yuan-ti cultist level is gained, the character gains new spells known and spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of yuan-ti cultist to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

Outer Circle: A yuan-ti cultist enters the service of Merrshaulk and learns some of the secrets of the cult. He gains a +2 circumstance bonus on Diplomacy and Intimidate checks when dealing with yuan-ti not of the temple hierarchy and a +2 circumstance bonus on Knowledge (religion) checks dealing with the worship of Merrshaulk.

In addition, the yuan-ti cultist learns the secret of brewing the dreadful mixture that transforms humans into tainted ones or broodguards (see Yuan-Ti in Chapter 10: Templates). The mixture requires the venom of a halfblood or pureblood yuan-ti as well as certain herbs and roots found only in tropical forests, whose raw materials cost is at least 50 gp.

SUFFERING PRESTIGE DOMAIN

Granted Power: You can use a pain touch once per day. Make a melee touch attack against a living creature, which bestows on that creature a –2 enhancement penalty to Strength and Dexterity for 1 minute on a successful attack. This spell-like ability does not affect creatures immune to critical hits.

Sticks to Snakes (Sp): At 2nd level, a yuan-ti cultist gains the ability to transform inert pieces of wood, such as arrows, torches, or staves, into snakes.

Once per day, he can transform 1d4 sticks + 1 per class level (including cleric levels) within medium range (100 feet + 10 feet/level).

These cannot be enchanted items.

Unattended items get no saving throw, while those in a creature's possession get a Will save.

Sticks of 2 feet or less in length become Tiny vipers; those longer than 2 and shorter than 4 feet in length become Small snakes, while those longer than 4 and up to 6 feet long become Medium-size.

Transforming a Large weapon, such as a long spear, or sticks of a like size into a Large viper counts as creating two snakes for each such item.

Items of Huge or larger size cannot be so transformed.

The effect's duration is 2 rounds per class level.

Third Circle: At 3rd level, a yuan-ti cultist advances to the next rank in service to Merrshaulk.

The circumstance bonus on Diplomacy and Intimidate checks when dealing with other yuan-ti and on Knowledge (religion) checks rises to +4.

Snake Darts (Sp): On ascending to 3rd level, the cultist undergoes ritual tattooing of snakes on his forearms or (if he does not possess arms) on legs, snakes, or tail as appropriate.

Three times per day as a standard action, the cultist can launch these tattoos against opponents within medium range (100 feet + 10 feet/level).

The snakes seek out their target(s) with unerring accuracy, hitting automatically.

The target takes 2d6 points of damage from the impact and must succeed on a Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's level + yuan-ti cultist's Con modifier) as the snakes' venom takes effect.

Primary and secondary damage is 1d6 Constitution.

On the following round the snakes fly back to the cultist. Before the spell can be cast again, the cultist must swallow the living snakes, which causes the tattoos to reappear on his arms.

Swallowing the snakes is a standard action that causes the cultist no harm.

Psionic Focus (Su): At 4th level, a yuan-ti cultist's psionic ability becomes more focused.

The DC to craft this mixture is 25; if the cultist has 5 or more ranks in Profession (herbalist), he gains a +2 synergy bonus on this check.

Spit Poison: A yuan-ti cultist can spit his poison (if he has a poison attack) in a 10-foot cone.

Suffering Prestige Domain: At 2nd level, a yuan-ti cultist gains access to the Suffering prestige domain.

This allows the cultist access to a third domain's spells and immediately give him the domain's granted power, as set out in the accompanying sidebar.

Suffering Domain Spells

1 Bane	6 Harm
2 Endurance	7 Eyebite (sicken effect only)
3 Bestow curse	8 Symbol (pain effect only)
4 Enervation	9 Horrid wilting
5 Feeblemind

He adds +2 to the DC for all saving throws against his innate psionic powers.

Psionics: Chant of Pain (Sp): At 4th level, a yuan-ti cultist expands his inherent psionic ability and learns to focus it on the ceremonies of pain.

At will as a full-round action, he can dance and chant in a sinuous sacrament to deal 3d6 points of damage to one living creature within 60 feet.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Wis modifier) halves the damage.

This ability has no effect on beings that are immune to mind-affecting effects, such as oozes and plants.

Second Circle: At 5th level, a yuan-ti cultist advances to a senior rank in service within the cult.

The circumstance bonus on Diplomacy and Intimidate checks when dealing with other yuan-ti and on Knowledge (religion) checks rises to +6.

In addition, if the cultist is a halfblood, he undergoes a painful, night-long ritual that transforms him into a human-headed abomination (abominations form the leadership within the temple hierarchy).

If he is already an abomination but does not have a human head, this ceremony transforms him into that form.

This ceremony requires the participation of at least six abominations of the Inner Circle.

Finally, at this level the cultist learns the secret of transforming a tainted one into a pureblood yuan-ti.

This involves brewing a more potent version of the infusion that transforms humans into tainted ones (Craft [alchemy] DC 30, raw materials cost 100 gp).

In addition, at least three yuan-ti cultists of the Second Circle must preside over the ceremony, which lasts 1 hour.

If the creature does not desire the transformation, he must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Con modifier).

On a failure, he lapses into a coma and dies within 1 hour unless revived with a delay poison or neutralize poison spell.

Greater Psionic Focus (Su): At 6th level, a yuan-ti cultist further refines his psionic abilities.

He adds +4 to the DC for all saving throws against his innate psionic powers.

This overlaps (does not stack with) the bonus granted by the psionic focus ability.

Psionics: Chant of Agony (Sp): At 6th level, a yuan-ti cultist becomes a master of pain.

Three times per day as a full-round action, he can dance and chant to deal 9d6 points of damage to one living creature within 60 feet.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Wis modifier) halves the damage.

This ability has no effect on beings that are immune to mind-affecting effects, such as oozes and plants.

First Circle: At 7th level, a yuan-ti cultist advances to a more senior rank within the cult.

The circumstance bonus on Diplomacy and Intimidate checks when dealing with other yuan-ti and on Knowledge (religion) checks rises to +8.

In addition, the cultist's poison becomes more virulent. He gains Virulent Poison as a bonus feat.

Finally, at this rank the cultist learns the secret of transforming a pureblood yuan-ti into a halfblood.

This involves brewing a more potent version of the infusion that transforms humans into tainted ones (Craft [alchemy] DC 35, raw materials cost 500 gp).

In addition, at least three yuan-ti cultists of the Inner Circle must preside over the ceremony, which lasts 6 hours.

If the creature does not desire the transformation, he must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Con modifier).

On a failure, he lapses into a coma and dies in 1 hour unless revived with a delay poison or neutralize poison spell.

Unhallow (Sp): At 7th level, a yuan-ti cultist gains the ability to use unhallow once per week as the spell cast by a cleric of his class level (including cleric levels).

He does not require the normal material components to use this ability, but he must still expend herbs, oils, and incense worth 500 gp per level of any spells tied to the unhallow area.

Command Reptiles (Su): At 8th level, a yuan-ti cultist is able to mentally command all snakes and reptilian animals within 30 feet at will.

This resembles dominate animal cast by a cleric of his class level (including cleric levels).

Psionics: Chant of Agony (Sp): At 8th level, a yuan-ti cultist can perform a ritual of sacrifice to Merrshaulk.

Once per day as a full-round action, he can dance and chant to slay one living creature within 60 feet.

With a successful Will save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Wis modifier), the creature instead takes 6d6 points of damage.

This ability has no effect on beings that are immune to mind-affecting effects, such as oozes and plants.

Inner Circle: At 9th level, a yuan-ti cultist ascends to the highest tier of mortal power within the cult.

The circumstance bonus on Diplomacy and Intimidate checks when dealing with other yuan-ti and on Knowledge (religion) checks rises to +10.

In addition, the cultist's poison becomes even more dangerous.

He gains Deadly Poison as a bonus feat.

Finally, at this level the cultist learns the secret of transforming a halfblood yuan-ti into an abomination.

He must join at least five other cultists of the Inner Circle to perform the day-long ceremony.

One cultist casts polymorph other on the creature to be transformed, while the others chant and pray.

The creature must receive six doses of the tincture that transforms a pureblood into a halfblood, one every 4 hours.

If the creature does not desire the transformation, he must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + yuan-ti cultist's class level + yuan-ti cultist's Con modifier).

On a failure, he dies instantly.

Unholy Aura (Su): At 9th level, a yuan-ti cultist can use unholy aura once per day, as the spell cast by a cleric of his class level (including cleric levels).

Voice of Merrshaulk: On reaching 10th level, a yuan-ti cultist attains the pinnacle of his career, transcending his mortal essence to become an emissary of Merrshaulk.

His type changes to outsider, but he can be raised from the dead if willing.

He gains spell resistance equal to 20 + his Wisdom modifier.

In addition, the Voice of Merrshaulk gains the supernatural ability to communicate telepathically with any other creature within 100 feet that has a language.

He can also command other yuan-ti at will, as dominate monster cast as a divine spell by a cleric of the cultist's class level (including cleric levels).

This is a spell-like, mind-affecting compulsion effect.

SERPENT KINGDOMS (3.5)

ANCIENT MASTER

Most Yuan-ti grow forgetful and sleepy as they age, but a few of the most powerful and strongest-willed abominations grow mightier of mind while their bodies are failing.

They acquire additional psionic powers and gradually become recognized as the “ancient masters” of the race. Some become religious zealots, founding new temples or taking over existing ones and fanatically furthering whatever aims Sseth shows them in dream-visions. Others withdraw from Yuan-ti tribal politics and then society as a whole to live in isolated seclusion, much the way many study-obsessed human wizards do.

Like human mages, such Yuan-ti typically build or take over fortresses in which to carry out their business.

These ancient masters often engage in truly ambitious breeding experiments, or take up strange hobbies with astonishing vigor and enthusiasm.

One tale tells of an ancient master who crafted full-sized, blown-glass replicas of attractive humans. Another describes one who stole all the tomes from Candlekeep, translated them into other tongues, and then covertly returned them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an ancient master, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Race: Yuan-ti.

Alignment: Any evil (usually chaotic evil).

Base Attack Bonus: +9.

Skills: Concentration 15 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks.

Special: Access to an extensive magical library, a tutor of any race who possesses at least fourteen sorcerer or wizard class levels, or any psionic powers or psionic class levels.

CLASS SKILLS

The ancient master’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Speak Language, and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the ancient master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ancient masters gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Attraction (Sp): An ancient master can plant a compelling attraction in the mind of any subject within 25 feet of her. The attraction can be toward a particular person, object, action, or event.

The target takes all reasonable steps to get close to the person, find the object, attend the event, or perform the action designated, though it does not suffer from blind obsession and does not take extreme risks to do so.

The subject can recognize danger but does not flee unless the threat is immediate.

If the ancient master specifies herself as the object of the attraction, she cannot command the subject indiscriminately, though the subject does listen to her (even if it disagrees).

This ability grants the ancient master a +4 bonus on Charisma checks made to influence the subject for the duration of the effect.

Attraction lasts for 1 hour.

This ability is usable once per day at 1st level and an additional once per day every three ancient master levels thereafter (twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 10th level).

This ability is the equivalent of a 1st-level spell.

Conceal Thoughts (Sp): At 2nd level, an ancient master can protect her own thoughts (but not those of any other creature) from analysis.

She gains a +4 bonus on saving throws against divination effects that reveal emotions or thoughts and a +20 circumstance bonus on Bluff checks made to oppose Sense Motive checks.

This ability is always active.

Body Equilibrium (Ex): A 3rd-level or higher ancient master can adjust her body density to match that of any solid or liquid she stands on.

Thus, she can walk on water, quicksand, or even a spider’s web without sinking or breaking through.

(This ability does not confer any resistance to particularly sticky webs).

She can move at her normal speed, but she cannot run on an unfirm surface without sinking or breaking through. If she falls while using this ability, damage from the impact is halved.

This ability is usable at will.

Levitate (Sp): Upon reaching 4th level, an ancient master can use levitate (caster level equals ancient master level) once per day.

She gains one additional use per day of this ability at 7th level and another at 10th level.

Dimension Door (Sp): At 5th level, an ancient master can use dimension door (caster level equals ancient master level) once per day.

She gains one additional use per day of this ability at 8th level.

Shadow Concealment (Su): At 6th level, an ancient master gains the ability to take on shadow form for 1 minute per ancient master level.

While in this state, she becomes incorporeal, appearing as a shadowy image of herself.

She gains a +10 circumstance bonus on Hide checks while this ability is in effect.

The ancient master gains one additional use per day of this ability at 9th level.

Baleful Teleport (Sp): At 7th level, an ancient master can disperse miniscule portions of a target creature or object weighing no more than 300 pounds.

The target takes 9d6 points of damage from this attack. A successful Will save (DC 10 + ancient master level + ancient master’s Cha modifier) halves the damage.

A target under a dimensional anchor effect is immune to baleful teleport.

This ability is usable once per day at 7th level and twice per day at 10th level.

This ability is the equivalent of a 5th-level spell.

Claws of the Vampire (Sp): When an ancient master reaches 8th level, she can cause the fingers on both her hands (if she has any) to grow to wicked, 2-inch-long points. She gains a claw attack (base damage 1d8 points) that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Whenever she uses this attack, she heals one-half the base damage that she deals with claws of the vampire.

She can use this ability in conjunction with feats, abilities, or spells that allow additional attacks in the same round.

This effect lasts for 1 hour per ancient master level and can be used once per day.

This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

Mind Probe (Sp): Once per day, a 9th-level or higher ancient master can read the thoughts of any one living creature within 30 feet that fails a Fortitude save (DC 10 + ancient master level + ancient master's Cha modifier).

All the target's memories and knowledge are accessible to her, from memories deep below the surface to those easily called to mind.

She can learn the answer to one question per round, to the best of the target's knowledge.

She can also probe a sleeping target, though it may make a Will save (DC 10 + ancient master level + ancient master's Cha modifier) to wake after each question.

Targets that do not wish to be probed can attempt to move beyond the ability's range unless somehow hindered.

The ancient master poses the questions telepathically and the answers are imparted directly to her mind.

She and the target do not need to speak the same language, though less intelligent creatures may yield up only appropriate visual images in answer to her questions.

Creatures protected by mind blank are immune to this ability.

Mind probe lasts for 1 minute per ancient master level.

This ability is the equivalent of a 5th-level spell.

Disintegrate (Sp): A 10th-level ancient master can use disintegrate (caster level 10th) once per day.

COILED CABALIST

Standing apart from the priests of Sseth but careful never to draw their collective ire by openly opposing them, the members of the Coiled Cabal pursue the arcane arts largely in secrecy.

The creed of this shadowy organization holds that true power can be obtained through mastery of magic that has nothing to do with gods.

After all, magic has worked well as a weapon for the puny humans, so there's no reason that it shouldn't also be part of the vrael olo arsenal.

Cabalists work in oumkathuss—small groups of no more than a dozen individuals.

Each oumkathuss reports to up to three overhoods, who in turn report to higher-ranking overhoods within a hidden hierarchy.

Rank in the Coiled Cabal is not closely tied to level or magical mastery, but it is linked to achievements.

A typical member is a sorcerer or wizard with enough experience and prestige to have attracted half a dozen apprentices.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a coiled cabalist, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Race: Yuan-ti.

Alignment: Any evil (usually chaotic evil).

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Concentration 9 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 9 ranks. Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The coiled cabalist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the coiled cabalist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Coiled cabalists gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new coiled cabalist level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of coiled cabalist to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class that granted access to 3rd-level spells before he became a coiled cabalist, he must decide to which class he adds each level of coiled cabalist for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Handfang (Sp): At 1st level, a coiled cabalist can use handfang (caster level equals arcane caster level; see Spells in Chapter 11) once per day.

The Fortitude save DC for the poison is 10 + coiled cabalist level + coiled cabalist's Cha modifier.

Coiled Cabalist
Level	Handfang Effect	Save*
1st	Venom	Fortitude negates (initial and secondary)
3rd	1d4+1 points of acid damage	None
5th	Paralysis for 1d4 rounds	Fortitude negates
7th	Unconsciousness for 1d6 or until the victim takes hours damage	Fortitude negates
9th	4d4 points of damage	Fortitude half

*The save DC for all effects is 10 + coiled cabalist level + coiled cabalist's Cha modifier.

As he advances in the prestige class, the coiled cabalist can use his handfang ability to deliver venom altered by his magical knowledge to produce other effects instead of poison, according to the table above.

Spell Turning (Sp): Three times per day, a 2nd-level coiled cabalist can produce an effect identical to that of the spell turning spell (caster level equals character level), except that he can turn back only 1d4 spell levels per round.

The number of spell levels he can turn back per round increases to 1d4+2 at 6th level and to 1d4+4 at 10th level.

FANG OF SSETH

The Viper's Fangs is a secretive order of spies that operates throughout Faerûn on behalf of the yuan-ti.

Its membership is largely made up of humans and yuan-ti pureblood thieves, assassins, and thugs.

Members refer to each other as Vipers and follow a fraternal code that's been known to override the orders of powerful Yuan-ti priests, coiled cabalists, and tribal leaders. The code is a simple one: Don't harm or steal from other Vipers.

Members of the Viper's Fangs know that a slow, soft, and subtle manner of operation is the right way to power for the yuan-ti.

Indeed, they champion careful husbanding of human prosperity so that the prize is always worth taking (and ever more valuable).

However, as the saying goes, "There are times when the Vipers must bite, and that's when they call on their fangs".

The Fangs of Sseth constitute the strike force of the Vipers—the stealthy killers who leave no trace.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fang of Sseth, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Race: Yuan-ti, human, Yuan-ti-human crossbreed, tainted one, or other Yuan-ti-created being.

Alignment: Any evil (usually chaotic evil).

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Religion: The candidate must worship Sseth and only Sseth.

Feats: Any two of the following: Alertness, Deceitful, Deft Hands, Investigator, Negotiator, Nimble Fingers, Persuasive, Stealthy.

Special: The candidate must have slain in the name of Sseth and aided a Yuan-ti without prearranged payment or reward.

CLASS SKILLS

The fang of Sseth's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Perform (act) (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the fang of Sseth prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fangs of Sseth gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Enhanced Ranged Attacks (Ex): At 1st level, the fang of Sseth gains a +1 bonus on attack rolls with all ranged weapons.

This bonus increases to +2 at 6th level.

Sneak Attack (Ex): This ability functions like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by +1d6 at 4th, 7th and 10th levels.

If a fang of Sseth gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels) the bonuses on damage stack. Furthermore, fang of Sseth levels stack with any other appropriate class levels (such as rogue or assassin) for the purpose of overcoming improved uncanny dodge.

Poison Resistance (Ex): Because a fang of Sseth trains with all sorts of poisons (not just reptile venoms), she becomes increasingly resistant to their effects.

A 1st-level fang of Sseth gains a +1 bonus on saves against all poisons.

This bonus increases by +1 for every two additional fang of Sseth levels gained (to +2 at 3rd level, +3 at 5th level, +4 at 7th level, and +5 at 9th level).

Poison Use (Ex): Fangs of Sseth are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level, the fang of Sseth gains the Snatch Arrows feat as a bonus feat if she does not already have it. If she already has Snatch Arrows, she instead gains Shot on the Run.

If she already has that feat, she instead gains Manyshot. She need not meet the prerequisites to gain her bonus feat. A fang of Sseth who already has all three feats gains no benefit.

Serpent Shape (Su): A 3rd-level fang of Sseth gains the psionic ability to change into a Medium viper at will as a full-round action.

A fang of Sseth who already possesses this ability (such as a Yuan-ti) instead gains the ability to assume completely human form.

This ability functions like a polymorph spell (caster level 19th), except that the fang of Sseth regains no lost hit points.

When in viper form, a fang of Sseth with a poisonous bite uses either her own venom or that of her viper form, whichever is more potent.

She can remain in viper form for as long as she desires and resume her normal form as a full-round action.

Spider Climb (Su): A 5th-level or higher fang of Sseth can use spider climb (caster level equals fang of Sseth level) at will.

Favor of Sseth (Sp): Upon attaining 8th level, the fang of Sseth receives a visit from Sseth in her dreams, during which the god bites her.

His venom imparts a special gift—the ability to move about without fear of detection by normal means.

This ability functions like the greater invisibility spell (caster level equals fang of Sseth level), except that the fang is hidden from hearing and scent as well.

She radiates silence to a radius of 5 feet, does not leave a scent, and cannot be detected by the scent ability.

This effect lasts for 8 hours, though the fang of Sseth may end it earlier as a free action.

This ability is the equivalent of a 6th-level spell.

EX-FANGS OF SSETH

A fang of Sseth who ceases to be evil, or who betrays Sseth or the Coiled Cabal loses all special abilities of the prestige class and may not progress any farther in levels as a fang of Sseth.

She regains her abilities and advancement potential if she atones for her violations (see the atonement spell description in the Player's Handbook), as appropriate.

MASTER OF VIPERS

Most vrael olo work within their tribes, but a few become loners, rejecting the collective scheming and rising religious strife that marks yuan-ti tribal life.

Some of these individuals embrace human society, trying to conceal their true natures and dwell among humans.

Others “go wild,” becoming independent wilderness explorers and jungle hunters.

A rare handful recognize and follow a deepening affinity for their lesser kin—the venomous snakes.

Such yuan-ti choose to dwell in wild places frequented by such creatures, such as sunny rock faces riddled with caverns, overgrown jungle ruins, and the like.

These outcast yuan-ti eventually learn to hunt not only to feed themselves, but also to spread destruction far and wide for the pure pleasure of it.

Tales among both yuan-ti and human adventurers call such individuals masters of vipers.

A master of vipers is always a lone Yuan-ti.

He never joins adventuring parties and travels with nonvipers only to hide from pursuers or to scout potential prey.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of vipers, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Race: Yuan-ti.

Alignment: Any evil (usually chaotic evil).

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skill: Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks.

Feat: Great Fortitude.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of viper's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the master of vipers prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of vipers gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Handfang (Sp): At 1st level, a master of vipers can use handfang (caster level equals master of vipers level; see Spells in Chapter 11) three times per day.

The Fortitude save DC for the poison is 10 + master of vipers level + master of vipers's Cha modifier.

Poison Immunity (Ex): A master of vipers is immune to all poisons.

Hold Serpent (Sp): At 2nd level, a master of vipers gains the ability to paralyze a serpent as if with a hold animal spell (caster level equals master of vipers level), except that the effect works only on serpents and lasts for 1 round per master of vipers level.

Any subject with an Intelligence score of 3 or higher may attempt a Will save (DC 10 + master of vipers level + master of vipers's Cha modifier) to negate the effect.

Ward Serpents (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a master of vipers can hold serpents at bay.

This ability functions like a protection from evil spell (caster level equals master of vipers level), except that the deflection and resistance bonuses apply to attacks from serpents, and summoned serpents cannot touch the master of vipers.

This ability is usable once per day at 3rd level and one additional time per day for every two master of vipers levels gained thereafter (twice per day at 5th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 9th level).

Charm Serpent (Sp): At 4th level, a master of vipers can use a limited form of charm animal (caster level equals master of vipers level) that affects only serpents.

Any subject with an Intelligence score of 3 or higher may attempt a Will save (DC 10 + master of vipers level + master of vipers's Cha modifier) to negate the effect.

This ability is usable one additional time per day for every two master of vipers levels gained (twice per day at 6th level, three times per day at 8th level, and four times per day at 10th level).

Serpent Dart (Sp): At 5th level, a master of vipers can produce serpentlike darts from his pointing fingers.

This ability functions like the magic missile spell (caster level equals master of vipers level), except that the missiles produced are Tiny vipers that deliver poison (injury, Fortitude DC 10 + master of vipers level + master of vipers's Con modifier, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Con) in addition to the spell's damage.

The serpent darts vanish after striking their targets.

This ability is usable three times per day at 5th level, four times per day at 7th level, and five times per day at 9th level.

Serpent Reach (Ex): Three times per day, a 5th-level or higher master of vipers can transform his wrist into a flexible, serpentine form that can expand 2 feet per master of vipers level.

This effect lasts for 2 rounds per master of vipers level.

This ability enables the master of vipers to deliver touch spells at a distance and, when combined with handfang, to bite distant opponents.

However, the serpentine wrist lacks the strength to constrict or entwine a foe.

The master of vipers can expand or retract his wrist as a free action.

Summon Serpents (Sp): At 6th level, a master of vipers can call any sort of serpent he has previously seen to fight or work for him.

Two serpents of the same kind appear and obey the character's commands.

For each new master of vipers level attained, an additional snake appears (three at 7th level, four at 8th level, five at 9th level, and six at 10th level).

The summoned serpents are all the same kind.

This ability otherwise functions like a summon nature's ally spell.

Viper Swarm (Sp): Once per day, a 7th-level or higher master of vipers can summon a viper swarm (see Fiend Folio page 172) that moves as he directs.

Use of this ability instantly ends any ward serpents, charm serpent, or summon serpents abilities that the character may have active.

Great Serpent (Su): At 8th level, a master of vipers gains the chameleon power and scent abilities of a yuan-ti halfblood if he did not already have them.

Furthermore, his alternate form ability is no longer limited to the shapes of vipers.

He can now take the form of any Huge or smaller serpent that he has seen before.

Swarm Shape (Su): When the master of vipers reaches 9th level, his alternate form ability expands to allow the form of a viper swarm (see Fiend Folio page 172).

This ability enables the master of vipers to move through tiny holes where a foe cannot follow, as well as attack as a swarm.

Translocate Serpent (Sp): At 10th level, a master of vipers can use a limited form of teleportation either to move a Medium or smaller serpent to a desired location, or to move himself to any spot within 5 feet of a serpent or the physical remains of one.

This ability otherwise functions like the dimension door spell.

NAGA OVERLORD

Naga overlords are evil masterminds who operate in secret, usually behind cults of devoted followers.

They seek to enslave lesser races and use them to dominate whole communities.

Naga overlords tend to be extremely vain, power-hungry, and obsessed with negating any threats to their safety and comfort.

Many even exhibit powerful god complexes.

Most naga overlords are banelar nagas, dark nagas, ha-nagas, or spirit nagas, although rare evil representatives of other naga types are not unknown.

Banelar overlords typically have levels in mystic theurge, while dark nagas, ha-nagas, and spirit nagas that become naga overlords usually are powerful sorcerers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a naga overlord, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Race: Naga.

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Intimidate 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Feats: Extend Spell, Skill Focus (Intimidate), Spell Focus (enchantment).

Spellcasting: Able to cast dominate person as a spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The naga overlord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (None), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the naga overlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Naga overlords gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new naga overlord level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he had (or could cast spells as) before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of naga overlord to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class he had, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became a naga overlord, he must decide to which class he adds each level of naga overlord for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Enslave (Su): A naga overlord can attempt to enslave any one living creature within 30 feet.

The target must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 naga overlord's character level + naga overlord's Cha modifier) or be affected as though by a dominate person spell (caster level equals naga overlord's arcane caster level).

An enslaved creature obeys the naga overlord's telepathic commands until freed by remove curse, and it can attempt a new Will save every 24 hours to break free.

The control is also broken if the naga overlord dies or travels more than 1 mile from its slave.

This ability is usable once per day at 1st level, twice per day at 4th level, and three times per day at 7th level.

Augment Followers I (Su): The naga overlord can augment the abilities of its followers.

The following spells automatically function as if affected by the Extend Spell feat when cast by a 2nd-level or higher naga overlord: bear's endurance, bull's strength, cat's grace, eagle's splendor, fox's cunning, mass bear's endurance, mass bull's strength, mass cat's grace, mass eagle's splendor, mass fox's cunning, mass owl's wisdom, and owl's wisdom.

These spells do not occupy higher spell slots or require additional casting time.

Tap Slave (Su): At 3rd level, a naga overlord can leech the life force of any one enslaved follower within 1 mile as if using the vampiric touch spell (caster level equals naga overlord's arcane caster level), except that he need not actually touch the target.

This ability is usable once per day at 3rd level, twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 9th level.

Augment Followers II (Su): The range of the following spells automatically becomes close (25 ft. + 5 ft./2 levels) when they are cast by a 5th-level or higher naga overlord:

bear's endurance, bull's strength, cat's grace, eagle's splendor, fox's cunning, mass bear's endurance, mass bull's strength, mass cat's grace, mass eagle's splendor, mass fox's cunning, mass owl's wisdom, and owl's wisdom.

Augment Followers III (Su): The following spells automatically function as if affected by the Extend Spell feat when cast by an 8th-level or higher naga overlord: bear's endurance, bull's strength, cat's grace, eagle's splendor, fox's cunning, mass bear's endurance, mass bull's strength, mass cat's grace, mass eagle's splendor, mass fox's cunning, mass owl's wisdom, and owl's wisdom.

These spells do not occupy higher spell slots or require additional casting time.

Enslave Monster (Su): At 10th level, a naga overlord's enslave ability functions like dominate monster rather than dominate person.

SERPENT SLAYER

Any intelligent being who learns what the yuan-ti are up to can be considered a foe of the vrael olo, but some individuals devote their entire lives to thwarting the serpentfolk.

Certain alert Harpers and Red Wizards fall into this category, as do high-ranking priests of human deities who have glimpsed the true might and nature of the yuan-ti. Such characters view the Slithering Ones as the ultimate doom of humankind if their power is not broken soon. In recent decades, certain priests of Helm took vows to smash the yuan-ti and thereby became the first true serpent slayers.

But this path is by no means limited to followers of the Vigilant One—or to clerics.

Serpent slayers aren't part of a formal organization, but they do aid each other whenever possible.

They sometimes scratch small recognition marks on stone or in dirt to denote the location of a cache, hidden route, or suspicious feature.

Their sign is an oval snake head with a forked tongue, impaled by a dagger through the head's lone visible eye.

If this sign is surrounded by a diamond-shaped outline, it warns of danger.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a serpent slayer, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 2 ranks, Spot 4 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge, Mobility.

Spells: Able to cast arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The serpent slayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Craft (any)

(Int), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the serpent slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Serpent slayers gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new serpent slayer level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class he had before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of serpent slayer to the level of whatever other spellcasting class he had, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a serpent slayer, he must decide to which class he adds each level of serpent slayer for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Venomguard (Ex): A serpent slayer gains a +4 bonus on saving throws against the venom of all Scaled Ones.

Detect Poison (Sp): At 2nd level, a serpent slayer gains the psionic ability to use detect poison (caster level equals serpent slayer level) at will.

Poison Immunity (Ex): At 3rd level, a serpent slayer becomes immune to all poisons.

Locate Serpent (Sp): A 4th-level serpent slayer gains the ability to sense Scaled Ones nearby. This ability functions like the locate creature spell (caster level equals serpent slayer level), except that it detects only Scaled Ones.

The serpent slayer can determine the kind of Scaled One detected, but a specific individual can be distinguished only if the serpent slayer has previously touched her.

This ability is usable twice per day at 4th level, and one additional time per day for every two serpent slayer levels thereafter (three times per day at 6th level, four times per day at 8th level, and five times per day at 10th level).

Neutralize Poison (Sp): At 5th level, a serpent slayer can use neutralize poison (caster level equals serpent slayer level) three times per day.

Ward Serpents (Su): Beginning at 6th level, a serpent slayer can hold serpents at bay.

This ability functions like a protection from evil spell (caster level equals serpent slayer level), except that the deflection and resistance bonuses apply to attacks from serpents, and summoned serpents cannot touch the serpent slayer.

This ability is usable once per day at 6th level and one additional time per day for every two serpent slayer levels gained thereafter (twice per day at 8th level and three times per day at 10th level).

Witherscales (Su): At 7th level, a serpent slayer can deal 2d4 points of damage to any Scaled One with a melee touch attack.

Strike of the Serpent (Sp): Once per day, an 8th-level serpent slayer can use true strike (caster level equals serpent slayer level) to augment an attack against any Scaled One.

He gains another daily use of this ability at 10th level.

Smite Serpent (Su): Once per day, a 9th-level or higher serpent slayer can attempt to smite a Scaled One with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma bonus (if any) to his attack roll and deals one extra point of damage per serpent slayer level.

If the serpent slayer accidentally smites a Scaleless One, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

SHINING SOUTH (3.5)

CRINTI SHADOW MARAUDER

Among the idly rich Crinti of Dambrath, some thrill in the havoc they wreak on their traditional foes—the halflings to the east, the wild elves to the north, and the wizards to the west.

These riders take pleasure in instilling uncertainty in their prey from a shroud of shadows, then imparting feelings of fearful surprise as the marauders appear without warning, escalating finally to sheer terror as the chase begins. Few actually see Crinti shadow marauders coming, and fewer live to tell the tale.

Crinti shadow marauders combine the physical prowess of master rider with the stealth of the most cunning shadowdancers.

Rangers work as the best entry class, but multiclass rogues and fighters are also attracted to the path of the Crinti shadow marauder.

Clerics, druids, and wizards find themselves particularly ill-suited to the strange combination of skills demanded by this class.

Crinti shadow marauders are found almost exclusively in Dambrath, since they tend to come from the aristocracy that rules that land.

They ride in packs as small as three to four individuals, all the way up to large skirmishing forces of several hundred. While the riders favor the fine horses of Dambrath, they are by no means limited to such mounts.

Occasionally, a Crinti shadow marauder grows tired of the life of riding on the plains with her comrades and leaves Dambrath entirely, perhaps taking up with others to see the wider world.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Crinti shadow marauder, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Handle Animal 4 ranks, Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks, Ride 8 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Stealthy.

Region: Dambrath.

Special: The character must either be Crinti or have the official sanction of the nobility of Dambrath. Only those accepted by the Crinti can train as shadow marauders.

CLASS SKILLS

The Crinti shadow marauder's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex). Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Crinti shadow marauder.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Crinti shadow marauders gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Shadow Ride (Su): A Crinti shadow marauder can travel on her mount between shadows as if by means of a dimension door spell.

Such supernatural transport must begin and end in an area with at least some shadow.

The marauder can ride up to a total of 50 feet per Crinti shadow marauder level per day in this way.

The amount can be split up among many rides, but rides of a distance shorter than 25 feet count as 25 feet.

Sudden Strike (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, if a Crinti shadow marauder can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Whenever a Crinti shadow marauder's target is denied his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus to AC or not), the marauder deals an extra 1d6 points of damage with her attack.

The extra damage increases to 2d6 at 4th level.

The extra damage from the sudden strike ability stacks with extra damage from sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target.

Ranged attacks count as sudden strikes only if the target is within 30 feet.

A Crinti shadow marauder can't strike with deadly accuracy from beyond that range.

A Crinti shadow marauder can only use sudden strike against living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sudden strike damage.

The Crinti shadow marauder must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

A Crinti shadow marauder cannot make a sudden strike while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are out of reach.

A Crinti shadow marauder can't use sudden strike to deliver nonlethal damage.

Weapons only capable of dealing nonlethal damage don't deal extra damage when used as part of a sudden strike.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd level, the Crinti shadow marauder gains a bonus feat selected from the following list: Mounted Archery, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge, Trample.

The Crinti shadow marauder must meet the normal prerequisites for the feat.

Shadow Walk (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, a Crinti shadow marauder can use shadow walk once per day, affecting only herself and her mount.

Her caster level is equal to her Crinti shadow marauder level, and she must be astride her mount to use this ability.

This ability does not stack with shadow walk spell-like abilities granted by other sources.

Shadow Pounce (Ex): At 5th level, a Crinti shadow marauder learns how to attack swiftly from the shadows.

Any time she uses an ability, spell, or effect with the teleportation descriptor (for example, her shadow ride ability), she can execute a full attack upon completion of the teleportation.

The marauder must have line of sight to her intended target from her original location.

Further, the spot to which she teleports must be a place from which she can make a melee attack against the intended target with whatever weapon she had in hand at the beginning of her action.

GREAT RIFT DEEP DEFENDER

The Great Rift deep defender has a keen understanding of the importance of making a stand.

He knows he must remain vigilant against the possibility of attack from the ancient enemies of the gold dwarves, and he has taken it upon himself to become an immovable bastion of protection at the edges of his subterranean home. He acts as a dam against the enemies that would invade his beloved Rift, and such a dwarf refuses to give way to any attacks, no matter how formidable.

Most Great Rift deep defenders are first fighters, paladins, rangers, or clerics.

Rogues, bards, and monks depend too heavily on mobility to effectively use the abilities of the Great Rift deep defender, and the gold dwarves don't count many barbarians among their number.

While sorcerers and druids might find the defensive capabilities of the Great Rift deep defender beneficial, such individuals usually have other goals.

Great Rift deep defenders serve as the main line of defense along the perimeter of the Deep Realm, that portion of the Great Rift below the surface and adjacent to the Underdark. They work well in units, guarding passages that lead deeper into uncontrolled territory.

Occasionally, a Great Rift deep defender can be found on some special mission elsewhere in the Underdark or, more rarely, on the surface.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Great Rift deep defender, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gold dwarf.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Dodge, Endurance, Toughness.

Region: The Great Rift.

CLASS SKILLS

The Great Rift deep defender's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Great Rift deep defender.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Great Rift deep defender is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light, medium, and heavy armor, and shields (including tower shields).

AC Bonus (Ex): The Great Rift deep defender receives a dodge bonus to Armor Class that starts at +1 and improves as the defender gains levels to a maximum of +3 at 5th level.

Hold the Line: The Great Rift deep defender gains Hold the Line (see page 20) as a bonus feat.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, a Great Rift deep defender gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(He still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

If the character gains uncanny dodge from a second class (such as rogue), he automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below).

Uncanny Stability (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a Great Rift deep defender improves his racial resistance to being moved from his position.

He gains an additional +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped while standing in a narrow or low space (+8 total, counting the dwarf racial trait).

See Subterranean Bulwark below for definitions of narrow and low spaces.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 4th level and above, a Great Rift deep defender can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flanking to sneak attack the deep defender.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the deep defender can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

If the character gains uncanny dodge (see above) from a second class (such as rogue), the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge, and the levels from those classes stack to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the Great Rift deep defender.

Subterranean Bulwark (Ex): When he is in an enclosed area, the Great Rift deep defender can become a stalwart bastion of defense.

In a narrow or a low space, he gains DR 3/–, as well as a +1 bonus on attack rolls and a +2 bonus on damage rolls.

(A narrow space is an area no wider than 5 feet, while a low area is shorter than the deep defender, but at least half of his height).

He cannot move from the spot he is defending without losing the benefits of this ability.

The deep defender ignores the penalty for hampered melee when fighting in a narrow or low space with light or one-handed melee weapons, and takes only a –4 circumstance penalty on attack rolls when using a two-handed weapon in such conditions.

In a space both narrow and low, the deep defender functions as if only one of those conditions applied.

In addition, when fighting in cramped quarters the deep defender does not lose his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class.

GREAT SEA CORSAIR

Plying the trade lanes along the southern coast of Faerûn, the Great Sea corsair is a master of the waves with a devil-may-care attitude.

Branded pirate by some and independent mercenary by others, the Great Sea corsair is a privateer who runs things her own way and gets payment for services up front.

Those who pay a Great Sea corsair can expect their own ships to sail safely, secure that they have a powerful naval force watching their backs.

Ships that haven't bothered to contract with these privateers can anticipate—sooner or later and out of sight of land—to be boarded and plundered.

Such is life on the Great Sea.

Rogues are most likely to turn their attention to the path of a Great Sea corsair, while barbarians, bards, fighters, and rangers do so less frequently.

Occasionally, a spellcaster might be attracted to life aboard a privateer's ship.

Other classes either don't have the requisite skills or simply have no interest in such a drastically different lifestyle.

Great Sea corsairs enjoy one another's company.

A number of them might carouse together when ashore, but few ever stray far enough inland to leave behind the tangy smell of salt and the soothing sound of crashing waves.

Sometimes a Great Sea corsair takes up with other adventurers, especially if there is seagoing travel to be expected and treasure to be had.

CREATING A GREAT SEA CORSAIR

You can create a Great Sea corsair by adapting the dread pirate prestige class from Song and Silence for use in Faerûn. (An updated version of the dread pirate prestige class also appears in the upcoming D&D supplement Complete Adventurer).

The prestige class can be used with the following adjustments.

Patron (Ex): At 1st level, the Great Sea corsair must designate some merchant or political entity as her patron. This patron is a person or an organization that the corsair has served in some way.

For example, if the Great Sea corsair has been hired by a Dambrathan noble to sink his rivals' merchant ships, then the corsair can designate the noble as a patron.

The corsair gains a +2 circumstance bonus on Diplomacy checks when dealing with her patron.

She gains a +2 circumstance bonus on Intimidate checks when dealing with any of her patron's adversaries, or anyone she is known to have pirated before (as inconsequential as a single ship and its crew to as daunting as an entire nation).

At any point, the corsair can switch to a new patron, in which case the circumstance bonuses change accordingly.

If the corsair ever chooses to forgo a patron altogether, she immediately takes a -2 circumstance penalty on all Diplomacy checks with anyone the DM deems appropriate, until such time as she establishes a new patron.

A corsair without a patron is a mere pirate, unworthy of trust.

HALRUAAN ELDER

For a member of Halruaan society, being recognized as a wizard is not enough; the panache with which one utilizes magic is of equal importance.

Halruaan elders are the very epitome of such ostentatious thinking, and their dazzling and unique displays of arcane force make them the most respected practitioners in the land.

Their unparalleled talents are what earned them a seat on the revered and prestigious Council of Elders, where they participate in the policy-making of the country.

Arcane spellcasters are the only classes eligible to join the ranks of the Halruaan elders, and the vast majority are wizards.

Neither bards nor sorcerers are respected in Halruaan society, so few of them ever stay in their homeland long enough to attain the level of talent necessary to become a member of the Council.

No other classes have the necessary skills to become a Halruaan elder.

Though Halruaan elders are responsible for governing the country, the demands on their time in this capacity are not great.

Thus, they are free to travel, experiment, and research new spells or craft items.

A sizable number of elders rarely appear in the court of the netyarch (wizard-king), choosing instead to venture forth in search of wondrous magic elsewhere in Faerûn.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Halruaan elder, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Halruaan Adept, Spell Thematics, any metamagic feat, any one item creation feat.

Spells: Able to cast 4th-level arcane spells.

Region: Halruaa.

Special: The character must petition for entry into the Halruaan Council of Elders and, after a divinatory background check by current elders, be accepted to that ruling body.

CLASS SKILLS

The Halruaan elder's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Halruaan elder prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Halruaan elders gain no proficiency in weapons or armor.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each level, the Halruaan elder gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If he had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a Halruaan elder, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Adroit Casting (Ex): The Halruaan elder has become so skilled at casting his spells with various metamagic feats that utilizing such feats has become easier for him.

At 1st level, he picks a metamagic feat he knows.

The cost in increased level of spell slots to use that metamagic feat is now permanently reduced by one level, to a minimum total modification of a spell's original level + 1.

For example if a Halruaan elder with adroit casting 1 wishes to prepare an empowered magic missile, that spell takes up a slot only one level higher than its original level (instead of two).

At 4th level, and every three levels thereafter, the Halruaan elder can choose another metamagic feat he knows.

That feat gains the same benefit; spells altered by that feat take up a slot one level lower than normal (minimum of the spell's original level + 1).

If the Halruaan elder doesn't have a metamagic feat to apply the ability to when he gains a level that grants adroit casting, or if he's has previously applied adroit casting to all of the viable metamagic feats he knows (any metamagic feats that require spells to occupy a slot two or more levels higher than normal), he gains no benefit from this ability until he acquires a new metamagic feat that adroit casting can affect.

At that time, he can automatically designate that feat as altered by the unused application of adroit casting.

The elder cannot choose the same metamagic feat more than once with adroit casting.

For example, a Halruaan elder who picks Quicken Spell at 4th level, reducing the cost in increased level of spell slots to three, cannot pick Quicken Spell against at 7th or 10th level to reduce the cost again.

The elder can prepare a spell with multiple metamagic feats altered through the adroit casting ability.

For example, a 10th-level wizard/10th-level Halruaan elder who has selected Empower Spell and Maximize Spell as two of the metamagic feats altered by adroit casting can prepare 1st-level empowered, maximized spells in 4th-level spell slots, as opposed to 6th-level spell slots (2 - 1 [empowered] + 3 - 1 [maximized] = 3 [new spell slot used]).

Circle Link (Ex): A Halruaan elder has the ability to participate in Halruaan circle magic through the Halruaan Adept feat, a prerequisite for entry into the class.

Circle magic is described fully on page 59 of the Forgotten Realms Campaign Setting and page 194 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

A Halruaan elder of at least 5th level can be a circle leader.

He also goes through a ritual so he can be contacted via Halruaa's Crystal Orb (see page 59).

Signature Spell: A Halruaan elder gains Signature Spell as a bonus feat at 2nd, 5th, and 8th levels.

He need not meet the prerequisite for the feat, and thus can choose any spell he knows as a signature spell, rather than a spell he has mastered with the Spell Mastery feat.

See page 43 of Player's Guide to Faerûn for the Signature Spell feat.

HALRUAAN MAGEHOUND

Magehounds are Halruaa's inquisitors.

Conceived in the country's earliest days as a means of preventing the kind of tragedy Karsus brought upon the Netherese, magehounds are tasked with keeping renegade practitioners in check.

They test the Jordaini for magical ability, track down criminal wizards, and enforce Halruaa's most important laws—those governing the use of magic.

Everyone fears magehounds to some degree, for they are considered above the normal laws of the land.

They answer only to the Council of Elders, and even those wizards are not immune to a magehound's wrath.

Typically, only wizards or clerics have the insight and dedication to become a Halruaan magehound.

Occasionally, sorcerers become magehounds, and they are, in some ways, considered more appropriate for the task because of their perverse (by Halruaan standards) arcane nature.

The job of Halruaan magehounds is often lonely.

Arcane spellcasters shun their company, and rarely do these inquisitors gather in force unless their prey is particularly powerful or difficult to capture.

More often, a magehound has associates to assist her in the hunt.

These companions provide skills and abilities that compliment the magehound's own, making her task that much easier.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Halruaan magehound, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Gather Information 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks, Spellcraft 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Great Fortitude, Lightning Reflexes.

Spells: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane or divine spells.

Ability to cast at least three spells that require Fortitude saves and at least three spells that require Reflex saves.

(A spell that deals damage but allows no saving throw can substitute for any of these required spells).

Patron Deity: Azuth.

Region: Halruaa.

CLASS SKILLS

The Halruaan magehound's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Halruaan magehound prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Halruaan magehound gains no proficiency with any weapon or armor.
Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each level except 4th and 8th, a Halruaan magehound gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If she had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a Halruaan magehound, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Improved Saves (Ex): The Halruaan magehound learns to improve her resistance to the very sorts of spells she uses against others.

At 1st level, she gains a +1 resistance bonus on her saves against spells and spell-like abilities.

This bonus increases by +1 every two levels above 1st, to a maximum of +5 at 9th level.

Arcane Sensitivity (Sp): The Halruaan magehound develops a keen awareness of the presence of arcane magic in any living creature.

She can use arcane sensitivity (see page 44) at will as a wizard whose level is equal to her Halruaan magehound level plus her highest spellcaster level.

Spell Resistance (Ex): The Halruaan magehound develops resistance to magic.

At 4th level, she gains a spell resistance equal to 15 + her Halruaan magehound level.

Antimagic Field (Sp): The Halruaan magehound develops a powerful tool to thwart the mages she is hunting.

At 10th level, the magehound can use antimagic field once per day as a wizard whose level is equal to her Halruaan magehound level plus her highest spellcaster level.

HAND OF THE ADAMA

The hand of the Adama is a benign leader, judge and jury, and protector of the common folk all rolled into one.

In a land where the faith of the people is intertwined with their day-to-day activities, the hand of the Adama is the presence that helps them remember the code of conduct, settles disputes, and assists those who require aid.

A hand of the Adama understands better than anyone the truths of "The One" and serves as teacher for others to gain clarity in their actions.

Clerics and paladins most often turn to the role of spiritual advisor and peacekeeper that the hand of the Adama embodies.

Very rarely, a druid or ranger accepts the mantle of a hand of the Adama.

No other classes have the spiritual connection necessary to serve a temple and its flock in such a manner.

Hands of the Adama often work in small groups together, or with others who are devoted in their own way to furthering the tenets of the faith.

Occasionally, a hand of the Adama leaves the Golden Water on some mission or purpose, but most are not often seen far from home.

The companions of a hand of the Adama must be individuals of high moral character.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hand of the Adama, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks, Heal 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: The Adama.

Region: The Golden Water.

CLASS SKILLS

The hand of the Adama's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hand of the Adama prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hands of the Adama gain no weapon or armor proficiency.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each level, a hand of the Adama gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If he had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a hand of the Adama, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Tongues (Sp): A hand of the Adama can use tongues as the spell a number of times per day equal to his hand of the Adama level plus his Charisma bonus (minimum once per day) as a caster of a level equal to his hand of the Adama level plus his highest divine spellcaster level.

Lay on Hands (Su): A hand of the Adama can heal a total number of hit points of damage equal to his hand of the Adama level \times his Charisma bonus (if any) by touch. See the paladin class feature on page 44 of the Player's Handbook.

Paladin levels stack with hand of the Adama levels for the purpose of determining how many hit points the hand of the Adama can heal per day.

Discern Lies (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, a hand of the Adama can use discern lies as the spell three times per day as a caster of a level equal to his hand of the Adama level plus his highest divine spellcaster level.

The save DC against this ability is $14 +$ the hand of the Adama's Wis modifier.

Remove Disease (Sp): A hand of the Adama of 2nd level can use remove disease, as the spell, once per week at 2nd level. At 5th level and higher, he can use this ability twice per week.

Divination Enhancement (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a hand of the Adama adds twice his hand of the Adama level to his percentage chance of success when using divination spells such as augury or divination.

If a cleric 11/hand of the Adama 4 casts divination, his chance of success is 70% (base) + 15% (1% per caster level) + 8% ($2 \times$ his hand of the Adama level), or 93%.

Pierce Illusion (Su): At 4th level and above, a hand of the Adama gains the supernatural ability to penetrate illusions and disguises at will.

Whenever a hand of the Adama sees an illusion or disguise spell of any sort, he immediately makes a Will save to see through it.

The hand of the Adama need not interact with or touch the illusion; visual contact is enough to give the Will save.

Learn the Truth (Su): By touching a creature that has lied to him, a hand of the Adama of 5th level can force the creature to tell the truth.

The creature can make a Will save (DC $15 +$ the hand of the Adama's Cha modifier) to resist this mind-affecting compulsion effect.

If the saving throw fails, the creature must speak the true version of the lie it uttered.

The hand of the Adama can use this ability at will, but only after casting discern lies (or using his spell-like ability of the same name) on the creature in question.

Table 2–5: The Hand of the Adama

HIN FIST

A hin fist is a devout member of a temple dedicated to both Yondalla and the protection of the halfling realm of Luiren. Brimming with confidence in her own abilities, a hin fist transforms that self-assurance into the power of mastery over herself and the world around her.

She sees her body and mind as gifts from Yondalla that should be developed and used to the fullest—there should be no need for artificial tools such as weapons.

Clerics, paladins, and monks make the best hin fists, while bards, fighters, and rogues sometimes narrow the focus of their life to adapt to these ways.

Even druids, sorcerers, and wizards can occasionally discipline the mind and body enough to make good use of a hin fist's skills and abilities.

Hin fists usually study and improve themselves among their own kind in temples in Luiren.

Otherwise they wander across the land alone or with small groups, serving as champions of Yondalla.

Their strict beliefs require them to select comrades that are true of heart.

CREATING A HIN FIST

You can create a hin fist by adapting the sacred fist prestige class from Complete Divine for use in Faerûn.

The prestige class can be used with the following adjustments.

To qualify to become a hin fist, a character must fulfill the following criteria (in addition to those of the original prestige class).

Race: Halfling.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Patron Deity: Yondalla.

Region: Luiren.

JORDAIN VIZIER

The Jordaini are a special servitor caste, though still upper class, in the magocracy of Halruaa.

They are trained at a young age to understand magic, schooled in a wide range of academic disciplines, and taught to be imperturbable in the face of the wondrous. Following their graduation from House Jordain, they are assigned to one of Halruaa's ruling class of wizards, where their special skills make them important advisors to and guardians of their new masters.

Most jordain viziers begin their training as experts, and then apply their abilities to the monk class until qualifying as a jordain vizier, whereupon they typically alternate between monk and jordain vizier levels.

Members of the jordain order usually multiclass as experts, fighters, jordain viziers, and monks, but some multiclass as rogues.

Few take up spellcasting classes, since doing so inevitably makes them hunted by the magehounds.

Jordain viziers approach adventures as unflappably as they approach everything else.

While most jordain viziers are found away from their homes only when they accompany their masters on important missions, a few flee Halruaa due to a breach of their ethical code or to find freedom.

Such renegades are hunted persons, likely to surround themselves with likeminded allies and be always on the move.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a jordain vizier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Halruaan).

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Will Save: +6.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Diplomacy 2 ranks, Gather Information 2 ranks, Heal 2 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (history) 4 ranks, Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 4 ranks, Knowledge (any one other) 4 ranks, Listen 2 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Spellwise.

Patron Deity: One of Halruaa's accepted deities, usually Mystra or Azuth.

Special: Must be literate and speak Common, Halruaan, and at least two other languages.

Must have been raised by House Jordain.

Such rearing precludes the practice of arcane magic and the use of many magic items, subject to investigation by a magehound.

CLASS SKILLS

The jordain vizier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (n/a), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 8 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the jordain vizier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A jordain vizier gains no proficiency with any weapons or armor.

Arcane Nondetection (Ex): A jordain vizier undergoes mental and physical training to make him difficult to detect with arcane divination spells and items.

This ability functions exactly like the nondetection spell, except that it works only against arcane magic.

The DC to overcome this nondetection ability is 15 + the character's jordain vizier level + his Cha modifier.

Arcane Spell Resistance (Ex): A jordain vizier has spell resistance against arcane magic equal to 10 + the character's jordain vizier level + his Cha modifier.

Eidetic Memory (Ex): Jordain viziers are trained so deeply in various forms of mnemonics that their skills become subconscious.

They collect knowledge from all disciplines and can process it in a deductive way that defies explanation.

This ability has three functions: recollection of knowledge and perceptions, committing specific things to memory, and making accurate conclusions.

Through years of study, with the intention of becoming of the greatest use to his wizard master, a jordain vizier gains the ability to know legends or information regarding various topics, just as a bard can with bardic knowledge.

The jordain vizier adds his jordain vizier level + his Int modifier to a lore check, which functions otherwise exactly like a bardic knowledge check.

See page 28 of the Player's Handbook for more information on bardic knowledge.

If a jordain vizier has levels in bard, loremaster, or another class that grants an ability similar to bardic knowledge, those class levels stack for the purpose of determining the efficacy of this aspect of eidetic memory.

Table 2–6: Eidetic Memory shows additional example DCs for recalling or knowing a particular fact.

Table 2–6: Eidetic Memory

Type of Memory	DC
Recall obvious detail or common knowledge	10
Several noblewomen attended Elder Thebadol's induction celebration; the gist of a conversation; silver weapons hurt lycanthropes.
Recall important detail or specialized knowledge	15
Thebadol's third daughter was absent; key phrases of a conversation; fiendish creatures have cold resistance.
Recall noticeable detail or esoteric knowledge	20
Boryka, a magehound, asked several ball-goers about Thebadol's daughter; word-for-word recollection of key portions of a conversation; which spells affect a particular kind of golem.
Trivial detail or obscure knowledge	25
Thebadol grimaced briefly when Boryka asked about his daughter; word-for-word recollection of an entire conversation; the resistances and immunities of various outsiders.

A jordain vizier can also commit an item to memory with perfect accuracy.

He can store a number of items equal to his jordain vizier level + his Int modifier.

The jordain vizier can drop older items in favor of new ones.

Dropped items can be recalled as if they were other types of memories, using the DCs on Table 2–6: Eidetic Memory.

Finally, the jordain vizier can use his honed memory to make lightning-fast deductions based on only the slightest clues, patterns, or scraps of information.

He can make reasonable statements about a person, place, or object, from seemingly little knowledge.

However, this ability is the result of a rigorously logical process, involving recalling and correlating every possible piece of data with bearing on the topic.

The nature of the knowledge the jordan vizier gains is subject to DM discretion, but might include the answer to a riddle, the way out of maze, or even a conclusion concerning a dilemma.

An eidetic memory check, with a bonus equal to the character's jordan vizier level + his Int modifier, must be made to compile the desired information.

The DM secretly determines the DC.

Bonus Language (Ex): During their laborious studies, jordan viziers learn new languages to access more knowledge and better serve their wizard masters.

The jordan vizier can choose a new language at 2nd and 4th level.

Combat Insight (Ex): Due to their quick, deductive minds and extensive training, jordan viziers can predict an opponent's next move to some extent.

Jordan viziers gain a +1 insight bonus on attack rolls and a +1 dodge bonus to Armor Class.

At 4th level, the bonuses increase to +2.

Counterspell (Su): While jordan viziers do not learn to cast spells, beginning at 3rd level, they learn to direct their spell resistance outward.

This, combined with their knowledge of wizardry and how to disrupt spells, gives them the ability to prepare to counterspell an arcane spell as a ready action.

(For more information on counterspells, see page 170 of the Player's Handbook).

Like a spellcaster, a jordan vizier must select an opponent as the target of the counterspell and ready an action to counter her spell.

When the opponent tries to cast a spell, a vizier makes a Spellcraft check (DC 15 + the spell's level) as a free action to identify the opponent's spell.

Unlike a spellcaster, to complete the action, the jordan vizier must make a special class level check (1d20 + jordan vizier level) that equals or exceeds 5 + the spell's caster level.

If successful, the jordan vizier negates the arcane spell with no other results.

The jordan vizier can only counterspell spells of a level equal to or less than his jordan vizier level + his Cha modifier, and he can only attempt to counterspell a number of times per day equal to the same number.

This power is Weave-based and can be affected by Shadow Weave feats and magic just as any other Weave magic.

An ex-jordan vizier who gains the ability to counterspell as a spellcaster must choose, after making his Spellcraft check, to counterspell either as a jordan vizier or as his spellcaster class.

The abilities do not stack in any way.

Aide-de-Camp (Ex): Jordan viziers eventually become indispensable assistants to their masters.

At 5th level, the character doubles his Intelligence and Wisdom bonuses (if any) for the purposes of eidetic memory and all appropriate class skill checks.

Grace (Ex): At 5th level, jordan viziers become more resistant to the effects of magic.

The character can apply his Charisma bonus (if any) as a bonus on saving throws against supernatural abilities, spells, and spell-like abilities.

Code of Conduct: Jordan viziers are indoctrinated to never lie, never utilize spells (or magic items that produce spell-like effects), and obey Halruaan wizards, authorities, and laws.

The punishment for breaking these rules is usually death. All Jordaini are rendered infertile upon graduation, so no jordan vizier can have children.

Jordan viziers seldom handle money on the theory that they are less likely to be corrupted by its lure.

They are taught to value the philosophical over the material and rely on their wizard masters to handle most of their material needs.

Multiclass Note: Most jordan viziers multiclass in expert, monk, and/or fighter.

Jordan viziers can add levels in any of these classes without losing the ability to advance as a monk.

This is an exception to the rule in the Ex-Monks section, page 42 of the Player's Handbook.

Violating this expanded limit by multiclassing into a class other than those listed above ends the jordan vizier's development as a monk, as described in the standard rules. Such multiclassing does not end the jordan vizier's development as a jordan vizier.

Some jordan viziers multiclass as rogues or sorcerers, though the latter choice almost assuredly forces them out of the jordan order and makes them fugitives hunted by the deadly magehounds.

Ex-Jordan Viziers: A jordan vizier who becomes nonlawful cannot gain further levels as a jordan vizier, but he retains all jordan vizier abilities.

In addition, a jordan vizier who gets caught violating the code of conduct can be thrown out of the jordan order, thereby preventing him from gaining new levels in this class.

Unfortunately, such banishment is more rare than a death sentence.

LUIREN MARCHWARDEN

The Luiren marchwarden is the defender of the frontier in the land of the halflings.

In Luiren, much of the territory is still verdant and untamed.

The hin rarely settle down for long stretches, but their communities are still threatened by encroaching monsters and would-be invaders from other lands.

The halflings need protectors to watch over them and keep dangers from slipping past the borders unobserved.

Such is the task of the Luiren marchwarden.

Rangers and druids are best suited to become marchwardens, but sometimes other classes choose this path.

Of those classes, only wizards and sorcerers truly lack the defensive instincts necessary to carry out the tasks of the marchwarden effectively.

Barbarians are unusual in Luiren, and thus they are also rare as marchwardens.

Marchwardens work alone and in small groups.

Either way, they accept responsibility for a specific region of the countryside, and they consider it their duty to defend that plot of land—and the halflings who reside on it—from any and all threats.

They seldom roam beyond their home territory, because many of their abilities and powers are tied to the region where they stand vigilant.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Luiren marchwarden, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Halfling.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (Luiren local) 5 ranks, Knowledge (geography) 8 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Investigator, Track Spells: Able to cast 1st-level divine spells.

Region: Luiren.

CLASS SKILLS

The Luiren marchwarden's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (Luiren local) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex). Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Luiren marchwarden prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Luiren marchwarden gains no proficiency with any weapons or armor.

March Bonus (Ex): A Luiren marchwarden gets a morale bonus on saves and to Armor Class whenever he is within the boundary of his march (see Sanctify March, below).

He also gets this bonus on Hide, Knowledge (nature), Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Survival checks while within his march.

This bonus starts at +2 and improves with every odd marchwarden level, until it reaches +4 at 5th level.

Sanctify March (Ex): A Luiren marchwarden establishes a territory, called a march, which is his to defend against all threats.

This march is an area 5 miles per marchwarden level in a radius from a central point—usually the center of a village or town, but sometimes an unusual place, such as a sacred grove or a waterfall.

To consider a location for his march, a marchwarden must know the terrain exceptionally well (as indicated by the skill requirements for this class).

While a marchwarden is within his sanctified march, he gains all the additional abilities and bonuses of the class as specified below.

If a Luiren marchwarden chooses to establish a new march, he must first create familiarity with the location by living there for a month.

Once he has become accustomed to the area, the marchwarden can designate the locale as his march, but the benefits of the march are not fully vested immediately.

The first week a Luiren marchwarden occupies his new march, he has only the benefits of a 1st-level marchwarden.

During the second week, the benefits due a 2nd-level marchwarden activate, and so on each week, until the maximum benefits of the marchwarden's own level function.

The moment a marchwarden establishes a new march, he loses all benefits in the old one.

Detect Evil (Sp): A Luiren marchwarden can use detect evil at will while inside the boundary of his sanctified march.

Share March Bonus (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a Luiren marchwarden can share the morale bonuses he gains from his march bonus ability with a single ally within 30 feet. Sharing the march bonus is a free action that can be performed at will, but a marchwarden must be able to see his ally at the time the ability is activated.

The effect lasts until the target is out of range or until the Luiren marchwarden ends it as a free action.

Easy Trail (Su): From 2nd level on, any time a Luiren marchwarden is inside the boundary of his sanctified march, he can move through all types of terrain as though under the effects of an easy trail spell.

This spell is found on page 46.

Safe Clearing (Sp): A 3rd-level and higher marchwarden gains the ability to use the spell safe clearing (see page 48) once per day.

The effect is treated as if improved by the Widen Spell metamagic feat.

A marchwarden must be within his march to use this ability, and he uses it at a caster level equal to twice his Luiren marchwarden level.

Dispel Evil (Sp): Once he reaches 4th level, a Luiren marchwarden inside the boundary of his sanctified march can use dispel evil once per day.

His caster level is equal to twice the character's Luiren marchwarden level.

Land Womb (Sp): A 4th-level Luiren marchwarden gains the ability to use the spell land womb once per day, so long as he is inside the boundary of his sanctified march.

His caster level is equal to twice the character's Luiren marchwarden level.

Commune with March (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, a marchwarden can gather information about her entire march once per day as if he had cast the commune with nature spell.

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): At 5th level, within the confines of his march, a marchwarden can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

MAQUAR CRUSADER

The Maquar are the noble class of warriors in the nation of Estagund that exist for one purpose—devoted service to the rajah of that land.

A Maquar crusader follows a strict code of conduct that not only limits what he can own or where he can live, but also limits the ways in which merchants can influence him. Traditionally, Maquar crusaders are charged with protection of the royal house and family, defense of the nation, and consultation on battle tactics.

They are both powerful champions, capable of impressive combat prowess with the falchion, and renowned defenders, skilled at protecting those who cannot defend themselves.

Fighters and paladins make up the bulk of recruits to the ranks of the Maquar, though rangers and clerics sometimes hear the call to serve the rajah.

Members of few other classes have the combination of dedication, military skill, and discipline to succeed as Maquar crusaders.

Maquar crusaders usually operate in groups, though these can be small elite units tasked with specific jobs—such as security for the rajah's daughter—or in larger forces during times of war.

A lone Maquar crusader might be sent on a serious mission in the service of his rajah, perhaps as a guardian for diplomats.

At these times, the crusader might welcome the companionship of adventurers, though some find the Maquar's strict code of conduct inconvenient at times.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Maquar crusader, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good or lawful neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 4 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Combat Expertise, Weapon Focus (falchion).

Patron Deity: The Adama.

Region: The Golden Water.

Special: The character must have a reputation as an honorable and dedicated person.

He must spend one full month living by the standards of the Maquar crusader's code of conduct before being admitted into the Maquar.

CLASS SKILLS

The Maquar crusader's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Maquar crusaders are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Uncanny Loyalty (Ex): The Maquar crusader's unswerving dedication and loyalty to his duty makes him difficult to corrupt or influence.

Beginning at 1st-level, he gains a +1 resistance bonus on Will saves against all mind-affecting spells and spell-like abilities; this bonus increases as the crusader gains levels, until it reaches +4 at 10th level.

Harm's Way (Ex): A Maquar crusader can elect to place himself in the path of danger to protect a single ally, called his charge.

Anytime the crusader is within 5 feet of his charge, and the charge is subject to an attack, the crusader can elect to switch places with her and take the attack in her place (the two physically switch spaces).

The crusader must declare his intent to switch places with his charge before the attack roll is made.

A charge can be selected as a free action when the crusader rolls initiative at the beginning of a combat and cannot be changed for the duration of that combat.

The Maquar crusader can only use this ability if his charge is one size category larger than he is, or smaller.

Greater Weapon Focus: Maquar crusaders receive Greater Weapon Focus (falchion) as a bonus feat.

Smite (Su): Once per day, a Maquar crusader of 2nd level or higher can make a single melee attack with a +4 attack bonus and a damage bonus equal to his Maquar crusader level.

The crusader must declare the smite before making the attack roll, and that smite use is wasted for the day if he misses.

At 6th level, the smite is usable two times per day, increasing to three times per day at 9th level.

Allied Defense: A 3rd-level Maquar crusader gains Allied Defense (see page 19) as a bonus feat.

Defensive Strike (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a Maquar crusader can make an attack of opportunity against an adjacent opponent who attacks his charge in melee.

The crusader is still limited to one attack of opportunity per round, unless he has the Combat Reflexes feat.

He gains a +1 bonus on this attack for every three levels above 4th.

Deflect Attack (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, the Maquar crusader can attempt to parry a melee attack against his charge.

To attempt this, he must be within 5 feet of his charge, aware of the impending attack, not flat-footed, and holding a melee weapon or shield capable of deflecting the attack.

Once per round when his charge would normally be hit with a melee weapon, the crusader can make a Reflex save (DC 20 + attacking weapon's magic enhancement bonus [if any]).

If he succeeds, he deflects the blow as a free action, rendering it harmless.

At 8th level, the Maquar crusader gains a +1 competence bonus on this Reflex save.

Code of Conduct: The Maquar crusader must adhere to a strict code of conduct at all times or risk being expelled from the Maquar and losing his honored status within society.

A Maquar cannot own anything other than the clothes he wears, his armor, his sword, and a small amount of personal effects that he can carry himself.

(Maquar crusaders hailing from the paladin class can keep their special mounts and the gear required for riding).

He has no home other than the one his rajah supplies him. It is the rajah's responsibility to provide for a Maquar crusader (one cannot hold a job other than as a crusader), but he is expected to assist the public in a time of need, whether that means defending the rajah from assassins or helping to build a new public building in a small village. A Maquar crusader cannot take payment for his service, whether in coin or other material goods, but he can ask for a single night's hospitality from any citizen when he is away from his usual quarters.

The Maquar are expected to obey the rajah (or a leader he appoints to operate on his behalf) unquestioningly.

Multiclass Note: A character who was a paladin before joining the Maquar crusader prestige class can freely add levels of Maquar crusader without losing the ability to advance as a paladin, so long as he continues to meet all other requirements for maintaining paladin status. This is an exception to the rule in the Ex-Paladins section, page 44 of the Player's Handbook.

Violating this expanded limit by multiclassing into a class other than Maquar crusader ends the character's development as a paladin, as described in the standard rules.

Such multiclassing does not end the character's development as a Maquar crusader.

SCOURGE MAIDEN

Scourge maidens are warrior-priestesses of Loviatar dedicated to pain and anguish.

They have perfected the art of torture, both physical and mental, and they find their own spiritual satisfaction by tormenting anyone they can.

The scourge, Loviatar's favored weapon, is an implement of war and persecution for all scourge maidens.

Clerics and cleric/fighters who are initiated into inner circle of Loviatar's followers are eligible to become scourge maidens.

Few others have the demeanor and talents to serve in such a fashion.

Scourge maidens are the frontline combatants within temples dedicated to Loviatar.

They are responsible for fetching prisoners, defending high-ranking priestesses, and inflicting painful punishment on offenders.

Though scourge maidens typically work in groups with one another, they can and do undertake solitary quests.

These servants of Loviatar can be found in the company of adventurers—so long as those adventurers are not squeamish and have the moral latitude to accept a sadist in their midst.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a scourge maiden, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Gender: Female.

Alignment: Lawful evil, lawful neutral, or neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Heal 4 ranks, Intimidate 8 ranks, Use Rope 4 ranks.

Feats: Initiate of Loviatar, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (scourge).

Patron Deity: Loviatar.

CLASS SKILLS

The scourge maiden's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int Modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the scourge maiden prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Scourge maidens gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each odd-numbered level, a scourge maiden gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If she had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a scourge maiden, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Weapon Focus: A scourge maiden receives Weapon Focus (scourge) as a bonus feat.

Bane (Sp): At 2nd level and above, a scourge maiden can fill her enemies with fear and doubt.

This ability, usable three times per day, duplicates the effects of the bane spell, with a save DC equal to 11 + the scourge maiden's Cha modifier.

The caster level is equal to her divine spellcaster level.

Crushing Despair (Sp): A 3rd-level scourge maiden can evoke great sadness.

Three times per day, the scourge maiden can use crushing despair, with a save DC equal to 14 + the scourge maiden's Cha modifier.

The caster level is equal to her divine spellcaster level.

Stunning Strike (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, a scourge maiden can stun an opponent with a blow from her scourge.

She must declare that she is using this ability before she makes her attack roll (thus, a failed attack roll ruins the attempt).

This ability forces a foe damaged by the scourge maiden's attack to make a Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 the scourge maiden's character level + the maiden's Wis modifier), in addition to dealing damage normally.

An opponent who fails this saving throw is stunned for 1 round (until just before the scourged maiden's next action). A stunned character can't act, loses any Dexterity bonus to AC, and takes a -2 penalty to AC.

A scourge maiden can attempt a stunning attack once per day for every scourge maiden level she has attained, and no more than once per round.

Constructs, oozes, plants, undead, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to critical hits cannot be stunned.

Painful Strike (Ex): At 5th level, the scourge maiden can cause great pain with her scourge attacks.

She can spend one of her stunning strike daily uses to subject the target of her scourge to such debilitating pain that he is nauseated for 2 rounds.

A successful Fortitude save (DC as stunning strike) negates the effect.

Creatures immune to stunning attacks are also immune to this ability.

Agonizing Strike (Ex): At 6th level, the scourge maiden can cause crippling pain with her scourge attacks.

She can spend one of her stunning strike daily uses to subject the target to such punishing pain that he immediately drops prone and is dazed by the agony for 1d4 rounds.

Being prone means the victim gains a +4 bonus to Armor Class against ranged attacks, but takes a -4 penalty to Armor Class against melee attacks.

A successful Fortitude save (DC as stunning strike) negates the effect.

Creatures immune to stunning attacks are also immune to this ability.

SILVER MARCHES (3.0)

GIANT-KILLER

Giant-killers are great heroes so long as they are killing giants.

When they are not out doing what they do best, giant-killers tend to drink a lot and pick fights with people bigger than themselves.

Some kindly giant-killers break the stereotype, but everyone expects giant-killers to be rude and boastful, so many live down to expectations.

Giant-killers are found most frequently in regions where giants are common.

Most giant-killers begin their careers as barbarians, fighters, or rangers, but clerics of certain deities, paladins, and rogues also choose this path.

Not all giants are evil, and not all giant-killers are good. There are a few sorcerers and wizards among their number, but hardly any druids.

As NPCs, most giant-killers prefer to operate alone or with a small group of like-minded allies.

Many of them have sworn to avenge some past wrong or foul deed committed by giants, such as the destruction of their homes or the murder of a member of their family. Where giants gather in strength, several giant-killers sometimes pool their resources in order to more effectively defeat their sworn enemies.

The recent invasion of giants in the Evermoor region, and the subsequent influx of displaced trolls into the Silver Marches, has resulted in a boom in the giant-killing business.

Giant-killers from around Faerûn have arrived in the vicinity to ply their trade, offering their services to the highest bidders.

Giant-killers charge whatever the market will bear, and the more unscrupulous of the lot often refuse the first offer from a prospective employer, hoping that the problem will worsen and result in a better, more lucrative offer.

A bona fide giant-killer is an expert in his field, and several of them have made themselves invaluable on the outskirts of the Evermoors and in the town of Nesmé.

There are also native giant-killers among the dwarves of Citadel Felbarr and Mithral Hall, but while the latter sometimes make themselves available to other communities, those living in the former most often serve the interests only of their own home.

Lady Alustriel has recently appealed to King Warcrown on the matter, asking him to consider sending one or two of his kingdom's giant-killers to help scour the lands around the Silverwood for trolls, before the creatures become an even worse problem for the farmsteads outlying the city of Everlund.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a giant-killer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Toughness.

Skills: Hide 2 ranks, Wilderness Lore 4 ranks.

Special: The character must have already slain at least one giant of any type.

He need not have accomplished this alone, but he must have damaged the giant with at least one melee attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The giant-killer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Tumble (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the giant-killer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The giant-killer is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but gains no proficiency in any type of armor or shield.

Smite Big Folk (Su): Giant-killers know how and where to hit their foes so that every blow counts.

Once a day, a giant-killer can smite a foe of at least Large size (provided the foe is larger than the giant-killer) with one melee attack.

He adds his Wisdom modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and inflicts 1 extra point of damage per class level.

The giant-killer can only use this ability a certain number of times per day as determined by his level.

Barbarian giant-killers can use the smite big folk ability when raging.

Bonuses from the smite big folk ability stack with ranger bonuses for a favored enemy, and can be combined with a smite ability conferred by another class (such as a paladin's smite evil ability).

Improved Mobility: Sometimes fighting a giant within range of the creature's mighty limbs is unavoidable.

Fortunately, the giant-killer learns how to make himself harder to hit when he must be underfoot.

This ability works exactly as the Mobility feat, except that the giant-killer's bonus to AC is +8 instead of +4.

Giant Lore: The giant-killer is a repository of knowledge and information concerning his chosen foes.

Beginning at 1st level, a giant-killer adds this bonus to skill checks used in situations that directly concern giants, such as a Knowledge (local) check to determine where a giant's lair might be located, a Move Silently check to creep past a sleeping giant, or a Wilderness Lore check when tracking a giant.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a giant-killer gains the extraordinary ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attacked.

Subtract this number from the damage the giant-killer takes each time he is dealt damage.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0.

Diehard (Ex): At 4th level, if reduced to from -1 to -9 hit points, a giant-killer may remain conscious and take a partial action each round.

The giant-killer still loses 1 hit point each round when at negative hit points (unless stabilized), and dies when he reaches -10 hit points.

If he is stabilized, the giant-killer is disabled.

At 8th level, a giant-killer may act normally each round when at from -1 to -9 hit points, although he still loses 1 hit point per round (unless stabilized) until dead at -10 or lower.

At 10th level, instead of dying at -10 hit points or lower, he may make a Constitution check (DC 10 + 1 per previous check) to remain alive for another round.

He dies immediately if reduced to -30 hit points or lower.

HORDEBREAKER

Many folk of the Silver Marches harbor a special hatred for the tribes and hordes of humanoid that constantly threaten to destroy the civilized way of life in this region. This antipathy is so great for some that it borders on paranoid obsession, and these folk sometimes swear enmity against one or more races of humanoids that gather in large groups—especially those that gather in the mountain hordes.

In the opinion of these fanatics, there is no greater danger facing the world than the ever-growing humanoid horde menace, and they believe it's up to them to fight it.

The hordebreaker is a person who makes destroying the horde threat her life's work.

She trains long and hard to make herself the perfect engine of orc destruction.

Often such individuals have suffered personal losses at the hands of humanoid hordes.

Whatever the motivation, the hordebreaker's mission to destroy orcs and other such creatures is her reason for living.

Most hordebreakers are barbarians, and many of them hail from those Uthgardt tribes that consider the orcs their traditional enemies, particularly the Sky Pony tribe.

They sometimes work with other hordebreakers, but they tend to be loners: A life of single-minded hatred is not well suited to close companionship.

Some hordebreakers attach themselves to adventuring parties if such groups are likely to encounter orcs or are engaged on a mission that will undermine an orc horde's plans.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hordebreaker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Power Attack, Cleave, Great Cleave.

Skills: Knowledge (local) 5 ranks, Spot 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The hordebreaker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the hordebreaker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A hordebreaker gains no proficiency with any type of weapon or armor.

Horde Enemy: A hordebreaker selects a horde enemy from the following list of creatures: bugbears, gnolls, goblins, hobgoblins, kobolds, or orcs.

Any creature type that the Dungeon Master determines gathers in tribes or hordes in the campaign world is also acceptable.

This ability works exactly like the favored enemy ability of the ranger class.

If a hordebreaker with ranger levels chooses a horde enemy that she already has as a favored enemy, the bonuses stack. When a hordebreaker reaches 3rd level, the bonus against her first horde enemy increases to +2 and she gains a new horde enemy at +1.

When a hordebreaker reaches 5th level, the bonus against her first horde enemy increases to +3, the bonus against her second horde enemy increases to +2, and she gains a new horde enemy at +1.

Horde Knowledge: A hordebreaker acquires a great deal of information and knowledge specific to the Silver Marches while interacting with the land's denizens.

Beginning at 1st level, a hordebreaker may make a special horde knowledge check with a bonus equal to her hordebreaker level + her Intelligence modifier to see whether she knows some relevant information about local notable humanoid tribes or hordes, such as their legendary places or items, or regional politics.

This check will not reveal the powers of a magic item but may give him a hint as to its general function.

A hordebreaker may not take 10 or 20 on this check.

The Dungeon Master determines the Difficulty Class of the check by referring to the table below.

DC	Type of Knowledge and Examples
8	Common, known by at least a substantial minority of the local population. Example: King Obould Many-Arrows is gathering an orc horde to crush the lands of the south.
13	Uncommon but available, known by only a few people in the area. Example: The rivalry between King Obould's many sons.
18	Obscure, known by few, hard to come by. Example: A secret route to the army encampment of a goblin tribe, or the exact location of the tomb of a great hobgoblin chieftain.
23	Extremely obscure, known by very few, possibly forgotten by those who once knew it, possibly known only by those who don't understand the significance of the knowledge. Example: The exact military strategy used by the town of Deadsnows to defeat the orc horde that tried to destroy it centuries ago.

Hold the Line: A hordebreaker trains herself to withstand the charging might of enemies hurling themselves into battle with great force.

At 2nd level, charging into an area threatened by a hordebreaker grants the hordebreaker an attack of opportunity.

The hordebreaker's attack of opportunity happens immediately, before the charge attack is resolved.

Tough to Kill (Ex): Every hordebreaker knows that sooner or later, she is going to get hurt.

At 4th level, if reduced to -1 to -9 hit points, a hordebreaker may remain conscious and take a partial action each round.

The hordebreaker still loses a hit point each round when at negative hit points (unless stabilized) and dies when she reaches -10 hit points.

If she is stabilized, the hordebreaker is disabled.

Anvil of Doom (Ex): Once per day, a hordebreaker can become a living anvil on which her enemies break by assuming a defensive stance.

In this defensive stance, the hordebreaker gains extraordinary strength and durability, but she cannot move from the spot she is defending.

She gains the following benefits:

- +2 Strength
- +4 Constitution
- +2 resistance bonus on all saves
- +4 dodge bonus to AC

The increase in Constitution increases the hordebreaker's hit points by 2 per character level, but these hit points go away at the end of the defensive stance when her Constitution score drops back down 4 points.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While defending, a hordebreaker cannot use skills or abilities that would require her to shift her position, such as Move Silently or Jump.

A defensive stance lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the hordebreaker's newly improved Constitution modifier. The hordebreaker may end her defensive stance voluntarily prior to this limit.

At the end of her defensive stance, the hordebreaker is winded and takes a -2 penalty to Strength for the duration of the encounter.

Invoking anvil of doom takes no time itself, but a hordebreaker can only do so during her action.

The bonuses conferred by anvil of doom do not stack with similar bonuses, such as the dwarven defender's defensive stance.

TABLE 6-2: THE HORDEBREAKER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	First horde enemy, horde knowledge
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Hold the line
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Second horde enemy

KNIGHT-ERRANT OF SILVERMOON

Charged with the safety of the city of Silvermoon and its citizens, the professional fighting force known as the Knights in Silver is often all that stands between Silvermoon and the dangers of the frontier.

Consequently, the Knights never know what sort of mission they'll be called upon to undertake next: Warfare, reconnaissance, disaster relief, and diplomacy have all been among the tasks that the Knights have fulfilled with distinction in service to their home.

Consequently, members of this prestige class master a wide variety of capabilities, so that they can be ready for anything when duty calls.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a knight-errant of Silvermoon, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack, Survivor, Weapon Focus (light lance or heavy lance).

Skills: Intuit Direction 2 ranks, Knowledge (Silvermoon local) or Knowledge (the North local) 4 ranks, Ride 4 ranks, Spot 4 ranks.

Other: Serve among the Knights in Silver for at least one year and then petition Knight-Grand Commander Sernius

Alathar for detachment as a knight-errant, or gain a commission as a knight-errant directly from Taern Hornblade, High Mage of Silvermoon.

CLASS SKILLS

The knight-errant of Silvermoon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Knight-errants of Silvermoon gain the following class features.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A knight-errant of Silvermoon gains no proficiency with any kind of weapon or armor.

Badge of Office: Regardless of what personal armor, weapons, and accoutrements he may choose, each knight is obligated to wear the silver cloak clasp that is his badge of office.

This clasp is shaped to resemble a longsword piercing a crescent moon.

Each badge is also a brooch of resistance +1.

If a knight-errant loses his badge of office, he must purchase a new one in Silvermoon (cost 1,000 gp) as soon as possible.

Fighter Feat: A knight-errant of Silvermoon gains a bonus feat at 2nd, 5th, and 9th level.

These bonus feats must be chosen from the list of bonus feats available to a fighter.

Marches Knowledge: A knight-errant acquires a great deal of information and knowledge specific to the Silver Marches while interacting with its denizens.

Beginning at 2nd level, a knight may make a special Marches knowledge check with a bonus equal to his knight-errant level + his Intelligence modifier to see whether he knows some relevant information about local notable people, legendary places or items, or regional politics.

This check will not reveal the powers of a magic item but may give a hint as to its general function.

The knight may not take 10 or 20 on this check.

The DM determines the Difficulty Class of the check by referring to the table below.

DC	Type of Knowledge and Examples
10	Common, known by at least a substantial minority of the Silver Marches' population. Examples: King Harbromm's hatred of King Obould; common ghost stories about the ruins of Ghaurin Mansion.
15	Uncommon but available, known by only a few people in the area. Example: The rivalry between two scholars at the University of Silvermoon.

20 Obscure, known by few, hard to come by. Examples: A secret route down into the Everfire below Sundabar; the genealogy of Bruennor Battlehammer's first cousin.

25 Extremely obscure, known by very few, possibly forgotten by those who once knew it, possibly known only by those who don't understand the significance of the knowledge. Example: Details about the battle that gave the town of Deadsnows its name.

Sworn Enemy: At 1st level, a knight-errant declares a specific group of people or monsters as his sworn enemy. This is a much narrower category than a ranger's favored enemy.

Sworn enemies include any nationality, group, tribe, or organization, or type or subtype of creature that is known or suspected to pose a threat to the Silver Marches. Suitable organizations include the Arcane Brotherhood, the Daemonfey, the People of the Black Blood, or the churches of Bane or Talos.

In general, monsters or creature types must be named by both type and location—for example, drow of Menzoberranzan, duergar of Gracklstugh, frost giants of the Spine of the World, hobgoblins of Doomspire, orcs of the Heart Taker tribe, or the orcs of Dark Arrow Keep.

A knight-errant gains a +1 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks when using these skills against his sworn enemy, and a +1 bonus on weapon damage rolls against these creatures.

This damage bonus does not apply to damage against creatures that are immune to critical hits, and the knight does not gain this bonus when using a ranged weapon against a target that is farther away than 30 feet.

A knight who is also a ranger may choose a sworn enemy that is a subset of his favored enemy (Dark Arrow orcs, if his favored enemy was orc, for example), in which case the bonuses stack.

At 7th level, a knight-errant may select a second sworn enemy, and the bonus for his previous sworn enemy goes up to +2.

Homeland: At 3rd level, a knight-errant gains a +2 bonus on Diplomacy, Hide, Intuit Direction, Move Silently, Sense Motive, and Wilderness Lore checks when within the city of Silvermoon or within fifty miles of its walls.

(Knights-errant traveling in the Underdark or other strange environments such as underwater do not gain this bonus).

Fast March (Ex): A knight-errant may be ordered to march or ride nearly anywhere in the Silver Marches at a moment's notice.

So well does a knight-errant know the lay of the land in the Silver Marches that at 5th level his overland speed is 1 1/2 times the normal speed for his base movement (or his mount's base movement) and the terrain type.

A knight-errant can lead a party of additional travelers, conferring this advantage on a number of additional creatures equal to his class level × his Charisma modifier (if positive), or a minimum of one creature per knight-errant level.

Faultless Navigation (Ex): At 7th level, a knight-errant knows the Silver Marches so well that he gains a +10 bonus on any Intuit Direction checks in the Silver Marches or the lands immediately bordering the league.

Expert Rider: A knight-errant no longer incurs penalties for riding mounts different or very different from the type of mount designated in his Ride skill.

Loyal Heart (Su): At 10th level, a knight-errant's love of his land and zeal in its defense confer a +3 morale bonus on all saving throws while he is in the city of Silvermoon or within fifty miles of its walls.

As with the homeland ability, this benefit does not apply in the Underdark or similar strange environments that lie within fifty miles of the city but are visited by the Knights in Silver only in the most unusual circumstances.

ORC SCOUT

Slipping down from the wild, barren high country into the more civilized lands of the south, the scout begins his work. His task is not to fight the enemy directly, but rather to gain valuable knowledge about the enemy's strengths, weaknesses, and movements.

With the scout's help, the enemy will be destroyed, and he will play a valuable role in that downfall.

The scout's contribution to the foe's demise is visible not in the execution of his missions, but on the battlefield when the opponent realizes that the orc commanders know far more about them than they should.

Part wilderness warrior and part spy, the orc scout is a hero to his people.

His glory comes not from prowess in combat, but from risking his life to bring his chieftain accurate intelligence about the enemy's activities.

He prepares for this role by training himself to survive in inhospitable climes, to make clandestine observations from afar, and to return home safely with his knowledge intact. Most orc scouts are barbarians, fighters, or rangers who have chosen to be trained for special missions on behalf of their tribe.

Orc scouts normally work alone or in pairs.

Rarely, they gather in a triad when the task at hand is too demanding for a solo mission or twin group.

Their goal is to spy on the enemy and get home safely to tell what they know.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an orc scout, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Orc, half-orc, or tanarukk.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Move Silently 6 ranks, Wilderness Lore 4 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Endurance, Stealthy.

CLASS SKILLS

The orc scout's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the orc scout prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Orc scouts are proficient in simple and martial weapons and light armor.

Fieldcraft (Ex): At 1st level, an orc scout gains a bonus on a number of skill checks due to his intensive training in these capabilities.

The orc scout gains a +1 bonus on Climb, Heal, Hide, Intuit Direction, Listen, Move Silently, Search, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks whenever he is engaged in a scouting mission.

The bonus increases to +2 at 3rd level and to +3 at 5th level.

Blend into Wilds (Ex): At 1st level, an orc scout learns to blur his lines with the aid of colored body paint, carefully chosen clothing, and posture, making it much difficult for others to see him.

This technique requires 1 minute to implement but grants the orc scout a +10 competence bonus on his Hide check.

An orc scout can use this ability only when he is in a wilderness area, and only if he is not under observation by foes.

If he moves at all, he loses the benefit of blending and must make his Hide check normally (see the Hide skill description).

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, an orc scout gains a feat from the following list: Blooded, Forester, Resist Poison, Survivor, Toughness, Treetopper.

Fast Movement (Ex): At 2nd level, an orc scout's speed improves to 40 feet, as shown on Table 6-4.

An orc scout in medium or heavy armor, or carrying a medium or heavy load, loses this extra speed. At 5th level, the orc scout's speed improves to 50 feet. Orc scouts with levels in barbarian add that class's fast movement bonus to their orc scout base speed. Sneak Attack (Ex): Often an orc scout must strike an opponent unawares in order to accomplish his mission. At 3rd level, an orc scout gains the ability to execute a sneak attack if he can catch an opponent unable to defend himself from attack, striking a vital spot for extra damage. Any time the orc scout's opponent would be denied his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether he actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the orc scout's attack deals +1d6 points of extra damage. Should the orc scout score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied. It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is no farther than 30 feet away.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, an orc scout can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage. He cannot use a weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, not even at the usual-4 penalty, because he must make optimal use of his weapon in order to execute the sneak attack. An orc scout can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to strike. Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks. The orc scout must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot. An orc scout cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking at the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach. If an orc scout gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

TABLE 6-4: THE ORC SCOUT

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+2	+0	Fieldcraft +1, blend into wilds
2nd	+1	+0	+3	+0	Bonus feat, fast movement (40 ft.)
3rd	+2	+1	+3	+1	Fieldcraft +2, sneak attack +1d6
4th	+3	+1	+4	+1	Bonus feat
5th	+3	+1	+4	+1	Fieldcraft +3, fast movement (50 ft.)

PEERLESS ARCHER

Many armies boast units of soldiers who use a bow as their primary weapon, but most do not possess the discipline to gain the kind of expertise that the peerless archer has. The peerless archer devotes her life to perfecting her skill with the bow.

All other concerns are secondary.

For her, the perfect moment in life occurs when the arrow is loosed and everything depends upon the accuracy of her eye, the steadiness of her hand, and her understanding of her chosen weapon.

For the most skilled archers, life is lived to its fullest in that moment.

Perfection is a bullseye, and everything else is irrelevant.

Fighters and rangers are the most common peerless archers, but barbarians and paladins sometimes choose to follow this path of mastery.

Monks are drawn to the almost spiritual nature of the discipline.

Rogues and powerful sorcerers have been known to take up the class from time to time, but it is rare.

Druids and wizards are rarely tempted to abandon their other pursuits to devote themselves so completely to a single weapon.

As NPCs, peerless archers are often mercenaries, hired by military officers or noble rulers either to augment the field units or undertake some special task, such as picking off spellcasters in the opposing army's ranks.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a peerless archer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Craft (bowmaking) 10 ranks.

Proficiency: Longbow, shortbow, composite longbow, or composite shortbow.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Far Shot, Precise Shot, Quick Draw.

CLASS SKILLS

The peerless archer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (bowmaking) (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the peerless archer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A peerless archer gains no proficiency with any weapon or type of armor.

Expert Bowyer: A peerless archer understands her weapon on a fundamental level that most trained soldiers never achieve.

At 1st level, an archer gains a +3 bonus on all Craft (bowmaking) skill checks.

Ranged Sneak Attack (Ex): When wearing light armor or no armor, a peerless archer can draw and fire in a split-second, catching her targets unawares.

She loses this special ability when fighting in medium or heavy armor.

At 1st level, a peerless archer gains the ability to execute a ranged sneak attack if she catches an opponent unable to defend himself from attack.

Any time the peerless archer's opponent would be denied his Dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether he actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the peerless archer's ranged attack deals +1d6 points of extra damage.

This extra damage increases to +2d6 at 4th level, +3d6 at 7th level, and +4d6 at 10th level.

Should the peerless archer score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so her ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is no farther than 30 feet away.

A peerless archer can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to strike. Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

The peerless archer must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot.

The peerless archer cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment (unless her sharp shooting ability overcomes the concealment; see below) or by striking at the limbs of a creature whose vitals are not in her line of sight.

If the peerless archer gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Sharp Shooting (Ex): A peerless archer's skill with her bow allows her to strike accurately at foes, even when they are attempting to take advantage of cover or concealment. Beginning at 2nd level, a peerless archer's targets receive cover or concealment one step worse than they should.

For example, a target with three-quarters cover is treated as if he had one-half cover.

At 5th level, a peerless archer ignores two steps of cover or concealment, so the same target would be treated as if he had one-quarter cover instead of three-quarters cover.

At 9th level, a peerless archer ignores three steps of cover or concealment.

This ability has no effect against foes with total cover.

Fletching (Su): At 2nd level, a peerless archer gains the ability to create magic arrows (and only arrows) with a +1 enhancement bonus, as if she possessed the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat and met all other requirements for the arrow she wishes to make.

At 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th levels, the bonus of the arrows she can create with this ability increases to +2, +3, +4, and +5, respectively.

Crafting Arrows: Crafting a masterwork arrow requires 5 gp in materials, a workshop of some kind, and two days per arrow (this is an approximation of average results of the Craft skill; if you wish to calculate exactly how long it takes, refer to the Craft skill description).

Enhancing Arrows: In addition to the arrows to be crafted, a peerless archer must use materials and spend XP to create arrows with an enhancement bonus, as shown below.

Bonus	Cost (One)	Cost (Fifty)	XP (One)	XP (Fifty)	Arrows per Day
+1	20 gp	1,000 gp	1	80	25
+2	80 gp	4,000 gp	6	320	6
+3	180 gp	9,000 gp	14	720	3
+4	320 gp	16,000 gp	25	1,280	2
+5	500 gp	25,000 gp	40	2,000	1

Cost is the cost in raw materials to craft one arrow, or fifty. This doesn't include the cost of the arrows themselves.

XP is the amount of XP it costs to craft one arrow, or fifty. Arrows per Day is the number of arrows of that value that can be crafted per day of work.

Power Shot: At 3rd level, a peerless archer learns how to make devastatingly powerful bowshots.

On her action, before making any attack rolls, she may choose to subtract a number from all ranged attack rolls and add the same number to all ranged damage rolls.

This number may not exceed her base attack bonus.

The penalty on her attack rolls and bonus on her damage rolls apply until her next action.

Threaten: At 8th level, a peerless archer gains the ability to threaten nearby areas with her bow as if she were wielding a melee weapon when wearing light armor or no armor. She loses this special ability when fighting in medium or heavy armor.

Her bow functions as a reach weapon, threatening anything 10 feet away but not immediately adjacent to her. Any attacks of opportunity she receives because she threatens nearby areas are normal ranged attacks, and these count against her maximum number of attacks of opportunity per round.

WILD SCOUT

Wild scouts are the spies of the wilderness, traversing the open and wild country in search of valuable information. They are a boon to whoever employs them, though their services are often expensive.

Good wild scouts seek out and report on the movements of evil creatures and forces in the wilderness, usually on behalf of a noble or community.

Evil wild scouts do the same for their employers, but it is the forces of good that are the target of their clandestine observations.

Most wild scouts are barbarians, druids or rangers.

Some are fighters or rogues who feel more of an affinity for the wild places than for urban areas.

Sorcerers and wizards are rare among their number.

As an NPC, a wild scout is typically in the employ of a general, noble, or community.

Characters might encounter one acting as the extreme advance guard for an approaching army, or discover that they themselves are under a wild scout's scrutiny.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a wild scout, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Endurance, Track.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Intuit Direction 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The wild scout's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Wis), Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the wild scout prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A wild scout is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light armor, and shields.

Improved Track (Ex): A wild scout learns the art of tracking creatures accurately without sacrificing speed.

This ability functions as the Track feat, except that the wild scout does not incur any penalty to movement.

In other words, a wild scout can move at his normal speed while tracking, and does not incur a penalty for moving more quickly than his base speed while tracking.

Home Turf (Ex): When in an area with which they are intimately familiar, wild scouts are even more capable.

At 1st level, a wild scout designates his home turf, an area no larger than one hundred square miles (about ten miles by ten miles).

While in this area, the wild scout gains a +4 bonus on Animal Empathy, Hide, Intuit Direction, Move Silently, and Wilderness Lore checks.

The wild scout's home turf expands to two thousand five hundred square miles (fifty miles by fifty miles) at 4th level, and to the entire region (as defined in the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting) at 8th level, reflecting the fact that he can range far and wide in service to his employer.

Wild Feat: At 1st level and again at 10th level, a wild scout gains a bonus feat, chosen from the following list: Forester, Resist Poison, Stealthy, Survivor, Toughness, Treetopper.

Fast March (Ex): A wild scout travels over diverse terrain and makes arduous journeys without benefit of luxuries, and speed is often of the essence.

So well does a wild scout know the lay of the land within his home turf that at 2nd level his overland speed is $1\frac{1}{2}$ times his normal base movement (or his mount's base movement) and the terrain type.

The wild scout can lead a party of additional travelers, conferring this advantage on a number of additional creatures equal to his class level \times his Charisma modifier (if positive), or a minimum of one creature per wild scout level.

Nondetection (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, a wild scout learns to tap into the nature of the wilderness itself in order to help him avoid attempts to divine his presence or actions.

This spell-like ability functions exactly like the spell of the same name, but only while the wild scout is within his home turf and not within an urban area.

Camouflage (Ex): A wild scout trains himself to make the most of his surroundings when he wishes to remain unseen.

Beginning at 3rd level, whenever a wild scout uses natural elements (foliage, trees, boulders, sand dunes, shrubbery, and so forth) to gain cover or concealment, he increases the benefit of his cover or concealment by one step.

For example, if the wild scout was hidden behind a tree conferring one-half cover, he would actually gain the Armor Class bonus and Reflex save bonus for three-quarters cover.

If he was concealed by dense foliage, normally three-quarters concealment and a 30% miss chance, he would actually gain the benefit of nine-tenths concealment and a 40% miss chance.

At 6th level, a wild scout receives the benefit of cover or concealment two steps better than his actual situation, and at 9th level three steps better.

(He must have at least one-quarter cover or concealment to receive any benefit, of course.)

No cover does not improve to three-quarters cover, not even for a 9th-level wild scout).

Commune with Nature (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, a wild scout becomes so keenly attuned to the wilderness that he can use the clues carried on the air and soil of the land itself to divine the presence of other places and creatures in the wild.

Once per day, he may use commune with nature at a caster level equal to his wild scout level.

At 7th level, a wild scout may use commune with nature twice per day, and at 10th level three times per day.

The wild scout may only invoke this power when he is within his home turf.

SONG AND SILENCE (3.0)

DREAD PIRATE

Thugs and cutthroats in every port lay claim to the title “pirate”, but actually making a fortune through piracy is no easy task.

A dread pirate, however, has mastered every aspect of larceny on the high seas.

His network of contacts tells him when a particularly valuable cargo is shipping out.

After a flawless ambush at sea, he swings aboard the target ship on a rope, rapier in hand.

Once he and his shipmates have overpowered the prize vessel’s crew, they liberate the cargo and make their escape.

Later, the dread pirate meets representatives from the black market in some isolated cave and sells his newly acquired cargo for a handsome profit.

Some dread pirates accomplish their goals through fear, killing indiscriminately and ruling their ships at rapier-point.

Others minimize bloodshed and exhibit a curious sort of chivalry, perhaps realizing that the captain and crew of a prize ship are more likely to surrender if they believe they’ll live to see port again.

Now and then a dread pirate takes his chivalric streak a step further and preys only on the ships of enemy nations—or even solely on other pirates.

A dread pirate’s lifestyle fits most rogues to a tee, for the job requires a number of skills that members of other classes don’t have the time or inclination to learn.

However, the class is also attractive for some spellcasters, who can use magic to conceal their ships or incapacitate a prize vessel’s crew.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify for the dread pirate prestige class, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Appraise 8 ranks, Profession (sailor) 8 ranks, Swim 5 ranks, Use Rope 5 ranks.

Feats: Quick Draw, Weapon Finesse (any).

Special: The character must own a ship worth at least 10,000 gp.

The method of acquisition—purchase, force of arms, or skullduggery—makes no difference, as long as he can freely operate it on the high seas.

CLASS SKILLS

The dread pirate’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the dread pirate prestige class.

The Difficulty Class (DC) for any required skill check is included where appropriate.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A dread pirate is proficient with simple and martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

If he is wearing light, medium, or no armor, he can fight with two weapons as if he had the feats Ambidexterity and Two-Weapon Fighting.

A dread pirate most often fights with a rapier and either a short sword or a dagger in his off-hand.

If he has no magical means of swimming in armor, he usually goes unarmored, at least while aboard ship.

Fearsome Reputation: At 2nd level, the dread pirate is developing a reputation on the high seas.

At this point, he must decide whether to adopt the honorable pirate’s code (avoid undue bloodshed and focus on cargo, not mayhem) or take the more bloodthirsty, dishonorable approach.

Unless he is going incognito, the dread pirate gains a +2 circumstance bonus on Diplomacy checks (if honorable) or Intimidate checks (if dishonorable).

Every two dread pirate levels thereafter, this bonus increases by +2.

Failure to live up to his reputation at any point may (at the DM’s discretion) negate these bonuses.

Rope Swing (Ex): If a number of overhead ropes or booms are nearby (and on a ship, they almost always are), a dread pirate of 3rd level or higher can grab one and swing up to 20 feet in a straight line as a move-equivalent action or as the movement portion of a charge action.

If the dread pirate makes a successful Use Rope check (DC 15), this movement doesn't provoke attacks of opportunity for moving through threatened squares.

A successful Use Rope check (DC 25) allows the character to move up to 20 feet through occupied squares without provoking attacks of opportunity.

Failure in either case means the dread pirate swings through the desired area but provokes attacks of opportunity normally.

Rope swing can be used on land as well—in a room with a tapestry or chandelier, for example.

Players using the variant rules for Tumble (see Chapter 2) should apply the same variant to rope swing.

Wind at Your Back: At 3rd level, the dread pirate has become a master at eking every bit of propulsion out of the prevailing winds.

Any ship he captains moves 1 mile per hour faster than normal.

Leadership Bonus: At 5th level, the dread pirate gains a +2 bonus to his character level for the purpose of acquiring cohorts with the Leadership feat.

Every two dread pirate levels thereafter, this bonus increases by +2.

Shifting Deck: As a free action, a dread pirate of 5th level or higher can attempt a Balance check (DC 15).

Success negates any penalties for uneven ground, such as a ship's deck in rolling seas, and any higher-ground bonuses that opponents might otherwise have.

The DM may set a higher DC for checks involving particularly uneven or dangerous ground.

Come About: The dread pirate's ability to maneuver a vessel is legendary.

At 6th level, he gains a +4 insight bonus on Profession (sailor) checks.

Concealed Weapon Attack: A dread pirate often hides small daggers up his sleeves or in his boots.

At 7th level, a dread pirate who doesn't already have the sneak attack ability gets it now at a +2d6 damage bonus, but he can use it only to make sneak attacks with concealed weapons.

If the character does have the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack only for sneak attacks made with concealed weapons.

Hoist The Black Flag (Sp): The unique insignia of a dread pirate of 8th level or higher is so well known that when it is displayed on a flag or banner, every ally within 50 feet of it gains a +2 morale bonus on attacks.

This bonus lasts for 10 rounds after the flag is revealed, or until it is destroyed or lowered, whichever occurs first.

Hoist the black flag may be used three times per day, and the dread pirate must either hoist the flag personally or hand it to an ally who then hoists it.

Scourge of the Seas: A 10th-level dread pirate's exploits have become so legendary that hundreds of able sailors are willing to sign on as his crew for no compensation other than a share of the booty.

High-level dread pirates can use this influx of sailors to crew pirate fleets of up to a dozen ships.

Any small city's dock district has enough sailors (1st-level warriors and experts) to crew a single ship, and a larger city can provide the crew for an entire fleet.

This ability is separate from the Leadership feat; crew members acquired with the scourge of the seas ability don't count as cohorts or followers.

DUNGEON DELVER

In many ways, the dungeon delver is the ultimate expression of the adventuring rogue. He's skilled at moving stealthily through all types of dungeon terrain, detecting and disarming inconvenient traps, bypassing locks, locating treasure, and filching protected items.

The typical dungeon delver has forsaken people skills to concentrate on the nuts and bolts of dungeon exploration and treasure retrieval.

Rogues make excellent dungeon delvers, as do the rare bards and rangers who choose to pursue this track. (Most bards would miss their admiring audiences, however, and rangers might find it difficult to acquire all the necessary skills).

Since a dungeon delver frequently works alone, he must learn to think and act independently, relying upon no one but himself.

Even when exploring a dungeon in the company of other adventurers, he often keeps to himself—scouting ahead, disarming traps a safe distance from the group, or seeking treasure while the others are distracted.

The best dungeon delvers become legends and are sought after by anyone with a particularly inaccessible treasure to recover.

Some even accept regular stipends from various nobles to leave their treasures alone.

Only the best dungeon delvers survive to make names for themselves, however.

Those who lack the necessary skill and savvy perish anonymously on unsuccessful expeditions, leaving behind their bones for some luckier compatriot to discover.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a dungeon delver, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Climb 10 ranks, Craft (stonemasonry) 5 ranks, Disable Device 10 ranks, Hide 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Open Lock 10 ranks, Search 10 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight.

Special: To become a dungeon delver, a character must first survive a great trial underground.

This usually takes one of three forms:

- A solo dungeon expedition that earns the character one-half of the experience points needed for advancement to the next level.

(For example, a 7th-level character must earn 3,500 XP on such a solo run).

The character must complete the venture in one week, though he may leave the dungeon and return as often as desired during that time.

- Survival of a cave-in or other collapse (see Cave-Ins and Collapses in Chapter 4 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

- Living for a year without seeing the light of the sun, usually among underground denizens such as the deep dwarves or drow.

CLASS SKILLS

The dungeon delver's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 8 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the dungeon delver prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dungeon delvers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, as well as with light armor.

Danger Sense: The dungeon delver possesses an uncanny intuition that warns him of impending danger.

This grants him a +2 insight bonus on Reflex saves to avoid traps, a +2 dodge bonus to AC against attacks by traps, and a +4 insight bonus on Spot checks made to spot creatures at the beginning of an encounter (see the Encounter Distance rules in Chapter 3 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

At 6th level, these bonuses increase to +4, +4, and +6, respectively.

Traps: At 1st level, the dungeon delver acquires the traps ability if he does not already have it from a previous class (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Blindsight (Ex): At 2nd level, the dungeon delver gains acute sensitivity to sounds, smells, movement, and other disturbances within 20 feet.

This enhanced spatial sense enables him to maneuver and fight as well as he can under normal conditions, regardless of the ambient lighting.

Invisibility is irrelevant, though the character cannot sense ethereal creatures.

Blindsight does not replace normal vision.

Activating this ability is a standard action, and the effect lasts for 10 minutes.

This ability is not dependent upon hearing, so deafness and similar effects do not negate it.

At 8th level, the dungeon delver's blindsight range increases to 40 feet.

Stonecunning (Ex): A 3rd-level dungeon delver gains the stonecunning ability.

This functions exactly as it does for dwarves (see Dwarf in Chapter 2 of the Player's Handbook), except that the check modifiers are competence bonuses rather than racial bonuses.

Reduce (Sp): At 4th level, the dungeon delver can squeeze through narrow crevices, half-collapsed passages, prison bars, and other tight spots that would normally block a character of his size and bulk.

This ability, usable three times a day, works exactly like a reduce spell cast by a 5th-level sorcerer.

Darkvision (Sp): At 5th level, the dungeon delver gains the ability to use darkvision at will, with a range of 60 feet.

If he already has darkvision as a class feature or racial ability, the ranges do not stack.

Treasure Sense (Su): At 7th level, the dungeon delver can sense an accumulation of treasure worth 1,000 gp or more within a range of 200 feet per dungeon delver level.

He does not know the exact composition or nature of the treasure thus located, only its direction and distance from him (with a 10-foot margin of error).

All valuables within 10 feet of a given point count as a single treasure, so two piles of gold pieces separated by 5 feet would register as one treasure, not two.

Treasure sense always locates the treasure with the greatest market value if more than one accumulation is within range.

This ability does not grant any knowledge about the safest path (if any) between the dungeon delver and the treasure; it merely provides direction and distance.

Find the Path (Sp): Three times per day, a dungeon delver of 9th level or higher can find his way into and out of the most confounding mazes and dungeons.

This ability functions like a find the path spell cast by a 16th-level sorcerer, except that it affects the user only.

Phase Door (Sp): At 10th level, the dungeon delver gains the ability to create a phase door once per day.

This enables him to bypass cave-ins, walk through dead ends and immovable obstructions (such as a portcullis welded into place), and make quick escapes through walls.

This ability functions exactly like a phase door spell cast by an 15th-level sorcerer, except that the dungeon delver can create an ethereal passage through any nonliving substance, not just wood, plaster, and stone.

FANG OF LOLTH

Many bards and rogues study ways to “trick” magic items into working without their usual requirements. Sometimes, though, the curious get more than they bargained for. Worshipers of Lolth occasionally create a magic item called a fang scarab that gives spiders an attack bonus. Such an item is ordinary enough—until a bard or rogue makes a successful Use Magic Device check to trick it into working for her. Though she does gain the benefit of the fang scarab, it also fuses to her neck, beginning a metamorphosis that could eventually turn her into a half-spider abomination. Some fight this transformation, continuing their adventuring careers normally with only a few outward manifestations of spiderlike qualities. Others embrace the metamorphosis and earn levels in the fang of Lolth prestige class, giving over their bodies to the image of the Demon Queen of Spiders. Regardless of their attitudes toward this new legacy, those who have fused with fang scarabs eventually learn that death is the only way to separate the items from their bodies. Clerics and other agents of Lolth know about this aspect of fang scarabs, so they spare no effort to bring anyone who has fused with one into Lolth’s service. Most NPC fangs of Lolth work for clerics of the Spider Queen, but a few renegades exist who want the power of the spider but aren’t willing to bow to Lolth. Agents of the Spider Queen constantly hound such characters, intent on either bringing them into Lolth’s service or killing them to recover the fang scarabs. Because fangs of Lolth begin their careers by unlocking the secrets of the fang scarab, they must be able to trick the item into treating them as spiders. That limitation leaves this class open only to characters with ranks in the Use Magic Device skill. Even the most powerful wizards and sorcerers try in vain to get fang scarabs to work in this manner; it takes the intuitive guesswork (and luck) of one who knows how to trick magic items.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a fang of Lolth, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful and nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Use Magic Device 10 ranks.

Special: The character must acquire a scarab and get it to function with a successful Use Magic Device check (DC 25).

This grants her the benefits of the item (see sidebar) and fuses it permanently to her neck.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills for the fang of Lolth (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the fang of Lolth prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fangs of Lolth gain no new weapon or armor proficiencies.

Skill Bonuses: As an extraordinary ability, the fang of Lolth gains a +2 competence bonus on Climb and Jump checks.

In addition, the whispers of Lolth provide her with subconscious hints about how magic works, giving her a +4 insight bonus on Use Magic Device checks.

This bonus is a supernatural ability.

Sneak Attack: The fang of Lolth gains the sneak attack ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player’s Handbook) at 2nd level if she does not already have it.

She gains +1d6 damage with this attack initially, but this rises to +2d6 at 5th level and to +3d6 at 8th level.

If she already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack.

Spider Bite: The fang of Lolth can unhinge her jaw and bite with her razor-sharp teeth as an attack action.

Her bite is a natural attack that deals 1d6 points of damage if she is Medium-size, or 1d4 points of damage if she is Small.

This attack does not provoke an attack of opportunity from the fang of Lolth's foe.

If she uses a full attack action, she can make normal weapon attacks and use her bite as a secondary natural attack at the standard -5 penalty.

Climb Speed 20 Feet (Ex): At 4th level, the fang of Lolth can climb walls and ceilings at a speed of 20 feet, just like the monstrous spider she's slowly becoming.

This ability grants her a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks.

Natural Armor: At 6th level, the character's skin toughens, granting her a +2 natural armor bonus.

At 10th level, her skin hardens into a chitinous carapace, increasing her natural armor bonus to +4.

Spider Vision (Ex): At 6th level, the fang of Lolth gains increased visual acuity in the form of a +4 competence bonus on both Spot and Search checks.

She also gains darkvision with a range of 60 feet.

If she already has darkvision as a class feature or racial ability, the ranges do not stack.

Summon Swarm (Sp): Three times a day, a fang of Lolth of 7th level or higher can summon and direct an army of normal spiders to do her bidding.

This ability works exactly like a summon swarm spell cast by a druid of a level equal to the character's fang of Lolth level, except that the swarm is always composed of spiders.

The fang of Lolth can spend a move-equivalent action to direct the swarm, which moves at a speed of 30 feet.

Spider Limbs (Ex): At 9th level, the fang of Lolth actually grows two more pairs of limbs, which emerge from her back or the sides of her torso when needed and are fully retractable.

Extending or retracting the spider limbs is a move-equivalent action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The fang of Lolth's spider legs are tipped with simple claws that can hold weapons and other items normally, though they are incapable of the fine manipulation required for spellcasting or using Dexterity-based skills such as Open Lock and Pick Pocket.

Despite her extra limbs, the fang of Lolth is still limited to one standard action per round.

She can, however, make a secondary natural attack with each clawed spider leg at the standard -5 penalty as part of a full attack action.

Her claws deal 1d4 points of damage if she is Medium-size or 1d3 points of damage if she is Small.

The fang of Lolth can acquire the Multiattack, Multidexterity, and Multiweapon Fighting feats if she wishes to use her claws more effectively or wield weapons in multiple limbs.

At 10th level, the fang of Lolth's spider limbs grow long and sturdy enough to propel her forward, if she devotes two of her spider legs entirely to locomotion, her land and climb speeds each increase by 20 feet.

Vermin Type (Ex): At 10th level, the fang of Lolth's creature type changes to vermin, though she retains her previous Intelligence score, Hit Die type, and abilities.

As a vermin, she becomes immune to mind-influencing effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, patterns, and morale effects).

Physical Changes: With each fang of Lolth level she attains, the character's body undergoes a metamorphosis.

With the exception of the unhinged jaw and the extra spider limbs (both of which allow special attacks as detailed above), all these changes are merely cosmetic, but they are permanent.

These spiderlike features do not alter the fang of Lolth's Charisma score or interpersonal skills, but the DM may choose to impose a circumstance penalty on any checks involving interaction with creatures that find such changes frightening.

A clever fang of Lolth may avoid this issue by wearing a hat of disguise or employing some other magic that alters her appearance.

OUTLAW OF THE CRIMSON ROAD

It's often said that you don't choose the crimson road; it chooses you.

"The crimson road" is how folklore often refers to the outlaw's life because it is bloody and dangerous. But while you may come to outlawry through no fault of your own, most outlaws unquestionably bring that fate upon themselves.

The outlaw of the crimson road is totally cut off from normal society.

Anyone is free to kill him without legal reprisal, for a writ of outlawry has already revoked his rights to trial and due process.

Whether or not he's truly guilty of the crimes attributed to him, there's a reward for putting his head on a pike or hanging him at a crossroads.

An outlaw of the crimson road might be a failed revolutionary, a loyal supporter of some deposed ruler, or merely an ordinary individual who angered the wrong person at the wrong time.

With a sentence of death hanging over his head, he has taken to living outside society's laws, robbing all who pass except those under his special protection (see The Outlaw's Code sidebar).

Characters of many classes may find themselves outlaws, but some take to it better than others.

Rogues excel at stealth and rangers at woodcraft—both handy skills for planning ambushes.

Bards, on the other hand, rely primarily on their reputations and the legends about their exploits to make travelers part peaceably with their goods.

A lone monk drummed out of his order could be a highly effective outlaw, as could a paladin who has fallen afoul of a corrupt administration and taken to the woods as a final, desperate way of righting wrongs.

Barbarians usually lack the subtlety to make a living this way.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To become an outlaw of the crimson road, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Bluff 5 ranks, Disguise 5 ranks, Gather Information 5 ranks, Intimidate 5 ranks, Ride 5 ranks.

Feats: Expertise, Improved Initiative.

Special: An appropriate legal authority must pronounce a writ of outlawry upon the character, though he need not actually be guilty of any of the crimes named therein.

In addition, the character must swear to abide by the Outlaw's Code (see sidebar).

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills for the outlaw of the crimson road (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the outlaw of the crimson road prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An outlaw of the crimson road is proficient with simple weapons, one martial weapon of choice, and one exotic weapon (the net), as well as with light armor.

Ambush: During a surprise round, the outlaw can make an attack against any target who hasn't yet acted. If successful, such an attack by a 1st-level outlaw of the crimson road deals +1d6 points of extra damage.

This amount increases by +1d6 points for every two additional outlaw levels the attacker has.

Creatures immune to sneak attacks (such as undead, constructs, oozes, and plants) are likewise not vulnerable to this special damage.

A ranged attack delivers the extra damage only if the target is within 30 feet.

If the character already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the extra damage for an ambush stacks with his sneak attack damage, but only if conditions are also right for a sneak attack.

Life on the Crimson Road: The outlaw has learned much from his time on the wrong side of the law.

At 2nd level and again at 5th level, he may take one of the following bonus feats: Alertness, Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Mounted Archery, Mounted Combat, Quick Draw, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge, Trample, Weapon Finesse, or Whirlwind Attack.

Prerequisites apply normally for these choices.

Evasion: At 3rd level, the outlaw gains the evasion ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if he does not already have it.

Fugitive's Luck: At 4th level, the outlaw of the crimson road gains a +1 luck bonus on all saving throws and a +2 luck bonus on Escape Artist checks.

These bonuses increase to +2 and +4 at 6th level, and to +3 and +6 at 9th level.

Leadership: Also at 4th level, the outlaw gains Leadership as a bonus feat and begins to attract a band of like-minded cohorts and followers.

These may range from people he spared in an earlier encounter (see The Outlaw's Code sidebar) to would-be lieutenants drawn by his growing reputation among the homeless commoners he protects.

Some of these cohorts and followers may join the outlaw in his hideout and operate openly at his side, while others might help by providing safe houses, alibis, supplies, and possibly even cover identities when needed.

After all, an outlaw who enters a town where there's a price on his head has a better chance of maintaining his cover if he has a good disguise and some innocent-looking companions.

Improved Evasion: At 6th level, the outlaw gains the improved evasion ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if he does not already have it.

Ranged Disarm: At 7th level, the outlaw can use ranged attacks to disarm opponents within 30 feet.

Doing so doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity from the defender unless a normal ranged attack would (if the outlaw and the target are adjacent, for instance).

Regardless of the ranged weapon the outlaw is using, it counts as a one-handed, Medium-size weapon for the opposed disarm check.

The outlaw cannot lose his own weapon during such an attempt.

Legend: At 8th level, the character's reputation gains him a +4 circumstance bonus on Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, and Intimidate checks.

This bonus applies only when he is interacting openly with others who know his reputation, not when he is in disguise or otherwise unknown to those with whom he is dealing.

Furthermore, the outlaw's status as a legend counts as "great prestige" for purposes of acquiring cohorts and followers with the leadership feat.

Cheat Death (Ex): At 10th level, an outlaw of the crimson road gains the extraordinary ability to avoid a fatal blow. This reflects the difficulty inherent in bringing the career of any truly remarkable highwayman to its final close. The cheat death ability functions exactly like the rogue's defensive roll (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook), except that any source of damage (including spells and traps) can be avoided, and the outlaw need not be aware of the attack beforehand.

Once per day, he can make a Reflex save (DC = damage dealt) to take half damage from an attack, spell, or effect that would otherwise reduce him to 0 or fewer hit points.

If the effect directed at him allows a Reflex save for half damage, the outlaw's improved evasion ability comes into play as it normally would, but improved evasion does not otherwise help him cheat death.

Of course, an unscrupulous outlaw who knows that someone is about to storm his hideout might use his Disguise skill to switch clothes with a flunky.

Then all he has to do is feign death from some relatively minor injury (one that dealt enough damage to kill the flunky) and make a quiet exit as soon as his "killers" are occupied elsewhere.

Ruses such as this often help to extend an outlaw's career.

The Outlaw's Code

Each outlaw of the crimson road must choose a group (subject to the DM's approval) that is immune to his depredations. For example, the Pirates of Penzance refused to rob orphans, while Robin Hood spared the poor. Some outlaws refuse to steal from members of the opposite sex, of their own race, or of the clergy. In return, the group granted this immunity idolizes the outlaw and aids him in times of distress. For example, members of the chosen group might provide a hiding place or send pursuers in the wrong direction. An outlaw who knowingly harms a member of his chosen group must atone for his misdeeds (see the atonement spell in the Player's Handbook). Until he has completed his penance, he loses all class features from the prestige class except for weapon and armor proficiencies.

ROYAL EXPLORER

Keoland monarchs enjoy learning of other lands and cultures, but pressing matters of state often keep them tied to their throne rooms.

So for years, they have sponsored crack teams of explorers who travel the length and breadth of the world, then return to deliver reports on faraway wonders.

Accordingly, the royal library of Keoland has the best selection of maps in the world, as well as a fascinating series of journals known as the Minutes of the Royal Explorers Society.

Because the Minutes are often used in geography lessons, many a noble's child lies awake at night, dreaming of climbing mountains along with Ahn Balic or hunting albino dire wolves with Istai Sunblessed.

However, the entrance examinations for the Royal Explorers Society are rigorous indeed.

To be accepted, an applicant must not only demonstrate a thorough knowledge of geography and possess impeccable cartographic skills, but also impress the society's admissions committee with verifiable tales of a particularly noteworthy exploration.

Academic geographers tend not to survive explorations in the wild, so most royal explorers are former bards or rogues. Adventurers in the midst of their own explorations sometimes encounter NPC royal explorers, who may either seek advice or offer it.

In addition, many of them hire bands of adventurers to deal with the more dangerous denizens of the areas they're exploring.

Royal explorers also pay top coin for copies of any maps adventurers may have made of previously unexplored regions.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a royal explorer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Decipher Script 5 ranks, Intuit Direction ranks, Profession (cartographer) 8 ranks, Wilderness Lore 5 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Endurance.

Special: The character must be admitted to the Royal Explorers Society.

This requires fulfilling all the requirements listed above and also submitting a verifiable report of a significant exploration to the society's review council.

Such a report should include, at minimum, a detailed map of the area explored, descriptions of native flora and fauna, a narrative of encounters with the area's inhabitants, and a significant relic (preferably magical) brought back for the society's museum.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills for the royal explorer (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Speak Language (None), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Magic Device (Cha), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the royal explorer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The royal explorer gains proficiency with one exotic weapon of choice.

He gains no other weapon or armor proficiencies.

Bonus Language: At 1st level and each odd-numbered royal explorer level thereafter, the character gains one bonus language of choice from Table 4–6 in the Player's Handbook.

Explorer Lore: A royal explorer has a chance to know almost anything, either from his own experience or from the tales of fellow explorers.

This ability functions exactly like bardic knowledge (see the Bard section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook), except that the check modifier equals the character's royal explorer level + his Intelligence modifier.

Bard levels stack with royal explorer levels for the purpose of determining this modifier.

Explorer Check: The royal explorer makes a Knowledge (geography) check (DC 15) once per month or whenever he travels to a new culture.

Success means he can use his knowledge of the culture he is visiting to his advantage, gaining a +4 circumstance bonus on certain skill checks.

At 2nd level, this bonus applies only to Diplomacy checks.

For every two royal explorer levels thereafter, the bonus also applies to one additional skill, as shown on Table 1–5. He retains these circumstance bonuses until his next Knowledge (geography) check.

For particularly isolated or far-off cultures, the DM can raise the DC of the Knowledge (geography) check to 20 or higher.

Track: At 2nd level, the royal explorer gains Track as a bonus feat.

Brave: A royal explorer of 3rd level or higher gains a +4 morale bonus on Will saves against fear effects.

Search Bonus: At 5th level, a royal explorer gains a +2 competence bonus on Search and Wilderness lore checks made to find a path, including checks for secret doors and for following tracks.

Never Lost: A royal explorer of 6th level or higher automatically succeeds at Wilderness lore and Intuit Direction checks made to avoid being lost, and maze spells don't affect him.

Skill Mastery: At 7th level and higher, a royal explorer can use his skills reliably even under adverse conditions.

When he first qualifies for this ability, select a number of skills equal to 3 + his Intelligence modifier for mastery.

When making a check with one of these skills, the character may take 10 even if stress and distractions would normally prevent him from doing so.

Fearless (Ex): A royal explorer of 9th level or higher is immune to fear effects.

TABLE 1–5: THE ROYAL EXPLORER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+2	+2	+0	Bonus language, explorer lore
2nd	+1	+3	+3	+0	Explorer check (Diplomacy), Track
3rd	+2	+3	+3	+1	Bonus language, brave

7th	+5	+5	+5	+2	Bonus language, skill mastery
8th	+6	+6	+6	+2	Explorer check (Disable Device)
9th	+6	+6	+6	+3	Bonus language, fearless
10th	+7	+7	+7	+3	Explorer check (Use Magic Device)

The Minutes of the Royal Explorers Society

Because they're map-intensive and hand-scribed, copies of the Minutes of the Royal Explorers Society are rare. Thus, they are terrific finds for characters seeking adventure (and treasure). Each bimonthly issue contains at least one lengthy report on a far-off land, typically written as a series of journal entries. Relevant maps are included, as is other data collected during the exploration. Shorter reports on explorations in progress appear in a separate "Correspondence from Afield" section.

The most interesting parts of the Minutes, however, are near the back of each issue. The "Annotations" section offers lively debate as explorers query, dispute, or praise reports from previous issues. The "Order of the Cautionary Tale" section always offers a firsthand account of some misadventure, comic or tragic, suffered by a royal explorer. The Order of the Cautionary Tale isn't a real knightly order, of course, but many royal explorers take a curious pride in attaining membership. After all, an explorer has to survive to tell a cautionary tale. ...

SPYMASTER

Some adventurers glory in their reputations—the wider their exploits are known, the happier they are.

By contrast, the spymaster prefers to avoid attention. She does her work quietly and in private, keeping well away from public scrutiny.

To allay suspicions, she often maintains a cover identity by pretending to be a member of some other character class—typically the one in which she began her career.

Spymasters are rarely popular, but as long as nation distrusts nation, there will be work for those who can gather information that others wish to keep hidden.

Many a ruler who publicly claims to abhor spymasters secretly employs a stable of them, if only to protect his own secrets from the spymasters of other nations.

The secrecy inherent in the profession and its high fatality rate make it impossible to determine how many spymasters are active in a setting at any given time.

Rogues make excellent spymasters because of their generous skill allotments and their propensity for stealth. Likewise, rangers have an edge when operating as spymasters in outdoor surroundings.

In truth, however, characters of any class may become spymasters—the more unlikely the combination may seem, the better the cover it provides.

Some wizards and sorcerers use their spellcraft as a cover for subterfuge, and some barbarians are far more subtle than they may seem.

Spymasters may also be of any alignment.

They range from self-serving information brokers who sell their services to the highest bidder to high-minded moles who penetrate and destroy corrupt organizations.

It's important for spymasters to keep personal emotions distinct from professional attachments.

They must be ready to liquidate even someone close to them without a moment's thought if so ordered.

Betrayal is their business, and their loyalty is always to their mission, not to the people encountered while carrying that mission out.

Occasionally, spymasters find it expedient to infiltrate adventuring parties heading for the area where the real mission lies.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a spymaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Bluff 5 ranks, Gather Information 5 ranks, Innuendo 5 ranks.

Feat: Skill Focus (Bluff).

Special: The character must have 5 ranks in each of two skills from the following list: Diplomacy, Disguise, Forgery, and Sense Motive.

CLASS SKILLS

The spymaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Read Lips (Int), Scry (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language, Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 8 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the spymaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A spymaster is proficient with light and medium armor and with all simple and martial weapons.

Cover Identity: A typical spymaster wishes to keep her true profession secret, so she pretends to be a simple rogue, ranger, or the like.

In addition to allaying her companions' suspicions, maintaining a cover identity also leads opponents to underestimate the spymaster until it is too late.

At 1st level, a spymaster establishes one specific cover identity (such as Murek the tailor from Sumberton).

While operating in that identity, she gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks and a +2 circumstance bonus on Bluff and Gather Information checks.

At 4th level and again at 7th level, the spymaster can maintain one additional cover identity that provides the same circumstance bonuses as the first.

Should the spymaster wish to "retire" a cover identity and develop a new one, she must spend one week rigorously practicing subtle vocal intonations and body language before she earns the bonuses.

Cover identities do not in themselves provide the spymaster with additional skills, proficiencies, or class features that others might expect of the professions pretended, though required ranks (see below) can bolster skills in the chosen areas.

However, the spymaster must be careful to choose identities that can withstand regular scrutiny.

Required Ranks: A spymaster makes it a point to know what she's doing while she's pretending to be someone else. At every spymaster level, she must spend at least two skill points on a Craft, Profession, or Knowledge skill relating to one other chosen cover identities.

The usual maximum rank limit still applies to these skills.

Sneak Attack: The spymaster gains the sneak attack ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) at 1st level if she does not already have it. She gains +1d6 damage with this attack initially, but this rises to +2d6 at 4th level and to +3d6 at 7th level, if she already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack.

Undetectable Alignment (Ex): The web of different identities and agendas inside the spymaster's mind makes it impossible to detect her alignment via any form of divination once she reaches 2nd level.

This ability functions exactly like an undetectable alignment spell, except that it is always active.

Only divinations are confounded; spells that function only against certain alignments, such as protection from evil and holy smite, affect the spymaster normally.

Quick Change (Ex): By 3rd level, the spymaster has become adept at quickly switching from one identity to another. She now can don a disguise in one-tenth the normal time (1d3 minutes) and put on or take off armor in one-half the normal time.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Also at 3rd level, the spymaster gains the uncanny dodge ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if she did not already have it.

She gains additional benefits of this ability as her spymaster level increases (see Table 1-6).

If she already had uncanny dodge from one or more previous classes, levels of those classes stack with spymaster levels for the purpose of determining the benefits, but she continues to progress in the ability along whichever track she was originally using for it.

For example, if a rogue becomes a spymaster, add together her levels of spymaster and rogue, then refer to Table 3-15; The Rogue in the Player's Handbook to determine the benefits of uncanny dodge at her new, combined level.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 5th level, the spymaster gains the slippery mind ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if she does not already have it.

Spot Scrying (Ex): Also at 5th level, the spymaster notices the magical sensor created by arcane eye, scrying, a crystal ball, or the like with a successful Spot check (DC 20).

Deep Cover (Ex): At 8th level, the spymaster can quiet her mind and completely immerse herself in her cover identity at will.

While she is in deep cover, divination spells detect only information appropriate for her cover identity; they reveal nothing relating to her spymaster persona.

Hear Subharmonics: Also at 8th level, the spymaster can determine the true motives of others by listening carefully to the subtle inflections of their voices.

Her ears are so well trained that she gains a +3 insight bonus on Sense Motive checks.

Detection Damper (Su): At 9th level, the spymaster can subconsciously create interference that hampers detect magic spells.

The aura strengths for all magic items she holds, carries, or wears register as two categories weaker than they normally would.

For example, a strong aura becomes faint, and faint or dim auras become completely undetectable.

Reactive Body Language (Ex): Also at 9th level, the spymaster learns the silent language of subconscious body movements.

By mimicking the body language of those with whom she interacts, she gains a +2 insight bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks.

Mind Blank (Sp): At 10th level, the spymaster can become immune to all mind-affecting spells and divinations by rigorously silencing her mind.

Using mind blank is a standard action, and the spymaster can do it a number of times per day equal to 3 + her Intelligence modifier.

This ability works exactly like a mind blank spell cast by a 15th-level sorcerer, except that it affects the spymaster only and its duration is 10 minutes.

TEMPLE RAIDER OF OLIDAMMARA

Olidammara's worshipers don't have many temples of their own, but some of them spend a great deal of time in the temples of other deities—robbing them of every valuable that's even remotely portable.

The temple raiders are an elite cadre of thieves who worship the Laughing Rogue and specialize in stealing valuables and secret lore from the temples of other deities. Few enterprises are as dangerous as breaking into a temple, so Olidammara grants limited spellcasting abilities to temple raiders in his service.

Temple raiders usually work in small teams, using stealth, disguise, or magic to infiltrate a rival temple secretly. Once inside, they plunder the treasury, steal religious relics, and abscond with any secrets the clerics of the rival temple cared to write down.

If all goes well, they slip out unnoticed, but they're not above fighting their way to freedom.

They know that the penalty for stealing from a temple is usually death, so they're quick to draw blades when capture seems imminent.

Temple raiders are always listening for news of great riches or dark secrets at the temples of other deities, and they eagerly chase down rumors of hidden shrines and half-buried temples from bygone ages.

However, they typically have plenty of time between raids for normal adventuring, which they undertake frequently with their deity's blessing.

After all, dungeon adventuring hones the skills that the temple raider needs for special missions—such as liberating the war-booty that the clerics of St. Cuthbert's temple are now bringing home for safekeeping.

Clerics who venerate other deities consider temple raiders a menace, so most of the latter pose as rogues, bards, or even clerics of Olidammara instead.

Rogues and bards usually have the skills a temple raider needs, whereas only a few rare clerics—even those of Olidammara—can pick a lock or sabotage a trap well enough to meet the temple raiders' standards.

Player characters may encounter NPC temple raiders fleeing from town with their latest victims on their heels, or in the midst of planning a raid.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a temple raider of Olidammara, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Disable Device 4 ranks, Open Lock 4 ranks, Search 8 ranks.

Special: The character must worship Olidammara and be invited to join the ranks of the temple raiders by at least three current members of that prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The temple raider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the temple raider of Olidammara prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A temple raider is proficient with all simple weapons and with the rapier. In addition, he is proficient with both light and medium armor.

Traps: At 1st level, a temple raider gains the traps ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if he does not already have it.

Spells: A temple raider can cast a small number of divine spells.

His spells are based on Wisdom, so casting any given spell requires a Wisdom score least 10 + the spell's level.

The DC for saving against these spells is 10 + spell level + the raider's Wisdom modifier.

When the table indicates that the temple raider is entitled to 0 spells a given level (such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level), he gets only those bonus spells that his Wisdom score allows.

Like a cleric, a temple raider can prepare one domain spell at each spell level in addition to his regular allotment.

At the time he becomes a temple raider, the character must choose two domains from the three over which Olidammara holds sway (Chaos, Luck, and Trickery).

He thus has access to two domain spells at each spell level and may prepare one or the other each day in his domain spell slot.

A temple raider must spend 1 hour each night in quiet contemplation and supplication to Olidammara to regain his daily allotment of spells.

Time spent resting has no effect on whether he can prepare spells.

Unlike clerics, temple raiders do not channel energy to turn or rebuke undead, nor can they spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells.

They also gain no granted powers for their domains.

Sneak Attack: The temple raider gains the sneak attack ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) at 2nd level if he does not already have it.

He gains +1d6 damage with this attack initially, and this rises by +1d6 per three temple raider levels thereafter.

If he already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 3rd level, the temple raider gains the uncanny dodge ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if he did not already have it.

He gains additional benefits of this ability as his temple raider level increases (see Table 1–7).

If he already had uncanny dodge from one or more previous classes, levels of those classes stack with temple raider levels for the purpose of determining the benefits, but he continues to progress in the ability along whichever track he was originally using for it.

For example, if a rogue becomes a temple raider, add together his levels of temple raider and rogue, then refer to

Table 3–15: The Rogue in the Player's Handbook to determine the benefits of uncanny dodge at his new, combined level.

Save Bonus: A little bit of Olidammara's luck has rubbed off on the temple raider in the form of a luck bonus on all saving throws.

This bonus rises from +1 at 4th level to +2 at 7th level to +3 at 10th level.

TEMPLE RAIDER SPELL LIST

Temple raiders choose their spells from the following list:

2nd Level—augury, cat's grace, cure moderate wounds, darkness, darkvision, delay poison, fog cloud, hold person, inflict moderate wounds, knock, lesser restoration, misdirection, resist elements, silence, undetectable alignment.

4th Level—air walk, cure critical wounds, freedom of movement, inflict critical wounds, neutralize poison, restoration, spell immunity.

TABLE 1–7: THE TEMPLE RAIDER OF OLIDAMMARA

10th	+7	+3	+7	+7	Save bonus +3	2+1	2+1	2+1	1+1

*In addition to the stated number of spells per day for 1st- through 4th-level spells, a temple raider gets a domain spell for each spell level. The "+1" on this list represents that. These spells are in addition to any bonus spells for having a high Wisdom.

THIEF-ACROBAT

Like any large guild, a thieves' guild has many specialists within its ranks—pickpockets, burglars, swindlers, and even highway robbers.

None of these, however, have the prestige of a thief-acrobat—the superlative second-story burglar who is infamous for daring escapades across the city's rooftops. The thief-acrobat excels at getting into and out of places no one else can.

If every street-level entrance to the Jewelers' Guildhouse is locked and well guarded, the thief-acrobat simply jumps atop the building from the roof of a nearby inn, throws a grappling hook to the highest minaret, runs up the attached rope to a shuttered window, and quickly picks the lock.

Should her escape go awry once she has the goods, her gymnastic combat style keeps her out of harm's way. Most thief-acrobats began as rogues and worked their way up through the guild's ranks.

Members of other classes—particularly the barbarian and illusionist—often find the acrobatics and climbing skills of the thief-acrobat prestige class quite attractive as well.

Adventuring parties often encounter an NPC thief-acrobat in the midst of some crime.

Sometimes, however, a thief-acrobat hires adventurers to help with particularly dangerous capers, or even to create diversions while she works.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a thief-acrobat, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Balance 8 ranks, Climb 8 ranks, Jump 8 ranks,

Tumble 8 ranks.

Special: The character must have the evasion ability and be a member in good standing of the local thieves' guild.

CLASS SKILLS

The thief-acrobat's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Wis), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Perform (Cha), Search (Int), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the thief-acrobat prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thief-acrobats are proficient with all simple weapons.

With the exception of sneak attacks, the thief-acrobat cannot use any other class features while wearing armor bulkier than light.

Kip Up (Ex): A thief-acrobat can stand up from a prone position as a free action.

Unbounded leap (Ex): A thief-acrobat's height does not limit her jumping distance (horizontal or vertical).

Fast Balance (Ex): At 2nd level, the thief-acrobat gains the ability to balance easily on a precarious surface.

A successful Balance check (for DCs, see the Balance skill description in Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook) allows her to move her speed rather than half her speed under such conditions.

Improved Trip: At 2nd level, the thief-acrobat gains Improved Trip as a bonus feat, even if she does not have the Expertise feat prerequisite.

Improved Evasion (Ex): At 3rd level, the thief-acrobat gains improved evasion (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if she does not already have it.

Slow fall (Ex): At 3rd level, the thief-acrobat also gains the slow fall ability (see the Monk section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Initially, she takes falling damage as though each fall were 20 feet shorter than it actually is.

The falling distance that she can ignore increases by 10 feet for every three thief-acrobat levels she gains.

If the character already has the slow fall ability from a previous class, the distances do not stack.

Defensive Fighting Bonus: The fact that the thief-acrobat is perpetually whirling and spinning makes her a difficult target to hit.

When fighting defensively, she gains a +4 dodge bonus to AC rather than the normal +2 bonus or the +3 bonus for having 5 or more ranks in Tumble.

When executing the total defense standard action, she gains a +8 dodge bonus to AC rather than the usual +4 bonus or the +6 bonus for having 5 or more ranks in Tumble.

Sneak Attack: The thief-acrobat gains the sneak attack ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) at 4th level if she does not already have it.

She gains +1d6 damage with this attack initially, but this rises to +2d6 at 9th level.

If she already has the sneak attack ability from a previous class, the damage bonuses stack.

Cartwheel Charge: By somersaulting and cartwheeling in a straight line toward a foe 10 feet or more away, the thief-acrobat of at least 5th level can make an unusual charge attack, gaining the standard +2 bonus on attack rolls and -2 penalty to AC for a charge.

Executing the cartwheel charge requires a Tumble check (DC 20).

Success means that the thief-acrobat deals sneak attack damage to her target on a successful hit; failure means she achieves the normal results of a charge but does not get sneak attack damage.

Fast Climb (Ex): By 5th level, the thief-acrobat is an expert at climbing.

A successful Climb check allows her to move her full speed rather than half her speed in any situation that would normally require such a check.

Fast climb counts as a miscellaneous full-round action.

Prone Defense: By 6th level, the thief-acrobat is accustomed to rolling and spinning on the ground.

Opponents who attack her while she's prone don't get the +4 attack bonus that they ordinarily would receive.

Defensive Roll: At 7th level, the thief-acrobat gains the defensive roll ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) does not already have it.

Move Anywhere (Ex): By 8th level, a thief-acrobat can move normally even while balancing on a precarious surface or climbing.

In either case, she moves her speed with each move-equivalent action and can even run if desired, as long as she does so in a straight line.

Furthermore, she can take 10 on all Climb and Balance checks unless she's engaged in melee combat.

Fight Anywhere (Ex): By 10th level, the thief-acrobat can fight normally even while climbing or balancing on something.

This means, for example, that a thief-acrobat could climb a few steps up a nearby wall to earn the attack bonus for higher ground while engaged in melee.

She must, however, keep at least one hand free to climb.

VIGILANTE

One vigilante may have suffered personally at the hands of criminals and be bent on revenge.

Another might have lost loved ones to knives in a dark alleyway.

Still another could be atoning for the time he himself spent on the wrong side of the law.

Whatever the cause, a vigilante has burning desire to solve crimes and bring criminals to justice.

The vigilante combines magical and mundane investigative techniques to assess a crime scene.

He's adept at finding out "the word on the street" about a crime, analyzing clues, and identifying likely suspects.

Once he's on the trail, he relentlessly tails, apprehends, and interrogates a suspect until the truth comes out.

One vigilante could work for the local ruler or the city guard, but another might be an independent detective-for-hire.

A third might even take to the streets by night to stop crimes in progress—or keep would-be criminals from striking in the first place.

A bard or rogue can pick up the variety of skills a vigilante needs very quickly.

Rangers also tend to find the class appealing, for it allows them to engage in urban hunts with criminals as their prey.

An NPC vigilante might turn up just in time to save the player characters from becoming crime victims themselves.

However, if they break the law on a vigilante's home turf, the heroes may find themselves under his unwelcome scrutiny.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a vigilante, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Gather Information 8 ranks, Intimidate 8 ranks, Search 8 ranks, Sense Motive 8 ranks.

Feat: Alertness.

CLASS SKILLS

The vigilante's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Wis), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Perform (Cha), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the vigilante prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Vigilantes are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, plus the net.

They gain no new armor proficiencies.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a vigilante can cast arcane spells just as a sorcerer does.

To cast a particular spell, the vigilante must have a Charisma score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

The character gains bonus spells based on his Charisma score, and the DC for the saving throws against his spells is 10 + the spell's level + the vigilante's Charisma modifier.

Like a sorcerer, a vigilante need not prepare his spells ahead of time.

TABLE 1–10: VIGILANTE SPELLS KNOWN

Vigilante Level	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
1st	2	—	—	—
2nd	2	—	—	—
3rd	3	1	—	—
4th	3	2	—	—
5th	4	2	1	—

7th	5	3	2	1
8th	5	4	3	2
9th	5	5	4	2
10th	5	5	4	3

Detect Evil (Sp): Once per day per vigilante level, the character can detect evil just as a paladin does (see the Paladin section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Search for Clues: A vigilante of 2nd level or higher who merely passes within 5 feet of a clue to a crime is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he were actively looking for it.

The vigilante must be aware that a crime has occurred, but need not know the specifics.

The clue cannot be more than a week old.

Streetwise: Select one city to be the vigilante's "home turf".

While in that city, he gains a circumstance bonus on Innuendo and Gather Information checks.

This bonus is initially +2 at 2nd level, but it increases with class level as given on Table 1-9.

If he moves to another city, he must spend a month getting acquainted with the new area before he can use this ability there.

Incredible Luck: This ability, available to vigilantes of 3rd level or higher, allows you to reroll any roll you have just made after learning the result but before it has taken effect.

The rerolled result must be kept.

Although this ability is usable more than once per day at higher levels, a vigilante can't use it more than once for a given check.

Shadow: At 4th level, the vigilante gains Shadow as a bonus feat.

(See Chapter 2 of this book for this feat's description).

Punish the Guilty (Su): If a vigilante of 5th level higher personally witnesses someone committing an action that the laws of his home turf define as a crime, he can attempt to punish the miscreant.

To do so, he makes one normal attack and adds his Charisma bonus (if any) to the attack roll, along with any other modifiers that would normally apply.

If the attack is successful, it deals 1 extra point of damage per vigilante level.

This special attack must occur within three days of the crime; otherwise the bonuses no longer apply.

Punish the guilty is usable once per day at 5th level, twice per day at 7th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

The vigilante can use this ability as many times as desired against the same miscreant and in response to the same incident, as long as all such uses occur within the time limit.

Should the vigilante mistakenly try to punish someone who is not actually guilty of the crime witnessed, the bonuses do not apply, but the attempt still counts against the number allowed per day.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 9th level, the vigilante gains the slippery mind ability (see the Rogue section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook) if he does not already have it.

VIGILANTE SPELL LIST

Vigilantes choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level—cause fear, change self, detect magic, detect secret doors, identify, light, obscuring mist.

2nd Level—darkvision, daylight, detect thoughts, locate object, scare, see invisibility, zone of truth.

3rd Level—clairaudience/clairvoyance, discern lies, dispel magic, emotion, magic circle against evil, speak with dead, tongues.

4th Level—arcane eye, detect scrying, dimensional anchor, fear, locate creature, scrying.

VIRTUOSO

The roar of the crowd, the praise of spectators after a great performance, the showers of gifts from attractive admirers—why would anyone trade all that for sleeping in the woods or poking around in smelly old dungeons?

The virtuoso leaves creeping down dark corridors and matching wits against deadly traps to others.

Her place is on the stage, surrounded by adoring fans.

Fortunately for her, every place she goes becomes a stage, and as long as there's anyone to impress, she's in the spotlight.

The typical virtuoso is outgoing, charismatic, and gregarious.

She loves to be around people and is quick to win friends with her charming manner.

Some might call her a temperamental egomaniac, yet everyone feels a little better in her presence.

Many virtuosos are musicians; others are accomplished dancers or actors.

Still others choose to specialize in obscure and unusual forms of entertainment, such as stage magic or juggling.

Since entertainers are often on the road, a virtuoso can travel wherever she likes, incorporating as much adventuring into her journeys as she wishes.

Because of her talent for winning admirers, she usually remains above suspicion should anything underhanded occur in a place she is visiting on tour.

Bards are most often drawn to this prestige class, although rogues, illusionists, and multiclass combinations of both can also excel in it.

Bards tend to perform as musicians or actors, illusionists as stage magicians, and rogues as dancers, tumblers, or sleight-of-hand artists.

Characters of most other classes are either not outgoing enough to enjoy being virtuosos, or they find other channels for their extrovertism.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a virtuoso, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Perform 10 ranks, Intimidate or Diplomacy 6 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 0-level arcane spells (cantrips).

CLASS SKILLS

The virtuoso's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Wis), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Spellcraft (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the virtuoso prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Virtuosos gain no new weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Since the virtuoso often uses magic to enhance her performances, it's important for her to maintain her magical studies.

Thus, whenever she gains a new virtuoso level, she gains new spells per day and spells known as if she had gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, new familiar abilities, and so on).

This means that she adds her new level of virtuoso to the level of some other spellcasting class she has, than determines spells per day, caster level, and spells known (if formerly a bard or sorcerer) accordingly.

If the character had more than one spell-casting class before becoming a virtuoso, she must decide to which class she adds each level of virtuoso for purposes of spells per day and spells known.

Bardic Music: At 1st level, the virtuoso gains the bardic music ability if she did not already have it from a previous class.

All the bardic music effects (countersong, fascinate, inspire competence, inspire courage, inspire greatness, and suggestion) become available to her immediately, subject to their usual Perform skill requirements (see the Bard section in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Countersong requires either a musical or a poetic performance; all others can be produced with any performance type.

Each bardic music effect except suggestion requires one daily use of either the virtuoso performance ability (see below) or the bardic music ability.

Suggestion does not require any uses, but the subject must first be fascinated.

Virtuoso Performance: With an impassioned soliloquy or a haunting melody, the virtuoso can create magical effects beyond even the capabilities of bardic music.

Virtuoso performance can be used once per virtuoso level per day.

If the virtuoso has bard levels, those stack with virtuoso levels to determine uses per day.

Many virtuoso performance effects require more than one of the ability's allotted daily uses.

Although many of the names refer to musical performances, the virtuoso isn't actually so limited—for example, an actor could perform a "sustaining soliloquy" rather than a sustaining song.

As with bardic music, the virtuoso can usually fight while using this ability but cannot cast spells or activate magic items by either spell completion or command word.

If the performance forces any target to make a Will save, the only other action the virtuoso can take in the same round is a 5-foot step.

Sustaining Song (Su): A 1st-level virtuoso with at least 11 ranks in Perform can sustain her unconscious allies, negating their need for stabilization checks during her performance.

Because they're not making stabilization checks, the affected allies are neither stabilizing nor losing hit points.

A sustaining song lasts for 5 minutes or until the virtuoso stops performing, whichever comes first.

Sustaining song is a supernatural ability.

Calumny (Su): A 3rd-level virtuoso with at least 13 ranks in Perform has mastered the fine art of slander and can deliver a performance that makes a specific character or group (class, race, nationality, or the like) appear in the worst light possible.

Each member of the audience must make a Will save with a DC equal to the virtuoso's Perform check result.

Success negates the calumny effect; failure shifts that individual's attitude toward the target by one category—that is, from friendly to indifferent, from indifferent to unfriendly, or from unfriendly to hostile (see Table 5-4: Influencing NPC Attitude in the Dungeon Master's Guide).

Furthermore, each affected creature gains a +2 morale bonus on all opposed social interaction checks against the target.

Calumny lingers in the minds of affected audience members for 24 hours per daily use of virtuoso performance applied to the calumny attempt.

For example, a 7th-level bard/3rd-level virtuoso could apply seven daily uses of virtuoso performance to a song of antiuergar sentiment.

All who heard it and failed their Will saves would be affected for a week, and the virtuoso would have three virtuoso performance uses left that day.

Calumny is a supernatural, mind-affecting, language-dependent ability.

Jarring Song (Su): A 4th-level virtuoso with at least 14 ranks in Perform can inhibit spellcasting.

Anyone attempting to cast a spell during a jarring song must make a Concentration check (DC 15 + the spell level). Success allows normal completion of the spell; failure means it is lost.

A jarring song requires three daily uses of virtuoso performance and is a supernatural, sonic ability.

Sharp Note (Sp): A 5th-level virtuoso with at least 15 ranks in Perform can sharpen the blades of all piercing and slashing weapons within a 10-foot radius.

The affected weapons function as if a 6th-level sorcerer had cast a keen edge spell on them, except that the effect lasts only 10 minutes.

Sharp note requires three daily uses of virtuoso performance and is a spell-like, transmutation ability.

Mindbending Melody (Sp): A 6th-level virtuoso with at least 16 ranks in Perform can dominate a humanoid that she has already fascinated.

This ability functions exactly like a dominate person spell cast by a 9th-level sorcerer.

The target can make a Will save (DC 15 + the virtuoso's Charisma modifier) to negate the effect.

A mindbending melody requires two daily uses of virtuoso performance and is a spell-like, mind-affecting, language-dependent, charm ability.

Greater Calumny (Su): A 7th-level virtuoso with at least 17 ranks in Perform can whip her audience into a frenzy of loathing.

Greater calumny functions exactly like calumny, except that the audience's attitude is shifted two categories (indifferent to hostile, for example), and each affected audience member gains a +4 morale bonus on all opposed social interaction checks with the target.

Greater calumny is a supernatural, mind-affecting, language-dependent ability.

Magical Melody (Su): An 8th-level virtuoso with at least 18 ranks in Perform can empower allied spellcasters, raising their effective caster levels by +1 each for the purposes of spell effects and spell resistance checks.

This effect lasts as long as the performance does.

Magical melody requires two daily uses of virtuoso performance per minute maintained.

It is a supernatural ability.

Song of Fury (Su): A 9th-level virtuoso with at least 19 ranks in Perform can enrage her allies.

This ability functions exactly like barbarian rage on all willing allies within 20 feet, and it lasts as long as the virtuoso continues her performance.

Song of fury requires three daily uses of performance per round maintained.

It is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability.

Revealing Melody (Sp): A 10th-level virtuoso with at least 20 ranks in Perform can reveal all things as they actually are.

All those who hear the revealing melody are affected as if by a true seeing spell cast by a 17th-level sorcerer.

The effect lasts as long as the song does.

Revealing melody requires two daily uses of virtuoso performance per round maintained and is a spell-like, divination ability.

STORMWRACK (3.5)

KNIGHT OF THE PEARL

"On my oath, I shall defend this kingdom beneath the sea and all its people, from that which threatens them, whether from the abysses, the shoals, the lands, or even the planes beyond.

Upon my life I swear it."

—Timora Argareth, a knight of the pearl

The knight of the pearl is a loyal defender of the aventi people, dedicated to the service of Aventernus and his appointed kings.

Not all paladins of the aventi people are meant to become knights of the pearl, for many of them have other obligations.

A knight of the pearl is a paladin who has taken the defense and prosperity of her people as her sacred charge.

For that sacrifice, Aventernus grants her the Blessings of the Pearl, a secret technique for infusing the very waters that surround the paladin with positive energy, causing them to glow with a pearlescent sheen.

BECOMING A KNIGHT OF THE PEARL

The paladin who seeks entry into the Order of the Pearl must demonstrate a strong knowledge in the manipulation and channeling of positive energy.

She must also be an exemplary paladin with a history of defending the aventi people and using her strength to benefit those who are weaker than she.

In short, the Order of the Pearl requires uncompromising heroism from those who would join their ranks. This is undeniably a class for paladins, given the strict alignment and special ability requirements. The Order of the Pearl has also been known to attract young clerics or fighter/clerics, drawn by the heroic nature of the knights.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Extra Turning.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks.

Special: Turn undead, proficiency with at least one martial weapon and with heavy armor.

Special: Must be accepted as a member of the Order of the Pearl.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Lay on Hands: You can heal wounds by touch if your Charisma score is 12 or higher.

Each day you can heal a total number of hit points of damage equal to your knight of the pearl level × your Charisma modifier.

This ability works just like the paladin class feature of the same name (see page 44 of the Player's Handbook).

If you already gained this ability from another class, your levels in both classes stack to determine the total number of hit points of damage you can heal each day.

Blessed Soul: You can freely take levels in this prestige class without restricting future advancement as a paladin.

Your knight of the pearl levels stack with paladin levels for the purpose of your aura of good and stack with cleric and paladin levels for the purpose of turning undead.

Buoyant Armor (Su): At 2nd level, you can use positive energy to buoy up your armor in the water.

You take no armor check penalty on Swim checks, and the weight of your armor does not count toward your carrying capacity.

This effect only functions while you are in the water.

Pearl's Blessing (Su): At 3rd level, you can use the positive energy-imbued waters around you to deliver extra damage with your melee attack.

As a free action, you spend a turn undead attempt to focus positive energy into your weapon; the next successful strike with that weapon deals an extra 2d6 points of damage from positive energy.

If the energy is not used within a number of rounds equal to your class level, it fades and is lost.

At 5th level, you can focus more energy into your weapon, dealing an extra 4d6 points of damage on your next strike. The damage does not stack with itself.

When not in a body of water, you deal half as much extra damage (+1d6 at 3rd level, +2d6 at 5th level).

Pearl Blade (Su): At 4th level, your slashing weapons develop a pearlescent sheen when you wield them, and you ignore the normal penalties for using slashing weapons in the water.

This ability only functions in the water.

Water's Blessing (Su): At 5th level, you gain the ability to affect evil water-dwelling creatures with your turn undead attempts.

Furthermore, when in water you can spend a turn undead attempt to deal 4d6 points of damage to all evil or undead creatures within 30 feet, while simultaneously healing good creatures of 4d6 points of damage.

All the creatures damaged and healed must be in contact with the water for the water's blessing to take effect.

EX-KNIGHTS OF THE PEARL

Rare is the knight of the pearl who strays from the path of service to the aventi, but it has been known to happen.

A knight of the pearl who ceases to be lawful good, who willfully commits an evil act, or who grossly violates the code of conduct loses all knight of the pearl abilities (and likely loses all paladin abilities as well).

She cannot progress any farther as a knight of the pearl. She regains her abilities and advancement potential if she atones for her violations (see the atonement spell description, page 201 of the Player's Handbook) in appropriate fashion.

PLAYING A KNIGHT OF THE PEARL

A knight of the pearl has dedicated herself to her people first and foremost—even the religious organization of your church is second, though you consider your service to the aventi the highest of sacred callings, so there is no conflict in your mind.

Every knight of the pearl is a member in good standing of the Order of the Pearl.

You can hold one of two statuses in the order: active or questing.

If active, you are expected to remain in your assigned court, ready to defend it and the aventi king you have sworn to serve.

If you have taken an oath of questing, you are permitted to be away from those regular duties, so long as your quest fulfills your sacred duty of defending the aventi people.

COMBAT

A knight of the pearl is devastating in the water.

You are capable of wearing heavier armor than can be commonly found in an aquatic environment.

As such, you enjoy a higher Armor Class than most characters you will encounter in maelstrom adventures.

Likewise, your special abilities grant you the use of weapons normally limited in the water, a fact you should take advantage of.

You also have the Blessings of the Pearl (as your positive energy channeling techniques are called in the order).

A knight of the pearl is usually an up-close warrior.

You should be careful to see that your allies are protected.

Do not hesitate to disengage from a foe in order to aid a comrade in grievous danger, even if that means exposing yourself to harm in the process—the defense of the good is always more important than the destruction of evil to a knight of the pearl, especially if the comrade in question is one of the aventi.

Knights of the pearl wield great powers against both undead and creatures with the water subtype (including water elementals, black dragons, and some mephits).

Establish an agreed-upon signal for your allies to converge on your position in order to take advantage of your water's blessing, particularly when fighting undead: Do not hesitate to damage your foes while simultaneously healing your allies.

ADVANCEMENT

The Order of the Pearl does not actively recruit members. Instead, those who feel that their duties as a paladin are in line with those of the order seek out membership.

Your own kingdom's assigned knight, or a questing knight of the pearl you encounter while adventuring, will be only too happy to offer advice on how to gain the order's approval and will even act as your de facto mentor, suggesting missions to prove your dedication to the order's goals and providing training in channeling positive energy and weapons.

The first and foremost duty is service.

Younger knights are expected to pay respect to older and more experienced knights when their paths cross, but beyond this teaching the higher secrets and skills of this prestige class tends to be quite informal.

As a knight of the pearl, you are a front-line fighter, and your choices should reflect that.

As a focused channeler of positive energy, taking the Extra Turning feat grants you the ability to use your powers more often each day.

Additionally, the use of divine feats (see Complete Divine) will get even more out of your already prodigious channeling abilities.

RESOURCES

Just as you can certainly expect to be called upon to aid other members of the Order of the Pearl in pursuit of their duties, you can expect to receive aid as well.

The members of Aventernus's priesthood are naturally very sympathetic to the order's goals and will often aid its knights when they can with spellcasting and other assistance.

The aventi kings are almost always willing to lend their aid as well, when they can do so.

Many knights of the pearl with the Leadership feat attract cohorts from among the king's household guard, who tend to idealize these knights and their sacrifices for the aventi people.

You should invest in the best armor you can acquire—many knights favor heavy armor and weapons crafted of pearlsteel (see page 128).

Likewise, your pearl blade ability allows you to use weapons normally very limited in use in the water, so don't hesitate to take advantage of this benefit.

KNIGHTS OF THE PEARL IN THE WORLD

The knights of the pearl are an order of civic-focused paladins sworn to defend the aventi people from threats. They serve as captains and champions of the Royal Guard and don't hesitate to undertake adventuring when it can benefit their people.

Many aventi kings have a level or two in this prestige class, as well.

A knight of the pearl makes a perfect emissary from a nearby aventi kingdom or a guide for PCs visiting the aventi people.

A knight of the pearl could also serve as opposition to a group of PCs who find themselves at odds with the aventi.

ORGANIZATION

The Order of the Pearl maintains a chapterhouse in each aventi kingdom.

These chapterhouses are usually located on royal grounds, with its members dedicated to defending the aventi king and his people.

Each chapterhouse is led by a Master Sergeant, usually a mid- to high-level knight of the pearl.

The Master Sergeants answer directly to the Master of the Pearl Sword, the head of the Order of the Pearl as a whole, who dwells in a fortified monastery outside of the domain of any of the aventi kings.

The Master of the Pearl Sword and her direct lieutenants act as defenders for the Royal Moots of the aventi kings, but their ultimate loyalty is to the aventi people as a whole.

Younger paladins joining the Order are given the title of Aspirant until they gain their first level in the knight of the pearl prestige class, at which time they are knighted by the local aventi king.

Knights of the pearl in active service train troops, guard their king, and carry out missions on his behalf.

Knights of the pearl not in active service are either questing or in medical recovery of some kind.

NPC REACTIONS

The knights of the pearl are well loved by the aventi people, usually eliciting a friendly or helpful reaction from most aventi.

By contrast, the Order of the Pearl is also well known to the aventi's enemies; kuo-toas, sahuagin, and other such folk are almost always hostile toward the Knights.

KNIGHT OF THE PEARL LORE

Characters with Knowledge (nobility and royalty), Knowledge (religion), or Gather Information can research knights of the pearl to learn more about them.

DC 10: It is said that the strange aventi, an undersea race of humanlike folk, are guarded by knights much like the paladins of surface races, though they ride aquatic mounts.

DC 15: These knights of the pearl actually act primarily as defenders, guardians, and champions of the aventi kings.

They are also known for wearing impressive armor and wielding weapons that aren't really feasible to use underwater, normally.

They serve the god Aventernus, the patron deity of the aventi.

DC 20: These knights are called the knights of the pearl because they have the ability to infuse the water around them with the holy power of their god, giving it a pearlescent glow.

DC 30: The kings of the aventi are often initiates into the Order of the Pearl.

KNIGHTS OF THE PEARL IN THE GAME

An aventi paladin is likely to be a knight of the pearl, especially if she counts the defense of her people to be among the highest of her charges.

The leader of an aventi patrol is likely to be a knight of the pearl, and most of the aventi kings are as well.

LEGENDARY CAPTAIN

"Come about, lads!

We'll cross her bow and rake her from stem to stern!

Let's teach them what it means to tangle with Dolphin's Splash!"

—Valanthe the Golden Dolphin, legendary captain
Seafarers' tales are filled with the exploits of legendary captains—those who can urge their ships and crews to exceptional feats through sheer determination, leadership, and tactical skill.

A legendary captain might be the commander of a fleet's flagship or a bloodthirsty pirate, but whatever the role, her reputation is widespread and her crew fanatically loyal.

BECOMING A LEGENDARY CAPTAIN

The ability to command and to inspire is a rare gift, and not necessarily one that comes with high social standing.

Some of the most famous captains rose from humble origins, as sailors who worked their way up through the ranks.

Others purchased a commission or bought a vessel of their own outright in order to gain a command.

However one comes by it, the profession of captain requires experience, skill, and an expert knowledge of the capability of both vessel and crew.

A typical legendary captain begins her career as a fighter or rogue with experience at sea, although a charismatic character such as a bard or paladin might also do well.

These characters generally operate in a navy or as masters of their own adventuring ships.

Spellcasters are less common, but a sorcerer captain with the very winds at her command makes for an awe-inspiring leader.

Barbarian crews are certainly well known—the sea raiders in longships are the most obvious example—but a legendary captain rarely springs from an uncivilized past.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +4 Skills: Profession (sailor) 8 ranks,

Knowledge (geography) 5 ranks Feats: Leadership.

Special: Must be the captain or master of a ship.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are all class features of the legendary captain prestige class.

Great Captain: You gain Great Captain as a bonus feat.

If you already have Great Captain, you instead gain Skill Focus with one of the legendary captain class skills given above.

Leadership: At 2nd level, you gain a +2 bonus to your effective character level for purposes of the Leadership feat to attract followers.

This bonus increases to +4 at 4th level, +6 at 6th level, +8 at 8th level, and +10 at 10th level.

Weather Gauge (Ex): On reaching 2nd level, your superior ability in handling a ship allows you to maneuver so as to have the more advantageous wind.

You gain a +4 competence bonus on Profession (sailor) checks to gain the advantage (see Narrative Naval Combat, beginning on page 25).

As long as you have the advantage, your crew gains a +2 bonus on all Profession (sailor) checks and on attack rolls made with shipboard siege engines, and your ship gains a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class against attacks by enemy ships.

Luck of the Wind (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you are able to cheat the fates on occasion.

Once per day you can reroll a failed attack roll, saving throw, skill check, or ability check.

You must reroll before the DM declares whether the roll results in success or failure, and you must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

On reaching 7th level, you can reroll twice per day.

Uncanny Navigation (Su): On reaching 3rd level, you develop an innate sense for detecting and avoiding maritime hazards.

You add your legendary captain level as a bonus on Spot checks to notice aquatic hazards and on Profession (sailor) checks to navigate safely through them.

Wind at Your Back (Ex): On reaching 4th level, you can use your mastery of navigation to coax additional speed from your ship by directing the most efficient placement of sails or encouraging rowers to exert themselves.

A ship you captain moves 20% faster (minimum of +5 feet).

Accelerated Firing (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, you can urge your weapons crews to exceed ordinary performance.

A ballista or catapult can be reloaded or reaimed in a round by one less crew member than normal.

If the weapon is fully crewed, it can be reloaded or reaimed as a standard action instead of a full-round action.

In addition, your crews gain a +2 morale bonus on Profession (siege engineer) checks.

Steady Stance (Ex): Starting at 5th level, your sea legs keep you stable when others have difficulty standing.

You are not considered flat-footed while balancing or climbing, and you add your class level to Balance or Climb checks to remain balancing or climbing when taking damage.

Rake (Ex): At 6th level, you increase your ability to handle a ship and maintain an advantage in naval combat.

As long as you have the advantage, attacks against enemy vessels with your shipboard siege engines deal an additional die of damage on a successful attack.

This die is of the same kind as the weapon normally deals: For example, a light catapult (normal damage 4d6) deals an extra 1d6 points of damage, while a ballista (normal damage 3d8) deals an extra 1d8 points.

Legendary Helm (Ex): Starting at 7th level, you grant an additional +2 dodge bonus to the Armor Class of any vessel you steer or command.

In addition, you can attempt saving throws using your save bonuses against spells or effects targeting your vessel.

For example, if a dragon uses its breath weapon against a ship you are steering or commanding, you can make a Reflex save on behalf of the ship to halve the damage.

(Normally, vessels are considered unattended objects and fail all saving throws).

Misdirect (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, you might trick an enemy captain into underestimating the capabilities of your ship and crew.

This includes disguising your vessel, lurking at the edge of fog, holding off on firing your weapons, and other such stratagems.

The enemy captain must have line of sight to your vessel, and you must make a Bluff or Profession (sailor) check, whichever modifier is higher, with a bonus on the roll equal to one-half your legendary captain level.

This is opposed by the Sense Motive check of the enemy captain.

If your check succeeds, the enemy captain and crew take a –2 penalty on attacks, saves, and skill checks for the length of the engagement, and the enemy vessel takes a -2 penalty to Armor Class.

Splice the Main Brace (Su): On reaching 9th level, you can hearten your crew with your personal strength.

("Splice the main brace" is nautical jargon for hoisting a mug of grog, originally at the end of a hard day's work). Once per day you can produce a mass cure light wounds effect to heal the injuries of all on board.

Your caster level is equal to your prestige class level.

It requires 10 minutes for the healing effect to take place, so it is not usable in the midst of combat.

Fleet Admiral (Ex): At 10th level, your phenomenal leadership skills allow you to assist the crews of allies' ships as well as your own.

You can use the aid another action to confer a +2 morale bonus on checks made by the crews of a number of additional ships equal to your Charisma bonus (minimum one extra ship) within signaling distance (1 mile in clear conditions).

You grant a +4 morale bonus on allied captains' Profession (sailor) checks to gain the advantage in combat, and they gain the same benefits you confer.

In addition, when aiding the actions of your own crew, you confer a +4 bonus instead of +2 on a successful check.

PLAYING A LEGENDARY CAPTAIN

The open sea is your home, and you spend as much time as you can aboard ship.

Just being under sail is enough, but it's even better when you can combine your love with a purpose.

You can't be a captain without a crew.

To enter this class requires that you command some sort of vessel, and the first order of business is to find the right people to help you operate it.

You might be able to handle a small sloop with only a handful of crew, but a proper warship needs dozens of competent sailors and other professionals.

As leader of an adventuring group, you'll probably want to have other members of your party act as officers.

Those who lack suitable leadership or sailing skills might instead serve as specialists, such as windsingers, prelates, or surgeons.

You'll have to recruit followers and ensure they are fairly paid (a private ship has a charter setting out such details); highly skilled positions on board might be best filled by cohorts.

If you are a treasure hunter or an explorer of uncharted expanses, you are best served by a small and lightly armed vessel that can travel swiftly.

Quite probably the only crew on such a ship is your adventuring party.

If you're a pirate captain, you might want a more heavily armed ship, but you still need one that is relatively quick—if you can't get away from an unfavorable encounter, you won't live long enough to become a scourge of the seas. The crew of such a ship is heavy on hand-to-hand fighting skills, since a pirate's goal is to seize ships and cargo, not sink them.

COMBAT

Your background is in leadership rather than hand-to-hand combat, and your expertise is in getting the most out of those under your command.

Most legendary captains are good fighters, with experience as marines or pirates before gaining a command of their own.

At lower levels, use your ability to aid your crew to best effect.

Your vessel is more nimble than those of your opponents, thanks to your enhanced navigation skills, and can hold up better in ranged combat while you close to attack.

Once your crew has boarded the enemy, you can use the aid another action to improve all their attacks or Armor Class as necessary.

Once you reach higher levels in this class, you have exceptional ability to support your ship and crew in naval combat.

Take advantage of ranged combat as much as you can, whether using magic or onboard siege engines—your ship has an excellent chance of avoiding damage from magical attacks, and your crew can manage shipboard weaponry more efficiently.

Once you close to grappling range, the enemy captain is likely to be at a disadvantage due to your clever misdirection.

This in combination with the bonuses you grant to your crew should be enough to tip the balance in your favor. Should things go badly in combat, your class abilities make it easier for your crew to escape and your ship to disengage. Once safely away, you can even help the injured recover more quickly.

ADVANCEMENT

It is a matter of experience to gain the basic skills and leadership qualities needed to become a legendary captain. As a seafaring adventurer, whenever you attain a level you can improve your ability to handle a ship.

You probably began your career as a sailor or marine on board another's ship, literally learning the ropes and acquiring knowledge in dealing with the hazards of life and combat at sea.

As your experience grew, you moved into junior officer positions or became a specialist such as a pilot.

Eventually you were able to amass enough wealth (mostly likely pooled with that of fellow adventurers) to purchase a commission in a country's navy or to buy a small ship of your own.

Once you have started on the path of the legendary captain, your own reputation and experience moves you further along.

You have already acquired the Leadership feat and attracted a crew.

From then on, your exploits at sea will enhance your Leadership score as stories spread from port to port, with positive modifiers in addition to the bonuses granted by class levels.

Being known as a legendary captain improves the quality of the recruits as well: Experienced tars seek you out, and you can afford to choose the best.

Their performance on board is enhanced by your skills, further reinforcing your crew's quality.

As long as you treat them fairly and act with honor—whether as notorious pirate or decorated fleet captain—they will follow you loyally.

Your confidence in yourself increases along with that of the crew, propelling you to ever greater heights of naval leadership.

Taking ranks in Diplomacy is strongly recommended, especially when you become more involved in political matters.

Eventually you become so skilled that the followers you attract are of high enough level to possess ships of their own.

Alternatively, as your star rises within the service, you are eventually called to command a fleet of ships, although the disadvantage of such a high command rank is being less free to adventure.

The most free-spirited legendary captains prefer to command only a small group of ships as privateers, explorers, or pirates.

RESOURCES

If you are a commander within a navy, you have the considerable resources of that nation's government at your disposal.

Lower-ranking commanders can expect their ships to be crewed and outfitted properly at no expense to themselves, and it might be possible to request specialist crew members in the navy's employ be assigned to your ship.

As you advance in your career, you will cultivate contacts within the naval hierarchy and the government on whom you can draw for unusual requests or special favors—provided they are not too frequent or excessive.

Once you attain the rank of admiral, you have the ear of the highest government officials and are in a position to grant favors and supplies in turn to subordinate captains.

As an independent captain, your access to resources is not guaranteed, but you have the advantage of a reputation that precedes you.

When your ship sails into port, you are likely to be greeted by swarms of well-wishers and hopeful sailors, and perhaps by town officials hoping to gain a political advantage through association with you.

With your diplomatic skills, you can wrangle concessions such as reduced docking fees or free lodging, perhaps in exchange for taking on a mission for the town.

If your bent is more piratical, your naval expertise brings you more victories at sea, along with more plunder.

Cold, hard cash can get almost anything.

LEGENDARY CAPTAINS IN THE WORLD

A party with a legendary captain at its helm is assured of thrilling adventures.

Having such an acclaimed leader makes your ship the easy choice for those who need something done, whether townfolk seeking relief from pirate raids or treasure hunters looking for safe passage.

You can demand premium prices and expect to get a piece of the adventuring action.

ORGANIZATION

As a naval captain, you report to the senior commanders of the fleet.

They in turn are responsible to the leaders of the government, who direct their missions and designate enemies.

Progression in the prestige class generally corresponds to advancement in rank, so you eventually become the one giving the strategic orders.

Along with this increased authority comes the inevitable politicking; as you reach new levels, you are likely to make influential new contacts—and dangerous new enemies.

As a private operator, your life is a freer one.

You own the ship, and you get to go adventuring ashore or board enemy vessels right alongside your crew (a privilege not usually accorded to senior naval officers).

NPC REACTIONS

Your reputation precedes you wherever you go, and each new port of call brings new contacts—and possibly new rivalries.

In general, the reaction of townfolk is friendly as long as your reputation is an honorable one.

Even if you are a famous pirate, you might be welcome as long as those you prey on are not connected with the town or are seen as deserving of attack.

On the other hand, if your predations have directly affected a port, the inhabitants are likely to be unfriendly.

You are also likely to encounter other legendary captains. These might be rivals on a wide-open pirate coast, who could see you as a worthy challenge to increase their personal glory or a friendly competitor with whom to swap boasts.

If you are an eminent fleet commander, you might be in pursuit of a legendary pirate captain.

Such a relationship can drive an episodic storyline, with repeated encounters that increase the fame of both characters.

Legendary captains and scarlet corsairs (see page 65) often become lifelong nemeses.

Within a navy, no more than one or two captains have legendary status.

They are natural rivals for promotion and attention from the country's leadership, and such a rivalry can be bitter. Once you've reached the position of fleet admiral, you will know best which commanders have the potential to become truly legendary.

You might test such captains with challenging missions to help them along their career path, or jealously protect your own position by taking such missions for your own ship. How you approach command dictates how others respond.

LEGENDARY CAPTAIN LORE

Characters with Knowledge (nobility and royalty) or Gather Information can research legendary captains to learn more about them.

DC 15: There are plenty of decent captains, and a few good ones, but some captains' names come up again and again. Stories involving them range from the exaggerated to the unbelievable.

DC 20: A legendary captain is hard to find, but she has an uncanny ability to drive her crew to new heights.

She can save a ship or win a battle by sheer will.

There's nothing like sailing under a lucky captain.

DC 30: The privateer captain known only as the Scarlet Feather has raided these shores for twenty years.

He can steer his ship directly into the wind, take on three enemy dromonds and win, and he hunts sea serpents for sport.

No one has been able to catch him, or defeat him.

LEGENDARY CAPTAINS IN THE GAME

An NPC legendary captain is a great campaign driver.

The characters can hire on to her crew and join a life of high adventure, pursuing legendary quests in the manner of Sinbad.

Of course, there is a lot of competition to join such a crew, and the PCs might have to show that they deserve the honor.

As a PC legendary captain, you're the one driving the adventures.

Where do you want to go today?

Wherever your heart takes you, your loyal crew will follow.

As your fortune and reputation grow, you can command ever larger ships and take on ever greater challenges.

LEVIATHAN HUNTER

"Here be monsters?

Ex-cel-lent."

—Lillikakooet, leviathan hunter

The leviathan hunter revels in the chase more than most hunters.

For him, there is no thrill in pursuing mere beasts, or even monsters of the usual sort.

He is an adventurer for whom only the most dangerous prey presents sufficient challenge.

He is dedicated to hunting down creatures of the perilous depths.

Most folk regard leviathan hunters as reckless or even mad, not understanding that the primal need that drives them is as deep as the ocean itself.

BECOMING A LEVIATHAN HUNTER

Nearly every leviathan hunter starts out as a ranger, although such a character might have levels of barbarian as well for general toughness and survivability.

Many are human, since that race is most prone to thrill-seeking—especially among warrior cultures.

Darfellans (see page 36) make outstanding leviathan hunters, given their cultural antipathy to sea monsters, the enemies of the great whales so beloved by their race.

Cultures that emphasize bravery or daring feats, such as orcs, also are a breeding ground for such extreme hunters.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Iron Will, Track.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks.

Special: Favored enemy (aberrations, animals, dragons, or magical beasts).

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the leviathan hunter prestige class.

Hunter's Insight (Ex): You possess significant bits of knowledge regarding the types of creatures you battle. You gain an insight bonus equal to your class level + 5 on all Knowledge checks made to identify an aberration, animal, dragon, or magical beast or its special powers or vulnerabilities.

You gain the same bonus on Survival checks made to track such creatures.

Trophy (Su): You have the ability to wear your enemy and protect yourself from its power.

Whenever you slay a Huge or larger aberration, animal, dragon, or magical beast, you can take a body part as a trophy, such as a horn, tooth, or claw.

You must have dealt damage to the creature in the encounter that killed it (you can't just watch the wizard blast it and then claim the trophy), and you must harvest the trophy within 1 minute of the creature's death.

You must then treat the trophy with a mixture of precious oils and magical preservatives costing at least 500 gp.

This process takes 24 hours.

When worn, a trophy grants you a +2 competence bonus to AC and on saves against all creatures of that type.

For instance, wearing the claw of a red dragon grants you the bonus against the attacks of red dragons (but not other kinds of dragons).

At 5th level, the bonus to AC and saving throws improves to +4.

A trophy works only for the leviathan hunter who created it.

Although you can create many trophies, you can benefit from the effects of no more than one trophy per class level. Simultaneously wearing more trophies than this negates the effects of all trophies.

Fell the Leviathan (Ex): You learn to place your attacks where they will have the most harmful effect against big creatures.

Beginning at 2nd level, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage with any melee attack made against an aberration, animal, dragon, or magical beast of Huge or greater size.

This extra damage increases to 2d6 points at 4th level.

Clever Wrestling: You face many creatures capable of crushing you in their tentacles, claws, or teeth.

To better resist such attacks, you gain Clever Wrestling (see page 92) as a bonus feat at 3rd level, even if you would not otherwise qualify for the feat.

Immunity to Fear (Ex): You eventually learn to steel your will against the terror that defeats those of less determination.

When you reach 5th level, you become immune to fear.

PLAYING A LEVIATHAN HUNTER

You live for the hunt.

You'd do it on your own if you could, but sometimes the prey is too much even for such a mighty hunter as yourself. You don't hunt down powerful monsters because you hate them, but rather because you need to challenge yourself against their awesome power.

If it happens that you also rid a community of a horrible threat, so much the better.

COMBAT

The hunt for a mighty creature is a ready-made adventure. At lower levels, you'll probably be seeking out lesser prey such as aboleths, bulettes, dinosaurs, or juvenile dragons.

It can only help to have a party to back you up with their specialties, although you typically demand the killing blow for yourself.

At higher levels, you are ready to take on true leviathans—behirs, dire sharks, dragon turtles, purple worms, krakens, and eventually even the mightiest dragons.

The pursuit of such prey is a challenge to strain even your amazing abilities, but the rewards are equally mighty.

You're already specialized in tracking down and fighting dangerous creatures.

Many leviathan hunters come from the ranger class, where they gained expertise in a combat style as well as in the ways of their preferred prey.

As a leviathan hunter, these abilities become even stronger.

When fighting on your own, you can take advantage of your enhanced tracking and evasion to come upon your prey unawares, then deal massive amounts of damage quickly.

You can escape from combat readily as well, either to flee if things are going badly or to retreat to a safe distance and finish the job with ranged attacks.

As you claim more and more trophies, your ability to withstand the deadly attacks of your enemies grows more potent.

When working in concert with others, you're the one who can lead the party to the target and help them set up deadly ambushes.

Once battle is joined, you'll be in the thick of things, clambering onto your foe, striking where it's most vulnerable, and otherwise distracting it to set up attacks by your companions.

You are superbly adapted to getting on a monster's flank and exposing it to sneak attacks.

ADVANCEMENT

There is no formal organization of leviathan hunters, since there are few such elite warriors left in the world.

Nevertheless, news of one hunter's success spreads quickly among the others, and this grapevine also brings news of legendary creatures that no one has been able to take down. It's typical to hear a leviathan hunter speak of such a challenge in admiring terms: "Yep, Ol' Blackhorn got away again.

He's a clever one".

Even if it's you the monster in question escaped from, there is no shame in telling tales of its prowess.

The glory will be that much greater when someone finally finishes off the beast.

Leviathan hunters cross paths in outfitters' shops or caravansaries on the edge of the wilderness, where they are eager to swap tales of high adventure over a meal and drinks.

This camaraderie goes with a fiercely competitive spirit, but one of friendly rivalry rather than a cutthroat win-at-all-costs mentality.

Advancement in the class generally goes hand in hand with making ever more impressive kills, increasing your bragging rights as well as your combat prowess.

The two are of nearly equal importance.

A leviathan hunter tends to focus on closely related kinds of creatures.

One might be an expert in sea monsters who hunts down krakens and other horrors of the deep, while another might prefer to hunt dangerous prey in a particular extreme environment such as the frostfell.

Some hunt a single kind of prey (such as dragons) across all terrains, while others try to pursue as many different kinds of creatures as possible.

Whatever your taste, you set a goal for yourself, then try to exceed it.

If you've finally run Ol' Blackhorn to ground, your next target is going to be something even more difficult and impressive.

RESOURCES

The most important resource for a leviathan hunter is the hunters' grapevine.

Other leviathan hunters are continually passing along tales of mighty creatures (usually of a kind or in places that they do not deal with).

In turn, you'll probably have tales to tell of your own.

Your prestige within this fellowship rises as you defeat such monsters, which ensures that you'll hear of new challenges, often before lesser hunters do.

Some leviathan hunters turn a profit from their life's pursuit, coming to the aid of people being threatened by terrible beasts and claiming substantial rewards.

If you're this kind of hunter, jobs will come your way steadily—there's always a kingdom looking to free itself of a dragon or a port that needs to rid its harbor of some horror.

The downside of such a reputation is that you can be harassed by petitioners, and if you are choosy about your assignments you might incur the ill will of those you decline to help.

LEVIATHAN HUNTERS IN THE WORLD

Whether there's a leviathan hunter among the PCs or a famed figure whose name is on everyone's lips, it's easy to build an adventure around one.

ORGANIZATION

The fellowship of leviathan hunters is informal, but they all have certain needs in common.

When a hunter is setting out after his chosen prey, he always needs supplies.

Often he needs assistants as well.

A PC leviathan hunter has the party but might still need bearers, guards, translators, and so on.

An NPC hunter might advertise for such services.

Enterprising merchants set up outfitting centers in areas near the wilderness, as well as in port cities (anything might be out there, in or across the ocean).

Some of the most reputable outfitters are retired leviathan hunters themselves.

A typical leviathan hunter spends most of his days researching the target of the next expedition.

He needs to learn the lay of the land or water around the creature's lair, familiarize himself with its routines and favorite prey, and assemble provisions and survival gear appropriate to the area.

This means visits to libraries as well as consulting with travelers from the target area—especially other leviathan hunters.

The kill itself, though exhilarating, is all too brief.

And thus the hunter turns to a new target.

The famed leviathan hunter Marbek is the subject of many a tall tale.

He is always said to be on the trail of legendary creatures. Plenty of people claim to have seen him, but nobody can precisely describe him.

Most hunters dismiss these stories as mere folktale but secretly envy the reputation of this mythical man. A few hunters have made Marbek himself the object of their pursuit.

Obviously, this is not the same as hunting a dangerous beast—killing Marbek is not the goal. But the hunter who can bring proof of this legend's existence—or, better yet, join him in a hunt—is assured of fame nearly as great as Marbek's.

NPC REACTIONS

The common people adore leviathan hunters, and often have a friendly or even helpful attitude toward them. They are the celebrities of their world. Stories of a leviathan hunter's deeds are sung by bards, magnifying his achievements in the retelling. A leviathan hunter can expect to be mobbed by children wanting to hear stories of his exploits and by adult hangers-on who want a souvenir of the encounter. People will buy him drinks and offer him all manner of things.

But of course, they want something in return, such as endorsement of a business or a promise to support an aspiring political figure. Those who fancy themselves leviathan-hunter material will try to sign on to an upcoming expedition. And if the hunter is not seen as sufficiently appreciative, the adoration might sour into backbiting and complaints. Then too there are those who see leviathan hunters as a grotesque outrage against the natural order. Druids in particular have no love for those who hunt down beasts simply because they can, whether or not the creatures pose a threat.

The elders of a druidic order might place an order of death on one so presumptuous as to enter their domain on such a mission.

The relatives of a slain monster might also declare a blood oath to destroy their kin's killer, perhaps even sending agents after him far from their home.

LEVIATHAN HUNTER LORE

Characters with the Gather Information or Knowledge (local) skill can research leviathan hunters to learn more about them.

DC 10: Leviathan hunters are experts at tracking down and killing really dangerous creatures.

There aren't many of them, but they usually know each other.

DC 15: Nobody knows more about what the most terrible monsters can do—as well as how best to kill them—than a leviathan hunter.

DC 20: The greatest leviathan hunters wear trophies from the many beasts they've slain over the years.

These trophies protect them from their prey. Marbek, it's said, has dozens of such trophies. Just mentioning the name "Marbek" will bring out tales of the legendary hunter's exploits as well as stories of other hunters who have passed through the area.

Any local minstrel should have a repertoire of such tales.

LEVIATHAN HUNTERS IN THE GAME

The best way to handle a new leviathan hunter is to give him something to shoot for.

If you know a player is planning to develop a character to follow this path, you can provide an appropriate kind of creature to focus on.

It's best to talk with the player about his or her plans ahead of time.

That way, even before the character enters the prestige class, you can introduce a monstrous threat into the campaign to guide the player's first choices.

Once the character has started down this path, he needs ever greater challenges.

His whole purpose is to fight big monsters, so as DM you need to keep providing them.

Use stories of monsters to open up new locales in your campaign world—the hunter will follow them up.

Make sure the opponents are worthy, though.

It's the hunt, not the kill, that fulfills the leviathan hunter's life.

SCARLET CORSAIR

"The seas run red this night, and terror has a face.

You are looking upon that face.

Pretty, isn't it?"

—Adia Ironheart of the Red Wake, a scarlet corsair
Many pirates sail the seas, but few reach the infamy of the scarlet corsair, so called from the trail of blood left in her wake.

Where most other pirates are content to use intimidation to cow their opponents into submission, allowing them to plunder as they please, the scarlet corsair revels in combat and slaughter.

This isn't to say that all scarlet corsairs are violent killers, though most certainly are—a few scarlet corsairs refuse to take on a target unless that target is capable of putting up a good fight.

Whether patriotic privateer or self-serving buccaneer, the scarlet corsair relies on the reputation of her quick blade and terrible fighting skills to drive her prey before her.

BECOMING A SCARLET CORSAIR

A life of piracy is the first and foremost necessity in becoming a scarlet corsair.

Because this isn't an organization but rather a folk status gained through the pirate's victims retelling the stories of her attacks upon their vessels, word of mouth is essential. Most pirates seek some level of infamy: Those who acquire it for a combination of ferocious fighting and the ability to instill fear in all who face them are well on their way to becoming scarlet corsairs.

Fighters and rogues make good scarlet corsairs, since the combination of those classes provides both the flair and fighting prowess necessary to boost a simple pirate to the status of the scarlet corsair.

Rangers too have adopted this prestige class, using intimidation and skilled swordsmanship to defeat their enemies.

And a few assassins have taken to the seas in pursuit of their vocation of killing people for profit and have become scarlet corsairs.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Intimidate 8 ranks, Profession (sailor) 4 ranks.

Special: Sneak attack +1d6.

Special: Must have established a reputation as a fearsome pirate.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the scarlet corsair prestige class.

Improved Feint: Upon joining this prestige class you gain Improved Feint as a bonus feat, even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for that feat.

You can feint in combat as a move action to render your foes flat-footed and thus make sneak attacks against them.

Sneak Attack: At 2nd level, you gain the ability to deal an extra 1d6 points of damage when you catch your foe off guard.

This is exactly like the rogue ability of the same name (see Player's Handbook page 50).

The extra damage dealt increases to 2d6 at 6th level and to 3d6 at 10th level.

If you get a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack.

Corsair's Feint (Ex): As a scarlet corsair, you are a master of dirty fighting and trickery.

You can make a feint as a free action rather than as a move action (see the Improved Feint feat, page 95 of the Player's Handbook).

But once you've surprised your enemies with such a feint, it takes time before you're able to fool them again.

At 3rd level, you must wait 2d4 rounds before using corsair's feint again.

Waiting requires no specific actions on your part; you can fight normally during this time.

Beginning at 7th level your reflexes improve and the time between corsair's feints drops to only 1d4 rounds.

Sailor's Step (Ex): At 4th level, you have learned to use the chaos of a ship at sea to your benefit, taking advantage of the swaying ship and swinging rigging to remain out of reach of your opponents.

While aboard a ship and wearing nothing more than light armor you gain a +2 dodge bonus to your Armor Class.

If you are caught flat-footed or otherwise denied your Dexterity bonus, you also lose this bonus.

At 8th level, the dodge bonus from the sailor's step class feature increases to +4.

Scourge of the Seas (Ex): Starting at 5th level, you can instill fear into your enemies.

When you use Intimidate to demoralize foes, the attempt affects all enemies within 30 feet who can see and hear you, and the effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1 round).

This is a mind-affecting ability, and multiple uses of this ability don't stack.

Frightening Lunge (Ex): Your ability to run your enemies through is unnerving to those who cross swords with you. Beginning at 9th level, on a successful sneak attack, you can sacrifice 2d6 points of damage to render your foe shaken. A shaken character takes a -2 penalty to all attack rolls, saves, skill checks, and ability checks.

PLAYING A SCARLET CORSAIR

You understand a truism of conflict: fear kills.

You use fear like a weapon, cultivating terrible rumors about yourself.

To you, it's just a game.

All that matters is the reputation, and you are out to build a big, fierce one.

The authorities might put a bounty on your head (the bigger the better!), but all those wanted posters promising huge rewards for your head only reinforce the idea that you're someone to be feared.

Besides, as long as they keep posting rewards, it's just another admission that they can't actually catch you.

Adventuring scarlet corsairs are likely to be scoundrels who enjoy a good fight and have little regard for the law (save their own nation's, in the case of privateers).

NPC scarlet corsairs might be terrible maritime butchers, putting helpless ships to the sword and taking what they wish, or rakes with a heart of gold who relish a good challenge—and a mug o' rum.

COMBAT

Fight with your head as much as your sword.

Intimidate your foe and demoralize them.

Bluff and strike at their unprotected areas.

Outwitting your opponents is just as important as defeating them.

A clumsy victory does your reputation no good, nor does a clever victory that no one sees.

Try to arrange for witnesses to your exploits.

Many scarlet corsairs have what some perceive as an odd code of honor against killing the helpless (or at least all of them), but that springs from simple pragmatism: someone needs to remain alive to tell the story of how truly fearful the scarlet corsair was.

Don't hesitate to use your allies in such endeavors.

A bard who can help pass on stories of your predations is just as useful as the fighter who helps you in the actual battles.

In combat, flank your opponents in order to benefit from your sneak attack bonuses.

At the height of your reputation, take full advantage of the fear your name engenders.

Intimidate opponents to limit their ability to fight you.

ADVANCEMENT

There is only one way to become a scarlet corsair—sowing terror and making a reputation for yourself.

Whether you are a pirate folk hero notorious for hitting fat merchant ships laden with cargo (only to distribute it later to feed poor dock folk) or a bloodthirsty scalawag without concern for anything but yourself and your treasury, making your name known is the only way to build your legend as a scarlet corsair.

The life of a scarlet corsair is an adventurous one, to be sure, filled with heists and daring acts of piracy.

You don't choose helpless or small prey—only the richest and best-armed ships attract your attention.

Once you have achieved levels in this class, keep your Bluff and Intimidate skills maxed out for they not only enhance your reputation but also provide two qualities that help keep you alive—trickery and the ability to instill fear in those around you.

RESOURCES

Scarlet corsairs are independent folk and not likely to assist others of their ilk.

They usually consider one another rivals, though this can manifest in useful ways.

For instance, a scarlet corsair who hears about a plan to trap a rival might find a way to warn that rival—after all, how can she best her rival if someone else does it first?

Likewise, one scarlet corsair might alert another of a particularly choice target, so that they can compete to see who manages to pirate the ship first.

SCARLET CORSAIRS IN THE WORLD

The scarlet corsair fills the role of the notorious pirate, a buccaneer of such terrible reputation that the mention of her name is enough to cause a reaction.

When the DM needs a feared villain that only the PCs are brave enough to go after, a scarlet corsair is perfect for the role.

Similarly, when the campaign calls for a good-hearted rake who glories in the stories people tell about him while pursuing a vendetta against some particular nation or group, the scarlet corsair will equally well fit the bill.

NPC REACTIONS

The reactions of most NPCs to the scarlet corsair are universally poor.

Any law-abiding seafarer who's heard of the corsair begins with an attitude of hostile, which inspires zeal in the brave and fear in most others.

Other pirate captains are simply unfriendly or indifferent, since the corsair is a capable rival, but potential crewmembers are usually friendly toward the corsair. A rare few folk are likely to idolize the scarlet corsair because of her reputation.

These are often folk who either don't understand the way the world works and have romanticized the pirate and her activities or are of a proper temperament to become followers and cohorts.

SCARLET CORSAIR LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), or Gather Information can research scarlet corsairs to learn more about them.

DC 10: Some pirates, by dint of their incredible notoriety, are capable of striking fear into entire crews just by showing their flags or other insignias.

DC 15: These buccaneers, called scarlet corsairs in sailor's slang, don't hesitate to use fear and dirty tricks—not just to take what they want but to cement their reputations as cutthroats and monsters.

DC 20: If you see the skull-and-manacles of Adia Ironheart, or the black hawk of the Raptor of the Southern Coast, you unfurl your sail, put your best and strongest men at the oars, and make for the horizon.

DC 30: Most scarlet corsairs have a kind of brotherly rivalry going on.

They consider only other scarlet corsairs to be their true rivals and equals—everyone else is just prey waiting to happen.

SCARLET CORSAIRS IN THE GAME

Any particularly infamous pirate in the campaign could qualify as a scarlet corsair.

This is not the nameless buccaneer whose exploits confuse and torment authorities as they try to figure out who is responsible—there is never any doubt when a scarlet corsair hits a target.

This isn't to say that all scarlet corsairs are known immediately.

Many of them use pseudonyms as part of their identities, as well as outrageous, readily apparent dress or other affectations, if for no other reason than it makes it easier to have a quiet drink in a pub between exploits.

SEA WITCH

"I am one with the sea.

I awaken the very ocean.

Cross me, and you cross the vengeful deeps as well."

—Sibi alin Zakor, sea witch

Astride the crashing waves comes the sea witch: a terrible chaotic mage who wields the power of water and calls on the living horrors of the deep.

Mariners blame sea witches for every mysterious shipwreck or monstrous raid, even when such events occur naturally—and since sea witches thrive on destruction and fear, they do not protest.

BECOMING A SEA WITCH

Wizards and sorcerers with a love of violent weather-magic are typical sea witches.

However, it's also possible for monstrous beings that already possess such innate abilities to enter the class: A naga, for example, could become a very powerful sea witch. A kraken with levels in an arcane spellcasting class could augment its already considerable abilities with the powers granted by this prestige class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Speak Language: Aquan.

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells, which must include control water, control weather, or *favorable wind, as well as summon monster III (or any higher-level summon monster spell).

* New spell described on page 116.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the sea witch prestige class.

Curse of the Sea Witch (Sp): The ocean is a vengeful, mercurial entity, and you're capable of awakening its dark side.

Your curse functions like bestow curse, except that the target can remove it automatically by spending an hour more than a mile from the nearest large body of water.

Starting at 3rd level, you can use this class feature twice per day.

Spellcasting: At each level indicated in Table 3–8, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a sea witch, you must decide which class gains each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Call Maelstrom (Su): On attaining 2nd level, you gain the innate ability to create a terrible whirlpool called a maelstrom (see page 13 for complete details on this phenomenon).

The whirlpool persists for 1 hour per class level and can appear anywhere within 1 mile of you.

This whirlpool has no special exit: Creatures ejected from the vortex must make their way back to the surface or away from the currents.

You can create a maelstrom once per day.

At 6th level, you can produce a major maelstrom once per day.

This has no special exit, but you can locate the vortex so that it empties into an underwater feature such as a cavern, if the feature is within the whirlpool's depth.

At 9th level, you can produce a greater maelstrom once per day.

This vortex opens directly into the Elemental Plane of Water.

You do not control the destination on that plane.

Briny Deep Summoning (Sp): Starting at 4th level, you can summon a dire shark, echinoloth*, or elder tojanida to attack your enemies and follow your commands for 1 round per arcane caster level.

This spell-like ability otherwise functions like the highest-level summon monster spell you can cast.

Starting at 8th level, you can employ this class feature twice per day.

You can summon a caller from the deeps*, a scyllan*, or 1d4+1 dire sharks, echinoloths*, or elder tojanidas.

* New creature described in Chapter 7.

Curse of the Albatross (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, you're able to extend your curse to cover an entire ship and its crew.

The ship takes a –10 foot speed penalty, and its crew takes a –4 penalty on Profession (sailor) and Swim checks.

The curse of the albatross otherwise functions like bestow curse and can be ended with break enchantment, limited wish, miracle, remove curse, or wish.

Moving away from a large body of water isn't sufficient to end this curse, but it might make it come into play less often.

Starting at 7th level, you can use this class feature twice per day.

Call Phantom Ship (Sp): At 10th level, you can create a eerily glowing longship with phantom rowers that crosses the seas at your command.

The phantom ship, which lasts 1 hour per arcane caster level, is functionally a longship, except that it has an oar speed of 30 feet.

The rowers are phantoms, AC 15 (+4 natural armor, +1 Dex), with 7 hp +1 hp per caster level.

They won't do anything other than silently row.

PLAYING A SEA WITCH

Your power over the violence of the seas makes you at once feared and respected.

If you are of an evil bent, you might be a leader of a pirate fleet, causing your prey to founder in a whirlpool and feeding sailors to the summoned scyllans.

Alternatively, you could curse merchant ships, then use weather magic to smash them against the coast so that your scavenger people can salvage the goods.

Your magic also lends itself well to protecting your base of operations, summoning mighty maelstroms and ferocious monsters to smash any who approach.

Some sea witches, if not exactly good, are not deliberately evil.

Your mastery of the sea's power can protect your people by sinking pirate ships and driving away hostile creatures.

A stretch of water known to be hazardous (because of your efforts) keeps away the curious and hides your people's settlements from the reavers who plague the coast.

Maelstrom currents can bring fish and driftwood closer to shore, and summoned monsters might help bring food for a hungry village.

Most sea witches, however, are loners who exult in the violence of the sea and take no heed of the devastation they leave in their wake.

COMBAT

As a spellcaster, hand-to-hand combat is not your strength. That's why you call on powerful sea creatures to assist you. You are already able to cast summon monster spells, since that is a prerequisite for the class, and as you attain higher levels you can call ever more powerful monsters to your aid.

Just getting close to you is difficult for enemies, because you can trap pursuers in deadly maelstroms.

The maelstrom and your spellcasting can keep you safe if you work alone, but your magic is also well suited to supporting allies.

A cursed ship caught in a whirlpool's currents can't effectively respond to attacks from your vessel, and enemies distracted by a sea monster's attacks can't concentrate on your forces.

As you attain higher levels, the monsters you summon have powerful magic and supernatural abilities of their own.

At your most powerful, you bring another feature to the battlefield: the ability to simply remove enemies.

Your greater maelstrom is likely to smash a ship to flinders, but even if it survives the vessel and its crew are then sucked into the Elemental Plane of Water.

Without plane-spanning magic (or more practically, a way to survive underwater), enemies so caught are irrevocably trapped.

ADVANCEMENT

Your love of the wild waters—or perhaps a sheer thirst for destruction—drives you onto the path of becoming a sea witch.

You've already begun to cast water-controlling magic and call upon the beasts of the deep.

This prestige class brings your talents to their natural culmination.

Sea witches are not an organized group—in fact, each is a territorial being claiming a wide swath of ocean, so they are few and far between.

Those who travel the seas consider this a blessing.

The awe engendered by your mere existence brings ever-increasing reward.

You might begin as a minor pirate lord who uses magic to help garner plunder but eventually become the ruler of a terrible island-kingdom demanding tribute from all who must pass through your waters.

If you are more benevolently disposed, you become increasingly powerful within a community that depends on you for protection.

RESOURCES

Even without an organization on which to draw, you have many resources at your disposal.

Your summoned creatures are intelligent and able to perform other duties besides attacking your enemies.

If you belong to a community, you are in a position of power.

You can call on warriors and requisition materiel, whether through intimidation or loyalty.

SEA WITCHES IN THE WORLD

Having a sea witch in an adventuring party offers plenty of opportunities.

Pirate hunters, for example, find a sea witch in their midst strikes terror into the hearts of buccaneers who cannot stand up to his monstrous and magical assaults.

By contrast, raiders can take advantage of a sea witch's skills to establish a well-protected base anywhere along a coast.

NPC REACTIONS

For the most part, people live in terror of sea witches.

Parents threaten children with stories of summoned monsters that carry away misbehavers, and grizzled sailors spin tales of immense whirlpools that swallow ships without a trace.

Having a terrible reputation is just fine for someone who really is a sea witch, but it can be a problem for a character wrongly believed to be one.

Commoners such as average sailors, fishers, and shore dwellers are automatically hostile to anyone they believe to be a sea witch.

They have no power to combat such a mighty threat, though, so they either flee or hide.

Unless the sea witch is known as a benevolent defender or a leader of people who depend on his magic, trying to establish contact or even to convince them of good intentions is almost impossible.

Nations that feel threatened by a sea witch are likely to hire high-level adventurers (especially spellcasters) to try to neutralize the danger.

Conversely, a sea witch sometimes finds his talents sought by fleets looking for an edge in battle.

A sea witch's most dangerous enemies are other sea witches, who might see him as a threat to their plans to consolidate their power.

When two warring nations pit sea witches against each other, the devastation can be staggering.

SEA WITCH LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) or the bardic knowledge ability can research sea witches to learn more about them.

DC 10: Ships sometimes disappear in a particular stretch of ocean.

It's not natural.

DC 15: There's a sea witch living in the area, who can use magic to destroy ships.

DC 20: Sea witches can summon powerful monsters and even cause the sea to swallow their enemies.

Stay far, far away from them by any means you can.

SEA WITCHES IN THE GAME

An NPC sea witch makes a dangerous adversary who can form the basis of an entire campaign.

At lower levels, the party might encounter minions who bring demands for tribute.

As they advance, the player characters could battle raiding fleets led by magic-wielding servants.

Finally, they challenge the master of the seas himself—perhaps with a sea witch of their own to counterbalance his fearsome power.

STORMCASTER

*"My breath is the wind.
My heartbeat, the thunder.*

My fury, the lightning.

To test my wrath is to test the very forces of the storm, to your peril."

—Tamask Laryn, master stormcaster

Many things in nature have drawn the attention of the seeker of the arcane—the elements, the nature of the unseen world, the weaving of illusions.

The stormcaster is one who seeks to tap into the power of a strange and terrifying phenomenon: the raging storm.

The stormcaster is a terrible figure to most who encounter him.

He seems to travel, unconcerned, through the foulest of weather.

A part of him revels in this destructive manifestation of the elements—the fouler the weather, the happier he seems.

Many who know of these weather wizards whisper that they do not follow storms—rather, the storms follow them.

BECOMING A STORMCASTER

The would-be stormcaster revels in the fury of the storm.

There is something awesome and terrible about a storm that draws him, and he is constantly seeking to understand it.

He masters those spells that mimic the power of the storm and even learns to infuse the elements of the storm—whether the clap of thunder or the strike of lightning—into his other spells, seeking to become one with that power.

Stormcasters are drawn from the ranks of arcane or divine casters.

The wizard who pursues this path needs to understand the primal energies inherent in the storm.

The sorcerer, on the other hand, often feels that he is laying claim to some terrible birthright—many such sorcerers have in their heritage the blood of blue dragons or of other creatures who are at home in a wild storm's fury.

Druids occasionally pursue the path of the stormcaster but at the risk of turning their backs on much of their natural powers.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skill: Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks.

Spellcasting: Must have the ability to cast gust of wind and either lightning bolt or call lightning.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the stormcaster.

Storm Spell Power (Ex): You are truly skilled in the use of spells that wield the power of the stormy seas.

Any spell you cast that has the air, electricity, sonic, or water descriptor is cast at +2 caster level.

Thunderclap (Su): You can channel stored spell energy into pure sonic energy.

You can lose any prepared spell or spell slot in order to generate a 30-foot-radius burst of sonic energy.

The burst deals 1d4 points of sonic damage per level of the spell slot to all targets in the area; any creature damaged by this effect is stunned for 1 round.

A Fortitude save halves this damage and negates the stun effect.

You are immune to your own thunderclap power.

This otherwise functions like the cleric's spontaneous casting class feature (see page 32 of the Player's Handbook).

Resistance to Electricity (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain some ability to resist the deadly power of lightning (resistance to electricity 10).

Spellcasting: Beginning at 2nd level, when you gain a new stormcaster level you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a stormcaster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Shield of Winds (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, you can call up high winds to cast aside the arrows of your foes.

As an immediate action (equivalent to a free action, except you can take it when it isn't your turn), you can surround your space with an effect equal to a wind wall (see page 302 of the Player's Handbook) for 1 round.

You can use this ability once per day at 3rd level, two times per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 9th level.

Eye of the Storm (Ex): Even in a storm, the winds whipping around you seem to leave you unaffected.

Beginning at 4th level, you ignore the penalties associated with ranged attack rolls and Listen checks due to high winds (see page 95 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

Actions that are impossible in high winds (such as using ranged attacks in winds above 50 mph) are still impossible.

At 8th level, you gain the ability to share this protection with any number of allies within 30 feet.

Granting (or removing) this benefit from any number of allies is a free action.

Thunderbolt (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, you use your knowledge of the storm to add the power of thunder to your lightning-based spells.

Any spell you cast that deals electricity damage also deals an extra 1 point of sonic damage per spell level and stuns any creature damaged by the spell for 1 round (Fortitude save negates; DC equals the save DC of the spell, even if the spell wouldn't normally allow a save).

Resistance to Sonic (Ex): At 7th level, you become somewhat resistant to the power of thunder.

You gain resistance to sonic 10.

Call Storm (Sp): You only feel fully at home within the confines of a storm.

At 8th level, you gain the ability to use a control weather effect once per week but can only create a windstorm, thunderstorm, or hurricane-force winds (see page 214 of the Player's Handbook and pages 94–95 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

You are treated as a druid when using this ability (or when casting control weather through your own spellcasting power) for the purpose of duration and area of the spell.

Lord of the Storm (Su): At 10th level, your mastery of the power of the storm is complete.

You gain resistance to electricity 30 and resistance to sonic 30.

You are immune to being blown away, knocked down, or checked by high winds (whether natural or magical).

You gain a +2 competence bonus on saves against spells with the air or water descriptor.

PLAYING A STORMCASTER

As a stormcaster, you are most at home when the winds howl, lightning cuts the sky, and thunder shakes the very ground beneath you.

There is something primal within you that is happiest in the midst of these great storms, and you have turned your formidable powers toward understanding and deepening that kinship.

You believe that the peace that most people seek is a falsehood, an illusion of security in a world that provides none.

Better by far to seek shelter in the midst of the raging torrent and become one with it.

It is said that once there was a cabal of arcanists who sought to understand and master the secrets of the storm.

Unfortunately, this organization was torn apart by the mercurial moods and rages of its members.

Throughout the years, others have tried to codify these teachings and organize a school or brotherhood to foster its mysteries, but all have been riven by rivalries and soon dispersed.

Let the others have their councils, school, brotherhoods, cabals—nothing matters to you but the fury of the storm. Stormcasters who take to adventuring usually do so as a means of funding their research and so they can be among those who aren't immediately afraid of them.

NPC stormcasters are always impressive figures.

Some are terrible creatures who wield the storms at their command as weapons, threatening and destroying those who defy them, while others are simply hermits with odd interests and abilities.

COMBAT

You possess some of the most formidable combat spells available, such as lightning bolt, call lightning, ice storm, or even a fireball transmuted into an explosion of lightning through the Energy Substitution feat (described in Complete Arcane).

Protect yourself through spells such as protection from energy so that you don't have to be concerned with your own lightning effects.

The ability to augment them through metamagic feats (especially Empower Spell and Widen Spell) is highly desirable, so don't hesitate to do so.

In combat, keep in mind that while you are likely to be out of the way casting spells into the fray, your allies are apt to be right in the middle of it.

Protect those who are most likely to find themselves in the middle of your lightning spells with a protection from energy spell.

Indeed, it might be wise to invest in a wand of protection from energy.

Do note, however, that any archers in your group are unlikely to thank you for making their job more difficult through the strong winds with which you usually surround yourself.

A stormcaster's most advantageous combat location is flying in the middle of a howling storm.

Your spells are harder to resist because of the call storm ability and you are nearly impossible to hit with ranged attacks due to the high winds.

You, on the other hand, benefit greatly from those winds—you might even find it useful to invest in some ranged attack spells for just these situations.

ADVANCEMENT

There is no single origin story for a stormcaster.

Some might have had the secrets of the class told to them by a creature of the storm, a friendly elemental, or the servant of a storm god.

Many sorcerers simply awaken to their own potential. Others felt the call to enter a storm and found an experienced stormcaster there, reveling in the heart of the terrible gale.

Stormcasters actively seek out storms, or even create them, in order to understand their powers and abilities.

As a result, they find it difficult to live in civilized areas, since most people aren't interested in having a storm-summoner as a neighbor.

As you increase in level, you will find it beneficial to prepare for your big battles.

Certainly, your arrival being presaged by a massive storm could tip off the foe, but you command the upper hand in such a situation.

Keep to the air when you can, and invest in the Extend Spell feat.

Do your spellcasting from on high, which will keep you out of the reach of most of your enemy's attacks.

RESOURCES

Very little support is to be had from other stormcasters, save for a certain kinship of the like-minded.

On the other hand, a wand of protection from energy will greatly benefit you and those you work closely with, allowing you to cut loose with your truly destructive magics while leaving your allies relatively unaffected. Stormcasters capable of creating magic items usually create a stormrider cloak (see page 134).

STORMCASTERS IN THE WORLD

The stormcaster is a figure of strange yet attractive power—no one can deny the incredible primal force of the storm, and it is a pleasing thought to imagine controlling that kind of power.

A stormcaster can fulfill a variety of roles, from the strange hermit on a stormy mountaintop to the mage who wanders into town at the onset of a hurricane and is gone with the winds.

Stormcasters make not just good villains but also enigmatic figures who possess secrets that the PCs might want but must brave the storm to find.

NPC REACTIONS

As attractive as most people find the thought of the power a stormcaster wields, being faced with the reality of one is something else entirely.

If a character is a known stormcaster, he will be treated like any other force of nature—safely ignored when he can be, or appeased until he goes away.

Clerics and worshipers of Procan share the savant's admiration of storms and are inclined to be friendly to known stormcasters.

STORMCASTER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcane) or Gather Information can research stormcasters to learn more about them.

DC 10: Some arcanists, called stormcasters, seek to tap into the power of the storm, becoming one with it.

DC 15: Stormcasters have the ability to fly in storms.

They are immune to lightning and thunder and resistant to those spells that create electricity and damaging sound.

DC 20: A stormcaster can command the storm to lift him up, cast aside arrows, and carry his voice for miles.

He has the kind of command over weather spells normally found only in druids and clerics.

DC 30: The winds of a storm aid a stormcaster, bringing sounds to his ears and carrying his projectiles and spells toward his foes.

STORMCASTERS IN THE GAME

A strange wind witch lives on an island over which a storm howls permanently.

A wandering madman shows up in town just as the thunderheads roll in and roams the streets, cackling with the thunder and then disappearing just before the sun shows itself again.

A wizard lives in a tower outfitted with strange copper implements made to attract and study the power of the storm.

All these are stormcasters.

WAVEKEEPER

"The very currents of the primal abysses answer my call, landwalker.

Despoil these waters at your own risk."

—Admarin of the Blue Waters, a wavekeeper

The druid is a creature of many habitats, and the average druid is able to make himself at home in the mountain heights as easily as in the depths of the forest.

But some druids, particularly the druids of marine races, feel the call of the primal deeps.

These druids seek to understand the life patterns that ebb and flow with its currents; they embrace the power of the oceans.

The ocean answers the wavekeeper's call, with awesome and devastating results.

BECOMING A WAVEKEEPER

In order to become a wavekeeper, a character must be drawn to the sea.

This is not the exclusive province of aquatic races—some land-dwellers show more love and concern for the sea than the average aquatic elf or merfolk—but this prestige class is far more common among the aquatic peoples.

Characters with animal companions benefit greatly from this class, so druids and rangers excel as wavekeepers.

In the Circle Beneath the Waves, druids make up the majority of this prestige class, although some rangers who have sworn to defend the circle take levels in this class as well.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Survival 8 ranks, Swim 5 ranks.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 1st-level divine spells.

Special: Animal companion with aquatic subtype or swim speed.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the wavekeeper.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Masterful Swimmer (Ex): You augment your swimming using the minutest of currents and swimming patterns, granting you a swim speed of 20 feet or increasing your existing swim speed by 10 feet if you have a natural swim speed.

Mysteries of the Sea: You master the powers of nature that make up the oceans.

Choose one of the following domains: Blackwater, Ocean, Storm, or Water.

The spells of that domain are added to your divine spellcaster class list, and you can prepare them normally. You also gain the granted power associated with that domain.

(The Blackwater, Ocean, and Storm domains can be found in Chapter 6).

Beast of the Sea (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, your animal companion continues to advance.

Subtract 1 from your class level and add the result to your effective druid level for determining the abilities of your animal companion.

Wave Master (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, when near a body of water you can focus a rush of water at a single creature within 30 feet.

This jet of water can bludgeon or push back a creature, at your option.

As a bludgeoning attack, the wave of water deals 1d6 points of nonlethal damage per class level.

A Reflex save reduces damage to half (DC 10 + one-half class level + Wisdom modifier).

If you instead choose to push back a creature, treat the wave of water as a bull rush with a bonus on the Strength check equal to 8 + your class level.

Mastery of Breath (Ex): At 3rd level, you adapt to your watery environment, becoming amphibious and able to breathe water or air interchangeably.

Water Breathing (Sp): At 3rd level, you gain the ability to use a water breathing effect once per day, with a caster level equal to your class level and two times the normal duration.

Current Mastery (Ex): At 5th level, you gain the ability to create currents that move the water in your vicinity.

The current flows in a direction you specify and affects water within 30 feet of your position.

Creatures, including yourself, are moved in the direction the water flows.

Your current moves at 10 feet per round.

At 10th level, the speed of your current increases to 20 feet per round.

You can use your current mastery to increase or impede the speed of a ship, though if you attempt to impede a ship with sails that ship's speed is only reduced by 5 feet (or by 10 feet for a 10th-level wavekeeper).

Wave Form (Su): At 7th level, you gain the ability to transform into a Small, Medium, or Large water elemental. This otherwise functions as the druid's wild shape ability (see page 37 of the Player's Handbook).

In addition to the normal effects of wild shape, you gain all the elemental's extraordinary, supernatural, and spell-like abilities.

You also gain the elemental's feats for as long as you maintain the wild shape but retain your own creature type.

Starting at 9th level, you can transform into a Huge water elemental.

Call of the Abyss (Sp): Once per day at 10th level, you can call upon the very powers of the ocean's currents to serve you.

An elder water elemental answers your call, a creature made up of the swirling black lightless waters of the deepest abyss, retaining this lightless quality even when called to the surface.

It attacks your opponents to the best of its ability.

PLAYING A WAVEKEEPER

The wavekeeper is usually a druid who has taken the ocean as a whole as his protectorate, declaring himself the defender of those vast realms that lie beneath the waves.

You consider the waves themselves to be a gate that separates the watery realms from the lands above—and you are the gatekeeper.

To that end, most wavekeepers work to keep those realms separated: the civilizations of the surface world must not pollute or influence the oceanic realms and the aquatic peoples must be cautious when dealing with the land.

You do not oppose communication or trade between sea folk and land walkers; in fact, you might even encourage it, utilizing your unique powers to enable such interaction.

You are simply careful to ensure that the lackadaisical outlook on the natural world that seems to haunt the land folk doesn't infect the peoples of the sea.

Wavekeepers are likely to become adventurers in an effort to carry forth their sworn goals.

Whether becoming an ambassador to a nearby human settlement or seeking to stop the plots of a kraken to gain control over the thieves' guilds of a coastal nation, you stand ready to use your talents to keep the sea and the land from tainting one another.

You might or might not be a member of the Circle Beneath the Waves, an organization of likeminded wavekeepers and allied druids and rangers.

If you are, you know that you can turn to them to aid you in problems that come to your attention.

Likewise, you know that you could be called upon to render aid to others within the organization.

If you do not belong to the Circle, you were likely taught the mysteries of the wavekeepers by one of their number, for it is a tradition to teach these mysteries to any who can hear the call of the sea.

COMBAT

You possess a variety of special techniques for dealing with opponents both aquatic and land-based.

Where possible, engage your opponent from the water, especially if that target is on land—you'll find that improved cover from being in the water (see Attacks from Land, page 93 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) makes it an especially useful place from which to cast your spells.

This is doubly true against enemy spellcasters, since you gain the Reflex saving throw bonus against attacks from land-bound spellcasters.

In the water, you will usually have the advantage of mobility, due to the speed increases from both masterful swimmer and current mastery.

Augment your animal companion with current mastery and a spell or two, and you'll find yourself with a truly formidable ally (especially if it gains the Swim-By Attack feat as it advances in HD, enabling it to attack foes while remaining out of their reach).

Don't hesitate to take such feats as Dodge and Swim-By Attack in order to take advantage of such things yourself, especially in a combat-focused wild shape.

At higher levels, your ability to assume the shape of a water elemental will go a long way toward aiding you in combat, with its damage reduction and vortex abilities.

The sight of a wavekeeper in elemental form, his spell-enhanced shark companion, and an elder water elemental composed of the lightless waters of the ocean trenches has certainly dissuaded many would-be assailants.

ADVANCEMENT

Many druids or rangers find themselves with the appropriate requirements to become wavekeepers, but not all necessarily hear that call.

Those who do wander the ocean depths, delighting in their endless variety.

The newly initiated wavekeeper learns the secrets not just of the flow of life in animal and plant but in the very currents of the ocean as the seas open their secrets to him.

As you advance in this prestige class, you should enable yourself to effectively use your magical prowess in all forms, so don't hesitate to take the Natural Spell feat.

Additionally, though this class doesn't grant much in the way of additional wild shape advancement, you could take an extra level or so of druid in order to secure this ability, for the sea is full of dangerous creatures whose forms you can emulate.

RESOURCES

Though you might have to do some convincing, other wavekeepers will assist you in endeavors where you can demonstrate that the failure of your quest could result in damage to the seas and the way of life therein.

Members of the Circle Beneath the Waves in particular are likely to assist where they can.

Such allies are a very good resource for spellcasting and are likely to perform spellcasting for wavekeepers for a reduced price, or even for free if the need is great.

Most undersea civilizations give at least grudging respect to the wavekeepers and their kin—they recognize the importance of the keepers in the balance of the undersea world, but the keepers are also notorious for coming to undersea civilizations and making demands of them, for the good of the ocean itself.

As such, wavekeepers are likely to receive minor assistance or at least partial cooperation from aventi, merfolk, aquatic elves, locathah, sahuagin, and other undersea peoples, but this is likely to be given with some measure of hesitation. Many aquatic folk have learned to tread carefully around the wavekeepers and their demands.

WAVEKEEPERS IN THE WORLD

The wavekeeper fills the role of a druidic defender of the wilderness for the oceanic realms.

They excel in a variety of roles in the campaign, from concerned druids sympathetic to PC aims to crazed, feral spellcasters who oppose all civilizations and intermixing between land and ocean peoples.

If you need a druid to come to the PCs asking for help with a threat to the seas, or a reliable guide through lonely and perilous ocean grottoes, or a dangerous menace with vast resources at his beck and call, the wavekeeper fits the bill perfectly.

ORGANIZATION

Though not all wavekeepers belong to the Circle Beneath the Waves, all acknowledge the Circle as the source for the secrets that make up their power.

The Circle Beneath the Waves is dedicated to the defense of the maritime realm.

The circle itself is part of the larger over-arching druidic organization, the subaquatic branch of that much larger tree.

The Circle Beneath the Waves is divided into three smaller groups.

The People of the Green Waters hold the concerns of the shallow seas as their own, especially where those waters are influenced and possibly endangered by land-dwelling civilizations.

The People of the Blue Waters hold the mid-depth seas as their concern, watching the civilizations of the open ocean, as well as assisting the People of the Green Waters where they can.

The People of the Black Waters hold the deepest, lightless trenches and depths of the ocean as their concern.

It is the least well-known branch of the circle and sometimes mistrusted by the others.

The Circle Beneath the Waves includes druids of many aquatic races.

The People of the Green Waters are made up primarily of shoal halflings, locathah, and merfolk as well as a number of surface-dwelling druids who have taken various coasts and islands as their protectorate.

The People of the Blue Waters tend to be made up of aventi and aquatic elves, with a few merfolk, malenti, ixitxachtli, and seafaring druids among them.

The People of the Black Waters are made up of many strange beings, with sahuagin in the majority, followed by aventi, outcast aquatic elves, and strange merfolk.

A trio of powerful wavekeepers, one representing each of the peoples, leads the Circle Beneath the Waves.

These three Keeper Hierophants, called the Green Keeper, the Blue Keeper, and the Black Keeper, do not rule but rather speak on behalf of their respective factions—a representative who ceases to speak for his or her faction in order to pursue a personal agenda soon finds himself or herself replaced.

These three do not serve for any particular time and can be replaced with a majority vote of the people they serve.

Daily life as a member of the circle isn't very different from that of the average druid.

The Circle's influence is unobtrusive and subtle—members of a people meet with one another informally all the time and take their opinions to the Keeper Hierophant of their group.

The three Keeper Hierophants meet once a season to discuss the goings-on in their respective domains.

NPC REACTIONS

Undersea natives tend to treat wavekeepers with some degree of deference, for the keepers make many sacrifices to keep the oceans and the life within them healthy and free from harm.

As such, most aquatic folk are Indifferent or Friendly to wavekeepers.

Surface-dwellers who know of the wavekeepers are much more fearful of them, blaming them (often wrongly) for shipwrecks and sea monster attacks; sailors and seafarers are usually unfriendly to wavekeepers.

WAVEKEEPER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) or Gather Information can research wavekeepers to learn more about them.

DC 10: There are stories of strange druids who dwell in the depths of the ocean.

Some say that they maintain benevolent watch over sea-creatures in their area; others claim they are terrible reavers who use the powers of the ocean to indulge their own whims.

DC 15: It is said that some of these aquatic druids can command the waters the way other druids control plants, and that they are always accompanied by gigantic sea predators ready to do their bidding.

Each of them maintains a protectorate, which some defend with honor and fairness and others with viciousness and cruelty.

DC 20: These druids belong to an order called the Circle Beneath the Waves, drawn from the various aquatic races as well as a few druids from surface-dwelling races.

They gather occasionally to discuss events in their protectorates.

DC 30: The Circle Beneath the Waves is led by three so-called Keeper Hierophants, one for each branch of the circle: the People of the Green Waters (who deal with aquatic areas near land), the People of the Blue Waters (who deal with the open sea, away from land but relatively near the surface), and the People of the Black Waters (who deal with those abysses of the ocean that are never touched by light).

WAVEKEEPERS IN THE GAME

Any druid encountered near an aquatic environment might turn out to be a wavekeeper.

Wavekeepers make excellent NPC allies for parties who find themselves near the ocean frequently and excellent NPC mentors for PC druids with a focus on the aquatic environment.

SWORD AND FIST (3.0)

CAVALIER

Representing the ultimate in mounted warfare, the cavalier is the quintessential knight in shining armor.

The charge of the cavalier is among the most devastating battlefield offensive weapons any culture can hope to field. Most cavaliers belong to the upper social class or nobility of a society.

The cavalier dedicates his life to the service of a higher authority, such as a noble or sovereign, deity, military or religious order, or a special cause.

His is a hereditary honor that comes with the price of lifelong service to his monarch, country, or other object of service.

The cavalier is expected to participate in any wars or other armed conflict in which his lord or cause is engaged. Cavaliers in service to other nobles often serve their master beyond the battlefield as well, performing such duties as their skills, and their noble lord, see fit.

The cavalier often pursues such selfless goals as the eradication of evil and chaos from the world, and justice for all the subjects of his land.

He can also be a bully and a braggart who uses his status and privileges to pursue only his own self-aggrandizement.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cavalier, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +8.

Feats: Spirited Charge, Weapon Focus (lance), Weapon Focus (any sword), Mounted Combat, Ride-by attack.

Handle Animal: 4 ranks.

Knowledge (Nobility and Royalty): 4 ranks.

Ride: 6 ranks.

Equipment: Masterwork heavy armor and masterwork large shield.

CLASS SKILLS

The cavalier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Profession (Int), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The cavalier is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Knowledge (Nobility and Royalty): The cavalier gains a +2 bonus on all checks using this skill.

Tall in the Saddle: The cavalier gains a bonus to his Ride skill check whenever he uses the Mounted Combat feat to negate a hit his mount takes in combat.

Deadly Charge: when mounted and using the charge action, you deal triple damage with a melee weapon (or quadruple damage with a lance), up to the number of times per day indicated.

This ability supersedes the Spirited Charge feat.

Mounted Weapon Bonus: The cavalier gains a bonus to his attack roll when using the designated weapon while mounted.

Ride Bonus: The cavalier gains a competence bonus to Ride checks.

Burst of Speed (Ex): At 3rd level, the cavalier ran urge his mount to greater than normal speeds, this ability doubles the distance of the mount's normal charge movement. This ability can be used once per day without penalty to the mount.

Each additional use of the ability in a single day requires the mount to make a Will save (DC 20) immediately after the conclusion of the additional charge; failure results in the mount taking 2d6 points of damage.

Full Mounted Attack: At 6th level, the mounted cavalier may attack as a standard action when his mount moves more than 5 feet (assuming an opponent exists to be attacked), rather than as a partial action.

DEVOTED DEFENDER

The devoted defender is a professional guardian. She is an individual who is skilled at protecting a designated client from harm, often by taking her charge's place as the target of threats and attacks.

In return for these services, the devoted defender usually receives compensation in the form of coin, room and board, and sometimes in resources such as access to magic healing, but the exact details of the agreement are between the individual devoted defender and her employer.

It is not uncommon for a noble or other important personage to number at least one devoted defender among his personal retinue, and sometimes to make a devoted defender the chief of his security services.

Most devoted defenders are fighters, but any character who becomes a devoted defender benefits from the attack, Save and Armor Class bonuses.

Monks sometimes become devoted defenders, as do clerics, when they are assigned to protect important individuals within their order or clergy.

NPC devoted defenders are mostly fighter who either left military service and turned to security work to make a living.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a devoted defender, a character must fulfil the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Weapon Focus (any melee weapon), Alertness

Search: 4 ranks.

Sense Motive: 4 ranks.

Spot: 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The devoted defender's class skill, (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Innuendo (Wis), Jump (Str),

Listen (Wis), Profession (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The devoted defender is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Armor Class Bonus: The devoted defender concentrates on defence, both for herself and her charge.

She receives this dodge bonus to AC as a result of that focus.

Harm's Way: Beginning at 1st level, the devoted defender may elect to place herself in the path of danger in order to protect her single charge.

Any time that you are within 5 feet of your charge, and your charge suffers an attack, you may switch places with your charge and receive the attack in his place.

You must declare this before the attack roll is made.

You select your charge when you roll initiative, and it is a free action to do so.

You may not change your charge for the duration of that combat.

Defensive Strike: You can make an attack of opportunity against any adjacent opponent who attacks your charge in melee.

You gain a +1 bonus to this attack for every two levels after 2nd.

Deflect Attack: Beginning at 3rd level, the devoted defender can attempt to parry a melee attack against her charge.

She must be within 5 feet of her charge to attempt this and holding a melee weapon or shield to deflect the attack.

Once per round when your charge is attacked, you may make an opposed attack roll.

You gain a competence bonus to your attack roll as indicated on the table.

If you beat the attacker, you deflect the blow.

You must be aware of the attack beforehand and not flatfooted.

TABLE 2–2: THE DEVOTED DEFENDER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	AC Bonus	Special
1st	+1	+2	+2	+0	+1	Harm's way
2nd	+2	+3	+3	+0	+1	Defensive Strike
3rd	+3	+3	+3	+1	+2	Deflect Attack +1

9th	+9	+6	+6	+3	+5	Deflect Attack +4
10th	+10	+7	+7	+3	+5	Defensive Strike +4

AC Bonus: The defensive bonus to the character's Armor Class, added to the character's normal AC bonus. This bonus applies only when the devoted defender is actively engaged in protecting her client from an attack; otherwise, use the character's normal AC bonus.

DRUNKEN MASTER

Martial arts students face a bewildering array of martial arts schools, each with its own adherents and detractors.

But few schools are as unusual—or as controversial—as Drunken Boxing.

By weaving and staggering about as if inebriated, drunken boxers avoid many blows.

Likewise, their stumbling, lurching attacks catch their opponents off guard.

Moreover, when they actually imbibe alcohol, drunken masters can perform truly prodigious feats of strength and bravery.

None of this garners them much respect among other martial arts schools, because drunken boxing exacts a toll on its users.

Drunken masters remain intoxicated for hours after a fight, and they are often found half-asleep in taverns, mumbling incoherently.

This flies in the face of other schools' ascetic principles.

But rival schools must be wary—they never know when the tipsy lout at the bar is just a harmless thug, and when it is a high-unstoppable drunken master.

Monks form the backbone of the drunken boxing school.

They lose some face with their original school or monastery for becoming a drunken master, but a brilliant display of drunken fighting can sometimes silence critics in one's former school.

Members of other character classes are chosen as drunken boxers only rarely, although students often tell the tale of a barbarian from the north who became a phenomenal drunken master.

Prospective students are studied at a distance by drunken masters, then treated to a display of drunken boxing's power.

If the student expresses enthusiasm for learning the new techniques, a group of drunken masters take him or her from tavern to tavern, getting rip-roaring drunk, causing trouble, and passing along the first secrets of the technique. Those who survive the revelry are new drunken masters.

NPC drunken masters are often found in taverns and bars. They rarely pick fights there, but are quick to come to the aid of someone overmatched in a tavern brawl.

Most keep a low profile, although some are famous—or infamous—for the deeds they have performed while under the influence.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a drunken master, a character must fulfil all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Base Unarmed Attack Bonus: +4.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Dodge.

Tumble: 6 ranks.

Other: Evasion ability, must be chosen by existing drunken masters and survive night of revelry among them without being incarcerated, poisoned, or extraordinarily embarrassed.

CLASS SKILLS

The drunken master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Drink like a Demon (Ex): Your body handles alcohol differently from other people's.

You can drink a large tankard of ale, a bottle of wine, or a corresponding amount of stronger alcohol as a move-equivalent action.

Every bottle or tankard of alcohol you consume during combat reduces your Dexterity, Wisdom, and Intelligence by 1 point each, but increases your Strength or Constitution (your choice) by 1 point.

However, your Reflex save bonus, Dexterity bonus to Tumble, and AC bonus remain at their original levels regardless of your new Dexterity modifier.

Your body metabolises one drink per hour, reducing both the penalties and the bonus accordingly.

You only gain the Strength and Constitution bonuses for alcohol drunk during a fight, and the bonuses only last until the end of the combat.

(The penalties disappear more gradually).

What quantity of alcohol constitutes a “drink” is deliberately left undefined.

Bottle Proficiency: You can use bottles and large tankards as weapon using your unarmed base attack bonus, including your more favorable number of attacks per round.

Bottles do 1d6 points of bludgeoning damage with their first blow, then 1d4 points of slashing damage thereafter.

Tankards do 1d6 points of bludgeoning damage.

Furthermore, you can make these attacks without spilling most of the liquid inside.

Stagger: By tripping, stumbling, and staggering, you can make a charge attack that surprises your opponents.

This has two beneficial aspects: first, your charges need not be in straight lines, and you still move up to twice your speed.

Second, make a Tumble check (DC 15) when you begin your charge.

If you succeed, your movement through threatened squares provokes no attacks of opportunity.

Swaying Waist: You weave and bob about as you attack.

You gain a +2 dodge bonus to AC against any one opponent you choose during your turn.

This supersedes the Dodge feat, but functions like it in all other ways.

Improvised Weapons: you can use furniture, farm implements, or nearly anything else at hand to attack your foes.

Anything from a ladder to a haunch of meat to barstool is a weapon once you imbue it with your ki using this ability.

Regardless of the exact item, the weapon does 1d6 points of damage at your more advantageous number of attacks per round.

Most items do bludgeoning damage, although shish-kabob skewers, for example, would do piercing damage.

Long items (such as ladders) have reach according to their length, and items with many protrusions (such as chairs) give you a +2 bonus on disarm attempts.

Finally large items with broad, flat surfaces (such as tables) can be upended to become improvised tower shields.

Drunken Rage (Ex): You can rage as a barbarian does, with a duration equal to your (new) Constitution modifier plus the number of drinks you have consumed.

You gain a +4 to Strength, +4 to Constitution, a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, and a -2 penalty to AC.

This ability supersedes the Strength and Constitution bonuses from Drink like a Demon.

Lurch: Your lurching movements let you make one feinting in combat.

Bluff check (opposed by Sense Motive) per round as a move-equivalent action.

You gain a +4 competence bonus to Bluff checks made for this purpose.

Drunken Embrace (Ex): You can grapple an opponent without provoking an attack of opportunity, and you gain a +4 competence bonus on all opposed grapple checks.

For Medicinal Purposes (Sp): By combining your ki power with alcohol, you can convert an alcoholic drink to a potion of cure moderate wounds up to three times per day.

The alcohol activates the ki in your body so the cure only works on you.

Alcohol drunk in this way neither impairs nor improves your ability scores.

Corkscrew Rush: You leap forward twisting your body in midair as you head butt an opponent.

This is charge attack that in addition to dealing normal damage automatically initiates a bull rush attack (without provoking an attack of opportunity).

Furthermore, you are considered to have the Power Attack feat for the purposes of a corkscrew rush, and if you hit your opponent, you stun your foe unless she makes a Will save (DC 17 + the drunken master's Wisdom modifier).

However if your attack misses, you land prone in front of your opponent.

Breath of Flame (Sp): You can use your ki to ignite the alcohol within you and spew it forth from your mouth in a breath of flame.

Breath of flame deals 3d12 points of fire damage to all within the 20-foot cone (Reflex save DC 18 for half).

Each time you use breath of flame, it consumes one drink's worth of alcohol within you, reducing both penalties and bonuses to your ability scores.

TABLE 2-3: THE DRUNKEN MASTER

10th	+10*	+7	+7	+3	Breath of flame

Base Attack Bonus: Note that, like a monk, a drunken master makes unarmed iterative attacks at a -3 penalty, not the usual -5 penalty. *Drunken masters cannot attack more than five times per round.

DUELIST

In a world with heavily armored knights on huge, galloping chargers and powerful mages wielding mind-churning spells, there's no place for the daring swashbuckler who relies on his wits and reflexes to survive, right?

Wrong.

The duelist proves that precision and skill are viable alternatives to massive weapons and agility is a viable alternative to heavy armor.

The duelist is a nimble, intelligent fighter trained in making precise attacks with light weapons, such as the rapier.

Also known as the swashbuckler, the duelist always takes full advantage of his quick reflexes and wits in a fight. Rather than wearing bulky armor, duelists feel the best way to protect themselves is to not get hit at all.

Duelists are most often fighters or rangers, but almost as often are rogues or bards.

Wizards, sorcerers and monks make surprisingly good duelists due to the lack of the class's reliance on armor. They benefit greatly from the weapon skill the duelist offers.

Paladins and barbarians who deviate a good deal from their archetypes become duelists.

Elves are more likely to become duelists than dwarves, and halfling and gnome duelists are not uncommon.

Half-orc duelists are very rare.

NPC duelists are usually loners looking for adventure or a get-rich-quick scheme.

Occasionally they work in very small, tight-knit groups, fighting with team-based tactics.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a duelist, a character must fulfil all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Perform: 3 ranks.

Tumble: 5 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Weapon Proficiency (rapier), Ambidexterity, Mobility.

CLASS SKILLS

The duelist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The duelist is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but no type of armor. The only shield they are proficient with is the buckler.

Canny Defense: When not wearing armor, duelists add their Intelligence bonus (if any) to their Dexterity bonus to modify Armor Class while wielding a melee weapon.

If the duelist is caught flat-footed or otherwise denied his Dexterity bonus, he also loses this bonus.

Precise Strike: At 2nd level, the duelist gains the extraordinary ability to strike precisely with a one-handed piercing weapon, gaining a bonus 1d6 damage added to her normal damage roll.

When making a precise strike, the duelist cannot attack with a weapon in her other hand, although she can defend with it (or, if she has the proficiency, a buckler).

A duelist's precise strike only works against living creatures with discernable anatomies.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits (including undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures) is not vulnerable to a precise strike, and any item or ability that protects a creature from critical hits (such as armor with fortification) also protects a creature from a precise strike.

Every four duelist levels gained thereafter, she increases the extra damage by +1d6.

Enhanced Mobility: When unarmored, the duelist gains an additional +4 bonus to AC against attacks of opportunity caused when he moves out of or within a threatened area.

Grace: At 4th level, the duelist gains an additional +2 competence bonus to all Reflex saving throws.

This ability functions for the duelist only when wearing no armor.

Acrobatic Attack (Ex): At 5th level, if the duelist attacks by jumping at least 5 Feet toward his opponent, jumping down at least 5 feet onto his opponent or swinging on a rope or similar object into his opponent, he gains a +2 to attack and damage rolls.

Make a Jump check; if the result is less than 5 feet, you cannot use this ability on this attack.

If the distance is greater than that between the duelist and the opponent, the duelist can limit the distance to that of the opponent as a free action.

This is an extraordinary ability.

Elaborate Parry (Ex): At 7th level, if the duelist chooses to fight defensively or use all-out defense in melee combat, she gains an additional +1 dodge bonus to her AC for each class level of duelist she has advanced.

This is an extraordinary ability.

Improved Reaction: At 8th level, the duelist gains a +2 to initiative rolls.

This ability stacks with Improved Initiative.

Deflect Arrows: The duelist gains the Deflect Arrows feat (see the Player's Handbook) only when he uses his one-handed piercing weapon.

FIST OF HEXTOR

While many view the Fists of Hextor simply as effective if brutal mercenaries, they are in fact templars sworn to the service of their unforgiving deity.

The world is a dark and unforgiving place, or so says the Church of Hextor, wherein the strong survive by ruling the weak and forging order from the chaos.

To support its dogma, the Church established this elite company of templars and made them available for hire to those whose causes complemented the Church's ultimate goals (and who could, naturally, afford to pay the hefty tithes necessary to maintain a crack unit of well-armed and well-trained men and women).

The Fists are infamous for their efficient brutality: Nowhere will an employer in need of military aid locate mercenaries more dedicated to ensuring that the rule of law prevails over the forces of anarchy and confusion.

Most Fists of Hextor are fighters, monks or clerics, but ex-barbarians, ex-paladins, rangers, and wizards are all counted among their number.

The chief qualifications for membership are (apart from veneration of Hextor, Champion of Evil and Scourge of Battle) a willingness to utilize cruelty and harsh measures to crush dissent, a belief that power is the greatest reward life offers, and a willingness to endure all manner of hardship in service to these ideals.

NPC Fists of Hextor are usually mercenary soldiers engaged in some martial enterprise on behalf of the nearest temple dedicated to Hextor.

Sometimes small groups or even solitary Fists are encountered, though these too are often carrying out a specific task or mission for the Church.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Fist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful evil, neutral evil, or lawful neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Power Attack, Cleave, Spiked gauntlet weapon proficiency.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Spot: 4 ranks.

Knowledge (religion): 4 ranks.

Other: Must worship Hextor, and must survive the ritual ceremony of induction into the Fists of Hextor (see Organizations on page 44 of this book).

CLASS SKILLS

The Fist of Hextor's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: All Fists of Hextor are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Brutal Strike (Ex): The Church of Hextor trains its templars to fight with ruthless efficiency.

Every action, the Fist may add this bonus either to one attack roll or one damage roll, but not both.

You must declare where the bonus applies at the start of your action.

Strength Boost (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, the Fist can call upon Hextor for a +4 Strength bonus once per day.

The Fist may boost his Strength one additional time per day for every three levels above 2nd.

This bonus lasts for 4 rounds plus the Fist's level.

Frightful Presence (Ex): When a Fist of Hextor reaches 3rd level, he gains the extraordinary ability to instill fear in others as a free action once per day.

The Fist must make some dramatic action in the round in which he uses the ability, and it only affects those who see (or possibly hear, depending on the dramatic act) the Fist.

The ability has a range of 5 feet per level.

All those (except for other Fists) within range are frightened for 5d6 rounds.

Those who succeed at a Will saving throw are merely shaken.

The DC for the Will save is 10 + the Fist's level + the Fist's Charisma modifier.

This extraordinary ability creates a mindaffecting fear effect.

The Fist may use this one additional time per day for every three levels above 3rd.

GHOSTWALKER

A mysterious figure becomes visible at the edge of town. Unheralded and unnoticed until his first step onto the dried-mud street, the stranger's only companion is soundlessness.

He draws the wordless gaze of children who cease their play and scurry to seek a hidden place to watch him, unseen.

From behind shuttered windows and closed doors, parents and shopkeepers end their conversations as their eyes follow his slow steps.

The din of the blacksmith dies, and the sudden whinny of a horse is blasphemously loud.

No one saw this one before he seemed to appear out of the summer's haze, but they know their lives will change before he has gone.

The ghostwalker is not a role that fits many heroes.

The ghostwalker wanders from place to place, typically alone as he goes about his business.

Just what drives the ghostwalker to roam from one town to another depends on the individual.

Many are monks who have left behind their cloisters, because they could no longer engage in a life of contemplation or because they rebelled against the ordered, sheltered life within a world of chaos.

One ghostwalker may be out to right an ancient wrong, another to take vengeance on a distant foe, and yet another to atone for some tragic mistake.

Some ghostwalkers represent a source of merciless justice as they right wrongs and punish the villainous.

Others are more compassionate as they progress from one community to another, helping those in need.

Ghostwalkers do exist who seep into communities determined to spread their selfish desires and villainy like a cancer.

Their abilities point to some underlying, mysterious mysticism that surrounds and accompanies these wanderers, and they often appear just when and where they are needed.

Most ghostwalkers are warriors, whether their background describes them to be fighters, monks, or rangers.

Former barbarians, fallen paladins, rogues, and some bards also take to the dusty roads of a wandering life.

Wizards, clerics, druids, and sorcerers are rarely seen as ghostwalkers, but have been known to exist.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a ghostwalker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good, lawful evil, chaotic good, chaotic evil, or true neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Endurance, Iron Will, Toughness.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Move Silently: 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The ghostwalker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (law) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spot (Wis), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The ghostwalker is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light and medium types of armor, and shields.

Painful Reckoning: If the ghostwalker loses more than 50% of his normal hit-point total in one encounter (and survives), he gains this bonus to his AC, attack, and damage rolls when he faces the specific foe(s) that he fought in the initial encounter.

Resolute Aura (Ex): Whether fearful or respectful, humanoids around the ghostwalker typically pause and obey when confronted.

Ghostwalkers add their number of ghostwalker levels to all Intimidate checks.

Therefore, a 5th-level ghostwalker has a +5 bonus to all Intimidate checks.

Anonymity: The ghostwalker benefits from anonymity, but should his name ever become known to his foes, his powers are weakened.

On those enemies who know his name, his resolute aura no longer functions.

If they are hostile, he cannot feign death, become ethereal, or shadow walk in their presence (to a distance of 100 feet), and his painful reckoning bonus, if any, is halved against them.

Feign Death (Sp): Once per day, the ghostwalker can enter a cataleptic state that is impossible to distinguish from actual death—usually for ending an encounter.

The effect lasts for 10 rounds per level of the ghostwalker. Although he can smell, hear, and knows what is going on, no feeling or sight of any sort is possible for the ghostwalker; any wounding of his body is not felt, and any damage taken is only one-half normal.

Paralysis, poison, and energy drain do not effect the ghostwalker in this state, but poison injected into the body becomes effective when the effect ends.

Superior Iron Will: This ability provides an additional +2 bonus to Will saves.

It stacks with the Iron Will feat.

Etherealness (Su): Calling on the obscure, mystic forces that drive him to wander the world, the ghostwalker has the power to become ethereal, as per the spell ethereal jaunt. The effect persists for 1 round per level of the ghostwalker.

This is a supernatural ability.

Shadow Walk (Sp): The ghostwalker can shadow walk, as per the spell.

The character travels at a rate of one mile in (11 - the number of ghostwalker levels) minutes.

The maximum time that the ghostwalker can shadow walk is 1 hour per level per day.

The ghostwalker can shadow walk three times per day.

In addition, while in this state, the ghostwalker heals at the rate of 3 hit points per ghostwalker level per hour.

This is a spell-like ability.

GLADIATOR

Some are mere slaves, sent into a squalid pit to fight against insurmountable odds.

Others are wealthy professionals with an entourage of managers, agents, and trainers.

Rich or poor, all gladiators face death whenever they step into the arena.

Gladiators are trained warriors who fight in front of spectators in arenas large and small.

Usually they face other gladiators in single combat, but larger arenas sometimes offer group battles.

Some even feature man vs.

monster matches, pitting one or more gladiators against a beast captured from the wilderness.

The spectators cheer wildly for their favorite gladiators, and many bet vast sums on a combat's outcome.

No one wagers more than the gladiator herself does, for often a match ends only when the loser dies.

Most gladiators were once fighters or barbarians, but rogues and monks sometimes find their way to the arena floor (much to the chagrin of their surprised opponents).

In some rare cases, arenas feature "spellcaster duels" or pit a warrior against a wizard, making sure that the spellcaster's repertoire is suitably flashy and unlikely to harm the spectators.

Becoming a gladiator is a simple matter, say the veterans of the pits.

"Survive your first match, and you can call yourself a gladiator.

Lot of good it will do you..."

NPC gladiators usually ply their trade in caravans that travel from arena to arena, although some are employed as regulars in the vast coliseums of large cities.

Sometimes more famous gladiators are hired to act as bodyguards for aristocrats, and veteran gladiators assess new prospects and train would-be gladiators for their first fights in the ring.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a gladiator, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Perform or Intimidate: 4 ranks.

(Crowds respond best to the most attractive and most menacing combatants).

Feats: Must have at least two feats from the list of fighter bonus feats.

You do not have to earn them as a fighter, but they must appear on that list.

CLASS SKILLS

The gladiator's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Ride (Dex), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Improved Feint: The gladiator has learned sneaky tactics such as kicking dirt in a foe's face, pretending to be badly wounded, or forcing an opponent to stare into the sun.

You can use the feinting in combat Bluff technique on page 64 of the Player's Handbook as a move-equivalent action.

Study Opponent: You are adept at spotting weaknesses in your foes' fighting styles.

If you take a all-out defense action, you gain a dodge bonus to your AC against any opponent who attacks you in melee combat that round.

The dodge bonus begins the round after that opponent attacks you and lasts for the duration of the fight.

Exhaust Opponent (Ex): As combat continues, you can tire out your foe.

You must attack the same opponent for at least 3 consecutive rounds.

After your third set of attacks, your opponent must make a Fortitude save to avoid taking 1d6 subdual damage from exhaustion.

The DC for this save starts at 15 and increases by 1 for every round beyond the third you continue to attack the same foe.

Many gladiators fight defensively while employing this attack.

If you do not attack for one round, the count resets to zero.

Roar of the Crowd: You can appeal to spectators with flourishes, trash-talking, and fancy moves.

As a move-equivalent action, make a Perform check (DC 15).

If you succeed, you get a +1 morale bonus to attacks and damage for the duration of the fight.

Spectators must be noncombatants, and there must be at least a half-dozen of them.

Improved Coup de Grace: You dispatch fallen foes quickly, or with great flair.

You may use a melee weapon to deliver a coup de grace attack as a standard action.

If you are being showy, you take a full-round action to deliver the coup de grace attack, but gain a +2 morale bonus to attack for the rest of the combat.

Poison Use: You are trained in the use of poison just as assassins are.

Ask your DM for details; the poison rules are found in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide.

Make Them Bleed (Ex): You are skilled at dealing wounds that cause extra blood loss.

When you deal damage with a slashing weapon, the wound bleeds for one point of damage per round thereafter until a Heal check (DC 15) is made, any cure spell is applied, or 10 rounds minus the opponent's Constitution modifier elapse. Multiple wounds are cumulative, but creatures without discernible anatomies such as constructs, undead, and plants are immune to this effect.

The Crowd Goes Wild: With each blow you strike, the spectators cheer more loudly.

If you have already engaged the spectators with roar of the crowd, you gain a +2 morale bonus to damage on your first successful blow.

This bonus increases by +2 for each successive consecutive blow that deals damage to your opponent.

The bonus resets to +2 if you miss.

HALFLING OUTRIDER

The semi-nomadic culture of the halfling race often results in sudden encounters with peril.

To safe-guard themselves, many halfling communities turn to their outriders, an elite champion whose task it is to warn his fellows of, and protect them from, danger.

The outrider is naturally skilled in the arts of riding and scouting.

Most halfling outriders are fighters, rangers, druids or rogues.

All classes, however, can benefit from the AC bonus and defensive riding capabilities of the class.

NPC halfling outriders are usually found performing their duties in the field, or relaxing in their off-duty hours.

The presence of an outrider whether a field or at rest indicates that a halfling community cannot be far away. However, some outriders feel the pull of adventure more strongly.

These leave behind their hearths and homes for a life of excitement on the road.

Hit die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become halfling outrider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Race: Halfling.

Listen: 4 ranks.

Ride: 6 ranks.

Spot: 4 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Mounted Archery.

CLASS SKILLS

The halfling outrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Wis), Handle Animal (Cha), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The halfling outrider is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, light armor, and shields.

Mount: Halfling outriders gain a mount appropriate to the resources of their halfling community at 1st level.

Most halfling communities attempt to provide their outriders with warponies, though some have been known to make do with lesser steeds, and a few boast more exotic animals.

The outrider is not required to pay for the mount, nor its tack, harness and accoutrements.

Alertness: The halfling outrider gains a +2 bonus on all Listen and Spot checks.

Ride Bonus: The halfling outrider gains a +2 competence bonus on all Ride checks.

Defensive Ride (Ex): The nature of the halfling outrider's responsibilities has taught him the tricks of defensive riding, provided that he does nothing else (he cannot attack when riding defensively).

He gains +2 Dexterity and a +4 AC dodge bonus.

In addition, his mount gains: X2 speed, a +2 bonus on all Will saves, and a +4 AC dodge bonus.

A defensive ride lasts for 3 rounds, plus the character's (newly improved) Dexterity modifier.

The outrider may end the defensive ride voluntarily.

At the end of the ride, both the outrider and his mount are winded and suffer a -2 Strength penalty until they are able to rest for at a minimum of 10 minutes.

The outrider can only embark on a defensive ride a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Beginning the ride is a free action, but the outrider can only do so on his action.

Deflect Attack (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the outrider can attempt to parry a melee attack against his mount.

He must be holding a melee weapon or shield to deflect the attack.

Once per round when your mount would normally hit with a melee weapon, you may make a Reflex saving throw against DC20.

(If the melee weapon has a magical bonus to attack, the DC increases by that amount) You gain a competence bonus to your Reflex save as indicated on the chart.

If you succeed, you deflect the blow as a free action.

You must be aware of the attack beforehand and not flat-footed.

Leap from the Saddle (Ex): When your mount is moving no faster than twice its Speed, you can dismount with a successful Handle Animal check (DC 20) and land adjacent to your mount as a free action.

If an opponent is in an area you threaten (after you dismount), you can make a charge attack against that opponent.

This requires the full attack action.

TABLE 2-8: THE HALFLING OUTRIDER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	AC Bonus	Special
1st	+1	+0	+2	+0	+1	Alertness, Ride bonus

9th	+9	+3	+6	+3	+5	Deflect attack +3
10th	+10	+3	+7	+3	+5	Defensive ride 5/day

AC Bonus: This is nonmagical deflection bonus applied to the character's Armor Class regardless of armor worn only when mounted.

KNIGHT PROTECTOR OF THE GREAT KINGDOM

The few, the proud, the Knight Protectors are warriors dedicated to restoring the ideals of knightly chivalry before they fade forever.

The Protectors see moral decay everywhere they look in the world around them, brought on by a lapse in ethical behavior following the collapse of the once-proud Great Kingdom.

The Protectors are the last remnants of a formerly great order of knights who pledged their existence to defending that now-defunct nation.

Few of this ancient lineage remain alive today, and all that remains of the Great Kingdom is its name and a scattered few inheritor countries.

But those who take up the mantle of Knight Protector today still hope for the return of the Great Kingdom, and believe they can hasten its restoration and repair society's ills by living their lives as paragons of their venerable chivalric code.

Like paladins, knight protectors adhere to a rigid code of behavior that expresses such values as honor, honesty, chivalry, a courage.

Unlike paladins, the Protector's duty is to this code and the vanished nation for which it stands, rather than to a deity or holy order.

The Protector is expected to display these ideals in all aspects of his behavior, and throughout all his actions and deeds, however arduous they may be.

A Knight who unwillingly or unknowingly violates this code, or violates it willingly in the belief that doing so contributes to an act of greater good, may redeem himself by undertaking and completing a quest or other dangerous mission assigned by the order's leadership.

A Protector who willingly and knowingly violates this code for no adequate reason is removed from the order, and may no longer advance in levels as a Knight Protector.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Knight Protector of the Great Kingdom, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Race: Dwarf, elf, half-elf, human.

Diplomacy: 6 ranks.

Knowledge (Nobility and Royalty): 4 ranks.

Ride: 6 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack, Cleave, Mounted Combat, Great Cleave.

Heavy armor proficiency.

Alignment: Any Lawful.

Other: Gain membership in the order.

CLASS SKILLS

The Knight Protector's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (Nobility and royalty) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Knight Protectors are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Defensive Blow: Whenever the Knight Protector is engaged in a melee combat situation where the Knight seeks to protect a creature who is weaker than the Knight Protector (fewer HD or total levels) or who is helpless, the Knight Protector gains the listed morale bonus to his attack and weapon damage rolls.

Shining Beacon (Su): The Knight Protector is the physical and spiritual embodiment of high ideals.

All his allies gain a +4 morale bonus on saves versus fear effects when they stand within 10 feet of the Knight Protector, if the Knight is held, unconscious, or otherwise rendered helpless, his allies lose this bonus.

Best Effort (Ex): The daunting nature of the Knight Protector's goals often requires special focus of effort.

Beginning at 2nd level, a Knight Protector gains a bonus to any one skill check he makes, once per day.

You must declare that you are using this ability before you make the skill check.

Iron Will: At 2nd level, the Knight gains the feat Iron Will.

Supreme Cleave: Beginning at 3rd level, the Knight can take a 5-foot step between attacks when using the Cleave or Great Cleave feat.

No Mercy: At 6th level, the Knight Protector gains the ability to make extra attacks of opportunity.

The knight protector may make a number of extra attacks of opportunity against opponents equal to the number of the bonus and use the Knight's full attack bonus.

The Code of the Knight Protector

Code of Conduct: The Knight Protector must be of a lawful alignment, and must adhere to the order's Code of Conduct (see below).

Support: The order supports its own. The Knight Protector can expect to receive normal arms and armor, room and board, a mount and its accoutrements from the order for as long as he remains in its ranks and adheres to the Code.

The Code:

Courage and enterprise in obedience to the Order.

Defense of any mission unto death.

Respect for all peers and equals; courtesy to all lesser.

Combat is glory; battle is the true test of self-worth; war is the flowering of the chivalric ideal.

Personal glory above all in battle.

Death to those who oppose the Great Kingdom.

Death before dishonor.

LASHER

The lasher prestige class uses the whip as an extension of herself.

A whip in the hands of a lasher is like unto a live thing, obeying the character's every command.

Lasher training goes far beyond simple exotic weapon proficiency, and not all who take up the discipline survive to its end.

Lashers prefer to use a whip or a whip dagger (exotic weapons, both).

Their ability with the whip makes them deadly warriors to be reckoned with.

Fighters, ex-paladins, rangers, ex-druids and barbarians are drawn to the art of the lash, which transforms an interesting tool into a deadly weapon.

Rogues, monks, and bardic lashers find the understated profile of a whip a plus in many of their activities.

Sorcerers, wizards, and clerics are least likely to be drawn to the art of the lash.

As NPCs, lashers are individuals who love to display the crack and snap of their whip skills.

Though they consider the use of the whip an art form, they recognize it is a martial art used primarily for combat.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a lasher, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Rope Use: 2 ranks.

Craft (leatherworking): 2 ranks.

Weapon Focus: Whip.

Exotic Weapon Proficiency: Whip.

Special: The lasher must own a whip or whip dagger (see Chapter 5).

Usually, a lasher owns both types of whip (and, if wealthy enough, mighty versions of both types).

CLASS SKILLS

The lasher's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Spot (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A lasher's weapon training focuses on the whip.

Lashers are proficient with no armor and no shields.

Whip Sneak Attack: If a lasher catches an opponent unable to defend himself effectively from her attack anywhere within range (up to 15 ft.), she can use a whip or whip dagger to strike a vital spot for extra damage (a lasher does not gain a sneak attack with other weapons).

Any time the lasher's target would be denied his Dexterity bonus to AC (whether he actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the lasher flanks the target, the lasher's attack deals +1d6 points of damage.

This extra damage increases by a+1d6 points every fourth level (+2d6 at 5th level, and +3d6 at 9th level).

Should the lasher score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

This ability stacks with any other sneak attack ability.

With a regular whip (but not a whip dagger), the lasher can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage (see Wound below).

A lasher can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the lasher must also be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The lasher cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a lasher gets a general sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Close Combat: At 1st level, the lasher can attack an opponent in a threatened square with a whip or whip dagger and not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Wound: At 1st level, a lasher can use a normal whip to deal regular damage to an opponent, instead of subdual damage, at her option.

This allows the lasher to inflict damage on creatures with an armor bonus of +1 or better or a natural armor bonus of +3 or better.

If using the whip to deal subdual damage, it deals no damage to creatures with a +1 or more armor bonus or +3 or more natural armor (as usual), lashers using a whip dagger always deal regular damage to opponents.

Whip Lash: The lasher can make attacks of opportunity with his whip or whip dagger against foes within 5 feet as if it were a melee weapon.

Improved Trip: At 2nd level, the lasher gains the Improved Trip feat, if using a whip or whip dagger to perform the trip. She need not have taken the Expertise feat, normally a prerequisite, before this.

Third Hand: At 2nd level, a lasher's precision with the whip or whip dagger allows her to use it almost like a third hand—a third hand at the end of a flexible 15-foot-long arm—as a standard action.

Depositing a lashed object into your hand is a move-equivalent action.

Note; A lasher generally uses a normal whip to perform abilities granted by third hand, because a whip dagger deals its damage to the object or individual grasped, while a regular whip does not.

Sometimes, this is not a problem, especially if the item grasped has hardness, but other times inflicting damage by using third hand is a bad idea.

Thus, most lashers carry two whips.

A lasher successfully performs a task if her attack roll equals or exceeds the DC for a given task:

- Punch a button, snuff a candle flame, flick a coin lying along the ground, etc. as a move-equivalent action.

Range 15 feet, DC 15.

- Retrieve an unattended object of up to 20 pounds, and deposit into your off-hand as a move-equivalent action.

Range 15 feet, DC 20.

- Firmly wrap the end of your whip around a pole, spike, or other likely projection up to 15 feet away as a move-equivalent action.

The DC is 22.

If used to wrap around a projection at the top of a wall, reduce the DC to climb the wall by 5.

If the point of attachment is optimal on a ceiling fixture, you could swing over a chasm of up to 25 feet wide.

You can also wrap items heavier than 20 pounds, but you cannot automatically flick them into your off hand (but you could drag them).

You can unwrap the end of your whip from the entangled object as a free action.

- When the victim of a precipitous fall, you can give up your Reflex save in an attempt to use your whip to snag a likely projection, pillar, rafter, etc., within 15 feet of the edge of the pit, cliff, bridge, etc. Generally, an unattached item (such as a statue, table, etc.) must weight twice as much as you for you to arrest your fall, otherwise you merely pull it after you).

You may attempt to snag a friend or foe standing near the edge of the precipice as you fall.

You make a ranged touch attack against another creature's AC (the friend does not apply his Dexterity bonus while an unwilling friend or a foe applies their Dexterity modifier to AC), If you hit, you wrap your whip around the target, who must make a successful Strength check against DC 20 to arrest both you and himself.

An unsuccessful Strength check sends both you and your target into the precipice.

You can unwrap the end of our whip from the entangled object as a free action.

Crack of Fate: At 3rd level, a lasher can take one extra attack per round with a whip or whip dagger.

The attack is at the lasher's highest base attack bonus, but each attack (the extra one and normal ones) suffers a -2 penalty.

The lasher must use the full attack action to use crack of fate.

Lashing Whip: At fourth level, the lasher adds a +2 damage bonus to her whip and/or whip dagger.

If using a whip, she adds +2 subdual damage or +2 regular damage, at her option.

If the lasher has already gained weapon specialization from another class (fighter, for example), the damage bonus stacks.

Improved Disarm: At 6th level, the lasher gains the Improved Disarm feat, if using a whip or whip dagger to perform the disarm action.

She need not have taken the Expertise feat, normally a prerequisite, before this.

If the lasher successfully disarms a foe, she can attempt use her third hand ability to deposit the weapon of up to 20 pounds in her off hand if she makes the appropriate check, as a move-equivalent action.

Treat the lasher's whip as a Medium-size weapon for purposes of disarming an opponent.

Stunning Snap: A lasher can use a whip or whip dagger to stun a creature instead of inflicting subdual or normal damage.

The lasher can use this ability once per round, but no more than once per level per day.

The lasher must declare she is using a stun attack before making an attack roll.

(A missed attack roll ruins the attempt).

A foe struck by a whip or whip dagger must make a Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + the lasher's level + Strength modifier), in addition to receiving normal damage (subdual or standard).

If the saving throw fails, the opponent is stunned for one round.

A stunned character cannot act and loses any Dexterity bonus to AC, while attackers get a +2 bonus on attack rolls against a stunned opponent.

Constructs, oozes, plants, undead, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to critical hits cannot be stunned by the lasher's stunning attack.

Crack of Doom: At 8th level, a lasher can take two extra attacks per round with a whip or whip dagger.

This ability supersedes crack of fate (the abilities do not stack).

The attack is at the lasher's highest base attack bonus, but each attack (the extra one and normal ones) suffers a -4 penalty.

The lasher must use the full attack action to use crack of doom.

Death Spiral (Su): At 10th level, the lasher gains transcendental understanding other whip or whip dagger. Once per day, she can spin the whip over her head with supernatural speed.

All foes within a 15-foot radius of the lasher must make a Reflex save against a DC equal to the lasher's attack roll.

Opponents who fail are stunned for 1d4+1 rounds.

Stunned opponents must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 18) or become helpless for 1d4-1 rounds (minimum 1 round).

Allies (as selected by the lasher) in range are spared the effects of the death spiral.

The death spiral is a supernatural ability.

MASTER OF CHAINS

The master of chains is a combatant specializing in the use of chains—specifically the spiked chain—as a weapon.

They usually have a sinister aura about them, and are never completely good.

They use chains as tools of terror and intimidation as much as weapons.

Along with their use of chains, they are good with locks as well.

Fighters are best equipped to become masters of chains, although rogues, rangers, and barbarians make excellent members of this rare, frightening group as well.

A master of chains often creates a lair underground filled with chains on the ground and hanging from the ceiling. Whole rooms of rattling chains suspended from above create an unnerving and dangerous setting for their foes.

Members of this prestige class usually do not work together, although a master of chains gladly teams up with those of other classes for mutual benefit.

Due to their similar affinities, these individuals often ally themselves with the outsiders known as kytons (see the Monster Manual).

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of chains, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Escape Artist: 6 ranks.

Open Lock: 4 ranks.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (spiked chain), Expertise, Improved Trip, Improved Disarm, Weapon Focus (spiked chain), Weapon Specialization (spiked chain).

Ability Score: Int 13+ (required for Expertise).

CLASS SKILLS

The master of chains' class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (metalworking) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), and Open Lock (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The master of chains is proficient with no weapons, and no type of armor or shield.

Scare (Su): By rattling his chains as a standard action, the master can induce fear in a creature as the spell of the same name, using his class level as the caster level (see the Player's Handbook).

The master can use this supernatural ability only once per day.

Climb Fighting: If master of chains is climbing on a rope or a chain, he suffers no penalty to attacks and foes gain no bonus to attack him, rather than the master of chains losing his Dexterity modifier while climbing and his enemy gaining a +2 on attack rolls against the master of chains.

If the master of chains is hanging from a chain that has the ability to swing more than five feet, he can use that to his advantage and gain a +2 dodge AC bonus.

Superior Weapon Focus: Stacking on top of any existing Weapon Focus bonus, this ability grants a master of chains an additional +1 to attack rolls with a spiked chain.

Chain Bind: At 4th level, the master of chains can use his weapon and a quick application of a lock (the whole process requiring a full-round action) to bind a single Small, Medium, or Large creature.

This should be treated as an attack with a net, except that the Escape Artist check to escape has a DC of 25, and the burst DC is 30.

A chain at least 10 feet long is required to accomplish this. If it is a spiked chain, the entangled creature suffers 1 point of damage per round while entangled unless they remain motionless.

Chain Armor: At 5th level, a master of chains can wrap himself in chains (as long as he has at least 20 feet of chain) to provide him with a +5 armor bonus to AC. For him, there is only a -2 maneuver penalty, no max Dex modifier, and a 30% arcane spell failure chance.

Speed is not affected.

Double Chain: At 5th level, the master of chains can choose to use a spiked chain as a double weapon instead of a weapon with reach.

(Each round, he can switch how he uses it).

Extra Lash: At 6th level, a master of chains inflicts an additional +1d6 points of damage with a spiked chain, slashing the foe with extra slack in the chain.

He must use the full attack action to use this ability.

Deflect Attacks: As a move-equivalent action, a 6th-level master of chains can use a spinning chain to provide a +4 deflection AC bonus against all attacks coming in from a chosen 180-degree arc.

This is an extraordinary ability.

Superior Weapon Specialization: Stacking on top of any existing weapon specialization bonus, this adds an additional +2 to all damage rolls made with a chain or spiked chain.

Superior Spiked Chain: At 8th level, the master of chains can modify his spiked chain so that it leaves cruel barbs behind in the targets it strikes.

Using the chain in this way causes victims to bleed 1 hit point per round until a successful Heal check is used to bind the wounds (DC 15) or until magical healing is applied to them.

It costs 25 gp to modify a chain in this manner, and 10 gp to add new spikes once the modified chain has been used five times.

(After five uses, the modified chain can be used as a normal spiked chain).

Only 8th level and above masters of chains can make and use these specially modified weapons properly—in anyone else's hands they are simply spiked chains.

Swinging Attack: At 9th level, as a full-round action, the master of chains can wrap the end of his chain around an overhead object (something that can sustain his weight) and swing at any target within 10 feet.

The foe so attacked is treated as flat-footed and the master gains a +2 attack bonus and inflicts +3d6 damage with this single attack (only one attack is allowed).

Chain Mastery (Su): As a supernatural ability, the master of chains can animate a chain (as the spell animate rope, but with chains) of up to 50 feet in length for 10 rounds.

The master of chains can use this ability three times per day plus a number of times equal to his Charisma bonus.

MASTER SAMURAI

The master samurai is a military retainer of a feudal overlord; he practices a martial code of behavior that emphasizes the value of personal honor over life itself. In some cultures he is part of the warrior aristocracy. The details of the master samurai code are quite specific. Master samurai are required and expected to demonstrate absolute obedience to their feudal overlord, even if his lord's commands might result in the master samurai's certain death.

He remains ready to die for his lord or his honor at a moment's notice, and to avenge to the death any slight to either.

His personal honor demands that he repay all debts fairly. Perhaps the most important tenet of this code is the expectation that the master samurai never commit a dishonorable act or demonstrate the slightest fear of personal injury or death.

Master samurai who fail to live up to these strictures face personal shame so overwhelming that they prefer to destroy themselves rather than live under its shadow.

Fighters, rangers, and paladins make excellent master samurai, and they find that its class abilities enhance their own combat potential.

Monks also make good master samurai: The discipline of bushido is a natural reflection of the monk's desire to study a philosophy or belief with single-minded determination.

Wizards and sorcerers may find it difficult to qualify for master samurai, but those who do enjoy the martial enhancements available to them.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master samurai, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Knowledge (nobility and royalty): 4 ranks.

Ride: 4 ranks.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Feats: Cleave, Improved Initiative, Mounted Archery, Mounted Combat, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (bastard sword).

CLASS SKILLS

The master samurai's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (code of martial honor) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4; Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Master samurai are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Code of Conduct: The master samurai must be of a lawful alignment, and must adhere to the martial code of honor (see sidebar).

If the master samurai violates this code, he may be required to atone by performing some arduous or disagreeable task; if the violation was particularly egregious, he may be invited to commit ritual suicide.

In some cultures, when a feudal overlord is killed, defeated, or disgraced, his master samurai retainers are expected to follow him into death.

Support: Master samurai can expect to receive all the necessary requirements of life from their feudal overlord, including room and board, transportation, normal (including masterwork) arms, and armor.

Those master samurai who do not serve a lord are called ronin and do not receive the support benefit.

Tumble: At 1st level, the master samurai gains a +2 competence bonus to Tumble skill checks.

Great Cleave: At 1st level, the master samurai receives this feat for free.

Supreme Cleave: At 2nd level, the master samurai gains the ability to take a 5-foot step before making a Cleave or Great Cleave attack.

Blades of Fury: When a master samurai delays his attack with the katana until after he is attacked in the round, he takes advantage of the opening and can add a +2 bonus to his attack and damage rolls.

In other words, you delay your action until after you are attacked in melee combat.

Blades of Death: When the master samurai fights with the katana two-handed, he adds double his Strength modifier to damage rolls.

Supreme Mobility: The master samurai gains a +6 dodge bonus to his AC against attacks of opportunity provoked by moving into or out of a threatened area.

Note: A condition that makes you lose your Dex bonus to Armor Class (if any) also makes you lose dodge bonuses.

This dodge bonus supersedes that of Mobility.

Ki Strength (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, the master samurai learns to channel ki, a source of inner energy and strength shared by all living creatures.

You can add +2 to your Strength score for a number of rounds equal to your Wisdom bonus.

Ki Attack (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, the master samurai gains the supernatural ability to imbue his melee attacks with ki energy for one successful attack as a free action. The damage from such an attack can harm even a creature with damage reduction.

When using this ability, consider the master samurai's weapon to be a magic weapon with a bonus equal to the character's Wis modifier for of harming a creature with damage reduction.

Once activated, this bonus remains until the master samurai hits once with the weapon charged with ki.

The Master Samurai's Code

The master samurai is obedient to his lord.

It is a master samurai's right to protest against bad judgments or orders from his lord and death is the final protest a master samurai can make.

The master samurai is ready to die at any time.

There is no failure, only success or death.

To die in the service of one's lord is the greatest service a master samurai can perform.

Dishonor to one's lord or family is dishonor to the master samurai.

All debts, of honor or vengeance, are repaid.

An enemy deserves no mercy.

Cowardice is dishonourable.

NINJA OF THE CRESCENT MOON

Some monks seek only enlightenment.

Others are tempted by more shadowy pursuits.

The Ninja of the Crescent Moon is a mercenary clan whose members engage in sabotage and other covert missions for an outlandish fee—if the job meets their own inscrutable moral code.

The ninja are a thorn in the side of both evil tyrants and just nobles, and no one outside the upper hierarchy knows what their real aims are.

Their bases and safe houses are unknown to any outside the Crescent Moon, and would-be patrons contact them only through a long chain of contacts.

But once the Ninja of the Crescent Moon are hired, they generally complete the job by the next crescent moon (hence the name).

The black-garbed ninja typically infiltrate their target, reveal themselves in a whirlwind of violence, then slip away into the shadows of the night.

Most ninja were once monks who heard the whispered promise of the ninja's esoteric secrets.

Curious, they began to research the Crescent Moon, following half-remembered rumors to their source.

Any monk (or occasionally rogue or fighter) who manages to track the, ninja back to their source is typically offered membership.

Those who turn the Crescent Moon down are marked for death.

NPC ninja appear seemingly from nowhere, striking without mercy.

They are often hired to steal a valuable item, kill a powerful rival, or infiltrate a besieged fortress as a precursor to an attack.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a ninja, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Improved Unarmed Strike, Deflect Arrows, Quick-Draw.

Move Silently: 10 ranks.

Hide: 10 ranks.

Other: Evasion class feature, must contact Crescent Moon leadership.

CLASS SKILLS

The ninja's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Monklike AC Bonuses: When the ninja is wearing no armor or shield, he receives the AC bonus listed in Table 3–10 in the Player's Handbook.

This bonus stacks with any AC bonus he previously received as a monk.

Furthermore, the ninja applies Dexterity and Wisdom bonuses to AC if unarmored.

Sneak Attack: If a ninja can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Any time the ninja's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), the ninja's attack deals +1d6 points of damage.

This extra damage increases by an +1d6 points every other level (+2d6 at 3rd level, +3d6 at 5th level, and so on).

Should the ninja score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

This class ability stacks with any other sneak attack the character possesses.

It takes precision and penetration to hit a vital spot, so ranged attacks only count as sneak attacks if the target is 30 feet away or less.

A ninja can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the ninja must also be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The ninja cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a ninja gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Improved Evasion: At 2nd level, a ninja's evasion ability improves.

She still takes no damage on a successful Reflex saving throw against attacks such as a dragon's breath weapon or a fireball, but henceforth she only takes half damage on a failed save.

Kuji-kiri (Sp): By making mystical hand gestures as a standard action, the ninja can render opponents helpless as if he would cast hypnotic pattern.

The ninja can affect 2d4 +1 per ninja level HD with kuji-kiri, and subjects must make Will saves against DC 12 + the ninja's Charisma bonus to avoid the effect.

The hypnotic pattern lasts as long as the ninja continues to gesture, plus one additional round.

The ninja can use this power once daily for each level of ninja.

Poison Use: Ninjas are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Fast Climb: The ninja can scurry up a wall at unbelievable speed.

With each successful Climb check, the ninja can move half his speed as a move-equivalent action or his speed as a full-round action.

Furthermore, he retains his Dex bonus to AC while climbing.

Silencing Attack (Su): If the ninja successfully hits a flat-footed opponent with a melee attack, the opponent is unable to speak for one round.

This prevents casting spells with a verbal component and shouting warnings or alarms.

Fast Sneak: When using Move Silently and Hide, the ninja can move at his normal speed without suffering a penalty to those skills.

Invisibility (Sp): The ninja can turn invisible (as the spell invisibility, but targeting himself only) once daily for each level of ninja.

Opportunist: Once per round, the ninja can make an attack of opportunity against an opponent who has just been struck for damage in melee by another character.

This attack counts as the ninja's attacks of opportunity for that round.

Even a ninja with the Combat Reflexes feat cannot use the opportunist ability more than once per round.

Gaseous Form (Sp): You can assume gaseous form, as the spell (see the Player's Handbook), once per day for 1 round per class level.

Using this ability requires a full-round action.

Improved Kuji-kiri (Sp): The ninja's swirling hand gestures are harder to resist.

Kuji-kiri now affects 3d6 +1 per ninja level HD of creatures, and the Will save DC is 15 + the ninja's Charisma bonus.

Blindsight (Ex): Using nonvisual senses, such as sensitivity to vibrations, scent, acute hearing, or echolocation, the ninja maneuvers and fights just as well in darkness as in light.

Invisibility and darkness are irrelevant, though the ninja still cannot discern ethereal beings.

The ninja's blindsight extends for 60 feet.

Always Sneaky: The ninja is always taking 10 on Move Silently and Hide.

Unless the ninja wants to be seen or heard, make opposed Spot and Listen checks to detect the ninja's presence.

Ethereal Jaunt (Sp): By focusing his ki, the ninja can become ethereal for a moment or two.

Three times a day as a free action, the ninja can make an ethereal jaunt (as the spell of the same name, except the duration is only 1 round).

ORDER OF THE BOW INITIATE

The Way of the Bow is used by some for spiritual self-improvement, by others a philosophical art.

Others practice it as a way of life, and yet others employ it as a religious ceremony.

Of course, many find the art of killing with the bow to be an important skill in a dangerous world.

The Way of the Bow is always what you make of it.

The Way of the Bow embraces the following concepts: Through one's archery, one's true character can be determined.

The Way of the Bow is a spiritual art.

By learning it, the archer learns about himself.

By improving in the Way of the Bow, the archer improves himself.

The Way of the Bow is a highly meditative martial art whose ultimate goals are Truth, Goodness, and Beauty.

When asked, "What is Truth?", a Master Archer picks up his bow, fires an arrow and, without saying a word, lets his mastery of the bow serve as the gauge of the archer's progress along the "way", thereby showing the archer's knowledge of reality, or "truth" itself.

The Way of the Bow is a matter of precision and discipline: the relationship you have with your bow, the arrow, your body, and your mind.

The Way of the Bow is standing meditation.

When you shoot, you can see the reflection of your mind, as in a mirror.

The target is the mirror.

When you release you also let go of your ego.

You can see your own mind.

Fighters are the most common initiates of the Order of the Bow.

Powerful rangers, paladins, and even barbarians utilize these skills and philosophies as well.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as an initiate, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Knowledge (religion): 2 ranks.

Proficiency: Longbow or shortbow or composite longbow or composite shortbow.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot, Rapid Shot, Weapon Focus (longbow or shortbow or the composite version of either), Weapon Specialization (longbow or shortbow or the composite version of either).

CLASS SKILLS

The Order of the Bow's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Knowledge (religion) (Int), Craft (bowmaking) (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: None.

Ranged Sneak Attack: Any time the initiate's target would be denied his Dexterity bonus to AC (regardless of whether he has a Dexterity bonus), the initiate's ranged sneak attack deals extra damage.

The extra damage is +1d6 at 1st level, and +1d6 every two levels after that.

Ranged attacks only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

The initiate cannot strike with such deadly accuracy beyond that range.

In every other way, treat this ability as a rogue's sneak attack.

If the character has the sneak attack ability as a rogue, the bonuses stack.

Close Combat Shot: At 2nd level, the initiate can attack with a ranged weapon in a threatened area and not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Superior Weapon Focus: Stacking with any existing Weapon Focus bonus, this adds an additional +1 to all attack rolls with the initiate's bow.

Free Attack: Once per round, whenever an ally within line of sight gains an attack of opportunity upon a foe, the initiate can make one ranged attack against the same foe, at his highest attack bonus as a free action.

Zen Archery: You gain this feat for free (see page 10).

If the character already has this feat, then the Wisdom modifier stacks with the Dexterity modifier for ranged attacks.

Superior Weapon Specialization: This stacks with any existing weapon specialization bonus, and adds an additional +2 to all damage rolls made with a longbow or shortbow.

Banked Shot (Ex): This extraordinary ability allows the initiate to fire an arrow at a target within 20 feet of a wall (but not adjacent to the wall) and treat the target as if flat-footed for purposes of AC and damage inflicted.

This is a full-round action, since it is extremely difficult

RAVAGER

Feared by many, understood by few, the infamous Ravager is an individual who has dedicated himself to the service of Erythnul, Deity of Slaughter.

Living a life of violence and savagery, the Ravager seeks to spread this deity's malignant influence wherever he goes, never resting long in one place lest the forces of good and law pursue him.

Ravagers who come from the ranks of fighters and monks find that the Ravager's offensive capabilities enhance their combat skills, while wizard, sorcerer, cleric and druid Ravagers find that their ability to cause terror: in their foes is a very useful defensive measure.

Ravagers spend much of their time with others of their kind, roaming the land in small, close-knit warbands, striking unsuspecting communities without warning, and retiring back into the wilderness to plan their next terrible raid.

Some times the clergy of Erythil commands a lone Ravager (undertake some mission or project that obliges the Ravager to join up with other, non-Ravager individuals; but such alliances are usually temporary and must be managed carefully, lest they lead to quarrels or worse.

NPC Ravagers are usually encountered in small warbands of from two to six individuals, but sometimes a lone Ravager may be met when undertaking a special mission. All Ravagers are readily identified by the bizarre and fearsome facial tattoos they wear to mark themselves as Erythil's instruments.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Ravager, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic evil, chaotic neutral, neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Dirty Fighting, Power Attack, Sunder.

Intimidate: 3 ranks.

Knowledge (religion): 3 ranks.

Wilderness Lore: 4 ranks.

Other: Must survive the Ravager initiation rites (See the Ravager organization description on page 50 of this book).

CLASS SKILLS

The Ravager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Int), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: All Ravagers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Pain Touch (Su): Earthnut teaches that life is pain, and so is the touch of a Ravager.

A Ravager can make an unarmed touch attack that causes 1d4 hit points of damage, plus one point per the Ravager's level. Weapon attacks also transmit the pain of Erythnul, but only at the rate of 1d4 extra points of damage, plus 1 point per the Ravager's level, the Ravager may make one additional pain touch attack for every three levels above 1st. Aura of Fear (Su): Enemies within the stated distance of the Ravager suffer a -2 morale penalty on all saving throws for as long as they remain within range.

This is a supernatural ability, usable a number of times per day as given on the table.

Crudest Cut (Su): Your familiarity with pain and fear grants you a cruel precision with your melee attacks.

You must declare you are using crudest cut before making any attack rolls.

If you miss all your attack in that round, you lose one use of the crudest cut.

If you strike successfully, you deal 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage to your target, in addition to normal damage on one attack.

You may use crudest cut once per day for every three levels you have attained.

Visage of Terror (Sp): You have plumbed the true depths of horror and hopelessness.

Once per day, you can trigger a spell-like ability similar to the arcane spell phantasmal killer (save DC 14 + the Ravager's class level) as a standard action.

To the foe you select, you seem to take on the visage of what the target fears most.

To others including yourself, no effect is discernible.

In order for the phantasm to touch the target, the Ravager must make a successful touch attack.

In all other respects, this ability functions as the spell in the Player's Handbook.

RED AVENGER

The Red Avenger is the master of ki, an ancient and formidable discipline that allows the user to accomplish the extraordinary.

Through study and training, the Red Avenger learns to channel the ki energy and thereby achieve a variety of effects, up to and including the ability to damage an opponent by releasing the ki energy in her own body. Though their primary concerns revolve around settling an age-old score (see the Red Avenger class organization for details), the Red Avengers sometimes accept employment with those who can afford their services, becoming agents of injury and destruction.

Most Red Avengers are monks: The mastery of ki is a natural extension of the monk's own class abilities. Fighters, rangers and paladins sometimes become Red Avengers and find that the initiative bonus and ki abilities make them more formidable in combat.

Rogues enjoy the versatility of the Red Avenger's ki mastery, while druids find that the study of ki energy can offer new insights on the natural world.

NPC Red Avengers are normally monks who are engaged in carrying out activities that support the clan's primary goals.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Red Avenger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Improved Unarmed Strike, Stunning Fist.

Listen: 8 ranks.

Tumble: 8 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The Red Avenger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The Red Avenger is proficient with all simple weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

(Note: Armor heavier than leather carries a penalty on the Red Avenger skills Hide and Move Silently).

Ki: At 1st level, the Red Avenger gains a greater understanding of the supernatural ability to control and utilize ki.

Ki is an energy source created by and flowing through all living creatures.

Much of the Red Avenger's training is devoted to understanding and learning to focus ki, and the effects she can produce at each level reflect the increasing complexity of their education.

Stunning Shout (Sp): The Red Avenger releases her ki energy in a sonic attack.

You can blast ki energy in a cone 30 feet long.

The attack stuns all targets in the cone for one round unless they make a successful Fortitude save (DC 15 + Red Avenger's Wisdom modifier).

The attack requires the Red Avenger to be able to vocalize in order to use the ability.

Ki Save (Ex): At 2nd level, the Red Avenger gains the ability to channel her ki into protecting herself from adverse effects.

She gains a bonus equal to her Wisdom bonus on any one saving throw other choice.

You must declare that you are using this ability before you make the saving throw.

You can use this once per day per Avenger level.

Ki Skill (Ex): At 3rd level, the Red Avenger gains a bonus to any skill check when using any Red Avenger class skill, equal to her Wisdom bonus.

You must declare that you are using this power before you make the skill check.

You can use this once per day per Avenger level.

Ki Healing (Sp): At 4th level, the Red Avenger gains the ability to channel ki into healing energy.

When she lays her hands on a living creature, she conducts the ki in such a way that it heals a number of hit points each day equal to her class level multiplied by her Wisdom bonus.

She may choose to divide her ki healing energy among multiple recipients, and she need not use it all at once.

Starting at 8th level, a red avenger can heal a number of hit points each day equal to twice her class level multiplied by her Wisdom bonus.

This is a spell-like ability.

Deadly Shout (Sp): The Red Avenger releases her ki energy in a sonic attack.

You can blast ki energy in a cone 30 feet long.

The attack deals 3d6 + your Wisdom modifier in damage to all within the cone.

A successful Fortitude save (DC 15 + the Avenger's Wisdom bonus) halves the damage.

The attack requires the Red Avenger to be able to vocalize in order to use the ability.

Free Ki: The Red Avenger has mastered the use of ki energy and channels it with ease.

Whenever using any class ability that is imbued with ki, you may add double your Wisdom bonus.

Multiclass Note: Monk characters can freely multiclass with this class.

In other words, you can give your monk PC a Red Avenger level, then return to the monk class for your next level, take a Red Avenger level after that, and so on.

TRIBAL PROTECTOR

The tribal protector is the battlefield champion of a savage humanoid race.

While a tribe's warriors make up the bulk of its military forces, and barbarians may be its fiercest soldiers, tribal protectors are disciplined and deadly fighters who lead any martial endeavor.

Most tribal protectors are fighters, warriors, or barbarians who adopt this prestige class to gain (or continue) a fighter's specialized training in combat maneuvers, fierce and destructive attack abilities, and a home field advantage in their tribal lands and fighting their traditional foes.

Sometimes tribal adepts, clerics, or sorcerers take on this role, depending on the tribe.

NPC tribal protectors are often found in the vanguard of a humanoid army.

If honor demands a battle between champions, the tribal protector steps forward.

Otherwise, the protector seeks out the leading warriors of the enemy army and engages them in single combat, or—as a last resort—cuts swaths through the rank and file of the opposing troops.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tribal protector, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: The same alignment as the majority of the character's tribe.

Race: Any humanoid or monstrous humanoid except dwarf, elf, gnome, halfling, half-elf, or human.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Power Attack, Cleave, Great Cleave.

Wilderness Lore: 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The tribal protector's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The tribal protector is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Bonus Feats: The tribal protector gains a bonus feat at 1st, 5th, and 9th level.

These bonus feats must be chosen from the list of bonus feats available to a fighter.

Tribal Enemy: At first level, a tribal protector declares a specific group of people or monsters as his tribal enemy. This is a much narrower category than a ranger's favored enemy.

Tribal enemies might include the neighboring human nation, members of a specific religion, a rival humanoid tribe, or the drow beneath the mountains.

Tribal protectors gain a +3 bonus to Bluff and Sense Motive checks when using these skills against their enemies.

They gain the same +3 bonus to weapon damage rolls against these creatures.

This damage bonus does not apply to damage against creatures that are immune to critical hits, and the tribal defender does not gain this bonus when using a ranged weapon against a target more than 30 feet distant.

A tribal defender who is also a ranger chooses a tribal enemy that is a subset of his favored enemy.

The bonuses stack.

Homeland: Tribal protectors gain a +2 bonus to Hide, Intuit Direction, Move Silently, and Wilderness Lore checks when they are within the terrain type and geographical area of their tribal homeland.

Examples of homelands include the County of Urnst, the Adn Forest, or the Vale of the Mage.

This bonus reflects the protector's intimate familiarity with his home terrain.

Wild Fighting (Ex): Similar to a monk attacking with a flurry of blows, a tribal defender of 2nd level or higher can enter a state of wild fighting, attacking in a storm of ferocious assaults.

The character gains one extra attack per round, at his highest base attack bonus, but all the character's attacks in that round suffer a –2 penalty.

This penalty lasts for an entire round, so it also affects any attacks of opportunity the protector might make in that round.

Terrain AC Bonus: You take great advantage of your homeland's features and gain the listed deflection bonus to your AC when in your homeland (see above).

Smite (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a tribal protector gains the supernatural ability to make a single melee attack with a +4 attack bonus and a damage bonus equal to his class level (if he hits) against a member of his tribal enemy.

The protector must declare the smite before attacking. At 7th level, the protector can smite twice per day.

At 10th level, this increases to three times per day.

WARMASTER

On a green hill outside the Furyondan capital of Chendi sprawls a vast, white mansion surrounded by stables and fortifications.

Most civilian passersby deem it the home of some wealthy lord, but a practiced military eye notes that many of the walls and catapults face each other, not any outward threat. Also, military officers across the world recognize the mansion as a hallowed training grounds: The Furyondan College of War.

Graduates of the College of War—called warmasters—have served Furyondy’s military for generations, providing most of the army’s high-ranking generals.

Receiving an assignment to train at the College of War is the best assignment a young officer can hope for, and those who excel in the harsh training there become a formidable presence on the battlefield.

Warmasters are generally drawn from the ranks of standing armies, so fighters predominate at the College of War. But the appointment process has a political aspect (as does everything else in Furyondy), so civilian “heroes of the realm” sometimes find themselves training to become warmasters.

Clerics and paladins of Heironeous and St. Cuthbert are common, but other classes are rare (every class at the College of War has at least a few wizards and rangers, however).

Would-be warmasters are most often human, although every race is represented at the College of War.

NPC warmasters are usually found at the head of an army, either on the march or defending a castle at a strategically important site.

Most are eager to lend a hand to fellow warmasters; the college’s alumni form a loose “old soldier’s network”. Sometimes the bonds of comradeship even stretch across battle lines, although warmasters stress loyalty as a primary virtue.

This prestige class may not be suitable for all campaigns, due to the responsibilities that warmasters have thrust on them and the complexities involved in maintaining a keep or castle.

As in all things, your DM decides on the viability of this class in your game.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warmaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Diplomacy: 5 ranks.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic, nonevil.

Feats: Leadership (found in the DUNGEON MASTER’S Guide), Martial Weapon Proficiency, Weapon Specialization.

CLASS SKILLS

The warmaster’s class skills are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Cha).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Brotherhood: Warmasters are a fraternal organization, and members are generally willing to lend a hand to their fellows.

You gain a +4 competence bonus to Diplomacy checks made to influence other warmasters.

This is a two-way street: You are expected to treat other warmasters honorably and charitably.

Leadership Bonus: Warmasters earn bonuses to their leadership level (character level + Cha bonus), enabling them to attract more powerful cohorts and followers when they use the Leadership feat upon earning a new level.

Battle Cry (Su): When your shout rings across the battlefield, it lifts the spirits of your allies.

This ability functions as the bard’s inspire courage ability, found on page 28 of the Player’s Handbook.

This bonus lasts a number of rounds equal to your Charisma bonus, and you can shout a battle cry once per day for every level of warmaster you have attained.

Direct Troops (Su): As a full-round action, you can give compelling directions.

You can bestow a +2 competence bonus on either attacks or skill checks to all allies within 30 feet.

This bonus lasts a number of rounds equal to your Charisma bonus.

Tower: An organization affiliated with you (the army or an important lord, for example) has offered to build you a tower in a mutually agreeable location.

As long as you uphold the ideals of the organization involved, you can manage the affairs of the tower as you wish, although you are responsible for upkeep costs. A tower is a round or square, three-level building made of stone.

Rally Troops (Su): Your presence is enough to grant any allies within 30 feet a second saving throw against fear and charm effects that they have already succumbed to. Even if they fail the second saving throw, any fear effects are less severe: panicked characters are only frightened, frightened characters are only shaken, and shaken characters are unaffected.

Hard March: You can exhort your troops to march faster. Anyone traveling with you gains a +4 morale bonus to Constitution checks required for making a forced march or any other task requiring extended exertion.

Animals are not affected.

Keep: As "Tower" above.

A keep is a fortified stone building with fifteen to twenty-five rooms.

Battle Standard (Su): The mere sight of your coat of arms or other heraldic display is enough to turn the tide of battle.

Allies within 30 feet of your standard gain the effects of both Battle Cry and Rally Troops above) as long as the standard is within range and held by you.

If your standard is captured in battle, all allies within range aware of its loss suffer a -1 morale penalty to attacks and damage until it is recovered in addition to losing the benefits described above.

Castle: As "Tower" above.

A castle is a keep (also above) surrounded by a 15-foot-high stone wall with four towers.

The wall is 10' thick.

Die for Your Country (Su): Your presence inspires your troops to make the ultimate sacrifice for your cause.

Any allies within 30 feet of you can continue to fight while disabled or dying without penalty.

They continue until they reach -10 hit points.

Huge Castle: As "Tower" above.

This large complex has numerous associated buildings (stables, a forge, granaries, etc.), and an elaborate 20-foot-high, 10-foot-thick wall creating bailey and courtyard areas. The wall has six towers.

WEAPON MASTER

The monk, the red avenger, the drunken master, and the master samurai all harness ki energy as part of their martial disciplines; they are not, however, the only such persons to do so.

Some pursue the study of ki by mastering a single melee weapon.

To unite this weapon of choice with the body, to make them one, to use the weapon as naturally and without thought as any other limb, is the goal of weapon master. Monks who follow this path may choose unarmed attacks or the kama, nunchaku, siangham (see the Player's Handbook, Chapter 7) or the three-section staff (see Chapter 5 of this book) as their weapon of choice.

In order to gain any of the special abilities of the weapon master class, you must use your weapon of choice.

Once chosen, the weapon of choice cannot be later changed.

This does not mean that, if your weapon of choice is the longsword, you can only use the longsword you owned when you first became a weapon master.

The only material requirement for the class is a masterwork version of your weapon.

It means you can use any masterwork longsword and gain the benefits of the weapon master.

If you use any other weapon, you can use none of the special abilities of the prestige class.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a weapon master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Proficiency: With your weapon of choice.

Weapon: Masterwork weapon (unless unarmed).

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Combat Reflexes, Expertise, Weapon Focus, Whirlwind Attack, Dex 13+.

CLASS SKILLS

The weapon master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (weaponry) (Int), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Ki Damage: After you score a hit with your weapon of choice, you do not roll dice to determine the damage.

Instead, you figure the normal maximum damage (not a critical hit) you can inflict with that weapon and do that much damage to the target. Assume you use a longsword, have a base attack bonus of +7, and possess a 17 Strength. A longsword does 1d8 damage, so its maximum damage is 8 points. Your Strength modifier is +3, so add that for a total of 11. Additional damage, such as from using the Power Attack feat (following all the rules for it normally) and the sneak attack ability are determined normally; they are not maximized. This ability cannot be used when you roll a successful critical hit. Increased Multiplier: Determine the standard critical multiplier for your weapon of choice. With this ability, you can increase that multiplier by +1. For example, the longsword has a critical multiplier of $\times 2$. Using this ability, you can increase that multiplier to $\times 3$ ($2+1=3$) once per day at 2nd level. You must declare the use of this ability before you roll any damage dice.

TOME AND BLOOD (3.0)

ACOLYTE OF THE SKIN

“No pain, no gain.”

The temptation of power drives some people to extreme lengths, regardless of the consequences. Replacing your own skin with that of a living demon is a goal that most couldn't even conceive of, let alone consider. But this ghastly fate is exactly what some spellcasters seek in their desperate quest. The Ritual of Bonding is a blasphemy that was long ago eradicated from most arcane libraries, but a few barely legible copies survive—or at least references thereto—along with promises of great power. Spellcasters who happen upon such documents can choose to destroy or ignore the find, but the temptation has already occurred. Those who give in can eventually stumble upon the complete ritual, usually through extended contact with one or more summoned fiends who are all too eager to share their terrible knowledge.

Superior Weapon Focus: Stacking with any existing Weapon Focus bonus, this adds an additional +1 to all attack rolls with the weapon master's weapon of choice. Superior Combat Reflexes: This ability lets you make a total number of attacks of opportunity in a round equal to your Dexterity modifier plus your Wisdom modifier. Ki Critical: Gain the Improved Critical feat for free. If you already possess this feat, add an additional +2 to your weapon of choice's threat range for critical hits. This +2 bonus is applied last, after any multipliers, such as those given by the Improved Critical feat or by keen weapons. Ki Whirlwind: You can make a Whirlwind Attack as a standard action rather than a full attack action. Regardless, only one Whirlwind attack can be made per round. Multiclass Note: Monk characters can freely multiclass with this class. In other words, you can give your monk PC a weapon master level, then return to the monk class for your next level, take a weapon master level after that, and so on.

Acolytes of the skin are ill-suited to any position other than one that wields temporal power. Although NPC acolytes may sometimes serve more powerful evil characters as sinister captains, they would rather be calling the shots. They prefer to remain safely ensconced in well-defended fortresses of evil, though sometimes an acolyte may lead an expedition to retrieve a rumored tome of evil arcane magic or other artifact of malign power.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an acolyte of the skin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Knowledge (The Planes [Outer Planes]): 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: The acolyte of the skin must have made peaceful contact with a summoned evil outsider.

CLASS SKILLS

The acolyte of the skin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the acolyte of the skin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Acolytes of the skin gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every second level gained in the acolyte of the skin class, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an acolyte of the skin, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Wear Fiend (Su): An acolyte of the skin summons the essence of a fiend to himself and wears it like a second skin. The Ritual of Bonding is painful and not be undertaken lightly.

The ritual requires 10 rounds from initiation to completion, and once begun, nothing can halt its progress.

The fiendish essence subsumes the caster's own skin, an agonizing process that deals 1d4 points of damage each round of the ritual—wise candidates keep some cure potions on hand.

At the end of the rite, the acolyte's skin sports an oily, almost unnoticeable sheen.

However, as he gains additional levels of the prestige class, his skin darkens, sprouts spikes, and gradually gives the wearer a fiendish visage.

The fiendish essence also begins to whisper foul secrets to its wearer, urging him to evil.

(The wearer may accept or ignore this advice according to his temperament.)

The bonded fiendish skin is for all intents and purposes the character's own.

It grants the acolyte of the skin a +1 natural armor bonus, a +2 inherent modifier to Dexterity, 60-foot darkvision, and the spell-like ability poison once per day as cast by a 16th-level caster.

The DM determines the actual nature of the skin, be it demonic, devilish, or some other fiendish creature.

Flame Resistant (Ex): At 2nd level, the fiendish skin binds tighter, granting the acolyte fire resistance 20.

Fiendish Glare (Su): At 3rd level, the acolyte of the skin gains the supernatural ability to unnerve opponents with a ferocious glare once per day.

This is not a gaze attack, and the target need not meet the acolyte's eye.

Glaring is a standard action that affects any creature he can see within 100 feet.

Opponents must succeed at a Will save (DC 20) or be appalled by the terrible promise of retribution in the acolyte's eyes, suffering a –2 morale penalty to attack rolls, damage rolls, and saving throws for 10 minutes.

A creature with 50 or fewer hit points is also stunned for 3d4 rounds, one with 51 to 100 hit points is stunned for 2d4 rounds, and one with 101 to 150 hit points is stunned for 1d4 rounds.

A creature with 151 hit points or more is not stunned but still suffers the –2 morale penalty if it fails its saving throw.

Fiendish Knowledge: The fiendish skin whispers promises of great power, and to prove it, reveals a hitherto unknown ability.

At 4th and 8th level, the acolyte chooses a bonus feat for which he already meets the prerequisites.

Skin Adaptation (Su): By 5th level, skin and wearer have grown more comfortable together, as if they had never been separate.

The natural armor bonus granted by the fiendish skin increases to +2, the acolyte's darkvision improves to a 120-foot range, and he can now use poison twice per day as cast by a 16th-level caster.

In addition, the acolyte gains an inherent +2 modifier to Constitution.

Cold Resistant (Ex): At 6th level, the fiendish skin confers cold resistance 20.

Glare of the Pit (Su): At 7th level, the acolyte gains the supernatural ability to produce fiery rays from his eyes.

Once per day as a standard action, he can project two rays (one from each eye) with a range of 100 feet.

He may aim both at one target, or one each at two different targets, by making a ranged touch attack.

A ray that hits the target deals 8d6 points of fire damage.

If both rays hit the same target, the damage is 16d6.

Summon fiend (Sp): At 9th level, the acolyte learns to draw on another power of his fiendish skin.

If the skin is demonic, once per day he can attempt to summon a vroek with a 35% chance of success; if devilish, once per day he can attempt to summon a gelugon with a 35% chance of success.

The summoned creatures do the acolyte's bidding but automatically return whence they came after 1 hour.

A fiend that has just been summoned cannot use its own summon ability for 1 hour.

At the DM's discretion, using this power leaves the acolyte beholden to the summoned fiend.

Symbiosis: At 10th level, the fiendish skin and the acolyte are one, and only final death can separate them.

His type changes to «outsider», which means (among other things) that he is no longer affected by spells that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person, but he can be hedged out by a magic circle spell against his alignment.

Additionally, the acolyte gains damage reduction 20/+1.

ALIENIST

*“Ah—it all becomes clearer now.
I can see...I can see!”*

Alienists deal with powers and entities from terrifyingly remote reaches of space and time.

For them, magical power is the triumph of the mind over the rude boundaries of dimension, distance, and often, sanity.

With knowledge and determination, they pierce the barrier at the edge of time itself.

In the Far Realm, outside of time, Herculean minds drift, absorbed in contemplations of madness.

Unspeaking beings whisper terrifying secrets to those who dare communication.

These secrets were not meant for mortals, but the alienist plunges into abysses of chaos and entropy that would blast a weaker mind.

An alienist’s mad certainty is sometimes strong enough to sway others to believe in her own future transcendence.

Alienists may, on rare occasions, gather in secluded groups to enact some obscure ritual, but more often they are encountered singly.

NPC alienists sometimes haunt libraries or specialty bookshops in large cities, skulking and mumbling among stacks of rare (and dangerous) volumes.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an alienist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (Arcana): 8 ranks.

Knowledge (The Planes): 8 ranks.

Feat: Alertness.

Spells: Ability to cast at least one Divination spell and at least one summoning spell of 3rd level or higher.

Special: Prior contact with an alienist or a pseudonatural creature.

CLASS SKILLS

The alienist’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Speak Language, Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the alienist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Alienists gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new alienist level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an alienist, she must decide to which class she adds each level of alienist for purposes of determining spells per day.

Summon Alien (Sp): When an alienist casts any summon monster spell, she summons a “pseudonatural” version of a creature chosen from the appropriate list on page 258 of the Player’s Handbook.

For example, by casting summon monster VI, she could summon a pseudonatural rast.

This adds the pseudonatural template to the summoned creature (see Pseudonatural Creatures below).

If the selected creature would normally be celestial or fiendish, the pseudonatural template replaces that template.

Alien Blessing: An alienist applies a +1 insight bonus on all saving throws, but she permanently loses 2 points of Wisdom.

Metamagic Secret: The alienist listens to the secret voices whispering from beyond time’s end, and profit thereby. At 3rd and 7th level, she may choose any metamagic feat as a bonus feat.

Mad Certainty: At 4th level, the alienist’s mad certainty in the power of entities beyond the reach of normal space and time lend her an unnatural fortitude.

She gains an additional 3 hit points as though from the Toughness feat.

However, constantly dwelling on such beings is mentally corrosive, and the alienist’s mind begins to fracture.

She develops a phobia against a specified kind of creature, suffering a –2 penalty to saving throws, attack rolls, and Charisma-based skill and ability checks in regard to these creatures.

The selected creature gains a +2 morale modifier to AC and saving throws against the phobic alienist.

The DM determine the creature feared.

Good choices include spiders, snakes, birds, or insects.

Beings that share attribute with or those that resemble the selected creature also trigger the phobia.

Pseudonatural Familiar: On reaching 5th level the alienist's familiar, if any, gains the pseudonatural template (see Pseudonatural Creatures below) in addition to the powers and abilities normal for a familiar of the appropriate level. This does not replace the familiar—the original slowly takes on pseudonatural aspects, which become fully active at this point.

From this point on, newly summoned familiars already possess the pseudonatural template.

Extra Summoning: From 6th level on, the alienist gains one extra spell slot at her highest spell level.

This slot can be used only for a summon monster spell.

As the alienist becomes able to learn higher-level spells, the extra slot migrates up to the new highest level.

Insane Certainty: At 8th level, the alienist's mad certainty crystallizes into a truly chilling mania.

She gain an additional 3 hit points as though from the Toughness feat, but her phobia likewise intensifies.

All penalties and bonuses listed under Mad Certainty for the selected creature increase to -6/+6.

Timeless Body: At 9th level, the alienist learns the secret of perpetual youth.

She no longer suffers ability penalties for aging and cannot be magically aged (see Table 6-5: Aging Effects on page 93 of the Player's Handbook).

Any penalties she may have already suffered, however, remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue, but the alienist is stolen away by horrible entities when her time is up, and she is never seen again.

Transcendence (Su): At 10th level, the alienist, through long association with alien entities and intensive study of insane secrets, transcends her mortal form and becomes an alien creature.

Her type changes to "outsider", which means (among other things) that she is no longer affected by spells that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person, but she can be hedged out by a magic circle spell against her alignment.

Additionally, the alienist gains damage reduction 20/+1 and electricity resistance 20.

Upon achieving transcendence, the alienist's appearance undergoes a minor physical change, usually growing a small tentacle or other strange addition or substitution, such as an extra appendage, organ, eye, or enigmatic lump. The alienist can hide this abnormality in a robe or hood, but the alien growth is not under the alienist's control and sometimes moves, twitches, opens, or otherwise animates of its own accord.

Anyone who shares the alienist's predilection for study of the Far Realms immediately recognizes her transcendent nature, and she gains a +2 circumstance modifier on all Charisma-based skill and ability checks when interacting with such beings.

She gains a +2 circumstance modifier on Intimidation checks against all other creatures to whom she reveals her abnormal nature.

PSEUDONATURAL CREATURES

Pseudonatural creatures dwell past the eons that lie between the stars, beyond the planes as we know them, nestled in far realms of insanity.

When summoned to the Material Plane they often take the form of, and emulate the abilities of familiar creatures, though they are more gruesome in appearance than their earthly counterparts.

Alternatively, they may appear in a manner more consistent with their origins: A mass of writhing tentacles is a favorite, although other terrible forms are always possible.

CREATING A PSEUDONATURAL CREATURE:

"Pseudonatural" is a template that can be added to any corporeal creature (referred to hereafter as the «base creature»).

The creature's type changes to «outsider».

It uses all the base creature's statistics and special abilities except as noted here.

Special Attacks: A pseudonatural creature retains all the special attacks of the base creature and also gains the following.

True Strike (Su): Once per day, the creature can make a normal attack with a +20 insight modifier on a single attack roll.

The creature is not affected by the miss chance that applies to attacks against a concealed target.

Special Qualities: A pseudonatural creature retains all the special qualities of the base creature and also gains the following.

- Electricity and acid resistance (see the table below).

- Damage reduction (see the table below).

- SR equal to double the creature's HD (maximum 25).

If the base creature already has one or more of these special qualities, use the better value.

Hit Dice	Electricity, Acid
	Resistance	Damage Reduction
1-3	5	—
4-7	10	5/+1
8-11	15	5/+2
12+	20	10/+3

Alternate Form (Su): At will, a pseudonatural creature can take the form of a grotesque, tentacled mass (or another appropriately gruesome form determined by the DM), but all its abilities remain unchanged despite the alien appearance.

Changing shape is standard action.

Other creatures receive a -1 morale penalty to their attack rolls against pseudonatural creatures in this alternate form.

Saves: Same as the base creature.

Abilities: Same as the base creature, but Intelligence is at least 3.

Skills: Same as the base creature.

Feats: Same as the base creature.

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground.

Organization: Same as the base creature.

Challenge Rating: Up to 3 HD, as base creature; 4 HD to 7 HD, as base creature +1; 8+HD, as base creature +2.

Treasure: Same as the base creature.

Alignment: Same as base creature.

Advancement: Same as the base creature.

ARCANE TRICKSTER

“Got it!”

Arcane tricksters combine their knowledge of spells with a taste for intrigue, larceny, or just plain mischief.

They are among the most adaptable of adventurers.

Arcane spellcasting and the sneak attack ability are needed to qualify for this class, making it a natural choice for multiclassed wizard/rogues or sorcerer/rogues.

Assassins occasionally opt for this class, but usually only if they already have wizard or sorcerer levels.

Arcane tricksters tend to use a seat-of-the-pants approach to adventuring, loading up on spells that improve their stealth and mobility.

NPC arcane tricksters are the sort of people who might bump into you in a crowded tavern.

(Check your pockets).

Hit Dice: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane trickster a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Decipher Script: 7 ranks.

Disable Device: 7 ranks.

Escape Artist: 7 ranks.

Knowledge (Arcana): 4 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast mage hand and at least one arcane spell of 3rd level or higher.

Special: Sneak attack +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

The arcane trickster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int, exclusive skill), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), Search (Int), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the arcane trickster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arcane trickster gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new arcane trickster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an arcane trickster, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Ranged Legerdemain (Su): Using his unique talents, an arcane trickster can perform one of the following class skills at a range of 30 feet: Disable Device, Open Lock, or Pick Pocket.

Working at a distance increases the normal skill check DC by 5, and the arcane trickster cannot take 10 on the check. Any object so manipulated must weigh 5 pounds or less. The arcane trickster can use ranged legerdemain only a certain number of times per day as determined by his level (see Table 3-4: The Arcane Trickster).

He can make only one ranged skill check each day, and only if he has at least one rank in the skill being used.

Sneak Attack: This is exactly like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by +1d6 every other level (2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th).

If the arcane trickster gets a sneak attack modifier from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Impromptu Sneak Attack (Su): Once a day, the arcane trickster's unique combination of magical and rogue skills allows the arcane trickster to declare one melee or ranged attack the character makes to be a sneak attack (the target can be no more than 30 feet distant if the impromptu sneak attack is a ranged attack).

The target of impromptu sneak attack loses any Dexterity bonus to Armor Class, but only against that attack.

The power can be used against any target, but creatures that are not subject to critical hits suffer no extra damage

(though they still lose any Dexterity bonus against the attack).

At 7th level, the arcane trickster can use this ability twice a day.

BLADESINGER

'Warfare, like music, is exquisite.'

Bladesingers are elves who have blended art, swordplay, and arcane magic into a harmonious whole.

In battle, a bladesinger's lithe movements and subtle tactics are beautiful, belying their deadly martial efficiency.

Multiclassed fighter/wizards are the most obvious candidates for the prestige class, although any elf who can wield a martial weapon and cast arcane spells can become a bladesinger.

Bladesinger ranger/wizards, rogue/wizards, and even bards are not unknown.

Bladesingers command great respect in most elf communities, and NPC bladesingers usually serve as itinerant guardians and champions of the elf community at large.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bladesinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf Base Attack: +5.

Concentration: 4 ranks.

Perform (Dance): 3 ranks.

Perform (Sing): 3 ranks.

Tumble: 3 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge, Expertise, Still Spell, Weapon Focus (longsword).

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 1st level or higher.

Special: Proficiency with longsword.

CLASS SKILLS

The bladesinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Spellcraft (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the bladesinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bladesingers gain no proficiency in any additional weapons.

They are proficient with light armor but not with shields. Bladesong Style: When wielding a longsword in one hand (and nothing in the other), the bladesinger gains a dodge bonus to AC equal to his Intelligence modifier.

If the bladesinger wears medium or heavy armor, he loses all benefits of the bladesong style.

Bonus Feats: At 2nd, 6th, and 10th level, the bladesinger gains a bonus feat.

This must be a metamagic feat or a feat chosen from the following list: Combat Reflexes, Improved Critical (longsword), Improved Disarm, Mobility, Quick Draw, Spring Attack, and Whirlwind Attack.

BLADESINGER SPELL LIST

1st level—expeditious retreat, mage armor, magic weapon, shield, true strike.

2nd level—blur, bull's strength, cat's grace, mirror image, protection from arrows.

3rd level—displacement, greater magic weapon, haste, keen edge.

4th level—dimension door, fire shield, improved invisibility, stoneskin.

BLOOD MAGUS

"One slow red river flows through us all."

Fade to red, then nothing.

What happened?

Where are you?

No sound, no light, nothing.

You can't see or hear, or even feel your own body.

The awful truth of your plight steals over you...you're dead!

An eternity passes, then you feel a call from beyond this nothingness.

Something beckons, and you are drawn up out of the endless gray, happy to leave your final fate undecided.

A swirl of color streaks toward you, enveloping, bathing you.

You have come back!

A sound breaks into your ears, the sweetest sound you will ever hear.

It is the renewed pulse of blood through your veins—blood music: the sound of your life.

You can feel it reenergizing every particle of your form, flushing death from you and leaving life in its place.

It is thick and warm, and you greedily embrace it.

Blood magi are formerly deceased spellcasters who, when returned to life, gain an understanding of their blood's importance, bequeathed by their close call.

They learn to evoke magic from this vital fluid that sustains their lives.

A blood magus cannot be trained, owing to the unusual nature of his enlightenment, and is most likely to be a sorcerer.

NPC blood magi are thus rarely if ever found in groups but are thinly scattered throughout the population of spellcasters.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a blood magus, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Heal: 4 ranks.

Feat: Toughness.

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 3rd level or higher.

Special: The blood magus must have been revived after death through another's use of raise dead, resurrection, or other methods of returning life to a dead body.

CLASS SKILLS

The blood magus's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con),

Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the blood magus prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A blood magus gains no additional proficiencies in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every second level gained in the blood magus class, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a blood magus, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Blood Component (Su): A blood magus may substitute a drop of his own blood for a spell's material components, if any.

The pinprick or minor knife cut to draw the requisite blood is a free action that becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

The magus does not need to make a Concentration check to complete the spell, despite the wound.

Using this ability deals the blood magus 1 point of damage but raises the spell's save DC by 1.

Substituting blood for a costly material component requires drawing a greater amount.

The blood magus deals more damage to himself when doing so, according to the table below.

Component Cost (gp)	Damage Dealt
1-50	5
51-300	11
301-750	17
750+	23

Stanch (Ex): The blood magus automatically stabilizes his wounds when his hit points drop below 0.

He still passes on if he reaches -10 hit points or below.

Scarification (Ex): At 2nd level, the blood magus learns to inscribe spells on his own skin for later use.

This involves deeply scratching the skin (which deals no damage but often leaves scars).

The scratches remain fresh until the inscribed spell is cast, at which time the minor wound heals normally.

Effectively, the blood magus gains the Scribe Scroll feat using an alternative medium (see page 84 of the Player's Handbook).

All rules, XP costs, and expenses that apply to Scribe Scroll also apply to this ability.

Likewise, «reading» a scar follows the same rules as reading a scroll, but only the blood magus can decipher his own scars.

One's own skin leaves a limited amount of room to easily inscribe and later «read», magical scars.

Thus, a blood magus can have only six active scars at any one time.

Death Knell (Sp): At 3rd level, the blood magus gains the spell-like ability to use death knell as the spell once per day.

Blood Draught (Ex): At 4th level, the blood magus learns how to store spells of up to 3rd level in his own blood.

Effectively, he gains the Brew Potion feat using an alternative medium (see page 80 of the Player's Handbook).

All rules, XP costs, and expenses that apply to Brew Potion also apply to this ability, with the following exceptions.

Once «brewed», a blood draught remains in circulation within the magus's body.

The maximum number of draughts stored at one time is equal to his levels of blood magus plus his Constitution score, but if he is ever slain, they are all immediately ruined—even if the blood magus is subsequently returned to life.

Blood draughts are never accidentally lost through major blood loss or by a blood-draining attack.

To consume the draught, the blood magus pricks his skin, automatically bringing forth the desired effect.

This is a standard action that draws an attack of opportunity, like drinking a potion.

Others can also partake of a given blood draught (if they have a strong stomach)—the blood magus concentrates to draw the desired draught to the surface.

Infusion (Ex): At 5th level, the blood magus prepares a special one-time distillation of his own blood.

Partaking of the infusion, he permanently gains 2 points of Constitution.

Gore (Su): At 6th level, a blood magus can draw more blood with any spell that successfully damages a living target.

This is a supernatural ability.

The blood magus inflicts a minor wound on himself; the pinprick or knife cut is a free action that becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

Using this ability deals the blood magus 1 point of damage.

The spell becomes «blood seeking» and deals 1d6 points of damage in addition to the damage the spell normally deals, as extra blood is drawn from the wound.

The magus does not need to make a Concentration check to complete the spell, despite the wound.

The blood magus can use the gore and blood component abilities to enhance the same spell, suffering cumulative damage.

This causes a spell that normally takes 1 action to cast to become a full-round action.

Thicker Than Water (Su): At 7th level, the blood magus's vital fluids are partially under his conscious control.

When the blood magus is injured, his blood withdraws from the wound, preventing some damage.

Thus, he always takes 1 less point of damage than normally indicated.

Effectively, the blood magus gains a «hardness» of 1.

Awaken Blood (Su): At 8th level, the blood magus gains the supernatural ability to bestow momentary consciousness on an opponent's blood.

Once per day, he can make a melee touch attack against a living foe.

If he hits, the opponent's blood attempts to get free—all at once.

The hydrostatic pressure disrupts the victim's tissues, dealing 10d10 points of damage.

If he misses, the blood magus can try again until he is successful against an opponent.

«Conscious» blood returns to its natural state after 1 round.

Homunculus (Sp): At 9th level, the blood magus uses his own blood to give life to a new companion creature—a homunculus.

The homunculus created by a blood magus has the same abilities as those on page 120 of the Monster Manual but is more robust.

It has 6 Hit Dice, its bite attack bonus improves to +5, and its Fortitude save increases to +2, its Reflex save to +4, and its Will save to +3.

To build his homunculus, the blood magus does not use the normal construction rules listed in the Monster Manual.

The only requirements are 1 hour spent in the ritual and the permanent loss of 1 hit point, as the caster instills more personal blood in his creation than is usual.

This stronger link provides a special advantage: The blood magus can transfer his own wounds to the homunculus via touch as a supernatural ability.

This is a standard action that allows the blood magus to transfer 1d4 points of damage.

No limit exists on the number of times he can take this action, but the blood magus should observe caution: If he transfers enough of his own wounds to his homunculus to kill the creature, its destruction deals him 2d10 points of damage (as noted in the Monster Manual).

Damage transferred to the homunculus can be cured or healed normally.

A blood magus may only have one homunculus created in this fashion at a time.

Bloodwalk (Su): At 10th level, the blood magus is perfectly attuned to the song of blood.

He gains the supernatural ability to transport himself great distances via the blood of living creatures.

Once per day as a standard action, he can seamlessly enter any living creature whose size equals or exceeds his own and pass any distance to another living creature in a single round, regardless of the distance separating the two.

The blood magus merely designates a direction and distance («a living creature 20 miles due west of here»), and the bloodwalk ability transports him to a destination creature as close as possible to the desired location.

He can't specify a named individual as the end point unless he has previously obtained a sample of that creature's blood, preserved in a small vial that must be carried on the blood magus's person.

The entry and destination creatures need not be familiar to the blood magus, but they must be alive and possess blood in their veins.

(Thus, plants and the more bizarre outsiders are not eligible targets).

The blood magus may not use himself as an entry creature. If the intended entry creature is unwilling, he must hit with a melee touch attack to enter.

When exiting a creature, the blood magus chooses an adjacent square in which to appear.

Entering and leaving a creature is painless, unless the blood magus wishes otherwise (see below).

In most cases, though, the destination creature finds being the end point of a magical portal surprising and quite unsettling.

If he desires, the blood magus can attempt to make a «bloody exit» from the destination creature.

If the creature fails a Fortitude save (DC 18), the exiting blood magus takes on solidity a little too soon.

He bursts forth explosively from the creature's body, dealing 16d6 points of damage.

The blood magus must succeed at a Fortitude save (DC 13) or take 2d4 points of damage from the shock of his exit.

Except where noted above, this class feature resembles the dryad's ability to move from tree to tree (see Monster Manual, page 79).

CANDLE CASTER

“Let your mind attain the perfection of a single, perfect flame.”

Flame holds a special attraction to some people.

Simply burning, a candle is a work of art—a teardrop of fire clinging to the dark wick, itself shrouded in a column of wax that is both the flame's base and fuel: a wonder indeed. Secrets could be stored in that wax: secrets...or spells.

Also called «spell chandlers», these specialists fill their time fashioning candles, both for esthetics and for power.

The spells stored therein are revealed as the flame ignites and disperses the wax medium.

Moreover, the wax itself shapes and molds stored spells so that they are enhanced by the burning flame.

Candle casters have quicker access to featlike abilities that enhance the effects of their candle-stored spells, and so they are often wooed by adventuring companies who have realized the importance of consumable magic items in the dungeon depths.

NPC candle casters sometimes appear in places where magic is sold, attempting to sell their unfettered candles (which can be used by anyone) on an equal footing with potions.

However, lighting a candle is more difficult than drinking a potion and takes longer to produce an effect, so unfettered candles are unlikely to ever reach the popularity that potions enjoy.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a candle caster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Craft (Candlemaking): 6 ranks.

Feat: Great Fortitude.

Spells: Ability to cast spells of 3rd level or higher.

Special: The candle caster must initially possess a supply of at least 100 tindertwigs.

CLASS SKILLS

The candle caster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the candle caster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A candle caster gains no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new candle caster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a candle caster, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Scribe Candle: The candle caster can store spells in candles. Each candle holds one spell.

Effectively, the candle caster gains the Scribe Scroll feat using an alternative medium (see page 84 of the Player's Handbook).

All rules, XP costs, and expenses that apply to Scribe Scroll also apply to this ability.

A candle normally illuminates a 5-foot-radius and burns for 1 hour, but a scribed candle burns as noted below.

A burning candle cannot be extinguished unless the candle caster wills it (although dispel magic still suppresses the effect as it would for any other magic item).

To have any chance of activating a stored spell, the candle caster must meet the usual requirements for successfully reading a scroll.

The stored spell must be of a type she can cast and on her class list, and she must have the requisite ability score to cast the spell (for example, Intelligence 15 for a wizard casting a 5th-level spell).

Even then, she must make a caster level check (DC = scribed candle's caster level +1) to cast the spell correctly.

If she fails, the spell is lost, and she must make a Wisdom check (DC 5) to avoid a mishap (see page 203 of DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide).

Identify the Candle: To activate a prepared candle, the candle caster must first identify it.

This requires a Spellcraft check against a DC of 15 + spell level.

(If it is a candle she scribed, this step is unnecessary).

Light the Candle: Lighting the candle is best done using a tindertwig.

Doing so is a standard action, which is subject to disruption just as casting a spell would be.

Lighting the candle by a slower method, such as flint and tinder or even a magnifying glass, is a full-round action under the best of circumstances, and definitely draws an attack of opportunity.

A candle caster can "light defensively" by making a successful Concentration check (DC 15).

This preempts an attack of opportunity, but if she fails the check she does not light the candle.

Alternatively, the candle caster can suffer the attack of opportunity, and if hit, attempt a Concentration check (DC 10+points of damage taken) to light the candle anyway.

Candle Effect: A successfully lit candle automatically activates the stored spell at the beginning of the candle caster's action in the next round (which does not draw an attack of opportunity).

It works exactly like a spell prepared and cast the normal way.

However, since she lit the candle during the previous round, the candle caster can take normal actions on the same round the candle's spell takes effect.

The flame of the burning candle mimics the triggered spell's duration.

Thus, an instantaneous spell causes the candle to flare and burn out immediately, while a candle scribed with a spell having a longer duration burns for that length of time.

However, if the flame is extinguished before the spell expires, the spell's duration is cut short.

A scribed candle may incorporate any number of the special enhancements noted below, as long as their combined requirements do not make the spell take up a spell slot higher than the caster's normal maximum.

Extend Candle: At 2nd level, the candle caster can extend the duration of spells stored in a candle.

Effectively, she gains the Extend Spell metamagic feat (see page 82 of the Player's Handbook), but only when scribing candles.

All the rules that apply to using Extend Spell also apply to extended candles, and the scribed spell takes up a spell slot one level higher than the spell's actual level.

Unfettered Candle: At 3rd level, the candle caster learns how to store spells in candles that can be triggered by people other than herself.

Effectively, she gains the Brew Potion feat using an alternative medium (see page 80 of the Player's Handbook).

All rules, XP costs, and expenses that apply to Brew Potion also apply to this ability.

Like a potion, only spells of 3rd level and lower can be scribed in an unfettered candle.

Any creature who successfully lights the unfettered candle, following the procedure described above, is targeted by the candle's stored spell at the beginning of the creature's next turn in the round.

An unfettered candle otherwise works exactly like a normally scribed candle.

Enlarge Candle: At 4th level, the candle caster can double the range of spells she stores in a candle.

Effectively, she gains the Enlarge Spell metamagic feat (see page 82 of the Player's Handbook), but only when scribing candles.

All the rules that apply to using Enlarge Spell also apply to enlarged candles, and the scribed spell takes up a spell slot one level higher than the spell's actual level.

Dipped Candle: At 5th level, the candle caster refines her chandler's craft to the point where she can store two spells in the same candle.

She must scribe each spell separately, paying full XP and gp costs for both, and must specify the order in which the spells take effect.

The first spell is triggered normally by successfully lighting the scribed candle; when the duration of the first spell ends, the second power stored in the candle automatically triggers.

If the first spell is suppressed by dispel magic, or the candle caster ends the effect voluntarily, the second effect does not trigger but is not lost.

The candle caster can trigger the second effect by relighting the candle.

If the second spell requires a target, the candle caster can target the effect when it activated as if casting the spell normally, as long as she is within 30 feet of the lit candle. Otherwise, the candle is the default center of effect.

The two spells maybe differentiated by color; for example, the top half of the candle is yellow while the bottom is blue.

Empower Candle: At 6th level, the candle caster can increase all variable, numeric effects of a spell she stores in a candle.

Effectively, she gains the Empower Spell metamagic feat (see page 82 of the Player's Handbook), but only when scribing candles.

All the rules that apply to using Empower Spell also apply to empowered candles, and the scribed spell takes up a spell slot two levels higher than the spell's actual level.

Quick Light: At 7th level, the candle caster learns to activate her candles more quickly.

The act of lighting the candle takes no less time, but the stored spell takes effect as soon as the candle is lit (not on the candle caster's next turn).

Heighten Candle: Upon reaching 8th level, the candle caster can increase the effective level of a spell stored in a candle.

Effectively, she gains the Heighten Spell metamagic feat (see page 82 of the Player's Handbook), but only when scribing candles.

All the rules that apply to using Heighten Spell also apply to heightened candles, and the scribed spell takes up a spell slot at the new level.

Striped Candle: At 9th level, the candle caster further refines her ability to store two spells in the same candle. She must still scribe each spell separately, paying full XP and gp costs for both.

Successfully lighting the scribed candle triggers both stored spells simultaneously, and the candle caster chooses any targets for both effects.

The two spells may be differentiated by color; for example, the left half of the candle is green while the right is red.

Maximize Candle: At 10th level, the candle caster reaches the pinnacle of her craft, gaining the ability to maximize all variable, numeric effects of spells she stores in a candle. Effectively, she gains the Maximize Spell metamagic feat (see page 83 of the Player's Handbook), but only when scribing candles.

All the rules that apply to using Maximize Spell also apply to maximized candles, and the scribed spell takes up a spell slot three levels higher than the spell's actual level.

COMPLETE BLADESINGER

It seems there is an imposter lurking on pages 49 and 50. It's a bladesinger alright, but there are a few pieces missing. Here's the complete version:

BLADESINGER

Bladesingers are elves who have blended art, swordplay, and arcane magic into a harmonious whole. In battle, a bladesinger's lithe movements and subtle tactics seem beautiful, and belie their deadly martial efficiency. Multiclassed fighter/wizards can become bladesingers most easily, though any elf who can wield a martial weapon and can cast arcane spells can become a bladesinger. Bladesinging ranger/wizards, rogue/wizards and bladesinger bards are not unknown. Bladesingers command great respect in most elf communities and NPC bladesingers usually serve as itinerant guardians and champions of the elf community at large.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bladesinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf, half-elf.

Base Attack: +5.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge, Expertise, Still Spell, Weapon Focus (longsword).

Skills: Concentration 4+ ranks, Perform 3+ ranks (dance, sing, + any 1 other), Tumble 3+ ranks.

Special: Proficient with longsword, ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The bladesinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Spellcraft (Int), Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bladesinger:

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The bladesinger gains proficiency in the use of no weapons and with light armor. If the bladesinger wears medium or heavy armor, he loses all benefits of any of his song abilities (bladesong, lesser, spellsong, song of celerity, greater spellsong, song of fury). A bladesinger suffers the normal arcane spell failure chance when casting spells while armored (except as noted below).

Bladesong: When wielding a longsword in one hand (and nothing in the other), the bladesinger gains a dodge bonus to AC equal to his Intelligence bonus.

Lesser Spellsong: When wielding a longsword in one hand (and nothing in the other), the bladesinger can "take 10" when making a Concentration check to cast defensively.

Song of Celerity: When wielding a longsword in one hand (and nothing in the other) and using the full attack action, the bladesinger can cast one bladesinger spell each round as a free action.

Greater Spellsong: The bladesinger ignores arcane spell failure when wearing light armor.

Song of Fury: When wielding a longsword in one hand (and nothing in the other) and using the full attack action, the bladesinger can make one extra attack in a round at his highest base attack, but this attack and each other attack made that round suffer a -2 penalty. This penalty applies for 1 round, so it affects attacks of opportunity the bladesinger might make before his next action.

Bonus Feats: The bladesinger gets a bonus feat. These feats must be drawn from the following list: Any Metamagic feat, Combat Reflexes, Improved Critical (longsword), Improved Disarm, Mobility, Quick Draw, Spring Attack, Whirlwind Attack.

Spells per Day: Every level a bladesinger gains, the character gains new spells per day as shown.

When casting bladesinger spells, the bladesinger's caster level is equal to his bladesinger level.

A bladesinger's bonus spells are based on Intelligence. The Difficulty Class for saving throws against bladesinger spells is 10 + the spell's level + the bladesinger's Intelligence modifier.

A bladesinger keeps a spellbook and must prepare spells each day as a wizard does.

He can have any number of bladesinger spells in his spellbook (see Writing a New Spell into a Spellbook, Player's Handbook, page 155).

At levels 1 through 9, a bladesinger gain two spells he can add to his spellbook free.

These spells must be bladesingers spells the character can cast.

DRAGON DISCIPLE

"My heart is ancient."

A dragon disciple is different.

He always suspected, but the flying dreams confirm it. The experience is so vivid and real that other dreams are as dusty cinders in comparison.

Hurling through the sky, unfettered by the earth, the dreamer exults in his beautifully scaled wings pulling him through the clouds.

His senses are alive as never before, allowing him to smell, hear, and see with a terrible clarity no mere human can ever really comprehend.

A volatile power burns in his lungs, a potency he knows he could unleash with a mere breath.

It's almost...draconic.

It is known that certain powerful dragons can take humanoid form and even have humanoid lovers.

Sometimes a child is born of this union, and every child of that child unto the thousandth generation claims a bit of dragon blood, be it ever so small.

Usually, little comes of it, though mighty sorcerers occasionally credit their powers to draconic heritage.

For some, however, dragon blood beckons irresistibly. First come the dreams.

Many dismiss them as nothing more than wish fulfillment (or even nightmares), and that's the end of it.

But a few embrace the dreams, recognizing their allure as a promise.

These become dragon disciples, who use their magical power as a catalyst to ignite their dragon blood, realizing its fullest potential.

Dragon disciples prefer a life of exploration to a cloistered existence.

Most are sorcerers, but bards sometimes follow the path.

Already adept at magic, many pursue adventure, especially if it furthers their goal of finding out more about their draconic heritage.

All dragon disciples are drawn to areas known to harbor dragons.

Hit Die: Special (see below).

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragon disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any nondragon (cannot already be a half-dragon).

Knowledge (Arcana): 8 ranks.

Languages: Draconic.

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells without preparation.

Special: The player chooses a dragon type when taking the first level of this prestige class, subject to the DM's approval.

CLASS SKILLS

The dragon disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the dragon disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dragon disciples gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Bonus Spells (Sp): Dragon disciples gain bonus spells as they gain levels in this prestige class, as if through having a high ability score, listed in the above table.

A bonus spell can be added to any level of spells the disciple already has the ability to cast.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a dragon disciple, he must decide to which class he adds the bonus spell(s).

Once a bonus spell has been applied, it cannot be shifted.

Hit Die Increase: As a dragon disciple gains levels in this prestige class, his dragon nature expresses itself more.

His base Hit Die type increases at 1st, 4th, and 6th level.

This is not a retroactive benefit: Beginning at the appropriate level, the dragon disciple rolls for hit points with the increased Hit Die type.

Natural Armor: At 1st, 5th, and 8th level, a dragon disciple becomes more draconic in appearance.

His skin develops tiny iridescent scales, nearly invisible at first but becoming more noticeable at higher levels.

This provides increasing natural armor bonuses to his base Armor Class, as indicated in Table 3–8 (these bonuses do not stack).

As his skin thickens, the dragon disciple takes on more and more of his progenitor's physical aspect.

Claws and Bite: At 2nd level, the dragon disciple gains claw and bite attacks if he does not already have them.

Use the values below or the disciple's base claw and bite attacks, whichever are greater.

Size	Bite Damage	Claw Damage
Small	1d4	1d3
Medium-size	1d6	1d4
Large	1d8	1d6

Ability Boost: As the dragon disciple gains levels in this prestige class, his ability scores increase as noted in Table 3–8.

These increases stack and are gained as if through level advancement.

Breath Weapon (Su): At 3rd and 7th level, the dragon disciple begins to develop his ancestor's signature ability: a breath weapon.

The type depends on the dragon variety whose heritage he enjoys.

The amount of damage dealt is one-third of full strength at 3rd level, increases to two-thirds at 7th level, and reaches full potency at 10th level (dragon apotheosis).

Only the potential damage changes; the area and the save DC are as the full-strength weapon (see below).

Dragon Variety	Breath Weapon	3rd Level	7th Level	10th Level	Save DC
Black	Line* of acid	2d4	4d4	6d4	17
Blue	Line of lightning	2d8	4d8	6d8	18
Green	Cone of gas	2d6	4d6	6d6	17
Red	Cone of fire	2d10	4d10	6d10	19
White	Cone of cold	1d6	2d6	3d6	16

Brass	Line of fire	1d6	2d6	3d6	17
Bronze	Line of lightning	2d6	4d6	6d6	18
Copper	Line of acid	2d4	4d4	6d4	17
Gold	Cone of fire	2d10	4d10	6d10	20
Silver	Cone of cold	2d8	4d8	6d8	18

* A line is always 5 ft. high, 5 ft. wide, and 60 ft. long

 A cone is always 30 ft. long.

Regardless of its strength, the breath weapon can be used only once per day.

Use all rules for dragon breath (see the Dragon entry in the Monster Manual) except as specified here.

Enlargement: At 5th level, the dragon disciple's size increases one step, from Small to Medium-size or from Medium-size to Large.

(A character already of size Large or larger does not get any bigger).

The change in size affects the dragon disciple's base claw and bite damage (see above).

In addition, he gains a –1 size modifier to his base attack bonus and Armor Class.

Wings: At 9th level, dragon disciples of size Large and above grow wings.

They can now fly at their normal speed (average maneuverability).

Smaller creatures have wings only if they already possessed them.

Dragon Apotheosis: At 10th level, the dragon disciple fully realizes his draconic heritage and takes on the half-dragon template.

His breath weapon reaches full strength, and he gains an additional 4 points of Strength and 2 points of Charisma. His natural armor bonus increases to +4, and he acquires low-light vision, darkvision (60-ft.-range), immunity to sleep and paralysis effects, and an additional immunity based on the dragon variety (see page 214 of the Monster Manual for complete details).

ELEMENTAL SAVANT

"O to be the snowflake, the cleansing flame, the ancient stone, the endless wind!"

Elemental savants study the basic building blocks of existence—air, earth, fire, and water—learning to harness their powers.

Eventually they transcend their mortal forms and become elemental beings.

Most elemental savants start out as wizards, although clerics and druids are not unknown.

Sorcerers occasionally take this prestige class, but since metamagic feats are of less utility to them, they have difficulty using the class's strengths to their fullest.

NPC elemental savants usually prefer to pursue their studies in solitude or in the company of other elemental savants.

Sometimes groups of them gather in places where an element's majesty and power is on display, such as the flanks of a volcano, an island, or a high, windy mountain.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an elemental savant, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (Arcana): 8 ranks.

Knowledge (The Planes): 8 ranks.

Feat: Energy Substitution (acid, cold, electricity, or fire).

Spells: Ability to cast at least three spells with one of the acid, cold, electricity, or fire descriptors and at least one summon spell.

At least one of these spells must be 3rd level or higher.

Alternatively, the character must be able to cast at least one spell of 3rd level or higher and have access to one of the following clerical domains: Air, Earth, Fire, or Water.

Special: The elemental savant must have made prior peaceful contact with an elemental or with an outsider having an elemental subtype (Air, Earth, Fire, or Water).

CLASS SKILLS

The elemental savant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Speak Language, and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the elemental savant class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Elemental savants gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new elemental savant level is gained (except at 10th level), the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an elemental savant, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Elemental Transition: Beginning at 1st level, the elemental savant begins to transcend her mortal form, on the path toward becoming an elemental creature.

On first taking this prestige class, she chooses an element, which must be allied with a type of energy she can substitute using Energy Substitution.

Each element also has an opposing element and energy form, as shown below.

Element	Allied Energy	Opposing Element and Energy
Air	Electricity	Acid, Earth
Earth	Acid	Air, Electricity
Fire	Fire	Cold, Water
Water	Cold	Fire

The elemental savant cannot use Energy Substitution to insert a type of energy opposed to her chosen element. For example, an air elemental savant can substitute lightning for another form of energy in a spell, but she is prohibited from substituting acid.

At 1st level, the elemental savant becomes immune to magical sleep effects.

At 4th level, she gains darkvision with a range of 60 feet and immunity to paralysis.

At 7th level, she gains immunity to stunning.

Resistance (Ex): As the elemental savant gains levels in this prestige class, she becomes more resistant to the type of energy allied with her chosen element.

At 1st level, she gains resistance 5 against this energy form. This rises to resistance 10 at 4th level, resistance 15 at 7th level, and complete immunity when she becomes an elemental being (at 10th level).

Elemental Focus(Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the elemental savant learns to better manipulate energy allied with her chosen element.

The save DC for any spell using that type of energy increases +1.

This rises to +2 at 5th level and +3 at 8th level.

These increases are cumulative with those granted by the Spell Focus and Greater Spell Focus feats.

Elemental Penetration (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the elemental savant further refines her ability to wield energy allied with her chosen element.

When she casts a spell using that type of energy, she gains a +1 competence modifier on caster level checks (1d20 +caster level) to beat a creature's spell resistance.

At 6th level, this modifier increases to +2, and at 9th level it increases to +3.

These increases are cumulative with those granted by the Spell Penetration and Greater Spell Penetration feats.

Elemental Perfection: At 10th level the elemental savant, through long association with elemental entities and extensive study of their secrets, completely transcends her mortal form to become an elemental creature.

Her type changes to «elemental», which means (among other things) that she is no longer affected by spells that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person.

She gains an elemental creature's immunity to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning and is no longer subject to critical hits or flanking.

The elemental savant gains the speed and movement modes, special attacks, and special qualities of a medium elemental of the appropriate type, as noted in the Monster Manual, except that the save DC against her elemental attack form, if any (whirlwind, burn, or vortex) is 20+her Constitution modifier.

Upon achieving this state, the elemental savant's appearance undergoes a minor physical change, usually to the skin or eyes.

An earth elemental savant, for example, might acquire gemlike eyes and hard, pebbly skin.

Anyone who shares the elemental savant's predilection for study of her chosen plane immediately recognizes her transcendent nature.

She gains a +2 circumstance modifier on all Charisma-based skill and ability checks when interacting with creatures having her elemental type and with other elemental savants who have chosen her element.

Elemental perfection is not without cost.

The elemental savant can be hedged out by a magic circle spell against her alignment.

She also takes double damage from energy attacks allied with her opposing element unless the attack allows a saving throw for half damage, in which case she takes half damage even on a successful save.

Immunity (Ex): At 10th level, the elemental savant is completely comfortable with energy allied with her chosen element.

She gains immunity to that type of energy, in addition to the immunities granted by her elemental form (see Elemental Perfection below).

FATESPINNER

“Keep trying.

I have a feeling your luck will change—soon.”

Some people are lucky.

Others, less so.

And a few make their own luck.

A fatespinner (also called a «mage of many fates») has pulled back the curtain of chance, circumstance, and chaos to glimpse a deeper truth: probability.

When one event occurs, innumerable possible ones do not, as the universe blindly seeks balance.

Through his newfound understanding, the fatespinner satisfies that unthinking drive—with prejudice.

He can increase the probability of events in his favor, at the expense of a greater probability of undesirable events.

Any arcane spellcaster who has cursed his bad luck is a potential candidate for this prestige class.

Who has not fired off a spell, hoping fervently but impotently for a particular outcome, or sadly noted the astounding luck of an enemy who resists spell after spell?

The fatespinner is all about applying some control over the seeming vagaries of chance—fortune for himself, misfortune for his foes.

NPC fatespinners are often found in positions of power and authority, as would be expected from those able to directly affect their own destiny.

Others continue to ply the world, honing their abilities and seeking their ultimate fortune.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fatespinner, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (arcana): 8 ranks.

Knowledge (any): 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 3rd level or higher.

Special: The fatespinner must have avoided death (or severe calamity) by the machinations of fate.

For instance, if he misses a ferry crossing to the nearby Isle of Sadonne due to a strange premonition that caused him to tarry overlong at the landing, and learns that the ferry was lost with all aboard to a sudden storm, it can be said that fate has spared him.

CLASS SKILLS

The fatespinner's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the fatespinner prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A fatespinner gains no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every second level gained in the fatespinner class, as well as at 7th level, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a fatespinner, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Spin Fate (Ex): The mage of many fates understands that "chance" is less random than many believe, and he can adjust the probability of certain events.

This is an extraordinary ability.

When a fatespinner casts a spell that allows a saving throw, he can choose to subtract 2 from the spell's save DC (making it easier for the target to resist)—neither more nor less.

He stores the 2 points as a sort of spell karma called "spin". Each time he so adjusts a spell, he accumulates another 2 points of spin.

At any one time, the fatespinner can store a maximum spin value equal to his caster level (the total of all spellcasting class levels, including this prestige class).

For example, a 5th-level wizard/1st-level fatespinner can store up to 6 points of spin at any one time.

The fatespinner can use accumulated spin to boost the save DC of other spells he casts, adding up to 3 points of spin to any one spell.

Thus, the above 5th-level wizard/1st-level fatespinner can increase the Will save DC of a charm person spell he casts by up to +3.

If he spends all 3 points, his spin «balance» drops to 3.

Sometimes more points are subtracted from save DCs than can be accumulated as spin.

In this case, the excess is lost.

If the above spellcaster were to reduce the save DCs of two spells before using his spin again, he would accumulate 4 points of spin.

Since his maximum is 6 not 7, the extra point is lost.

Note: You can't cheat fate.

A fatespinner accumulates no spin from casting spells on targets who voluntarily fail their saving throws.

Nor can he accumulate spin by reducing the save DC of a benign spell cast on a friend or a meaningless inanimate object.

Only where the outcome of the spell is important to the fatespinner's own fate can he use this ability.

Resist Fate (Ex): At 2nd level, the fatespinner develops extraordinary good luck.

Once per day, may reroll one roll that he has just made.

He must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

If the fatespinner has levels of cleric with the Luck domain, this benefit stacks with that domain's granted power.

Fickle Finger of Fate (Ex): On reaching 3rd level, the fatespinner gains the extraordinary ability to affect the luck of others.

Once per day, he may reroll one roll that another creature—friend or enemy—has just made.

That creature must take the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

Fickle finger of fate takes place outside the normal initiative order?

but fatespinner still can't use it if he is caught flat-footed.

He must be able to see the recipient to use this ability.

Note: The fatespinner must decide whether to reroll before the results of the roll in question are applied; otherwise he must wait for another opportunity.

He is not automatically privy to the rolls of others, especially enemies, but it is usually easy to tell when a creature makes a saving throw or hits a target.

The fatespinner player should notify the DM prior to a foe's roll, stating his intention to use this ability immediately if the outcome appears undesirable.

As Fate Would Have It: At 4th and 8th level, fate conspires with circumstance to bring about a useful, if rather mundane, result.

The fatespinner learns a bonus metamagic feat.

Spin Destiny (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, the fatespinner more clearly apprehends the matrix of reality and can use accumulated spin to adjust other "random" events.

The method is identical to increasing a spell's save DC, but the fatespinner can now add spin to boost any skill check, attack roll, or saving throw.

However, he can't subtract points from these checks to accumulate spin.

In addition, he can apply a number of points of spin up to his caster level (which is still the maximum spin he can store) to skill checks, attack rolls, or saving throws.

For example, a 5th-level wizard/5th-level fatespinner could apply up to 10 points of spin to a desired check, assuming had enough scored.

Deny Fate (Ex): At 6th level, the fatespinner's control of chance becomes stronger.

He can now reroll a roll, as with Resist Fate, twice per day.

This also stacks with the Luck domains granted power.

Luck to the Wind (Ex): On reaching 7th level, the mage of many fates can appease chance by "throwing luck to the wind".

This is an extraordinary ability.

He chooses whether or not to use this power each time he casts a spell that allows a saving throw.

The save DC for a spell so adjusted is 1d20 + spell level + caster's Charisma or Intelligence modifier (whichever is greater).

The fatespinner rolls the d20 when he casts the spell.

He can also enhance the spells by adding up to 3 points of spin to the spell's save DC, or accumulate spin by deducting 2 points from it, but not both.

This cannot be further adjusted by other abilities such as spin destiny.

Seal Fate (Sp): At 9th level, the fatespinner can meddle in matters literally of life and death.

Once per day, he can attempt to seal the fate of one other creature as a spell-like ability.

As a standard action, the fatespinner selects a size Large or smaller target creature he can see within 100 feet and speaks the words, "Your fate is sealed".

The target must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 20) or die.

Even if the save is successful (or if the Target is Huge or larger), it instead takes 3d6+13 points of damage.

The fatespinner may add spin to increase the Fortitude save DC, the amount of damage dealt, or both, as desired.

Favored One: On attaining 10th level, the fatespinner is favored by chance, rising above the common animal caught in the web of reality it can't see or appreciate.

His type changes to "outsider", which means (among other things) that he is no longer affected by spells that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person, but he can be hedged out by a magic circle spell against his alignment.

The Favored One can store a maximum value of spin equal to twice his caster level.

MAGE OF THE ARCANE ORDER

"Wait...wait...I've just about got it."

Also called a "guildmage", this is a spellcaster who belongs to a academy and guild known as the Arcane Order (see Chapter 1).

In casual conversation, the academy is called the Order, or sometimes «that college of wizardry».

It is both a school for fledgling spellcasters and a guild for those of advanced knowledge and power.

The Arcane Orders charter is twofold, its first tenet is advancing magical knowledge through both ongoing research and archeological investigation of lost arcane disciplines.

A good portion of research is centered around elucidating a "magical grammar" of the great power wielded in ages past, and this research has borne wondrous fruit: metamagic feats.

The second tenets is the support and welfare of the Order's membership, initially through arcane schooling and later through companionship, resources, boarding, and access to the Spellpool (see below).

Although nonwizards can benefit somewhat from what the Order has to offer, its emphasis on wizardry deters most applicants.

NPC guildmages often join adventuring companies of nonspellcasters who are not affiliated with the Order.

Thus, they could be encountered anywhere adventure beckons.

However, a guild member in good standing returns when he can to the campus, pay his required dues, and does his part in the upkeep of the Spellpool.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mage of the Arcane Order, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (Arcana): 8 ranks.

Feats: Two metamagic feats, one of which must be Cooperative Spell.

Spells: Ability to prepare and cast arcane spells of 2nd level or higher, fee of 750 gp.

Special: Prospective members must pay an initiation fee of 750 gp.

CLASS SKILLS

The mage of the Arcane Order's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scribe (Int, exclusive skill), Speak Language, and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the mage of the Arcane Order prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arcane Order casters gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new mage of the Arcane Order level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a mage of the Arcane Order, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Guild member: A «guild-level» mage of the Arcane Order pays monetary dues and accepts various duties in return for various benefits.

The dues are 30 gp per month.

Duties include putting in an appearance on campus at least once every six months and accepting any special commissions handed down by senior members.

A guildmage who falls into arrears on his dues by more than three months has his membership revoked and loses access to the Spellpool.

Reinstating membership is difficult.

However, ex-members do not lose any spells or metamagic feats they had gained while in good standing.

A member in good standing may board at the Arcane Order campus between adventures, paying only 5 sp per day for common-quality meals and lodging.

At his leisure, he may browse the Order's well-respected library, which is stocked with tomes on both mundane and arcane lore (though no spells are located here).

Likewise, he may use the common laboratory facilities when creating a minor or medium magic item (although material costs remain out-of-pocket).

Furthermore, he is free to read and post notices to the «job-board», a mundane medium whereby fellow members of the Order pass information, advertise their interest in a research topic or adventure, or attempt to sell an interesting oddity, magical or otherwise.

Last but not least, members form professional ties with their fellow wizards, possibly leading to lasting friendships or at least allies.

Spellpool (Sp): Beginning at first level, mages of the Arcane Order can call spells from a common source, the Spellpool. This is a spell-like ability.

New members receive a special focus (a small trinket chosen by the spellcaster, such as a ring, brooch, scarf, or other portable item) at the time of their initiation.

The focus allows access to the Spellpool and works only for its owner.

If he loses his focus, he must undergo another initiation.

The range of available spells increases at levels 4 and 7.

See the Spellpool section, below.

Research Breakthrough: At 2nd and 9th levels, a mage of the Arcane Order gains sudden insight from studying the reconstructed texts of ancient magical grammars.

He gains a bonus metamagic feat.

Bonus Language: At 3rd and 6th levels, the guildmage's access to the Order's superb library and resources allow him to learn a new language.

New Spell: When a mage of the Arcane Order reaches 5th and 8th level, a fellow wizard allows the character to copy a spell from his or her spellbook (chosen by the player, subject to the DM's approval).

He does not need to make a Spellcraft check, although specialist wizards still cannot learn spells from prohibited schools.

Regent: A 10th-level mage of the Arcane Order is awarded the status of regent.

He no longer pays dues but continues to receive all the benefits of guild membership.

A regent gains a +2 competence modifier on all Charisma-based interaction checks when dealing with lower-level members of the Order.

The regents set the Arcane Order's rules and policies, meeting each month in the Council of Regents.

A regent must attend six Council meetings in one year or be removed from the Council and lose his regent status (he loses no other benefits of guild membership).

Enacting new policies or eradicating old ones requires a three-fifths majority vote to pass.

Generally, the Council hands out commissions for lower-level mages of the Arcane Order to perform on behalf of the guild.

An individual regent may also head up a special group of lower-level members to accomplish a specific goal, such as investigating a crime committed using magic, undertaking an archeological dig of an ancient site of wizardry, or some other important task.

THE SPELLPOOL

A magical reservoir of spell energy is bound into a special matrix in a guarded vault in Mathghamhna's sublevel.

Using his guild focus, a mage of the Arcane Order can «call» spells from this common resource at need.

Calling a Spell: Calling a spell from the Spellpool can be done at any distance but requires the caster to have an open, unused spell slot of the appropriate level.

Wizards preparing spells for the day decide at that time whether to leave some spell slots open.

The spellcaster can call only for spells of a level that he could normally cast.

He can call a number of spells per day whose total levels are equal to or less than half his caster level (minimum of one).

For example, a 5th-level wizard can call one 2nd-level spell or two 1st-level spells per day, assuming he has slots available and his Spellpool Debt isn't too high (see below).

When the caster calls a spell, he takes a full-round action to concentrate on his focus (which draws attacks of opportunity).

The spell appears in the caster's mind at the beginning of his next turn in the round and can be used immediately.

However, if he does not cast the called spell within 1 minute per caster level, it fades from his mind as though cast.

Wizards cannot learn the called spell, despite its temporary presence, though of course they could later attempt to learn a spell of the same name through standard means.

Spell Availability: Three stages of access to the Spellpool exist.

A member first joining the Order gains Spellpool I privileges, which grants access to spells of 1st to 3rd level. Spellpool II allows 4th- to 6th-level spells, and Spellpool III grants 7th- to 9th-level spells.

No 0-level spells are available, but the Spellpool can provide any other spell on the wizard/sorcerer spell list in the Player's Handbook, as well as any additional spells designated by the DM.

Spellpool Debt: Every time a spellcaster calls a spell, he incurs a debt.

He must return an «energy packet» to the Spellpool: a spell he has prepared (or can cast in the sorcerer's case) of equal level to that called, or a number of spells whose combined levels total the level of the spell called.

For instance, the Spellpool debt for a 5th-level spell is 5 levels, which could be paid off with another 5th-level spell or any combination of spells whose levels total 5.

Returning a spell is a full-round action, like calling a spell, and depletes a prepared spell slot, or uses up a spell slot for the day, as if the spell had been cast.

The debt need not be repaid immediately.

In fact, a spellcaster can accumulate a Spellpool debt equal to three times his caster level (including levels in this prestige class) before facing penalties.

Thus, 5th-level sorcerer/5th-level mage of the Arcane Order could call up to 30 levels of spells from the Spellpool. However, upon incurring 31 or more spell-levels of debt, his access to the Spellpool is automatically suspended until he reduces the debt to 30 or below.

Nothing prevents a spellcaster from paying ahead of time, giving him a «positive balance», so to speak.

Likewise, another guild member may agree to pay off or make a payment toward a caster's Spellpool debt in return for a service, money, or other consideration.

A spell currency of a sort has developed within the Arcane Order, where spellcasters often pay each other with levels of Spellpool debt (informally called «charms»).

MINDBENDER

*"You're doing splendidly.
Keep up the good work!"*

Mindbenders seek to control the thoughts and dreams of others.

From an early age, those destined to walk this path learn little tricks of manipulation to get their way.

Later, they turn to spellcasting to enhance their already impressive skills at bluffing, intimidating, and otherwise dealing with people to their own advantage.

Magic holds the promise of complete mental domination, and the mindbender realizes it spectacularly.

Spellcasters who take this prestige class give up advancing in caster level, but they instead gain ever-greater ability to alter and eventually command the will of others.

Anyone who is ready to sacrifice magic for manipulation is a suitable candidate.

Mindbenders do not get on well with one another, as each attempts to assert his control over the rest.

It is not unknown for one mindbender to secretly control another - such is considered the perfect front.

Possessing the power to control other's minds doesn't ensure immunity to the same treatment.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mindbender, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Bluff: 4 ranks.

Diplomacy: 4 ranks.

Intimidate: 4 ranks.

Sense Motive: 4 ranks.

Feat: Leadership (see page 45 of DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide).

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 3rd level or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

The mindbender's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the mindbender prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A mindbender gains no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At 1st, 3rd, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 9th level gained in the mindbender class, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a mind-bender, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Telepathy (Su): At 1st level, the mindbender unlocks one of the most basic elements of his mental craft, gaining the supernatural ability to communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Skill Boost (Ex): The mindbender is a consummate student of manipulation, be it magical or mundane.

At 1st, 5th, and 7th level, he receives a +6 competence modifier on any of the following skills: Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Sense Motive.

The character can apply the entire bonus to one skill or split it among several, as he desires.

Suggestion (Su): At 2nd level, the mindbender can influence the actions of a living creature of size Large or smaller twice per day.

Also called «pushing», this is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability that suggests a course of activity (limited to a sentence or two).

A target within 100 feet must succeed at a Will save (DC 17) to resist the suggestion.

The effect lasts until the target accomplishes what it was asked to do or after 6 hours, whichever occurs first.

It is otherwise identical to the suggestion spell (see page 257 of the Player's Handbook).

Mindread (Su): At 3rd level, the mindbender learns to read the surface thoughts of a living creature.

Twice per day as a supernatural, mind-affecting ability, he can choose a target within 100 feet, which must succeed at a Will save (DC 17) to resist the effect.

Reading the mind of a creature requires concentration but draws no attack of opportunity.

Creatures of animal intelligence (Int 1 or 2) have simple, instinctual thoughts.

The ability can penetrate barriers, but 1 foot of stone, 1 inch of common metal, a thin sheet of lead, or 3 feet of wood or dirt blocks it.

The effect lasts for up to 10 minutes, or when the mindbender ceases concentration.

Beguile (Su): At 4th level, the mindbender can beguile any single living creature of size Large or smaller.

Once per day as a supernatural, mind-affecting ability, he can choose a target within 100 feet, which must succeed at a Will save (DC 18) to resist the effect.

The creature gains a +5 modifier on its saving throw if it is currently being attacked by the mindbender or his allies.

Beguiling a creature is a standard action that does not draw an attack of opportunity.

If successful, the creature regards the mindbender as its trusted friend and ally, as though underline effect of a charm person spell (see page 183 of the Player's Handbook). It is not necessary to know the creature's language—the ability is exercised telepathically.

Friends Forever (Su): On reaching 6th level, the mindbender tightens his mental control over others.

A creature he has beguiled using that supernatural ability (see above) becomes his permanent friend, unless the mindbender does something obviously harmful to the creature or orders it to take an action that is suicidal or utterly against its nature (which breaks the friendship).

This is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability.

A mindbender can have only two such friends at one time. The effect is temporarily suppressed if the target is warded by protection from evil.

It is permanently broken by a successful dispel magic against caster level 14.

Dominate (Su): At 7th level, the mindbender can dominate any single living creature of size Large or smaller once per day.

He chooses a target within 100 feet, which must succeed at a Will save (DC 19) to resist the effect.

This is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability, creating a compulsion effect, and takes a standard action that does not draw an attack of opportunity.

The effect lasts for 3 days.

It is otherwise identical to the dominate person spell (see page 197 of the Player's Handbook).

Mass Beguile (Su): On reaching 9th level, the mindbender can extend his influence to several beings.

Once per day, he can use his beguile ability (see above) against a number of appropriate targets whose combined Hit Dice do exceed 40.

This is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability that can be used in addition to beguiling a single creature.

If more potential targets exist than the mindbender can affect, he chooses them one at a time until he exceeds the Hit Die limit.

Thrall (Su): At 10th level, the mindbender's mental mastery reaches its pinnacle.

Any creature that he has dominated (see above) becomes his permanent thrall.

A mindbender can have only one thrall at a time.

A protection from evil spell does not interrupt this influence, but it can be permanently broken by a successful dispel magic against caster level 18.

PALE MASTER

"The dead aren't so bad once you get to know them"

Necromancy is usually a poor choice for arcane spellcasters—those who really want to master the deathless arts almost always pursue divine means.

However, an alternative exists for those who desire power over undead but refuse to give up their arcane craft completely.

Enter the pale master, who draws on a font of special lore that provides a macabre power all its own.

Many pale masters still end up supplementing their arcane power with levels of divine magic.

The mixture of "pale lore" and clerical abilities to sway, create, command, and destroy undead can be a potent one. NPC pale masters head special strike groups comprising lesser undead, supplemented as needed with more powerful, summoned undead.

Sometimes they serve or act in collusion with powerful evil characters, such as true necromancers or divine spellcasters with Death as one of their domains.

Wherever pale masters go, undead follow.

Often it is difficult to tell a pale master from the undead that he surrounds himself with.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a pale master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Knowledge (Religion): 8 ranks.

Feat: Skill Focus (Knowledge [religion]).

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 3rd level or higher.

Special: The candidate must have spent three or more days locked in a tomb with animate undead.

This contact may be peaceful or violent.

A character who is slain by the undead and later raised still meets the requirement, although the resulting level loss may delay compliance with other prerequisites.

CLASS SKILLS

The pale master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the pale master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Pale masters gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every second level gained in the pale master class, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a pale master, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Bonemail: The pale master has an instinctive feel for bone and can craft necromantic armor composed of interlocking bones.

His appreciation for all things dead allow him to wear the bonemail like a second skin—that is, natural armor, which does not interfere with arcane spellcasting.

Only pale masters gain any benefit to Armor Class from wearing bonemail.

At 1st level, the bonemail grants a +2 natural armor bonus to its wearer.

At 4th level, the pale master's mastery over this unusual medium allows him to move more naturally within the armor, granting him a +4 natural armor bonus.

Finally, at 8th level, the pale master becomes a true bone artisan, receiving a +6 natural armor bonus from his bonemail.

These increased bonuses are the result of greater expertise in wearing the armor, so bonemail created by a higher-level pale master confers only the natural armor bonus appropriate to the wearer's level.

Animate Dead (Sp): At 2nd level, the pale master begins to exercise control over the undead.

Once per day as a spell-like ability, he can use animate dead without need of a material component.

Levels of this prestige class count as caster levels for this purpose.

All other level restrictions of animate dead still apply.

For example, a 6th-level sorcerer/2nd-level pale master can only animate up to 8 HD of undead with a single use of this ability.

Likewise, he can only control up to 16 total HD of undead created using this ability at one time.

Darkvision (Ex): At 3rd level, the dark begins to lose its mysteries to the pale master, who gains darkvision with a 60-foot range.

This is an extraordinary ability.

If he already has darkvision, its range increases by 60 feet.

Summon Undead (Su): On reaching 4th level, the pale master can summon two undead creatures twice per day as a supernatural ability.

This is a standard action that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

The undead appear at the beginning of the pale master's next action, at a point he designates (and can see) within 60 feet, and they act immediately.

The pale master may verbally direct the undead to attack, not attack, attack particular enemies, or perform other actions.

Summoned undead remain for 1 round per caster level, after which time they disappear (sooner if destroyed in combat).

Summoned undead do not count against the pale master's HD total for controlling undead with his animate dead ability (see above).

The pale master's caster level determines the type of undead he can summon, as noted below.

Caster Level	Undead Summoned
5th	Ghoul
6th	Shadow
7th	Ghast
8th	Wight
9th	Wraith

Character caster levels count as caster levels for this purpose.

If desired, he can summon three less powerful undead in place of the highest-level undead available (for example, instead of two wights, he could summon three ghouls, shadows, or ghosts).

All summoned undead have +4 turn resistance, in addition to any turn resistance they already possess, for the duration of their stay.

Deathless Vigor: At 5th level, the pale master's body becomes more akin to the undying flesh of those creatures he associates with.

The character gains +3 hit points as though from the Toughness feat.

Undead Graft: At 6th level, the pale master gives in to necrophagic urges too terrible to verbalize.

He cuts off his arm and replaces it entirely with an undead prosthetic, which may be completely skeletal or preserved flesh stitched in place like that of a flesh golem.

Regardless of its composition, the limb grants a +4 inherent modifier to the character's Strength.

Additionally, the undead graft allows him to use up to two of the following touch attacks per day.

These are supernatural abilities, and he can use the same one twice in one day.

A touch attack that misses does not count against the daily limit.

Paralyzing Touch (Su): A living foe hit by the pale master's touch attack must succeed at a Fortitude save (DC 14) or be paralyzed for 1d6+2 minutes (elves are immune).

Weakening Touch (Su): A living foe hit by the pale master's touch attack takes 1d6 points of temporary Strength damage.

A creature reduced to Strength 0 dies.

Degenerative Touch (Su): A living foe hit by the pale master's touch attack receives one negative level.

The Fortitude save to remove the negative level has a DC of 14.

Destructive Touch (Su): A living foe hit by the pale master's touch attack must succeed at a Fortitude save (DC 14) or take 1d6 points permanent Constitution drain.

Commanding Touch (Su): If the pale master makes a successful touch attack against an undead foe with HD equal to or less than his caster level, it comes under his command for a number of rounds equal to his caster level. When the duration expires, the undead creature returns to its former allegiance, if any.

The newly controlled undead can still be turned.

Tough As Bone (Ex): On reaching 7th level, the pale master takes on yet more qualities of an undead being.

He gains immunity to stunning and is unaffected by subdual damage.

Graft Upgrade: At 8th level, the pale master becomes more skilled in the use of his undead graft (see above).

All touch attacks using the graft receive a +2 competence modifier on the attack roll.

Additionally, the pale master can use its supernatural abilities three times per day.

Summon Greater Undead (Su): At 9th level, the pale master may summon one powerful undead creature once per day as a supernatural ability.

The pale master's caster level determines the type of creatures he can summon, as noted below.

Caster Level	Undead Summoned
9th	Mummy
10th	Spectre
11th	Vampire*
12th	Ghost

* Summoned vampires have a CR equal to 1 less than the pale master's effective caster level.

 Summoned ghosts have the following ghostly abilities in addition to manifestation: malevolence, horrific appearance, and corrupting gaze.

If desired, he can summon two less powerful undead in place of the highest-level undead available (for example, instead of one vampire, he could summon two mummies or spectres).

All summoned undead have +4 turn resistance, in addition to any turn resistance they already possess, for the duration of their stay.

This ability is otherwise identical to the summon undead ability (see above).

Deathless Mastery: On reaching 10th level, the pale master is now a scion of the deathless arts.

His body becomes partly mummified, and he is no longer subject to critical hits.

Moreover, he gains access to the pale master touch using his undead graft (see below) and can call on the powers granted by the prosthetic four times per day.

The pale master is now served constantly by an undead vassal with total HD no greater than his caster level (including levels of this prestige class). He chooses an undead type from those he can personally animate or summon, and it obeys his every command. The vassal gains +4 turn resistance (which stacks with any turn resistance it already possesses but not with the +4 turn resistance of summoned undead). The vassal's HD do not count against the pale master's HD total for controlling undead (see above).

Deathless Master Touch (Su): A living foe of size Large or smaller hit by the pale master's touch attack must succeed at a Fortitude save (DC 17) or die. A slain creature automatically animates 1 round later as though with the pale master's animate dead ability (see above) and is under his control. Undead created using this power do count against the pale master's HD total for controlling undead.

SPELLSWORD

"I've got your magic sword right here"

The dream of melding magic and weaponplay is fulfilled in the person of the Spellsword.

A student of both arcane rituals and martial techniques, the Spellsword gradually learns to cast spells in armor with less chance of failure.

Moreover, she can cast spells through her weapon, as well as store spells there for later use.

Despite the name, a Spellsword can use any weapon or even switch weapons.

«Spellaxe», «spellspear», and other appellations for this prestige class are certainly possible but not commonly used. The requirements for this prestige class make it most attractive to multiclassed wizard/fighters or sorcerer/fighters, although bard/fighters can meet the requirements just as easily.

Feared by mages for her ability to cast in armor, and by common swordsmen for her ability to use spells, a Spellsword often walks the world alone.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Spellsword, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Knowledge (any): 6 ranks.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: All simple and martial weapons and all armor (heavy, medium, and light).

Spells: Ability to cast arcane spells of 2nd level or higher.

Special: Must have defeated a foe through force of arms alone, without recourse to spellcasting or special class abilities.

CLASS SKILLS

The Spellsword's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Knowledge

(Int), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Spellsword prestige class.

Spells per Day: At every second level gained in the Spellsword class, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those she receives from the prestige class, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a Spellsword, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Channel Spell (Su): Once per day as a free action, the Spellsword can cast a spell through her weapon (melee or ranged) as she attacks with it.

This is a supernatural ability.

The channeled spell counts against the spellsword's normal daily limit and must specify a target.

Thus, sleep is not eligible since it does not affect a "target creature".

The maximum allowable spell level increases as noted below.

Channel Spell	Maximum Spell Level
I	1 st
II	2 nd
III	3 rd

If desired, the Spellsword can cast two spells of one level lower or three spells of two levels lower. (A 0-level spell is treated as equivalent to a 1st-level spell for purposes of this ability).

A channeled spell targets the creature hit by the Spellsword's weapon, which still gets a saving throw if the spell allows one.

Even if a spell can target more than one creature, channeling it through the weapon limits its effect to the single opponent attacked.

If the weapon attack misses, the channeled spell is wasted. Ignore Spell Failure (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the Spellsword's hard work and practice at merging spellplay with weaponplay starts to pay off.

As an extraordinary ability, she ignores a portion of the arcane spell failure chance associated with using armor. This reduction starts at 10% and gradually increases to 30% as shown on Table 3-14 above.

The Spellsword subtracts the listed percentage value from her total spell failure chance, if any.

For instance, a character with scalemail and a small shield normally has a spell failure chance of 30%, but this drops to only 20% for a 2nd-level Spellsword.

Spellsword Cache: At 6th level, the Spellsword learns how to store spells of up to 3rd level in her weapon.

Effectively, she gains the Brew Potion feat using an alternative medium (see page 80 of the Player's Handbook). All rules, XP costs, and expenses that apply to Brew Potion also apply to this ability, with the following exceptions.

Once cached, the spell remains intangible, resonating within the Spellsword's weapon until it is needed.

To call on the desired spell, she holds her weapon forth as a standard action that draws an attack of opportunity.

The Spellsword absorbs the cached spell's effect through the weapon's pommel.

By touching her weapon to another willing individual, she can confer a cached spell on that target.

The Spellsword can store a number of spells in her weapon equal to her level in this prestige class plus her Intelligence score.

Cached spells are never accidentally lost during combat. If the weapon is ever broken, all the spells cached therein are immediately ruined.

Bonus Feat: At 8th level, the Spellsword perfects her art, gaining a bonus feat.

This must be either a metamagic feat or one drawn from the list of bonus feats allowed to a fighter (see page 37 of the Player's Handbook).

TRUE NECROMANCER

«First, I kill you.»

Power corrupts.

Power over life and death corrupts absolutely.

The power to raise an undying, unkillable servant from the husk of the formerly living is seductively, darkly tempting—and certainly evil.

Those who seek such unyielding obedience from the dead willingly tread the path of necromancy.

A character who wishes to become a true necromancer must take levels in both arcane and divine spellcasting classes.

Only then does she begin her sinister schooling, learning how to combine the foulest of both into a single, necromantic whole.

NPC true necromancers are usually found singly-living in abandoned graveyards, hidden in the depths of centuries-old catacombs, or lurking in an unhallowed mausoleum.

Occasionally necromancers gather into small societies or evil associations, but sooner or later most such groups are stamped out.

At least, so think those concerned with the triumph of good over evil in the world.

But they have never seen the Bleak Academy.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a true necromancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Knowledge (arcana): 8 ranks.

Knowledge (religion): 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast divine spells, one of which must be animate dead, and arcane spells, which must include spectral hand and vampiric touch.

Special: Must have access to the Death domain.

CLASS SKILLS

The true necromancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the true necromancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A true necromancer gains no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a new true necromancer level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain all the benefits a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those he receives from the prestige class, and so on).

She does still gain effective levels for purposes of rebuking undead (see Rebuke below) and casting certain spells (see Necromancer below).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a true necromancer, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Rebuke (Su): The true necromancer has great influence over the living dead.

Whenever she gains a level in this prestige class, she also gains an effective level for purposes of rebuking undead. For instance, if a 5th-level cleric/5th-level wizard takes 2 levels of true necromancer, she rebukes undead as a 7th-level cleric.

Necromancer: The true necromancer has unsurpassed power over death.

When she casts necromantic spells (from the school of Necromancy or the domain of Death), all her spellcaster levels stack for purposes of determining their effect. She does not gain access to higher-level spells any faster than normal, but the specified spells behave as though cast by someone of that higher level.

For example, a 5th-level cleric/5th-level wizard/2nd-level true necromancer has added her two effective level increases to her wizard class.

If she casts an arcane, nonnecromancy spell, her caster level is 7th, while for a divine, nondeath spell, it is 5th. However, if she casts a spell from the Necromancy school or Death domain, her effective caster level is 12th (equal to her character level).

Zone of Desecration (Su): At 2nd level, the true necromancer begins to exert her authority over undead. As a supernatural ability, she is continuously surrounded by a 20-foot-radius area of negative energy.

The effect is otherwise identical to the desecrate spell (see page 192 of the Player's Handbook).

Create Undead (Sp): On attaining 4th level, the true necromancer can create undead as a spell-like ability, once per day (see page 189 of the Player's Handbook).

She must still supply the requisite material components. This ability is considered a necromantic spell (see Necromancer above), so the character's effective caster level is the total of all her spellcaster class levels.

Major Desecration (Su): At 5th level, the true necromancer extends her authority over undead.

The supernatural area of negative energy surrounding her (see Zone of Desecration above) now extends to a radius of 10 feet per spellcaster class level.

Create Greater Undead (Sp): On reaching 7th level, the true necromancer can create greater undead once per day as a spell-like ability (see page 189 of the Player's Handbook).

She must still supply the requisite material component. This ability is considered a necromantic spell (see Necromancer above), so the character's effective caster level is the total of all her spellcaster class levels.

Energy Drain (Sp): At 10th level, the true necromancer acquires one of the most dreaded powers of the undead. Once per day, she can use energy drain as a spell-like ability (see page 199 of the Player's Handbook).

This ability is considered a necromantic spell (see Necromancer above), so the character's effective caster level is the total of all her spellcaster class levels.

WAYFARER GUIDE

“Where to?”

The wayfarer guide focuses on honing her skills at instantaneous magical transportation.

Unlike spellcasters of other prestigious associations, a wayfarer guide need not devote years of her life to the art of teleportation nor focus her attention overmuch on the pursuit of perfection.

Still, she learns secrets of the trade that are only available through employment with the Wayfarers' Union (see Chapter 3: Prestige Classes).

The Union is, at its heart, a transportation service that specialty spellcasters provide for those willing to pay. Wayfarers' Union offices are generally found in large cities, staffed by wayfarer guides who offer a variety of standard services.

Particularly qualified wayfarer guides, called «danger wayfarers», are sometimes available to teleport bold clients into dangerous locales, though the price is commensurately higher.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a wayfarer guide, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Knowledge (arcana): 10 ranks.

Knowledge (geography): 10 ranks.

Feats: Sanctum Spell, Skill Focus (Knowledge [geography]).

Spells: Ability to cast teleport.

Special: A prospective wayfarer guide must join the Wayfarers' Union (although she can later quit without losing previously acquired levels).

CLASS SKILLS

The wayfarer guide's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Speak Language, and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2+Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the wayfarer guide prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Wayfarer guides gain no additional proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: When a wayfarer guide reaches 1st and 3rd level, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain all the benefits a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, hit points beyond those she receives from the prestige class, and so on).

She does still gain effective spellcaster levels.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a wayfarer guide, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Enhanced Capacity (Ex): A wayfarer guide can transport material more efficiently.

When casting any spell with the «teleportation» descriptor, the wayfarer guide's maximum weight capacity is 100 pounds per caster level (normally 50).

Extra Teleportation: At 2nd level, the wayfarer guide gains an extra 5th-level spell slot, which can be used only for a teleport spell.

This extra spell slot is gained as if through having a high ability score.

Enhanced Accuracy (Ex): On reaching 3rd level, the wayfarer guide becomes more skilled at arriving on target. When casting any spell with the «teleportation» descriptor, roll d% and consult the Wayfarer's Teleport table below (instead of the Teleport table on page 264 of the Player's Handbook).

TOME OF BATTLE (3.5)

BLOODCLAW MASTER

“My blades thirst for blood.”

—Rhaskana, Bloodclaw Secretkeeper

A bloodclaw master embraces the animal within to a degree that it becomes external, partially transforming him into the beast from which the discipline was inspired.

He employs small, light weapons almost like claws.

He focuses on the Tiger Claw discipline, and his maneuvers speak to the quick-striking nature of his discipline's feline namesake.

BECOMING A BLOODCLAW MASTER

This class favors those who prefer fighting with two light weapons, and who are fond of the maneuvers of the Tiger Claw discipline.

Most bloodclaw masters are swordsages or warblades of the Tiger Claw discipline.

Some barbarians also choose to embrace their inner beast, becoming a bloodclaw master after either taking a few martial adept class levels or selecting the Martial Study feat enough times to meet the entry requirements.

A few rogues also consider this class, because sneak attacks made with two weapons are especially deadly.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Jump 9 ranks.

Feats: Multiattack or Two-Weapon Fighting.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know three Tiger Claw maneuvers.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Handle Animal, Jump, Knowledge (nature), Listen, Martial Lore*, Move Silently, Spot, Survival.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance as a bloodclaw master, you become more like the tiger that inspired your chosen martial discipline. You gain mastery of more Tiger Claw maneuvers, while also gaining the ability to shift into a feral form.

Maneuvers: At each odd-numbered level, you gain a new maneuver known from the Tiger Claw discipline.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full bloodclaw master levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 3rd level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Shifting (Su): You can become more like a tiger by focusing your feral nature.

Once per day, you can enter a state that is superficially similar to a barbarian's rage.

While you are shifting, your appearance takes on tigerlike aspects: Your fingernails become more pointed and clawlike, the irises of your eyes become narrow, catlike slits, your ears grow more pointed, and so on.

While shifting, you gain a +2 bonus to Strength and you grow claws that can be used as natural weapons.

These claws deal 1d4 points of damage with each successful attack.

You can attack with one claw as a standard action or with two claws as a full attack action (as a primary natural weapon).

You cannot attack more than once per round with a single claw, even if your base attack bonus is high enough to give you multiple attacks.

You can attack with a claw as a light off-hand weapon while wielding a weapon in your primary hand, but doing so incurs the normal penalties for fighting with two weapons. Shifting is a free action and lasts for a number of rounds equal to your Con modifier + your bloodclaw master class level.

At 3rd level and again at 5th level, you gain an additional daily use of your shifting ability.

Claws of the Beast (Ex): When attacking with two daggers or Tiger Claw weapons (kukri, kama, handaxe, unarmed strike, or claws), you add your full Strength bonus to damage rolls made for your off-hand weapon.

Superior Two-Weapon Fighting (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, when you attack with two daggers or Tiger Claw weapons, you do not take the -2 penalty on attack rolls for fighting with two weapons.

Tiger Claw Synergy (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, while you are in a Tiger Claw stance, you can choose to gain either a +1 dodge bonus to your Armor Class or a +10-foot bonus to your base speed.

You make this choice when you enter the stance.

At 4th level, you become more accurate at dealing Tiger Claw strikes.

You gain a +1 bonus on any attack rolls made as part of a strike from the Tiger Claw discipline.

Pouncing Strike (Ex): From 3rd level on, when wielding two weapons, you can take a standard action to make a single melee attack with each weapon.

Each attack is made at your highest attack bonus.

You can also make an attack with each weapon against an opponent at the end of a charge.

When you use pouncing strike, you lose the use of one Tiger Claw strike you have readied for the current encounter, just as if you had initiated the strike (except you do not also gain the strike's normal effect).

Once you use this ability, you can recover the maneuver you expended and use it normally.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): At 3rd level, your eyes function better in dim light, as you adopt the senses of the tiger.

You gain low-light vision.

Rending Claws (Ex): At 5th level, while you are shifting and attacking with two daggers or two Tiger Claw weapons and you successfully hit an opponent with both weapons in the same round, the second weapon that hits deals an extra 2d6 points of damage.

This effect is considered a boost from the Tiger Claw discipline.

When you use rending claws, you lose the use of one Tiger Claw boost you have readied for the current encounter, just as if you had initiated the boost (except you do not also gain the boost's normal effect).

Once you use this ability, you can recover the maneuver you expended and use it normally.

Scent (Ex): Once you have reached 5th level, your heightened animalistic senses also give you the ability to smell nearby creatures.

You gain the scent special ability (MM 314).

PLAYING A BLOODCLAW MASTER

Like the tiger, you are aloof and proud, but quick to act when a situation demands it.

Some mistake your demeanor for arrogance, but you know your attitude is more like patience.

You seek to learn the details around a circumstance before offering your input.

When you speak, you do so sagely, with confidence, even if you aren't certain that you are actually correct.

It is more important that others believe you are right, that you are infallible.

Your patience is not infinite, however, and you are always eager to spring into action.

Nothing bothers you more than spending a long period of time in a small, enclosed room with nothing to do and no one to kill.

As you identify with your internal tiger, you adopt external ways of displaying your bond, perhaps by striping your arms or face with black soot or adorning yourself with jewelry fashioned from tooth and claw.

Bloodclaw masters are held in high esteem by many followers of the fractious Tiger Claw discipline, though some Tiger Claw adepts harbor jealousy or even loathing for those who follow the bloodclaw master path.

As a bloodclaw master, you fight with a ferocity and cunning that surpasses all but the most skilled masters of Tiger Claw.

A few believe that your ferocity dilutes the purity of Tiger Claw, and that bloodclaw masters mark a regression in the advancement of the discipline.

Others simply bide their time, waiting like a tiger for you to drop your guard.

Even so, every proclaimed student of the Tiger Claw will give the honor and respect deserving of your expertise.

COMBAT

Half of a battle occurs before the fight begins.

You prefer to choose your battleground, to stalk your opponent into terrain that best suits your abilities.

Once battle is joined, you become a frenzy of motion, striking quickly and at the most vulnerable target available, hindering your opponents' ability to react.

You lead with a charge, shifting along the way, to get yourself in position where your claws or your kukris can deal the most damage.

Taking advantage of your leaping skills, you jump to any available high ground to gain an upper hand.

ADVANCEMENT

In your hands, small blades are like an extension of your own hands—like claws made of steel.

The strikes and counters of the Tiger Claw discipline are natural extensions of your own combat ability.

Following the path of bloodclaw master speaks to your feral nature, letting you become one with the beast in your heart.

Masters of the Tiger Claw see this spark within you, and through your training you have learned of the path of the beast and what you must do to unlock it.

As a bloodclaw master, you have earned your way into an elite subset of the Tiger Claw school.

Your abilities are revered by many, especially those relatively new to the discipline.

Older masters who have not embraced their own inner tigers might view you with disdain, but even they must recognize the power you wield.

To fully utilize some of the best Tiger Claw maneuvers, you will want to keep your Jump skill maximized.

If you haven't already, you should take the Blade Meditation feat.

Tiger Blooded is an ideal feat to take if you have a barbarian level, and you can use Martial Study to further expand your Tiger Claw maneuver repertoire.

Many of your maneuvers key off critical hits, so Improved Critical can increase those opportunities.

RESOURCES

A fellow student or master of the Tiger Claw is obliged to provide food and lodging for a short time, unless you are enemies for some reason.

You, in turn, are expected to provide a demonstration of your abilities, showing your host the true nature of the tiger.

Since the bloodclaw masters are not a recognized group or authority, even within the Tiger Claw discipline, any additional support is unlikely.

More often, a master might provide a task or quest that serves his own ends, but you are not under any particular obligation to accept it.

BLOODCLAW MASTERS IN THE WORLD

"What's worse than a raging weretiger?"

A raging weretiger with a huge axe."

—Aubren Starchaser, ranger of the north

Bloodclaw masters are feral fighters that represent the purest form of the Tiger Claw discipline, at least in their own minds.

They are a specialized extension of the martial classes, an example of how a character might embody the essence of a particular martial school.

In the case of Tiger Claw, the followers of the discipline itself are fragmented and disorganized, and a bloodclaw master could just as easily be a valuable ally or a memorable foe.

ORGANIZATION

It is said that a mountain can be home to only one tiger.

In ages past, the Tiger Claw martial school had many monasteries and fighting colleges, but now the former order is fractured and in shambles after many of the masters met their end following the destruction of the Temple of the Nine Swords and the death of the Tiger Lord. Now, masters of the Tiger Claw are few and far between. Although they show each other courtesy, many work against each other for their own petty ends.

Bloodclaw masters are seen by the discipline's masters as pawns they can use to gain personal power, and even while they provide training, they secretly plot to use their pupils against their rivals.

NPC REACTIONS

The sometimes outlandish appearance and marked standoffishness of bloodclaw masters tends to intimidate most people.

Those who have significant knowledge of the martial paths give due respect to a bloodclaw master, but the reception by others depends on the venue.

People in locales that adventurers frequent are more likely to be indifferent to a bloodclaw master, while those in more upscale environs tend to be unfriendly.

BLOODCLAW MASTER LORE

Characters with ranks in Martial Lore can research bloodclaw masters to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Somehow, these people can turn into tigers.

DC 15: Bloodclaw masters are fierce two-weapon wielders in combat.

DC 20: They are masters of a martial discipline, known as the Tiger Claw, that allows them to channel an inner beast to briefly transform themselves into a form not unlike a tiger.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable bloodclaw master, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

A character with the Gather Information skill can attempt a DC 25 check to locate a bloodclaw master, provided one is in the region.

Alternately, he might attempt to locate a master of the Tiger Claw discipline, who could at least provide information and background on the bloodclaw master and the way of the beast.

Doing so requires the master's attitude to be helpful.

BLOODCLAW MASTERS IN THE GAME

Bloodclaw masters epitomize the Tiger Claw discipline.

A campaign that incorporates multiple martial schools can use bloodclaw masters to represent the more active members of the Tiger Claw school.

Even a setting that is not entirely integrated with the martial classes could incorporate a bloodclaw master as a lone warrior.

The class appeals greatly to players who want to focus a martial adept character in the Tiger Claw school.

Players fond of dual-weapon-wielding characters will also be drawn to this class.

The specialist, rather than the generalist, will find the bloodclaw master appealing.

ADAPTATION

In the EBERRON setting, bloodclaw masters are typically shifters who use the teachings of Tiger Claw and the way of the bloodclaw master to bring themselves closer to their animalistic heritage.

Groups of Tiger Claw adepts and bloodclaw masters share their martial knowledge in conclaves throughout the Eldeen Reaches.

TABLE 5-1: THE BLOODCLAW MASTER HIT DIE: D12

Level	Base				Maneuvers Known	Maneuvers Readied	Special
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+0	+2	+2	+0	1	0	Shifting 1/day, claws of the beast
2nd	+1	+3	+3	+0	0	0	Superior two-weapon fighting, tiger claw synergy (stance)
3rd	+2	+3	+3	+1	1	1	Pouncing strike, low-light vision, shifting 2/day
4th	+3	+4	+4	+1	0	0	Tiger claw synergy (strike)
5th	+3	+4	+4	+1	1	0	Rending claws, scent, shifting 3/day

SHIFTERS AND THE BLOODCLAW MASTER

A shifter character, from the Eberron campaign setting, gains slightly different benefits from taking levels in this class. The class's shifting ability instead grants the shifter one additional shift per day at 1st and 5th levels (but not 3rd level), and the duration of the character's racial shifting ability is increased by 1 round for each level he takes in this prestige class. The PC is treated as having the razorclaw shifter trait for the purpose of meeting prerequisites (such as for other shifter feats).

BLOODSTORM BLADE

"My anger is a building storm.

When it breaks, my enemies' blood will drench the ground like rain."

—Varand Thunderhand, bloodstorm blade

Other martial adepts rightfully look with wonder upon those who learn the bloodstorm style.

Once a secret art jealously guarded by a sword-cult of githyanki warblades, bloodstorm techniques now find use in the hands of martial adepts of many races—most notably, the informal mercenary organization known as the Bloodstorm Guild.

The style takes knowledge from the Iron Heart discipline and applies it to attacks with thrown weapons.

A bloodstorm blade who masters these methods often becomes more deadly when a weapon leaves his hands than when he holds onto it.

BECOMING A BLOODSTORM BLADE

Almost all bloodstorm blades begin their careers as warblades, since that class offers the easiest and most obvious path to mastery of the bloodstorm style.

A few bloodstorm blades find their way to the class through other routes, usually by means of the Martial Study feat.

Other than warblades, fighters most often become bloodstorm blades, but barbarians, rangers, rogues, and monks can also be counted among their number.

Although the bloodstorm blade prestige class primarily features abilities that augment ranged attacks, a high Dexterity score is unnecessary because a character can make use of the thunderous throw ability.

Alternatively, a character with a high Dexterity score and relatively low Strength score can forgo using thunderous throw and instead optimize by taking Combat Reflexes and using eye of the storm.

Either type of character can take feats that increase prowess and attack power with a single melee weapon; the benefits of either approach apply to both ranged and melee attacks.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Balance 8 ranks.

Feats: Point Blank Shot.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know one Iron Heart strike and one Iron Heart stance.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Jump, Martial Lore*, Spot, Tumble.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

As a bloodstorm blade, you gain extraordinary mastery over attacks with thrown weapons, and you learn to throw nearly any weapon at your foes.

These abilities lend themselves to a strong focus on a single weapon of choice that you can then wield both in melee and at range.

Some of the bloodstorm blade class features require you to expend a use of an Iron Heart strike for an encounter, or subsume the effects of an Iron Heart stance.

Returning Attacks (Ex): You can hurl your weapon at a foe and command it to ricochet back to you.

Any weapon you throw behaves as though it has the returning special ability (DMG 225).

When you use returning attacks, you lose the use of one Iron Heart strike you have readied for the current encounter, just as if you had initiated the strike (except you do not also gain the strike's normal effect).

Once you use this ability, you can recover the maneuver you expended and use it normally.

Throw Anything: As an initiate of the mysteries of the bloodstorm technique, you learn to throw swords as easily as others hurl daggers.

You gain Throw Anything (see the sidebar) as a bonus feat.

Weapon Aptitude (Ex): Your training with a wide range of weaponry and tactics allows you the opportunity to gain great skill with particular weapons.

You can qualify for feats requiring a minimum number of fighter levels (such as Weapon Specialization) as if you had a fighter level equal to your combined warblade and bloodstorm blade levels –2.

Furthermore, you have the flexibility to adjust your weapon training.

Each morning, you can spend 1 hour practicing and change the weapons selected for any feat you have that applies only to a single chosen weapon.

For example, you could change your Weapon Focus (greataxe) feat so its benefit applies to longswords instead. You can adjust any number of your feats in this way, and you don't have to adjust them all in the same way. You can't change the weapon choices in such a way that you no longer meet a feat's prerequisite.

For instance, you must be proficient with a weapon chosen for Weapon Focus; and if you have both Weapon Focus and Weapon Specialization with the longsword, you couldn't change Weapon Focus without also changing Weapon Specialization to the same weapon.

You must also have that weapon available during practice; if you don't have a longsword handy, you can't assign your feats to affect longswords.

Marital Throw (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you can initiate a strike from the Iron Heart discipline with a thrown weapon.

The strike must be one that has a target of one creature.

A strike that targets multiple creatures or objects cannot be used with marital throw.

Thunderous Throw (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you build up incredible tension as you ready yourself to throw your weapon, which becomes visible around you like heat waves. When you release your weapon, that power rushes out with your weapon.

As a swift action, you can choose to treat your ranged attack rolls with thrown weapons as melee attacks for the rest of your turn.

You use your melee attack bonus, including Strength bonus, feats, and so forth, to determine your attack bonus for each attack as normal, but you apply the standard modifiers for range penalties.

Attacking into melee, through cover, and so forth incurs the standard penalties.

In addition, you can apply $1-1/2$ times your Strength bonus to damage if you wield the thrown weapon with two hands, and you can use Power Attack with your thrown weapon attacks (adding two times the number subtracted from attack rolls as a bonus on damage rolls when throwing a two-handed weapon).

Bonus Fighter Feat: Bloodstorm blades study all aspects of combat as they learn to rain blows down upon distant foes and enemies close at hand.

At 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, you gain a bonus feat chosen from the list of fighter bonus feats.

You must meet the prerequisite of the feat to take it.

Lightning Ricochet (Ex): From 4th level on, you can throw your weapon at a nearby foe and command it to immediately bounce back to your grasp.

Any time you make a ranged attack with a thrown weapon on your turn, the weapon immediately returns to you, and you can catch it as a free action.

This ability allows you to make a full attack entirely with thrown weapon attacks, or with a mix of thrown and melee attacks.

Blood Wind Ricochet (Ex): As a full-round action, at 5th level and higher, you can hurl a weapon at a foe and compel it to ricochet to other enemies before hurtling back to your waiting hand.

The weapon you throw behaves as though it has the returning special ability (DMG 225), except that you determine the point during your turn when the weapon returns to you.

When using this ability, you make a full attack with a thrown weapon, but each ranged attack must be resolved against a separate target.

You can choose the order in which you attack your foes. Range and cover penalties are resolved for each attack after the first as though that attack originated from the space of the creature you last attacked.

If a creature has total cover relative to you, you cannot attack it.

When you use blood wind ricochet, you lose the use of one Iron Heart strike you have readied for the current encounter, just as if you had initiated the strike (except you do not also gain the strike's normal effect).

Once you use this ability, you can recover the maneuver you expended and use it normally.

Eye of the Storm (Ex): At 7th level, you learn to center your being and adopt a mindset of calm readiness despite the furor of battle raging about you.

While you are in an Iron Heart stance, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of eye of the storm.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the Iron Heart stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using eye of the storm and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action.

When you use this ability, you gain a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against ranged attacks and a +2 competence bonus on Reflex saves.

In addition, when a foe makes an attack of opportunity against you when you make a ranged attack while threatened, you can make a single melee attack against that foe as a swift action (assuming you're not unarmed and you threaten the foe).

Such an attack does not count as an attack of opportunity.

To retain this defensive posture, you can move no more than 10 feet on your turn.

Blood Rain (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, you can enter a state that enables you to inflict a terrible bleeding wound on any living creature you damage with a thrown weapon or a melee attack.

While you are in an Iron Heart stance, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of blood rain.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the Iron Heart stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using blood rain and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action.

The creature you hit with your attack takes 3 points of damage due to blood loss at the beginning of your turn each round.

This effect ends if you stop using the stance.

An affected creature can end the effect by being the beneficiary of any healing (such as a cure spell) or a DC 15 Heal check.

The bleeding effect of blood rain does not stack with itself or the blood rain ability of another bloodstorm blade.

Blade Storm (Ex): At 10th level, you can hurl your weapon as a full-round action to make it seem as if you are attacking a dozen foes at once.

You become the center of a storm of steel as your thrown weapon flies out to strike a foe, returns to ricochet harmlessly off you, then flies out to attack another foe.

You can make a ranged attack with a thrown weapon at your highest attack bonus against as many targets as you wish.

You can attack each target just once with this attack, calculating range and cover penalties from your position on the battlefield.

When you use blade storm, you lose the use of one Iron Heart strike you have readied for the current encounter, just as if you had initiated the strike (except you do not also gain the strike's normal effect).

Once you use this ability, you can recover the maneuver you expended and use it normally.

PLAYING A BLOODSTORM BLADE

Battle gives you a thrilling sense of lightness and the feeling that you command the very air that your weapon parts as it flies to and from your enemies.

In combat, you need only cock your wrist in the right manner, and your consciousness seems to expand to encompass the whole fight.

In that instant, your mind's eye clearly sees the angle and vector of your enemies' limbs, it detects the minute details and defects of their armor, and it knows with absolute certainty the distances that lie between.

The moment you release your weapon, that queer knowledge leaves you, but when the satisfying heft of your weapon slaps back into your waiting palm a moment later, you know that knowledge will be yours again with your next throw.

Your skill with thrown weapons is unmatched except perhaps by other bloodstorm blades, and knowing that gives you tremendous confidence.

You likely specialize in the use of a single kind of weapon, and with it in your possession, you feel unstoppable. Should you lose it, you still command amazing abilities, but you tend to be moody and irritable until you regain your weapon or another of its kind.

COMBAT

As a bloodstorm blade, you can fight at range and in melee with equal ferocity, but foes more than a stone's throw away can prove to be troublesome, so it's always best to move close.

Once you stand among your enemies, it's time to unleash a storm of ranged attacks.

If someone is brave enough to engage you in melee, you can battle him toe to toe, or step back and continue to rain blows across the battlefield.

At low levels, you fight much as you did before becoming a bloodstorm blade, but you have the added benefit of being able to attack a foe at range using your melee weapon.

Often, the best use of this ability will be to throw your weapon at a foe as you close to melee range.

Be sure not to leave yourself unarmed.

Wearing spiked gauntlets presents a simple solution, but other options, such as the Quick Draw feat or shield bash, might be more advantageous.

As you gain more bloodstorm blade abilities, your tactics become more varied.

You can use lightning ricochet to attack a foe as you move and still ready your weapon before the enemy closes to melee range.

You can also use lightning ricochet after taking down a foe in melee, using a ranged attack to soften up an enemy you have not yet engaged.

Using blood wind ricochet and eye of the storm, you become a deadly ranged attacker with ample defenses against your enemies' ranged attacks.

The blood rain stance combines well with blood wind ricochet, but it truly comes into its own when combined with a blood storm strike.

Adopt the blood rain stance and use blood storm as soon as most of your enemies are within range.

After striking every enemy on the field of battle, you can maintain the blood rain stance to continue dealing damage to them while you focus your melee attacks on a single target.

ADVANCEMENT

Many students of the bloodstorm style learn their art covertly, since the githyanki adepts who originally created this ancient tradition seek to kill anyone outside their sword-cult who passes on its secrets.

However, one notable group practices its style in the open: the mercenary Bloodstorm Guild.

These skilled warriors train any suitable applicant who asks them, in exchange for an oath of loyalty and a promise to never reveal the secrets of the technique to any who have not sworn fealty to the guild.

Once you become a bloodstorm blade, you might or might not try to keep that fact a secret.

If you belong to the guild, the githyanki are not likely to single you out—the githyanki blademasters usually keep to an uneasy truce with the Bloodstorm Guild.

If you learn your abilities from some other practitioner, you might find yourself dogged by githyanki blademasters intent on expunging all knowledge of this hidden tradition outside their own race, beginning with you.

Of course, in combat you make full use of your abilities regardless of who might be looking on, but you rarely go out of your way to advertise your knowledge to the general public.

You never know who might be watching.

Your bloodstorm blade abilities lend themselves to mastery of a single melee weapon.

Feats such as Weapon Focus and Weapon Specialization thus apply to both your melee and thrown weapon attacks. Even so, when you have the opportunity to take a feat, consider feats that improve your ranged capabilities, such as Far Shot and Precise Shot.

RESOURCES

As a bloodstorm blade of the guild, your fellow members know you to be competent and reasonably trustworthy. Most members of the Bloodstorm Guild are helpful to you in whatever manner they can manage.

However, more than a few members of the guild pay little heed to their loyalty oaths, and do as they please after they master the secrets of the technique.

You can't always count on your fellows.

Other bloodstorm blades can often rely on the help of other illicit members of the class (especially those whom they trained, or those who trained them) to hide from or repel attacks from the githyanki.

Even bloodstorm blades with a long history of hatred for one another band together against the threat of the githyanki blademasters.

BLOODSTORM BLADES IN THE WORLD

"Like storms, they provide no warning. When you hear their thunder, the lightning has already struck."
—Thaku Alzull, hobgoblin warblade

Bloodstorm blades and their githyanki nemeses can fill any of several roles in your campaign.

Bloodstorm blades might form a loose association of heroic individuals seeking to share their knowledge despite the murderous attacks of the githyanki sword-cult.

Alternatively, the practitioners outside the Bloodstorm Guild might be wicked individuals who stole the special knowledge that should have remained in the oath-bounded hands of the guild.

Your campaign could instead host a blending of these ideas with virtuous and villainous bloodstorm blades and githyanki blademasters on three sides of a morally murky secret war.

If you would rather not use the Bloodstorm Guild and the secrecy of the bloodstorm style, you can simply adopt the bloodstorm blade prestige class as a way to include a cool villain.

ORGANIZATION

Not long ago, a secret society or sword-cult of githyanki warblades had sole possession of the bloodstorm techniques.

Devoted to study and mastery of the Iron Heart discipline, the githyanki developed the signature abilities of the style over the course of generations.

Naturally, the githyanki saw no reason to share their secret knowledge with anyone, and those who pried too much about it found themselves facing its lethal practitioners.

Then, about forty years ago, the secret got out.

Some say a member betrayed the sword-cult by teaching the bloodstorm style to an outsider.

Others say a brave human warblade stole scripts detailing the maneuvers and learned the art from them.

Regardless of how the githyanki lost it, knowledge of the bloodstorm blade style spread like wildfire, and despite efforts by the sword-cult to quash knowledge and eliminate those who practice its techniques, many who study the Iron Heart discipline choose to risk the githyanki wrath by becoming bloodstorm blades.

The only nongith organization of martial adepts openly practicing this style is the Bloodstorm Guild, founded by a renowned human warblade named Treyana di Vrada shortly after the secrets of the style got out, the Guild is a loose association of mercenaries and sellswords bound together by some simple, nonbinding vows.

Bloodstorm Guild members rarely serve employers as a group, and instead tend to hire themselves out as specialists, enforcers, and bodyguards.

Guild members in the same region often frequent the same taverns, arming grounds, and training arenas, and they might pass news of potential employment to one another.

The guild has no true hierarchy of leadership, although more junior members usually defer to proven blades (those with more levels in this prestige class).

Before a bloodstorm blade consents to instruct a potential student in the secrets of the technique, he usually confers with other senior blades in the area.

Characters who master this style without seeking out the Bloodstorm Guild usually do so through study of black-market texts describing its use, or by studying for a time with another bloodstorm blade.

These master-student relationships don't often last long, but usually result in lifelong friendship and loyalty.

Many teachers eventually build up a network of former students, and students of their students, who will answer a call for support or assistance of any kind.

NPC REACTIONS

Martial adepts who have heard of the bloodstorm technique regard all its practitioners with a little awe, but this attitude doesn't influence their reaction upon meeting bloodstorm blades.

Bloodstorm blades typically regard one another with a friendly attitude.

Githyanki warblades are hostile to all bloodstorm blades who do not belong to the guild, but are merely unfriendly to guild members.

A years-long feud between the gith sword-cult and Treyana di Vrada and her followers left many dead on both sides, and the githyanki have grudgingly allowed a truce of sorts...at least until they have the strength to eradicate the nongith practitioners of the art in one swift strike.

BLOODSTORM BLADE LORE

Characters with ranks in Martial Lore can research bloodstorm blades to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Bloodstorm blades have amazing powers with thrown weapons.

Many belong to the Bloodstorm Guild, a mercenary fellowship of sorts.

DC 15: The techniques used by bloodstorm blades were known exclusively to the githyanki up until a few decades ago.

Now scripts describing the style are available only on the black market.

DC 20: The secretive githyanki blademasters are responsible for the attacks on bloodstorm blades and those who traffic with them.

The githyanki created the style and now seek to suppress knowledge of it.

A PC who wishes to learn about specific bloodstorm blades or the Bloodstorm Guild will have a difficult time.

He

must make quiet inquiries at martial adept training halls and places frequented by those with connections to the black market, and then succeed on a DC 20 Gather Information check.

Publicly asking about bloodstorm blades likely results in the PC being rebuffed, and such queries might attract the attention of a vigilant githyanki blademaster.

BLOODSTORM BLADES IN THE GAME

If one of your players decides to play a bloodstorm blade, the prestige class should fit in as easily as any martial adept class.

You can make the Bloodstorm Guild or the githyanki blademasters as large or small a part of your campaign as you like.

If the githyanki sword-cult becomes a part of your campaign, be sure that its involvement doesn't put too much of a spotlight on the bloodstorm blade.

Too many githyanki attacks against the PCs will grow onerous, and the cult isn't large enough to repeatedly expend the lives of its members trying to kill a PC.

Instead of adventures centered on the githyanki, consider having an NPC member of the Bloodstorm Guild occasionally help or advise the PCs as they go about other adventures.

If a player decides to be a member of the Bloodstorm Guild, you can use rumors of black market texts describing the bloodstorm techniques or githyanki assassin teams as adventure hooks.

ADAPTATION

Bloodstorm blades need not be attached to a fellowship of sellswords or a secret githyanki cult. The class's techniques might be a development of the Iron Heart discipline that anyone can learn, or the fighting style might have been discovered and used by another race. For example, you could decide that the abilities of this prestige class are used only by a group of halflings who are specialists with the sling. Calling themselves stonestorm strikers, members of this prestige class gain Quick Draw instead of Throw Anything and have the ability to load a sling with one hand as a free action instead of returning attacks.

The other abilities of the class would work with sling attacks instead of thrown weapons.

TABLE 5-2: THE BLOODSTORM BLADE HIT DIE: D12

STOPPING A RETURNING WEAPON

It might seem logical to ready an action to grab a weapon that flies about the battlefield or somehow strike it from the air, but a thrown weapon is no more vulnerable to such tactics than an arrow. Although a feat such as Deflect Arrows remains useful protection, a thrown weapon with the returning special ability must be treated like any other thrown weapon. Once thrown, it is in rapid constant motion and never hovers or hangs in the air.

However, some of the tactics that work against arrows can be effective against a bloodstorm blade's thrown weapon attacks.

For example, a creature could ready an action to close a door between itself and a bloodstorm blade when the blade throws a weapon. If the readied action was contingent on the weapon being thrown, the closed door would provide total cover against the attack. If the readied action was contingent on the weapon passing through the open door, the weapon would attack the bloodstorm blade's intended target, but would be prevented from returning and fall to the floor after making its attack (whether successful or not), since line of effect no longer exists between the weapon and its wielder.

DEEPSTONE SENTINEL

"I almost felt pity for Urthrad's orcs as they charged our defensive line.

Almost."

—Orros the Bloodyhanded, sentinel of the Northern Reach

The Stone Dragon discipline traces its roots back to an ancient order of dwarves that used the power of the earth to enhance their combat style.

A deepstone sentinel immerses himself in these ancient teachings to link himself to the power of stone.

Most deepstone sentinels use this power in the defense of their fellow dwarves, though some take a more active approach battling the enemies of their people.

In combat, a deepstone sentinel is a living mountain, a stony redoubt that provides shelter to his allies while crashing like an avalanche upon his enemies. The ground shifts and churns under his feet.

One moment he stands atop a small, earthen mound that blocks his enemies—the next he summons an earthquake to knock his foes to the ground.

BECOMING A DEEPSTONE SENTINEL

Most dwarves who follow the tradition of the deepstone sentinel begin as crusaders or warblades.

Fighters, paladins, martial-oriented characters might also find the class to their liking; typically, such characters multiclass (often as rogues or scouts) to meet the skill requirement.

On rare occasions, dwarf monks take up the mantle of deepstone sentinel, often moving on to crusader, swordsage, or warblade upon completing progression in the class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Dwarf.

Base Attack Bonus: +10.

Skills: Balance 13 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack or Stone Power*.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know at least two Stone Dragon maneuvers and one Stone Dragon stance.

* New feat described on page 32.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (dungeoneering), Listen, Martial Lore*, Spot.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

The class allows you to continue to learn new maneuvers, likely from the Stone Dragon discipline.

It also grants special combat prowess when utilizing Stone Dragon maneuvers.

Maneuvers: At each odd-numbered level, you gain a new maneuver known from the Stone Dragon discipline.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full deepstone sentinel levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 3rd level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Mountain Fortress Stance (Su): As a novice deepstone sentinel, you learn to make yourself as impenetrable as a mountain fortress.

This ability is a key component of this prestige class's combat abilities.

While you are in a Stone Dragon stance, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of mountain fortress stance.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the Stone Dragon stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using mountain fortress stance and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action.

When you use this ability, you can choose to create a fortress of earth or rock, provided you are standing on earth, stone, rock, or a worked surface such as a cobblestone street or a flagstone floor (as long as natural earth or rock is no more than 1 foot below you).

The square (or squares) that you occupy forms a pillar of earth or rock 5 feet tall, with you on top.

Each square adjacent to you is buckled and steeply sloped, becoming difficult terrain.

Any creature that attempts to enter or leave one of these squares must make a DC 10 Balance check or fall prone in the last square of the area it occupied.

Creatures that ignore difficult terrain automatically succeed on this check, and flying creatures are unaffected. Creatures with four or more legs or the stability racial trait gain a +4 bonus on this Balance check.

You retain the benefit of mountain fortress stance until you end your Stone Dragon stance or move more than 5 feet in a round.

You are unaffected by the difficult terrain you create with this ability.

If you move only 5 feet in a round, the pillar of earth you have created moves with you.

creating new squares of difficult terrain in every square adjacent to your new position.

If creatures occupy those newly adjacent squares, they do not need to immediately make Balance checks as described above.

However, if on their turn they attempt to leave the area of difficult terrain, they are affected by mountain fortress stance as normal, and squares that are no longer adjacent to you return to their natural state.

If you move more than 5 feet in a round while using mountain fortress stance, the effect ends, and the ground immediately returns to normal.

Passwall (Sp): You can use passwall once per day per class level as a spell-like ability.

Your caster level is equal to your deepstone sentinel class level.

Crashing Mountain Juggernaut (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, if you start your turn with mountain fortress stance active, as a full-round action you can end the Stone Dragon stance you initiated to gain the benefit of this ability.

When you do so, the hill you created with mountain fortress stance suddenly sinks, sending any foes standing in squares adjacent to you crashing to the ground.

In addition, you tumble down the crumbling hill like a living avalanche.

When you use this ability, all creatures within the area of difficult terrain created by your mountain fortress stance must make DC 15 Balance checks or fall prone.

The bonus for stability or having extra legs does not apply.

In addition, you can use a charge to attack an enemy as part of this ability's activation.

If your attack is successful, it deals an extra 2d6 points of damage owing to the momentum you gain as you hurtle down your temporary hill and slam into your opponent. You cannot activate mountain fortress stance on the same turn in which you use this ability.

Indomitable Redoubt (Ex): Once you attain 3rd level, while you are in mountain fortress stance, you can also initiate and gain the benefit of one additional Stone Dragon stance. This can be the stance you entered to initially activate mountain fortress stance, or another Stone Dragon stance you know.

You must otherwise follow all the normal rules for entering and maintaining a stance.

Stone Curse (Su): From 4th level on, you can strike an opponent and channel the leaden weight of the earth into its arms and legs.

For a brief moment, it labors in vain, unable to move under the crushing burden you impose.

As an immediate action, you can force an opponent you hit with a melee attack to make a successful Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Str modifier) or become unable to move for 1 round.

The creature's speed for all movement modes except flight drops to 0 feet.

A creature's fly speed remains unchanged.

You must choose to use this ability after successfully attacking an opponent but before rolling damage.

Dragon's Tooth (Su): From 4th level on, as a stand action, you can cause a pillar of stone to erupt from the earth within 60 feet of you.

The pillar occupies one square and is 5 or 10 feet tall (your choice).

You can call forth a stone pillar only from natural, unworked earth or stone.

A creature standing in the square must succeed on a Reflex save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Str modifier) or be knocked prone.

You can dismiss a pillar you created as a standard action, but otherwise the pillar remains where you called it forth.

Awaken the Stone Dragon (Su): At 5th level, you can cause a localized earthquake to rumble through the ground around you.

Through your study of Stone Dragon techniques, and your strong connection to elemental earth, you can awaken the slumbering wrath of stone to send your enemies tumbling to the ground.

The earth churns, rocks explode into cutting shards, and the ground rebels against your foes.

Once per encounter as a swift action, you cause the ground around you to shudder and churn as if rocked by an earthquake.

All enemies within a 60-foot radius must make successful Reflex saves (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Str modifier) or take 12d6 points of damage and fall prone.

A successful save allows an opponent to take half damage and remain standing.

Improved stability (such as a dwarf's racial ability) does not help a creature avoid being knocked prone by this ability.

PLAYING A DEEPSTONE SENTINEL

A deepstone sentinel embodies many classic dwarf traits.

As a sentinel, you are quiet, slow to anger, taciturn, and blunt.

You prefer to let your enemies come to you, rather than charge forward and expose your position.

A steady, reliable advance works much better than a wild, risky gambit.

Like the earth beneath your feet, you are reliable, steady, and enduring.

Other warriors might rely on flashy gambits and fluid tactics, but you have little use for such stratagems.

You are the rock that endures, the impenetrable wall of defense that withstands the enemy's assault.

When it is time to attack, you unleash your fury in an avalanche of steel.

Until then, you let your foes waste their efforts against your sturdy armor and thick shield.

COMBAT

A deepstone sentinel is, in essence, a mobile defensive position.

Once you enter mountain fortress stance, you form a useful barrier against enemies who seek to skirt around you and attack your allies.

Once you gain the indomitable redoubt ability, you can combine mountain fortress stance with a stance from the Stone Dragon discipline, such as roots of the mountain, making you nearly impossible to circumvent or overcome in battle.

Generally speaking, as a deepstone sentinel you should focus on staying in front of your companions.

In most cases, slower monsters such as giants, and other melee combatants should have to fight through you before they can attack your allies.

Your ability to stop a foe dead in his tracks with stone curse, particularly if you wield a reach weapon, makes any attempt to slip around you a risky gamble at best.

You excel at controlling the battlefield.

Look to create chokepoints that force an enemy to enter and remain in the area of your abilities.

ADVANCEMENT

Joining the deepstone sentinels is a difficult task, since a prospective candidate must not only display great skill at arms but also master difficult mystic secrets of the earth itself.

The sentinels tend to resist training adventurers and other lone wolves.

In battle, the sentinels are expected to form a mighty defensive bulwark against more numerous enemies of the dwarves, such as orcs, goblins, and ogres.

A sentinel intent on learning the secrets of this order, then striking out on his own, is a poor investment in the order's eyes.

An adventuring dwarf who becomes a sentinel must prove himself in battle, usually by rendering a great service to a dwarf clan home, or by showing that his adventures directly aid the dwarf people.

Once you become a sentinel, you can expect most dwarves to treat you with respect and admiration.

Yet, these accolades come with expectations that you will always fight hard and true for the dwarf people.

The sentinels have never broken and run from a battle until their allies have all safely withdrawn.

Legend has it that the first sentinel to break this tradition will be struck dead by Moradin himself.

Whether this tale is true or not, the implication is plain as day.

A sentinel would die before abandoning his allies.

As you gain levels in this prestige class, look for feats and abilities that increase your reach, make it easier for you to handle crowds of opponents, and boost your AC.

You can expect your enemies to target you for destruction quickly, since as long as you remain standing, you prevent them from harming your friends.

RESOURCES

You can expect a place to sleep and more than enough food and drink from any dwarf clan home.

The sentinels maintain outposts in most major dwarf cities and citadels built near orc, goblin, and giant hordes.

As an adventurer, your fellow sentinels are likely eager for news of the outside world and of the rest of the order when you visit these bastions of dwarven strength, if the dwarves face a threat of any sort, you will be expected to contribute to a solution.

Although this can be a burden, your position as a respected figure also makes it easy for you to sway dwarf leaders and organize your people in the face of a threat.

If you advise the dwarf king to send a raiding party to slip into an orc stronghold and slay the red dragon that leads the tribes, you can expect smiths to forge sturdy armor and deadly weapons for the raiding party, while clerics of Moradin and dwarf mages craft scrolls and potions that the group might need.

DEEPSTONE SENTINELS IN THE WORLD

"When the sentinels came through the east gate, we halted our efforts to reinforce the northern walls.

Our fortifications had arrived."

—General Rurik Axethrower, IX Rockhome Legion

Deepstone sentinels tend to remain within the dwarf holds they have sworn to defend.

Typically, only a great threat to the dwarf people, a quest important to their continuing prosperity, or a threat from a distant land can cause one to become an adventurer.

A PC dwarf might strive to join the order to prove himself to his people, or the righteous nature of his quest might compel the sentinels to offer him training in their mystic fighting style.

ORGANIZATION

The deepstone sentinels practice their fighting art in vaults hidden far beneath dwarf strongholds.

Beneath the deepest mines, below the winding passages that lead to distant strongholds and subterranean caverns, the sentinels have small, austere academies where they train the next generation of sentinels, practice their fighting styles, and bury their dead.

Tradition holds that many of a citadel's most important treasures are stored here, both to keep them hidden from the outside world and to place them under the trustworthy protection of the sentinels.

A deepstone sentinel is a member of an elite fighting unit, one that serves as both the first and last line of defense for the dwarves.

In battle, they are the dauntless core that the dwarves rally around.

When orcs and giants threaten a dwarf stronghold, the sentinels must stand resolute to protect key passages, tunnels, and other entrances.

If the sentinels fall, the stronghold is often lost.

NPC REACTIONS

Dwarves have a natural inclination to respect and admire deepstone sentinels, since they are seen as embodiments of three dwarven virtues—courage, loyalty, and wisdom in the lore of earth and stone.

Nondwarves tend to know little of the sentinels, because they rarely trumpet their talents or show off their abilities outside combat.

Orcs and giants hate sentinels, but they are forced to respect a sentinel's fighting ability.

DEEPSTONE SENTINEL LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (history) can research deepstone sentinels to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Deepstone sentinels are dwarf warriors who are renowned for breaking enemy charges and forming a dauntless line in battle.

DC 15: The sentinels have the ability to control the earth. At their command, they cause the ground to become broken and sloped, making a charge against them almost impossible.

DC 20: Sentinels practice a strange form of martial magic by tapping into the power of the earth.

They cause the ground to shake and disruptive terrain to form.

When you fight a sentinel, you fight the earth itself.

Any PC who has friendly relations with a local dwarf stronghold can likely gain an audience with a sentinel's commander.

Sentinels tend to avoid contact with outsiders, for fear of mingling with spies and others who seek to learn their weaknesses or plot against them.

DEEPSTONE SENTINELS IN THE GAME

Deepstone sentinels are relatively easy to add into the game world, given that they are secretive, few in number, and confined to dwarf strongholds.

A dwarf PC might never have heard of this order simply because the citadel where he grew up lacked such an elite fighting unit.

The sentinels could also be a relatively new development in your world, particularly if the abilities outlined in this book are a new form of martial art.

Dwarf characters who rely on heavy armor are a good match for this class.

The armor helps turn a dwarf into a tremendous obstacle for enemies without penalizing his speed.

ADAPTATION

The key concept of the deepstone sentinel is manipulation of the terrain on which the character is fighting.

This class provides the mechanics for an interesting opponent, since it gives melee-oriented characters access to abilities that would normally be reserved for spellcasters.

An order of evil stone giants or fire giants with access to these abilities would make a daunting opponent.

You could also change this class into a druidic warrior or wild elf forest sentinel who creates an entangle effect when he enters the basic stance of the class in an area of natural vegetation, and redesign the remaining class abilities in accordance with this new concept.

TABLE 5-3: THE DEEPSTONE SENTINEL HIT DIE: d10

ETERNAL BLADE

"You face three millennia of fighting skill.

Perhaps you should take a moment and reconsider your decision."

—Aedar Windblade, eternal blade of the Hidden Grove

An eternal blade is an elf who learns a variety of exotic fighting maneuvers with the aid and advice of the spirit of a mighty, ancient elf warrior.

The eternal blades once swore to defend the elves against the forces of evil, but in ages past, the blades turned against each other, causing a schism that echoes to the present day. Some eternal blades embrace the responsibilities that come with this class's training.

Others seek to use their talents to further their own ends. The eternal blades were once champions of Corellon Larethian.

They served as guardians of the people, defenders of the faith, and wardens of the ancient elf forests.

The blade guides, the spirits of ancient eternal blades who serve as advisors and teachers to the current generation of warriors, kept the blades on the path of righteousness, preserved their teachings across each generation, and helped guide them in protecting elfkind.

For thousands of years, the eternal blades beat back goblin invasions, would-be conquerors, and other threats.

From the lone blade who slew an ogre that threatened a village, to the mighty general who commanded hundreds of these warriors in battle, the eternal blades fought evil wherever and whenever it threatened their kin.

Alas, all good things must come to an end.

In time, the eternal blades grew arrogant and aloof.

After all, they had provided safety and security to the elf realms on countless occasions.

If they kept the elves safe, did it not follow that their brethren owed them something in return?

A growing faction within the blades believed that the eternal blades were the only ones fit to rule the elves. Even worse, a number of the blade guides turned to evil and abandoned the order.

In time, the eternal blades fell into disfavor.

More and more elves refused the blade guides' call.

Today, the order is a mere shadow of its former glory, although legends tell of a heroic warrior who will one day lead the order back to prominence.

The remaining blades hope that this triumph lies in their future, but many elves believe the story to be nothing but wishful thinking.

BECOMING AN ETERNAL BLADE

The elves hold that one does not choose to become an eternal blade.

Rather, a blade guide, the spiritual companion to an eternal blade, chooses a young elf to walk this path and manifests in a young elf's dreams long before the child is ready to train as a warrior.

Sometimes, these manifestations are merely flights of fancy.

Other times, they are heralds of things to come.

Most elves who become eternal blades begin their careers as warblades.

Rangers, fighters, paladins, and barbarians who learn maneuvers from the Diamond Mind or Devoted Spirit disciplines also commonly enter this prestige class.

In a few cases, a blade guide appears to an elf late in life.

This occurrence is rare, and it usually signals an elf warrior who is destined for great things.

Legends tell that only five elves have been selected in this manner.

Each of them became a great hero who led the blades to a great victory against seemingly impossible odds.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +10.

Feats: Weapon Focus (any).

Martial Maneuvers: Any two Devoted Spirit or Diamond Mind maneuvers.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Martial Lore*, Ride, Sense Motive, Tumble.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

As an eternal blade, you fight and train with the assistance of a blade guide, the incorporeal spirit of an ancient member of this order.

The guide is similar to a familiar in that it confers benefits to you when you are in close proximity to it.

A blade guide also increases your flexibility, since it can teach you new maneuvers and lend you the wisdom of its combat experience.

Maneuvers: At each odd-numbered level, you gain a new maneuver known from the Devoted Spirit, Diamond Mind, Iron Heart, or White Raven discipline.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full eternal blade levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 3rd level, 6th level, and 9th level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Stances Known: At 5th level, you learn a new martial stance from the Devoted Spirit, Diamond Mind, Iron Heart, or White Raven disciplines.

You must meet a stance's prerequisite to learn it.

Blade Guide (Su): You gain a blade guide, the spirit of an ancient member of the eternal blades, that provides you with advice, tactical assistance, and training.

The blade guide is incorporeal, has hit points equal to your own, and is size Fine.

Its AC is 18, and it can fly with perfect maneuverability and a speed of 30 feet.

If your blade guide is destroyed, or it somehow moves out of your line of effect, it reappears in your space in 1d6 rounds.

The guide is the physical manifestation of a spirit that resides on the Outer Planes.

Destroying a blade guide's form merely severs its link to the Material Plane for a short time.

A blade guide appears as a mote of white energy.

It uses your senses to see and hear, and communicates with you by telepathy.

Thus, it cannot interact with objects and creatures that you cannot see.

Your blade guide is meant to aid you in combat, not serve as a scout.

Sometimes, your guide appears as a ghostly image of how it looked in life.

This manifestation requires tremendous effort, and your guide chooses to attempt it only when it must communicate with others under dire circumstances.

When a blade guide manifests, it can speak with others as normal.

A blade guide can appear in this manner for up to 10 minutes per day.

While it manifests, you lose access to your blade guide and any class abilities that require it to function.

If a blade guide must make a saving throw, it uses your save modifier.

It lacks skill ranks, feats, Hit Dice, and ability score modifiers.

Eternal Training (Ex): Your blade guide offers you intense martial training based on its years of combat experience in mortal life.

Each night when you enter trance, your blade guide enters your mind.

In your dreams, the two of you spar and practice across a hundred different battlefields.

You fight ogres, trolls, and other monsters that your guide creates from the ether of dreams.

You practice maneuvers beyond your normal capacity.

With each night that passes, you become more and more skilled in the fighting arts.

Once per day, you can draw upon this nightly training to aid you in a single battle.

You can choose one of two benefits.

Each of these benefits lasts for one encounter.

You gain an insight bonus equal to your Intelligence bonus (if any) on attack rolls and damage rolls against creatures of a single type.

If you select humanoid or outsider as the type, you must also choose a subtype.

Alternatively, you can gain the use of one maneuver from the Diamond Mind or Devoted Spirit discipline.

You must meet the prerequisite for this maneuver as normal.

A crusader/eternal guardian who selects this option is immediately granted this maneuver.

A maneuver gained with eternal training can be recovered with your normal recovery method (if you have one) during the encounter, but knowledge of the maneuver fades immediately after the encounter ends.

You gain an additional use per day of this ability at 3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th level.

Even if you have multiple uses of this ability per day, you can use this ability only once per encounter. You can use this ability only while you have access to your blade guide.

Guided Strike (Ex): Your blade guide assesses your enemies, seeking out weak points in their armor and offering you advice on where and how to strike.

Drawing on its experience and keen eye for strategy and tactics, your guide grants you advice that can render even the most daunting foe impotent.

Beginning at 2nd level, as a swift action, you can confer with your guide concerning a single foe that you face. For the rest of your turn, you automatically overcome your foe's damage reduction, if any.

You can use this ability only while you have access to your blade guide.

Armored Uncanny Dodge (Ex): So long as your blade guide is active, you gain the benefit of uncanny dodge starting at 3rd level.

See the rogue class feature (PH 50).

If you already have uncanny dodge, you instead gain improved uncanny dodge.

If you lose access to your blade guide, you lose this ability until your guide returns.

You can use uncanny dodge or improved uncanny dodge even if you wear medium or heavy armor.

Eternal Knowledge (Ex): Your blade guide is an expert in a variety of areas.

In addition to the tactical and strategic guidance it offers, it also grants you access to great stores of lore.

From history to planar phenomena, your guide has seen almost everything.

When you attain 4th level, your blade guide can make Knowledge checks with a bonus equal to your eternal blade level + your Int modifier.

When you first gain this ability, you can select two areas of knowledge.

For each additional two levels you gain in the eternal blade prestige class (at 6th, 8th, and 10th level), your guide gains access to another area of knowledge.

Defensive Insight (Ex): Your blade guide's advice and insights grant you an intellectual edge in combat, but there is a fine line between knowing how to do something and executing it in combat.

If you take a moment to focus yourself, you can apply your knowledge to the situation at hand.

Beginning at 6th level, as a swift action, you can size up an opponent and use your tactical knowledge against him.

You gain a dodge bonus to AC equal to your Intelligence bonus (if any) against a single foe of your choice until the beginning of your next turn.

You can use this ability only while you have access to your blade guide.

Tactical Insight (Ex): Although you might be young by the elves' reckoning, your blade guide lends you the experience and wisdom of one who has fought battles across countless fields.

In almost any situation you face, you have the experience, tactical lore, and knowledge needed to defeat your enemy.

From 8th level on, as a swift action, you can assess a tactical situation and make an attack that improves the attacks of your allies.

For the rest of your turn, any opponent you hit with a melee attack takes a penalty to AC equal to your Intelligence bonus (if any) for 1 round. This penalty applies only to attacks made by your allies.

If you lose access to your blade guide, you lose this ability until it returns.

Island in Time (Ex): At 10th level, you can throw yourself into a fight under your blade guide's careful direction. You meld with it, allowing it to control your actions while you draw upon its vast combat experience.

Once per encounter, you can take your turn as an immediate action.

Using this ability does not change your initiative count, and you can use all your actions as normal.

For example, if your initiative count is 15, you could act normally, use this ability to act again on initiative count 14, then act normally on the following round on initiative count 15.

If you lose access to your blade guide, you lose this ability until it returns.

PLAYING AN ETERNAL BLADE

A blade guide, in large part, shapes and molds the persona of an eternal blade.

The guide acts as it did in life.

Some are gruff, demanding perfectionists.

Others are quiet and withdrawn masters who prefer to let their combat expertise speak for them.

Many eternal blades get along fine with their guides, but some bicker and argue.

In particular, a blade guide's centuries of experience sometimes clash with a younger eternal blade's thirst for action.

When you are playing an eternal blade, your DM should take on the role of your blade guide and help you form a relationship with it.

When the party stops to discuss its plans, your guide likely makes its opinions known.

As a member of a dying order, you might want to strive to help pull the eternal blades back from the brink of oblivion. Remember, every action you take reflects on your order as a whole.

COMBAT

In combat, you are a war leader, a central focus of the group's melee resources.

You must wade into combat to prevent threatening monsters from getting to your group's vulnerable spellcasters.

The key to your class abilities lies in your talent to focus yourself for one encounter.

A standard fighter might have more feats, and thus do more damage with his typical swing, but your abilities allow you to push yourself ahead of the curve.

With judicious use of your eternal training, defensive insight, and tactical abilities, you can deal impressive amounts of damage, absorb attacks, or set up an ally's deadly attacks.

ADVANCEMENT

As noted above, you might not have selected this path so much as it chose you.

Becoming an eternal blade does not involve an application process, an interview, or a test.

Instead, the blade guides select elf warriors based on a nebulous criterion.

Sometimes, they see a spark for heroism and self-sacrifice, and wish to cultivate it.

In other cases, a blade guide cannot guess how it came to be linked to a specific person.

All a guide knows is that its charge was chosen to become an eternal blade.

Its place is not to ask why, but to guide the young aspirant unflinchingly.

Once you become an eternal blade, you might seek out the nearest redoubt of this order (if one still stands) and confer with its elders.

Some eternal blades never make contact with the order, seeing it as a failure.

Rather, they seek to strike out on their own.

Perhaps a mighty warrior will someday pull these wanderers together into an effective fighting force.

When selecting feats and skills, look to abilities that function in a wide range of circumstances.

Some of your class features have a limited number of uses, or function only when you use a swift action.

This puts them in competition with any boosts you might learn through martial maneuvers.

Don't increase this competition by acquiring many more abilities that require actions.

Instead, look for feats that provide a consistent, constant benefit, such as Weapon Specialization.

RESOURCES

Once, the eternal blades had a tremendous range of resources to draw upon.

Sadly, those glory days are gone.

You can expect little help from other eternal blades in the form of food, shelter, weapons, and armor.

Most will gladly stand beside you in battle, but the order is simply too weak to marshal an extensive store of material resources.

You are welcome in the few remaining blade-held castles, but even these offer little comfort, with their crumbling walls and faded glory.

ETERNAL BLADES IN THE WORLD

"We retreated merely to ascertain the enemy's strength.

These upstart elves will be defeated ere the urn rises again.

I swear by my life."

—Tergin Bloodoath, battle herald of Hextor (deceased)

The eternal blades comprise a small, dying group that rarely ventures far beyond elf lands.

The difficulty of introducing a member of this prestige class into a campaign depends on when a player decides to take up the class.

A character built from 1st level to enter this class might receive visions and dreams from his blade guide throughout his career.

The guide might shepherd the character along the eternal blade path, leading him where he is needed most, giving clues that lead to lost treasure, ancient enemies and so forth.

For a higher-level character, the blade guide might simply manifest at a later age.

Not every blade guide appears to an elf in childhood, and such a manifestation might herald an epic destiny for the character so chosen.

ORGANIZATION

The good-aligned eternal blades gather in small groups called cadres.

Each cadre is centered on a grove deep within the elven forests.

These locations have names such as Blade Deep Grove, Ten Trees Stand, and the Eternal Redoubt.

Many of these places were once majestic castles that housed hundreds of elite warriors.

Today, they are mostly empty, dusty reminders of past glory.

A number of them are located far from elf territories.

In the long centuries since the groves were built, the forests around them might have been burned, a diverted river might have flooded them, and so forth.

Orcs, goblins, or even a human king might occupy what was once an elf fortress.

In other areas, the blades' redoubts have become monster-infested dungeons.

The eternal blades dwindle in numbers each year, and as their number grows smaller, they become increasingly unable to offer protection to their people.

Many elf towns and cities haven't seen a visiting eternal blade in centuries.

In some lands, these warriors are regarded as no more than myths from a bygone, better time.

A council of nine officers leads each grove, though in recent times many can't muster such numbers.

Typically as few as three or four senior elves coordinate the eternal blades of each grove.

These warriors are usually too old to continue questing across the land.

Instead, they seek to recruit new eternal blades and provide what training they can offer.

Although a council might work hard, a deep sense of doom, misery, and pessimism rests over most groves.

The elders can remember when hundreds of eternal blades would gather to defeat a dragon or throw back an invasion.

Today, the elders watch in sorrow as fewer and fewer blades return from the quests they embark upon.

In some cases, a grove and the castle associated with it have fallen to invasion or been abandoned to the elements.

The eternal blades have lost the location of many of these fortresses, and they are keen to reclaim them.

Legend holds that a mighty artifact, the Blade of Endil, lies hidden in one such grove.

Only when it is recovered can the eternal blades once again return to power.

NPC REACTIONS

Most folk know little of the eternal blades.

Even deep within ancient elf forests, the blades are known only as a small band of once-renowned knights.

Many elves see them as well-meaning but misguided.

These elves wonder why the blades must cling to the shadows of a once-great past.

As befits their chaotic nature, most elves see life and history as a series of changes.

What worked in ages past might not be a good fit for today.

In a typical elf community, an eternal blade is seen as an anachronism—a figure who has stepped out of history, yet refused to adapt to the modern world.

Elves who enjoy the protection and aid of the eternal blades have a much different view.

These elves see the blades as helpful guardians.

In the regions around their fortresses, the eternal blades can expect at least a friendly welcome, food, and lodging from any elves.

Unfortunately for the blades, a dark chapter in their history prevents them from becoming truly welcomed into the community.

In ages past, a faction of eternal blades attempted to seize control of the elf realms.

Elves who fall under the blades' protection today appreciate and welcome their assistance, but they take care to maintain their independence from these warriors.

Few nonelves have any knowledge of the eternal blades.

The few who remember regard the blades as stalwart defend of the realm.

Dwarves and gnomes in particular treat them with respect, because on several occasions the eternal blades have worked to form alliances between the elves and other folk.

ETERNAL BLADE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (history) can research eternal blades to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: The eternal blades are an order of elf knights who fell into disfavor long ago for attempting to seize political control of several elf lands.

DC 15: The eternal blades use a strange fighting style that is almost magical in nature.

DC 20: An eternal blade communes with the spirit of an ancient warrior.

This spirit aids the warrior in battle by providing advice, menacing his enemies, and lending him strength and support.

Finding an eternal blade is no easy task, since the few remaining members of this order dwell far from the realms of humanity.

The best way to find an eternal blade grove is to consult with elf sages or historians to find the supposed location of a grove, travel there, and hope that the place has not yet fallen into neglect and ruin.

ETERNAL BLADES IN THE GAME

Eternal blades are relatively easy to add to your game, since they are few in number and hard to find.

The characters might not encounter any blades until well into the campaign, when you have decided that it is dramatically appropriate for them to appear.

They might be forgotten defenders of an ancient item that the party seeks, or an elf warblade in the party might be the one prophesied to lead the eternal blades back to glory.

This latter plot idea can be even more interesting if the elf PC is a reluctant hero, one who would rather seek glory on his own than deal with leading an entire order of warriors into battle.

Players with an interest in weaving epic plots and detailed backgrounds around their characters might find the eternal blade an interesting class.

As written, the class cries out for a PC to take the role of the chosen warrior who leads the blades back to glory.

Perhaps a great threat grows across the land, and only the eternal blades have the martial power needed to battle it.

Until a skilled leader, such as a PC, emerges, the blades are too scattered and few in number to battle the threat.

ADAPTATION

The eternal blades' background casts them as rare, isolated, and mostly forgotten to make them easy to integrate into a campaign.

Almost any setting with elf kingdoms of any sort can play host to these talented warriors.

If you need a villain, or wish to add a sinister layer to the blades, perhaps the schism within the blades' ranks persists to this day.

The original elves who led the attempt to seize control of the forests are now blade guides who corrupt the order.

Some of them have the ears of the blades' leaders, and they use this access to render the blades ineffectual or self-destructive.

A young warrior who teeters between good and evil might have an evil blade guide, or even a pair of opposed guides, fighting for his soul.

JADE PHOENIX MAGE

"If I should fall, I will only arise again in a new body.

The flame that is my soul cannot be quenched."

—Kuthar of Ironhame, Mage of the Jade Phoenix

Long ago, a fellowship of swordsmen known as the Masters of the Jade Phoenix took up the study of arcane magic in search of a new martial discipline.

They discovered that the mental austerity and economy of action each swordsmen had cultivated in his martial studies opened the door to a powerful and unique form of arcane mastery.

Properly applied, the stances and maneuvers of a martial discipline provided the mage with exceptional power and control in his arcane spellcasting—and by channeling the arcane energy of his spells into his martial maneuvers, he achieved supernatural perfection in his chosen disciplines. For years, this secret society defended the land against evil, perfecting this new path that wove together martial disciplines and arcane power.

Then a terrible abomination, known only as the Soul Drake, descended on the world, wreaking unthinkable destruction across the land.

The realm defended by the masters of the Jade Phoenix was swept into ruin, but the arcane swordsmen gathered together and confronted this fearsome enemy.

Many masters died, but at the end of the struggle, the awful Soul Drake was bound and imprisoned in a hidden vault.

To ensure that their foe would never break free, the thirteen surviving members of the Jade Phoenix fellowship swore a mighty oath to walk the world for all eternity, maintaining the Soul Drake's prison with their own unceasing vigilance.

Such was the power of their oath that these spirits have been reborn again and again in the world, keeping the Soul Drake immured in its secret prison.

Today, thirteen Jade Phoenix mages walk the earth—no more, no less.

The instant one dies, a new one is born somewhere in the world.

As he grows and learns, he is inevitably drawn to both the Sublime Way and the magical arts—for he was a master swordsman and a mighty wizard in previous lives he has now forgotten.

In time, another Jade Phoenix master discovers the new incarnation of his old companion.

In an age-old rite, the existing master awakens his newfound comrade to awareness of his past lives, renews the oaths of vigilance that bind the Soul Drake in its prison, and reveals to him the ancient secrets of the order.

Both Jade Phoenix brothers then go their own way, their ancient duty discharged until once again a Jade Phoenix mage dies and is reborn.

BECOMING A JADE PHOENIX MAGE

Most Jade Phoenix mages begin their careers as sorcerers, warmages, or wizards.

From this beginning, two paths lead to membership in the fellowship of the Jade Phoenix—multiclassing in a martial adept class (crusader, swordsman, or warblade), or choosing Martial Study and Martial Stance feats to master the required number of martial maneuvers.

The latter path is costly, since the number of feats you must spend to pursue this path is high, but that option is advantageous in that you do not need to take a level in a class that will not improve your arcane spellcasting ability.

As with any spellcaster, your primary spellcasting ability remains your most important ability score.

After that, you will find good Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution scores highly useful, since you will risk melee combat much more frequently than most arcane spellcasters.

Of these, Dexterity and Constitution are most important—your class abilities and martial maneuvers provide you with ways to compensate for a mediocre Strength score.

If you choose to take a level in this prestige class, you can safely assume that you are the reincarnation of one of the thirteen ancient guardians whose lives keep the Soul Drake bound in its prison.

Your Dungeon Master might require you to seek out an existing member of the order to determine if this is true. Alternatively, if you have earned fame and renown for your deeds, the Jade Phoenix masters might come looking for you.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Concentration 9 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks, Knowledge (history) 2 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know at least two martial maneuvers, including one strike.

Martial Stances: Must know at least one martial stance.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Martial Lore*, Ride, Sense Motive, Tumble.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

The Jade Phoenix class features focus on improving your arcane spellcasting ability, but they also vastly improve your capabilities in melee combat by focusing your arcane energies into increased melee damage and through the acquisition of new maneuvers.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 6th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a Jade Phoenix mage, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Maneuvers: At each odd-numbered level, you gain a new maneuver known from the Desert Wind or Devoted Spirit disciplines.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full Jade Phoenix mage levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 3rd level, 6th level, and 9th level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Stances Known: At 5th level, you learn a new martial stance from the Desert Wind or Devoted Spirit disciplines.

You must meet a stance's prerequisite to learn it.

Arcane Wrath (Su): You can spontaneously channel stored spell energy (prepared spells or spell slots) into your melee attacks.

As a swift action, you can lose any prepared arcane spell or spell slot to gain a +4 bonus on a single attack or martial strike, as well as an extra 1d10 points of damage per spell level expended.

Both bonuses can be applied only on an attack made before the beginning of your next turn.

For example, if you lose a 3rd-level spell slot or prepared spell, you gain a +4 bonus on an attack roll you make before your next turn, and you deal an extra 3d10 points of damage if your attack is successful.

Rite of Waking (Ex): When you become a Jade Phoenix mage, you participate in the Rite of Waking with the master who accepted you into the society.

This rite takes 10 minutes, but requires nothing other than the presence of a Jade Phoenix master and a suitable candidate.

On completion of the rite, you gain awareness of your previous lives.

You now remember places you visited, people you knew, and things you did in lifetimes long past.

You gain a +2 bonus on Knowledge checks, and you can attempt a Knowledge check even if you are untrained in the appropriate Knowledge skill.

You also gain a +2 bonus on saving throws against death effects and fear effects.

Mystic Phoenix Stance (Su): At 2nd level, you learn how to channel the energy from one of your stances in a new way. While you are in a stance from any discipline you know, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of mystic phoenix stance.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using mystic phoenix stance and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action. While you use this ability, your caster level when you cast arcane spells increases by 1, and you gain a +2 dodge bonus to AC.

In addition, when you first activate this ability, you can choose to expend an arcane spell slot.

If you do, you also gain damage reduction against all but evil-aligned attacks as long as you maintain the stance.

The value of your damage reduction is equal to $2 \times$ the level of the spell you expend (maximum damage reduction 10/evil for expending a 5th-level spell).

Empowering Strike (Su): Beginning at 4th level, when you successfully attack an enemy with a martial strike, an arcane spell that you cast before the end of your next turn is empowered (as by the Empower Spell metamagic feat). Casting a spell that has been empowered through this ability does not increase the effective level of a spell you cast.

You do not need to know the Empower Spell feat to use this ability.

You can use this ability once per encounter.

Firebird Stance (Su): At 6th level, you learn another application for a stance you know.

While you are in a stance from any discipline you know, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of firebird stance.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using firebird stance and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action.

While this ability is active, you gain resistance to fire 10, and your caster level when you cast any fire spell increases by 3.

In addition, you can choose to expend an arcane spell slot when you activate the ability.

If you do, you gain an aura that deals 1d6 points of damage per spell level to any creature within 10 feet (Reflex half, DC 14 + key spellcasting ability modifier).

Half the damage dealt by the aura is fire, and the other half is raw arcane energy (untyped damage).

The aura deals damage each round at the beginning of your turn.

Once you activate this ability, the fiery aura lasts for 1 minute, after which time the effect ends and the normal effect of your stance resumes.

Jade Phoenix Master (Su): When you attain 6th level, you earn the right to call yourself a Jade Phoenix master.

You can now perform the Rite of Waking for someone else, provided he or she is a suitable candidate and embodies the reincarnated spirit of one of the ancient masters.

(The DM decides if this is true for any given NPC).

You gain the ability to sense the direction and distance to the nearest Jade Phoenix mage, master, or candidate simply by meditating for 1 minute without interruption.

Quickening Strike (Su): Starting at 8th level, when you successfully attack an enemy with a martial strike, an arcane spell of 5th level or lower that you cast before the end of your next turn is quickened (as by the Quicken Spell metamagic feat).

Casting a spell that has been quickened by this ability does not increase the effective level of the spell you cast.

You do not need to know the Quicken Spell feat to use this ability.

You can use this ability once per encounter.

Emerald Immolation (Sp): At 10th level, once per week you can perform the awesome emerald immolation.

You explode in a searing blast of green fire that deals 20d6 points of damage in a 20-foot radius (Reflex half, DC 19 + key spellcasting ability modifier).

Half the damage the blast deals is fire, and the other half is raw arcane energy (untyped damage).

Extraplanar creatures that fail their saves must immediately succeed on a Will save (DC 19 + key spellcasting ability modifier) or be dismissed to their native planes.

This blast utterly destroys you, but 1d6 rounds later, you reform in the exact spot where you were when you employed this ability.

You are dazed for 1 round after you reappear, but you are healed of all damage (including ability drain or damage), blindness, deafness, disease, paralysis, or poison.

Any equipment you were wearing or objects you were holding or carrying when you used this ability re-form with you, exactly as they were.

This ability is the equivalent of a 9th-level spell.

PLAYING A JADE PHOENIX MAGE

You have lived through a dozen lifetimes.

You have roamed the world from one end to the other, you have learned and forgotten countless pieces of information and names, you have built empires, and you have fallen in abject, ignominious defeat.

While other heroes struggle to find their place in the world or wrestle with the consequences of their actions, you view all things with equanimity.

Whatever the danger, whatever the injustice, whatever the evil that rises up to threaten the world—it too shall pass.

Given the long, wearying journey passing through lifetime after lifetime, some Jade Phoenix mages become dispassionate and distant.

Why form attachments to people, places, or causes, when sooner or later all will be lost again and a new life begun somewhere else?

Other members of the fellowship grow arrogant and insufferable, coming to think of other mortals as lesser beings because they are limited to the experience and wisdom of a single lifetime.

But most Jade Phoenix mages learn compassion, humility, and a wry sense of humor over their long journeys.

Who else can better understand the magnificent jest of existence than someone who has lived and died dozens of times?

Regardless of whether your long existence has left you wise or weary, you are a clever and patient enemy of evil.

You despise tyranny and cruelty in any form, for these things blight the world—and you fear that a world whose spirit is poisoned by too much wrong will be defenseless against the Soul Drake.

In her dark, dreaming prison she grows strong on the terror and misery of the innocent, and the day might come when she awakens and breaks free.

To prevent her return, you light oppression, injustice, and savagery wherever you find them.

COMBAT

Your combination of martial maneuvers and spellcasting gives you the ability to fight well in melee as well as at range.

In fact, many of your defining abilities require you to prepare an arcane attack by executing martial maneuvers or use your untapped spell energy to add power to your martial strikes.

A battle in which you mix your martial strikes with your arcane spells allows you to get the most out of your suite of abilities.

Remember, you are not a front-line fighter; you must rely on magic and guile to avoid your enemies' attacks when you close to melee to use your martial maneuvers.

You can easily adapt your tactics to the foes you face, if you find yourself confronting enemies who are highly resistant to magic, use your arcane spell energy to add power to your martial strikes and defeat them with the Sublime Way.

If you face enemies who are formidable in close combat, use your martial strikes to set up devastating magical attacks.

Although most of your combat prowess resides in your martial maneuvers and spellcasting ability, don't overlook your highly useful stance-related abilities.

The mystic phoenix stance helps you survive close battles, and the firebird stance can make you a dangerous target for enemies who rely on melee attacks.

However, be careful with your arcane spell slots.

If you expend slots routinely on arcane wrath or to add power to your stance abilities while slinging spells every round, you will find that you burn through your spell slots faster than you might like.

ADVANCEMENT

You already possessed some skill with magic and some mastery of the Sublime Way before you came to the attention of the other Jade Phoenix mages.

When you are ready to accept the truth of who and what you really are, a Jade Phoenix master seeks you out, even if doing so takes years.

Once you are found, the master typically observes you for a time to determine if you are in fact one of his ancient comrades.

Many masters feel that the best way to be sure of your readiness is to challenge you to a contest of martial and magical skill, but not all masters hold to this view.

As long as you acquit yourself reasonably well in such a duel, you will be told the truth about who you are; you do not need to win.

If you fight with courage but little skill, you will be left to go your own way for a time in the hope that in a year or two you might prove more ready, if you demonstrate cowardice or treachery, the testing master might elect to kill you—a stain of evil would weaken the Soul Drake's prison, and after all, your spirit will be reborn.

You might be a better person in your next incarnation. Once you are awakened to your previous lives and your sacred trust, you are left to resume your own affairs.

You are expected to aid another Jade Phoenix mage on the rare occasions you meet with one, and should you discover that one of your old comrades has been reborn and awaits the Rite of Waking, you are expected to bring him to a master or bring a master to him.

When you reach the title of master, you normally address the matter yourself without seeking the advice or consent of your peers—you know the fellowship's responsibilities because you have discharged them for a dozen lifetimes.

As you continue to gain levels, you might alternate between your arcane spellcasting class, your martial adept class (if any), and your Jade Phoenix levels.

Most practitioners of this tradition follow the Jade Phoenix path exclusively for time—at least until they attain the level of mastery they had in their previous life.

Feats, spells, and maneuvers that make it easy for you to switch between melee attacks and arcane spellcasting are extremely useful.

Consider learning feats such as Combat Casting or Spring Attack; spells such as fly; or martial maneuvers such as salamander charge or wind stride.

Ranks in Concentration or Tumble might also prove helpful.

RESOURCES

Jade Phoenix mages are few and far between.

Most wander the world engaged in their own personal quests and struggles, interacting with their peers only through chance and happenstance.

Even mortal peril is not always sufficient to gain the aid or sympathy of a fellow Jade Phoenix mage, since your death is, after all, nothing more than a momentary inconvenience in the eyes of the other masters.

Sooner or later, you will meet again.

Ironically, one of your more interesting and useful resources is yourself—specifically, yourself in a past life.

Some Jade Phoenix mages make a point of secreting useful things such as treasure, magic items, or simple information in hidden caches all over the world, not knowing when or if they might ever need them again.

The location and value of these old caches are up to your DM, but magic items totaling 1,000 gp or less in value that you “remember” no more than once per Jade Phoenix mage level would be reasonable.

Of course, your caches might not be located anywhere nearby when you decide you need one, and you might have left traps or guardians to protect them.

JADE PHOENIX MAGES IN THE WORLD

“You seem to have me at a disadvantage, human.

You say that we have met, but I am certain that I have never laid eyes on you before today!”

—Arexakarius, red dragon

The Jade Phoenix mage serves as a mystic wanderer, free-roaming troubleshooter, champion, and teacher who travels the world with few ties to any place, person, or cause.

Most are willing to share their arcane knowledge or martial enlightenment with any apt student they encounter, whether or not that person harbors the spirit of an ancient comrade.

A Jade Phoenix mage might therefore appear as an ally or mentor to player characters who study magic or follow the Sublime Way.

Since a Jade Phoenix mage is exceptionally well traveled and familiar with the people and events of times long gone by, he can also serve as a living witness to historic events, Adventurers in search of hard-to-find information about events that happened long ago might find that a Jade Phoenix mage recalls the events in question much more accurately than any scribe has ever set them down.

A Jade Phoenix mage can therefore serve as a sage of sorts, aiding the player characters by passing along information they might otherwise have no way to discover.

DAILY LIFE (AND DEATH)

A Jade Phoenix mage is free to pursue his own interests and do whatever he wishes with his life, so long as he honors the basic tenets of the fellowship: Aid his fellows when asked, stand against corruption and tyranny, and keep the sacred watch alive by waking newly reincarnated fellows to their ancient oaths and true identities when necessary.

In practice, most Jade Phoenix mages become wanderers. Some choose to live and teach for a time at a monastery or temple of likeminded students of the Sublime Way, becoming renowned masters in the process.

Because the spirit of a Jade Phoenix mage is bound to the world and fated to be reborn, death is a different sort of experience for him.

The spirit of a Jade Phoenix mage does not voyage on to the afterlife in the planes, nor does it instantly reincarnate at the moment of death.

The spirit simply slumbers for a time, remaining discorporate for a few hours or days before it is drawn back to the world and reborn.

During this time, raise dead and resurrection spells cast on the deceased character function normally.

If a dead Jade Phoenix mage is not brought back to life within this period of slumber, the spirit reincarnates and is born again as a new person somewhere else.

After this time, no resurrection magic can bring him back to his previous existence.

In other words, if a player intends for his character to be raised, he has time to be brought back; if a player chooses for his character to remain dead, his spirit quickly reincarnates and begins life again elsewhere.

ORGANIZATION

All Jade Phoenix mages fall into one of three categories: candidates, initiates, and masters.

Candidates are those individuals who harbor one of the thirteen ancient spirits, but simply don't know it yet.

While they grow to adulthood and take up the study of magic and martial prowess, other members of the group might keep an eye on their progress, but the candidates are not told of their true calling or ancient duty until such a time as they are ready to accept these truths.

Most candidates might come to realize that a mysterious sorcerer or wizard is interested in their progress, and a few might even be tutored directly by a Jade Phoenix mage who deems it necessary to return his old comrade to full wakefulness in a hurry.

Initiates are fully awakened Jade Phoenix mages—characters who have taken at least one level in this prestige class and undergone the Rite of Waking.

All initiates signify their allegiance to their ancient order by tattooing the emblem of a green phoenix prominently on their bodies—usually the chest or the back of the hand, but sometimes the face or head.

Masters are Jade Phoenix mages who have reached a level of significant magical and martial power in their current incarnation.

The title is one that has little weight.

The group does not recognize any lasting precedence of rank or position, since each spirit must begin anew with each rebirth.

At any given time, one Jade Phoenix mage might be a 15-year-old candidate struggling to master her first spells while another is a 60-year-old archmage with command of epic spellcasting, but both spirits are the same age and share the same ancient duty.

For a short time, the spirit in the younger body owes some deference to the spirit who has experienced more and accomplished greater things in its current incarnation, but in a few short years the candidate will be the archmage, and the archmage will struggle to recall his old skill at magic.

NPC REACTIONS

Jade Phoenix mages are so rare that very few NPCs have any preconceived notions about the fellowship.

Most of the time, they are treated as any skilled warrior-mage might expect to be treated.

However, itinerant Jade Phoenix masters have opposed tyrants, monsters, and villains all over the world, so any particular master contends with the possibility that one or another of his twelve fellow mages might have made a name for the society in some land or another.

More than one Jade Phoenix mage has wandered into a new land only to discover that generations ago one of his old companions battled some mighty evil there, and is remembered by the people he fought for—or against.

JADE PHOENIX MAGE LORE

Characters with the Knowledge (history) skill can research the fellowship of the Jade Phoenix to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: I've heard old tales of strange sorcerers who mark themselves with the image of an emerald phoenix.

No one knows who they are, where they come from, or where they go when they leave.

DC 15: These individuals are known as the order of the Jade Phoenix.

They're an elite society of warrior-mages who know powerful secrets of both martial and arcane lore.

DC 20: The group has only thirteen members at any one time.

When one dies, they find another mage to join their order. They oppose the workings of evil wherever they find it.

DC 25: The reason the group has only thirteen members is because each Jade Phoenix mage is reborn when he dies. These are the same thirteen masters who have made up the society for hundreds of years.

Long ago they swore an oath to protect the world against some terrible demiurge known as the Soul Drake, who is imprisoned in a hidden magical vault.

As long as they are faithful to their oaths, the Soul Drake cannot escape.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific Jade Phoenix mage in your campaign, including the areas where he operates, the kinds of activities he undertakes, and at least one identity of his previous incarnation, as well as some of his greater accomplishments in that life.

The fellowship of the Jade Phoenix does not maintain any sort of temple, sanctuary, or stronghold.

However, at any given time it's not unusual for one or two masters to settle down in a monastery or arcane guildhouse, and teach students who seek to learn both the Sublime Way and the arcane arts.

A character must succeed on a DC 25 Gather Information check to locate a Jade Phoenix master who has chosen to settle down for a time.

JADE PHOENIX MAGES IN THE GAME

Jade Phoenix mages are more often allies than enemies.

Even if no character in the party is particularly likely to join the prestige class, a Jade Phoenix mage can serve as an interesting mentor who appears from time to time, offering cryptic advice and guidance to heroes in need.

As a player character, a Jade Phoenix mage appeals to players who like the challenge of creating innovative tactics combining spells and melee attacks.

Other players might be attracted to the possibilities of describing the adventures, friends enemies of lifetimes now long past; if any character can say, "I've seen something like that before" in almost any situation, it's the Jade Phoenix mage.

ADAPTATION

The most interesting way to adapt the Jade Phoenix mages to your own campaign is to define a specific evil power they keep imprisoned.

In the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting, the Jade Phoenix mages might play a role in keeping Dendar, the Night Serpent, asleep in her vast prison beneath the Peaks of Flame.

In the world of the EBERRON campaign, the Jade Phoenix fellowship might keep some monstrous offspring of Khyber immobile and insensate.

As long as they still live, the demonspawn remains trapped in the underworld.

For a real twist, consider making the Jade Phoenix fellowship into the Ebon Phoenix.

The thirteen ancient swordmage-wizards were not servants of good, but instead the chosen champions of some evil god-king.

As long as they still survive, the evil overlord cannot be wholly expunged from the world, and so these terrible ancient spirits keep alive the hope of returning their dark master to power someday.

Destroying all thirteen Ebon Phoenix mages would require an epic quest to find and ultimately imprison or destroy each spirit before it can reincarnate.

MASTER OF NINE

"Tiger Claw.

Shadow Hand.

White Raven.

All of these are not paths in and of themselves.

They are simply steps along the True Path, the Path of which I am master."

—Ninefold Sage of Crimson

Some savants of the Nine Disciplines believe that none of the paths are complete, true disciplines in and of themselves.

They believe that the nine disciplines are perhaps more appropriately termed the Nine Steps, each a single portion of a true, whole Way.

These few masters strive to learn the secrets of each path, and in so doing become the masters of nine, using a martial style that combines all of the techniques of the Temple of Nine Swords.

Such martial sages are fluid and unpredictable martial artists, capable of switching between styles and techniques to suit each situation.

BECOMING A MASTER OF NINE

A master of nine typically begins his career as a warblade or swordmage, as those paths provide the broadest access to martial disciplines.

Occasionally, a crusader might become a master of nine after selecting the Martial Study feat multiple times.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: 10 ranks in four key discipline skills.

Feats: Adaptive Style*, Dodge, Blind-Fight, Improved Initiative, Improved Unarmed Strike.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know at least one maneuver from six different disciplines.

* New feat described on page 28.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), Martial Lore*, Sense Motive, Swim, Tumble.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

The master of nine expands his knowledge of martial maneuvers to include all nine martial disciplines.

As he advances, he learns ways of combining maneuvers from different disciplines to great effect.

Finally, his mastery of all nine disciplines grants him a greater understanding of the path of the martial adept.

Maneuvers: At each odd-numbered level, you gain two new maneuvers known from any of the nine disciplines.

At each even-numbered level, you gain one new maneuver known from any of the nine disciplines.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full master of nine levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At each level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Stances Known: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, you learn a new martial stance from any discipline.

You must meet a stance's prerequisite to learn it.

Dual Stance (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you can choose to not lose your current stance when you enter a different stance from another discipline.

The amount of time you can spend in two stances is limited.

You can use this ability to gain the benefits of two stances for a maximum of 2 rounds per class level each day, split up as you desire among multiple uses and multiple stance pairs.

Perfect Form (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you initiate your maneuvers with greater fluidity and grace.

The save DC (if any) of any maneuver you initiate increases by 1.

Counter Stance (Ex): From 4th level on, whenever you initiate a counter maneuver, you can change your stance as part of the counter's action, even if it is not your turn.

Mastery of Nine (Ex): At 5th level, you have attained mastery of all nine disciplines.

You gain a +2 bonus on attack rolls made when initiating any strike maneuver, and your strikes deal extra damage equal to the number of disciplines you readied maneuvers from at the beginning of the day.

For example, if you ready maneuvers from six different disciplines, you gain a +6 bonus on damage rolls when you initiate your strikes.

PLAYING A MASTER OF NINE

To you, each of the individual styles is incomplete.

Each discipline is like a single petal of a flower—beautiful, elegant and finely formed, perhaps, but each grants only a partial understanding of the whole.

Masters of nine often speak of the Nine-Petal Blossom, the symbolic representation of this concept.

You are driven, intent on learning the secrets of the Ninefold Way.

You tend to show some small amount of pity for those who don't see the whole picture and focus only on their one style, but you aren't arrogant; you once stood in their place. You simply can't wait for their vision to broaden.

Perhaps you can help them.

As a group, masters of nine have no overarching objectives or plans.

They are simply a group of martial adepts who have come to understand that as powerful as a single discipline is, when unified, they become something full of power, grace, and beauty.

Your standing among other masters is determined by two things: your own progress in mastering the Ninefold Way, and how many others you have instructed in the ways of the Nine-Petal Blossom, teaching them its secrets and setting them on the path.

Those who not only have the wisdom to see the Blossom but also to show it to others are well regarded among the masters.

COMBAT

In battle, you are unpredictable and graceful.

You prefer to single out those among your foes who obviously have some knowledge of the techniques of the Sublime Way, so that you can best them.

You want to dazzle your foe with a display of martial mastery, for who knows?

Perhaps the enemy you battle today shall come to you for the wisdom of the Ninefold Way tomorrow.

You also prefer the pure and personal nature of hand-to-hand combat.

ADVANCEMENT

Your vision was always wide as a martial adept.

Perhaps you saw connections between martial styles that seemed to share little in common with one another.

You might have even had multiple masters, trying desperately to learn what each of them had to teach without neglecting your advancement with any one of them (you might have even succeeded, drawing the attention of a master of nine).

Regardless of the precise details of the past, the masters saw you as someone with the potential to behold the Nine-Petal Blossom, and one of them took you under his wing.

Now, you are one of them.

The insights that came with your training were unlike any you had experienced before, though you suspected all along that something like this path must exist somewhere in the world.

Now, you are responsible for only two things: your own advancing mastery of the Ninefold Way, and helping to open the eyes of others to its potential.

From this point, you must maintain your edge.

Keep advancing in the key skills of the nine disciplines as much as possible.

Your feat choices should reflect your amazing mastery of the Nine Ways.

Many of the feats in this book might help you, and feats such as Martial Study allow you to further expand your maneuver selection.

RESOURCES

Though the masters of the nine sometimes gather to train together and share their insights, they value self-sufficiency.

As such, it is rare that they help one another in anything but the most dire of circumstances.

As puissant adepts of martial discipline beyond the skill of most folk, they are happy to aid those who don't share their level of enlightenment however they can, but masters of nine believe that their peers should be capable of handling most situations without aid.

Only a threat to the masters as a whole, such as someone systematically hunting down or otherwise persecuting the masters of nine, is likely to cause them to band together.

MASTERS OF NINE IN THE WORLD

"The techniques of the masters of nine are elegant and powerful—and greatly to be feared.

Beware their wrath, lest you find yourself battling your own strengths."

—Master Kosukan, archivist-monk of the Thousand-Petal Orchid

Temple Masters of nine are, in many ways, archetypal martial artists.

They really seek only one goal: the perfection of their style. The best means of doing this is through adventuring.

Masters of nine are fond of dueling other martial artists and demonstrating their superiority (or, in some cases, discovering where their own abilities are lacking).

ORGANIZATION

The masters of nine, though a network made up of masters and former apprentices, are a loose society of peers. None of them maintain any kind of authority over the others, except the informal authority given to those who have walked the Ninefold Path for some time and discovered many of its secrets.

Masters of nine do not train one another—once a master succeeds at setting the feet of a martial adept onto the path, the student must walk it for himself.

Each master understands the Ninefold Path a little differently and practices it in his own way.

Masters enjoy the opportunity to spar with one another. Such battles are quite a sight to behold, full of breathtaking feats of martial mastery and athleticism.

MPC REACTIONS

Most people who encounter a master of nine don't really know enough about such folk to treat them any differently than they would any other dedicated martial adept.

Other martial adepts, however, and those who are knowledgeable in the lore of their kind, believe that the masters of nine are simply dilettantes without the discipline to truly master a single style.

Others feel that the masters are sages who have unlocked a mystery of the martial disciplines.

All adepts understand that any master of nine they encounter is powerful and skilled and certainly not to be trifled with.

Generally speaking, martial adepts give masters a friendly reception, unless they are staunch single-style enthusiasts, in which case the reaction might be a bit more confrontational.

MASTER OF NINE LORE

Characters with ranks in Martial Lore can research masters of nine to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some powerful martial adepts study all nine known disciplines.

They are sometimes known as masters of nine, masters of the Nine-Petal Blossom, or other such fanciful names.

DC 15: The master of nine can quickly adapt his style to exploit any weakness a foe possesses.

He knows more maneuvers than any other martial adept.

DC 20: A master of nine is a worthy opponent, or a valued ally.

Few possess the breadth of abilities available to a master of nine, and few have the patience or ability to walk the Ninefold Path.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about a specific notable master of nine, the areas where he operates, and the kinds of activities he undertakes.

Setting up a meeting with a master of nine can be difficult, since the masters maintain no chapterhouses or colleges.

Instead, the easiest way to find one involves going to any place with a strong focus on the martial disciplines, for the masters often seek out new pupils in such places.

At the very least, an experienced martial adept is likely to have some idea where a master of nine can be found.

MASTERS OF NINE IN THE GAME

A master of nine is often the proverbial Old Man of the Mountain, an ascetic who seeks to test his body and technique to master both, if your setting includes martial adepts already, it is simple enough to extrapolate the existence of masters of nine.

If your setting does not, however, a visiting master of nine is an excellent way of introducing the class into the campaign without dramatically altering the setting assumptions.

Masters are not limited to kindly sages, however, and can easily fill the role of adversary, displaying such skill in defeating the party that the PCs realize that they, too, must discover and follow the Ninefold Path to defeat this new foe.

Players focused on and interested in the martial adept classes and abilities will find enjoyment in this class, which makes generalization a specialty.

The master of nine is likely to have the greatest access to a variety of fighting styles, allowing a broad exploration of the various discipline techniques.

ADAPTATION

A master of nine can fill the role of the ultimate weapon master in your campaign.

An order of elite knights, a secretive cabal of mystic warriors, or a group of hidden masters sequestered in a distant monastery fit this class.

You could also make the masters of nine into an elite group of imperial servants, tasked with hunting down the enemies of the realm—whether good or evil.

RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATOR

"You've threatened our people for the last time, cur."

—Ereth Nazbek, a Ruby Knight of Wee Jas

The Ruby Knights are a crusader order in the service of Wee Jas, goddess of death and magic.

Inscrutable and mysterious, these secretive warriors serve as the militant arm of the Jasite faith.

They protect the temples of Wee Jas, guard important leaders of the church, aid powerful sorcerers and necromancers sworn to the Witch Goddess, and help to train novice clergy.

When called upon, they also serve as spies and assassins.

Within the Ruby Knight order, the knights-vindicator are responsible for undertaking duties of the last variety.

Most of the time, a knight-vindicator is free to do as he pleases, but every so often leaders of the knightly order or high priests of the faith come to him with a special assignment that requires stealth, intimidation, or assassination.

A Ruby Knight vindicator relies on his spiritual strength and skill in martial disciplines rarely mastered by crusaders to capture or dispatch marked enemies of the faith.

He strikes with unflinching determination and righteous vengeance, and his benefactors within the church sleep comfortably knowing the Ruby Knights always stand ready to do the church's bidding.

BECOMING A RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATOR

Due to the entry requirements, most Ruby Knight vindicators are multiclass crusader/clerics or paladins who have entered this class after learning a Devoted Spirit maneuver, either by selecting the appropriate feats or by taking a level in the crusader class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Intimidate 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know at least one Devoted Spirit maneuver.

Martial Stances: Must know at least one Devoted Spirit stance.

Deity: Wee Jas.

Special: Ability to turn or rebuke undead.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion), Martial Lore*, Profession, Ride, Sense Motive, Spellcraft.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

A Ruby Knight vindicator learns new martial maneuvers, including maneuvers of the Shadow Hand discipline, while continuing to advance his divine spellcasting ability.

Moreover, he gains class features specifically designed to channel his divine power into his martial maneuvers.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 6th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a devoted enforcer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Maneuvers: At each even-numbered level, you gain one new maneuver known from the Devoted Spirit, Shadow Hand, Stone Dragon, or White Raven disciplines.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full Ruby Knight vindicator levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 5th level and 9th level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Stances Known: At 1st level and again at 6th level, you learn a new martial stance from the Devoted Spirit, Shadow Hand, Stone Dragon, or White Raven discipline.

You must meet a stance's prerequisite to learn it.

Divine Recovery (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can channel divine power to recharge your martial maneuvers. You can expend a turn or rebuke undead attempt as a swift action to recover one expended maneuver.

If you are a crusader, the maneuver you recover is immediately available to you as a granted maneuver.

Armored Stealth (Ex): Knights-vindicator are taught unusual techniques for staying out of sight.

Starting at 5th level, you no longer take an armor check penalty on Hide checks.

Your armor check penalty still applies to any other skills affected by armor check penalties.

Divine Impetus (Su): At 7th level, you learn how to use the divine power of the Stern Lady to quicken your reactions and act without hesitation.

You can expend a turn or rebuke undead attempt to gain one additional swift action this round.

For example, you could use this ability to both change your stance and initiate a boost maneuver in the same turn, or if you initiated a counter before your turn, you can activate this ability and then initiate a boost on your turn.

Divine Fury (Su): From 9th level on, you can directly channel Wee Jas's divine energy into your martial strikes.

As a free action, you can spend a turn or rebuke undead attempt to add a +4 sacred (or profane, if you are evil) bonus on your attack roll with one martial strike this turn.

In addition to its normal effects, the strike deals an extra 1d10 points of damage.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a Ruby Knight vindicator can continue advancing as a paladin.

PLAYING A RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATOR

You are a dark knight who swoops in to help his church in its time of need.

You have served within the hierarchy of Wee Jas's faith, and you have won the right and privilege of determining for yourself how best to advance the Ruby Sorceress's cause.

You are, for the most part, an adventurer who is periodically asked to complete a specific mission that requires your brand of ruthlessness and stealth.

You are the living symbol of the Ruby Sorceress's wrath, and this role within the church gives you a somewhat sinister mystique.

You have enough clout and prestige to decline a mission for any reason, but your zealous devotion almost always compels you to complete a task in whatever manner you deem most effective.

You are a weapon of the church, to be wielded only in dire circumstances.

Your conviction enables you to do the terrible deeds that other members of the church abhor or lack the skills to accomplish.

Once the church determines that it needs your help, a high-ranking cleric uses a sending spell or similar device to secretly contact you and invite you to the temple or some secret location for a “situation briefing”.

The mission in question usually requires a combination of subterfuge and martial prowess—two areas in which you excel.

Sample missions include capturing a thief who has stolen relics from the church, spying on the activities of a troublesome cult, or assassinating a hard-to-reach adversary who has persistently antagonized the church or its members.

If you have friends or associates with skills that might help you complete your quest, you can use them as the situation warrants—leaders of the Jasite faith trust you to use your best discretion regarding methods and tactics.

Once you complete your mission, you are free to return to your regular life until you’re called upon again.

When you commit to a mission, nothing stands between you and its completion.

You are highly focused and disciplined, and no distraction except an assault on your church will deter you.

Church officials sometimes disavow a knight-vindicator captured in the line of duty, since to admit complicity could cast a dim shadow over the church or attract undue attention to its activities.

Death is another matter entirely.

Unless you have proven yourself inept by failing mission after mission, church officials will strive to resurrect you, their sworn knight, in the belief that you will continue to serve them faithfully.

More than a few Ruby Knights are brought back to continue their service in undeath as well.

COMBAT

Unlike an assassin, a Ruby Knight doesn’t go out of his way to hide from his enemies unless the mission at hand requires stealth or subterfuge.

In general, you want your enemies to see you coming.

You want them to tremble with fear as you close in for the kill.

That said, you don’t want to plunge headlong into combat without first observing your foes and analyzing the tactical situation.

Wise knights-vindicator strike when doing so is most advantageous to them, not when their enemies clearly have a tactical edge.

Your sword is mightier than any pen, and you aren’t brought in to negotiate with your quarry.

You rely on your Shadow Hand stances and maneuvers to approach your foes unseen, launch devastating attacks from hiding, and confuse and befuddle those who stand between you and your target.

As a student of the Devoted Spirit and Stone Dragon disciplines, you favor melee combat over ranged combat.

You rely on your mastery of various maneuvers to beat your hated foes into submission or into an early grave.

A stance that will serve you well against enemies of the faith includes martial spirit (to keep you alive).

At higher levels, consider the daunting strike maneuver or the aura of perfect order stance.

ADVANCEMENT

Prove your loyalty to the church, master the discipline of the Devoted Spirit, and demonstrate a predilection for violence, and you can become a Ruby Knight vindicator. Even lawful good clerics of Wee Jas can benefit from the services of a Ruby Knight vindicator, so the profession imposes no alignment restrictions.

If the church to which you belong recognizes your skills as a vindicator, you are considered part of the order.

A large chapter of Ruby Knights usually has its own hierarchy, and as a member of the order, you might receive missions from a superior member of the order instead of a cleric of the church proper.

More likely, the order to which you belong exercises no authority over knights-vindicator, allowing these elite servants of the Witch Goddess to execute missions where and when they see fit.

You might be respected in the order for your accomplishments, but you have no superiors or subordinates.

Most knights-vindicator aren’t concerned about advancement within the order or the church; they are content simply to act in the church’s best interests when called upon to do so.

The Ruby Knight order has no membership fees.

The greatest benefit of an order of Ruby Knights is the opportunity to train and confer with others who have mastered the Devoted Spirit discipline and who share a similar fanatical devotion to the cause.

RESOURCES

Ruby Knight vindicators are loners for the most part.

As a member of the class, you are expected to provide for yourself and purchase your own gear.

Many knights-vindicator take jobs outside the church and use these as “cover” while keeping a low profile.

Some Ruby Knight vindicators feel compelled to donate a portion of their amassed wealth to the church, but the church never requires you to do so.

Your faithful service is reward enough.

If your church feels that you need a specific item to complete a mission, the item will be provided to you at no cost.

Unless the item is disposable, such as a potion, the church will expect you to return it once the mission is completed.

RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATORS IN THE WORLD

“Shadow and steel.

Cross tie church, and you’ll have to deal with them!”

—Jvesskah, a yuan-ti crimelord in Sasserine
Good-aligned Jasite shrines use Ruby Knights to deal with evildoers, and evil-aligned temples use them to spread fear and eliminate anyone who challenges their dominance. Consequently, it’s a simple matter to drop Ruby Knights into your existing campaign.

Just because they haven’t shown up before doesn’t mean they don’t exist.

When not executing missions for the Witch Goddess, Ruby Knight vindicators tend to keep low profiles.

Moreover, PCs who oppose evil necromancers and sorcerers might find themselves stalked by one or more fanatical Ruby Knights hungry for vengeance.

ORGANIZATION

A temple of Wee Jas usually has a small number of Ruby Knights to serve as soldiers, guards, and enforcers. Knights-vindicator are more scarce, and they often protect the interests of several small temples scattered over a wide area.

A modest temple in a small city can get by with one knight-vindicator, while a large temple in a large city or metropolis might support a small chapter of knights-vindicator.

A typical chapter has 2d4+4 members, all of whom have at least one level in the Ruby Knight vindicator prestige class. Some chapters have a hierarchy (with the more experienced members overseeing the less experienced ones), but most are loose gatherings of like-minded fanatics who occasionally train together.

Some chapters of knights-vindicator have special hallmarks, but most orders allow members to exercise their individual discretion, so it's more likely for certain members of an order to have unique "calling cards".

NPC REACTIONS

A Ruby Knight vindicator strives to maintain a life separate from the affairs of the church.

Whether he plunders dungeons or trims rose bushes for a living, he's more likely to garner reactions based on such pursuits than for being a zealous thug who occasionally handles important jobs for his church.

Within his church, a vindicator is a silent shadow.

Low-ranking members of the church might not grasp the function he serves or the skills he provides, and fewer still can truly appreciate the terror he sows.

High-ranking clerics regard a Ruby Knight vindicator as a necessary evil, but they have good reason to fear him for the havoc he wreaks abroad.

A vindicator sees things with sublime clarity and believes in his cause so fervently that clergy members who do not share his unswerving conviction are left to wonder whether the church needs and can control such terrible weapons.

RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATOR LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research the Ruby Knights to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: The Ruby Knights are the knights-templar of Wee Jas's faith.

They are temple guards, advisors, and bodyguards to senior clerics, as well as soldiers who serve the Witch Goddess.

DC 15: There are different ranks and titles within the Ruby Knight hierarchy, including knights-vindicator.

They take on missions that the church doesn't want the community to know about.

Most vindicators are overzealous thugs, punishing those who oppose their church or cause.

DC 20: Ruby Knight vindicators primarily practice the martial disciplines of Devoted Spirit and Shadow Hand.

These disciplines help the knight harness his spiritual strength and zealous devotion, as well as give him the ability to strike with stealth and subtlety.

DC 30: Ruby Knight vindicators generally work alone, although they cultivate a network of associates outside the church.

Once in a while, a chapter of knights backed by a powerful or wealthy temple rears its ugly head, and woe be to anyone who incurs that temple's wrath.

RUBY KNIGHT VINDICATORS IN THE GAME

Players who enjoy playing crusaders or paladins with a dark side or shady bent should find the Ruby Knight vindicator both exciting and fulfilling.

Knights-vindicator gain the ability to use Shadow Hand maneuvers and stances, and the duties of the class do not interfere with a character's more adventurous pursuits.

For the most part, a vindicator is free to do as he pleases, and when the faith beckons him, he helps out freely.

ADAPTATION

Although this prestige class is specific to a single crusader order—the Ruby Knights of Wee Jas—you could easily adapt it to crusaders devoted to almost any other deity.

For example, the faiths of Hextor, Vecna, or St. Cuthbert could easily support secret vindicator organizations.

If you replace the requirement for Devoted Spirit stances and maneuvers with another martial discipline (Iron Heart or Tiger Claw, for instance), it becomes much easier to qualify for the class without being a crusader—which means that you could create holy (or unholy) orders of warblade/clerics, fighter/clerics, or rogue/clerics.

SHADOW SUN NINJA

"Even the brightest light must cast a shadow!"

—Doomveil, initiate of the Shadow Sun clan

A Shadow Sun ninja is a martial artist who studies the balance between good and evil, light and dark.

Founded by a reformed half-fiend, this fighting school teaches its students to find power in balance.

A Shadow Sun ninja uses dark energies to drain his foe's life, but then turns and uses the power of light to lend that stolen strength to an ally.

A Shadow Sun ninja is a study in contrasts.

She knows that evil lurks in the hearts of all living creatures.

Even the purest of the pure suffer temptation.

By exploring her inner demons, bringing them into the light, and accepting them as part of her soul, she achieves a deeper understanding of herself and the strength within her.

A Shadow Sun ninja would argue that denying, rather than accepting, one's base impulses would be the same as refusing to use one's left arm.

BECOMING A SHADOW SUN NINJA

Most Shadow Sun ninjas are monks or ninjas (see Complete Adventurer) who have studied the Setting Sun and Shadow Hand martial disciplines.

In some cases, a swordmage enters this class.

A rogue or fighter who studied those two disciplines is also eligible for this class, but such characters usually lack the unarmed fighting abilities that this class demands.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks.

Feats: Improved Unarmed Strike.

Martial Maneuvers: Must know one 2nd-level Setting Sun or Shadow Hand maneuver, one Setting Sun maneuver, of any level, and one Shadow Hand maneuver of any level.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Martial Lore*, Move Silently, Perform, Profession, Sense Motive, Spot, Swim, and Tumble.

* New skill described on page 28.

CLASS FEATURES

A Shadow Sun ninja is a stealthy, unarmed warrior who draws on the power of light and dark.

Many of her abilities come in two forms.

She must use the first form of a power before she can use the second.

A Shadow Sun ninja cloaks herself in darkness to hide from her enemies, then leaps from the shadows with a burst of light to blind her foes.

Maneuvers: At 1st, 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, you gain one new maneuver known from the Setting Sun or Shadow Hand disciplines.

You must meet a maneuver's prerequisite to learn it.

You add your full Shadow Sun ninja levels to your initiator level to determine your total initiator level and your highest-level maneuvers known.

At 5th level and 10th level, you gain an additional maneuver readied per day.

Stances Known: At 5th level, you learn a new martial stance from the Setting Sun or Shadow Hand disciplines.

You must meet a stance's prerequisite to learn it.

Monk Abilities: You add your class level to your monk level to determine your class-based AC bonus, unarmed damage, unarmored speed bonus, penalty on your attacks when using your flurry of blows ability, and the number of daily attempts of your Stunning Fist feat.

If you have no monk levels, you gain the AC bonus of a monk whose level equals your Shadow Sun ninja level.

In addition, you gain additional uses of the Stunning Fist feat as a monk.

(Your non-monk, non-Shadow Sun ninja class levels provide one use per four levels and your monk, and Shadow Sun ninja class levels provide one use per level).

You do not count your class levels for the purpose of determining when you gain any other monk class features, such as bonus feats, evasion, or other special abilities.

Touch of the Shadow Sun (Su): A Shadow Sun ninja strikes a careful balance between light and dark, good and evil.

Although your heart is dedicated to good, you know that the shadow of evil will always be a part of you.

This realization, along with careful control of your ki energy, allows you to wield the energy of both the dark and light aspects of your being.

This understanding and mastery allows you to deal damage with one attack, then turn and heal an ally with the reverse of that harmful energy.

With a melee touch attack made as a standard action, you can deal negative energy damage equal to your base unarmed damage + your Wis modifier.

Note that undead are healed by this attack, since it uses negative energy.

In the round after you use this ability, you can touch a creature as a standard action and heal an amount of damage equal to the damage you dealt with your negative energy touch on the previous round.

If the target of this healing touch makes no effort to prevent you from touching him, you can touch the creature as a swift action.

You cannot use both aspects of this ability on the same round, nor can you use the negative energy touch again in a round after you have already successfully used it.

After you channel negative energy into a creature, you convert that energy into a positive energy charge that prevents you from using the negative energy aspect of this ability until the positive energy has been discharged.

Flame of the Shadow Sun (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can create a protective cloak of negative energy by using your ki.

This cloak absorbs cold damage.

You can then gather this energy, transform it, and unleash it as a searing attack.

As an immediate action, you can shroud yourself in shimmering, dark energy that provides resistance to cold 10 until the start of your next turn.

If this resistance reduces the damage you take from any attack or effect, you can take a swift action on your next turn to hurl a bolt of fiery energy with a range of 60 feet. This bolt requires a ranged touch attack to hit and deals 2d6 points of fire damage.

Light within Darkness (Su): From 4th level on, the darkness cannot muffle your inner light.

Rather, the shadows cause it to seethe and roil as the light within you struggles to break free.

If you make a melee attack against an opponent on the round after you make a successful Hide check, you burst into a searing corona of light.

All opponents within 60 feet of you that failed to detect you while you were hiding must make Fortitude saves (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Wis modifier) or be blinded for 1 round.

Creatures who are aware of the ninja, such as those who made successful Spot checks to notice her, are unaffected by this attack.

Darkness within Light (Su): You know that while light cannot exist without darkness, the opposite is also true. By focusing your ki and closing your eyes, you view the world in a vague, shadowy form.

Those also trapped within darkness appear clear and distinct before you.

Starting at 5th level, you can close your eyes and willfully ignore any other senses that confer the ability to pinpoint the location of a creature (such as blindsense, blindsight, and scent).

You become effectively blinded, but you gain a special benefit on attacks made against targets that are also blinded or effectively blinded.

Against such foes, you ignore the drawbacks for fighting while blinded.

Instead, you gain a +4 bonus on melee attack rolls and a +4 bonus on melee damage rolls against such enemies.

In addition, if you have the Stunning Fist feat, blinded opponents take a –2 penalty their saves to resist your stunning attacks.

You suffer the penalties for being blinded and deafened until the start of your next turn.

The blindness cannot be negated through any means, magical or mundane, until that time.

You gain the benefit of this ability if you willingly turn off your sense of sight or if some effect, such as a blindness spell, robs you of your sight.

Void of the Shadow Sun (Su): You eventually learn to draw upon the power of light to shield you from attacks. Even if an opponent manages to breach this shield, it is not destroyed.

Rather than fade away, the shield shifts into an aura of icy cold, black energy that can harm your enemies.

Starting at 7th level, as a swift action you can wreath yourself in a halo of bright, flaming light.

You gain a +2 deflection bonus to AC.

This ability lasts until the start of your next turn.

If an opponent successfully hits you despite your improved AC, you lose the deflection bonus to AC and you cannot use this ability again on your next turn.

However, you can project a pulse of frigid, black energy in a 30-foot-radius burst around you as a standard action in the round after your shield is pierced.

Enemies in this area take 8d6 points of cold damage, with a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Wis modifier) for half damage.

Child of Shadow and Light (Su): As you learn to harness the power of your ki, you become capable of spilling forth light and dark energy.

Beginning at 8th level, you can focus your power, engulfing the area around you in alternating patterns of light and dark.

While you are in a Setting Sun or Shadow Hand stance, you can forgo its normal benefit as a swift action to gain the effect of child of shadow and light.

This ability lasts as long as you would maintain the Setting Sun or Shadow Hand stance, or as described below.

You can also stop using child of shadow and light and resume gaining the normal benefit of the stance as a swift action.

If you use this ability to exert light energy, the area around you fills with blinding light.

All enemies within a 60-foot-radius burst become dazzled (DMG 300) for 1 round.

This is a 9th-level spell for purposes of determining how it interacts with magical darkness.

If you exert dark energy, the area around you is cast into total darkness for 1 round in a 60-foot-radius burst.

This ability is considered a 9th-level spell for the purpose of determining how it interacts with magical light.

As long as you maintain this stance, you alternate between projecting light and darkness.

If this ability is active at the beginning of your turn, its effects reverse.

If it projects light, it now projects darkness, and vice versa. You cannot activate this ability in the same round in which you end its effect.

Balance of Light and Dark (Su): As a Shadow Sun ninja, you strive to control your dark side, even as you use it to power your martial arts.

Sometimes, particularly when you face a truly daunting foe, you can allow your inner shadow to run rampant.

In such cases, you undergo a terrible transformation.

When you adopt this wrathful battle aspect, your fees are doomed.

Yet, each time you use this ability, you teeter closer to damnation.

At 10th level, once per day as a swift action, you can transform into a creature of pure darkness for 1 minute.

Your body and all items you carry when you transform become a deep, inky black.

You gain immunity to critical hits, mind-affecting abilities, death attacks, energy drain, and poison.

You also gain a +8 bonus on Hide checks.

Negative energy attacks, such as inflict spells, heal rather than harm you.

You gain a +4 bonus on attacks against creatures in areas of darkness or shadowy illumination.

In addition to these benefits, with each successful unarmed attack you make, you can choose to bestow one negative level on your opponent.

You heal 5 points of damage for each negative level you bestow.

These negative levels disappear in 1 hour.

If the subject has at least as many negative levels as HD, it dies.

Each negative level gives a creature a –1 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, ability checks, and effective level (for determining the power, duration, DC, and other details of spells or special abilities).

Additionally, a spellcaster loses one spell or spell slot from her highest available level.

Negative levels stack.

At the end of your transformation, you take 1 point of Constitution damage per negative level you bestowed.

If this damage drops your Constitution to 0 or lower, your body dissipates into an inky cloud.

Unless you are restored to life by true resurrection, you rise in 1d4 days as a vampire.

Your alignment becomes evil, though your alignment on the law chaos axis remains the same.

You are now a dedicated champion of evil and an NPC.

You retain access to all abilities in this prestige class and lack a normal vampire's vulnerability to sunlight.

Your vampiric body forms in the spot where your mortal form perished.

Legend holds that the souls of Shadow Sun ninjas who are corrupted in this manner are imprisoned within the Iron City of Dis, Disparer's capital within the depths of Hell. A successful quest to free the soul from its prison cell destroys the vampire and restores the Shadow Sun ninja to life.

Legend holds that several mighty Shadow Sun heroes languish within Disparer's prison, waiting to be freed.

PLAYING A SHADOW SUN NINJA

As a Shadow Sun ninja, you walk the line between good and evil.

You have seen the darkness that lurks within your own heart.

As a heroic soul, you know that if darkness rests in you, it must dwell in every mortal's heart.

You are naturally suspicious of others and prone to seek out hidden threats.

Even while sitting in the midst of your companions in the warmest and welcoming of environments, you feel the darkness clawing at your soul, and you see the lurking evil that waits in the hearts of all creatures.

You pursue good for its own sake.

If you arrive in a town beset by evil and drive out or slay the villains, you are likely to leave without saying a word or making any effort to gather acclaim or befriend those you saved.

A few months later, you might return and ensure that your good deeds have endured.

You know that when evil falls, people who were good and welcoming when you left might have turned to tyranny in your absence.

Once you have completed your training and left the Shadow Sun enclave where you learned the order's secrets, you can expect little contact with other ninjas.

The process of joining the Shadow Suns forces you to look at the worst parts of your soul without flinching.

Although the ninjas of this order are strong enough to endure such trials, few of them wish to be reminded of them.

Shadow Sun dojos are usually austere, isolated places with the ambience of a graveyard or a tomb.

Only the Shadowspeaker, the dojo's head trainer and master, dwells there on a permanent basis.

A Shadow Sun ninja seeks a Shadowspeaker's advice only under the most pressing circumstances.

COMBAT

In battle, you alternate between stealth and a vicious, frontal assault.

Your training focuses on the duality of your soul, and this comes through in your tactics.

Many of your abilities shift between light and dark effects. Thus, you might lurk in the shadows to take advantage of darkness abilities, then leap into the fray to bathe your opponents in avenging light.

As the shadow returns, you slip away to start the process again.

The Spring Attack feat is an excellent choice for you, as is Blind-Fight.

Darkness shrouds you, but you have no special ability to see through it.

A magic item that grants darkvision provides you with an important edge.

The original Shadow Sun ninjas were half-orcs and half-demons.

When they developed this fighting style, they gave little thought to creatures who were blind in the dark.

ADVANCEMENT

Those who seek the Shadow Sun path are usually tormented by some deep divide within their personalities. If you join this prestige class, you are likely no different. Half-orcs who struggle to walk a righteous path despite racially motivated hatred and taunts find the Shadow Sun path appealing, particularly if those same individuals already follow the monk's path and make an effort to control the darkness that lies within them.

Once you join the Shadow Sun order and master its basic teachings (in game terms, take 1st level in this class), you are on your own.

The path of the Shadow Sun is one meant for the individual.

Others cannot help you find the balance between your good and evil natures.

Only you can achieve this.

Some Shadow Sun ninjas never again cross paths with a member of this order once they leave their dojo.

As mentioned above, Spring Attack and Blind-Fight are excellent feat choices for members of this prestige class. You should also consider gaining ranks in Hide, Move Silently, Tumble, and Balance.

These skills allow you to move about the battlefield more easily.

RESOURCES

Shadow Sun ninjas rely only upon themselves.

Some of them long for the companionship of good, reliable friends.

Thus, they frequently join with heroic adventuring bands to fight injustice.

However, Shadow Sun ninjas rarely develop deep friendships.

Many Shadow Sun ninjas adopt new names to reflect the path they walk.

A ninja uses this name when dealing with others but sometimes, when she forms a particularly close bond with an ally, she might share her birth name.

This act shows deep trust and faith.

To a Shadow Sun ninja, her old name represents the turmoil that raged within her before she learned to control her dark side.

In essence, a ninja is giving her companion the name of the dark twin that resides within her soul.

When a Shadow Sun ninja overextends her powers and falls into darkness, the vampire that arises in her place typically uses her birth name.

SHADOW SUN NINJAS IN THE WORLD

"The pedestal lies empty because she never told us her name, nor would she sit to allow us to rapture her form in stone.

Even if she doesn't want to be remembered, we will sing of her deeds.

It isn't every year that a hero slays a dragon."

—Ardas Runemorn, Thane of the Eight Peak Spire

Shadow Sun ninjas rarely gather in large numbers, walk the land in anonymity, and train in remote, inhospitable outposts.

Thus, adding them to your campaign is relatively easy.

They could be active in a region for years, but little lore about them exists aside from tales of nameless strangers who appear, defeat evil, and fade back into the night.

A character who might pursue this path is most likely to discover the Shadow Sun ninjas by accident.

For example, a Shadow Sun ninja might, if she sees a prospective member, secretly place a map to the nearest dojo within the possible ninja's possessions.

If the petitioner can reach the dojo and survive the training, she becomes a ninja.

Many Shadow Sun warriors don't even know the identities of the ninjas who set them along this path.

ORGANIZATION

The Shadow Sun ninjas lack a formal, complex organization.

They are wanderers and loners.

At times, a Shadowspeaker might send word to all the Shadow Sun ninjas he trained.

This event comes to pass only when the Shadowspeaker rests on death's door, in which case the ninjas choose a new Shadowspeaker from among their ranks, or if a great evil has arisen.

Such gatherings to defeat an evil being, called shadow hunts, happen perhaps once each century.

If an evil power is mighty enough to demand such attention, few of the Shadow Sun ninjas are likely to survive the battle against it.

The Shadow Sun ninjas lack any recorded history, aside from a few rare scrolls that compile information on the enemies they face.

In the aftermath of a shadow hunt, the survivors build an elaborate tomb for their fallen comrades, record the events of their deaths, and store scrolls describing the evil they faced for the benefit of future generations.

To avoid grave robbers and other despoilers, the Shadow Sun ninjas usually build these tombs far from civilization. If the need is great enough, the ninjas share the location of these tombs with those who would benefit from the information hidden in them.

NPC REACTIONS

Shadow Sun ninjas rarely provoke an extreme reaction, since few know of their true nature, their powers, and their goals.

Members of this order are happiest when they can perform their deeds with few complications and little or no attention.

Most common folk regard the ninjas as slightly intimidating.

Their quiet, reserved manner, combined with their great fighting talent, makes them vaguely menacing.

Some towns and cities drive off Shadow Sun ninjas for fear that they consort with evil powers.

The ninjas typically avoid such locations, but should evil arise in one of them, they might simply work in secret.

SHADOW SUN LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research Shadow Sun ninjas to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Shadow Sun ninjas are loners who fight evil on their own terms.

DC 15: Supposedly, these ninjas use the powers of darkness against their enemies.

DC 20: Shadow Sun ninjas harness both dark and light in battle.

This represents the competition in their own souls between their good and evil aspects.

They are heroic, but they draw their power by skirting close to the powers of evil.

One does not find a Shadow Sun ninja.

Rather, a ninja finds you.

Sometimes, gangs of toughs pose as members of this prestige class to strike terror in commoners and other weak folk.

Such antics end quickly if a real Shadow Sun ninja hears of them.

SHADOW SUN NINJAS IN THE GAME

A Shadow Sun ninja works well as a mysterious, perhaps untrustworthy NPC who allies with the characters against a powerful, supernatural threat.

A wandering ninja might know something about a demon's weaknesses, and the PCs must work with him to overcome the monster.

However, the ninja's tendency toward suspicion makes her relationship with the party icy at best.

The characters must decide whether to trust the ninja or strike out on their own.

A villain might pose as a Shadow Sun ninja, using the order's mysterious nature to cloak his true nature.

This prestige class is a good choice for a player who likes a character with a tragic backstory.

Many Shadow Sun ninjas seek to escape a tragedy or mistake in their past.

A PC laboring under a dreadful curse, or one who is secretly a reformed villain, is a good match for this class.

ADAPTATION

The word "ninja" strikes many DMs as an anachronism, or at least a misplaced cultural element, in the D&D game world.

This prestige class could also represent an order of monster hunters, a band of good-aligned assassins that strikes down evildoers, or a martial art taught by a specific, isolated monastery.

The key trait in this prestige class is the struggle between light and dark that lies at its center.

The rest of the description is merely meant to inspire.

If the descriptions don't work for you, think of any races, religious orders, and other aspects of your campaign where the struggle between light and dark would be a good fit.

TOME OF MAGIC (3.5)

ACOLYTE OF THE EGO

“Whenever I speak my truename, the world revolves around me for a change.”

—Kalazart Candlesong, acolyte of the ego

An acolyte of the ego seeks to master but one truename—his own.

In so doing, he learns to fortify himself against harm and unleash pain and suffering upon his enemies.

He cares less about the truenames of other creatures.

He devotes his study to his true self as he experiments with the pronunciation of his truename to increase his power.

BECOMING AN ACOLYTE OF THE EGO

Many acolytes of the ego begin as truenamers.

After months or years spent learning how to uncover and speak various truenames, some truenamers develop a mild to moderate obsession with their own truenames and become acolytes of the ego as a result.

By learning to speak their own truenames, they strive to unlock hidden powers lost to the cosmos.

Bards, with their affinity for the spoken word, are likewise drawn to the acolyte of the ego class.

However, the prerequisites are such that any reasonably intelligent individual with a predilection for truenames could become an acolyte of the ego and unlock the power of his own truename.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Type: Humanoid

Skills: Truespeak 9 ranks

Languages: Must speak at least four languages

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Diplomacy, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Perform (oratory), Speak Language, Truespeak.

CLASS FEATURES

Once you gain the ability to properly speak your own truename, you can learn to add specific cadences and alter it in other subtle ways.

In so doing, you begin to unlock abilities you never knew you had.

Known Personal Truename: You know your own personal truename.

However, pronouncing it correctly requires a Truespeak check with a DC equal to 15 + (2 × your HD) + 2.

You get a +4 bonus on the Truespeak check because it's your personal truename.

Morphic Cadence (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, and at every even-numbered level thereafter (4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th), you learn to pronounce your own truename with certain cadences that alter your personal reality.

Each time you gain this ability, you learn a new morphic cadence (in other words, a new way to morph your truename), and your existing morphic cadences get incrementally better.

Activating a morphic cadence is a standard action, and you must successfully speak your personal truename, which requires a Truespeak check (see Known Personal Truename, above).

The fabric of your reality can withstand only a certain amount of distortion.

Thus, the Law of Resistance (see page 233) applies to cadences.

This means that each time you use the same cadence on the same day, the DC of the Truespeak check increases by 2. You can have as many cadences active at a time as you desire.

Cadence of the Distant Step: You can use dimension door (as the spell, PH 221) to transport yourself and any items you are carrying a maximum of 100 feet per morphic cadence you know.

You cannot use this ability to affect other creatures or any objects you aren't carrying.

Cadence of the Swallowed Spell: You gain spell resistance equal to 15 + 2 per morphic cadence you know.

The benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Cadence of the Frightful Mind: You can frighten your foes (as the fear spell, PH 229).

The DC for the Will save to resist the effect is 10 + your acolyte of the ego level + your Cha modifier + the number of morphic cadences you know.

The duration of the effect is 1 round per class level.

Cadence of the Iron Skin: You gain damage reduction 2/magic, plus an additional 2 points of damage reduction per morphic cadence you know beyond the first.

In other words, a 10th-level acolyte of the ego who knows this cadence gains damage reduction 10/magic.

Cadence of the Living Fortress: You gain a measure of resistance against critical hits for 1 round per class level.

When a critical hit or sneak attack is scored against you, there is a 20% chance per morphic cadence you know (maximum 100% if you know five morphic cadences) that the critical hit or sneak attack is negated, and damage is rolled normally instead.

Cadence of the Lost Wound: You gain fast healing equal to the number of morphic cadences you know.

This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Cadence of the Lucky Fool: You gain a luck bonus on saving throws equal to the number of morphic cadences you know.

This benefit lasts for 1 round per class level.

Cadence of the Mighty Bull: You gain an insight bonus to your Strength score equal to the number of morphic cadences you know for 1 minute.

Cadence of the Prowling Tiger: You gain an insight bonus to your Dexterity score equal to the number of morphic cadences you know for 1 minute.

Cadence of the Secret Mask: You can use disguise self (as the spell, PH 197) for 1 minute per class level.

Cadence of the Thunder Drake: You can make a single breath weapon attack—specifically, a 20-foot cone of painful noise that deals 2d6 points of sonic damage per morphic cadence you know.

The Reflex save to halve the damage is DC 10 + your acolyte of the ego class level + your Con modifier + the number of morphic cadences you know.

Cadence of the Ursine Heart: You gain an insight bonus to your Constitution score equal to the number of morphic cadences you know for 1 minute.

Resonant Voice (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you can speak your personal truename with a particularly deep, resonant voice.

The DC for the Truespeak check increases by 5, but if the check succeeds, you treat your class level as three higher for the purpose of determining the effect and duration of any morphic cadence you use that round (see above).

Cadence Mastery (Su): Starting at 5th level, you can speak your personal truename with multiple morphic cadences at the same time.

The DC of the Truespeak check increases by 5 for each additional morphic cadence you wish to activate after the first.

For example, a 6th-level bard/5th-level acolyte of the ego can properly speak her own truename with a DC 37 Truespeak check.

However, she can add cadence of the prowling tiger and cadence of the thunder drake to her truename and gain the benefits of both with a successful DC 42 Truespeak check.

Alter Personal Truename (Su): At 7th level, you can alter your own truename slightly—just enough to make it difficult or impossible for others to utter it correctly.

Any creature other than you that attempts to speak your truename takes a –4 penalty on the Truespeak check.

At 9th level, this penalty increases to –8.

Recitation Feat: At 7th level, you gain a recitation feat (see page 231) as a bonus feat.

PLAYING AN ACOLYTE OF THE EGO

As an acolyte of the ego, you enjoy spending a few hours each day contemplating your truename.

This internal meditation can be done while performing other tasks, but while so immersed you tend to come across as quiet and self-absorbed.

However, when mystery gives way to revelation and you discover some new power associated with your truename, you become more animated as you aggressively seek to explore the limits of this newfound ability.

The fact that your truename holds such great power can make others feel less “in tune” with the cosmos.

Add to that your special knack for altering your truename in ways the universe never intended (in the form of morphic cadences), and it’s no surprise that your comrades sometimes see you as egotistical.

Frankly, you prefer the term “superior”, but to say that aloud would certainly be misinterpreted as condescension. You’re disinclined to join any formal organization or brotherhood, since no one could possibly know more about your own truename than yourself.

However, acolytes of the ego get along quite well with one another, although discussions about individual truename abilities can lead to friendly, competitive rivalries.

“It’s very good that your truename allows you to teleport short distances, but can you heal yourself?

No?

Too bad”).

COMBAT

You are wise to master a combination of offensive and defensive morphic cadences.

As you develop new morphic cadences, the ones you already possess become more powerful and the effects more lasting.

In short, you are rewarded for continuing along the acolyte of the ego path.

Although your mastery of your own truename makes you a powerful asset to any adventuring party, your morphic cadences and other abilities rarely affect your comrades directly.

For the most part, they must learn to rely on their own abilities and devices, much as you have done.

Enemies with truespeaking ability will try to turn your own truename against you.

If you advance far enough as an acolyte of the ego, you will learn how to warp your truename in subtle ways to make it difficult or impossible for others to control or harm you in this fashion.

In addition to unlocking great power, you learn to guard yourself against those who would use the source of your power against you.

ADVANCEMENT

To become an acolyte of the ego, you must demonstrate a predilection for language by mastering at least four tongues.

You must also be a devoted student of truespeaking and understand the nature of truenames and the power they hold over all things.

A high Intelligence score certainly helps, as few “dim lanterns” have the wherewithal to master ordinary names, let alone truenames.

An acolyte of the ego cannot easily be shown or taught how to pry secrets from her personal truename.

The study of one’s truename is an individual exercise and requires reflection, meditation, self-discovery, and many lonely hours of practice.

Once you commit to unlocking the secrets of your truename, you have some control over how and where to focus your energies.

Can you find a way to say your truename to make yourself stronger, or would you rather find a way to say your name in a way that strikes terror into the hearts of your enemies? In time, maybe you can do both, and more.

RESOURCES

Acolytes of the ego neither gain nor require special resources that allow them to better pursue their unique craft.

ACOLYTES OF THE EGO IN THE WORLD

“See that odd young man muttering to himself in the corner? I politely asked him his name, and he gave me the most withering glare.”

—Lydia Goldsheaf, halfling barmaid at the Topsy Griffon
The quest to demystify one’s personal truename is an internal struggle, requiring a great deal of reflection. However, an acolyte of the ego can’t sit alone in a tower and expect to gain new insights purely through meditation. To unlock the secrets of his truename, an acolyte of the ego must determine the true measure of himself through hardship and adventure.

The acolyte of the ego sees this as a truism and regards adventuring not only as a means of personal growth but also as the way to understand and realize his potential. For this reason, an acolyte of the ego finds himself drawn to adventuring parties.

An acolyte of the ego who joins a band of adventurers hopes that the experience will trigger new revelations and enable him to unlock new aspects of his truename.

An acolyte of the ego looks for traveling companions who share the same adventurous spirit, even if their reasons for adventuring differ.

DAILY LIFE

An acolyte of the ego spends between 1 and 4 waking hours each day contemplating his own truename.

He can indulge this predilection while performing leisurely tasks that don’t require serious concentration.

For example, an acolyte of the ego can murmur permutations of his truename while cooking a meal or standing watch.

Beyond that, an acolyte of the ego has no special obligations.

NOTABLES

An entire realm’s perceptions of truename magic and acolytes of the ego might one day be shaped by the antics of one Rekaldo Seravin (N male half-elf bard 3/truename 3/acolyte of the ego 2).

Rekaldo recently learned the cadence of the secret mask and has proven himself quite a nuisance within the nobility. Armed with a silver tongue and the ability to conceal his true appearance, he has successfully infiltrated a number of noble households and stolen valuable items and political secrets.

Local authorities have not been able to catch him, but they believe his sponsor might be an influential member of the royal court.

However, he is prone to leaving behind small black cards traced with the words “You have been duped by Rekaldo the Acolyte of the Ego” in silvery paint.

Few acolytes of the ego are as arrogant and bold as Rekaldo Seravin.

Aya Beradi (CG female truename 6/acolyte of the ego 5) has been quietly adventuring for years, though recently her group disbanded.

Plain and unassuming, Aya is currently scouring the countryside for worthy compatriots so that she might continue to face new challenges and learn from these experiences.

Aya is remarkably bright and astute (Int 17), but her aloof manner and tremendous vocabulary can be off-putting to those who can’t match her intellect.

However, she has worked with both barbarians and wizards before, and she endeavors to be as patient with them as she can.

She knows the cadence of the swallowed spell and the cadence of the thunder drake.

ORGANIZATION

Acolytes of the ego have no organizations to speak of.

NPC REACTIONS

Acolytes of the ego can seem self-absorbed or egotistical, but for the most part, they defy stereotyping.

If an acolyte of the ego tells someone who he is, he will get quizzical looks and raised eyebrows, because few people know what an “acolyte of the ego” is.

Even if he explains it, those quizzical looks take time to fade.

Acolytes of the ego have no formal organization and no blood enemies.

Even in societies that oppose truename magic, acolytes of the ego are given some latitude because of their inward focus.

ACOLYTE OF THE EGO LORE

Characters with ranks Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (local), or who have the bardic knowledge ability, can research acolytes of the ego to learn more about them.

When a character makes a check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 15: Acolytes of the ego, like truename magicians, practice a form of magic called truename magic.

DC 20: An acolyte of the ego specializes in mastering his own truename, hoping to gain power from it.

DC 25: An acolyte of the ego can alter his truename in strange ways, and with each change in inflection or cadence comes a different power.

A skilled acolyte of the ego can master several of them.

ACOLYTES OF THE EGO IN THE GAME

Acolytes of the ego fit neatly into any campaign world that allows truename magic.

Although highly focused, their morphic cadences are quite diverse, and two acolytes of the ego can manifest wildly different abilities.

A powerful acolyte of the ego with multiple morphic cadences can fill a variety of roles in the typical adventuring party.

ADAPTATION

An acolyte of the ego can choose his morphic cadences from an impressive list, but DMs should feel free to create new ones.

Morphic cadences should generally grant abilities comparable to a spell of 4th level or lower, and their durations are quite short.

Morphic cadences should be designed to increase in power or duration slightly with each new level taken in the acolyte of the ego prestige class.

ANIMA MAGE

"Those fools.

They hunt innocents.

It's me they ought to fear!"

—Raeleus, anima mage and outlaw

Anima mages give binders a bad name.

Greedy and ambitious, they exploit the powers of the vestiges to which they bind to advance their own abilities.

Anima mages see such displaced entities as mere tools, no different from spell component pouches or a wand of fireball.

With the power of a vestige, an anima mage can tap a resource all but unknown to his rivals to gain an edge against other spellcasters.

The anima mage is a loner, an outsider, and a potential enemy to both binders and witch slayers (see page 67).

But the way others classify him matters little to him, for power is at hand.

BECOMING AN ANIMA MAGE

Since an anima mage blends pact magic with arcane magic, a candidate needs some knowledge of vestiges and experience with binding them to qualify.

A few levels of either wizard or bard are valuable too, since Knowledge (the planes) is a class skill for both.

However, the sorcerer and the warmage (see Complete Arcane) are also good choices, since their key ability for spellcasting is Charisma.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nongood

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks

Feat: Any metamagic feat

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells

Special: Ability to bind a 2nd-level vestige

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

The abilities you gain as an anima mage reflect a greater degree of control over your bound vestiges.

This increased mastery of binding allows you to augment the arcane spells you cast.

Soul Binding Bonus: At each anima mage level, your soul binding ability improves as if you had also gained a level in the binder class.

Your anima mage levels and binder levels stack for the purpose of determining your bonus on binding checks, the effectiveness of your vestige-granted abilities, your ability to bind higher-level vestiges, and the number of vestiges you can bind.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a binder would have gained.

Spellcasting: At each anima mage level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an anima mage, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Exploit vestige (Su): At 2nd level, you learn how to use a bound vestige to boost your arcane spellcasting.

With this ability, you can choose to forego gaining one of the vestige's granted abilities in order to gain one additional arcane spell slot per day of any level up to the highest you can cast.

Thus, if you bind the vestige Dantalion (see page 28), you could give up the read thoughts ability he grants you in exchange for a bonus spell slot that day.

You decide which ability to give up before you make the binding check, and you can forego only one ability per day in this manner, even if you can bind multiple vestiges.

Vestiges react poorly to your use of this ability, so you take a -5 penalty on your binding check.

If you make a good pact despite this penalty, you gain a bonus spell slot in exchange for the ability you gave up.

If you make a poor pact (that is, you fail your binding check), you do not gain the extra spell slot, and you still give up the designated ability for the day.

When you use this ability and make a good pact, you sever a portion of the bound vestige's awareness of the world that it would normally receive through you.

Essentially, your binding amounts to a certain amount of trickery.

The vestige being bound expects to be able to experience life through its binder, but when you make a good pact, you partially suppresses the benefit the vestige receives, making it uncomfortable and angry.

Vestigial Awareness (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can force your bound vestige to focus on alerting you to danger rather than letting it revel in the sensations that it perceives through your pact.

Whenever you make a good pact with a vestige, you gain a +2 bonus on initiative checks for the duration of the pact.

Vestige Metamagic (Su): At 4th level, you can use a bound vestige to augment your spells by temporarily giving up access to its powers.

Using vestige metamagic is a swift action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

Choose one of the vestiges to which you are bound whenever you activate this ability.

You can then apply the effects of any metamagic feat that you possess to a spell you cast that round, without increasing its spell level.

However, you lose access to all the abilities and powers granted by the chosen vestige upon activation and do not regain them for 5 rounds.

You cannot use this ability if you do not have a vestige bound, or if you do not currently have access to its abilities (through the use of this ability, an antimagic field, or some other effect).

Vestige metamagic is usable once per day at 5th level, two times per day at 7th level, and three times per day at 9th level.

Vestige Casting (Su): At 10th level, you can use a bound vestige's power to cast a spell outside the normal limits of time and magic.

Once per day, you can cast any spell that you currently have prepared (or use an available spell slot if you cast spells spontaneously) as an immediate action.

You cast the spell as if it were modified by the Silent Spell and Still Spell metamagic feats, whether or not you have those feats.

PLAYING AN ANIMA MAGE

As an anima mage, you walk a lonely path, but great rewards await you.

Enemies are everywhere, so you must conceal your true nature even more carefully than an ordinary binder does. Rivals resent you for the power you have and the knowledge you possess.

People who ask too many questions and those who seem too interested in how you augment your magic are your enemies.

Eliminate them when you can and flee when you can't.

Because of your widespread unpopularity, you tend to stay on the move.

You can choose to work alone, or you can join one of many groups known as covens that are made up of like-minded spellcasters.

Covens face extermination if their presence is revealed, so they rarely settle in one city for long.

Instead, they move from community to community, trying to stay one step ahead of the Seropaeneans (see page 90), witch slayers (see page 67), and hostile binders that pursue them.

A high-level anima mage, known as a vessel, periodically guides the members of his coven to new lairs where its members can safely pursue their art.

As a member of a coven, you spend a portion of your time helping more experienced members research vestiges.

In the process, you learn the techniques of summoning vestiges and how to make the most of them once they are bound.

In time, you might grow powerful enough to instruct new anima mages, or even start your own coven.

COMBAT

Blending the best parts of arcane spellcasting with the granted powers of a bound vestige provides you with a plethora of options in combat.

You can boost your defenses with spells while hammering away at your opponents with the vestige's granted abilities, or you can exploit the vestiges abilities to gain an advantage in a nasty fight.

As you advance in this prestige class, you can augment more of your spells with metamagic feats without affecting spell level.

Thus, you can boost spells as needed without having to prepare them in advance or take extra time to cast them.

You can also expand your spell capability by using the exploit vestige ability to gain a new spell slot, though doing so costs you a vestige-granted ability.

When you reach the pinnacle of your power as an anima mage, you can cast a stilled, silent spell as an immediate action once per day.

This ability can be invaluable for getting out of a tight spot.

ADVANCEMENT

Covens recruit new members slowly, testing candidates for loyalty, subtlety, and skill before revealing the secrets of exploiting vestiges.

Attaining the first level in this prestige class represents earning the basic trust of your comrades.

At this point, you are recognized as possessing valuable talent and offered full membership.

Now that you know the fundamentals of binding a vestige and coercing it to augment your spellcasting abilities, you have taken the first step on the dark road to becoming an anima mage.

Even though you have earned a place in the coven, the other members might not trust you with their greatest secrets for some time.

Initially, you must spend most of your time training—learning the various tactics and techniques for coercing vestiges.

In the few hours remaining in a day, the coven expects you to practice what you have learned.

The senior members insist upon this rigorous training because they know that their enemies, always quick to destroy anima mages, will seize upon any weakness you display.

With mastery of these techniques comes the freedom to undertake your own missions and expand your arcane knowledge as you see fit, so long as you never reveal the origins of your training.

Failure to safeguard the coven constitutes grounds for lethal punishment.

As you advance in the anima mage prestige class, consider investing some skill points in Spellcraft and Concentration, which increase your ability to cast spells under pressure and counter those directed at you.

RESOURCES

Membership in a coven offers many benefits.

The other members are familiar with many different vestiges, so working with them allows you to broaden your options considerably.

Likewise, all the other members are spellcasters.

Many possess spells and equipment to which you might not otherwise have access.

If you prepare spells in advance, friends within the group can provide you with additional spells for your spellbook. Since many anima mages also manufacture magic items, you can often pick up wands, scrolls, and other useful equipment at a discount.

Finally, given the number of enemies that users of pact magic accumulate, the value of sheer numbers cannot be underestimated.

Allies greatly lessen the threat posed by Seropaeneans and witch slayers alike.

Thus, though your allies might be indifferent to you at the start, ingratiating yourself with them early can help to ensure your continued survival.

ANIMA MAGES IN THE WORLD

"Reckless fools!

They know not what they do."

—Alabrast von Vegre, binder

Anima mages make compelling villains for a campaign. They exploit vestiges mercilessly, believing their power to be an inexhaustible resource.

An NPC anima mage might be a former colleague of the party who, lusting for more power, turned to pact magic to advance his abilities.

Alternatively, an entire coven of anima mages might be working within a wizard's guild, spreading like a cancer through the organization's ranks and turning it into a force for evil.

Anima mages can also provide an excellent way to introduce pact magic into your games.

Such a character can appear either as an opponent (thereby forcing the characters to learn more about their enemy), or as an ally (who can lure PCs into taking up pact magic).

DAILY LIFE

Although the life of an anima mage is difficult, it is also filled with scholarly wonder.

Those who pursue the study of magic enhanced by the power of vestiges spend much of their time researching new spells, poring over forbidden tomes and manuscripts to learn more about vestiges, and training to master these unruly entities.

They must remain constantly on their guard against enemies, however, because those who wish to prevent the spread of pact magic could descend upon these renegades at any time.

Coven leaders, known as vessels, supervise their fellow anima mages closely.

These senior members act quickly to, curb internal disputes, instill discipline in the junior ranks, and reinforce awareness of shared dangers.

They know better than the others that only by standing together can a coven prevail against its foes.

Perhaps the most important responsibility of a vessel, however, is to establish and maintain a network of spies in his adopted city.

Though such a covert organization is expensive to maintain, these "eyes and ears" allow the anima mages to monitor the activities of visiting clerics, witch slayers, and Seropaean agents (see page 90) without exposing their presence.

No spy knows any other spies in the coven's service, so the capture of any one agent, cannot expose the network or compromise the security of the anima mages.

Many spies die mysteriously when a coterie of witch slayers descends upon a town, but as far as the vessels are concerned, individual lives are expendable when the safety of the coven is at stake.

NOTABLES

An ex-slaver, sorcerer, binder, and scholar named Agra was the first to discover that binding a vestige carried other magical consequences.

Agra was a vicious woman who saw little value in other people—let alone these wisps of personality called up from who knows where.

She cared not at all that by using the vestiges as fuel for her spellcasting, she lessened their contact with the world through her.

When word reached Syfal, the acknowledged founder of pact magic, he exiled Agra, declaring her an enemy to all. Agra left, but not before betraying Syfal to the Seropaeneans.

In later years, Agra surrounded herself with students and began to teach them what she had learned.

As her coven grew more powerful, many of its members began to resent Agra for the knowledge she guarded. One night, her students murdered her in her sleep. When the tortured vestige inside her was released, it laughed to see the first anima mage drowning in her own blood.

ORGANIZATION

An anima mage coven consists of four to twelve members of varying levels.

The highest-level anima mage serves as the leader, or vessel. The vessel names the coven, often incorporating the name of the vestige that its members most often bind to create fanciful monikers such as the Fist of Anion or the Seekers of Dantalion.

Beneath the vessel, all members are equal in name, though seniority ranks them in fact.

The voices of longstanding members carry more weight than those of the newcomers, and the vessel always awards any contested item to the most senior member who claims it.

Those who disagree with the edicts of the vessel are free to leave and start their own covens, but doing so earns them the enmity of the abandoned coven and often results in a brutal war.

The internal unity that vessels maintain ensures that covens are rarely splintered by factionalism and conflict is kept to a minimum.

Instead, anima mages save their hatred for the Order of Seropaenes (see page 90) and the witch slayers (see page 67) who hunt them.

The relentless forces arrayed against anima mages force them to cooperate, even when their personal agendas clash.

NPC REACTIONS

Binders view the exploitation of vestiges as a blasphemy, so it is no surprise that their attitude toward anima mages is hostile.

Multiclass binders might be unfriendly or even indifferent to anima mages, depending on their views about the nature of vestiges.

Members of the Order of Seropaenes despise anima mages even more than they do binders and usually attack the former on sight.

Few people other than the users of pact magic and their immediate enemies know much about anima mages—in fact, most can't really distinguish them from other spellcasters.

Since most people are indifferent toward users of pact magic, the same attitude generally extends to anima mages. Those who do know a little about pact magic tend to react poorly when they learn how anima mages exploit vestiges. Such characters are usually unfriendly at best, although evil ones might be indifferent.

ANIMA MAGE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research anima mages to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.
 DC 10: Anima mages use a rare form of spellcasting that lets them suddenly augment their spells.

DC 15: An anima mage's power stems from bound spirits.

DC 20: An anima mage binds an unusual spirit called a vestige, then coerces it into augmenting his spells.

This practice is so abhorrent that even binders oppose anima mages.

DC 25: These strange spellcasters gather in covens and coexist alongside other people.

Anyone, anywhere, could be an anima mage.

Any PC trying to contact an anima mage or a coven must succeed on a DC 25 Gather Information check to locate the appropriate intermediary for the group.

Anima mages rarely reveal themselves in public.

ANIMA MAGES IN THE GAME

Like other practitioners of pact magic, anima mages hide from the world.

A typical anima mage appears to be an ordinary sorcerer or wizard, but he harbors a dark secret, practicing his forbidden magic only in the safety of his home or laboratory.

This prestige class appeals to players who like to run darker characters.

Because the morality behind the anima mage's art is questionable, players who enjoy roleplaying internal conflict readily seize on this class.

When you have an anima mage in your campaign, you can propel the storyline forward simply by populating your world with recurring villains who exist only to capture or kill these characters.

If you adopt such an approach, however, let the anima mages catch sight of their pursuers before slipping away.

Such staging tends to enhance the sense that the characters have made a narrow escape.

Reward players who make an effort to conceal their characters' identities and talents by giving them plenty of opportunities to interact with those hunting them.

ADAPTATION

Anima mages needn't exploit vestiges to gain power—the vestiges could volunteer the added powers to an anima mage in recognition of his spellcasting ability.

You could also relax the prerequisites to open this prestige class to any spellcaster—or even a psionic character.

A more sinister version of the anima mage could bind fiends or celestials instead of vestiges.

To do so, the character would use the soul binding ability as described on page 10.

An anima mage who succeeds in coercing such an outsider (DC equals the creature's CR + its HD) gains a bonus spell slot, as noted in the exploit vestige ability description, but no special abilities.

NEW SPELL: VESTIGEWACK

After a few failed attempts at binding vestiges, anima mages devised the spell known as vestigewrack.

This spell briefly inundates vestiges with the sensations of a physical form, thereby making the spirits more amenable to binding.

Much to their surprise, the anima mages discovered that the spell also affected other incorporeal creatures, such as ghosts and wraiths.

VESTIGEWACK

Necromancy [Evil]

Level: Blackguard 2, cleric 2, sorcerer/wizard 2

Components: V, S, F

Casting Time: 1 standard action

Range: 20 ft.

Targets: One incorporeal creature or apparition/level in a 20-ft.-radius emanation centered on you

Duration: 1 round/level (D)

Saving Throw: Will negates

Spell Resistance: Yes

You hold the curved dagger aloft, and as you slice it through the air at the incorporeal creature before you, you speak words of power that remind it of the life it once had, and the pain of its loss.

Clutching a curved blade, you make a downward cutting motion that produces a field of pulsing, unholy, red light around you.

Each incorporeal creature within this light must succeed on a Fortitude save or be wracked with sensations of loss. This effect manifests as a –2 penalty on attack rolls, damage rolls, skill checks, and saves for as long as the creature remains in range, and for 1d4 rounds afterward.

In addition, every corporeal user of pact magic gains a +2 bonus on binding checks made against any vestige within range of this spell.

Focus: An ornate sacrificial dagger or kukri worth 300 gp.

BEREFT

"I own you."

—Ladorose the Bleak

The bereft are a group of truenamers who devote themselves to mastering the word of unmaking, a powerful component of Truespeech purportedly able to unravel creation.

Through liberal uses of the word's syllables, a bereft studies its effects so that one day he can master the complete word of unmaking and perhaps unlock the meaning of reality. As he advances in level as a bereft, he learns new syllables of unmaking that create a variety of disruptive effects. After much patient study, he finally learns how to combine these potent syllables into the terrible, deadly word of unmaking.

BECOMING A BEREFT

All bereft have some capability with Truespeech, making the truenamer class an obvious choice to meet the requirements for this prestige class.

Bard levels grant the bereft an interesting suite of abilities that work well with those acquired from this class.

Many bereft also take sorcerer or wizard levels to enhance their defensive capabilities through magic.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any neutral Skills: Truespeak 13 ranks

Languages: Must speak at least three languages Special:

Must have been the subject of the ritual of renaming spell (see page 257).

This costs 3,700 gp.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Listen, Sense Motive, Speak Language, Truespeak.

CLASS FEATURES

The bereft's class features hinge on the Truespeak skill.

As your mastery grows, your capabilities begin to vary wildly from those of a typical truenamer.

You can deal damage, reduce your enemies' effectiveness, and even utterly unmake an enemy's soul with the powerful word of unmaking.

Obscure Personal Truename (Ex): Upon becoming a bereft, you give up your natural truename and take pains to make your new one more difficult to discover.

You gain a new truename by means of the ritual of renaming (see Entry Requirements), and you receive Obscure Personal Truename as a bonus feat.

Syllables of Unmaking (Sp): At each bereft level, you learn another syllable of the powerful word of unmaking.

While each syllable unmakes a portion of an enemy in a different way, the syllables do share some common traits.

- Each syllable is a spell-like ability.
- Each syllable requires you to make a successful Truespeak check to affect the creature you target. See page 195 for the rules involved in making a Truespeak check.

- The Law of Resistance applies to each syllable, so the Truespeak DC for repeated uses of a syllable increases by 2. See page 233 for a description of the Law of Resistance.

- The range of each syllable is 60 feet.

- As with utterances, syllables need not be heard by the target to be effective.

- The caster level of each syllable is equal to your character level.

Syllable of Detachment: When you begin your career as a bereft, you learn the first syllable in the word of unmaking: the syllable of detachment.

When you successfully speak this syllable, your target finds itself less capable.

Even the most minor tasks are suddenly more difficult.

The target takes a -2 penalty on attack rolls, saves, and checks for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

This ability is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell.

Syllable of Affliction: Beginning at 2nd level, you can use Truespeak to temporarily alter a target creature's truename and remove one of four senses.

If your Truespeak check is successful, the subject must make a Will save (DC 10 + class level + Cha modifier).

If it fails, you temporarily erase one of the target's senses:

sight (as per blindness/deafness), hearing (as per blindness/deafness), smell (negates scent ability), or touch (-2 circumstance penalty on Climb, Disable Device, Escape Artist, Jump, Open Lock, Search, Tumble, and Use Rope checks).

The effect of this ability remains for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

Syllable of Exile: When you attain 3rd level, with a successful Truespeak check you can temporarily send a target of this syllable to a confusing pocket dimension.

This ability functions as a maze spell, but the subject is trapped in the maze for only 1 round.

It can still attempt an Intelligence check to escape on its turn as normal, but doing so is only a swift action (as opposed to a full-round action, as normal for a maze spell).

Thus, if it escapes, the creature can act normally on its turn.

This ability is the equivalent of a 6th-level spell.

Syllable of Dissolution: When you reach 4th level, your proficiency with the syllables of unmaking has nearly reached its pinnacle.

You can now unmake a portion of a creature's physical essence.

If you succeed on your Truespeak check, your target takes 8d6 points of damage, as portions of its body are ripped away and destroyed.

This ability is the equivalent of a 7th-level spell.

Syllable of Enervation: At 5th level, you learn the final syllable of the word of unmaking.

If your Truespeak check is successful, your target gains two negative levels.

There is no saving throw to avoid gaining the negative levels, but 24 hours after gaining them, the subject of the word of unmaking must make a Fortitude save (DC 15 + Cha modifier) for each negative level gained.

If the save succeeds, that negative level is removed.

If it fails, the negative level also goes away, but one of the subject's character levels is permanently drained.

This ability is the equivalent of an 8th-level spell.

Word of Unmaking (Sp): The ultimate power of a bereft is the ability to remove a creature's soul from the fabric of reality.

By combining all the syllables of unmaking into one terrible word, you can make a Truespeak check as a full-round action and target a creature that has died.

You must be within touch range of the corpse to use this ability, and doing so provokes attacks of opportunity.

If your Truespeak check is successful, the creature cannot be raised from the dead or animated through any means. Only a ritual of renaming combined with a true resurrection spell cast together can return the creature to life.

You cannot target an undead creature with this ability, but you could target its remains.

Using this ability costs 100 XP.

PLAYING A BEREFT

Being a bereft means you have the ability to directly unravel a target's capabilities.

You like destroying and creating chaos among your enemies, watching as they scramble about in a vain attempt to stop the buzzing words.

Each conflict furthers your understanding of the word of unmaking.

Of course, your sole intent is not just to destroy and maim.

You and the rest of the bereft gave up your names to understand and manipulate how reality works.

More important, you safeguard the word of unmaking to prevent it from falling into the wrong hands.

Though you often consult with your colleagues, you're just as likely to spend time on your own or in the company of an adventuring group.

COMBAT

You are a harbinger of destruction, armed with a variety of abilities to give you an edge over your opponents.

Use your abilities to neutralize as many foes as you can.

Don't stand in one place; move around the battlefield to strike opponents where they least expect it.

Look for allies who can protect you while you use your powers.

A well-armed and armored fighter can mean all the difference in the thick of combat.

Try to use your class features to target opponents who are not directly engaged with your protector, so focus on spellcasters and archers first while your protector eliminates melee opponents that would threaten you.

At 2nd level, you can literally strip a target of his senses, eliminating foes with ease.

Even if your target throws off the blindness or deafness, you can still impair its allies with the syllable of detachment. Failing all else, you can simply destroy your foes with the syllable of dissolution.

ADVANCEMENT

The knowledge you harbor carries a great responsibility.

You hold the keys to destroying the works of the gods.

Consequently, the Bereft are reluctant to accept new members, allowing only those with some experience with truenaming magic to join their group.

Bereft test the extent of your familiarity with truenaming techniques.

They also look for chaotic and destructive tendencies, traits capable of unleashing the true destructive power of their knowledge.

Even after the initial interview, it might be months before the Bereft contact you again.

During this time, they watch your behavior to see how you react to different situations, as well as how you use Truespeak in stressful situations.

Once satisfied, the Bereft bring you into their fold and teach you the first syllable of unmaking.

As a part of this group, the first step you undertake as a member is to lose your past.

The Bereft wipe away all traces of your history, striking your name from every record they can reach, using magic to modify or erase memories of you from all but your most trusted allies.

Then they modify your own memory, causing you to forget your name.

Once properly prepared, they give you a new name, usually a number, by which you are called ever after, and a new truenaming, acquired during a ritual of renaming (see Entry Requirements, above).

As you advance in the bereft class, keep developing the Truespeak skill.

Other skills, such as Bluff, Concentration, and Spellcraft, are also important, especially if you dabble in magic.

Invest in magic items that increase your Charisma score, such as a cloak of Charisma or potion of eagle's splendor.

RESOURCES

The Bereft offer their members knowledge, information, and companionship.

Having sacrificed everything to attain knowledge of the word of unmaking, you can turn to your fellows for friendship and alliances.

A family of sorts, all members of the Bereft are well versed in Truespeech and assist novices in developing their own skills and techniques, while also comforting them in the transition to a new life.

BEREFT IN THE WORLD

"A grave danger, these Bereft...they are a faceless threat capable of striking anywhere and at any time.

Some might say they are a greater risk to reality than binders."

—Croius, White Blade Witch Slayer

The Bereft are equally viable as villains as they are heroes. As opponents, they are a dangerous organization dabbling in forces beyond their comprehension and presenting a grave danger to reality.

As heroes, they might be custodians of the word of unmaking, preventing it from falling into the wrong hands.

DAILY LIFE

A bereft sees the world as nothing more than a series of words given form.

A tree is the reflection of the idea of a tree, just as Grog is a reflection of the idea of half-orc.

Consequently, they overlook how these reflections feel and react, not seeing emotions as the reaction to a set of experiences, but rather abstractions of the concepts of love, hate, rage, and so on.

Their detached nature strains existing relationships and makes developing new ones difficult.

Thus, many bereft fall back on the company of their own kind, debating the nature of truenames and the applications of Truespeech, rather than cultivating new relationships.

As a bereft spends time among his peers and develops a deeper understanding of the logical underpinnings of reality, he rises in prominence within his particular group. He can make decisions for the Bereft and even lead expeditions to eliminate rogue bereft characters and other abusers of truenaming magic.

He might lead a combined group of bereft and their allies, and one day oversee the entire organization.

NOTABLES

Uriane Logthosoth became a bereft by accident.

A truenamer of no little skill, she was once hunted by the Black Wind, a group of wicked witch slayers who killed as often as they captured.

One by one, her companions fell to their pursuers' black-shafted arrows, deathblade poison coursing through their veins.

The possibility of escape seemed less and less likely.

Finally, when she was alone, minions of the Black Wind cornered her in a box canyon.

She tried to scramble up the walls, but the rock was loose and crumbled under her grip.

With bloody fingers, heaving chest, and terror mounting she turned to face the grim band.

Arrows nocked, strings pulled back, it seemed death was upon her.

But then she spoke, channeling her rage and frustration into a single word.

The lead archer exploded in a cloud of bone, teeth, and blood.

The other archers stepped back with fear as she, with wonder, spoke again, this time killing three.

They quickly launched their arrows, but the buzzing of her words confused them, and those that didn't set upon one another fled shrieking.

Uriane knew that day she had uncovered something terrible, a dark word that could destroy.

Uriane erased her name and left all she knew behind her.

She discovered others like her and drew them to her.

Coining themselves the Bereft, they stood outside political machinations and battles for good and evil to protect their forbidden knowledge.

ORGANIZATION

Through the long training required to master the word of unmaking, bereft characters develop a strong loyalty to their peers, embracing the responsibility of the knowledge tempered with an eagerness to learn more.

The rigorous instruction helps prevent accidents resulting from poor preparation and instills a sense of secrecy in what they do.

All this has been carefully orchestrated to create a cabal of powerful truenamers armed with the ability to master Truespeech and maybe uncover the true word that could unmake reality.

Uriane Logthosoth founded the Bereft to protect not only the truenamers who knew the word of unmaking, but also to engender a responsibility to prevent its widespread use and likely abuse.

But with her death went her idealized views.

Certainly, the Bereft train under the guidelines established by their founder, but a growing nihilistic faction of the group, called the Undone, wants nothing more than to destroy all worlds and all creatures—to deconstruct reality so that the prime mover, the creative force, can rebuild it in a more perfect form.

The Undone faction traces its origins to Ladorose, a disaffected truenamer who suffered in the Tower of Woe (see page 100) for five years before the witch slayers (see page 67) there realized that he was not a binder and released him.

He tried to resume his life, but the nightmares of his captivity haunted him, and so he wandered.

He finally discovered the Bereft and learned from them, and during his studies, he realized the only way to completely end evil would be to end everything.

He kept this knowledge to himself until after he completed his training.

For the next few years, he spread the gospel of his beliefs to a select few truenamers, forming a cadre of like-minded souls.

As their numbers grew, so did their influence within the group.

Ladorose now is the most senior member of the Bereft, and his first students now serve as instructors.

They still train new members in the same ways, but those students who have a particular talent and no particular love of the world are invited into the inner circle, gradually introduced to the concepts espoused by the group's leadership.

Should they balk at the destruction of all things, they are quietly silenced.

Such happenings are rare, so the Undone continue their efforts to prepare the way for the world's unmaking.

NPC REACTIONS

The Bereft are a fringe group of truenamers, so few even know about their existence.

Most who encounter these characters see them as eccentric truenamers and are indifferent at worst.

A few know them for who they are and see them as a dangerous and reckless force, and are at best unfriendly.

A few witch slayer groups have expanded their prey to truenamers—especially the bereft.

Among them are the remainder of the Black Wind coterie, but a few others, including the White Swords and Red Moon coterie, also hunt them.

Witch slayers are always unfriendly, but witch slayers that are part of these three coterie are hostile.

BEREFT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research bereft to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Words exist that can render men insane merely by speaking them.

DC 15: The bereft are masters of a particular grouping of destructive words of power that can destroy and maim.

In principle, they act as the custodians of these words.

DC 20: The bereft claim to guard these words and prevent them from falling into the wrong hands.

DC 30: A faction within the bereft organization wants to destroy reality.

A bardic knowledge check can reveal the same information as a Knowledge check, and in each case the DC is 5 lower than the given value.

BEREFT IN THE GAME

As described, bereft are not widely known.

It's a big world, full of fantastic and terrible forms of magic. It's not a stretch to say bereft have operated beneath notice for many years and have only just recently surfaced.

The bereft class offers a dynamic set of abilities, likely to appeal to players who really like being able to sculpt their abilities to fit different situations.

The bereft, while at heart a truenamer, is an outgrowth of that class, with abilities and talents unlike any other.

This class works extremely well in most campaigns with little adaptation to normal play.

However, to maintain the tension of using the syllables of unmaking, be sure to incorporate reoccurring antagonists to oppose the character and his brand of magic.

ADAPTATION

The bereft class serves as a new direction for truenamers. However, this need not be the case. If you don't use truename magic, you can still use this class. Simply replace the Truespeak check with a caster level check.

Furthermore, the bereft need not be protectors of the word of unmaking; they could be harbingers of entropy. In this case, bereft make for excellent mad villains with designs on destroying the world, perhaps to appease a mad god or because of their own insanity.

TABLE 3-5: THE BEREFT HIT DIE: D6

BRIMSTONE SPEAKER

*"Angels of sky and sun, fly to my aid!
With the sacred word thamach'trulihaunavrithi, I compel you!"*
—Kuorick Hammerdau, brimstone speaker

Brimstone speakers regard the secret language of truenames as nothing less than a gift from the gods. Through assiduous study, they master truenames that enable them to call eladrins, archons, and angels to fight on their behalf.

They also know the truename they're most famous for: the tongue of fire that burns away the stain of evil everywhere.

BECOMING A BRIMSTONE SPEAKER

Becoming a brimstone speaker is relatively straightforward, as long as you meet the religious and alignment requirements of the class.

The easiest path to the class is to take seven levels of cleric and either the Truename Training feat or a level in the truenamer class to get the needed ranks in the Truespeak skill.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good

Skills: Truespeak 10 ranks

Special: Ability to cast *true prayer of the chosen

Special: Worshiper of a deity that provides access to the Fire or Good domain

* New spell described on page 259

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft, Truespeak.

CLASS FEATURES

The brimstone speaker exchanges some spellcasting levels for two abilities: a fiery breath weapon and the ability to call outsider allies.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st, 3rd, 6th, and 9th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a brimstone speaker, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Tongue of Fire (Su): The first thing every brimstone speaker learns is a truename that roughly translates as "tongue of fire".

If you utter it correctly (Truespeak DC 25), you gain a fiery breath weapon that deals 3d6 points of damage in a 20-foot line.

Those within the area of the tongue of fire take half damage if they succeed on a Reflex saving throw (DC 10 + class level + Con modifier).

At 5th level, your tongue of fire deals 5d6 points of damage (Truespeak DC 30), and at 10th level your tongue of fire deals 8d6 points of damage (Truespeak DC 35).

If you wish, you can declare that you're using a less powerful version of your tongue of fire, accepting less damage in exchange for a lower Truespeak DC.

The Law of Resistance applies to this ability (see page 233), so the Truespeak DC of each successive use of tongue of fire increases by 2.

Lesser Heavenly Entreaty (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, by shouting the truenames of various angelic powers to the heavens, you are able to call powerful outsiders to fight on your behalf.

If you succeed on a DC 27 Truespeak check, you can summon one bralani eladrin (MM 93) that follows your directions as if summoned by a summon monster spell.

You can use a heavenly entreaty a number of times per day equal to your class level.

A celestial summoned with this ability remains for 1 minute.

You can have only one heavenly envoy at a time.

If you successfully summon a new one, the previous one disappears.

The Law of Resistance applies to this ability (see page 233), so the Truespeak DC of each successive use of lesser heavenly entreaty increases by 2.

Heavenly Entreaty (Sp): From 6th level on, if you succeed on a DC 33 Truespeak check, your ability to summon celestial aid improves.

You now have the option of summoning one word archon (see page 264) that follows your directions as if summoned by a summon monster spell.

You can use a heavenly entreaty a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Uses of this ability and lesser heavenly entreaty are drawn from a common pool.

Thus, at 6th level, you can summon either a word archon or a bralani eladrin a total of six times per day.

A celestial summoned with this ability remains for 1 minute.

You can only have one heavenly envoy at a time.

If you successfully summon a new one, the previous one disappears.

The Law of Resistance applies to this ability (see page 233), so the Truespeak DC of each successive use of heavenly entreaty increases by 2.

Greater Heavenly Entreaty (Sp): When you attain 9th level, your ability to summon celestial allies improves again. If you succeed on a DC 43 Truespeak check, you can summon one astral deva (MM 111) that follows your directions as if summoned by a summon monster spell. You can use a heavenly entreaty a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Uses of this ability, heavenly entreaty, and lesser heavenly entreaty are drawn from a common pool.

Thus, at 9th level, you can summon either an astral deva, a word archon, or a bralani eladrin a total of nine times per day.

A celestial summoned with this ability remains for 1 minute.

You can have only one heavenly envoy at a time.

If you successfully summon a new one, the previous one disappears.

The Law of Resistance applies to this ability (see page 233), so the Truespeak DC of each successive use of greater heavenly entreaty increases by 2.

PLAYING A BRIMSTONE SPEAKER

Your god gave you an immense gift, revealing to you part of the hidden mechanism of the universe.

As a result, you “spread the word” in both the literal and figurative senses.

Your truenames help you crusade for good.

With each victory over evil, your actions increase the truename power of words such as “good”, “honorable”, and “hero”.

You are torn between two worlds.

On one hand, you spend a lot of time cloistered in a library mastering the art of truenames.

But your abilities are far more suited to the life of a crusader than the life of the scholar.

You delve into tomes of truename lore from a sense of duty, but you're eager to get back out into the field and pursue your true calling: burning the stench of evil from the world.

COMBAT

You have traded some spellcasting levels to earn your class features, so the most important tactical decision you face on a round-by-round basis is whether to cast a spell, use tongue of fire, or summon a celestial ally.

Tongue of fire gives you a good offensive option, especially against multiple foes, so you can shift your spell selection to include more defensive and utility spells if you wish.

Realize also that you retain offensive power regardless of how many spells you have.

Even if you convert every spell on your list to heal your allies, you can still blast evildoers with tongue of fire.

The tongue of fire does have its limitations.

Its range is only 20 feet, and sometimes it's difficult to place the line so that it doesn't hit your allies—you want to avoid what would literally be “friendly fire”.

The ability requires you to make a successful Truespeak check to use, so keep your Truespeak modifier as high as possible.

Because your tongue of fire is a line, you will want to know the rules for line-shaped effects (PH 175) like the back of your hand.

Your spells and class features keep you busy during a fight, so you might let your prowess in melee combat languish somewhat.

You should still carry a weapon, but you might find that you don't swing it often, just because you have more compelling options on a round-by-round basis. Don't neglect your defense.

You will spend a great deal of time in harm's way, because many commonly cast divine spells are touch spells, and your tongue of fire has a relatively short range.

You learn your first heavenly entreaty at 3rd level.

Thereafter, you have an encounter-changing class feature.

This provides you with yet another option to access in the course of a battle, but it's nice to have tactical dilemmas that involve powerful outsiders flying to aid you.

A successful heavenly entreaty can swing an encounter in your favor, but it also makes that encounter a lot more complicated.

You've just added a high-level outsider to a battle that was probably complex to begin with.

You can make the DM's life a lot easier and your fellow players more engaged if you have the statistics for the bralani eladrins, word archons, or astral devas ready ahead of time.

Study them beforehand so you know what they can do and what their important statistics are (AC, saving throws, and so on).

ADVANCEMENT

It takes an unlikely combination of a scholar's patience and a crusader's zeal to make a good brimstone speaker, and the masters of your religious order identified you as a good candidate.

Throughout your early career, you studied the discipline of truenames.

After you passed a series of examinations, you were taught the truename for tongue of fire, and your life as a brimstone speaker began.

Once you learn the truename for the tongue of fire, you immediately begin studying the truenames of outsiders, striving to pronounce them so perfectly that the angels have no choice but to descend and aid you.

You visit the major temples of your faith periodically, eager to study more in their archives and libraries.

As you gain brimstone speaker levels, keep your Truespeak modifier as high as possible.

If you stop improving your Truespeak skill, higher-level class features will be nearly inaccessible to you.

Consider the Skill Focus (Truespeak) feat, the amulet of the silver tongue, and various Intelligence-enhancing items as means of improving your ability to use Truespeak.

Because you have ranks in Truespeak, consider giving truename spells (described in the section beginning on page 253) an important place in your repertoire.

Because some of those spells require research into personal truenames, consider developing Knowledge skills that will help you discover the personal truenames of your allies and enemies.

RESOURCES

Brimstone speakers are traditionally crusaders for their faith, cleansing the countryside of evil and leaving more esoteric theological matters for other parts of the religion. You spend most of your time away from the church, because your mission is to go where the evil is.

You can count on aid from your religious-minded fellows when you come back into the fold, because they generally recognize the value of the work you perform.

You will often get free or reduced-cost spellcasting at affiliated temples and shrines in exchange for the quests and crusades you undertake.

The most important aid you receive isn't spellcasting or financial aid, however—it's access to the accumulated truename lore of your church.

When you visit major temples, you can get access to the books that unlock your key class features.

BRIMSTONE SPEAKERS IN THE WORLD

"It was da perfect ambush.

Da human was all alone in a canyon, so we jumped down, killed her horse so she couldn't run off, and cut her real good. Then she said somethin' I couldn't hear right—all weird gobbledyguk—and these glowin' winged things came zoomin' outta da sky. I ran, but from da sounds I heard, dose winged things got everyone else."

—Nahlarak, bugbear warlord

Brimstone speakers are often spoken of in the temples of many faiths, but they're rarely seen there.

Their abilities are suited for cleansing the land of evil, not proselytizing to heathens or preaching sermons to the faithful.

Brimstone speakers follow the lead of Joram the Crusader (described below) in that regard.

DAILY LIFE

Brimstone speakers usually wake up with one of two goals: Uncover evil, or expunge the evil they uncovered yesterday.

Their life is a series of quests and crusades, punctuated only by periodic spates of intense truename study at major temples.

Most brimstone speakers wouldn't have it any other way, because they believe that their deities chose them to wander the earth and cleanse it of evil.

NOTABLES

Perhaps the most famous brimstone speaker is Joram the Crusader, a follower of Pelor who crossed the earth on one quest or another for six of his eight decades.

A temple acolyte once asked Joram why he spent his life in dark caverns, fetid swamps, and other unsavory places.

Joram's terse response: "Because that's where the evil is".

Brimstone speakers have a centuries-old history, but many current speakers have some connection to Joram—a testament both to Joram's industry and the desire of younger brimstone speakers to emulate him as closely as possible.

One of the most controversial brimstone speakers is Urick Joramson, a child of Joram's known for his intense zeal to uproot evil.

Unlike his father, Urick is indiscriminate in his campaign to rid the land of evil.

Urick believes that the gods will protect innocents caught up in the battle between good and evil, so Urick doesn't need to.

"If no god sought to save you, you should ask yourself why!" says Urick.

Urick and Joram are estranged for both this difference in philosophy and some family reasons neither will discuss.

ORGANIZATION

Brimstone speakers have no organization of their own.

Each good-aligned religion with brimstone speakers among its ranks develops its own organization to pass along the necessary truename lore and direct the efforts of brimstone speakers in the field.

In most cases, brimstone speakers are a separate order within the larger church.

They share all the beliefs and customs of the religion as a whole, but they have their own specific traditions and codes of conduct as well.

Many brimstone speakers are followers of Pelor, both because Pelor's followers are so numerous and because Joram the Crusader worships Pelor.

Pelor's religion has an "Order of Brimstone", whose members wear flame-red tabards and golden helms.

Anyone who can qualify to become a brimstone speaker is eligible to join the Order of Brimstone, which grants access to the church's libraries and provides a steady supply of missions involving threats to the church and society at large.

Most of Pelor's brimstone speakers are sent out on missions individually or with allies who aren't brimstone speakers.

Again, Joram's wisdom is part of the reason; he once famously said, "One spark for one bonfire".

Other faiths have different ways of organizing their brimstone speakers.

Followers of Kord have a "Brimstone Brigade" organized along military lines, while Heironeous's brimstone speakers are eligible to join one of several crusader orders dominated by paladins, knights of the chalice (described in Complete Warrior), and divine crusaders (described in Complete Divine).

NPC REACTIONS

Because brimstone speakers are relatively rare and not involved in church leadership or politics, they're not well known, even among the faithful.

Religious leaders, on the other hand, recognize and value the services that a brimstone speaker provides, so they have an initial attitude of friendly when encountering a brimstone speaker.

Evildoers who have been burned by a brimstone speaker aren't likely to forgive or forget, so they have an initial attitude of hostile toward brimstone speakers.

Evildoers who work behind the scenes, such as cultists and elders, have a particular loathing for brimstone speakers because they can't be bought off or negotiated with.

BRIMSTONE SPEAKER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research brimstone speakers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Brimstone speakers are clerics that can emit a tongue of fire to burn their enemies.

DC 15: They use the power of truenames to create the tongue of fire, and eventually they use the truenames of eladrins, archons, and angels to call them into battle.

DC 20: Brimstone speakers spend most of their time on quests to expunge the land of evil, much like their greatest hero, Joram the Crusader.

BRIMSTONE SPEAKERS IN THE GAME

The brimstone speaker class is a good way for an existing character—probably a cleric, in this case—to use the truename rules and retain the familiar aspects of the cleric's function.

The prestige class is overtly a cleric with a twist.

Once the player has mastered a few new class features and perhaps some truename spells, he or she can settle into the familiar role of the cleric without difficulty.

Many mid-level clerics will be able to qualify for the prestige class in just a few levels, simply by buying cross-class ranks in Truespeak until their next feat choice becomes available.

They can then take the Truename Training feat, and they should have enough ranks to qualify for the brimstone speaker class.

As a DM, you should pay attention to how much the player of a brimstone speaker uses the truename aspects of the class.

If a brimstone speaker just wants to be a cleric with a tongue of fire, that's fine.

But if the player starts using truename spells and spending skill points in Knowledge skills to improve her truename research abilities, that's a sign that the player wants your help to make truenames more important.

Include villains in your game whose personal truenames she has a reasonable chance of learning.

Give some monsters truename-related feats, including ones that will surprise her, such as Personal Truename Backlash.

ADAPTATION

As written, the brimstone speaker is a crusader for the forces of good.

It's easy to change (or even remove) the alignment requirement and develop a brimstone speaker devoted to tyranny and woe, or one with no philosophical agenda at all.

If you change the alignment requirement for this class, you should replace the creatures in the entreaties.

Because the creatures remain for only a few rounds, their Challenge Rating is the best measuring stick for how effective they are in response to an entreaty.

The 3rd-level entreaty gives you a CR 6 creature, the 6th-level entreaty gives you CR 9, and 9th level CR 14.

Keep in mind that summoned creatures with unusual spell-like abilities can be problematic even with a short duration, and it's hard to fit multiple Large or Huge outsiders onto a crowded battlefield.

To give the class an evil, demonic flair, for instance, you could use Chaos, Evil, and Fire for the domain requirement, and replace the envoys with a babau, a vrock, and a nalfeshnee as the creatures that answer a brimstone speaker's entreaty.

For a lawful evil flavor, require the Evil, Fire, or Law domains and use a chain devil, bone devil, and logokron devil (see page 265).

CHILD OF NIGHT

"Watch and rend until the coming of final night—if it will not avail you.

To comprehend the magnificent and empty beauty of darkness, it is not enough to study shadow, you must become shadow."

—Lara Bethendé, former Lady of the Second House, Parliament of Shadows, now renegade

They prefer to call themselves "black transmogrifists", but most know them as children of night.

They are more than spellcasters, more than scholars, and—they claim—more than mortal.

For those who have the will and the depth of knowledge to join their ranks, ascension beyond the earthly form awaits, for the children of night become the stuff of shadow itself.

BECOMING A CHILD OF NIGHT

Children of night must be tied to the Plane of Shadow through their ability to perform magic involving darkness. The path of the shadowcaster is the most direct route, although some wizards, sorcerers, and clerics can progress into this class.

Few bards or druids embark on this journey of self-transformation.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks

Shadowcasting/Spellcasting: Ability to cast mysteries or ability to cast spells with the darkness descriptor or from the shadow subschool

Special: Must have visited the Plane of Shadow

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Move Silently, Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance as a child of night, your physiology changes, becoming more shadow and less mortal flesh.

Mysteries/Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new mysteries or spells per day and an increase in caster level (and mysteries or spells known, if applicable) as if you had also attained a level in a casting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained, such as bonus feats for mystery paths known, or improved familiar for wizard or sorcerer.

If you had more than one casting class before becoming a child of night, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining mysteries or spells per day, caster level, and mysteries or spells known.

Cloak of Shadows (Su): Your flesh takes on a hazy, almost translucent hue, granting a bonus equal to your child of night level on Hide checks.

At 4th level, once per day as a swift action, you can make your outline shadowy and indistinct, as the blur spell, for a number of minutes equal to your class level.

When you reach 6th level, you can use the blur effect three times per day.

At 8th level, your form permanently becomes hazy and you continually have a blur effect.

At 10th level, two times per day as a swift action, you can make your true location more difficult to discern, as if you were affected by the displacement spell, for 10 rounds.

Cold Resistance (Su): At 1st level, the shadow in your essence provides cold resistance 5.

This resistance increases to 10 at 5th level and 15 at 9th level.

Sustaining Shadow (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you lose various biological needs, as you draw power from the Plane of Shadow.

This functions as the shadowcaster ability described on page 113, except new abilities are gained at 4th, 6th, and 8th level.

If you have the sustaining shadow ability from a different class (shadowcaster, for example), you automatically gain the next sustaining shadow ability.

Dancing Shadows (Su): At 3rd level, you can use the dancing shadows mystery as a supernatural ability once per day with a caster level equal to your class level plus your levels in any other mystery-casting class.

At 7th level and above, you can use dancing shadows twice per day.

Night Form (Ex): For 1 minute per day, you can become incorporeal, and gain all the benefits of the incorporeal subtype.

You also gain a fly speed of 40 feet with perfect maneuverability.

PLAYING A CHILD OF NIGHT

You are ascending to something greater than mortality.

You don't necessarily think of mortals as worthless—children of night aren't required to be evil—but neither do you think of yourself as one of them.

You remember your companions, and might remain loyal to them, but your capacity for affection and similar emotions atrophies.

You seem cold or brusque.

Your primary motivation is to bond further with shadow, and you might abandon previously set goals if they conflict with that objective.

Your class is common in several of the organizations described later in this section (see pages 167–174).

The Nightshade Covenant welcomes you openly, seeing in your efforts the desire and ambition to become one with the Plane of Shadow itself.

To the Votaries of Vecna, you represent the ultimate melding of form and shadow, walkers on a path that leads to something beyond mortal and undead alike.

They revere you if you have joined them, and seek to obliterate you if you do not, considering you traitors.

Your relations with the Tenebrous Cabal are less predictable.

Although one might expect that the Cabal would welcome children of night, seeing in them the ultimate in shadow magic, the truth is that the Cabal isn't certain what to make of you.

You must allow your study of shadow magic to lapse, or at least slow, during your transformation.

This suggests that your priorities are not in synch with those of the Cabal.

Further, because you represent an interaction with shadow that the Cabal neither fully understands nor controls, it views you with some distrust.

The Cabal welcomes you into its ranks, but you are rarely permitted to hold true power and no children of night have risen beyond the Third House of the Parliament.

COMBAT

At low levels, you are much like other mystery users and spellcasters.

Consider remaining back from the front lines harassing foes and supporting allies with your magic.

You might take a more active role against cold-based foes, due to your burgeoning resistance.

As you advance to 4th level and beyond, your tactics must evolve with your form.

The concealment you enjoy from your cloak of shadows ability means you can afford to risk closing on your enemy, enabling you to more effectively deliver touch and short-range attacks.

Your Hide bonus enables you to lay ambushes, or support the rogue when she moves ahead of the party.

At high levels, you hardly need worry about physical attacks at all (although powerful spellcasters and mystic creatures can still threaten you).

When you gain the ability to become incorporeal, you can fly and pass through solid objects.

This benefit grants you superior maneuverability on the battlefield, enabling you to attack almost any foe, or bolster your companions in almost any situation.

You are an excellent scout, and you can provide hidden backup for your allies.

ADVANCEMENT

On rare occasions, someone with a strong affinity for shadow feels a call to darkness far beyond that experienced by other individuals.

You might be one of these; you feel somehow incomplete, hollow.

You discover in your studies the first hints of the children, and seek out their secrets, either through in-depth research or actively finding one and petitioning his aid.

Only in this fashion can you learn the ancient rites that instigate the earliest stages of transformation.

As you progress, you continue your transformation.

With time and practice, your body adapts and becomes more shadowy.

You continue your practice of magic and can become quite a potent caster.

You should keep your Intelligence and Charisma high.

This not only makes most effective use of the magic you do have, but Charisma determines your eventual deflection bonus to AC.

Keep your Spellcraft modifier up as well, since you are in a unique position—especially once you attain incorporeality—to interfere with other casters' abilities.

RESOURCES

The most obvious resource you might gain from other children of night is access to the prestige class in the first place.

Texts and tomes of shadow magic are not easily available, so you must deal with one of the various shadow-magic organizations to begin your search.

Given the alien nature of shadow magic, and the fact that you are deliberately attempting to transform yourself into a creature of darkness, few people trust you.

In the long-term, the companionship and allies offered by the Votaries of Vecna, the Tenebrous Cabal, or other independent children of night could prove more valuable than any item or riches.

Finally, organizations and smaller cadres of children of night often collect ghost touch weapons and force-related magic.

These resources allow them to more effectively battle corporeal creatures without manifesting, and to protect themselves from other force effects.

CHILDREN OF NIGHT IN THE WORLD

“Whatever the so-called ‘children of the night’ practice, it is not shadow magic.

The purpose of shadow magic is to control the darkness, and I am not convinced, that between the children and the darkness, it is the children who are in control.”

—Eddas Coradran, Lord of the First House, Parliament of Shadows

Nothing conveys the alien feel of shadow magic as strongly as the child of night.

Most players should be disturbed by individuals who are so enraptured with darkness that they willingly make themselves a part of it.

Some might find portraying a character with such alien thoughts to be a roleplaying challenge.

DAILY LIFE

It's difficult to define “daily life” for children of night.

Between their scarcity and their ability to go without fundamental biological needs, members of the class have few activities in common.

Most children of night spend their time traveling.

They rarely put down roots, for few communities accept them, and they have little need for shelter at higher levels. Most seek only to improve their knowledge and experience, so that they might take the next step in their transformations.

Upon reaching 10th level, some children of night find themselves so uncomfortable in the physical world that they seek to make new homes on the Plane of Shadow. The remainder usually fall in with one of the shadow magic organizations, even if they didn't start as members, simply for a sense of community.

Children of night seldom acquire leadership positions.

The Tenebrous Cabal rarely allows them authority, and few communities trust children of night even to reside in them, let alone hold office.

Only in the Nightshade Covenant, the Votaries of Vecna, and similar societies is it generally possible for a child of night to rise above the rank-and-file.

NOTABLES

Rumor and myth among mystery users name two children of night more often than any other.

Eldanel Glantrien is an ancient (former) elf who appears to protect shadow magicians from those who would condemn them as evil because of their mystical abilities.

Lara Bethendé was the youngest shadowcaster ever to attain rank in the Second House of the Parliament of Shadows.

When her fellow members discovered she was secretly studying to become a child of night, she slew several of them, stole valuable tomes, and disappeared.

To this day, she harries operatives of the Cabal.

The Parliament has determined that she had some grudge or agenda against it even before she joined its ranks, although its members have yet to determine what it might have been.

ORGANIZATION

The Tenebrous Cabal officially treats children of night like other members.

Unofficially, they are closely watched, rarely trusted, and hold little power.

The Votaries and the Covenant are far more welcoming, seeing in the children of night the beginnings of holiness. While few children hold high leadership positions, this is due to their weakened casting abilities compared to shadowcasters of the same level, rather than any deliberate prejudice.

Many become powerful operatives of the Votaries, however, and rumor maintains that a secret cadre of child of night assassins serves at the whim of that organization's leaders.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people react to children of night with hostility, or at least an unfriendly attitude.

Common folk are terrified of them, seeing them as dark magicians or inhuman entities.

Adventurers usually assume that, as beings who voluntarily tie themselves to darkness, they must be evil.

The average person likely flees at the first sign of a child of night, while braver folk seek to drive him away or destroy him.

Most shadowcasters are not inherently hostile, but still tend toward indifference.

Only other children of night, and members of certain shadow organizations, adopt friendly attitudes.

They recognize in one another a kindred spirit, though that doesn't guarantee friendship or cooperation.

Nearly everyone is an enemy of the children, from paladins and priests of gods of light, to spellcasters and even some shadowcasters.

The suspicion and loneliness that marks the life of a child of night prevents all but the most dedicated from pursuing this course, and often renders those who do so bitter and hostile.

CHILD OF NIGHT LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (the planes) can research children of night to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: The children of night seek to become one with the Plane of Shadow.

DC 15: The children physically transform themselves, eventually becoming incorporeal beings of shadow.

They retain a measure of casting abilities as well.

DC 20: Even other practitioners of shadow magic distrust the children of night.

CHILDREN OF NIGHT IN THE GAME

Children of night are rare, and they tend to be loners. As such, it's easy to introduce them to an ongoing campaign simply by asserting that the PCs have neither heard of nor encountered them.

The child of night class is appropriate for players who enjoy experimenting with the bizarre—with characters who don't think like normal people.

Don't minimize the alien nature of the class, or have NPCs react in a blasé manner during encounters; that ignores the uniqueness of the prestige class.

A child of night has less power than a straight caster of her level, so the DM should make every effort to develop encounters that take advantage of her maneuverability and immunities.

ADAPTATION

The child of night remains viable in campaigns that lack shadow magic.

The class might still represent a melding with the Plane of Shadow, but one that comes from transmutation or necromantic magic.

Alternatively, the child of night might be an illusion-based prestige class, in which illusionists actually transform themselves into living images.

Finally, the children of night might be an unusual form of undead, one with a slow and voluntary transformative process.

DISCIPLE OF THE WORD

"Defy the sword."

—Aglaran, Disciple of the Word

Disciples of the word are intellectual warrior monks who, through a deeper understanding of their truenames, transcend the limits of their mortal form.

Disciples commit themselves to a studied pursuit of introspection tempered by pious devotion to the principles of Zuoken as penned by the hand of the first disciple, Akahuza.

Through these teachings, disciples develop techniques that allow them to defy the limits of reality.

BECOMING A DISCIPLE OF THE WORD

Monks make the best disciples of the word, because they have an average base attack bonus, are lawful, and gain the evasion class feature early.

Other characters can gain entry into this class, but the evasion requirement necessitates at least two levels of monk or rogue, or at least eight levels of ranger.

No character can take levels in this class without devoting a few skill points to the Truespeak skill.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any lawful

Base Attack Bonus: +4

Skills: Truespeak 4 ranks

Feats: Improved Unarmed Strike, Stunning Fist

Special: Evasion

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Escape Artist, Jump, Move Silently, Truespeak, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

As a disciple of the word, you have class features that emphasize mobility.

Abilities such as word of movement sublime and word of movement perfected allow you to move about the battlefield almost unhindered.

Word of the fist unraveling and word of mystic deflection help you take on foes with a variety of attack capabilities, from spells to melee attacks.

Known Personal Truename: You know your own personal truename.

However, pronouncing it correctly requires a Truespeak check with a DC equal to 15 + (2 × your HD) + 2.

You get a +4 bonus on the Truespeak check because it's your personal truename.

Monk Abilities: A disciple of the word adds her class level to her monk level to determine her class-based AC bonus, her unarmed damage, unarmored speed bonus, flurry of blows penalty, and the number of daily attempts of her Stunning Fist feat.

If she has no monk levels, she gains the AC bonus of a monk whose level equals her disciple of the word level, but she doesn't add her Wisdom bonus to her AC.

In addition, she gains additional uses of the Stunning Fist feat as a monk.

(Her nonmonk, nondisciple of the word class levels provide one use per four levels, and her monk and disciple of the word class levels provide one use per level).

A disciple of the word does not count her class levels for the purpose of determining when she gains any other monk class features, such as reduced penalties for flurry of blows attack rolls, bonus feats, evasion, or other special abilities.

Word of Movement Sublime (Su): You can channel your ki into a single word of Truespeech.

This spoken word allows you, for a passing moment, to move as one with the restless motion of the universe, stepping through the mundane world with perfect grace. As a swift action, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and substitute a Truespeak check in place of a Balance, Jump, or Tumble check.

Word of the Stance Unyielding (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can channel your ki while speaking a word of Truespeech that allows you to stand fast, anchored to your current position by the rigid laws of the universe.

As an immediate action, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and substitute a Truespeak check in place of a Strength check to resist a trip, bull rush, or disarm attempt.

Word of Health Restored (Sp): From 3rd level on, you can use a word of Truespeech to focus your ki into your own body.

As a full-round action, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and make a Truespeak check to heal yourself.

You restore a number of hit points equal to your character level.

Using this ability provokes attacks of opportunity, but you can attempt to use it defensively, exactly as if it were a 3rd-level utterance.

Word of Movement Perfected (Su): At 4th level, you learn a word of Truespeech that allows you to move with great speed and agility, striding swiftly over the contours of the physical world.

As a swift action, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and make a DC 25 Truespeak check to increase your base speed by 20 feet.

In addition, while this ability is active, you can walk on water, quicksand, snow, or even a spider's web without sinking or breaking through.

You can take part of your movement for the round to traverse a wall or other relatively smooth vertical surface if you begin and end your move on a horizontal surface.

The height you can achieve on the wall is limited only by your normal movement restrictions.

If you do not end your movement on a horizontal surface, you fall prone, taking falling damage as appropriate for your distance above the ground.

This benefit lasts for 1 round.

This increase stacks with other bonuses to your speed, such as from the haste spell or a monk's fast movement bonus.

Word of Reflexes Exalted (Su): Beginning at 5th level, you can focus your will to deliver another word of Truespeech.

As an immediate action, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and substitute a Truespeak check in place of a Reflex saving throw.

Word of the Strike Unstoppable (Su): From 6th level on, you can speak a word of Truespeech and overcome a creature's damage reduction.

After a successful melee strike, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat as a swift action to attempt to bypass a target's damage reduction.

The DC of the Truespeak check depends on the type of damage reduction that you are trying to overcome.

DR	DC
Piercing	20
Slashing	20
Bludgeoning	25
Magic	30
Silver	35
Cold iron	35
Adamantine	40
Epic	45

If the creature's damage reduction requires more than one trait to overcome, chose the trait with the highest DC and add 10 to that DC for each additional trait required.

If the creature's damage reduction is overcome by one of several types of damage, use the lowest applicable DC.

Word of the Fist Unraveling (Su): At 7th level, you gain the ability to focus your ki into a single powerful strike.

Accompanied by a word of Truespeech, this ability can unravel magical effects.

After a successful melee strike, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat as a swift action to attempt to dispel one effect currently on the creature struck by the melee attack.

This works like a targeted dispel, except that you can only dispel the highest-level effect currently affecting the target.

You make a Truespeak check opposed by a caster level check made by the caster of the affected spell.

If you are successful, the spell is dispelled.

If your check is unsuccessful, the spell remains in effect.

Regardless of the result of the opposed check, the melee attack deals damage normally.

Word of Harm Avoided (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, if you have one hand free, once per day when you would normally be hit with a weapon, you can deflect it so that you take no damage from it.

To negate the attack, you spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and make a Truespeak check, opposed by the attack roll of the attack that you are attempting to negate.

You must be aware of the attack and not flat-footed.

Attempting to deflect an attack is an immediate action (an action you can take even when it's not your turn, but counts against the number of swift actions you can take in a round).

Unusually massive weapons (that is, any weapon two or more size categories larger than you) or attacks generated by spell effects (Melf's acid arrow or shocking grasp) can't be negated.

You must use this ability after the result of the attack roll is known but before damage is rolled.

Word of Mystic Deflection (Su): Starting at 9th level, you can speak a word of Truespeech and prevent a hostile spell from affecting you.

When you are the sole target of a spell (the spell must target you; this does not apply if you are the sole individual in an area spell) that must overcome spell resistance to have an effect, you can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and attempt a Truespeak check as an immediate action.

This Truespeak check is opposed by the caster's caster level check.

If you succeed on this check, the spell is negated.

If you fail this check, you are subject to the spell's effect normally, including your chance to save against the spell's effect, if applicable.

Word of Speed Unfettered (Su): At 10th level, you can speak a word of Truespeech and imbue your form with unparalleled celerity.

You can spend one of your daily uses of the Stunning Fist feat and attempt a DC 50 Truespeak check as an immediate action.

If you succeed on this check, you gain an additional move action that you must take immediately.

This ability might, among other things, allow you to move and make a full attack in the same round.

Multiclass Note: Monks who multiclass into this prestige class can continue advancing as monks.

PLAYING A DISCIPLE OF THE WORD

As a disciple of the word, you understand that reality, as most know it, is nothing more than an abstraction of the true forms—words.

All things are mere reflections, shadows of the true form, and even other people are just flawed copies of their true form.

Thanks to your unusual outlook, you have a hard time making friends, but that's not a problem.

Mortal friendships can never compare with the ideal concept of friendship.

Being a disciple of the word means you are part of the Order of the Word, a group of like-minded individuals who work to leave behind the flaws of the physical body and become one with the form from which they are modeled. You might be the master of a particular enclave of monks and the living embodiment of this goal, or you might be an instructor at one of these rare monasteries.

COMBAT

Your advantage is your knowledge of Truespeech.

It allows you to avoid damage, to heal yourself, and gives access to many other powerful abilities.

In battle, use your mobility to distract your opponents from attacking your allies.

The more attacks your enemies waste trying to strike you, the more attacks your companions can make against these same opponents.

You should take advantage of your mobility and move to flank your foes with allied rogues and fighters.

Good positioning helps other characters make use of sneak attacks, and at the very least provides a bonus on attack rolls.

In these situations, it's probably best to fight defensively, and if you have it, maximize your AC bonus from the Combat Expertise feat.

At 5th level, not only can you get in and out of dangerous spots, you can also more effectively escape harmful area effects.

Upon reaching 9th level, you can rest assured that you will rarely be subject to a spell you don't want to affect you.

ADVANCEMENT

You probably started down the path of the disciple of the word after first being exposed to the power of Truespeech, either in the presence of a truenamer or another disciple of the word.

Another disciple of the word might have then recognized your agility and combat skills, and told you there was a way to deny the dangers posed by reality.

You sought out the monks of the Order of the Word and unlearned all your previous training, for once you saw their techniques in practice, you had to find the key to unlocking those abilities yourself.

Long hours of study and training finally paid off, and you are constantly amazed at how easily you can shape a battle to your own ends now that you know the secrets of truenaming.

Though you are not required to spend all your days at the monastery, you often retreat there for further training and education.

Then again, you might remain at a monastery for years, only emerging when you feel a call to explore or adventure, to advance the perfect forms through intervention when the forces of entropy assert themselves.

As you continue to awaken your true form, you have many opportunities to develop your fighting skills.

Spend skill points on movement skills such as Climb, Jump, and Tumble.

It's a good idea to invest in feats that work well with your class abilities, so be sure to pick up feats such as Deflect Arrows, Run, and Spring Attack.

RESOURCES

Though you might wander far from your teachers and school, you can always return.

For you, it is a safe haven, a place to heal or hide.

The Order of the Word provides free food, lodging, and basic supplies to all its members.

They maintain friendly relations with local clerics of Zuoken (see page 124 of Complete Divine or page 221 of Expanded Psionics Handbook) who always have a shrine dedicated to the demigod within the monasteries' walls. Disciples gain access to free healing from those clerics, as well.

DISCIPLES OF THE WORD IN THE WORLD

"Though we walk different roads, the paths converge at the same end."

—Utod, Fist of Zuoken

A disciple of the word combines truenaming and martial arts, representing the pinnacle of what a person can achieve by devoting herself to reaching her true form.

Disciples can appear in any campaign, originating in small shrines in mountain aeries or well-defended and enormous martial arts schools taught by ancient masters.

DAILY LIFE

As important as it is for disciples to focus on their personal training, they do so by following the principles of self-discipline and mental prowess as scribed in the sacred scroll of Akahuza.

Each day, disciples speak the holy sutra to help order their minds.

A disciple first speaks her truename followed by an invocation to the self, calling for the blessing of Zuoken to strengthen the body, mind, and soul, while asking for the strength of mind to see beyond the illusion that is reality. Many disciples leave their monasteries to explore the world and derive a deeper understanding of their place within it. A few, however, found schools of their own, where they instruct new students in keeping the words of Akahuza and the principles of Zuoken alive.

As a sensei, a disciple must select viable candidates through careful testing, to see if they have the dedication to succeed in the Akahuza style while also looking for those with at least some fundamental understanding of Truespeech.

The first students trained become instructors and administrators, teaching new students and managing the monastery's resources.

NOTABLES

Three centuries ago, Akahuza, a monk and student of Zuoken's teachings, was dissatisfied with the path of war advanced by the Fists of Zuoken.

Akahuza believed there was another way to master self-discipline.

He traveled to different schools all over the land, studying with the tattooed monks, drunken masters, void disciples, and dozens of other schools, but each left him dissatisfied. So he wandered farther, listening to the words in the wind and the pulse in the earth, following the flow of the clouds until he came upon a shrine deep within a rain forest.

There, he found an old man living alone who did nothing except stare at a single rune carved in the wall.

The man did not speak, but he did not rebuff Akahuza's help either.

The two men lived in silence; the elder studied the sigil, the younger studied the elder.

Weeks turned to months and months turned to years, and still the old man never spoke.

Finally, Akahuza, in his perplexity, made ready to leave, gathering what supplies he had, thinking his time was wasted.

As he turned to go through the shrine's gate, there stood the old man, though how he came to be there, Akahuza could not say.

Bowing deeply to the elder, the wanderer tried to move past him, but the elder, faster than seemed possible, intercepted him.

Two more attempts and the master blocked him.

Then the old man spoke a single word and everything bent around them, as if the world folded in on itself.

Akahuza knew then he had found what he sought.

Thirty years later, Akahuza returned to his homeland and founded the Order of the Word.

As his followers built the school around him, he penned the essential principles of the art, writing just one character each day.

When the school was complete, so was Akahuza's writing, and with the final character written he died.

Over the next 200 years, the Order of the Word grew around the teachings set out in the sacred scroll, and the knowledge contained inside resulted in the first disciples of the word.

ORGANIZATION

The modern Order of the Word retains the original structure first set out by Akahuza all those years ago.

At a monastery, a master guides his favored pupils who in turn instruct the students.

Though many disciples wander the world in search of themselves and their place, many more are content to stay on with their comrades and learn the greater mysteries of their path.

No single overarching master governs the Order of the Word.

Rather, several masters care for their particular schools.

Since this is a group built on the ideals of peace and self-improvement, it has little room for rivalry or tensions between the schools.

Occasionally, one monastery hosts a tournament, and these exciting events draw disciples from all over the world, and in some cases, from across the planes.

Students compete to demonstrate their mastery of Akahuza's teachings, and the contests end when the top three students remain.

These champions are immediately elevated to master status and given the funds to found their own monasteries.

NPC REACTIONS

Even though disciples pursue a different path from that walked by other followers of Zuoken, they still pay homage to the god and enjoy his blessings.

Clerics and monks of Zuoken are always friendly or even helpful to disciples.

Other monks look upon disciples as strange and unusual, but their suspicions rarely worsen their attitudes below indifferent.

Disciples are a peaceful group, so they have few enemies.

Still, some creatures oppose peace and see those who embrace that path as a threat to their goals.

Evil monks are always unfriendly if not hostile.

Chaotic characters share the same suspicions, especially barbarians, who thrive on anarchy.

These individuals are often unfriendly or worse, attempting to destroy that which they cannot understand.

DISCIPLE OF THE WORD LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (history) can research disciples of the word to learn more about them.

Characters who worship Zuoken receive a +5 circumstance bonus on these checks.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some monks believe that only through avoiding conflict can they understand the nature of reality.

DC 15: The disciples of the word are masters of movement, physically melding both form and idea.

DC 20: Disciples are not so much opposed to conflict as they are committed to perfecting their physical forms.

By developing themselves, they avoid injury.

DC 30: The Order of the Word was founded by Akahuza, a mystic and monk who unlocked the truth about himself through Truespeech.

DISCIPLES OF THE WORD IN THE GAME

Disciples of the word can be featured in any campaign.

A mysterious mountain school might be an institution run by the Order of the Word.

If you use psionics, they could be an outgrowth of the fist of Zuoken prestige class.

Most disciples, however, will have an appeal to players.

The class represents an excellent avenue for introducing truenamer magic into an ongoing campaign by blending the monk with the truenamer class.

The disciple of the word prestige class appeals to players who like martial arts and the mysticism often associated with them.

While providing interesting combat abilities, this class also offers a means to ground such characters into a campaign and let them develop their abilities through a compelling spiritual journey of self-discovery.

ADAPTATION

The disciples need not be a group committed to improving themselves.

Instead, they could be a group that advances their physical combat techniques to breed a powerful army of assassins bent on conquering the world.

In this case, you will want to make the alignment prerequisite lawful evil.

Also, you will want to divorce this class from Zuoken altogether and replace him with a suitably sinister deity such as Ilsensine of the mind flayers or even Hextor, the god of tyranny.

Alternatively, the disciples could become a force for good that emphasizes how striving to perfect the self allows a better understanding of the world, which ultimately distances an individual from evil.

In such a case, Heironeous is a great substitute deity.

TABLE 3-7: THE DISCIPLE OF THE WORD HIT DIE: D8

NEW MARTIAL ART: WORD GIVEN FORM MASTERY

First introduced in Oriental Adventures, martial arts styles are added benefits gained when a character takes a particular assortment of feats. A character who masters the feats within a style gains a mastery ability related to the techniques of that style. Word Given Form emphasizes the harmony of the disciple's truename. By repeating his truename in combat, he can blur his form against a particular target.

WORD GIVEN FORM

You have mastered the martial arts style of "Word Given Form."

Prerequisites: Truespeak 12 ranks, Tumble 12 ranks, Combat Expertise, Dodge, Improved Unarmed Strike, Mobility, Spring Attack.

Benefit: When using the Dodge feat against an opponent, in addition to the +1 dodge bonus to AC, you also gain total concealment (50% miss chance) from that opponent as your form blurs and shifts.

FIENDBINDER

"Forgive the foul language, but my babau demon prefers eviscerations to diplomacy."

—Nivir the fiendbinder

A fiendbinder seeks to unlock the truenames of demons, devils, and other vile fiends, and use that knowledge to bind them to service.

The actual binding rituals can be quite complex, so a fiendbinder must also be a practiced student of the summoning arts.

However, even the most gifted fiendbinder plays a dangerous game, for though she can enslave the wicked and compel fiends to act in accordance with her wishes, fiends are notoriously willful, disagreeable, and at times outright disobedient.

A fiendbinder relies on her truespeaking ability to control her fiendish thrall, all the while knowing that it craves only its freedom and the fiendbinder's blood.

BECOMING A FIENDBINDER

Most fiendbinders are arcane spellcasters.

However, a few unscrupulous clerics dedicate themselves to learning the complex rituals and truenames needed to bind terrible fiends to service.

Even though binding a fiend might be viewed as punishment or torment (certainly that's what the fiend thinks), good-aligned characters can't bring themselves to become fiendbinders and endorse what amounts to slavery.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nongood

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 10 ranks, Speak Language (Abyssal), Speak Language (Infernal), Truespeak 10 ranks

Spells: Ability to cast summon monster IV

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft, Truespeak.

CLASS FEATURES

You can research and learn the truenames of fiends, as well as complex rituals needed to foist your will upon them.

As you gain more power and confidence as a fiendbinder, you learn to call forth fiends that are more inclined to heed your commands and, eventually, you will earn their respect. Spellcasting: At each level except 1st, 5th, and 9th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a fiendbinder, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Bind Fiend (Su): You master the complex rituals needed to bind a fiend whose truename you know.

You must pay an amount in gold to cover the cost of the ritual (see Table 3-9), and the ritual takes 8 uninterrupted hours to perform.

TABLE 3-9: BOUND FIENDS

Fiend	Available at Class Level	Binding Cost	Truespeak DC
Babau demon	1st	2,700 gp	27
Succubus demon	2nd	3,600 gp	29
Hellcat devil	3rd	4,900 gp	29
Vrock demon	4th	6,600 gp	33
Cauchemar nightmare	5th	8,800 gp	37
Retriever demon	6th	11,000 gp	37
Hezrou demon	7th	15,000 gp	37
Barbed devil	8th	20,000 gp	37
Ice devil	9th	26,000 gp	41
Marilith demon	10th	34,000 gp	49

At the conclusion of the ritual, the fiend appears. The fiend is bound against its will and isn't happy about the service.

However, it cannot attack you, even if you attack it.

Giving it a command is a standard action that provokes attacks of opportunity, for doing so requires that you correctly utter the fiend's truename.

You must make a Truespeak check with a specified DC (see Table 3-9).

If the check succeeds, the fiend is compelled to do as you command; if the check fails, the fiend gleefully resists (and might even mock you).

A bound fiend performs only one of the commands outlined in Table 3-10 at one time.

TABLE 3-10: TRUENAME COMMANDS

Attack a specific foe
Defend me (the fiend attacks the first creature to attack you)
Deliver a message or package and return
Scout and report back
Serve as a steed for 1 hour (cauchemar nightmare only)
Stand watch for 8 hours and raise alarm if needed
Undertake repetitive labor for 1 hour
Use a skill on your behalf
Use a spell-like ability on your behalf

Issuing a new command (including ordering a bound fiend to attack a different foe) requires another standard action and another Truespeak check.

You can give a bound fiend commands other than those found on Table 3-10, but these sample commands will cover most circumstances (and the DM always has the power to veto a potential command).

Unless it is commanded to do otherwise, a bound fiend must remain within 10 feet of you at all times.

If a bound fiend moves more than 1 mile from you, it gets an immediate Will save (DC 10 + your fiendbinder level + your Cha modifier) to break the bond.

A bound fiend can usually only attain this distance from its master due to a careless command.

If it is freed in this manner, it is immediately sent back to the place whence it came.

You can free a bound fiend yourself as a free action.

Although a newly freed fiend might cry vengeance for the "punishment" you have inflicted upon it, few fiends act on their threats for fear of being bound again.

Only by repeatedly binding the same fiend do you run the risk of incurring its wrath once freed (DM's discretion).

You can bind multiple fiends if you have the gold and time to do so.

However, you cannot issue the same command to multiple bound fiends.

For example, if you bind two vrock demons and want them to attack the same foe, commanding them to attack requires two standard actions (one per vrock).

A bound fiend cannot use its summoning ability.

Unlike summoned creatures, bound fiends are truly dead when slain.

If you are killed, any fiend that was bound to you prior to your death stays with your remains for 24 hours.

It does not guard whatever is left of your body; it merely remains nearby, tracking the passing time intently to determine if it will be set free.

If you are returned to life during that period through a raise dead spell or similar effect, the fiend remains bound to your service with no additional cost to you, provided you are still of a sufficient level to retain the fiend's service.

If you lose a level as a result of a return to life, and your new level is too low for you to have summoned your servant (see Table 3-9 to determine what level you need to be to bind a particular fiend servant), your servant is immediately freed from service.

Otherwise, if 24 hours pass and you remain dead, the fiend is released from service and sent back to the place whence it came—with your soul in tow—cackling maniacally.

At that point, only a true resurrection spell can return you to life, but if you are brought back, your fiend comes back with you, still bound to your service and with no additional cost to you.

Call Forth Fiend (Sp): Upon reaching 3rd level, you gain the service of a particularly loyal fiend.

By uttering its truename, you can call it forth and command it to serve you.

Regardless of its alignment, the fiend respects your power and regards you as a powerful ally.

Once per day, as a standard action, you can magically call forth this fiend from the hateful realm where it resides.

The fiend can be any of the ones mentioned on Table 3-9 (above).

Calling forth the fiend requires a successful Truespeak check (DC 15 + [2 × fiend's CR]), and you must choose the type of fiend you intend to call before you make the check.

If the check succeeds, the fiend immediately appears adjacent to you and remains for 1 round per fiendbinder level; it can be dismissed at any time with a free action.

The fiend is the same creature each time it is called, though you can release a particular fiend from service.

Each time the fiend is called, it appears in full health, regardless of any damage it might have taken previously.

Any equipment the fiend acquires gets left behind when it returns to its realm.

Calling a fiend is a conjuration (calling) effect.

If the fiend dies, it immediately disappears, leaving behind any equipment it did not bring with it from its native realm.

You cannot call forth another fiend using this ability for thirty days or until you gain another fiendbinder level, whichever comes first, even if the fiend is somehow returned from the dead.

During this thirty-day period, you take a -2 penalty on Truespeak checks.

Bind Tormented Soul (Su): The Lower Planes house countless tormented souls, for they are the primordial soup from which myriad fiends are born.

At 5th level, once per day you can utter the truename of a tormented soul and bind its essence within yourself. Your eyes turn dead black, your complexion pales, and black veins form just under your skin until the tormented soul is released or destroyed.

The tormented soul has no alignment or awareness, per se, and cannot be held at bay using magic circle spells and similar effects.

Binding a tormented soul is a swift action that provokes attacks of opportunity and requires a DC 30 Truespeak check.

If the check succeeds, you harness its suffering and become inured to pain.

You can continue to act normally even when disabled (reduced to 0 hit points) or dying (reduced to -1 to -9 hit points).

Furthermore, you do not die if you are reduced to -10 hit points or lower.

Instead, while you are in this condition, you can take a single move action or standard action each turn (but not both, nor can you take full-round actions); although you can take a move action without further injuring yourself, performing any standard action (or any other action the DM deems as strenuous, including some free actions) deals 1 point of damage to you after the act is completed.

The tormented soul is unstable and destroyed in short order.

You can bind it for only 3 rounds.

Once the tormented soul is gone, you immediately incur the normal effects for being at 0 hit points or negative hit points (if your hit point total when the soul departs is at 0 or below).

In addition, assuming you survive the ordeal, you are fatigued for 1 hour (if you are already fatigued, you are exhausted instead).

You can voluntarily release a bound tormented soul as a free action but still endure the effects noted above.

Gift of the Archfiend (Su): Beginning at 9th level, once per day you can demand the attention of a powerful demon prince of the Abyss or infernal archduke of the Nine Hells and, by uttering its truename, convince the archfiend to invest you with a fragment of its might.

The archfiend does not appear before you, but you become suffused with a gift of Abyssal or infernal power.

Such a gift is usually an archfiend's way of attempting to win your fealty or obedience and should never be misconstrued as a sign of trust or obligation.

You must have spent at least one week researching the personal truename of a potential demon prince or archduke of hell, and 1,000 gp (for each name learned).

Each use of this ability lasts for 1 minute per class level.

Provided you have learned a truename for at least one archduke and one demon prince, you can gain either benefit of this ability—you choose whenever you activate it.

Securing the archfiend's gift is a standard action and requires a DC 35 Truespeak check.

If the check succeeds, you gain one of the following benefits from your fiendish benefactor: Baatezu Traits: If your gift comes from an infernal archduke of the Nine Hells, you gain damage reduction 5/good and silver, darkvision out to 60 feet, immunity to fire and poison, and resistance to acid 10 and cold 10.

In addition, you can see perfectly in darkness of any kind (even that created by the deeper darkness spell).

Tanar'ri Traits: If your gift comes from a demon prince of the Abyss, you gain damage reduction 5/cold iron and good, darkvision out to 60 feet, immunity to electricity and poison, and resistance to acid 10, cold 10, and fire 10.

Double Command (Ex): At 9th level, you have become more adept at commanding the fiend in your service.

You can attempt to give it two commands to be performed in sequence with a single Truespeak check, but doing so increases the Truespeak check DC by 5.

If you have bound multiple fiends, you can now also give up to two fiends a single command (each fiend can be given the same or a different command) as a single standard action.

Archfiend's Favor (Su): At 10th level, you have attained a tremendous amount of knowledge regarding how to deal with fiends.

You gain a bonus on Charisma-based skill checks dealing with demons and devils equal to 1/2 your class level (or +5 at 10th level).

Summon Fiends (Sp): Once per day, at 10th level, you can summon either a baatezu legion (1d6 bone devils or 1d4 barbed devils) or tanar'ri horde (1d6 vrocks or 1d4 hezrous) as a full-round action.

The fiendish legion or horde appears at the beginning of your next turn.

This ability is the equivalent of a 9th-level spell (caster level equals your character level).

PLAYING A FIENDBINDER

You enslave fiends and call upon the power of evil to accomplish your goals.

For these reasons, other spellcasters both admire and fear you.

They see you barking orders to the most vile creatures the universe can imagine, and they wonder whether you are the corrupt vassal of some evil archfiend, a fearless conjurer of words with the armies of the Lower Planes at your beck and call, or simply a fool.

You do not fear that which you can control, and regardless of what you think of fiends personally, they certainly have their uses.

But you are no fool: Some fiends simply cannot be controlled, and you are wise to let them be.

The parochial and the uninitiated view you as a threat because of your willingness to truck with fiends, never mind your ability to command them.

You often need to conceal your true nature, lest fearful locals decapitate you and reduce your body to ashes for your perceived allegiance to "the dark powers".

Dark powers, indeed!

As a fiendbinder, you might belong to any one of a number of secret cabals that summon and bind fiends, not the least among them the Fifth Candle.

Members of the Fifth Candle gather in hidden redoubts to practice their conjuration rituals.

The cabal takes its name from the pentagrams that its members use during these rituals and the candles placed on the corners of these symbols.

Fiendbinders are few in number, and they exercise a great deal of personal freedom.

They exchange rituals like recipes, but they are less inclined to share new truenames that they have discovered—they engage in some "name trading", but the names they're willing to share usually belong to the most obnoxious or disgusting fiends.

The fiend you bind becomes your most stalwart companion, for it cannot betray you despite its inherent belligerence.

It won't break free of your hold, but to control it you must learn to speak its truename properly.

Each new command requires subtle permutations and specific inflections.

You can expect the fiend to laugh in your face when you fail and curse you with horrible prognostications of your eventual doom when you succeed—though it serves you as a companion, it is not and never will be your friend.

Demons are particularly temperamental and frequently entertain thoughts of ripping off your face and feasting on your entrails.

These tirades, though vulgar and appalling, are usually empty threats.

Once a bound demon is released, it quickly becomes distracted by all the other things it hates and seldom rears its ugly head again.

Sure, you can try to bind the same demon again, but why take a chance?

After all, the Abyss holds an infinite number of them.

Devils, by contrast, are far more subtle and condescending. They will remind you how dangerous binding can be, tell you stories about binding rituals that went horribly awry, and slyly convince you to give them specific orders that serve some secret, personal agenda.

When you fail to speak their truenames perfectly, they belittle and mock you.

They compare you unfavorably to other, more successful fiendbinders.

Some devils don't mind being bound more than once if they think they can somehow corrupt you in the process. However, be careful: They are consummate liars and can hold a grudge for a long time.

Beyond demons and devils, fiends are a truly mixed bag, but they do share some common traits: They are universally evil and reprehensible.

If you're evil yourself, you and your fiendish thrall might enjoy exploring some new depths of depravity together. Otherwise, you should exercise caution when trading words with bound fiends.

In fact, you're probably better off keeping the relationship as simple as possible.

Give them an inch, and they will feast on your soul.

COMBAT

Some bound fiends have spell-like abilities that might benefit you or other members of the adventuring party, such as an ice devil's fly ability or a marilith's align weapon ability.

Try to use these before entering the field of battle.

Fiendbinders, like sorcerers and wizards, prefer to do their damage from afar.

That means sending your fiendish minions into battle while you take cover, position yourself within easy reach of the party cleric, and bark commands.

If your bound fiend dies, you need to spend gold to replace it, so be ready to command it to teleport to the party cleric if it's in imminent danger of dying.

Some of your higher-level abilities, such as bind tormented soul and gift of the archfiend, greatly improve your chances of survival in the heat of battle, perhaps giving you the courage to wade into the fray and deliver some touch attacks or use other close-range spells or abilities.

Canny foes will try to take you out of the fight early, knowing that your bound fiend will likely cease to participate in the battle as soon as you die.

Situations when you become the focus of your enemies' wrath are when your bind tormented soul ability truly comes in handy.

ADVANCEMENT

To become a fiendbinder, you need to master the summon monster IV spell and relinquish any misgivings you might have about enslaving fiends to do your bidding.

Secret organizations such as the Fifth Candle have modest libraries that can make researching truenames and rituals easier, but most fiendbinder cabals are too small (1d4+2 members) to warrant a structured hierarchy.

You won't find many trustworthy mentors to guide you, and most fiendbinders explore their craft in relative isolation.

You will want to take multiple levels in this class to gain more powerful fiend servants, as well as draw power from archfiends whose truenames you can speak with confidence.

You will also want to improve your Truespeak skill as much as possible.

The Truename Training feat and Skill Focus (Truespeak) are invaluable for this purpose.

Obscure Personal Truename can also be handy if you repeatedly summon a particular fiend that swears revenge against you.

RESOURCES

Cabals such as the Fifth Candle generally leave fiendbinders to pursue their own goals without providing significant assistance.

Such organizations might sponsor expeditions to dungeons and ruins formerly overrun with demon or devil worshipers in the hopes of uncovering fragments of ancient lore, codices of binding rituals, or truenames lost to the ages.

If you can convince members of a cabal that such a dungeon or ruin is worth exploring, they might cover part of the cost of your latest binding ritual or teach you the truename of a fairly compliant fiend.

They might also let you use their modest library to research truenames on your own.

Should you incur the wrath of a powerful fiend, you probably won't get much support or sympathy from your fellow cabal members.

Fiendbinders must understand the nature of their power and learn to deal with the consequences on their own.

FIENDBINDERS IN THE WORLD

"Those who command fiends are fiends."

—Sir Taron Jellikor, Knight of the Sacred Sword

Not all fiendbinders are evil, but they must learn to negotiate with evil in a way that few good-aligned characters can abide or truly understand.

A fiendbinder and her enslaved fiend might not be welcome additions to every party of adventurers, but a group composed of neutral characters might learn to value a fiend's combat abilities.

DAILY LIFE

You keep strange company, and consequently you should expect to be greeted with suspicion, resentment, or panic wherever you go—particularly if you have a retriever demon dogging your heels. If you live in a civilized area, you must find clever ways to hide or disguise your boon companion so that you can conduct your daily affairs with few unwanted distractions, brutal stonings, or merciless eviscerations. You would be wise to seek good company—perhaps join a small group of like-minded adventurers willing to entertain your predilection for truenames and complex rituals. Your typical day isn't much different from what it was before you became a fiendbinder, except that you must periodically devote 8 hours to performing a binding ritual. Your bound fiend does not require food, drink, or sleep, but it stays in fairly close proximity to you most of the time and demands most of your attention throughout the day. Even the relatively quiet ones have their disgusting habits—incessant drooling, gnashing of teeth, or slurping, for example. As a fiendbinder, you must learn to live with the worst of them.

NOTABLES

Dzaktran the Fiendslayer is a recent “poster boy” for evil fiendbinders. He aspires to win the favor of Grazz't and has dedicated his life to gathering lost relics for the demon prince. Dzaktran has been seen in the company of various fiends over the past several months—a babau, a succubus, and most recently a hellcat—and the Church of St. Cuthbert has placed a 5,000 gp bounty on the fiendbinder's head. The bounty comes as a surprise to many, but Dzaktran recently attacked a temple of St. Cuthbert in a brazen attempt to steal an evil relic locked away in its vaults. The attack failed, but the clerics of St. Cuthbert aren't eager to face him or his demonic minions again soon. On the other hand, Argath Snowbeard is a dwarf fiendbinder whose intentions seem somewhat more benign. Argath and his bound ice devil recently “inherited” a stone tower just outside the small mining town of Silverlode. The tower's previous denizen—a reclusive and cantankerous wizard known only as Firestar—slipped and fell on the ice devil's spear (or so Argath claims). For reasons he doesn't care to explain, Argath has taken to slaughtering evil monsters in the nearby hills and keeping the townsfolk safe from harm. The locals ensure that the dwarf remains well fed and don't ask too many questions, and Argath does his utmost to keep the ice devil out of sight.

ORGANIZATION

With over a dozen members, the Fifth Candle represents an atypically large cabal of fiendbinders. Its members are scattered across the realm, and rarely will you see more than five in any given place at the same time. Most of them are practiced truenamers with 1d6 levels of fiendbinder; one or two might have started their adventuring careers as clerics or wizards before gravitating toward the study of truenames. Members can leave the Fifth Candle at any time, although few are inclined to. The cabal welcomes members of any alignment (with the caveat that good characters cannot be fiendbinders), and members are required to endure each other's worst habits. Members of the Fifth Candle seldom use their own real names.

Currently, the most powerful member of the Fifth Candle is a gaunt fellow with strawlike hair known as Callow (LE male human conjurer 7/fiendbinder 6). Callow's real name is Avastor Kastiranti. Callow collects books about the Nine Hells and fancies himself a scion of Asmodeus, but he mostly keeps to himself.

He also publishes a monthly paper called The Fifth Candle, which he distributes to other cabal members as well as a few select wizards with whom he conducts business. The paper contains rambling dissertations on the politics of the Nine Hells and illuminating facts about its various archdukes and vassals.

No member of the Fifth Candle holds sway over any other, but Callow likes to tyrannically govern meetings whenever they occur.

His greatest rival is a brusque woman with raven-black hair known as Saragwah (NE female human wizard 7/truenamer 3/fiendbinder 3).

For a while, Saragwah (real name Morgan Taravello) enjoyed a particularly friendly relationship with a succubus companion named Lurya, but they recently had a falling out.

Now she parades around with a hellcat that likes to hide in the light.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people share a dim view of fiendbinders.

If you travel in the company of fiends, you can expect to meet people with unfriendly attitudes.

Most folk aren't likely to threaten you with violence while your ice devil or marilith stands nearby, but the city watch might demand that you leave the city at once and never return.

If you're not careful, you might find yourself looking down the greatsword of a righteous paladin who has no patience for your craft.

In some ways, your greatest enemies are the unwilling fiends you bind to service.

They hate and fear you, and if you're not careful, they might share information with your enemies or do things that just plain annoy you.

(“See that scrawny man in the black robe hiding behind the cleric over there?”)

He commanded me to attack you, but if you kill him quickly, I'll think twice about feasting on your entrails”). Bound fiends have an unfriendly or hostile attitude toward you initially, but they can be swayed; however, Diplomacy checks made to improve their attitude are made with a –5 penalty, and a bound fiend that becomes indifferent, friendly, or helpful might not stay that way for long.

FIENDBINDER LORE

Characters with ranks Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (local), or Knowledge (the planes), or who have the bardic knowledge ability, can research fiendbinders to learn more about them.

When a character makes a check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Fiendbinders study the truenames of fiends and use that knowledge to bind them to service.

The binding rituals can be quite expensive, depending on the fiend summoned.

DC 15: A bound fiend might serve a fiendbinder for years, and only the fiendbinder can release it from service.

Killing the fiendbinder can also release the fiend from service.

DC 20: By invoking the truename of a demon prince or archduke, a truly powerful fiendbinder can gain some of that archfiend's power.

DC 30: The largest cabal of fiendbinders is known as the Fifth Candle.

Its members, though scattered and relatively few in number, command many powerful fiends.

Locating a fiendbinder cabal requires a DC 40 Gather Information check.

Success leads to a known member of the cabal or the cabal's secret gathering place (DM's discretion).

FIENDBINDERS IN THE GAME

Incorporating fiendbinders into your campaign should be effortless.

Fiendbinders harness evil for their own ends, 'tis true, but their reasons for binding fiends are not necessarily malevolent.

Most bound fiends view forced servitude as a form of torment or punishment, and some good-aligned characters can live with that, particularly once the fiendbinder reassures them that the fiend cannot break free.

A player character fiendbinder isn't much different from a cleric with a planar ally.

Yes, fiends make unpleasant traveling companions, what with their endless cursing, chiding, and complaining.

However, with fiend in tow, a fiendbinder can chase the party's various altruistic or selfish goals and sic the fiend on evil creatures that stand in their way.

The chaotic good wizard who whined about the succubus coming on to him might get over it after she charms a few monsters and plants a few wet kisses on a villain standing in the party's way.

ADAPTATION

The DM should feel free to drop the "nongood" alignment requirement of the prestige class if it suits her campaign, particularly if she intends to create a cabal of good-aligned fiendbinders that deliberately enslaves fiends and uses them to fight other evils of the world.

A DM might add more fiends to Table 3–9.

In general, a character can bind any fiend with a CR equal to his character level minus 2.

For example, a 7th-level truenamer/1st-level fiendbinder can bind any fiend of CR 6 or less.

However, some fiends that fit this basic prerequisite should not be included without careful consideration.

Huge fiends and fiends with situational abilities (such as the chain devil, with its dancing chains ability) can make the bind fiend ability seem unbalanced, in which case the DM might want to change the formula (character level minus 3) or make a fiend easier or more difficult to control (by increasing or decreasing the DC for the Truespeak checks by 2).

TABLE 3–8: THE FIENDBINDER HIT DIE: D6

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spellcasting
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	Bind fiend	—
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	—	+1 level of existing spellcasting class

ROLEPLAYING A FIEND

As a DM, you can view this prestige class as a chance to hone your acting skills behind the screen when a character wants to take levels as a fiendbinder. Each bound fiend should have its own set of personality quirks and oddities of behavior, but they all loathe the situation they find themselves in. Here are some roleplaying behaviors a fiend can exhibit from time to time. As with any quirk, such behavior can lose its charm if overdone, but feel free to have some fun with your player's choice.

- Moan about the circumstances that led to the fiend's truename being recorded by a mortal in the first place.
- Comment on any party member's mistakes or misfortunes. Keep a running list of places where a PC might have chosen a less optimal course of action, and remind that character about his choice at prime moments. The fiend is sure to pay special attention to its master's foibles.

- Mock the fiend's master whenever he fails his Truespeak check to command the fiend.
- When the fiend's master is wounded, make remarks such as, "That looked like it hurt, master" and other patronizing comments.
- Have the fiend describe in gory detail the horror that awaits the master when he dies, the fiend is finally freed, and the master's soul is sucked back to the Abyss or Baator.
- Complain about any traveling arrangements or discomforts, however minor.
- Cackle with glee whenever the fiend destroys any creature (it is a fiend, after all).
- If a demon, the fiend should exult in slaying devils, and vice versa.

KNIGHT OF THE SACRED SEAL

"I serve Paimon, a prince among men who was martyred for love. Can you claim your cause to be so righteous?"

—Gaerius, Paimon-Bound Knight of the Sacred Seal
A knight of the sacred seal is never alone because she has formed a true partnership with a single vestige.

Her Oath requires her to champion and protect her patron vestige, to take its seal as her symbol, and to advance its goals in the world.

As her relationship with her patron vestige deepens, a knight of the sacred seal taps a well of abilities unavailable to other binders, becoming more than she once was. Though she can bind other vestiges, she chooses not to because the connection she shares with her companion offers strange new powers.

BECOMING A KNIGHT OF THE SACRED SEAL

The binder class is the easiest path into the knight of the sacred seal prestige class, since binders have Knowledge (the planes) as a class skill plus the required soul binding class feature.

Multiclass binders, especially those with levels in paladin or bard, also make good knights of the seal, though such combinations limit the character's options for binding powerful vestiges.

Charisma (for contacting vestiges), Strength (for melee combat), and Constitution (for hit points) are key abilities for a knight of the sacred seal.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonchaotic

Base Attack Bonus: +4

Skills: Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), or Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks

Feat: Weapon Focus (any weapon)

Special: Soul binding class feature

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Ride, Sense Motive.

Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

As a knight of the sacred seal, you gain an improved rapport with your patron vestige.

This deeper tie allows you to channel the vestige's abilities to boost your own combat prowess.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain proficiency with all simple and martial weapons, and with all armor and shields (except tower shields).

Soul Binding: At each knight of the sacred seal level, your soul binding ability improves as if you had also gained a level in the binder class.

Thus, your knight of the sacred seal levels and binder levels stack for the purpose of determining your bonus on binding checks, the effectiveness of your vestige-granted abilities, your ability to bind higher-level vestiges, and the number of vestiges you can bind.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a binder would have gained.

Aligned Strike (Ex): Your natural weapons as well as any weapons you wield are treated as aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

The alignment of your weapons matches your own to as great a degree as possible.

Thus, if you're lawful good, your weapons strike as both lawful-aligned and good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction, but if you're neutral good, strike only as good-aligned.

If you are neutral, your weapon strikes as one alignment component of your choice: chaotic, evil, good, or lawful.

You must make this choice upon entering the prestige class and cannot thereafter change it.

Patron Vestige (Su): When you become a knight of the sacred seal, you select any one vestige that you have previously bound as your patron.

You develop a stronger than normal relationship with this vestige that grants you several benefits as you advance in this prestige class.

If you expel your patron vestige by means of the Expel Vestige feat or do not renew your pact with it on any given day, you lose access to all supernatural class features gained from this prestige class until such time as you contact that vestige again.

You can bind other vestiges in the interim, as normal for the binder class, but you gain no additional benefits from those pacts.

You are never at risk of making a poor pact with your patron vestige.

Vestige's Protection (Su): When you attain 2nd level, your relationship with your patron vestige deepens, prompting it to take steps to ensure your protection.

As a swift action, you can acquire an insight bonus to your Armor Class equal to your Charisma bonus (minimum 1).

The same bonus also applies on your Reflex saves.

Both of these benefits last for 1 round.

Once you use this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds.

Vestige's Protection Aura (Su): When you attain 3rd level, your patron vestige extends its protection to all creatures adjacent to you whom you designate as friends.

Whenever you activate your vestige's protection class feature, those benefits apply to all designated allies adjacent to you.

Vestige's Power (Su): At 4th level, you can draw upon the power of your patron vestige to augment your fighting abilities as a swift action.

You gain a +2 bonus to Strength, a +2 bonus to Constitution, a +10-foot bonus to your base land speed, and a +4 bonus on Will saves for 1 round.

Once you have used this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds.

Apotheosis (Su): At 5th level, your type changes to outsider, and you gain the native subtype (see the perfect self monk class feature on page 42 of the Player's Handbook).

You also gain damage reduction 10/magic.

Vestige's Surge (Su): At 5th level, once per day, when you activate one of your patron vestige's powers, or your vestige's protection or vestige's power class feature, you can choose to activate that ability again immediately rather than waiting the usual 5 rounds.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a knight of the sacred seal can continue advancing as a paladin.

PLAYING A KNIGHT OF THE SACRED SEAL

You bear several important responsibilities—to protect your patron vestige, to treat it as you would have others treat you, and to protect others like yourself.

Dedicated to all servants of the vestiges, you make it your business to face down those who persecute your kind.

A person in your position must expect treachery at every turn, so be on the lookout for suspicious individuals who ask too many questions about your charge.

One lapse, and not only is your life on the line, but so are the lives of all those who share your devotion to the vestiges.

As a knight of the sacred seal, you rarely work alone. Upon choosing your patron, you have the opportunity to join a group called a unit, wherein each knight binds the same vestige as you do.

The unit's shared appreciation for this vestige allows its members to buttress their resolve in the face of a world hostile to their beliefs.

Most units also work with other binders, acting as guardians for the users of pact magic.

Each unit is led by a commander, who is always the highest-level knight of the sacred seal in the group. Her word is law, and the members of her unit serve her without question.

The hierarchy within the unit is rigid, reflecting the depth of understanding and friendship between an individual knight and her patron.

If the group grows too large, it breaks into two separate units, each with its own commander.

COMBAT

Your patron vestige helps you in combat.

The versatility that its aid provides allows you to modify your tactics depending on the opponents you face.

In general, you prefer a straight-up fight rather than a match based on subterfuge.

You prefer to press forward into the thick of enemies, swinging your weapon with a verve inspired by your patron vestige.

Make sure you select effective combat feats, such as Spring Attack, Improved Critical, and Power Attack, to make the most of your abilities.

In addition to your combat prowess, the supernatural abilities bestowed upon you by your vestige provide you with a good mix of combat options.

Your tactics should emphasize the specific powers to which you normally have access.

As you attain higher levels in the prestige class, your patron vestige begins to take an active role in your defense.

The bonus it grants to Armor Class and on Reflex saves can often save your life.

Eventually, the vestige also extends these benefits to your allies, making you a central figure in any fight.

When you gain the vestige's power ability, you can suddenly augment your combat prowess in much the same way as the barbarian can with his rage ability.

The speed bonus lets you take better advantage of flanking opportunities, slip past your enemies, and destroy thinly protected spellcasters.

Furthermore, the boost to your Constitution temporarily increases your hit points, thereby improving your staying power in combat.

ADVANCEMENT

Units remain watchful for kindred souls who display an affinity for a particular vestige and an inclination toward combat.

They offer membership only to those they feel would make effective defenders of their patrons.

Your first level in this prestige class is an indication that your chosen vestige and those who already serve it approve of you.

As a new knight of the sacred seal, you must do your part to stand watch over the enclave or safe house of your unit and patrol its borders with other new recruits.

Yours is a martial responsibility, and those associated with you depend on your skill at arms and your relationship with the group's vestige for defense.

During your downtime, you are expected to continue developing a rapport with your patron.

In time, the commander might send you on recruiting missions to track down independent binders with outlooks similar to your own.

Once you reach that point, you have time to pursue your own interests and adventures in addition to your regular duties.

Your Sense Motive skill is vital for detecting suspicious individuals and would-be spies, so keep improving it as you attain higher levels.

Like other martial characters, you should spend your gold primarily to improve your weapons and armor, though potions and oils are always useful.

Don't neglect combat feats that can make you a powerful combatant when used with your vestige's surge ability.

RESOURCES

Membership in a unit offers several benefits, but perhaps the most important is that you always have official help available when undertaking missions for the commander. Fellow knights in the same unit have starting attitudes of helpful so they pitch in whenever they can, and all are trained and capable warriors.

In addition, all knights of the sacred seal who belong to the same unit have access to its equipment and cash reserves.

The commander makes loans from the unit's treasury to ensure her unit's success in protecting its members' interests and the interests of those they protect.

But while the knights have access to a reasonable amount of funding, their constant movement is an expense in itself, so even common items are not always available.

KNIGHTS OF THE SACRED SEAL IN THE WORLD

"Few warriors are as honorable as these knights. It's a shame that we must destroy them."

—Sir Michael Ambrose, witch slayer

PCs who get involved with pact magic in any form are sure to run into a knight of the sacred seal eventually.

The typical binder safe house employs at least one or two of these warriors, and entire units sometimes hire out as mercenaries, concealing their abilities from their employers.

Such an incognito unit might be gathering intelligence about an enemy's movements or simply fighting for a cause in which its members believe.

In general, however, their association with other users of pact magic makes knights of the sacred seal good resources for locating reclusive binders.

DAILY LIFE

Each unit develops a code of conduct based on the tenets important to its patron vestige.

Different units—even those serving the same vestige—might develop markedly different codes, but one tenet remains the same in any unit: Members must loyally protect binders and serve the cause of pact magic honorably.

A knight of the sacred seal is a trustee of her patron vestige. Senior members of the unit serve as teachers for the junior ones, inviting them to embark on the journey to a closer relationship with the patron vestige.

Many also teach the arts of war, developing their compatriots' skills with weaponry, armor, and tactics, though such exercises are always secondary to perfecting their understanding of a vestige.

When not serving as instructors, knights protect their safe houses, libraries, or other enclaves, as well as those of other pact magic users.

As the face of the unit, the commander serves as an envoy, diplomat, recruiter, and politician.

She seeks out groups of binders and pledges the service of the unit to their enclaves.

In addition, she ensures that the unit has the proper foodstuffs, equipment, and other resources to survive.

When a mission arises, the commander determines who goes, and when the unit must leave a safe house, she decides who stays behind to ensure that the rest can escape.

NOTABLES

In the long and storied history of the knights of the sacred seal, no individual shines as brightly as Morgunn, or Brave Warrior, in the tongue of dwarves.

For many years, Morgunn hid her abilities and the vestige that she had bound herself to because she knew that few others would understand her dedication.

For many years, she lived alone in a small village of gnomes and dwarves in the Stark Mounds—a range of old mountains that are now little more than hills.

Then the giants came.

Boiling out of the higher peaks, these vicious monsters descended the slopes, bent on conquest and destruction.

As they approached, ropes of drool swinging in time with their tree-trunk clubs, Morgunn revealed herself for what she was.

Throwing off her disguise, she let loose a war cry augmented by the force of her vestige and charged the lead giant in an act of ultimate courage.

The fleeing village warriors rallied at the sight and launched themselves against their attackers.

Though the giants destroyed the village and slew all its inhabitants, the legend of Morgunn the Possessed still rings in those old hills, and in the hearts and minds of those who followed in her footsteps.

ORGANIZATION

A unit generally consists of five to twenty members.

The highest-level knight of the sacred seal in the group assumes the role of commander.

Many units serve cells of binders as guardians, soldiers, and sentries to protect and nurture the use of pact magic.

Unprotected binders might also recruit units or solitary knights of the sacred seal by monitoring witch slayer movements.

But whether binders and knights find one another through word of mouth, sympathizers, or simply luck, they regularly join forces against larger threats.

Within a unit, the commander has absolute authority.

Beneath her are one to three advisors, called sergeants, each of whom oversees three to five knights.

Promotion is based on merit—the better a knight's performance, the higher she climbs in status.

Most units have high attrition rates, so opportunities for advancement always exist for junior members who display ambition and dedication.

Since all members of a given unit bind the same vestige, internal conflict is rare, even between characters of differing alignments.

A knight of the sacred seal follows the code of her unit and adheres to its structure, regardless of her moral or ethical outlook.

Thus, a neutral evil knight might serve Agares alongside a lawful good knight in the same unit.

Both protect binders and adhere to the ideals of truth and loyalty that they believe Agares represents, though they differ in their means to that end.

Knights belonging to different units might share a friendly rivalry, often competing with one another to prove their respective vestiges better.

However, not all knights of the sacred seal share this sense of camaraderie.

In fact, some units viciously oppose one another due to longstanding enmity between their vestiges—for example, the hatred between Karsus and Amon puts their units irrevocably at odds.

Such opposing knights could find themselves drawn into bloody battles on behalf of their patrons.

True wars between units are rare, however, because knights of the sacred seal quickly learn to stay away from those who champion opposing vestiges.

NPC REACTIONS

Binders are generally friendly toward knights of the sacred seal, since the two groups share a common interest.

Toward knights who serve as their guardians, their attitudes improve to helpful.

However, the two groups could have disparate views and morals that ultimately lead to conflict.

In such cases, the knights and binders typically part rather than fight one another.

The foes of pact magic are many, and both groups prefer not to waste lives and resources with infighting.

Meetings between knights of the sacred seal and anima mages are usually tense at best, considering the relationship between the knight and her bound vestige.

Anima mages believe the hatred that the knights bear them is misguided, but they understand its source, so they tend to avoid knights of the sacred seal at all costs.

When forced to interact with their nemeses, the anima mages are unfriendly.

Clerics, paladins, and other characters opposed to pact magic see knights of the sacred seal as perversions, or at least as confused individuals who dabble in the forbidden.

At best, such characters are unfriendly, but most tend to be hostile.

KNIGHTS OF THE SACRED SEAL LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (history) can research knights of the sacred seal to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Knights of the sacred seal belong to an esoteric order of warriors enhanced with otherworldly power.

DC 15: The source of their power comes from a particular spirit called a vestige, with which they forge a deep relationship.

DC 20: Binders often employ knights of the sacred seal as guardians for their enclaves.

Where you find a knight of the sacred seal, you're bound to find a binder.

KNIGHTS OF THE SACRED SEAL IN THE GAME

How you introduce pact magic into your game best determines how to incorporate this prestige class into an ongoing campaign.

Because knights of the sacred seal are secretive by necessity, you could simply decide that they have had a presence in your campaign all along but operated beneath the notice of the authorities.

Players who like the features of the paladin class but not its alignment can turn to this prestige class to get the best of both worlds.

A PC knight of the sacred seal is at her best when paired with another character, preferably a binder.

The interaction between protector and protected creates excellent opportunities for roleplaying.

If you have a knight of the sacred seal in your game, be sure to provide plenty of opportunities for her to express her devotion and dedication to her bound vestige and its particular agenda.

ADAPTATION

Binders and knights of the sacred seal need not have such a close connection.

Perhaps the knights of the sacred seal are more militant in their approach to pact magic—or maybe they actively oppose witch slayers, taking the battle directly to their oppressors.

Even if you don't use pact magic in your campaign, you can still utilize this class.

Instead of binding a vestige, perhaps a knight of the sacred seal voluntarily accepts possession by a ghost or a fiend.

Such an arrangement changes the typical alignment of this class to evil, unless you use the guidelines for ghosts presented in Ghostwalk.

TABLE 1-4:

MASTER OF SHADOW

"What need have I of living servants when the shadows themselves rise up at my command?"

—Thanielle Tiergun, Duchess of Ohr

Some driven or domineering souls seek nothing less than mastery of darkness itself—the ability to turn the very shadows into their agents and allies.

These are the masters of shadow, commanders of soldiers as dark and insubstantial as night itself.

For those with the force of will to enter their ranks, the very shadows serve at their beck and call.

BECOMING A MASTER OF SHADOW

Shadowcasters are the most common masters of shadow, since they can most easily enter the class.

Sorcerers, wizards, clerics, and even the occasional druid can multiclass just enough to gain access, however.

Few martial types do so, because the class demands specialties far removed from combat skills.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks

Feat: Shadow Familiar*

Mysteries/Spellcasting: Caster level 5th

* New feat described on page 138

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As you progress as a master of shadow, you gain command of an increasingly powerful dark servant.

Shadow Servant (Su): At 1st level, your shadow familiar permanently transforms into a Medium shadow elemental.

It loses all familiar traits, but gains new abilities as your shadow servant (see the Shadow Servant sidebar).

SHADOW SERVANT

A master of shadow's servant is an unquestionably loyal, devoted companion. As the master increases in power, the shadow servant also becomes tougher, gaining Hit Dice and special abilities. A master of shadow can focus his power and will upon a servant and make it do his bidding.

Level	Bonus HD	Dex Adj.	Special	Master's Bidding
1st	+0	—	—	Interact with corporeal, fast healing 1
2nd	+1	—	Resistance to cold 5	Extra attack
3rd	+2	—	Size becomes Large	—
4th	+3	—	Resistance to cold 10	Cold damage +1d8
5th	+4	+2	Deliver touch spells	—
6th	+5	—	Resistance to cold 20	—
7th	+6	+4	—	Reach +5 ft.
8th	+7	—	—	DR 5/—
9th	+8	+6	—	Speed +20 ft.
10th	+9	—	Immunity to cold	—

Shadow Servant Basics: Use the base statistics for a Medium shadow elemental as given on page 165, but make the following changes.

Level: The character's master of shadow level.

Bonus HD: Extra eight-sided (d8) Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier, as normal. Remember that extra Hit Dice improve the shadow servant's base attack and base save bonuses as appropriate for an elemental. A shadow servant's base attack bonus is the same as that of a cleric or druid of a level equal to the elemental's HD. A shadow servant has good Reflex saves (treat it as a character whose level equals the elemental's HD). A shadow servant gains additional skill points and feats for bonus HD as normal for advancing a monster's Hit Dice (MM 290–291).

Dex Adj.: Add this value to the shadow servant's Dexterity score.

Resistance to Cold (Ex): A shadow servant of a 2nd-level master of shadow gains resistance to cold 10. When the master reaches 6th level, the resistance increases to 20.

Should your shadow servant die, you can summon a replacement after 24 hours pass.

Your shadow servant cannot travel farther from you than 30 feet +10 feet for each of your master of shadow levels (40 feet at 1st level and a maximum of 130 feet at 10th level).

If it is forcibly separated from you by more than this distance, the servant dissipates instantly, and you must wait 24 hours to summon a new one.

Master's Bidding (Su): At 1st level, as a standard action, you can focus your affinity with shadow to enhance your shadow servant, granting it one special ability for 1 round. The special abilities available to your shadow servant are described in the Shadow Servant sidebar, and depend on your class level.

For example, at 4th level you could give your servant any of the following special abilities: interact with corporeal, fast healing 1, extra attack, or cold damage +1d8.

At 5th level, you can grant your shadow servant a special ability for 1 round by taking only a move action rather than a standard action.

Size Increase (Ex): A 3rd-level master of shadow's servant grows to Large size. It never increases beyond Large, regardless of its Hit Dice.

Deliver Touch Spells (Su): If its master is 5th level or higher, a shadow servant can deliver touch mysteries or spells for him. If the master and the servant are in contact at the time the master casts a touch mystery or spell, he can designate his servant as the "toucher." The servant can then deliver the touch mystery or spell just as the master could. As usual, if the master casts another mystery or spell before the touch is delivered, the designated mystery or spell dissipates.

Immunity to Cold (Ex): The servant of a 10th-level master of shadow has immunity to cold.

MASTER'S BIDDING

A master of shadow can shape the essence of his shadow servant, granting it special abilities and qualities. In this way, the master customizes his servant to his needs of the moment.

At first, enhancing a servant in this manner is a standard action, but higher-level masters eventually reduce the effort to a move action and finally a swift action. Even when a master of shadow has the ability to bid his servant to gain multiple abilities, any single ability can only be gained once.

Interact with Corporeal (Su): When you grant your shadow servant this bidding, it can perform simple tasks at your command, in a manner identical to the unseen servant spell, except that it retains its own hit points.

Fast Healing (Su): A shadow servant can be bid to regain hit points at a rate of 1 hit point per round.

Extra Attack (Su): When making a full attack action, a shadow servant can be bid to make one extra attack. The attack is made using the creature's full base attack bonus, plus any modifiers appropriate to the situation.

Cold Damage (Su): A master of shadow can bid its servant to deal an additional 1d8 points of cold damage on a successful hit (stacked with the cold damage that shadow elementals normally deal).

Reach (Su): A shadow servant bid to extend its shadowy arms in this manner increases its reach by 5 feet.

Damage Reduction (Su): Bidding your shadow servant to ignore damage grants it DR 5/—.

Speed (Su): A master of shadow can bid its servant to be quick, increasing the servant's speed by 20 feet.

You can choose to use two move actions in the same turn to grant it two abilities.

Additional move actions granted by spells, class features, or the like can also be used to further enhance your shadow servant.

At 10th level, you can grant your shadow servant a special ability for 1 round by taking only a swift action rather than a move action.

You can still use move actions to give it additional abilities. Thus, a 10th-level master of shadow who does nothing else in a round can choose to give his shadow servant three special abilities (using one swift action and two move actions).

Resistance to Cold (Su): At 2nd level, the shadow in your essence provides resistance to cold 5.

This resistance increases to 10 at 4th level and 20 at 6th level.

At 10th level, you have immunity to cold damage.

Mysteries/Spellcasting: At 2nd level and every level thereafter, you gain new mysteries or spells per day and an increase in caster level (and mysteries or spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a casting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefits a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one casting class before becoming a master of shadow, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells or mysteries known.

Rapid Shadow (Su): After you reach 10th level, if your shadow servant dies you can summon a replacement 10 minutes later.

PLAYING A MASTER OF SHADOW

Most NPC masters of shadow become domineering individuals who care little for their former allies as they come to rely more and more on their dark servant.

As a master of shadow player character (assuming you do not wish to alienate your companions), you should be careful not to carry this trait to the extreme.

You do become greatly confident—possibly even overconfident—in your ability to handle any challenge or escape any peril, because you have a being of shadow at your disposal.

You are welcome in the Tenebrous Cabal so long as you do not succumb to arrogance or seek to control your fellow members as you do your servants.

Surprisingly, masters of shadow rarely become members of the Votaries of Vecna or the Nightshade Covenant.

While members of the Votaries are certainly convinced of their right to rule others, they do not like the idea of sacrificing their own mystical might in order to empower their servants.

Members of the Covenant, on the other hand, dislike the notion of mortal beings controlling creatures of shadow.

COMBAT

Your shadow servant is your greatest weapon.

You can direct it against foes without putting yourself in danger, or have it flank an opponent.

As you gain greater power, your servant increases in puissance.

Your ability to use it to deliver touch mysteries or spells makes it even more potent at higher levels than it would otherwise be.

ADVANCEMENT

You tend to discover your own proclivities for manipulating creatures of darkness, rather than learning from others.

This frequently occurs as you research means of empowering your companion, or of summoning creatures of shadow.

No specific training or rites exist to become a master of shadow.

You must simply possess the proper mindset and the appropriate knowledge.

Continued advancement is emotionally rewarding for those with ambition, because it offers an ever more powerful servant and increased casting abilities.

You'll want to decide which mysteries or spells to learn in order to make best use of your servant.

For instance, touch attacks are of far greater value to you than others, since you have a powerful agent to deliver them.

You might not want to bother with other summoning magic; your servant likely represents more than enough assistance.

RESOURCES

You tend to view other masters with hostility, seeing them as rivals, although this attitude is not universal.

You'll have to gather resources on your own or with the aid of trusted companions.

Try to acquire magic that enhances your touch attacks—you're unlikely to need many other forms of offensive magic—and otherwise focus primarily on defensive and statistic-boosting spells or mysteries.

MASTERS OF SHADOW IN THE WORLD

"Keeping company with a master of shadow is rather akin to owning a trained snake.

It might never turn on you—it probably won't turn on you—but you never want to take your eyes off it."

—Irrin Coradran, Lady of the Second House, Parliament of Shadows

The master of shadow is the perfect prestige class for players who enjoy summoners and similar characters.

It allows for the same advantages and abilities, without losing the strange traits of shadow magic itself.

DAILY LIFE

Most masters of shadow prefer a life of luxury.

They aren't necessarily debauched, but they swiftly grow accustomed to having things done for them.

Most live in finery-filled manses or keeps if they can afford to do so.

These complexes tend to be somewhat distant from nearby people, due to the master's poor reception in most communities.

When given the option, masters of shadow prefer to dwell near enough other communities to purchase what they need, but far enough for privacy.

When they manage to obtain political power, most masters of shadow tend to be demanding rulers.

Already predisposed toward taking servants for granted, they are convinced of their right to rule.

Although not necessarily cruel, they simply fail to consider the needs of their subjects (a shadow elemental needs little in the way of care).

NOTABLES

The greatest known master of shadow is Lady Thanielle Tiergun, the Duchess of Ohr.

She and her disciples—all lower-level masters of shadow—ride a small, independent province with an iron fist, using their shadow servants as spies and enforcers.

Sanja Urudin hires herself out as a bodyguard for rich and noble clients, protecting them from a distance with sentinels of darkness.

Finally, Phallon Rheese, an abnormally flamboyant master of shadow, is well on his way to becoming a one-man adventuring party.

ORGANIZATION

The Tenebrous Cabal and other organizations treat masters of shadow like any other members—their activities on behalf of the organization and their mastery of shadow magic determine their place in the scheme of things.

This circumstance often prevents masters of shadow from obtaining leadership roles, because their study of shadow magic slows down as they master their servants.

Thus, a small but growing number of masters feel the Cabal is mistreating them.

Masters of shadow are often bitter rivals of children of night.

The masters feel that the children practice an unholy or even perverse form of magic, seeking to become what they should instead rule.

The children in turn believe that the masters seek to control them, along with all other beings of shadow.

NPC REACTIONS NPC

reactions to masters of shadow depend on the community. In most cases, people are unfriendly or hostile when they see someone commanding beings of darkness.

In a few instances, however, certain individuals—particularly in high-magic communities—instead treat masters of shadow in a friendly or helpful manner, seeing in them an ability to keep evil away from others.

Most shadowcasters are indifferent to masters of shadow, respecting their abilities but somewhat distrustful of their motives.

Children of night are usually unfriendly at best.

MASTER OF SHADOW LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (the planes) can research masters of shadow to learn more about them.

When a character makes a check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Masters of shadow command a servant made of darkness itself.

DC 15: The masters are potent magic users, and they gain the ability to channel some of their magics through their shadow servants.

The more powerful the master, the more powerful his servant.

DC 20: Most masters of shadow require some time to replace a servant that is lost, though they do not suffer as does a wizard losing her familiar.

MASTERS OF SHADOW IN THE GAME

Masters of shadow are manipulators, preferring to remain behind the scenes.

It's entirely possible that the PCs have heard of or even encountered individuals who are masters of shadow, but who hid that fact from them.

Alternatively, the prestige class might be new in your campaign, the result of a shadowcaster attempting to empower a shadow companion.

Anyone who enjoys commanding another combatant in a fight, or using a servant to scout, should enjoy the master of shadow class.

While it's reasonable to assume that some individuals have taken precautions against these abilities, and that a shadow servant might not be at its best in all fights, the class should prove worthwhile so long as you do not go out of your way to reduce its effectiveness.

ADAPTATION

The master of shadow works well with an elemental theme. Simply replace the shadow servant with an elemental of comparable CR, and the servant and master's bidding abilities with those suited to elemental creatures of the proper subtype.

For instance, an earth elemental creature would gain Constitution instead of Dexterity, have good Fortitude but poor Reflex saves, and perhaps gain resistance to acid instead of cold.

NOCTUMANCER

"Consider the power offered by magic, by the ability to manipulate reality.

Imagine how much greater, then, the power available to he who can manipulate magic itself."

—Eveneth Stillwater, Lord of the Third House, Parliament of Shadows

Noctumancers bridge the gap between shadow and arcane magic.

Those who succeed in becoming one of these elite not only gain a boost to their mystery user and arcane caster abilities, but are able to manipulate the mysteries and spells of others as no others can.

BECOMING A NOCTUMANCER

Given the requirements of the class, multiclass shadowcaster/sorcerers and shadowcaster/wizards make up almost the entirety of noctumancers.

The rare shadowcaster/bard might be found, but virtually no other combination offers the proper abilities, and given the steep requirements of the prestige class, any additional multiclassing drastically slows (or even prevents) its acquisition.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Spellcraft 6 ranks

Shadowcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level mysteries

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a noctumancer, you excel at controlling all magics in the area around you.

Mysteries/Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new mysteries or spells per day and an increase in caster level (and mysteries or spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in both your mystery-using class and your arcane spellcasting class.

You do not, however, gain any other benefits a character of these classes would have gained.

If you had more than one mystery-using or arcane spellcasting class before becoming a noctumancer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Capture Magic's Shadow (Su): At 1st level, when you successfully dispel a mystery or spell (such as with the mysteries shadows fade or unravel dweomer, or the spells dispel magic or break enchantment), you can absorb its energy.

You add one-half the level (round down, minimum 1) of the mystery or spell you dispelled to the caster level of any mystery or spell you cast in the next round.

For instance, if you dispel a 4th-level spell, you add +2 to the caster level of the spell you cast in the next round.

You cannot draw power from dispelling your own mysteries or spells.

Innate Counterspell (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can attempt to counter a mystery or spell without using a readied action.

Once per day, you can counter a spell as an immediate action, by expending a mystery use per day, a spell slot (if you prepare spells), or a spell use (if you are a spontaneous caster) as long as the mystery or spell expended is of the same level or higher as the mystery or spell to be countered.

At 7th level, when you successfully counter a mystery or spell using this ability, you retain some of the magical essence of the countered dweomer.

You can choose to either gain one additional use of a mystery, regain an expended spell slot (if you prepare spells), or gain the use of an additional spell (if you are a spontaneous caster).

The level of the mystery or spell you gain is equal to one-half the level of the mystery or spell you countered (rounded down, minimum 1).

You can use innate counterspell once per day at 2nd level, two times at 5th, and three times at 8th.

Eldritch Disruption (Su): At 6th level, you can use a standard action to disrupt the magical energies of a single target within 60 feet.

That target must make a Will saving throw (DC 10 + your noctumancer level + your Cha modifier) or take a -4 penalty to its caster level for any mysteries or spells it casts for 1 minute.

You can use eldritch disruption three times per day.

Eldritch Vortex (Su): At 10th level, you can emit mystic energies in a 20-foot-radius burst around yourself.

Any creature other than you within that area takes a -4 penalty to caster level for any mysteries, spells, or spell-like abilities it casts or uses.

The vortex lasts 1 minute and can be used once per day.

Shadow's Persistence (Su): At 10th level, you gain temporary immunity to any mystery or spell captured or countered by means of your capture magic's shadow or innate counterspell ability.

for 1 minute, you cannot be affected by any casting of that mystery or spell.

PLAYING A NOCTUMANCER

You are a rising master of two forms of magic, able to shape substance, shadow, and sorcery at your whim.

You are most likely studious and knowledgeable, although some noctumancers come by their abilities more instinctively.

While you might never reach the same heights of magical ability as your single-classed contemporaries, your mastery of magic as a whole makes you at least their equal, if not their better.

Every major shadow-based organization has a place for noctumancers.

The Tenebrous Cabal and Nightshade Covenant treat you much like standard shadowcasters, determining your position by your overall mystical aptitude.

The Votaries of Vecna venerate you, for you combine shadow powers with the arts practiced by Acererak and (before his divinity) Vecna himself.

Also, despite the common distrust of shadow magic in arcane organizations, some such guilds might welcome you, fascinated by your ability to manipulate others' magic.

COMBAT

At lower levels, your combat techniques do not greatly differ from those of other arcane casters.

You should normally stay out of immediate physical danger, using your spells to influence the flow of battle.

As you progress, however, your options grow wider.

Your ability to absorb magic even as you dispel it makes it even more worthwhile than normal to strip your foes of their mystical protections or to remove ongoing baneful effects from your allies.

Your innate counterspell ability gives you a powerful defense against enemy casters, and your tactics options grow as you gain the ability to shape your spells and mysteries around your allies.

At your highest level, you might wish to focus most of your efforts in combating enemy casters or magic-using creatures, for you now have the ability to render at least some of their efforts useless.

This frees your companions from having to defend against them, allowing them to go on the offensive.

ADVANCEMENT

Your arts are at least partially learned ones, even for the most spontaneous sorcerer.

You are likely a member of a shadow-related organization, approached and trained by noctumancers who saw potential in your combination of abilities.

Alternatively, you might have sought out instructors, having heard of noctumancy.

Although such individuals are rare, you might have been a multiclass shadowcaster/arcane caster, discovered the secrets of the noctumancer in ancient tomes, and managed to train yourself.

Continued advancement requires substantial practice and study, equal to if not greater than that required of a shadowcaster or wizard.

While you need not (and in fact cannot) learn the most difficult spells or mysteries, you possess techniques for combining these very different forms of magic.

Once you become a noctumancer, you face the same choices as high-level mystery users and spellcasters, only even more of them.

Pay careful attention to the synergy between your spells and mysteries, so that you do not wind up with redundant abilities.

Consider mastering the path of Black Magic, because its mysteries complement your class abilities.

Raising both Intelligence and Charisma is clearly a wise idea, and feats and items to raise your caster level also prove valuable.

RESOURCES

Unless another noctumancer belongs to a rival organization, you tend to view him as a kindred soul in an elite society.

You frequently trade spells and minor items (potions, scrolls, wands).

You'll likely want staves, defensive items, and items to boost Intelligence and Charisma—much like any other caster.

NOCTUMANCERS THE WORLD

"My magic is everything I have, everything I am.

If someone else can wrest control of my magic from me, what does that make me?"

—Hennet, sorcerer and adventurer

A noctumancer is the logical extension of abjuration magic, the path of Black Magic, and even the existence of arcane magic in general.

It seems only natural that some would devote their efforts to mastering not the use of magic, but the literal control of it.

It should appeal to players who enjoy the notion of manipulating the forces that many others take for granted.

DAILY LIFE

A noctumancer's time is largely devoted to the study and research required to master new mysteries, new spells, and the interactions between them.

Noctumancers usually devote their remaining time either to advancing the goals of their organization, or adventuring to obtain both new magic and expertise with their abilities.

Noctumancers rarely have the time for governing, but those who do take full advantage of their abilities, either to protect or dominate their subjects.

Even the most well-meaning noctumancer rulers often grow arrogant, as they become convinced of their mastery of eldritch forces.

NOTABLES

Noctumancers are exceptionally rare, but a few have still managed to obtain notoriety.

Eveneth Stillwater, Lord of the Third House, is the most recent addition to the Parliament of Shadows, and one of only a half-dozen noctumancers in the Cabal's riding body. The shadow lich known only as Intempestus leads a cadre of Nightshaders who lair in a shadowstuff castle on the Plane of Shadow, near a permanent portal to the Material Plane.

ORGANIZATION

Noctumancers function more or less as other mystery users and spellcasters in their respective organizations.

The Votaries of Vecna might honor their abilities, but they don't actually bestow any true authority that the noctumancers haven't otherwise earned.

Similarly, the Nightshade Covenant and the Tenebrous Cabal respect the noctumancer's knowledge, and often put such individuals in charge of mystical research and interactions with other arcane factions, but they are treated just like any other members when it comes to advancement.

NPC REACTIONS

The vast majority of people react to noctumancers exactly as they would to an arcane caster or shadowcaster, whichever the noctumancer most resembles.

Only a very select few—mostly casters themselves—recognize the noctumancer as something different.

In general, shadowcasters are indifferent or friendly (if they are of the same organization) to noctumancers.

Many arcane casters are hostile toward noctumancers, for they fear their ability to manipulate others' spells.

NOCTUMANCER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research noctumancers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: The noctumancer is a spellcaster who combines arcane magic and shadow magic.

DC 15: Noctumancers have the ability to use spells and the powers of shadow, and can also hinder the magic of others. They can counter spells with an act of will.

DC 20: The noctumancer's abilities, such as spells and mysteries, are limited by the number of times they can use them.

You can sometimes overpower a noctumancer through simple attrition.

A bardic knowledge check or a Gather Information check can reveal the same information as these Knowledge checks, but in each case the DC is 5 higher than the given value.

NOCTUMANCERS IN THE GAME

Noctumancy is not only a difficult art, it requires a relatively high level before one can enter the prestige class.

Thus, it's unlikely that characters in a low-level or even mid-level game will encounter noctumancers, allowing DMs to introduce one or more as the campaign progresses, without having to explain their prior absence.

Players should think that their characters' levels in noctumancer are worthwhile so long as they have semifrequent encounters with magic users or ongoing spell effects.

The prestige class allows them to progress in both classes, so they will not be particularly weak in any case, but it is against other casters that the noctumancer truly comes into his own.

ADAPTATION

A noctumancer can exist in settings that do not make use of shadow magic, although it requires some alteration.

The prestige class might instead represent a branch of arcane magic focused on controlling the magic of others. Remove the shadowcaster-related prerequisites.

SCION OF DANTALION

"The light of the Star Emperor guides me. His blood runs in my veins, and I am one of his princes."
—Breven Hulstoft, human binder

Scions of Dantalion trace their lineage to an ancient, long-forgotten human empire—a civilization in which justice, love, and art reigned supreme. They maintain that the rulers of this realm led their people to such a height of beauty and righteousness that they rivaled the stars of the heavens in the awe they could inspire.

The gods saw their accomplishments and grew envious. In their jealous rage, they destroyed the empire and cursed its nobility, decreeing that no one from that line could ever join them in the afterlife.

Scions of Dantalion believe themselves to be part of this line, cursed by the gods but blessed by association with Dantalion, the vestige that is the conglomeration of all their ancestors' souls.

The scions believe that their destiny is to one day take up the crown, bear the scepter of rulership, and rebuild the empire that could rival the stars.

BECOMING A SCION OF DANTALION

A scion of Dantalion must be able to bind Dantalion. Since Knowledge (nobility and royalty) is a cross-class skill for binders, a level of bard, wizard, or paladin eases entry but slows progression in the binder class, thereby delaying the candidate's contact with Dantalion.

Thus, a candidate with a high enough intelligence score to gain more than 2 skill points per level should remain a binder and simply devote cross-class skill points to Knowledge (nobility and royalty).

A binder who manages to gain extra ranks in Knowledge (nobility and royalty) might want to take enough to gain the +2 synergy bonus on Diplomacy checks.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Half-elf, half-orc, or human

Skill: Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 2 ranks

Special: Ability to bind Dantalion

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (any), Profession, Sense Motive, Speak Language.

CLASS FEATURES

Dantalion favors his scions above all others.

When you make a pact with Dantalion, the abilities he grants become more potent, and you gain additional powers as well—some of which you can use even when you are not bound to Dantalion.

Soul Binding: At each scion of Dantalion level, your soul binding ability improves as if you had also gained a level in the binder class.

Thus, your scion of Dantalion levels and binder levels stack for the purpose of determining your bonus on binding checks, the effectiveness of your vestige-granted abilities, your ability to bind higher-level vestiges, and the number of vestiges you can bind.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a binder would have gained.

Favored of Dantalion (Ex): You need never worry about succumbing to Dantalion's influence because you automatically succeed on the binding check when making a pact with him.

You can hide or show Dantalion's sign as desired, as though you possessed the suppress sign class feature (see page 11).

With each new level you take in the scion of Dantalion prestige class, Dantalion's seal (see page 28) includes another face.

Thus, the sign appears as two vestigial faces on your torso at 1st level and as six faces at 5th level.

When you activate an ability granted by Dantalion or by the scion of Dantalion prestige class, the eyes and mouths of the faces briefly open to reveal distant stars set in darkness.

Scholarship of Dantalion (Su): Your connection to Dantalion gives you occasional flashes of insight into a variety of topics.

Once per day per scion of Dantalion level, you can reroll any Knowledge check you just made.

You must abide by the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll Improved Read Thoughts (Su): At 2nd level, whenever you use the read thoughts ability granted by Dantalion, you gain full knowledge of the target's surface thoughts on the first round of concentration, assuming that it fails its Will save.

Normally, you know its surface thoughts only after 3 rounds of concentration.

Once you have used this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds.

Swift Awe of Dantalion (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can activate your awe of Dantalion ability as a swift action instead of a move action whenever you are bound to that vestige.

Once you have used this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds, Overwhelming Thoughts (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can choose to overwhelm the thoughts of any creature you target with the read thoughts ability granted by Dantalion.

As a standard action, you send your thoughts out to a single creature whose thoughts you are reading (so it has already failed its Will save against your read thoughts ability), forcing it to succeed on a Will save (DC 10 +1/2 your effective binder level + your Cha modifier) or be dazed for 1d4 rounds.

During this time, you can maintain concentration on your read thoughts ability and, as a move action, continue to read the thoughts of a creature you have dazed on subsequent rounds.

A successful save allows the creature to break free of your thought reading.

Dantalion's Glare (Su): from 4th level on, you can use a standard action to intensify Dantalion's sign and glare through its eyes.

The starry voids in the eyes of Dantalion's sign blaze forth with the brightness of an exploding star, affecting all creatures in a 30-foot cone.

Every creature within this area must succeed on a fortitude save (DC 10 +1/2 your effective binder level + your Cha modifier) or be blinded for 1d4 rounds.

You must be showing at least one face of Dantalion's sign to use this ability.

If the face is hidden beneath clothing, you can reveal it as a free action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity, so long as you have a hand free.

If the face is hidden beneath armor, you must have a free hand and use a standard action to reveal the sign.

Doing so provokes attacks of opportunity, and you take a -2 penalty to AC while revealing the sign in this manner.

Once you have used this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds.

Improved Thought Travel (Su): Beginning at 4th level, you can use the thought travel ability granted by Dantalion as a move action.

Read Multiple Thoughts (Su): When you attain 5th level, the increased strength of your connection with Dantalion allows you to simultaneously target a number of creatures equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 2) with the read thoughts ability granted by Dantalion.

Each of the targets must be within range (5 feet per effective binder level).

You can use this ability in combination with either your improved read thoughts or your overwhelming thoughts class feature, or both.

PLAYING A SCION OF DANTALION

You are part of a truly great royal lineage.

The human kings and queens of today are but pale reflections of your ancestors, who ruled over a celestial empire so magnificent that even the gods could not bear its brilliance.

The curse invoked upon your line by those same deities prevents you from joining them in the afterlife.

Instead, when you die., you will join Dantalion, the conglomeration of all the souls in your line.

Yet destiny offers you a reprieve.

One day, the scions of Dantalion will rebuild the celestial empire and free Dantalion from the prison of his vestige nature.

Because scions of Dantalion are all members of an extended royal family, your fellow scions deserve great respect and good treatment from you.

Some scions claim closer relationships to the celestial royalty than others, but such assertions are largely meaningless.

The one important fact is that other scions of Dantalion belong to the same legacy as you do, and are likewise committed to guiding humanity toward truth, justice, and unity.

One day, your efforts, and those of scions like you, will allow all people to understand the essential righteousness of knowledge, art, and equality among humans, and the celestial empire can rise again.

Until that day, you must lead by example, proving your nobility by your good works and steady guidance.

COMBAT

As a low-level scion of Dantalion, you can benefit from the same tactics as any other binder who makes a pact with that vestige.

In particular, you can use your thought travel ability to move about a battlefield, covering lots of ground without provoking attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other binders, however, you have access to the swift awe of Dantalion ability, which can be quite useful in protecting yourself from harm.

As you grow in power, your improved read thoughts and overwhelming thoughts abilities come into play.

By judiciously combining the use of these powers, you can neutralize a powerful foe—perhaps long enough for you and your allies to achieve victory.

At high levels, you can use improved thought travel to appear amid distant foes.

Once there, you can blind them with Dantalion's glare.

Finally, the pinnacle ability improves your read thoughts and overwhelm thoughts abilities by allowing you to affect multiple foes with them.

ADVANCEMENT

As you advance, be sure to devote some of your resources to increasing your Charisma score.

Doing so improves the saving throw DCs of the offensive abilities granted by the scion of Dantalion prestige class, as well as many abilities granted by other vestiges.

When you reach the point at which you can bind multiple vestiges, consider your favored combat strategy when selecting a second vestige.

Dantalion offers a good mix of abilities that can be useful in both combat and noncombat encounters, but he does not provide heightened damage-dealing powers or exemplary defensive capabilities.

If you like the idea of confounding foes so that your friends can mop them up, choose another vestige that gives you the power to hamper enemies in a different way.

If you enjoy wading into the thick of battle and taking down your foes, be sure to pick a vestige that grants you extra melee damage.

If you're happy with Dantalion's abilities but want a better defense, select a vestige that will give you extra protection.

RESOURCES

The fact that scions share a common plight and destiny causes them to treat one another like family.

Thus, you can expect a helpful attitude from another scion, even one of radically different social class or outlook.

Scions generally provide one another with hospitality and aid of whatever kind they can muster.

A fellow scion who believes in your personal goals might go to almost any lengths to aid you, but if your goals seem at odds with establishing the celestial empire, a bitter rivalry can result.

SCIONS OF DANTALION IN THE WORLD

"Sanctimonious madmen, the whole lot of 'em.

Humans never had a celestial empire.

Still, you can't say Dantalion doesn't favor them.

He gives his scions more power than he'll grant me."

—Morden, dwarf binder

The scions of Dantalion present enormous roleplaying potential.

With their magnanimous goals of educating and unifying humanity, they can give binders a more sympathetic face in the campaign world.

At the same time, their belief in their own nobility and their desire to steer other people toward a destiny only they perceive are often viewed as disturbing and threatening.

Most scions remain open to the idea that other humans and even half-humans might also be scions who deserve Dantalion's favor and the chance at rulership of the celestial empire, but this attitude is counterbalanced by their myopic focus on the plight of humans.

At their best, scions can be forces of amazing beneficence; at their worst, they can take their fervor for aiding humans to horrific extremes.

DAILY LIFE

Scions of Dantalion generally learn of their heritage and destiny in one of two ways.

A character who is already a binder might learn of Dantalion's legend and feel a special resonance with it, or a scion of Dantalion might notice a quality of nobility in another human (or half human) and draw that person into both pact magic and the "family" of Dantalion's celestial empire.

Regardless of how scions of Dantalion come to embrace their beliefs, most seek out other members of their "family" at some point and join forces with them.

Members of this prestige class share the common goal of elevating and unifying humanity, although they might differ in their means of accomplishing that end.

Because of this mutual goal, they tend to be more organized and more likely to work together than other binders are.

On a day-to-day basis, scions of Dantalion attempt to advance the interests of human communities.

By increasing and sustaining security, prosperity, and quality of life for humans, they hope to return humanity to the greatness of the past.

Scions of Dantalion also support activities that unify disparate human groups, be they humans of different nations or just neighborhoods.

The different means by which they approach their goals can cause scions to come into conflict with one another, but should such disagreements come to blows, scions typically resolve them through duels witnessed by their fellows, in the ancient dueling tradition of the nobility.

NOTABLES

Scions of Dantalion often relate tales of other scions' exploits to one another, and no name comes up more often than Breven Hulstoff.

The influence Breven has managed to gather impresses other scions of Dantalion, and he maintains a sterling reputation for courtesy and honor.

However, like many other scions, he is more than he seems.

Breven Hulstoff worked as a palace guard until he met a woman who claimed to be a scion of Dantalion.

After she showed Breven the secrets of pact magic, he grew convinced of his own relationship to the ancient royalty of the celestial empire.

Eventually, Breven left the palace guard on good terms to pursue pact magic.

Years later, he returned to help his kingdom in a time of trouble.

Breven swiftly worked his way up in the ranks of the guard with the aid of his powers, crushing anyone who stood in his way and justifying his actions with the idea that he was acting on behalf of humanity.

Now Breven acts as the queen's personal guard and advisor.

He is also secretly her lover, and Breven hopes to cement that relationship with marriage at some point.

Unfortunately for him, the king yet lives.

ORGANIZATION

Scions of Dantalion are somewhat estranged from others who pursue pact magic.

Their existence as outcasts among outcasts tends to draw them into closer bonds with one another.

Thus, although scions rarely have any official organizational structure, they often meet in small groups to work toward some larger goal in secret.

Individual scions bring their talents and those of their attendants and allies to the project, creating a loose network of varied folk.

The differing attitudes of the people that can be involved in such a group often makes cohesive effort difficult, but at times, the blend provides the perfect tools for accomplishing the goal.

NPC REACTIONS

Most folk react to scions of Dantalion the same way they react to binders because they see little difference between the two.

Humans might take issue with the scions' assertion that their blood line will one day rule the race, but just as many are likely to appreciate the image of the past and future celestial empire.

Those who favor the scions' message of justice, education, and equality in human communities probably have a friendly attitude toward scions of Dantalion.

Like all binders, scions of Dantalion can encounter trouble with religious organizations, but local leaders and their servants are often unfriendly or hostile to them as well.

After all, the future celestial empire will rest upon the bones of current nations, no matter how noble the means of achieving it might be.

Scions of Dantalion have a peculiar relationship with karsites (see page 84).

Both claim to be descended from human rulers of a great empire, and both claim to be destined to rule humanity. This similarity of beliefs can bring scions and karsites into conflict, but it can also bring them together.

Indeed, some karsites are also scions of Dantalion.

Scions who work with karsites believe that Karsus's country was the celestial empire, and that they are the descendants of that society's ruling caste.

Such scions oppose deities both for throwing down Karsus and for destroying the wondrous society their ancestors built.

Most scions of Dantalion, however, reject this idea that Karsus's country was the celestial empire.

They see their roles less as rulers of humanity than as stewards of the celestial empire's grace.

They don't oppose spellcasters or the gods; they want to show the gods respect while rebuilding an empire that honors both humans and deities.

Scions of Dantalion accept that many other humans and half-humans might be members of their "family" whether or not they show the signs.

After all, a scion typically has numerous blood relations who do not practice pact magic and thus bear no signs of Dantalion's favor at all.

Karsites, on the other hand, believe that only those who look like them and have their abilities are destined to rule.

SCION OF DANTALION LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nobility and royalty), Knowledge (the planes), or Knowledge (religion) can research the scions of Dantalion to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

Each of the DCs below increases by 5 for Knowledge (nobility and royalty) and Knowledge (the planes) checks.

DC 15: Some powerful binders call themselves scions of Dantalion.

Dantalion is one of the strange spirits they contact.

DC 20: Scions of Dantalion gain greater power from Dantalion than the average binder does.

They believe they receive this benefit because they are descended from the royalty of some ancient empire, and that they will one day rebuild and rule that empire.

DC 25: Dantalion can read thoughts, daze you, and move just by thinking.

You will know one by the faces he carries on his torso. Beware of them.

The faces can show you stars that blind you.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about the activities of a specific scion of Dantalion.

SCIONS OF DANTALION IN THE GAME

Scions of Dantalion are best introduced to the campaign after your players are at least somewhat familiar with the concept of pact magic, if you first establish the norm for a pact magic user (that is, a binder), the differences displayed by members of this prestige class will be all the more obvious and meaningful.

Establishing a norm also helps a player have more fun with a scion of Dantalion as a player character.

Give the scion's player roleplaying and story support by providing opportunities for the character to better the plight of humanity.

Such opportunities need not focus solely on the scion character; a mission to slay a marauding dragon also serves the humans of the region by ensuring their safety.

If you want to provide some roleplaying tension, offer the scion player an opportunity to help humans in a way that might harm some other humanoid race.

Another scion already involved in such a mission might even seek the PC scion's aid in accomplishing his goal.

ADAPTATION

The scion of Dantalion prestige class was designed for humans because of Dantalion's legend, but a small change in that legend could easily open the class to any race.

Dantalion could just as easily wear elven faces, for example, or if the celestial empire was populated by all kinds of creatures, many races might be represented in his visage.

SHADOWBLADE

*"Don't be afraid of the dark.
Be afraid of what's in the dark."*

—Niko Drendol, captain of the Black Dawn

Shadowblades are martial combatants with an innate link to shadow.

While some deliberately study the arts of shadow, most develop their abilities instinctively, making them more akin to shadowdancers than shadowcasters.

Those who master the arts of the unseen weapon become warriors with few equals.

Their ability to manipulate darkness and shadow enhances their martial skills, allowing them to target weak points, land blows that should not strike true, and even attack foes who are paces away.

BECOMING A SHADOWBLADE

Multiclass fighter/rogues are the most common shadowblades, because they possess both the martial ability and the skills necessary.

Single-classed fighters or rogues can enter the class, but it takes longer.

A rare few paladins and rangers take this path, enhancing their own abilities with a mastery of shadow.

Few mystery users or spellcasters become shadowblades, and barbarians tend to prefer brute force and distrust a shadowblade's powers.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5

Skills: Bluff 5 ranks, Hide 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks

Feats: Blind-Fight

Special: Must have been exposed to shadow at some point prior to taking this class, either through travel on the Plane of Shadow, being subject to a mystery or a spell with the darkness descriptor, or through physical contact with a shadow or dark creature (such as a shadow mastiff or a dark lion)

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Climb, Craft, Handle Animal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Move Silently, Profession, Ride, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

Shadowblades manipulate shadow to strike swiftly and fatally, becoming the ultimate combination of skilled soldier and brutal slayer.

Unseen Weapon (Su): As a standard action, you can wrap any melee weapon you wield in a layer of shifting shadows. This causes the weapon to darken, become less distinct, and leave a trail of shadow behind it as it moves.

Your weapon must be in hand and ready to use for you to draw upon this power.

You can dismiss the effect with a free action; dropping or sheathing the weapon also ends the effect.

Once per day per shadowblade level, you can activate one of the powers of your unseen weapon as a swift action.

At 1st level, you have the power to make an unerring strike (see below).

As you gain levels in the class, you acquire additional choices when activating your unseen weapon, as indicated on Table 2–6.

When you activate your unseen weapon, choose one of the available abilities.

Multiple uses of the same ability do not stack on a single attack.

Unerring Strike: Your next melee attack ignores any miss chance because of concealment or total concealment.

You gain this choice at 1st level.

Unexpected Strike: Your opponent is denied its Dexterity bonus against your next melee attack.

You gain this ability at 3rd level.

Ephemeral Weapon: Your next melee attack deals an extra 2d6 points of damage, as extraplanar darkness momentarily replaces portions of your opponent's body.

You gain this choice at 5th level.

Shadowy Strike: Your next melee attack is resolved as a melee touch attack, ignoring armor and natural armor.

You gain this ability at 7th level.

Far Shadow: Your melee reach is increased by 10 feet for 1 round.

You gain this choice at 9th level.

At 10th level, you can use your unseen weapon abilities as a free action, though you are still limited to one use per day per class level.

Shadow and Stealth (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, the shadows that engulf your unseen weapon cover you as well, granting you a circumstance bonus equal to half your class level (round down) on Hide and Move Silently checks.

Sudden Strike (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, if you can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from your attack, you can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Whenever your target is denied a dexterity bonus to Armor Class (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage with your attack.

This extra damage increases by 1d6 for every two levels thereafter.

You can't use sudden strike when flanking an opponent unless that opponent is denied its Dexterity bonus to AC. Ranged attacks can count as sudden strike attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

Sudden strike functions identically to sneak attack in all other respects.

The extra damage from sudden strike stacks with the extra damage from sneak attack whenever both would apply to the same target.

It also stacks with the ephemeral weapon ability of the unseen weapon class feature.

Shadow Vision (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you are able to see clearly in shadowy illumination.

Thus, you can see up to 40 feet clearly in the illumination provided by a torch (which gives off bright illumination in a 20-foot radius and shadowy illumination for 40 feet beyond that), or twice that if you have low-light vision.

See in Darkness (Su): At 7th level, you can see perfectly in darkness of any kind, even that created by a deeper darkness spell.

PLAYING A SHADOWBLADE

You are a soldier who has learned the benefits of stealth and the power of darkness.

You are not necessarily evil, but you are certainly violent and skilled in combat and killing.

Your attitude toward mystery users might vary.

If you deliberately set out to learn your skills, you likely belong to one of their organizations, but if you developed them instinctively, it's an even bet whether you consider them comrades or harbor a deep mistrust.

Although shadowblades exist in most shadow-related organizations, they are not specifically associated with such groups.

Many are independent operatives, mercenaries, or adventurers.

In fact, many are hired specifically to combat shadowcasters, because the abilities of the class help shadowblades overcome a shadowcaster's typical defenses.

COMBAT

You employ almost equal amounts of stealth and brute force.

You can work primarily as a front-line fighter, but your prowess in sneaking and surprise make you a better guerrilla and finesse fighter.

As your abilities of stealth improve, you become a viable scout, although your need to keep your weapon unsheathed might occasionally interfere with remaining unnoticed.

At higher levels, you can deliver surprise attacks from a short distance away, and even cut through the defenses of heavily armed foes.

Combined with your ever-increasing stealth, this enables you to fill in for either the rogue or the fighter, and even to make surgical strikes against foes that might be too tough for the rogue or other scout to handle.

ADVANCEMENT

You might have actively joined a shadow-related organization to learn your abilities.

You might have been approached by an experienced shadowblade or shadowcaster attracted by your skills and prowess, or by those that would use you as a tool against other shadow-based groups.

Most likely, however, you developed your abilities on your own, discovering an ability to manipulate shadow after exposure to it.

Continued training is not unlike that of other soldiers.

You drill in weapons and techniques of stealth, supplementing them with meditative techniques and, in some cases, occasional forays to the Plane of Shadow.

As you advance, you'll need to decide how much weight to give your martial abilities, and how much your stealth abilities and your Bluff modifier.

Are you a fighter who makes use of sneaky tactics, or a silent killer who can hold his own in battle?

RESOURCES

If you're part of an organization, the group might supply you with some basic equipment, but rarely much in the way of magic items; you'll need to acquire those on your own. Items that enhance Strength and Dexterity are important, as are those that improve your ability to sneak, and thus deliver your special attacks.

Items that enhance Listen and Spot, or that warn you of oncoming danger, are helpful because your stealth abilities do not aid you in detecting others with similar capabilities.

SHADOWBLADES IN THE WORLD

"When the baron heard a shadowblade was coming for him, he tripled the number of guardsmen on duty that night.

You know what it accomplished?

Three times as many guardsmen died tired."

—Gimble, gnome bard and traveling storyteller

The shadowblade class allows the DM to introduce shadow magic into the campaign without excluding the heavy fighters and to grant even the armor-clad warriors in the PC group some capability at stealth.

DAILY LIFE

Shadowblades live much like other professional warriors. They practice and train, pursuing their own interests in the few free hours they have.

They meditate on their abilities, making them appear more like ascetic or religious warriors (such as paladins) than standard soldiers, although none of their abilities are inherently religious.

They fill many of the same niches as other fighters: guards, soldiers, mercenaries, hired killers, and, of course, adventurers.

Shadowblades tend to be nocturnal, due to their growing connection with shadow, and many find themselves shunned in communities that do not understand their abilities.

NOTABLES

Only a few shadowblades have attained any notoriety, including Niko Drendol, leader of the merciless pirates of the Black Dawn; Jassra Orun, who adventures with multiple companies in her quest to learn more of the Material Plane; and Murrim Khaleed, a death knight in service to the Votaries of Vecna.

ORGANIZATION

As mentioned above, shadowblades are not associated with any specific organization.

When they do belong to such, they rarely advance far in the hierarchy, since they lack the mystical abilities that most of these organizations revere.

NPC REACTIONS

Most common folk think of the shadowblades as a martial order, mistaking them for a united faction or a religious institution.

On an individual basis, most people react to shadowblades with the same attitudes they would direct toward any professional soldier.

Should a shadowblade make substantial and open use of his shadow-related abilities, this attitude might worsen, as people begin to think of him as a sneak-thief, assassin, or soldier of darkness.

They try not to draw the shadowblade's ire, but instead do their best to hurry him about his business so that he might depart all the sooner.

Mystery users and spellcasters recognize shadowblades for what they are.

The attitude of such a character depends entirely on whether the shadowblade in question is a member of a friendly, neutral, or rival faction to the caster's own.

SHADOWBLADE LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research shadowblades to learn more about them.

When a character makes a check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Shadowblades are warriors who incorporate shadow and stealth into their combat techniques.

DC 15: Shadowblades are capable of masking their weapons and themselves in shadow, granting them supernatural powers, such as the ability to strike protected targets or to attack from a distance.

DC 20: Many of the shadowblades' abilities are not functional against nonliving foes, such as undead or constructs.

If you can cause them to drop or change their weapons, it takes a moment for them to reactivate their powers, offering a brief window of opportunity.

SHADOWBLADES IN THE GAME

Shadowblades are scattered throughout many organizations, guilds, and adventuring parties.

When introducing them to an ongoing campaign, it's reasonable to simply assume that the PCs have never before encountered one.

Alternatively, perhaps one of the PCs is the first person in the region to develop these abilities.

This prestige class makes a good choice for anyone who wants to play a warrior with a stealthy or mystical bent. So long as the DM does not restrict encounters to creatures immune to his abilities, and gives him the occasional chance to scout ahead, to take out an enemy leader, or otherwise to make use of his less direct forms of confrontation, the player should feel his efforts worthwhile.

ADAPTATION

Shadowblades do not have to be associated with shadow.

Perhaps they are an order of killers for hire, who cloak themselves and their weapons in illusion and invisibility. Then again, they might truly be members of a religious order, their power obtained through faith in a deity of darkness or deception.

TABLE 2-6: THE SHADOWBLADE HIT DIE: D8

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+2	+0	+0	Unseen weapon (unerring strike)
2nd	+1	+3	+0	+0	Shadow and stealth, sudden strike +1d6

SHADOWSMITH

"You think me unarmed.

You think me helpless.

So long as there is night and day, I am neither."

—Hrogar Ilgenon, shadowsmith and First Mate of the Fourth Dragon

Shadowcasters draw power from darkness, and masters of shadow command it, but no one truly manipulates the darkness as does the shadowsmith.

Combining martial and mystical skills, and possessed of a driving will, the shadowsmith forms his tools and weapons from shadowstuff itself, drawing forth matter from empty night.

BECOMING A SHADOWSMITH

Almost anyone can become a shadowsmith under the proper circumstances.

Rangers, paladins, and clerics are most likely to meet the requirements first, though some rogues follow this path as well.

Although they could have the proper skills, few mystery users or spellcasters pursue this class, since its casting progression is far slower than their own.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5

Skills: Craft (armorsmithing, blacksmithing, or weaponsmithing) 5 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 3 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 3 ranks

Special: Must have been exposed to shadow at some point prior to taking this class, either through travel on the Plane of Shadow, being subject to a mystery or a spell with the darkness descriptor, or physical contact with a shadow or dark creature (such as a shadow mastiff or a dark lion)

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Move Silently, Profession.

CLASS FEATURES

Your abilities allow you to create tools and weapons out of darkness itself.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You are proficient with simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields (except tower shields).

Mysteries Known: You have the ability to cast a small number of mysteries.

To cast a mystery, you must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the mystery level, so if you have an Intelligence of 10 or lower, you cannot cast mysteries.

High ability scores do not provide bonus mysteries.

Saving throws against your mysteries have a DC of 10 + mystery level + your Int modifier.

Your selection of mysteries is extremely limited.

You begin in this class knowing only a single 1st-level mystery.

Every four levels thereafter (at 5th and 9th), you gain an additional mystery known.

As with the shadowcaster class, you may not skip ahead in a given path.

Your mysteries must all be drawn from an apprentice path, and you cast them all as arcane spells.

You can use each mystery you know once per day.

You do not gain fundamentals.

Touch of Shadow (Su): At 1st level, your ability to manipulate shadow is undeveloped.

You cannot yet create actual items, but you can surround your hands and feet in a layer of shadow.

This ability grants you a bonus on Climb checks equal to your class level.

Further, it distributes your weight more evenly, so you cannot be tracked.

Touch of shadow lasts for 1 minute per class level and is usable a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Shroud of Shadow (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can surround your body in a thin layer of shadow.

You gain a bonus on Hide checks and Move Silently checks equal to your class level.

Shroud of shadow lasts for 1 minute per class level and is usable a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Shadow Craft (Su): As of 3rd level, you can create small items, such as tools or weapons, from shadow.

You need merely place your hands into any shadow and draw forth the desired item.

It cannot possess moving or flexible parts, so you could not create a crossbow, a rope, a flail, or a cabinet.

You can create nearly any other weapon, simple tool, or small item, however.

You can create one item weighing a number of pounds up to twice your class level, or two items whose combined weight does not exceed that limit.

Using shadow craft is a standard action.

If the item leaves your possession, it fades away in 1d4 rounds.

Otherwise, it lasts for 1 hour per class level.

Shadow craft is usable a number of times per day equal to one-half your class level.

Items created by shadow craft cannot be employed as material components or foci in spellcasting.

If you want to create an item that mimics a specific item you have seen, you must succeed on a DC 20 Craft check of the appropriate sort (weaponsmithing, for instance).

At 6th level, you can enhance your creations.

You can imbue a shadow-crafted weapon or shield with an enhancement bonus equal to your class level minus 5.

For instance, if you are an 8th-level shadowsmith, you can create a +3 battle axe.

If you create two enhanced items at one time (which becomes possible when you attain 7th level), you must divide the total enhancement bonus between those items.

(For instance, at 8th level, you could create a +1 battleaxe and a +2 large shield).

To succeed at this enhanced crafting, you must make an appropriate Craft check for each item (usually weaponsmithing or armorsmithing) against a DC of 20 + the desired enhancement bonus.

If you fail, the item is nonmagical.

You can only have one enhanced shadow-crafted item (or two, if they were created in the same round) at a time.

If you create new enhanced items, the old ones immediately become nonmagical.

Attempting to create an enhanced item (or two, if so desired) with shadow craft is a full-round action.

At 8th level, you can use shadow craft to create light armor for yourself (which you can give an enhancement bonus to).

The armor you craft automatically has the improved shadow special ability (DMG 219).

At 9th level, you can quicken your shadow crafting.

You need only a standard action to create enhanced items and only a swift action to create nonmagical ones.

At 10th level, you can apply the shadow striking ability (see page 155) to any magic weapon you create through shadow craft.

(If you create two weapons at once, only one can be shadow striking).

Further, you do not need to craft the item on the Plane of Shadow as is normally the case with shadow striking weapons.

Armor of Shadow (Su): Starting at 4th level, you can take a standard action to surround yourself in hardened shadow.

This ability grants you a +2 deflection bonus to AC.

Armor of shadow lasts for 10 minutes per class level, and is usable a number of times per day equal to one-half your class level.

At 7th level, the deflection bonus increases to +4.

At 10th level, you quicken your armor of shadow, activating it as a swift action.

Widen Shroud (Su): Starting at 5th level, you can widen your touch of shadow ability to include a number of companions equal to one-half your class level.

If they move more than 10 feet from you, the effect ends for them; coming closer to you again does not restore it.

Widen shroud lasts for 1 minute per class level; each use counts as a daily use of your touch of shadow ability.

PLAYING A SHADOWSMITH

You are self-reliant and skillful, a master of craft and combat.

You do not necessarily devote your life to shadow, instead seeing it as a tool and a weapon.

While you must be at least somewhat learned to have developed your abilities, you are more interested in actions than words.

While the various shadow-based organizations all welcome shadowsmiths, finding their abilities useful and fascinating, none permit their kind to advance far in the ranks.

Shadowsmiths lack the mystical abilities required for advancement in the Tenebrous Cabal, and they rarely have sufficient power to force their way into the upper echelons of the Votaries or the Nightshade Covenant.

Like the shadowblades, they often occupy guard and support positions, although some have made names as field operatives and even assassins for the various factions.

COMBAT

Shadowsmiths do not have a universal fighting style.

Rather, you are likely to stick with whatever tactics served you best in your prior class—front-line battle for fighters, sneak attacks for rogues, and so on—supplemented by your new abilities.

The stealth boost provided by your low-level abilities is particularly useful for rogues and mobile fighters, while your ability to create almost any equipment you need means you can arm yourself as appropriate for whatever's coming.

ADVANCEMENT

Most shadowsmiths learn from other shadowsmiths, either having sought out, or been approached by, a potential mentor.

Some teach themselves, having researched the secrets of the art.

A rare few develop their abilities spontaneously.

Training in the shadowsmith's art is a strange combination of lessons and endeavors.

While meditative techniques and mental exercises are essential to the continued evolution of your mystical abilities and mysteries, you must also study to become an expert artisan in your field.

While you spend far less time poring over old tomes than shadowcasters, preferring to occupy forges and workshops, you spend no less time in long, arduous practice.

Advancing shadowsmiths should focus on Strength or Dexterity—whichever most benefits your preferred combat style—but also on Intelligence.

Your skills, particularly Craft, affect how well you can take advantage of your various abilities.

You only know a few mysteries, and can use each only once per day, so select those that best complement your other abilities.

RESOURCES

You rarely obtain anything from other shadowsmiths except training.

Organizations to which you belong might offer raw materials for your standard crafting skills, but will expect you to create items for them in exchange.

SHADOWSMITHS IN THE WORLD

"Dabblers!

They borrow power they do not understand and treat it like a simple tool to make even simpler tools.

Yet we dare not dismiss them, for they are true experts at what they do, and physically manipulate shadow in ways even the best of us cannot."

—Eddas Coradran, Lord of the First House, Parliament of Shadows

Along with the shadowblade, the shadowsmith allows even players uninterested in portraying casters to take advantage of the material presented in this chapter.

While the shadowblade is a heavy fighter, however, the shadowsmith is the perfect choice for lighter warriors, rangers, and rogues.

Their shadow craft ability makes shadowsmiths exceptionally self-sufficient, and their capacity for stealth is almost unequaled.

DAILY LIFE

Most shadowsmiths are either warriors for hire, adventurers, or actual craftsmen with a mystical bent.

While their abilities clearly mark them as something other than their compatriots, they do not stand out to the same degree that other mystery users do.

Thus, although shadowsmiths spend more time in study and practice, their lives differ only marginally from those members of the classes from which they come.

Few shadowsmiths aspire to positions of authority; as a group, they are more focused on their crafting.

Those who do manage to obtain power tend to be community or military leaders, and rarely rule more than small villages or provinces in the name of a greater lord.

NOTABLES

Few shadowsmiths have become famous.

Those who have include Hrogar Ilgenon, famed warrior and lieutenant on the coastal raiding vessel Fourth Dragon, and Lozruet, a drow who uses her abilities to hunt famous adventurers.

ORGANIZATION

While shadowsmiths rarely rise high in the larger shadow-focused organizations, they have formed a few of their own. Some of these—such as the Guild of Nocturnal Efforts, the largest known—hold a reasonable degree of political sway in the cities that house them.

In these organizations, shadowsmiths make up the entirety of the power structure, if not the whole of the faction itself. Even the guild, however, is far smaller and less influential than the organizations presented herein.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people respond to a shadowsmith as they would to any member of her apparent class.

If they happen to learn of the shadowsmith's abilities, their reactions change based on their view of magic in general. People might be a bit more suspicious of a shadowsmith (attitude one category worse) if they are of a particularly religious bent, or if they interpret her manipulation of shadow as a sign of evil.

In most cases, however, the shadowsmith's abilities pass as just another form of magic, since they aren't as overtly strange as those of other shadow magicians.

The exception to this general rule is the shadowsmith who uses her mysteries, as opposed to her other abilities, regularly and in full view of common folk.

The alien nature of shadow magic makes these shadowsmiths stand out more than their more subtle counterparts.

SHADOWSMITH LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research shadowsmiths to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Shadowsmiths can create items out of nothingness. DC 15: As they advance, shadowsmiths can create more potent items and armor, and can cloak themselves in shadow to hide.

They also have access to a few mysteries.

DC 20: The items created by a shadowsmith have a limited life span, although some last many hours.

If you can wait one out and strike at the right time, she might be vulnerable.

A bardic knowledge check or a Gather Information check (in a community that has a shadowsmith guild) can reveal the same information as these skill checks, but in each case the DC is 5 higher than the given value.

SHADOWSMITHS IN THE GAME

Because a shadowsmith's combat style and general behavior doesn't change from her prior class, it's easy to mistake her for a fighter, a rogue, a ranger, or the like.

Only when she casts a mystery or creates a shadow-crafted item does her true nature become apparent; thus, PCs might have encountered shadowsmiths without realizing it.

Alternatively, only a particular race or community in a given campaign might have discovered these abilities. Given the adaptable nature of the prestige class, players who were largely happy with their characters' previous classes, but wanted an unusual twist, should be happy with the shadowsmith.

Its abilities can enhance both martial and stealth-related characters, augmenting them without altering them so greatly that their inherent nature changes.

ADAPTATION

The DM can easily change the shadowsmith into a class that manipulates essences or substances other than darkness.

Champions of Pelor, for instance, might form items out of light, and apply the ghost touch or disruption special abilities rather than shadow striking.

A character might form tools from smoke, or fire, or even force.

TENEBOUS APOSTATE

“Rise again, Lord of the Outer Dark.

Stand astride the barriers of life and death, of Heaven and Hell, and take up thy mantle as slayer—and king—of gods.”

—Suvas J'hond, former priest of Vecna, now a Tenebrous apostate

No other vestige is quite like Tenebrous.

The remnant of the divinity once possessed by Orcus, Tenebrous is perhaps the only vestige still worshiped in some places as a god, and so tightly bound to a living—if not mortal—being.

This unique status grants Tenebrous the ability to manipulate the world in ways that other vestiges cannot. Some Tenebrous apostates revere Orcus, seeing Tenebrous as part of their sundered god and the seed from which he will one day sprout anew.

Others see the corpulent fiend as the embodiment of Tenebrous's downfall.

These followers believe that Tenebrous is a separate deity who attempted to manifest through Orcus, only to be laid low when the demon proved unworthy.

BECOMING A TENEBROUS APOSTATE

If you have sufficient mental fortitude and lack of scruples to devote yourself to a former demon god, you might qualify to join the ranks of Tenebrous's disciples.

The vast majority of Tenebrous apostates are multiclass binder/clerics, though a rare few are binder/blackguards. Charisma is the key ability for a Tenebrous apostate, since it influences many class abilities.

Wisdom and Constitution are also important because they affect divine spells and hit points, respectively.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nongood

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks

Special: Ability to bind Tenebrous

Special: Ability to turn or rebuke undead

Special: Must worship Tenebrous as a god

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (the planes), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Sense Motive.

CLASS FEATURES

As a servant of Tenebrous, you gain power over darkness and undeath.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a Tenebrous apostate, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Soul Binding: At each Tenebrous apostate level beyond 1st, your soul binding ability improves as if you had also gained a level in the binder class.

Your Tenebrous apostate levels and binder levels stack for the purpose of determining your bonus on binding checks, the effectiveness of your vestige-granted abilities, your ability to bind higher-level vestiges, and the number of vestiges you can bind.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a binder would have gained.

Eternal Bondage (Ex): You no longer need to summon Tenebrous every day; you are bound to him constantly.

You cannot choose to bind a different vestige in his place.

However, you can still attempt a binding check each day to negate his influence.

Tenebrous's Rebuke (Su): When you use the turn or rebuke undead ability granted by Tenebrous, your connection to your dark master allows you to channel the energy in a unique way.

You can use a turn attempt to deal 1d6 points of damage per effective turning level you possess to every undead creature within 30 feet.

Each affected undead can attempt a Will save (DC 10 + your effective turning level + your Cha modifier) for half damage.

If you use a rebuke attempt, each undead within 30 feet is instead cured of 1d6 points of damage per effective turning level.

This effect occurs instead of the normal result of a turn or rebuke attempt.

You can still use these turn attempts in conjunction with divine feats, as normal.

Visage of the Dead (Su): When you attain 2nd level, your body begins to resemble that of an undead creature.

Your skin darkens, appearing dusky and shadowy in dim illumination and corpse-gray in bright light, and you lose roughly half your body weight.

Because of these changes, you gain a +1 dodge bonus to Armor Class and a +1 circumstance bonus on Escape Artist and Intimidate checks.

Furthermore, mindless undead believe you to be one of them and do not attack you except in self-defense, or when ordered to do so by their creator.

Destroy/Empower Undead (Su): At 3rd level, you gain additional power over mindless undead.

You can use two turn or rebuke attempts as a single standard action, each dealing (or healing) damage as per the Tenebrous's rebuke ability (see above), except that the damage applies only to mindless undead.

Umbral Body (Su): Beginning at 4th level, you can transform yourself into pure darkness once per day.

This ability functions like the umbral body shadow magic mystery (see page 152).

You can remain in this form for a number of rounds equal to twice your Tenebrous apostate level or return to your normal form early as a swift action.

Once you return to physical form, you cannot use this ability again for 5 rounds.

Blast of the Void (Su): When you attain 5th level, you can use a turn or rebuke attempt to deal 1d8 points of damage per effective turning level to every living creature within a 30-foot cone.

This ability is usable once per day.

EX-TENEBROUS APOSTATES

If you ever cease to revere Tenebrous as a god, you lose your Tenebrous apostate class features as well as most of your cleric class features, if any (see Ex-Clerics, page 33 of Player's Handbook).

PLAYING A TENEBROUS APOSTATE

You are committed to returning Tenebrous to divinity. While you might not spend every waking hour furthering this agenda, it dominates your life, taking precedence over all other matters.

You might serve and worship alone, or as part of a rare Tenebrous-worshipping cult, or within a cult of Orcus that seeks to return the demon prince to godhood.

However you choose to serve, you must hide what you are from everyone except other worshipers of your patron. In the greater world, those who would not hate you for being a binder would certainly persecute you for your choice of patron.

This wide-ranging persecution might cause you to resent others and even seek vengeance upon them.

If you are a member of a Tenebrous cult, your rank is probably based on experience and prior service to the sect. Considering how small such cults are, however, rank might hold little meaning, since you're one of probably only a handful of people.

COMBAT

Upon becoming a Tenebrous apostate, your best strategy is to either hang back and use your spells to aid your allies, or select a lightly armored foe, close swiftly, and bring your target down quickly in melee combat.

As you advance in the prestige class, you gain much greater power over undead, and your abilities rival those of single-classed clerics of comparable character level with, respect to mindless undead.

When you reach the pinnacle of your abilities as a Tenebrous apostate, you can engage foes with little risk because your umbral body form offers both protection from physical attacks and unparalleled mobility.

ADVANCEMENT

You might have come to this prestige class through membership in an Orcus sect or a cult of Tenebrous, or you might simply have discovered the secret nature of this vestige while progressing as a binder.

If you belong to a sect dedicated to either Orcus or Tenebrous, you begin your service by serving as the eyes of your cult in other organizations and communities.

At higher levels, you could become an enforcer for your sect, or even a seeker of ancient lore.

As you attain higher levels, focus on improving your Charisma score, but don't neglect your Wisdom score either.

Study which monsters make the best skeletons and zombies—not merely from a combat perspective, but also in terms of stealth or speed.

Your ability to control and possess such creatures opens up a wide range of strategic and tactical possibilities for you.

When you select skills and spells, consider focusing on those that enhance your deceptive abilities, such as Bluff and anti-divination spells, since you cannot afford to be exposed as a Tenebrous apostate.

RESOURCES

Perhaps the greatest resource others in your sect can offer you is support and companionship.

Everyone else in the world is likely to hate you if they ever learn what you really are, so your compatriots within the cult might be your only allies.

Consider acquiring equipment that aids you in hiding your true allegiance, augments your ability to command undead, or offers you some long-range offensive capability.

In addition, try to acquire some magical protection and decent weaponry so that melee becomes a viable choice for you.

TENEBOUS APOSTATES IN THE WORLD

"They sell their souls not merely to a dark god, hut to a false one. I can think of no allegiance more vile."

—Jozan, adventuring cleric and servant of Pelor

A Tenebrous apostate can help introduce the backstory of Orcus and Tenebrous into your campaign, perhaps setting up his divine resurrection as a future plotline.

Even if you have no intention of designing an adventure around this vestige, a Tenebrous apostate serves as a wonderful foil for other binders.

Even the binder, so widely hated and feared himself, has reason to hate and fear the Tenebrous apostate.

This character should seem quite alien to the PCs because it combines the abilities of two classes normally considered to be at odds.

Finally, an apostate's powers and patron prove that even the most experienced binder does not truly understand the nature of the vestiges with which he deals.

DAILY LIFE

Daily life for most Tenebrous apostates resembles that of the ordinary people around them.

Since they cannot allow others (particularly civil and religious authorities) to find out that they are binders, let alone to which vestige they are constantly bound, they make every effort to behave like their neighbors.

Rites to revere Tenebrous are held in secret, often hidden chambers or underground complexes.

Only in the most depraved societies—those in which entities such as Orcus are already worshiped openly—do followers of Tenebrous make themselves known.

Tenebrous apostates who manage to seize political power usually make horrific dictators.

Such leaders advance their agendas by enslaving the people and forcing them to work for the benefit of Tenebrous's cult.

The most troublesome are sacrificed and converted into tireless undead workers and soldiers.

No non-evil rulers who adhere to the tenets of Tenebrous have ever been recorded, since few neutral Tenebrous apostates are willing to engage in the sort of acts necessary to usurp control of an entire community.

NOTABLES

Within the ranks of the Tenebrous apostates, three names stand out.

The first is Suvas J'hond, a convert from the worship of Vecna who now leads a sizable Tenebrous cult.

The second is Urluran Kalael, a powerful ghoul.

Though she belongs to no sect, she is perhaps the greatest undead Tenebrous apostate.

The third is the mysterious Luxx, who remains an enigma. Legend has painted him as an orc, an elf, a hobgoblin, or an ugly human, depending on the teller.

Whatever his true race, Luxx is said to have risen through the ranks of several Tenebrous cults and destroyed them all from within.

Despite this history, he maintains his abilities and Tenebrous's favor, much to the confusion at other apostates.

Luxx is something of a bogeyman to the various Tenebrous cults, all of which would dearly love to capture him, learn his true goals, and find out why Tenebrous has not punished his transgressions.

ORGANIZATION

No two cults of Tenebrous (or Orcus, for that matter) are set up in the same way.

In most instances, the more powerful members—be they clerics, Tenebrous apostates, or members of some other class—hold sway over the others.

Advancement often comes through the death of a superior. The only true commonality among Tenebrous sects is the burning desire to see the former god return to his divine state and rise higher, eventually becoming the ultimate power of death and darkness.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people who know the nature of Tenebrous apostates react to them with hostility. Some hate them just for being binders; others despise them for their worship of Tenebrous as well as their perceived connection to the demon prince Orcus.

Tenebrous sects are opposed by nearly all religious organizations and churches (particularly but not exclusively good-aligned ones), by most governments, and even by some Orcus cults.

Oddly, Tenebrous apostates sometimes receive kind treatment from devils, and a devil knowledgeable about the prestige class might even be helpful.

TENEBOUS APOSTATE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (the planes) or Knowledge (religion) can research Tenebrous apostates to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: The Tenebrous apostates are devout followers of a spirit that was formerly a dark god of undeath.

DC 15: Tenebrous apostates combine clerical magic with the ability to bind unholy spirits.

They command undead and manipulate darkness.

DC 20: Tenebrous was tightly linked to the demon prince Orcus.

Some say the two were once one and the same, but that they somehow split into two entities.

TENEBOUS APOSTATES IN THE GAME

Tenebrous apostates might first appear in your campaign as members of a religious sect opposed to the PCs, as a hidden threat within an apparently normal community, or as rivals that PC binders must thwart lest they do even more harm to the class's already poor reputation.

The Tenebrous apostate appeals to players who enjoy portraying darker characters and prefer to focus on less direct methods of confrontation.

So long as they aren't constantly encountering situations that render their abilities useless, and they can portray their need to hide from others without turning every game into a "run from the law" situation, players should continue to enjoy the class.

ADAPTATION

Tenebrous apostates need not be connected inextricably to Orcus.

They could be operatives of any god or vestige of death, although if you choose to lift the binder prerequisite from the prestige class, you'll need to find some other source for the abilities that Tenebrous would normally grant.

Alternatively, the Tenebrous apostate class can serve as inspiration for the creation of prestige classes specific to other vestiges.

TABLE 1-6: THE TENEBOUS APOSTATE HIT DIE: D8

Level	Base				Special	Spellcasting
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+0	+2	+0	+2	Eternal bondage, Tenebrous's rebuke	—
2nd	+1	+3	+0	+3	Soul binding +1, visage of the dead	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class
3rd	+2	+3	+1	+3	Destroy/empower undead, soul binding +2	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class
4th	+3	+4	+1	+4	Soul binding +3, umbral body	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class
5th	+3	+4	+1	+4	Blast of the void, soul binding +4	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class

TENEBOUS AS A GOD

Although Tenebrous exists only as a vestige, clerics who worship him receive spells from somewhere. Perhaps the remnants of his divinity are sufficient that he can still grant spells, or perhaps the spells come from some other source (much as the spells "granted" by demon lords do). His clerics have access to the Chaos, Death, Evil, and Trickery domains. As a deity, consider Tenebrous to be neutral evil.

WITCH SLAYER

"An insidious group, these binders.

They are dangerous and unpredictable, and they pose a significant risk to the divine order."

—Sybelan, Seropaean Witch Slayer

Witch slayers devote themselves to capturing and destroying those who share their souls with other entities. Not content with hunting only binders and other practitioners of pact magic, they seek out and destroy anyone who gives up command of his soul.

To a witch slayer, it doesn't matter whether the target is a possessed wizard or a virtuous binder; anyone who harbors two souls in the same vessel is an abomination.

Though they are often found in the employ of organizations that oppose binders and demonologists, witch slayers serve many different kinds of masters, so long as the pay is worth the risk.

BECOMING A WITCH SLAYER

The ranger class offers a good selection of class features that complement those gained from the witch slayer prestige class.

However, both of the skills required for entry into the class are cross-class skills for a ranger.

Fighters and paladins often become witch slayers as well, and paladins have no problem meeting the skill requirements.

Clerics and wizards can make excellent witch slayers, but the class is not popular among spellcasters because it lacks a spellcasting progression.

The key ability for a witch slayer is Charisma because various class features—including the smite ability—depend on it.

Wisdom is also important because it improves both Will saves and awareness skills.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks

Special: Must have fought a binder or possessed creature

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

As a witch slayer, you gain abilities that help you fight supernatural agents possessing other beings.

Smite Spirit Sharer (Su): Once per day per witch slayer level, you can smite a binder with a bound vestige or any creature possessed by another (by means of malevolence, a dual mind, or any similar ability) with a normal melee attack.

You add your Charisma bonus (if any) to your attack roll and deal 1 extra point of damage per witch slayer level.

If you accidentally smite a creature that is not either possessed or bound to a vestige, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

Mettle (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can shrug off magical effects that could harm you.

If you make a successful Will or Fortitude saving throw that would normally reduce (rather than negate) a spell or other magical effect, the magic has no effect on you at all. Any spell that is normally negated by a successful saving throw is unaffected by this ability.

Locate Possession (Su): By the time you attain 3rd level, you have attuned your senses to discern the presence of possessing forces.

By concentrating for a full round, you can determine the presence or absence of any possessing mind within a 60-foot cone.

By concentrating for a second full round, you can determine the location of the possessed creature or object. A possessing creature whose Hit Dice are higher than your character level can attempt a Will saving throw (DC 10 + your witch slayer level + your Cha modifier) to avoid detection.

An opponent that succeeds on the saving throw has immunity to your locate possession ability for 24 hours.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 4th level, you gain the special rogue ability slippery mind (PH 51).

Momentary Disjunction (Su): At 5th level, you can temporarily disable the spellcasting, spell-like, and supernatural abilities of a single creature within 30 feet as a swift action.

If the target fails a Will saving throw (DC 20 + your Cha modifier), it cannot use spells, spell-like abilities, or supernatural abilities of any kind, as if affected by an antimagic field, for 1 round.

Once you have used this ability, you cannot do so again for 5 rounds.

Multiclass Note: A paladin who becomes a witch slayer can continue advancing as a paladin.

PLAYING A WITCH SLAYER

When hunting those who share their souls with other beings, you must keep your wits about you and your weapon handy at all times.

You take pains to look like any other mercenary because keeping a low profile helps you track your quarry.

Be prepared to face any challenge.

Many of those who house extra souls are just fools who dabble in the forbidden, but a few choose to accommodate demons, ghosts, or worse in their bodies.

As a witch slayer, you perform tasks for a loosely structured organization that is an outgrowth of the Order of Seropaenes (see page 90).

This organization is divided into numerous local groups called coteries, each of which is led by three senior witch slayers collectively known as the council.

In all probability, you were recruited by a senior member of one of these coteries.

COMBAT

In your first battles as a witch slayer, it's best to focus on eliminating lackeys and minions with your sword while you develop your defenses against magic.

As you advance, you gain the ability to avoid many magical effects that might otherwise dissuade or damage you.

Your mettle and slippery mind abilities in particular protect you from many kinds of magical attacks.

When you reach the pinnacle of your abilities, momentary disjunction becomes your most lethal weapon in a fight against binders or spellcasters.

Use it when you are in position to make a full attack, or to use some other maneuver that disables the target when its defenses are down.

Pair with a tough melee specialist, such as a fighter or barbarian, to maximize the amount of damage you can deal, and always try to eliminate your opponent quickly before she has a chance to escape.

ADVANCEMENT

Witch slayers hungrily recruit followers to their cause.

As a new recruit, you are expected to perform the scut work, cooking, cleaning, guarding, and a variety of other menial tasks for your coterie.

During this period, you earn the respect of your peers and prove your skills in combat with either steel or spell.

Upon attaining your first level of witch slayer, you are welcomed as a full-fledged member of the coterie.

As a low-ranking member, you are assigned many dangerous jobs.

You often work ahead of a group to root out the possessed, or to scout a haunted site.

All such tasks are intended to test your mettle and help you prove your worth to the group.

The council might also dispatch you to kill wanted binders, or possibly to capture them on behalf of some employer and escort them to a designated location.

In time, you can freelance, taking any side jobs you wish to supplement your income and expand your experience.

Awareness skills are critical for a witch slayer, so keep your Listen, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot modifiers as high as possible.

Gather Information and Knowledge skills can give you an edge in seeking out soul sharers, so it's wise to devote some skill points to those as well.

Feats that augment your defenses could also prove useful, so pick up Combat Expertise and Mobility if at all possible.

For equipment, purchase items that boost your saving throws.

Cloaks of resistance, periapts of Wisdom, amulets of health, and gloves of Dexterity are all great choices.

RESOURCES

Even the smallest coterie of witch slayers maintains a network of sympathizers and contacts.

The information that such a network can provide about known and suspected binders is perhaps the greatest resource a coterie can offer, since knowledge of a mark's movements and habits is critical to the success of your missions.

Membership in a coterie grants you a +2 circumstance bonus on Gather Information checks regarding users of pact magic in communities that are friendly to witch slayers.

In addition, witch slayer coterie have a reputation for getting the job done when it counts.

Thus, witch slayers from a particularly well-known group can gain audiences with high priests and influential nobles immediately.

Finally, coterie enjoy steady employment.

Even members who do jobs on the side have an easier time finding work than do independent adventurers.

A member of a coterie receives a +2 bonus on Gather Information checks made to seek employment.

WITCH SLAYERS IN THE WORLD

"Relentless jackals, every one."

—Maduvan, Dantalion-Bound Knight of the Sacred Seal

Any party of PCs that includes a binder can expect to face a witch slayer at some point.

But when you need a sinister group of warriors for your campaign, consider a coterie of witch slayers.

Its members are intimidating veterans of supernatural battles, hardened by their experiences, and they make unrelenting, implacable foes.

Many large religious institutions rely exclusively on witch slayers to track down heretics and enemies of the faith.

In fact witch slayers enjoy such prominence in the major churches that they can typically come and go as they please and set their sights on any targets they choose.

DAILY LIFE

Most days, a witch slayer does nothing but wait—either for the next job, or for information about a suspect to trickle in from his spies.

Thus, he has plenty of time to adventure and is relatively free to undertake whatever side jobs or quests he chooses.

Even for such diversionary excursions, however, witch slayers usually prefer missions that involve tracking down undead, fiends, or rogue spellcasters.

NOTABLES

Oddly, the most famous witch slayer no longer claims to be one.

Michael Ambrose, a former paladin who is now garrison commander at the Seropaenean Tower of Woe (see page 100), served on the council of a witch slayer coterie known as the White Swords.

During his tenure with the coterie, Ambrose and his allies single-handedly captured or killed nearly fifty binders.

The White Swords served the Church of St. Cuthbert and became famous throughout the civilized world for their effectiveness and righteous zeal.

However, the glory of this near-legendary group did not last.

Perhaps because of his overly zealous efforts at exterminating binders, Michael eventually lost his paladin abilities.

Still he pressed on, believing that his god was merely testing his faith.

Slowly, Michael became less and less able to distinguish between the heretic and the innocent, and the atrocities he committed in the name of righteousness became infamous. At last, the White Swords cast him out of their coterie, lest he tarnish their name further.

Appalled, Michael joined the Order of Seropaenes so that he could continue his mission for his god directly instead of through intermediaries who had obviously been blinded by evil.

On occasion, the fact that he still cannot communicate with his god disturbs him.

He remains convinced, however, that this difficulty is merely a test, and that one day St. Cuthbert will shower him with blessings.

ORGANIZATION

No two witch slayer coterie are the same.

Some consist exclusively of paladins, while others welcome only witch slayers with clerical backgrounds, and still others are open to witch slayers who come from any class. Each coterie consists of ten to forty core members (witch slayers) and up to one hundred support staff, including spies, servants, craftsmen, and mercenaries.

Each coterie has a name that is selected at its inception by its three founders.

Coterie names tend to be somewhat flashy, such as White Swords, Rooks, Conventicle of the Thirteen, Crimson Moon Slayers, or the like.

The council that leads each coterie is made up of three senior witch slayers—one with a rogue emphasis, one with a martial emphasis, and one with a spellcasting emphasis. Their titles are Stealth, War, and Magic, respectively.

War oversees the coterie's military arm, Stealth controls espionage and assassination, and Magic manages the spellcasters.

As a body, the council makes all decisions about what jobs to take, manages the expenditure of resources, and confirms new candidates.

Its members also represent the group to potential employers—often the Order of Seropaenes, though various churches make extensive use of witch slayers as well.

The three leaders parcel out jobs to members of the coterie based on their skills and seniority.

Though they tend to give new members rather dangerous tasks, they know their members' abilities quite well and don't risk lives needlessly.

If a given mark is unusually powerful, the council itself might even undertake the job.

The council confers with the leaders of other coterie by means of spells and messengers on matters that affect witch slayers at large or issues that cross boundaries between areas of influence, but they otherwise maintain little contact with other coterie.

Once a year, each coterie's council sends one of its three members to a meeting held at a newly chosen secret location.

There the leaders discuss plans, mediate disputes, determine territories, and manage any other business for the upcoming year.

Although the council controls much of the coterie's business, an intricate hierarchy guides those beneath them.

Each leader has two advisors known as hands, who carry out orders and pass along commands to underlings.

Beneath each hand are up to five fingers, each of whom controls a squad of witch slayers.

Promotion is based on both merit and seniority. Senior members receive first consideration for any vacancies in higher positions, but the council sometimes does promote newer members who prove more effective and useful to the larger organization than their senior fellows.

Each witch slayer coterie stakes a claim to a particular region, and rivalries sometimes erupt where territories overlap.

Rivalries also exist within the coterie themselves, since the members of each branch tend to see themselves as better and more useful than the others.

The council members encourage such competition but are careful to prevent it from getting out of hand.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people fear witch slayers.

Commoners tend to shun them, displaying an unfriendly attitude at best.

Those few ordinary folk who do not go out of their way to avoid witch slayers nevertheless resent them, treating them with indifference.

Clerics associated with the Order of Seropaenes are generally friendly toward witch slayers, but even they have reservations about such individuals.

Overall, they consider witch slayers an undesirable means to a good end.

Clerics not affiliated with the order tend to be unfriendly because they see witch slayers as zealots—mercenaries who accept gold for the blood of innocents.

Binders are another matter entirely.

Since witch slayers exist to destroy users of pact magic, they represent a threat not only to the binder's livelihood, but also to his freedom and his life.

Binders and their ilk are always hostile to witch slayers.

WITCH SLAYER LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (religion) can research witch slayers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Witch slayers form groups called coterie that serve various churches by hunting down and killing heretics.

DC 15: Always give deference to a witch slayer, lest he suspect you of being a heretic.

DC 20: Witch slayers are not beholden to any particular god.

A coterie that serves the Church of Vecna one week might work for the Church of Heironeous the next.

DC 25: Witch slayers are most concerned about creatures that share their souls—both those that are possessed and those that give up their souls willingly.

To them, both kinds of soul sharing merit death.

Contacting a group of witch slayers is easy.

A successful DC 15 Gather Information check reveals whether a coterie exists in a given city.

A character wishing to hire a coterie gains a +4 circumstance bonus on this check if she is a cleric, or a +2 bonus otherwise.

Alternatively, a PC can contact a local church of Heironeous, Wee Jas, Vecna, or St. Cuthbert, since all these institutions tend to keep coterie in their employ.

WITCH SLAYERS IN THE GAME

Witch slayers are natural foils for binders.

A coterie following up on a lead about a coven of anima mages or binders can appear in the region where the characters are based at any time.

Alternatively, since witch slayers do know the value of discretion, a coterie might always have been present—its members might simply have chosen to act covertly until it served their purpose to do otherwise.

A witch slayer can be a great character choice for a player who likes mystery and intrigue.

Witch slayers have the investigatory skills to track down their quarry and the combat prowess to deal with foes when they find them.

If you have a witch slayer PC in your group, be sure to let him do some investigation and interact with NPCs during his hunt.

ADAPTATION

Although witch slayers are designed as opponents for binder PCs or NPCs, you can use this class even if you don't use pact magic in your game.

A witch slayer might, for example, function as a maverick slayer of evil if you simply change the smite soul sharer ability to smite evil.

NEW SPELL: DETECT VESTIGE

Several witch slayer Magics worked together to develop this spell for detecting the presence of vestiges.

DETECT VESTIGE

Divination

Level: Cleric 1, paladin 1, sorcerer/wizard 1

Components: V, S, DF

Casting Time: 1 standard action

Range: 60 ft.

Area: Cone-shaped emanation

Duration: Concentration, up to 1 minute/level (D)

Saving Throw: None

Spell Resistance: No

You focus your mind and let your senses probe the room, questing and seeking for any trace of a bound vestige.

You can detect an aura emanating from anyone currently bound to a vestige who is within the spell's area.

The amount of information revealed about each shared soul depends on how long you study a particular area, as follows.

1st Round: Presence or absence of vestige auras.

2nd Round: Number of vestige auras in the area and the strength of the strongest vestige present.

3rd Round: The strength and location of each vestige-bound individual.

If an aura is outside your line of sight, then you discern its direction but not its exact location.

Aura Strength: The strength of a vestige aura is determined by the minimum effective binder level necessary to summon it, as given on the following table.

Minimum Effective Binder Level	Aura Strength
1st–4th	Faint
5th–9th	Moderate
10th–14th	Strong
15th or higher	Overwhelming

Each round, you can turn to detect vestige-bound individuals in a new area.

The spell can penetrate most barriers, but 1 foot of stone, 1 inch of common metal, a thin sheet of lead, or 3 feet of wood or dirt blocks it.

Level	Base				Special
	Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save
1st	+1	+2	+0	+2	Smite spirit sharer
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+3	Mettle
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+3	Locate possession
4th	+4	+4	+1	+4	Slippery mind
5th	+5	+4	+1	+4	Momentary disjunction

UNAPPROACHABLE EAST (3.5)

AGLARONDAN GRIFFONRIDER

Soaring above the Yuirwood and the coasts of Aglarond, the famed Aglarondan griffonriders are an elite force of aerial knights who serve the Simbul and defend their homeland against attack.

Griffonriders study aerial combat and develop special skills for fighting from the sky.

Fighters, paladins, and rangers are most common among their ranks, but a small number of clerics and wizards also have become griffonriders.

All griffonriders hold the rank of velskoon (a mid-ranking officer) in Aglarond's army and possess broad powers to commandeer Aglarondan soldiers, enforce the Simbul's laws, and keep the peace in their homeland.

While many griffonriders are palace guards, scouts, messengers, or company commanders, in practice, they have a great deal of latitude in the pursuit of their duties. Griffonrider scouts range far over the plains of Thesk and the plateau of Thay, watching the armies of the Red Wizards.

Because of their loyalty and skill, many griffonriders undertake dangerous tasks of spying and infiltration, leaving their feathered mounts behind and relying on wits and stealth instead.

Some griffonriders are trustworthy enough to operate completely on their own, advancing Aglarond's cause in whatever manner they deem appropriate.

The typical NPC griffonrider is a 4th-level human or half-elf fighter who selects feats and skills suitable for aerial combat, rather than taking levels in the Aglarondan griffonrider class.

In general, NPC griffonrider commanders are responsible for leading the Simbul's forces and supervising her palace guard.

Player character griffonriders are detached for special service or the recipients of an honorary title.

A character's level in this prestige class is irrelevant to her rank in Aglarond's military, although higher-ranked griffonriders tend to be of higher level.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an Aglarondan griffonrider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Ride 10 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-By Attack.

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from Aglarond (Aglarond is her home region, or she has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Aglarond]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Aglarondan griffonrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (local, nobility) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Aglarondan griffonrider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: An Aglarondan griffonrider is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and with light and medium armor, but not with shields.

Bonded Mount: When a character becomes an Aglarondan griffonrider, she is gifted with a griffon as a willing, bonded mount.

It gains the advantages listed on Table 2-2, based on the griffonrider's level.

Griffonrider Level	Bonus Hit Dice	Natural Armor Bonus	Strength Adjustment
1-3	+2	+4	+2
4-6	+4	+6	+2
7-9	+6	+8	+4
10	+8	+10	+4

The griffon retains its own type and gains no abilities other than those listed, although the griffonrider may be able to confer the ability to perform special maneuvers.

The griffonrider can have only one bonded mount at a time, and either party may sever this relationship at any time without penalty (although the griffon almost never does so unless the griffonrider violates the griffonrider code described below).

If the griffonrider is a paladin, she may designate the griffon as both her bonded mount and her special paladin mount.

In this case, the mount abilities described under Paladin in Chapter 3: Characters of the Player's Handbook supersede those listed on Table 2-2 here, and the paladin adds her griffonrider levels to her paladin levels to determine which abilities her bonded mount gains.

Griffonrider Level: The character's griffonrider levels only. If the mount receives negative levels, treat it as the mount of a correspondingly lower-level griffonrider.

Bonus Hit Dice: These are extra ten-sided (d10) Hit Dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier as normal. Extra Hit Dice also improve the griffon's base attack and base save bonuses.

Natural Armor Bonus: This number is an improvement to the griffon's natural armor bonus.

Strength Adjustment: Add this figure to the griffon's Strength score.

This is not a cumulative adjustment.

Flyby Attack: While an Aglarondan griffonrider is on her bonded mount, both she and her griffon have access to the Flyby Attack feat described in the Monster Manual.

Aerial Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, when an Aglarondan griffonrider is airborne on her bonded mount, both she and her mount gain the benefit of evasion.

If exposed to any attack that normally allows a character to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage, the character and her mount may attempt a single saving throw at the better of their two Reflex saving throw bonuses.

If successful, both the griffonrider and her mount take no damage.

Aerial evasion can't be used if the griffon is carrying a medium load.

At 8th level, the griffonrider and her mount gain superior aerial evasion.

This works like aerial evasion, except they take only half damage on a failed saving throw.

Improved Mounted Combat (Ex): At 3rd, 5th, and 7th level, an Aglarondan griffonrider increases by one the number of Ride checks she may attempt each round to negate a hit against her mount (two times per round at 3rd, three times per round at 5th, and four times per round at 7th).

The hit is negated if the griffonrider's Ride check result is greater than the attack roll.

Hover (Ex): Starting at 4th level, when an Aglarondan griffonrider is on her bonded mount, her mount gains the ability to hover much as some dragons do.

When flying, the griffon can halt its forward motion and hover in place, fly straight down, or fly straight up, regardless of its maneuverability.

While hovering, the griffon can perform a full attack action but cannot rake.

Power Dive (Ex): At 6th level, an Aglarondan griffonrider gains the ability to direct her bonded mount to perform a power dive attack while she is riding it.

The griffon must begin its move at least 50 feet above its target, and it uses the charge action to attack with both foreclaws simultaneously, making a single attack that deals $2d4 + (\text{Strength bonus} \times 1\frac{1}{2})$ points of damage.

The griffon may fly past the target and alter course after it makes its attack.

Superior Flight (Ex): From 9th level on, when an Aglarondan griffonrider is airborne on her bonded mount, her mount's fly speed increases to 100 feet (good).

The griffonrider knows how to encourage the best possible performance from her mount.

Fell Swoop (Ex): When an Aglarondan griffonrider reaches 10th level, her mount deals double damage in a power dive attack, as if it knew the Spirited Charge feat.

THE GRIFFONRIDER CODE

A griffonrider is sworn to defend the people of Aglarond, obey the orders of the Simbul or her duly authorized proxy, and uphold the laws of the land.

Replacement Mounts: If the griffonrider's mount is slain, she may obtain a new mount at no cost the next time she gains a level in the Aglarondan griffonrider prestige class. (Some griffonriders prefer to have a slain mount raised or resurrected at their own expense to avoid the delay).

The griffonrider and her new mount require three days of training before the griffonrider's special benefits accrue.

If a griffonrider loses her third mount and does not replace the mount at her own expense, she becomes an ex-griffonrider as noted below.

Ex-Griffonriders: A griffonrider who loses three mounts or who fails to uphold the griffonrider code loses all special abilities derived from this prestige class.

TABLE 2-1: THE AGLARONDAN GRIFFONRIDER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+0	+2	+0	Bonded mount, Flyby Attack

BLACK FLAME ZEALOT

A secret society of holy slayers devoted to the worship of Kossuth, the Order of the Black Flame is the hidden blade of the Firelord's faith in Thay.

Trained in the rites of Kossuth's temple, the Black Flame zealots use stealth, divine magic, and the zeal of fanaticism to destroy those who have given offense to the Lord of Flames.

Even the mighty zulkirs are not above Kossuth's wrath, since the Order is a sanctioned and respected means for wealthy and powerful Thayans to pursue vendettas.

Clerics of Kossuth, monks, and particularly devout rogues or fighters most often become Black Flame zealots.

A small number of the order's members are high-ranking clerics of the Firelord who keep an eye open for fellow devotees who seem like suitable candidates.

Barbarians and bards tend to lack the spiritual devotion necessary for the class, druids and rangers are simply scarce in Thay, and sorcerers and wizards more often pursue arcane paths to power in service to Kossuth, such as arcane devotee.

Paladins are simply incompatible with the Order of the Black Flame.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Black Flame zealot, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (kukri), Iron Will.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: Sneak attack damage +1d6.

Special: Kossuth must be the character's patron deity, and the character must slay an enemy of the faith for no other reason than to join the Order of the Black Flame.

CLASS SKILLS

The Black Flame zealot's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Black Flame zealot prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Black Flame zealots gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every other Black Flame zealot level beginning with 2nd, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds half the level of Black Flame zealot to the level of whatever divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a Black Flame zealot, the player must decide to which class to add each Black Flame zealot level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Death Attack (Ex): As the assassin ability, except that Black Flame zealots do not have the option of paralyzing their targets.

If a Black Flame zealot has levels in the assassin prestige class (see Chapter 2: Characters in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide), he may add his assassin and Black Flame zealot class levels together to calculate the save DC of his death attack.

Zealous Heart (Su): A Black Flame zealot is immune to fear, magical or otherwise.

Unlike a paladin's aura of courage, this confers no special benefits on his companions.

Poison Use (Ex): At 2nd level, a Black Flame zealot gains the ability to use poison safely, as the assassin ability.

Sneak Attack (Ex): At 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, a Black Flame zealot deals additional sneak attack damage as the rogue ability.

Since the Black Flame zealot gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Fateful Stride (Sp): Once per day at 5th level and above, a Black Flame zealot can take a single step and pass through obstacles or distance as the spell dimension door.

The zealot's caster level is equal to half his character level.

Sacred Flame (Su): Beginning at 6th level, at will, a Black Flame zealot can command a single melee weapon in his possession to burn with a black, deadly fire.

The weapon gains the flaming special ability, dealing 1d6 points of fire damage per successful attack in addition to its normal weapon damage.

Once per day, the Black Flame zealot can bestow the flaming burst special ability on a weapon in his possession for 1 minute.

Unholy Immolation (Su): When a Black Flame zealot reaches 10th level, any creature killed by his death attack or sneak attack is immediately consumed utterly by unholy fire.

The only way to restore life to a being slain in this manner is to use true resurrection, a carefully worded wish spell followed by resurrection, or miracle.

TABLE 2-3: THE BLACK FLAME ZEALOT

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spells per Day
1st	+0	+0	+2	+2	Death attack, zealous heart	—

DURTHAN

Durthans are an order of evil spellcasters who tap into the darker spirits of Rashemen.

They use their powers to punish their enemies and those who have offended the spirits.

The durthans seek to wrest control of their homeland from the Witches of Rashemen and rule it with an iron hand, torturing secrets out of their enemies and using that knowledge to expand Rashemen's power.

Like those of the hathrans, durthans' abilities are greater than other spellcasters of their level while they are within the borders of Rashemen.

All durthans are skilled in some form of arcane magic.

Some come from the ranks of the hathrans, but most have always worked against the Witches.

Durthans are covetous of power, even among other durthans, and share spells with others only if the recipient is useful to the greater cause.

Like hathrans, durthans usually wear masks, if only to fool others into thinking they are Witches in good standing.

Durthans work together, although they protect their identities behind masks.

Outside their homes, the durthans assassinate or spy upon enemies, follow Rashemi women who might be turned to their cause, and work to recover Rashemi spells and magic items.

Within Rashemen, they do all the former but also plot against the hathran hierarchy, send angry spirits to punish the careless, and manipulate the secular rulers.

Individual durthans work on elements of these plans or pursue their own agendas, usually with the help of trusted minions and whatever spirits they have bound to their will.

Just as fallen paladins may "trade in" paladin levels for blackguard levels, hathrans who adopt the philosophy of the durthans may trade in hathran levels for durthan levels.

Because most of these former hathrans no longer meet the requirements of the hathran prestige class (usually because of alignment reasons), this change allows the new durthan to regain most of the abilities she would otherwise lose.

Clever durthans use the possibility of this conversion to help sway potential hathran recruits to their cause.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a durthan, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Gender: Female.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Feats: Improved Counterspell (FRCS), Iron Will, any metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells and 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from Rashemen (Rashemen is her home region, or she has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Rashemen]).

CLASS SKILLS

The durthan's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the durthan prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Durthans gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each durthan level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of durthan to the level of whatever spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly. If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a durthan, the player must decide to which class to add each durthan level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

A character who has converted hathran levels to durthan levels retains the same allocations of caster level increase among her various arcane and divine spellcaster levels (in other words, she does not reassign these level increases when converting levels in this manner).

The durthans also have a short custom spell list.

These spells are arcane spells and must be acquired as any other arcane spell.

They use spell slots of the appropriate level in the durthan's arcane spellcasting class.

DURTHAN SPELL LIST

3rd level—call lightning.

4th level—control winds.

5th level—commune with nature.

6th level—repel wood.

7th level—waterspout.

8th level—whirlwind.

9th level—elemental swarm.

Place Magic: Durthans possess a special bond to the land of Rashemen that lets them draw upon the power of the spirits to cast spells without preparing them.

When a hathran or durthan uses place magic, she can cast any arcane or divine spell known to her.

(Spells on her hathran or durthan spell list can be cast as either arcane or divine spells, as she desires).

A place magic spell uses an unassigned spell slot of the appropriate type (arcane or divine) and level.

If the caster does not have an open spell slot, she may spontaneously lose a prepared spell of the appropriate type and level to cast her place magic spell.

Using place magic takes longer than casting a spell normally; any spell that takes 1 standard action to cast requires 1 full round to cast with place magic.

Spells with casting times longer than 1 standard action simply add 1 round to the casting time.

For more information, see Place Magic in Chapter 4: Magic and Spells.

Telthor Companion: Beginning at 3rd level, a durthan acquires a telthor (see the Telthor entry in Chapter 6: Monsters of the East) as a companion creature.

The telthor must be an animal with the telthor template.

This spirit creature is loyal to the durthan in the manner of a familiar or special mount.

It has a supernatural bond to her rather than to a specific location, and it remains healthy as long as it stays within one mile of the durthan.

The telthor has a number of Hit Dice up to the durthan's class level (not her total character level); as the durthan gains levels, the telthor advances in Hit Dice as the base creature.

The durthan may dismiss her telthor at any time (normally in an area suitable for the telthor to live, for even the cruelest durthans respect the spirits of the land).

If her telthor is dismissed or slain, the durthan may acquire another telthor after one month.

At 7th level, the durthan gains a second telthor companion.

Each telthor may have a number of Hit Dice equal to the durthan's class level (or fewer) and advances in Hit Dice as she gains levels.

Cold Resistance (Ex): At 4th and 6th levels, a durthan becomes increasingly resistant to cold, gaining cold resistance in the amount listed on the table.

Cold Immunity (Ex): At 9th level, a durthan becomes completely immune to cold damage.

Utter Cold (Su): At 10th level, a durthan may call upon the primal cold of winter that annually blankets Rashemen to make her spells more difficult to resist.

The save DC for any spell she casts with the cold energy descriptor increases by +2.

This increase is cumulative with those granted by the Spell Focus or Greater Spell Focus feats.

MASTER OF THE YUIRWOOD

The masters of the Yuirwood are an elite group of foresters who work to keep the ancient Yuirwood free of evil influence.

They strive to halt the retreat of this proud forest that once covered the entire Aglarondan peninsula, and in some regions they have actually been able to reclaim some of that lost land.

The masters make frequent use of the menhir circles that dot the Yuirwood, employing these portals to swiftly take them from one part of the forest to another.

They can also activate the portals to take them to distant lands or even other worlds.

Most masters of the Yuirwood start out as rangers, although there are also a number of druids in their ranks.

Paladins of nature gods might be interested in this class, and it sometimes attracts fighters and bards.

Monks, rogues, sorcerers, and wizards find that the life of a master of the Yuirwood—dwelling in the forest, always on the lookout for threats to its health—rarely fits with their preferences.

The masters of the Yuirwood spend most of their days patrolling the forest, protecting it from strangers who may damage the place (intentionally or not).

They work in conjunction with the half-elves of the forest, and they are traditionally loyal to the ruler of Aglarond.

The Simbul holds a special place in their hearts, for she has done more than any recent ruler to defend the Yuirwood herself.

The masters of the Yuirwood follow a loose meritocracy.

Those of lower level are obliged to listen to the wisdom of those of higher level.

The leader—never called “ruler”—of their organization is the person who has the most levels as a master of the Yuirwood.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of the Yuirwood, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 5 ranks, Survival 10 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Track.

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from Aglarond or the star elf region (the region is his home region, or he has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Aglarond or star elf]).

CLASS SKILLS

The master of the Yuirwood's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the master of the Yuirwood prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of the Yuirwood are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each master of the Yuirwood level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of master of the Yuirwood to the level of whatever spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a master of the Yuirwood, the player must decide to which class to add each master of the Yuirwood level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Work Menhir Circle (Su): Once per day per class level, the master of the Yuirwood can activate the menhir circles scattered throughout the Yuirwood.

These circles act as keyed portals (see Chapter 2: Magic in the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting), transporting users to any other menhir circle in the Yuirwood or to the star elf realm of Sildëyuir.

The master of the Yuirwood can choose which menhir circle he wishes to travel to.

Once activated, the portal remains open for 1 full round. During this time, any creature touching one of the menhirs is transported to the destination the master of the Yuirwood chose.

At 4th level, the master of the Yuirwood can use a Yuirwood menhir circle portal to transport himself to any circle of standing stones in any wooded region in Faerûn, regardless of whether or not the destination stones are a portal terminus, although he must have knowledge of the destination he is trying to reach.

At 7th level, the character can use this ability to return to a menhir circle in the Yuirwood from a circle of standing stones in a wooded region anywhere in Faerûn, regardless of whether the origination circle is a portal terminus or not. In effect, the master can create a one-way portal that lasts 1 round from any suitable spot, as long as the destination is a menhir circle in the Yuirwood.

At 10th level, the master of the Yuirwood can use a menhir circle to transport to a ring of menhirs in any wooded region in another world, although he must have knowledge of the destination he is trying to reach.

He can return to the Yuirwood from a menhir circle in another world, regardless of whether the origination circle is a portal terminus or not.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a master of the Yuirwood gains uncanny dodge as the rogue ability, retaining his Dexterity bonus to AC even when flat-footed.

At 5th level, he gains the improved uncanny dodge ability and cannot be flanked except by a rogue of at least four levels higher.

If a master of the Yuirwood has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, he gains improved uncanny dodge instead.

Pass without Trace (Sp): At 3rd level, a master of the Yuirwood can use pass without trace once per day, affecting up to one creature per class level.

Speak with Animals (Sp): At 6th level, a master of the Yuirwood can use speak with animals at will.

Forest's Grace (Ex): At 9th level, a master of the Yuirwood applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

NAR DEMONBINDER

Master of the black art of demon summoning, the Nar demonbinder keeps alive the sinister traditions of the old Empire of Narfell.

More than a thousand years ago the sorcerous land of Narfell grew mighty on the strength of its unholy mages and cruel priest-lords.

Although Narfell's trafficking with demons contributed to its eventual downfall, secrets of the old Nar lore still draw unscrupulous spellcasters who plunder the buried vaults of the long-vanished land in search of knowledge and power, as well as more principled researchers who pursue this forbidden lore to battle demons.

Nar demonbinders are most often clerics, sorcerers, or wizards.

Bards and druids do not have access to the spells necessary to call up and command fiendish creatures, and the prestige class demands high spellcasting ability simply to qualify.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Nar demonbinder, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Intimidate 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 10 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Spell Focus (conjuration).

Spellcasting: Able to cast 4th-level arcane or divine spells, knowledge of at least one summon monster spell.

Languages: Abyssal.

CLASS SKILLS

The Nar demonbinder's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana, the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Nar demonbinder prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Nar demonbinders gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells Per Day: Beginning at 1st level, a Nar demonbinder gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

He gains arcane spells per day according to Table 2–6.

He must learn and choose his spells from the Nar demonbinder spell list, below.

The character's caster level is equal to his Nar demonbinder level plus his levels in one other spellcasting class of his choice.

To cast a spell, the demonbinder must have a Charisma score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Demonbinder bonus spells are based on Charisma, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the demonbinder's Charisma modifier.

Nar demonbinders prepare and cast their demonbinder spells as sorcerers, as shown below.

Class	Nar Demonbinder Spells Known
	4th	5th	6th	7th	8th
1st	3	1	—	—	—
2nd	4	2	—	—	—
3rd	4	2	1	—	—
4th	4	3	2	—	—
5th	4	3	2	1	—
6th	4	4	3	2	—
7th	4	4	3	2	1

Fiendish Familiar: A Nar demonbinder can call a fiendish familiar.

Doing so takes a day and uses up magical materials that cost 100 gp.

The demonbinder may choose either an imp or a quasit as a familiar, just as if he knew the Improved Familiar feat and were an arcane spellcaster of the appropriate level.

The fiendish familiar is magically linked to its master just like a normal familiar.

The imp or quasit uses the basic statistics for a creature of its kind as given in the Monster Manual, with the following exceptions.

(Unless otherwise stated, for all fiendish familiar abilities dependent on the master's level, count only sorcerer/wizard levels and Nar demonbinder levels, which stack for the purposes of determining the familiar's abilities).

Hit Points: One-half of the master's total or the fiendish familiar's normal total, whichever is higher.

Attacks: Use the master's base attack bonus or the fiendish familiar's, whichever is better.

Use the familiar's Dexterity or Strength modifier, whichever is greater, to get the familiar's melee attack bonus with unarmed attacks.

Damage equals that of a normal creature of that kind.

Special Attacks: The fiendish familiar has all the special attacks of its kind.

Special Qualities: The fiendish familiar has all the special qualities of its kind.

Saving Throws: The fiendish familiar uses the master's base save bonuses if they are better than its own.

The familiar uses its own ability score modifiers on saves, and it doesn't enjoy other bonuses that the Nar demonbinder might have (such as from magic items or feats).

Skills: Use the normal skill ranks for a creature of that kind, modified by the fiendish familiar's own ability score modifiers.

Familiar Special Abilities: Use Table 3–19: Familiar Special Abilities in the Player's Handbook to determine additional abilities as you would for a normal familiar.

The character may add any levels of sorcerer and/or wizard to his Nar demonbinder class level for purposes of determining his fiendish familiar's special abilities.

Inimical Casting (Ex): A Nar demonbinder knows how to employ spells that deflect the attacks of outsiders, regardless of alignment.

When a Nar demonbinder casts one of the spells listed below, he may choose one of the listed effects instead.

Magic circle against good can be cast as magic circle against evil, magic circle against chaos, or magic circle against law.

Dispel good may be cast as dispel chaos, dispel evil, or dispel law.

Blasphemy may be cast as dictum, holy word, or word of chaos.

Unholy aura may be cast as holy aura, cloak of chaos, or shield of law.

Iron Sign: On reaching 2nd level, a Nar demonbinder learns how to fashion a special token known as an iron sign.

Creating the token requires three days and 1,000 gp in magical materials.

The iron sign is the size of a large amulet.

The demonbinder can use it in one of two ways.

Calling Diagram: The iron sign functions as a calling diagram (see Conjuration under Schools of Magic in Chapter 10: Magic of the Player's Handbook) that combines a magic circle with dimensional anchor.

The demonbinder need only set the token on a suitable surface, and no Spellcraft check is necessary to scribe the diagram.

A creature held by the iron sign must remain within 5 feet of it and otherwise behaves as if it were completely enclosed in a suitably sized calling diagram.

The iron sign can hold a called creature for up to one day per caster level of the character who crafted it.

Unlike a normal calling diagram, the iron sign cannot be disturbed unless something physically removes the token from the spot where it was placed (naturally, the called creature cannot disturb the token either directly or indirectly).

Demon Trap: As a full-round action, the demonbinder can set the token on a suitable surface and try to compel a free outsider within 30 feet of the token into its effective calling diagram (Will save negates, DC 10 + Nar demonbinder level + Nar demonbinder's Charisma modifier).

The subject is entitled to spell resistance.

If the creature fails its saving throw, it is transported to a square of its choice within 5 feet of the iron sign, and trapped just as if the demonbinder had conjured it into a calling diagram.

When a trapped creature leaves the iron sign (because it was freed by the demonbinder, escaped on its own, or the duration of the calling diagram lapsed), the token crumbles into powder and is destroyed.

Master Summoner (Ex): At 3rd level, a Nar demonbinder gains a +4 bonus on opposed Charisma checks to trap or compel creatures called through any planar binding spell.

Brazen Sign: On reaching 4th level, a Nar demonbinder learns how to fashion a brazen sign.

This works exactly like the iron sign, except that the called creature cannot use its spell resistance to attempt to break out of the calling diagram or to resist being caught in the demon trap.

Crafting a brazen sign requires five days and the expenditure of materials worth 2,000 gp.

Infernal Certitude (Ex): Due to his long study of demons, devils, and such creatures, a 5th-level Nar demonbinder gains a +4 bonus on spell penetration checks against any outsider.

Silver Sign: On reaching 6th level, a Nar demonbinder learns how to fashion a silver sign.

This works just like the brazen sign, except that the DC of the Charisma check for the called creature to escape increases by +5, and none of its attacks or abilities can exit the area within 5 feet of the token.

Crafting a silver sign requires seven days and the expenditure of 5,000 gp in materials.

Baleful Energy (Ex): On attaining 7th level, when a Nar demonbinder casts a spell that deals damage, one-half of the damage dealt is derived directly from infernal power and is therefore not reduced by resistance to the energy type of the damaging spell.

In the case of flame strike, the entire damage of the spell is derived from infernal power and is not subject to fire resistance (although targets are still permitted spell resistance and saving throws).

NAR DEMONBINDER SPELL LIST

Demonbinders can learn all spells on the following list.

4th level—*Belyyn's burning blood, dimensional anchor, dismissal, lesser planar binding, magic circle against good, summon monster IV, wall of fire.

5th level—dispel good, flame strike, plane shift, spell resistance, summon monster V.

6th level—banishment, *fiendform, greater dispelling, planar binding, summon monster VI.

7th level—blasphemy, fire storm, summon monster VII.

8th level—flensing (FRCS), greater planar binding, unholy aura, summon monster VIII.

* New spell described in Chapter 4: Magic and Spells.

NENTYAR HUNTER

Sworn to defend the great forests and serve the Nentyarch, druidic ruler of the Circle of Leth, the Nentyar hunters roam the wild lands of the East, uprooting foul and evil things.

Skilled with both steel and magic, a Nentyar hunter is a resourceful, self-reliant hero who has learned to trust her own judgment, confronting those who would harm the forest.

The Nentyar hunters are few in number, but even a single hunter is capable of achieving great things in the service of the lands she loves.

Barbarians and rangers are the most common Nentyar hunters, as the prestige class offers access to powerful forest magic to complement their skill at fighting.

Druids are less commonly drawn to the class, since many of the Nentyar hunter's spells are druid spells, and the Nentyar hunters are sworn to protect druids and carry out their edicts.

Fighters and rogues with a preference for wilderness skills sometimes become Nentyar hunters, but clerics, sorcerers, and wizards do not often choose this path.

Most Nentyar hunters are humans, elves, or volodnis.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Nentyar hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Search 4 ranks, Spot 8 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Combat Casting, Track.

Special: The character must qualify to take regional feats from the Great Dale character region (the Great Dale is her home region, or she has 2 ranks of Knowledge [local—Great Dale]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Nentyar hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Concentration (Con), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Nentyar hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A Nentyar hunter is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and with light armor, but not with shields.

Spells Per Day: Beginning at 1st level, a Nentyar hunter gains the ability to cast a small number of divine spells. She gains divine spells per day according to Table 2-7. She must choose her spells from the Nentyar hunter spell list, below.

The character's caster level is equal to her Nentyar hunter level plus her levels in cleric or druid (or half her levels in ranger).

To cast a spell, the hunter must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Nentyar hunter bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the hunter's Wisdom modifier.

Nentyar hunters prepare and cast their hunter spells as druids.

Woodland Stride (Ex): A Nentyar hunter may move through any sort of undergrowth (such as natural thorns, briars, overgrown areas, and similar terrain) at her normal speed and without taking damage or suffering other impairment.

However, thorns, briars, and overgrown areas that are magically manipulated to impede normal movement still affect her.

Swift Tracker (Ex): At 2nd level, a Nentyar hunter gains the ability to move at normal speed while following tracks without taking the normal -5 penalty.

Swiftness of the Stag (Su): At 3rd level, a Nentyar hunter's speed increases by +10 feet when she is wearing no armor or light armor and is not carrying a heavy load.

Eyes of the Hawk (Ex): A Nentyar hunter develops preternaturally sharp vision and gains a +4 bonus on all Spot checks at 4th level.

Heart of the Lion (Su): At 5th level, a Nentyar hunter becomes immune to fear, magical or otherwise.

Unlike a paladin's aura of courage, this confers no special resistance to fear on any of her allies.

NENTYAR HUNTER SPELL LIST

Nentyar hunters have access to all spells on the following list.

1st level—barkskin, cure light wounds, detect magic, detect poison, entangle, jump, light, pass without trace, magic missile, snare, speak with animals, true strike.

2nd level—Aganazzar's scorcher, blur, cure moderate wounds, gust of wind, moonbeam, neutralize poison, remove disease, resist elements, speak with plants, tree shape.

3rd level—cure serious wounds, freedom of movement, greenfire, invisibility, keen edge, moon blade, quench, see invisibility, wind wall.*

4th level—break enchantment, commune with nature, control winds, force orb, greater magic weapon, tree stride, wall of thorns.*

5th level—find the path, flame strike, healing circle, moon path, righteous might.

* New spell described in Chapter 4: Magic and Spells.

RAUMATHARI BATTLEMAGE

Enemies of ancient Narfell, the Raumathari sorcerers of old were fearsomely powerful evokers whose spells could scatter demonic armies like chaff in the wind.

Few mages still living have studied the lore of Raumathar, but those who have are some of the most dangerous men and women on the face of Faerûn.

Employing sword and spell with dauntless courage and deadly force, the handful of Raumathari battlemages remaining in the world comprise a lonely and little-known order of adventurers, explorers, and mercenaries in search of battle.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Raumathari battlemage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Feats: Combat Casting, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (bastard sword), any one metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells and knowledge of at least four evocation spells.

Languages: Able to read Roushoum and the Imaskari script (this generally requires a Speak Language skill rank for each dead language).

Proficiencies: Proficient with martial weapons.

Special: The character must find a mentor who already has levels in Raumathari battlemage and spend at least ten days studying in the mentor's company.

During this time of study, both mentor and student must spend at least 8 hours a day in training.

CLASS SKILLS

The Raumathari battlemage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Concentration (Con), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (arcana, history) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Raumathari battlemage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Raumathari battlemages gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each Raumathari battlemage level (except 5th), the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of Raumathari battlemage to the level of whatever spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a Raumathari battlemage, the player must decide to which class to add each Raumathari battlemage level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Sword Focus (Su): A Raumathari battlemage may perform a special rite to make a single sword into a focus for his spells. The focus sword can then replace any material component of less than 50 gp value in the casting of the battlemage's spells.

The sword is not consumed or damaged by its use as a focus, although it must be in hand to be used in this way. The Raumathari battlemage gains +1 caster level with any spell cast through his sword focus.

The rite to create a sword focus requires three days and 1,000 gp in magical materials as well as a masterwork weapon.

Magic swords may be attuned as sword foci.

A battlemage may attune only a single sword at a time; if he loses the weapon, he must repeat the rite to create a new sword focus.

Channel Spell (Su): As a free action, a Raumathari battlemage can cast a spell through his melee weapon (usually his sword) as he attacks with it.

He gains an attack bonus equal to the level of the channeled spell for that attack only.

The channeled spell counts against the battlemage's normal daily limit.

The maximum allowable spell level and number of times per day this ability can be used increase as noted below.

Channel Spell	Maximum Spell Level	Number of Channel Attempts Per Day
I	1st	1
II	2nd	2
III	3rd	3
IV	4th	4

The number of channel attempts allowed per day is an absolute limit—a character with Channel Spell IV can't use his ability ten times on spells of various levels.

A channeled spell targets the creature hit by the battlemage's weapon, which still gets a saving throw if the spell allows one.

Even if a spell can target more than one creature, channeling it through the weapon limits its effect to the single opponent attacked.

If the weapon attack misses, the channeled spell is wasted. The spell to be channeled must have a range of touch, be a ray effect (in which case the ray affects only the creature attacked), or specify a creature as the target.

For example, sleep is not eligible since it does not affect a "target creature".

Battle Spell (Su): As a free action, the Raumathari battlemage may apply a single metamagic feat to a spell as he casts it.

Unlike a bard or sorcerer's use of metamagic feats, this does not affect the casting time of the spell.

At 2nd level, the battlemage may use this ability once per day and apply the Silent Spell feat to the battle spell he chooses to cast.

At 4th level, the battlemage gains a second battle spell per day, which he can still use as per the Still Spell feat.

At 6th level, the battlemage gains a third battle spell per day, which he can empower as per the Empower Spell feat.

At 8th level, the battlemage gains a fourth battle spell per day, which he can quicken as per the Quicken Spell feat.

At 10th level, the battlemage gains a fifth battle spell per day, which he can maximize as per the Maximize Spell feat.

Sublime Sword (Su): At 5th level, the save DC of any spell cast through the Raumathari battlemage's sword focus increases by 1.

RUNESCARRED BERSERKER

Deadly barbarians who bear magical runes carved into their flesh, runescarred berserkers are among the most feared of Rashemen's defenders.

They are loyal bodyguards to the hathrans of the land and stand ready to unleash a storm of martial fury at a single word from any Witch.

Many runescarred berserkers bind themselves to a single Witch and protect her with their very lives, but others become the chieftains of berserker lodges or take up a simple existence as a wandering defender of the Rashemi people.

The word of a Witch is law in Rashemen, but runescarred berserkers carry a weight of authority almost as great in some quarters of the land.

All runescarred berserkers have at least some experience as barbarians, since the ability to rage is a requirement of the prestige class.

Characters with some training as fighters, rangers, and rogues are also common among the ranks of the runescarred.

Spellcasters rarely choose this path, because Rashemi society defines other roles for them.

Monks and paladins have antithetical alignment requirements, and only characters who have abandoned one of these classes can become a berserker.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a runescarred berserker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Craft (scarring) 5 ranks, Intimidate 5 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Survivor (FRCS), at least one berserker lodge feat from Chapter 3: Regions and Feats.

Special: The character must be able to rage at least once per day, as the barbarian class ability, and must be a member of a berserker lodge.

(For more information about berserker lodges, see Chapter 10: Rashemen).

Also, the character must qualify to select regional feats from Rashemen (Rashemen is his home region, or he has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Rashemen]).

CLASS SKILLS

The runescarred berserker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the runescarred berserker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Runescarred berserkers gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Scribe Runescar (Sp): At 1st level, a runescarred berserker learns how to carve a runescar into her own skin.

A runescar is a means of storing a spell, much like a scroll. The berserker knows only a limited number of spells with which to imbue runescars, selected from the runescarred berserker spell list below.

To learn a runescar spell, the berserker must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell level.

A runescar berserker can only cast spells by crafting them as runescars; she has no other spellcasting capability and cannot use spell completion or spell trigger magic items based on spells from this list.

Scribing a runescar takes 1 hour, the expenditure of materials equal to 5 gp × spell level × caster level, and the expenditure of XP equal to 1/25th the gp spent.

The character may set the caster level of the runescar at anywhere from the minimum class level necessary for her to know the rune to her own runescarred berserker class level.

She may scribe a runescar only on her own body.

The act of scribing a runescar is painful and deals 1d6 points of damage per spell level at the end of the scribing time.

(The berserker is free to heal this damage by any normal means afterward—the runescar remains until activated).

A runescarred berserker can bear no more than seven runescars at any one time: two on the chest, two on the upper arms, two on the backs of the hands, and one on the face.

Runescars are dormant until activated and cannot be dispelled (although they can be suppressed).

Runescars are considered divine spells, although a berserker does not actively prepare or cast them.

The save DC, if necessary, is 10 + spell level + the berserker's Wisdom score.

To activate a runescar, the character must take a standard action and touch the rune.

All runescar spells target only the runescarred berserker or an item in her possession, even if the spell scribed could normally be bestowed on another subject.

After activation, the runescar's magic is discharged, and the rune fades to nothing but a faint outline.

Typically, a berserker's skin is crisscrossed with dozens of old, discharged runescars.

Extra Rage (Ex): A runescarred berserker gains additional daily uses of the barbarian rage ability.

At 2nd level, she gains one additional rage per day; at 5th level, she gains a second additional rage; and at 9th level, she gains a third additional rage.

For example, a barbarian 8/runescarred berserker 5 can rage three times per day from her barbarian levels, plus two more times from her runescarred berserker levels, for a total of five rages per day.

Ritual Scarring (Ex): Through frequent disfiguration of her own skin, a runescarred berserker gains a +1 natural armor bonus to AC at 3rd level.

This increases to +2 at 6th level, and +3 at 9th level.

Spawn of the Frost (Su): Inured to the bitter cold of Rashemen's winters, a runescarred berserker gains cold resistance 5.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a runescarred berserker gains the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 1 from the damage the berserker takes each time she is dealt damage from a weapon or natural attack.

At 7th level and 10th level, this damage reduction increases to 2 and then 3 points.

This overlaps (does not stack with) damage reduction from any other class feature.

Greater Rage: Starting at 8th level, a runescarred berserker's rage bonuses become +6 to Strength, +6 to Constitution, and a +3 morale bonus on Will saves.

Her AC penalty remains -2.

RUNESCARRED BERSERKER SPELL LIST

Runescarred berserkers must select their runescar spells known from the following list.

1st level—*cure moderate wounds, divine favor, low-light vision, protection from chaos/evil/good/law, resist elements, see invisibility, true strike.

2nd level—bull's strength, cure serious wounds, darkvision, endurance, invisibility, keen edge, protection from elements.

3rd level—air walk, cure critical wounds, death ward, divine power, freedom of movement, greater magic weapon, haste.

4th level—improved invisibility, neutralize poison, restoration, righteous might, spell immunity, stonkskin.

5th level—antimagic field, dimension door, heal, polymorph self, spell resistance.

* New spell described in Chapter 4: Magic and Spells.

SHOU DISCIPLE

Shou disciples are martial artists who have studied or observed the monks of Kara-Tur and seek to emulate their style.

Focusing more on the martial aspects of a monk's training, they sacrifice the enlightenment and supernatural abilities of the true ascetic.

Shou disciples fight with martial weapons and often wear armor, instantly marking them as different from monks.

Fighters and rogues are the most likely to become Shou disciples, although some bards study the martial arts of Kara-Tur to enhance their combat ability.

Clerics of athletic deities may train in this manner, and a few true monks have become Shou disciples to maximize their skill with weapons at the expense of some supernatural abilities.

Barbarians usually prefer other methods of disabling opponents, most druids follow a more spiritual path, and sorcerers and wizards would rather spend their time developing their magic, so members of those classes rarely become Shou disciples.

Shou disciples work alone or together.

The loners are usually wanderers in the manner of traveling monks, seeking wisdom or worthy opponents.

Those in groups are usually members of the same gang or training school, since skilled Shou disciples often retire to found their own academies, teaching these Kara-Turan martial arts to those who are willing to learn.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Shou disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Base Reflex Save: +2.

Skills: Balance 4 ranks, Jump 8 ranks, Tumble 4 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Improved Unarmed Strike, Weapon Focus (unarmed strike).

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from the Shou expatriate or Thesk regions (the region is her home region, or she has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Shou expatriate or Thesk]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Shou disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Shou disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shou disciples are proficient with martial weapons and light armor, as well as with the following monk weapons: kama, nunchaku, and siangham.

Light armor does not interfere with any of a Shou disciple's class abilities, but shields and medium or heavy armor do. When wearing medium or heavy armor or using a shield, the Shou disciple loses his class dodge bonus and any flurry of blows ability.

Dodge Bonus (Ex): Shou disciples are highly trained at dodging blows.

When a Shou disciple designates an opponent for his Dodge feat, this bonus replaces the normal +1 dodge bonus to AC against that opponent.

A condition that makes him lose his Dexterity bonus to AC also makes him lose this dodge bonus.

Unarmed Strike (Ex): As the monk ability, except that a Shou disciple deals unarmed damage as shown on Table 2-10.

A Shou disciple with levels in the monk class can take the better of the two damage ranges, or he can add his Shou disciple levels to his monk levels and use the unarmed damage of a monk of the resulting level if that produces a better result.

Martial Flurry (Ex): At 3rd level, a Shou disciple gains the ability to use any light melee weapon for his flurry of blows, not just special monk weapons.

At 5th level, the Shou disciple may use any melee weapon for his flurry of blows.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd and 4th level, a Shou disciple gets a bonus feat, which must be drawn from the following list: Combat Reflexes, Deflect Arrows, Endurance, Expertise, Improved Initiative, Improved Trip, Mobility, Power Attack, Spring Attack, Weapon Finesse, and Weapon Specialization.

The character must meet all the feat's prerequisites to select it.

TABLE 2-10: THE SHOU DISCIPLE

Class Level	Base Attack	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Unarmed Damage	Dodge Bonus	Special
1st	+1	+2	+2	+0	1d6	+1	Unarmed strike
2nd	+2	+3	+3	+0	1d8	+2	Bonus feat
3rd	+3	+3	+3	+1	1d10	+2	Martial flurry (light)
4th	+4	+4	+4	+1	1d10	+3	Bonus feat
5th	+5	+4	+4	+1	2d6	+3	Martial flurry (any)

multiclassed monks and unarmed attacks

A Shou disciple with monk levels adds his monk base attack bonus and his Shou disciple base attack bonus and uses the unarmed attack progression of a monk with the same base attack bonus. For example, a Monk 6/Shou disciple 5 has a base attack bonus of +4 from his monk levels and +5 from his Shou disciple levels, totaling +9, and uses the unarmed attack bonus of a monk with a +9 base attack bonus.

The character does not use his base attack bonus from any other class levels in this determination, unless the class allows unarmed attacks like the monk's. For example, a monk 6/fighter 2/Shou disciple 5 has a base attack bonus of +11 but an unarmed base attack bonus of only +9. A character can always choose to use his base attack bonus progression instead of his unarmed attack bonus to make unarmed attacks. It will usually be to his advantage to do so if he has several levels that are in neither monk nor Shou disciple.

TALONTAR BLIGHTLORD

Corrupt priests who revel in decay, the blightlords of Talona are feared and reviled throughout the Unapproachable East.

Their plagues have transformed the western reaches of the Rawlinswood into a foul green hell of diseased monsters and deadly poisons.

Worse yet, the blightlords seek to infect the healthy forests and lands nearby with the same sickness.

Under the tutelage of the horrible Rotting Man, the Talontar blightlords marshal the Rawlinswood's black horde, leading their infected minions forth to scourge the nearby lands.

(For more on the Rotting Man and his minions, see Chapter 9: The Great Dale).

Most of the blightlords are drawn from evil clerics, druids, or rangers who venerate Talona, the Mother of All Plagues. A handful of fighters, barbarians, and sorcerers have become captains of the Rotting Man's armies, but since the prospective blightlord must have access to divine spells, any such candidate must have at least some levels in a divine spellcasting class to qualify.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Talontar blightlord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Feats: Great Fortitude.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 4th-level divine spells.

Proficiency: Glaive.

A druid who wields a glaive is in violation of her spiritual oaths, but a character may take a Martial Weapon Proficiency feat with the weapon and simply refrain from wielding it until she qualifies for the blightlord class.

Patron Deity: Talona.

CLASS SKILLS

The Talontar blightlord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (local, nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Talontar blightlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Talontar blightlords gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Druids who become blightlords no longer need abide by their weapon and armor restrictions, as the blightlords turn their backs on the conventional druidic traditions.

Spells Per Day: At every Talontar blightlord level (except 6th and 10th), the character gains new divine spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that she adds the level of Talontar blightlord to the level of whatever spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

prestige domains

The Talontar blightlord gains access to the Blightbringer prestige domain. A prestige domain functions just like a normal cleric domain—the character gains a granted power associated with the domain and access to a special spell list. A character with cleric spellcasting ability may choose to prepare a spell from the Blightbringer prestige domain as her domain spell at any given level when she prepares spells.

Characters with druid or ranger spellcasting ability who acquire a prestige domain gain an extra domain spell per day at each spell level. In effect, they are like clerics with only one domain. The character only gains an additional domain spell for each spell level she can cast normally—so a ranger, whose spell capability reaches its maximum at 4th-level spells, does not gain domain spells for 5th through 9th level.

The domain must be assigned to the character's spell progression in an existing divine spellcasting class.

Blightblood (Ex): A Talontar blightlord is completely immune to all disease, magical or otherwise.

Blightspawned creatures (see Chapter 6: Monsters of the East) do not attack her unless she attacks them, although they may attack other creatures in her company.

Illmaster: Any animal companions a blightlord possesses gain the blightspawned template (see Chapter 6: Monsters of the East).

This does not affect the number of animal companions she may have at any given time.

Blight Touch (Su): Starting at 3rd level, once per day as a standard action, a Talontar blightlord may attempt a melee touch attack to infect a victim with Talona's blight.

Talona's Blight: Supernatural disease—by spell, Fortitude save (DC 10 + Talontar blightlord class level + Talontar blightlord's Wisdom modifier), incubation period 1d6 days; damage 1d4 Constitution and 1d4 Charisma.

Unlike normal diseases, Talona's blight continues until the victim reaches Constitution 0 (and dies), Charisma 0 (possibly becoming a blightspawned creature, if it is a valid type), or receives a remove disease spell or similar magic.

At 5th, 7th, and 9th level, the Talontar blightlord gains one more use of this power per day.

Blightmind (Su): On reaching 4th level, once per day as a standard action, a Talontar blightlord may establish a mental link with and dominate (as dominate monster) a single blightspawned creature within 60 feet.

The mental link lasts for up to 1 minute per blightlord level and has a range of up to one mile.

While the link is in effect, the blightlord may concentrate to receive sensory input from the linked creature or issue it instructions.

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a Talontar blightlord, the player must decide to which class to add each Talontar blightlord level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Blightbringer Prestige Domain: At 1st level, a Talontar blightlord gains access to the Blightbringer prestige domain, described in the sidebar.

BLIGHTBRINGER PRESTIGE DOMAIN

Deity: Talona.

Granted Power: Rebuke or command blightspawned creatures and evil-aligned animals or plants as an evil cleric rebukes undead. You may use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Charisma modifier. This is a supernatural ability.

Blightbringer Prestige Domain Spells

1 Hold animal	6 Finger of death
2 Snilloc's snowball swarm (FRCS)	7 Command plants
3 Contagion	8 Horrid wilting
4 Fear	9 Energy drain
5 Cone of cold

(The creature obeys any orders to the best of its ability and need not be continuously directed in its assigned tasks).

The blightspawned creature receives a Will saving throw (DC 10 + Talontar blightlord's class level + Talontar blightlord's Wisdom modifier) to negate the effect.

Black Glaive (Su): Starting at 6th level, any glaive wielded by a Talontar blightlord gains the icy burst ability, dealing +1d6 points of bonus cold damage on a successful hit (or +2d10 points on a successful critical hit).

In addition, the blightlord can make a normal melee attack with the glaive to deliver her blight touch attacks.

Corrupting Blows (Su): An 8th-level Talontar blightlord's black glaive gains the wounding ability.

A creature struck by the black glaive loses 1 hit point per round on the blightlord's action.

Multiple hits by the blightlord have no additional effect and deal no additional wounding damage—a creature is either wounded or it is not.

The wounding damage continues until the victim is treated with a successful Heal check (DC 20) or receives magical healing.

Winterheart (Ex): At 10th level, a Talontar blightlord's infected blood effects a terrible change in her physiology. Her skin blackens and splits, becoming cold and slimy to the touch, although she does not bleed or suffer pain from this transformation.

Her type changes to "plant", which means (among other things) that she is no longer subject to poison, sleep, mind-affecting effects, paralysis, polymorphing, critical hits, sneak attacks, or spells and effects that affect humanoids only.

TELFLAMMAR SHADOWLORD

The Shadowmasters of Telflamm are one of Faerûn's most notorious thieves' guilds, a secret society every bit as grasping and ruthless as the Night Masks of Westgate or the Shadow Thieves of Amn.

Under their subtle and cloaked rule, Thesk's port city of Telflamm is a prime center of trade in both legal and illicit goods.

The Shadowmasters are made up of burglars, murderers, and thugs with a variety of talents, including assassins, experts, fighters, rogues, shadowdancers, and warriors. A small number of clerics devoted to Mask belong to the guild, as do some arcane spellcasters whose greed outweighs their scruples.

Above all these criminals stand the Telflamm shadowlords, the secret captains of iniquity who demand unquestioned obedience from their numerous minions. Characters of other classes may hold important positions in the guild, but the shadowlords call the shots.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Telflamm shadowlord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: The character must possess the shadow-walker template, which is conferred by a special rite consecrated to Mask (see Chapter 6: Monsters of the East).

Members in good standing of the Shadowmasters guild can arrange for the rite of transformation by gifting 2,000 gp to Mask's temple in Telflamm; others must give at least 10,000 gp and perform a service of some kind for the clerics of Mask.

A character who is not a shadow-walker can still qualify for the Telflamm shadowlord prestige class, but he must meet the spellcasting requirement below.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Hide 10 ranks, Move Silently 10 ranks.

Feats: Blind-Fight, Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

Spellcasting: If the character is not a shadow-walker, he must either possess the ability to shadow jump (as the shadowdancer prestige class ability) or be able to cast dimension door as a spell or spell-like ability.

Special: Sneak attack damage +2d6.

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from Thesk (the region is his home region, or he has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Thesk]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Telflamm shadowlord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Telflamm shadowlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Telflamm shadowlords gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each Telflamm shadowlord level, the character gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

He gains arcane spells per day according to Table 2–12 and must choose his spells from the Telflamm shadowlord spell list, below.

The shadowlord's caster level is equal to his Telflamm shadowlord level.

To cast a spell, the shadowlord must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Telflamm shadowlord bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the shadowlord's Intelligence modifier.

When the shadowlord gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the shadowlord gets only bonus spells.

The shadowlord prepares and casts spells just as a wizard does.

Shadowsight (Ex): Gifted with a mystical connection to shadow and darkness, the shadowlord gains a superior form of darkvision with a 60-foot range.

He can see through any form of normal or magical darkness without hindrance.

Shadow Jump (Su): A Telflamm shadowlord can travel between shadows as if by means of a dimension door spell. The limitation is that the magical transport must begin and end in an area with at least some shadow or darkness. The shadowlord can jump up to a total of 20 feet per class level per day in this way.

This amount can be split up among many jumps, but each jump, no matter how small, counts as a 10-foot increment. If the Telflammar shadowlord already has shadow jump from another class (because he did not meet the spellcasting prerequisite, for example), this ability confers no additional benefit.

Shadow Blur (Su): At 2nd level, a Telflammar shadowlord gains an unusual defense—anytime he is not in daylight or the illuminated radius of a light source, the shadows cloak his every movement, conferring the benefits of a blur spell. The shadowlord can choose to activate or end this effect as a free action.

Shadow Walk (Sp): Once per day starting at 3rd level, a Telflammar shadowlord may use shadow walk as a caster whose level is equal to his shadowlord class level. If he previously possessed the ability to use shadow walk as a spell-like ability, he gains a second daily use of that power.

Shadow Pounce (Ex): At 4th level, a Telflammar shadowlord learns how to attack swiftly from the shadows. Any time he uses an ability, spell, or effect with the teleportation descriptor (for example, his shadow jump ability), he may execute a full attack upon completion of the teleportation.

The shadowlord must have line of sight on his intended target from his original location, and the spot to which he teleports must be a place from which he can launch a melee attack at the intended target with whatever weapon he has in hand at the beginning of his action.

Shadow Discorporation (Su): At 5th level, a Telflammar shadowlord learns how to use his mastery of shadows to cheat death.

If the shadowlord is in shadow or darkness (anything but direct daylight or the illuminated radius of a light source), any damage that would reduce him to 0 hit points or below instead has a chance to disincorporate him.

The shadowlord attempts a Reflex save (DC 5 + damage dealt); if successful, he simply breaks apart into dozens of flitting shadows and vanishes, along with anything he is holding or carrying.

At the next sunset, the shadowlord reappears at a spot of his choosing within one mile of the place where he was forced to disincorporate.

While disincorporated, the shadowlord simply does not exist—he can do nothing, nor can any of his enemies do anything to him.

Death Attack (Ex): At 6th level, a Telflammar shadowlord gains the ability to make a death attack as the assassin ability.

If the shadowlord has levels in the assassin prestige class (see Chapter 2: Characters in the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide), he may add his assassin and Telflammar shadowlord class levels together to calculate the save DC of his death attack.

TEFLAMMAR SHADOWLORD SPELL LIST

Telflammar shadowlords choose their spells from the following list.

1st level—blindness/deafness, chill touch, darkness, darkvision, invisibility, knock, levitate, shadow mask (FRCS), shadow spray.

2nd level—air walk, blacklight, displacement, haste, improved invisibility, nondetection, vampiric touch.

3rd level—confusion, darkbolt, detect scrying, dimension door, mass invisibility, mislead.

THAYAN SLAVER

Thayan slavers are cruel marauders who use their awful abilities to abduct creatures and then break their wills. They are experts at creating docile slaves who obey their masters without question.

Most Thayan slavers start out as rogues, but they can come from any class other than paladin.

Evil sorcerers and wizards sometimes become Thayan slavers to more easily handle assistants and even subjects for their wicked experiments.

Some evil fighters and barbarians find the prestige class is a natural extension of their aggression, as well as expanding their treasure options to include other people.

Bards and rangers are less likely to take up such a prestige class, and there are few druids who would consider it.

Thayan slavers can be found throughout Faerûn, wherever slaves are traded.

Sometimes they work or travel incognito, especially in places in which slavery is outlawed.

Of course, Thay is filled with all sorts of Thayan slavers, many of whom work together in the great slave markets of Bezantur, Tyraturos, and Eltabbar.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Thayan slaver, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human.

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Appraise 10 ranks, Intimidate 10 ranks, Use Rope 5 ranks.

Special: Sneak attack damage +2d6.

Special: The character must qualify to select regional feats from Thay (Thay is his home region, or he has 2 ranks in Knowledge [local—Thay]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Thayan slaver's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Forgery (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (slaver) (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Thayan slaver prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thayan slavers are proficient with all simple weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

They are also proficient with the sap, spiked chain, whip, and net.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each Thayan slaver level, the character gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

He gains arcane spells per day according to Table 2–13.

He must choose his spells from the Thayan slaver spell list, below.

The slaver's caster level is equal to his Thayan slaver level.

To cast a spell, the slaver must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Thayan slaver bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the slaver's Intelligence modifier.

When the slaver gets 0 spells of a given level, such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level, the slaver gets only bonus spells.

The slaver prepares and casts spells just as a wizard does.

Ruthless Beating: A Thayan slaver is an expert at dealing out nonlethal punishment.

He takes no penalty for choosing to deal subdual damage instead of normal damage with a melee weapon.

A slaver may also use a melee weapon to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, although he attacks with a –2 penalty in this case.

Enervating Attack: As the assassin death attack ability, except that Thayan slavers have only the option of paralyzing their victims.

If a Thayan slaver has levels in the assassin prestige class (see Chapter 2: Characters in the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide), he may add his assassin and Thayan slaver class levels together for purposes of calculating the DC of his enervating attack.

Slaver class levels do not add to the DC of the assassin's death attack.

Break Will (Ex): At 2nd level, the Thayan slaver gains the ability to break a target's will.

Any time the Thayan slaver wins an Intimidation check by 10 or more, the opponent takes 1 point of temporary Wisdom damage.

Such lost Wisdom returns at the rate of 1 point per day of rest, but most Thayan slavers don't give their slaves a chance to recover.

Sneak Attack (Ex): At 4th, 7th, and 10th level, a Thayan slaver deals additional sneak attack damage as the rogue ability.

If the Thayan slaver gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Crippling Strike (Ex): At 5th level, a Thayan slaver can sneak attack opponents with such precision that his blows weaken and hamper them.

When the slaver damages an opponent with a sneak attack, that opponent also takes 1 point of temporary Strength damage.

Ability points lost in this way return on their own at the rate of 1 point per day for each damaged ability.

Stunning Blow (Ex): Three times per day, an 8th-level Thayan slaver may declare a stunning blow before any melee attack.

If the slaver hits, the victim must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + Thayan slaver class level + Thayan slaver's Intelligence modifier) or be stunned for 1 round (until just before the slaver's next action).

A stunned character can't act and loses any Dexterity bonus to Armor Class.

Attackers get a +2 bonus on attack rolls against a stunned opponent.

THAYAN SLAVER SPELL LIST

Thayan slavers choose their spells from the following list.

1st level—arcane lock, alarm, burning hands, change self, command, detect thoughts, knock, ray of enfeeblement, true strike.

2nd level—alter self, fear, hold person, invisibility, misdirection, remove paralysis.

3rd level—dominate person, greater command, hold monster, improved invisibility, nondetection.

4th level—enervation, locate creature, mind fog, sequester, veil.

UNDERDARK (3.5)

ARACHNOMANCER

Many creatures of the Underdark are drawn to the power of the spider and that of the master of spiders—the arachnomancer.

The attractiveness of the arachnomancer class depends more upon the candidate's race, culture, and personal interest than it does upon class.

However, all arachnomancers are spellcasters—specifically arcanists.

Clerics with the Spider domain sometimes multiclass in arcane studies just so that they can develop as arachnomancers.

Most drow worship their spider goddess Lolth, and they tend to extend that reverence to most of spiderkind as well. Thus, arachnomancers usually enjoy high standing in drow society.

Many other Underdark races, such as aranea or chitines, are spiderkind themselves, so they particularly enjoy the abilities that this prestige class grants them.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arachnomancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Save Bonus: Fortitude +4.

Skills: Climb 3 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast spider climb, summon swarm, and web as arcane spells.

Special: The candidate must undergo a scarification ritual.

CLASS SKILLS

The arachnomancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (Underdark local) (Int), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the arachnomancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arachnomancers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At 1st, 3rd, 4th, 6th, 7th, 9th, and 10th level, an arachnomancer gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an arachnomancer, the player must decide to which class to add each arachnomancer level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Poison Save Bonus (Ex): An arachnomancer adds his class level to all saves against poison.

Speak with Spiders (Su): The arachnomancer can communicate with any spiderkind creature (see sidebar) as a free action.

Mindless creatures can communicate and understand only extremely simple concepts (one word at best), but they generally don't try to eat someone who communicates with them.

Spider Magic: Add the following spells to the character's spell list (or to each spell list, if he has more than one): 0—*stick*4; 1st—*summon Small monstrous spider*1; 2nd—*spiderskin*4, *summon Medium monstrous spider*1; 3rd—neutralize poison, poison, *summon Large monstrous spider*1; 4th—giant vermin (spiders only), repel vermin, *summon Huge monstrous spider*1; 5th—*spider plague*2; 6th—*summon Gargantuan monstrous spider*1; 7th—*spider shapes*3; 8th—*summon Colossal monstrous spider*1; 9th—shapechange (into spider or spiderkind creature only; see sidebar on page 30).

1 As summon monster, except that the spell summons one monstrous spider of the indicated size, 1d3 monstrous spiders one size category smaller, or 1d4+1 monstrous spiders two size categories smaller.

2 As insect plague, but summons spider swarms instead of locust swarms.

3 As animal shapes, but allows transformation into monstrous spider form only.

4 New spell described in this book.

Spider magic spells are added to the character's class lists of available spells, so that he may choose them whenever he has the opportunity to acquire new spells of the appropriate level.

He does not automatically learn them (in the case of a spellcaster who keeps spellbooks) or know them (in the case of a spellcaster who does not keep spellbooks).

Spiderform (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, an arachnomancer may transform himself into a Small, Medium, or Large monstrous spider three times per day.

At 5th level, he can also take the form of a Tiny or Huge monstrous spider, and at 8th level, he can take the form of a Gargantuan monstrous spider.

This ability functions like polymorph, except that the indicated forms are the only ones available and the duration of the change is up to 10 minutes per arachnomancer level.

Resuming normal form requires a standard action but does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Poison Touch (Ex): The arachnomancer can secrete poison as a free action.

When he first gains this ability at 3rd level, his touch deals 1d4 points of Strength damage.

The damage increases to 1d6 points at 6th level and to 1d8 points at 9th level.

In each case, a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + arachnomancer level + arachnomancer's Con modifier) halves the damage, to a minimum of 1 point.

The arachnomancer's poison cannot be harvested or saved for any purpose.

Command Spiders (Su): At 4th level, an arachnomancer gains the ability to compel any spider or spiderkind creature (see sidebar) in the same way that an evil cleric can rebuke or command undead.

The arachnomancer can attempt to command spiders a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

He is treated as a cleric of a level equal to his character level (not arachnomancer level) for the purpose of turning checks and turning damage.

Webwalking (Su): Beginning at 5th level, an arachnomancer can ignore webs (magical or nonmagical) as if affected by a freedom of movement spell.

He can climb webs at his normal land speed without needing to make a Climb check and walk along webs without needing to make a Balance check.

Wall of Webs (Sp): At 7th level, an arachnomancer gains the ability to create a wall-like barrier of webs once per day.

Unlike the webs produced by the web spell, those in the wall of webs are resistant to fire and as tough as steel.

A wall of webs functions like the wall of iron spell (caster level equals arachnomancer level), except that an arachnomancer can use his webwalking ability to move through the wall unhindered, and any other creature can use freedom of movement to do the same.

Spider Blast (Sp): Once per day, a 10th-level arachnomancer can produce a 50-footlong, cone-shaped blast of extremely poisonous, normal-sized spiders.

Every creature within the area of the blast takes 5d4 points of damage and must make 1d4 Fortitude saves against poison (DC 10 + arachnomancer level + arachnomancer's Con modifier; 1d6 points of Strength damage for both initial and secondary damage).

Each creature is also allowed a Reflex save at the same DC for partial effect: Success means the victim takes half damage and need make only one Fortitude saving throw against poison (though the second saving throw normally required against a poison's secondary effect still applies). The spiders fade away at the end of the arachnomancer's turn.

scarification ritual

To demonstrate his seriousness and devotion to the study of arachnecancy, a candidate for this prestige class must undergo a scarification ritual that involves searing his flesh with brands and rubbing dark ash or other pigmentation into the wound to create a raised, dark scar. The end result of this rite is a face well marked with a spider insignia.

spiderkind

The term spiderkind includes all of the following creatures in the D&D® game.

City of the Spider Queen: Arachnoid creature, drider vampire, wraith spider.

Fiend Folio: Chwidenchia.

Monster Manual: Aranea, bebilith (demon), drider, ettercap, phase spider, monstrous spider, retriever (demon), spider swarm.

Monster Manual II: Neogi, shadow spider, spellgaunt.

Monsters of Faerûn: Chitine, choldrith, myrolochar, subterranean (hairy and sword) spiders, yochlol (demon).

CAVELORD

A passion for the narrow, dim ways of the world burns in the breast of the cavelord.

Born with an ache to learn about the roots of the mountains, the sunless seas, and the hidden ways filled with darkness that will never be illuminated, the cavelord roams the tunnel and cave systems of the Underdark.

He takes it upon himself to protect the Realms Below, uprooting foul and disruptive things as he comes upon them.

The class calls to druids, rangers, barbarians, and others with a love for untrammelled places of the deep earth because of the knowledge and Underdark lore it offers. Characters with spellcasting or psionic abilities, however, may choose to take only a few levels of cavelord, lest they give up too much spell power.

Cavelords spend all their time in the depths, seeking yet deeper caverns and more ancient wonders hidden in darkness.

Thus, they are rarely encountered except by parties plumbing the most hidden depths of the earth.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a cavelord, a character must meet all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (Underdark local) 8 ranks, Search 2 ranks, Spot 2 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feat: Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The cavelord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Underdark local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the cavelord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cavelords are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with all types of shields except tower shields.

Tunnelrunner: At 1st level, a cavelord gains Tunnelrunner (see Chapter 2: Regions and Feats) as a bonus feat.

Cave Tracker (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a cavelord can move at normal speed while following tracks without taking the normal -5 penalty on the Survival check, as long as those tracks are confined to a cave or tunnel environment.

Lesser Cavesense (Ex): Gifted with a mystical connection to the Underdark, the cavelord gains a superior form of darkvision with a 120-foot range when he reaches 2nd level.

He also gains a +4 competence bonus on any Listen checks made in a subterranean setting.

Tunnelswimmer (Su): A cavelord is at home in the subterranean waters that pervade the Underdark.

Upon reaching 4th level, he can hold his breath three times longer than normal before he is at risk of drowning (a number of rounds equal to six times his Constitution score for a typical humanoid character).

The cavelord also gains a swim speed of 30 feet.

Strength of Stones (Su): At 5th level, a cavelord gains the ability to invoke the strength of the earth.

Once per day as a free action, he can gain an insight bonus to Strength equal to his cavelord level that lasts for 1 minute.

Greater Cavesense (Ex): When a cavelord reaches 7th level, his mystical connection to the Underdark increases, granting him the tremorsense ability (see Chapter 7 of the Monster Manual) with a 30-foot range.

Changestones (Sp): At 8th level, a cavelord gains the ability to use changestones (see Chapter 4: Magic and Spells) once per day (caster level 14th).

Bones of the Earth (Su): When a cavelord reaches 10th level, the earth recognizes him as its own and protects him from death.

If the cavelord takes damage that would reduce him to -10 or fewer hit points while in a cave, tunnel, or other Underdark environment, he may attempt a Fortitude save (DC 5 + damage dealt).

If the save is successful, the cavelord instantly turns to stone, as if subject to the flesh to stone spell, before death can claim him.

(This ability also works if unstaunched bleeding would cause the cavelord's hit points to drop to -10 or below.

The DC for the Fortitude save in this case is 6).

His stone form becomes fixed in place as if it were a natural feature of the cavern.

Twenty-four hours later, the earth looses its healing grip, and the cavelord becomes flesh again.

He awakens with 1 hit point and no prepared spells or power points.

Any significant damage done to his stony form (such as breaking off the head, or shattering the body) kills the cavelord.

DEEP DIVINER

Deep diviners are intimates of the earth and all that it hides. A deep diviner knows the stones, structures, faults, hot spots, and mineral types of the Underdark, and they know her.

She uses her earthborn power to locate fluxes of energy, especially earth nodes, with which she can recharge and augment her own arcane might.

Some deep diviners can even call elemental spirits of the earth to do their bidding.

All deep diviners are skilled in some form of spellcasting—without that ability, node knowledge and other secret spells whispered by the stones would do her no good.

Thus, wizards, sorcerers, clerics, and druids most commonly take up the deep diviner mantle.

Groups of deep diviners can often be found working together, protecting or shepherding particularly interesting (or node-rich) areas of the Underdark.

On other occasions, a single deep diviner may strike out on her own in search of the perfect earth node to customize for herself.

Lone deep diviners tend toward selfishness, though they are not necessarily evil.

Deep diviners are rarely happy in groups that travel predominately on the surface of the earth, though some earth nodes near the upperworld do extend high enough to permit the occasional earthly communion so necessary to the deep diviner's soul.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a deep diviner, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (Underdark local) 8 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feat: Spell Focus (Divination).

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The deep diviner's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the deep diviner prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Deep diviners gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At each deep diviner level except 6th, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a deep diviner, the player must decide to which class to add each deep diviner level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Locate Node (Su): At 1st level, a deep diviner gains the ability to sense the direction and strength of the nearest earth node, regardless of distance (see Node Magic in Chapter 4).

To locate the node, she must meditate for 10 minutes.

She can use this ability once per day per deep diviner level, so a 3rd-level deep diviner could make three attempts to locate the nearest node in a single day.

The deep diviner's ability to sense earth nodes is blocked by even a thin sheet of lead, and by certain rare ores in the earth of the DM's choice.

Node Spellcasting: At 1st level, a deep diviner gains Node Spellcasting as a bonus feat (see Chapter 2: Regions and Feats).

Speak To Stone (Sp): When a deep diviner reaches 2nd level, her presence can lend nearby rock and earth a fleeting awareness.

This ability can be used once per day, and the sentence lasts for 1 minute per caster level of the deep diviner.

During this period, the character can comprehend and communicate with stone and earth, including normally nonanimate rock, worked stone, and dirt.

She can pose questions to and receive answers from a pebble, a section of tunnel wall, or a pile of loose earth.

A stone normally has no sense of its surroundings, but the deep diviner's presence allows it to recall a very limited amount of information.

As with the stone tell spell, speaking stones may relate who or what has touched them and give complete descriptions of what is covered or concealed behind or under them.

Node Store: At 3rd level, a deep diviner gains Node Store as a bonus feat (see Chapter 2: Regions and Feats).

Summon Earth Elemental (Sp): Once per day at 5th level and above, the deep diviner can summon a Large earth elemental as though with the summon monster VI spell (caster level 12th).

Node Charge (Su): At 6th level, a deep diviner can tap the power of an earth node even from a distance.

If she spends at least 4 hours in an earth node, she can leave with her connection to it intact.

At any time during the next ten days while she is outside the keyed earth node, she can activate that connection for 1 minute as a free action.

Once connected, the deep diviner can use all abilities granted to her by that earth node as if she were still within it.

After using this ability, the deep diviner must return to an earth node and spend at least 4 hours within its confines (see Node Magic in Chapter 4: Magic and Spells) before she can tap its power remotely again.

Metanode Spell: At 8th level, a deep diviner gains Metanode Spell as a bonus feat (see Chapter 2: Regions and Feats).

Wall of Stone (Sp): Upon reaching 9th level, a deep diviner gains the ability to use wall of stone (caster level 16th) once per day.

Mantle of Earth (Su): At 10th level, a deep diviner can become a greater earth elemental (see the Monster Manual) once per day for up to 10 minutes.

This ability functions like the polymorph spell, except that the deep diviner gains all the elemental's extraordinary abilities and supernatural abilities.

She also gains access to all the elemental's feats for as long as she remains in that form.

Changing form is a standard action that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

DROW JUDICATOR

A mortal imbued with fiendish cruelty, the drow judicator is a knight most foul.

This unholy warrior is steeped in the divine energy of Selvetarm, the Spider That Waits, self-appointed Champion of Lolth.

Consort of demons and demonic arachnids, the drow judicator is hated and feared by all, especially other male drow who are jealous of the heights of power to which he has risen.

Drow judicators must make an unholy pledge to Selvetarm and then survive the rites of entry to adopt the prestige class.

At least a little schooling in spellcasting is required, but only the toughest and meanest sorcerers and wizards can survive the entry requirements.

Clerics often attempt to take on the drow judicator's mantle as well, as do fighters, rangers, and rogues who have taken levels in spellcasting classes.

Typically, an NPC drow judicator serves a higher-ranking cleric of Lolth, although he chafes to be the sole authority. Drow judicators and assassins usually fill out the ranks of a high priestess's hand-picked murder team.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a drow judicator, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Drow.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

Feats: Combat Reflexes, Lolth's Meat (see Chapter 3).

Spellcasting: Able to cast 1st-level arcane or divine spells.

Special: The candidate must survive the rites of entry administered by clerics of Selvetarm or Lolth.

CLASS SKILLS

The drow judicator's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the drow judicator prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Drow judicators are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with all types of shields except tower shields.

Spells per Day: At every third drow judicator level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level (for male drow, this is usually an arcane spellcasting class, although male clerics of Selvetarm sometimes become drow judicators).

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a drow judicator, the player must decide to which class to add each drow judicator level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

War Strike (Su): War is the ultimate expression of Selvetarm's power, so its lessons are the very first that the drow judicator learns.

Beginning at 1st level, he can attempt a war strike with one normal melee attack.

If he hits, he deals 2d6 points of Constitution damage in addition to his regular damage.

The target may attempt a Fortitude save (DC 10 + drow judicator level + drow judicator's Cha modifier) to halve the Constitution damage.

This ability is usable once per day.

Command Spiders (Su): As a special dispensation from Lolth, Selvetarm can grant his judicators the ability to command spiders.

When a drow judicator reaches 2nd level, he gains the ability to compel spiders in the same way that an evil cleric can rebuke or command undead (see the Player's Handbook). The drow judicator can attempt to command spiders a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier.

He is treated as a cleric of a level equal to his drow judicator level for the purpose of turning checks and turning damage.

Selvetarm's Blessing (Ex): At 2nd level and above, a drow judicator receives a +3 profane bonus on all saving throws.

Selvetaim's Wrath (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a drow judicator may attempt to deliver extra damage with one normal melee attack.

On a successful attack, he deals 1 extra point of damage per drow judicator level.

For example, an 8th-level drow judicator armed with a longsword deals 1d8+8 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses (for high Strength, magical effects, or the like) that would normally apply.

This ability is usable once per day at 4th level, twice per day at 7th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

Spider Servant: At 5th level, a drow judicator can call for a spider servant.

See the Spider Servant sidebar for details.

spider servant

At 5th level or above, a drow judicator can call a spiderlike monster to serve him. He may choose to call an 8-HD Large fiendish monstrous spider, a fiendish sword spider, a myrlochar, or a phase spider. (See the Monster Manual or Monsters of Faerûn for these creatures' statistics.) He can use this spider servant as a guardian or a mount, at his discretion. The spider servant gains HD and special abilities based on the drow judicator's class level, as given on Table 3-5.

The drow judicator may have only one spider servant at a time. Should his servant die, he may call for another after 24 hours. The new spider servant has all the accumulated abilities due a servant of the character's current drow judicator level.

TABLE 3-5: SPIDER SERVANTS

Drow Judicator Level	Natural Bonus HD	Natural Armor Adj.	Str Adj.	Int Adj.	Special
5th	+2	+2	+2	-	Improved evasion, share saving throws, share spells
6th-7th	+4	+4	+2	+2	Speak with drow judicator
8th-9th	+6	+6	+4	+4	Blood bond
10th	+8	+8	+6	+6	Spell resistance

Drow Judicator Level: The character's level in the drow judicator prestige class.

Bonus HD: These are extra Hit Dice appropriate to the creature's type (vermin for a Large monstrous spider or sword spider, outsider for a myrlochar, or magical beast for a phase spider). Each bonus Hit Die gains a Constitution modifier and improves the creature's base attack and base save bonuses, as normal.

Natural Armor Adj.: The number noted here is an improvement to the servant's existing natural armor bonus. It represents the preternatural toughness of a drow judicator's servant.

Spider's Grace (Sp): At 8th level, a drow judicator gains the ability to take on attributes of a spider for up to 10 minutes once per day.

While this ability is active, the character can climb on surfaces as if subjected to a spider climb spell, and he receives a +4 insight bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks. He also gains a bite attack that deals 1d4 points of damage and is poisonous.

The bite is a secondary natural weapon that can be used once per round at the drow judicator's highest base attack bonus, with the standard -5 penalty for a secondary attack.

Str Adj.: Add this figure to the servant's Strength score.

Int Adj.: Add this figure to the servant's Intelligence score.

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, a servant takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Share Saving Throws: For each of its saving throws, the servant uses its own base save bonus or the drow judicator's, whichever is higher. The servant applies its own ability modifiers to saves, and it doesn't share any other bonuses on saves that the drow judicator might have (such as from magic items or feats).

Share Spells: At the drow judicator's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts upon himself also affect his spider servant. The servant must be within 5 feet of him at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the spider servant if the latter moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the creature again even if it returns to the drow judicator before the duration expires. Additionally, the drow judicator may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his spider servant (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself. The drow judicator and his servant can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the servant's type.

Speak with Drow Judicator: The drow judicator and his servant can communicate verbally as if they were using a common language. Other creatures do not understand the communication without magical help.

Blood Bond: The spider servant gains a +2 bonus on all attack rolls, checks, and saves if it witnesses the drow judicator threatened or harmed. This bonus lasts as long as the threat is immediate and apparent.

Spell Resistance: The spider servant's spell resistance equals the drow judicator's class level + 15. To affect the servant with a spell, a spellcaster must get a result on a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) that equals or exceeds the servant's spell resistance.

The Fortitude save DC for the poison is 18 + the drow judicator's Con modifier, and it deals 1d6 points of Strength damage for both its initial and its secondary damage.

Judgment (Su): At 10th level, a drow judicator gains the ability to judge all creatures within 100 feet of him that he can see.

Those he finds wanting are immediately targeted with a horrid wilting effect (caster level 18th; save DC 18 + drow judicator's Wis modifier).

The drow judicator can base his decision on any parameters he chooses.

This ability is usable once per day as a standard action.

ILLITHID BODY TAMER

Illithids who embrace the Tamer Creed believe that military might is the most important factor in their race's future mastery of the multiverse.

These so-called body tamers seek to impose their will upon the Underdark primarily through martial force, forswearing diplomacy, tricks, and alliances.

Body tamers believe so strongly in the importance of physical strength that they train themselves as warriors, not mentalists.

Illithid body tamers sacrifice some ability in the psionic arts for the advancement of their physical abilities.

However, they believe that the acquisition of tangible martial ability is more than worth this price.

Adherents of the Tamer Creed maintain various martial facilities in the larger illithid cities of the Underdark.

Within such sanctums, they discuss the philosophy of warfare, devise novel tactics in never-ending wargames, and train fervently in their art.

Tamer facilities each contain a small arena where the body tamers practice their arts against expendable slaves.

Often, groups of illithid body tamers organize defense teams to fight off githzerai or githyanki hunting parties that appear suddenly, intent on mind flayer murder.

These former thrall races continue to nurse an undying grudge against illithids, and the body tamers intend to be ready to protect their own.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an illithid body tamer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Illithid, illithidkin, or a creature with the half-illithid template.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (tentacle).

CLASS SKILLS

The illithid body tamer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (history) (Int), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the illithid body tamer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Illithid body tamers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with all types of shields except tower shields.

Code of Mental Abstinence (Ex): Just as some humanoid cultures believe that celibacy enhances their spiritual powers, illithid body tamers believe that reliance on psionics weakens their hard-won physical abilities.

An abstinent illithid body tamer gains 10 temporary hit points, plus 4 temporary hit points per illithid body tamer level.

If these hit points are lost to damage, the body tamer recovers them with 8 hours of rest.

It also gains a +2 insight bonus on all melee damage rolls for tentacle and weapon attacks.

To be considered abstinent, the body tamer must not have used any of its psionic abilities (including mind blast, charm monster, detect thoughts, levitate, plane shift, and suggestion) within the last 24 hours.

If it uses any of these abilities, it does not have access to any of its usual benefits for abstinence until 24 hours after its last use of such an ability.

An illithid body tamer is not slavishly devoted to its code. If using plane shift or mind blast is clearly in its best interest, then it does so, preferring to lose access to the benefits of abstinence than lose its life.

Strength of Arms (Ex): When making a full attack with both a manufactured weapon and its tentacles, an illithid body tamer may designate either its tentacles or its weapon as its primary attack.

If its weapon is its primary attack, it strikes with the weapon at its highest base attack bonus (making multiple attacks if its base attack bonus is high enough), but a –2 penalty applies to each tentacle attack made that round.

If its tentacles are its primary attack, they strike at its highest base attack bonus, but it can strike only once with its manufactured weapon, and a –2 penalty applies to that attack.

A body tamer using both weapon and tentacles can still withdraw the brains of foes with its tentacles as normal, whether or not the tentacles are its primary attack.

However, it usually simply discards the brains and moves on to the next foe.

Nourishment can wait.

Tentacle of Fate (Ex): When an illithid body tamer reaches 3rd level, its base tentacle damage increases from 1d4 to 1d6.

Improved Trip: At 4th level, the illithid body tamer gains Improved Trip as a bonus feat.

Improved Disarm (Ex): At 5th level, an illithid body tamer gains the use of the Improved Disarm feat when using its tentacles to perform the disarm action.

It need not meet the normal prerequisites for the feat to use it in this way.

The body tamer's tentacles are treated as a one-handed weapon for the purpose of disarm attempts.

Reaching Tentacle (Ex): When an illithid body tamer attains 6th level, its reach with its tentacles increases by 5 feet.

This adjustment stacks with the additional reach provided by tentacle extensions (see Chapter 5: Equipment and Magic Items), if such are in use.

Whirlwind Tentacle (Ex): At 7th level, an illithid body tamer gains the use of the Whirlwind Attack feat when using its tentacles to perform such an attack.

It need not meet the normal prerequisites for the feat to use it in this way.

Because of its multiple tentacles and reaching tentacle ability, it can make one attack against every creature in the area it threatens, instead of just every creature within 5 feet.

Tentacle of Destiny (Ex): When an illithid body tamer reaches 8th level, its base tentacle damage increases from 1d6 to 1d8.

Death Whirlwind (Su): At 10th level, an illithid body tamer psionically energizes its whirlwind tentacle ability with a death impulse once per day.

When it uses this ability in combination with a whirlwind tentacle attack, every creature struck must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 15 + illithid body tamer's Con modifier) or die as if brought to -10 hit points.

Constructs and undead are immune to this effect.

IMASKARI VENGEANCE TAKER

A secret society dedicated to righting wrongs, the Imaskari vengeance takers are trained by hidden masters in the rites and rituals of revenge.

Members of the Lodge of the Retributive Masters, as the society is called, use arcane spells, stealth, and the imprimatur of "just retribution" to destroy those who have sinned against their society and those it protects.

To a vengeance taker, a paladin who destroys a den of grimlocks under the protection of the Lodge of Retributive Masters is deserving of vengeance in the same extremity and measure as a drow who murders a member of the society itself.

Sorcerers, wizards, and arcane-minded rogues and monks are the most likely characters to become Imaskari vengeance takers, though class is not so important as motivation.

Anyone whose personal quest of revenge has become obsessive and epic in nature is well suited to the class. The Lodge of the Retributive Masters recruits from everywhere in the Upperdark, and even from the surface, though its recruiters travel there only by night.

An Imaskari vengeance taker is happy to work alone, trailing her latest quarry through the tunnels and caves of the Underdark, and even out into the surface world if need be.

She is usually willing to work with a larger group, so long as its members are amenable to helping her deal her own brand of justice on occasion.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To become an Imaskari vengeance taker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: The candidate must have slain a creature or enemy purely for revenge.

She must also swear to obey the Imaskari vengeance taker code (see sidebar on page 38).

CLASS SKILLS

The vengeance taker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the Imaskari vengeance taker.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Imaskari vengeance takers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At every even-numbered Imaskari vengeance taker level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming an Imaskari vengeance taker, the player must decide to which class to add each Imaskari vengeance taker level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Target of Vengeance (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, an Imaskari vengeance taker may select a specific creature as the target of her vengeance.

Her calculated study of this foe grants her a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks made against that one creature.

Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against her foe.

Each time the Imaskari vengeance taker gains a new level in the prestige class, her bonuses against her target of vengeance increase by +1.

To designate a target of vengeance, the Imaskari vengeance taker must spend one full day performing a set of special rites.

She must either know the name of her foe or have met the individual at least once.

An Imaskari vengeance taker may have only one target of vengeance at a time.

She can designate a new target after successfully slaying her previous target or by spending three full days performing the necessary rituals.

An Imaskari vengeance taker who has levels in the ranger class may add one-half the bonus noted above (rounded down) to her favored enemy bonus when attacking or using the indicated skills against a target of vengeance that is also one of her favored enemies.

Poison Use: At 2nd level, an Imaskari vengeance taker learns to use poison effectively.

She never risks accidentally poisoning herself when applying poison to a blade.

Sneak Attack (Ex): At 3rd level, an Imaskari vengeance taker learns the art of the sneak attack.

If she can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, the vengeance taker's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the vengeance taker flanks her target.

This extra damage is 1d6 at 3rd level, and it increases to 2d6 at 5th level, 3d6 at 7th level, and 4d6 at 9th level.

Should the vengeance taker score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

An Imaskari vengeance taker can't strike with deadly accuracy from beyond that range.

With a sap (blackjack) or an unarmed strike, an Imaskari vengeance taker can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage.

She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual -4 penalty, because she must make optimal use of her weapon in order to execute a sneak attack.

An Imaskari vengeance taker can sneak attack only living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks.

The vengeance taker must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

A vengeance taker cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If the Imaskari vengeance taker is entitled to sneak attack damage from another source (such as rogue levels), the damage does stack.

Far Sense (Sp): Upon reaching 4th level, an Imaskari vengeance taker gains the ability to use clairaudience/clairvoyance (caster level equals 1/2 Imaskari vengeance taker's character level) to acquire information about her target of vengeance.

This ability is usable once per day.

Seeker (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, an Imaskari vengeance taker can use divination (caster level equals 1/2 Imaskari vengeance taker's character level) to ask questions that bear on her target of vengeance.

This ability is usable once per day.

Scry Target (Sp): When an Imaskari vengeance taker reaches 8th level, she can attempt to see her target of vengeance from afar.

This effect functions like the scrying spell (caster level equals 1/2 Imaskari vengeance taker's character level), except that the vengeance taker does not need a reflective surface, and the -5 penalty for knowing the target well applies to the Will save, even if the vengeance taker is not well acquainted with the target.

This ability is usable once per week.

Death Attack (Ex): If an Imaskari vengeance taker studies her target of vengeance for 3 rounds and then successfully deals damage to that individual via a sneak attack with a melee weapon, the target must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + vengeance taker level + vengeance taker's Intelligence modifier) or die.

Success means the attack is resolved as a normal sneak attack.

While studying the victim, the vengeance taker can undertake other actions so long as her attention stays focused on the target and the target does not detect the vengeance taker or recognize her as an enemy.

Once the vengeance taker has completed her 3 rounds of study, she must make the death attack within the next 3 rounds.

If the death attack is attempted and fails or if the vengeance taker does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 more rounds of study are required before she can attempt another death attack.

A vengeance taker does not have the option of paralyzing her victim with a death attack.

A vengeance taker with levels in the assassin prestige class (see Chapter 2 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) may add her assassin and vengeance taker class levels together for the purpose of calculating the save DC for her vengeance taker death attack.

The Imaskari Vengeance Taker Code

An Imaskari vengeance taker must swear before the Retributive Masters (whose lodge is located in a hidden spot outside the even more secret realm of Deep Imaskar) to take vengeance on those who deserve justice, on those who commit crimes against creatures protected by the Retributive Masters, and on those who impede the vengeance taker in her task. She further swears to obey the orders of the Retributive Masters in all matters.

A vengeance taker who violates this code (usually by refusing to obey the Retributive Masters, or by allowing the unjust to escape vengeance) loses her ability to designate a target of vengeance and may not progress any further in levels as an Imaskari vengeance taker. She regains her target of vengeance ability and advancement potential if she atones for her disobedience, which can usually be accomplished by undertaking a special quest assigned by the Retributive Masters.

INQUISITOR OF THE DROWNING GODDESS

The Sea Mother gives her children life and demands steadfast devotion in return.

Those kuo-toas who become monitors (monks) typically spend their lives protecting their community from outside threats.

Some, however, go on to become inquisitors of the Drowning Goddess, who are tasked with protecting the community from inside threats.

Though most inquisitors of the Drowning Goddess come from the ranks of kuo-toa monks, an occasional rogue may also answer the call.

Characters from spellcasting classes rarely become inquisitors.

An inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess's devotion is to his deity and his church.

It is his duty to impose the will of the Sea Mother upon the community and to seek out and punish any who violate the edicts of the church.

Most kuo-toas live in dread of attracting the attention of an inquisitor.

The presence of such characters tends to make a kuo-toan community even more rife with fear, suspicion, and accusations than it would be otherwise.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Kuo-toa.

Alignment: Lawful evil or lawful neutral.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

Feat: Improved unarmed strike.

Patron: Blibdoolpoolp.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of the inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are the class features of the inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Inquisitors of the Drowning Goddess are proficient with steel fins (see Chapter 5: Equipment and Magic Items).

They gain no proficiency with any other weapon or armor.

Fear Aura (Su): Once per day, an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess can project a fear aura to a radius of 20 feet as a standard action.

This effect lasts for 1 round per inquisitor level.

Each foe in the area must make a Will save (DC 10 + inquisitor level + inquisitor's Cha modifier) or be affected as if by a fear spell (caster level equals inquisitor level).

A new saving throw is required for each round that the creature remains in the area.

Grappling Adhesive (Ex): At 2nd level, an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess learns how to utilize his own natural adhesive effectively in unarmed combat.

He gains a +2 bonus on grapple checks made to start or maintain a grapple and a +2 bonus on attack rolls made to disarm an opponent with his bare hands.

When he reaches 4th level, each of these bonuses increases to +4.

The inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess requires one hour and special materials costing 20 gp to coat his limbs with grappling adhesive, which remains effective for up to 24 hours.

Mien of Justice (Ex): At 1st level, an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess gains a +4 insight bonus on Intimidate and Sense Motive checks.

At 5th level, this bonus increases to +8.

Devoted Mind (Ex): Upon reaching 3rd level, an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess gains a +4 insight bonus on saving throws against all spells with the charm, compulsion, or glamor descriptors.

Body-Coating Adhesive (Ex): At 5th level, an inquisitor of the Drowning Goddess can use his own body oil and other materials to give his body a finish almost like flypaper, which can hold fast any creatures or items that touch him. Anyone who makes an unsuccessful melee attack against an inquisitor so prepared must succeed on a Reflex save (DC 15 + inquisitor's Con modifier), or the weapon used in the attack sticks to the inquisitor and is yanked out of its wielder's grip.

Creatures using natural weapons are automatically grappled if they get stuck.

An inquisitor requires one hour and special materials costing 50 gp to coat his body with adhesive, but the secretion remains sticky for up to three days, or until it actually catches something or someone, whichever comes first.

Successfully trapping a creature or item uses up the adhesive, so the inquisitor's body can trap no further creatures or items until its coating is replenished.

Pulling a stuck weapon or limb from the inquisitor requires a successful DC 20 Strength check.

An inquisitor can secrete a natural oil to break up and remove the adhesive any time he likes.

PRIME UNDERDARK GUIDE

Traveling in the Underdark is dangerous, especially for those unaccustomed to its labyrinthine passages.

Wise travelers try to hire a skilled guide who not only knows how to overcome the physical challenges, but also can help them over the social and cultural hurdles they are sure to face.

Bards, rangers, and rogues have skills and interests that are well suited for this prestige class.

Many characters dabble in the class, but few pursue it long enough to gain all that it offers.

It's not unusual for a rogue to take some levels in prime Underdark guide just so that she can better aid her companions in their travels through the Realms Below.

Prime Underdark guides are usually found in the company of adventuring parties or merchant caravans.

With their environmental and diplomatic expertise, they can greatly enhance the odds of survival in the Underdark for both themselves and their clients.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a prime Underdark guide, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Balance 2 ranks, Climb 8 ranks, Diplomacy 5 ranks, Gather Information 5 ranks, Knowledge (Underdark local) 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks, Use Rope 2 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Track.

Special: Must know at least four languages.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of the prime Underdark guide (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (Underdark local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the prime Underdark guide prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Prime Underdark guides gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a prime Underdark guide gains the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, the prime Underdark guide must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a character with an Intelligence score of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Prime Underdark guide bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the prime Underdark guide's Intelligence modifier.

When the prime Underdark guide gets 0 spells per day of a given level (for instance, 0 1st-level spells at 1st level), she gains only the bonus spells she would be entitled to for that spell level based on her Intelligence score.

A prime Underdark guide without a bonus spell for that level cannot yet cast a spell of that level.

The prime Underdark guide's spell list appears below.

A prime Underdark guide prepares and casts spells just as a wizard does.

She keeps her spells in a spellbook and must study them each morning.

She can add to her spellbook by copying spells from wizards or from other prime Underdark guides.

Aid Another Nearby (Ex): A prime Underdark guide need not be adjacent to another creature to use the aid another action for certain purposes.

Beginning at 1st level, she can aid another at a distance of up to 30 feet on Balance, Climb, Jump, Survival, Swim, and Use Rope checks, as long as her ally can see or hear her.

Bonus Language: Since prime Underdark guides travel among many different races, they tend to pick up other languages with great facility.

At 1st level and every other level thereafter, a prime Underdark guide gains one bonus language of her choice. (She cannot choose secret languages as bonus languages with this ability).

Aid Group (Ex): A prime Underdark guide is accustomed to managing and helping large groups of people.

Beginning at 2nd level, she can assist one creature per prime Underdark guide level on Balance, Climb, Jump, Survival, Swim, and Use Rope checks whenever she uses the aid another action.

All creatures she is so aiding must be within 30 feet of her.

Danger Sense (Ex): A prime Underdark guide possesses an uncanny intuition that warns her of impending danger. At 2nd level, she gains a +2 insight bonus on Reflex saves to avoid traps or natural hazards, a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class against attacks made by traps or natural hazards, and a +2 insight bonus on Spot checks made to spot creatures at the beginning of an encounter (see the Encounter Distance rules in Chapter 3 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

At 4th level, these bonuses increase to +4, and at 8th level, they increase to +6.

Underdark Lore: A prime Underdark guide is especially adept at gathering knowledge.

At 2nd level, she gains the ability to recall legends or information about various topics.

This ability works like bardic knowledge (see the bard class entry in the Player's Handbook), except that the prime Underdark guide's bonus for an Underdark lore check is her character level + her Intelligence modifier.

This ability applies only to information pertaining to the Underdark.

Underdark Traveler (Ex): A prime Underdark guide is familiar with the culture and etiquette of many Underdark societies.

At 2nd level, she receives a +2 bonus on all Diplomacy, Disguise, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks made against members of Underdark races.

This bonus increases to +3 at 5th level, to +4 at 7th level, and to +5 at 9th level.

Danger Warning (Su): When the prime Underdark guide reaches 3rd level, her danger sense becomes so acute that nearby companions become similarly sensitive.

As a standard action, the prime Underdark guide can select one ally per class level within 30 feet to share her danger sense.

Each of these designated allies gains a +1 insight bonus on Reflex saves to avoid traps or natural hazards, a +1 dodge bonus to Armor Class against attacks made by traps or natural hazards, and a +1 insight bonus on Spot checks made to spot creatures at the beginning of an encounter (see the Encounter Distance rules in Chapter 3 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

This bonus increases to +2 at 6th level and to +3 at 10th level.

Each creature so designated retains the benefit until it moves out of range or until the prime Underdark guide designates a different set of allies to receive the benefit.

PRIME UNDERDARK GUIDE SPELL LIST

Prime Underdark guides choose their spells from the following list: 1st Level: alarm, change self, create water, detect magic, endure elements, expeditious retreat, feather fall, jump, light, purify food and drink, resist energy, spider climb, *stick*¹.

2nd Level: bull's strength, *burrow*¹, cat's grace, eagle's splendor, darkvision, owl's wisdom, pass without trace, protection from energy, *reflective disguise*¹.

3rd Level: *amorphous form*¹, create food and water, daylight, deeper darkness, *shadow mask*², suggestion.

² Spell from the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting.

SEA MOTHER WHIP

Devout worshipers of Blibdoolpoolp who seek closer communion with the Sea Mother often gain additional abilities in return.

These kuo-toas, known as Sea Mother whips, are accorded great honor, as well as additional responsibilities.

Most Sea Mother whips begin their careers as clerics or cleric/rogues.

Sometimes, however, an experienced ranger devoted to Blibdoolpoolp decides to pursue this prestige class to gain more standing and respect in her community.

A Sea Mother whip's devotion is to her deity and her church.

Her primary responsibility is to inspire followers of the Drowning Goddess and protect them from interlopers or nonbelievers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Sea Mother whip, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Kuo-toa.

Alignment: Lawful evil, neutral evil, chaotic evil, or neutral.

Skill: Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Patron: Blibdoolpoolp.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of the Sea Mother whip (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the Sea Mother whip prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sea Mother whips are proficient with the pincer staff (see Chapter 5: Equipment and Magic Items).

They gain no proficiency with any other weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At each Sea Mother whip level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a Sea Mother whip, the player must decide to which class to add each Sea Mother whip level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Watery Death Prestige Domain: At 1st level, a Sea Mother whip gains access to the Watery Death domain.

If she was previously a cleric, she gains the prestige domain as a third domain and can choose to prepare domain spells from it just as she does from her other two domains.

If the Sea Mother whip was previously a noncleric divine spellcaster (for example, a ranger), she gains one extra spell slot for each spell level to which she normally has access, but she must fill it with the Watery Death domain spell of that level.

Regardless of her prior classes, a Sea Mother whip gains the granted power of the Watery Death domain (see Chapter 4: Magic and Spells).

Punish the Infidels (Sp): At 2nd level, a Sea Mother whip can curse her enemies.

Every opponent within 30 feet who can see and hear the Sea Mother whip suffers the effect of a doom spell (caster level equals Sea Mother whip level; save DC 11 + Wisdom modifier).

Independent Lightning Bolt (Su): At 3rd level, a Sea Mother whip no longer requires the presence of other whips to generate a lightning bolt; she can do so on her own every 2d4 rounds as a standard action.

The lightning bolt deals 1d6 points of damage per Sea Mother whip level, but a successful Reflex save (DC 10 + Sea Mother whip level + Sea Mother whip's Wis modifier) halves the damage.

Inspire the Faithful (Sp): At 4th level, a Sea Mother whip can inspire her flock to great effect.

Every other kuo-toa worshiper of Blibdoolpoolp within 30 feet who can see and hear the Sea Mother whip receives the benefit of an aid spell (caster level equals Sea Mother whip level).

Bolster Lightning Bolts (Su): When the Sea Mother whip reaches 5th level, the save DC for any supernatural lightning bolt that she creates herself or joins with other whips to create automatically increases by +2.

SHADOWCRAFTER

Shadowcrafters long ago mastered illusions and glamers.

They specialize in forming their own reality out of nothingness.

Sorcerers and wizards who specialize in illusions, particularly those who worship Shar, often find the shadowcrafter class attractive.

Occasionally, even bards adopt this prestige class.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a shadowcrafter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Feats: Greater Spell Focus (Illusion), Spell Focus (Illusion).

Skill: Disguise 4 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast any 3rd-level or higher spell with the illusion (shadow) descriptor.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a shadowcrafter (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Disguise (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the shadowcrafter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadowcrafters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At each shadowcrafter level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a shadowcrafter, the player must decide to which class to add each shadowcrafter level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Shadow Mien (Su): At 1st level, a shadowcrafter gains a +2 bonus on Disguise and Hide checks.

Enhanced Shadow Conjurations (Su): When a shadowcrafter reaches 2nd level, his shadow conjurations automatically intensify in strength by 10%.

Hence, shadow conjuration is 30% as strong as the real thing instead of the standard 20%, and greater shadow conjuration is 70% as strong as the real thing instead of the standard 60%. When he reaches 6th level, the strength of his shadow conjurations increases by an additional 10%, for a total increase of 20%.

Hence, shadow conjuration is 40% as strong as the real thing, and greater shadow conjuration is 80% as strong.

Enhanced Shadow Evocations (Su): When a shadowcrafter reaches 3rd level, his shadow evocations intensify in strength by 10%.

Hence, shadow evocation is 30% as strong as the real thing instead of the standard 20%, and greater shadow evocation is 70% as strong as the real thing instead of the standard 60%. When he reaches 7th level, the strength of his shadow evocations increases by an additional 10%, for a total increase of 20%.

Hence, shadow evocation is 40% as strong as the real thing, and greater shadow evocation is 80% as strong.

Shadow Spell Penetration (Ex): At 4th level, a shadowcrafter gains a +2 bonus on caster level checks for all of his illusion (shadow) spells.

This bonus stacks with that provided by the Spell Penetration and Greater Spell Penetration feats.

At 8th level, this bonus increases to +4.

Resistance to Illusions (Ex): At 5th level, a shadowcrafter gains a +2 bonus on saving throws against all illusion spells and effects.

No Delusions (Ex): At 9th level, a shadowcrafter has such complete mastery of illusion spells that he no longer needs to interact with them to merit a saving throw.

If he can see or otherwise witness the illusory effect, he can attempt a save.

Shadow Self (Ex): At 10th level, a shadowcrafter has so attuned himself to shadows and illusions that he actually becomes a magical creature.

He is forevermore a native outsider rather than a humanoid (or whatever creature type he previously was).

Additionally, he gains damage reduction 10/magic.

VERMIN KEEPER

Most creatures view creepy, crawly insects with revulsion. To a vermin keeper, however, they're perfect killers—creatures whose supreme adaptations to their environs inspire a sense of awe.

Vermin keepers come almost exclusively from the ranks of druids.

Some are upperworlders whose eyes have been opened to the beauty of bugs; others loved bugs to begin with and merely learned the druidic arts so that they could apply them to insects.

Most characters who care enough about vermin to take levels in the vermin keeper prestige class pursue it to the exclusion of all else.

Interestingly, not every character who pursues this prestige class actually loves bugs.

Sometimes a person who particularly hates or fears insects or spiders decides to study them in order to understand or overmaster them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a vermin keeper, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Handle Animal 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks.

Feat: Iron Will.

Special: Wild shape ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The class skills of a vermin keeper (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (Underdark local) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the vermin keeper prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Vermin keepers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At each vermin keeper level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a vermin keeper, the player must decide to which class to add each vermin keeper level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Handle Vermin (Ex): At 1st level, a vermin keeper can apply his Handle Animal skill to vermin.

Vermin Empathy (Ex): A vermin keeper can apply his wild empathy class ability to vermin.

Vermin begin with an unfriendly attitude.

Vermin Form (Su): Beginning at 1st level, a vermin keeper can use his wild shape ability to assume a vermin form. Starting at 1st level, he can turn himself into any Small vermin.

As he gains vermin keeper levels, the diversity of forms available to him increases.

He can become a Tiny vermin at 2nd level, a Medium vermin at 4th level, a Diminutive vermin at 5th level, a Large vermin at 7th level, a Fine vermin at 8th level, and a Huge vermin at 9th level.

Venom Immunity (Ex): At 3rd level, a vermin keeper gains immunity to all organic poisons.

This category includes all monster poisons but not mineral poisons or poison gas.

Vermin Companion (Ex): At 3rd level, a vermin keeper can call a Small, Medium, or Large vermin as a companion in lieu of an animal (see sidebar for details).

The vermin keeper's vermin companion

A vermin keeper's vermin companion retains its vermin type, though it is superior to a normal vermin of its kind and has special powers, as given on Table 3-12.

TABLE 3-12: VERMIN COMPANION

Class Level	Natural		Str/Dex Adj.	Bonus Tricks	Special
	Bonus HD	Armor Adj.
3rd-4th	+2	+2	+1	2	Link, share spells
5th-6th	+4	+4	+2	3	Evasion
7th-8th	+6	+6	+3	4	Devotion
9th-10th	+8	+8	+4	5	Multiattack

Vermin Companion Basics: Use the base statistics for a creature of the companion's kind, as given in the Monster Manual, but make the following changes.

Intelligence: A vermin companion has an Intelligence score of 2. The fact that it is equivalent in Intelligence to some animals has several effects. First, unlike other vermin, it is not mindless and therefore loses the mindless special quality, which means that it can be affected by mind-affecting spells and effects. Second, the vermin keeper can teach his companion tricks with the Handle Animal skill as though it were an animal. Finally, the vermin companion begins play with feats appropriate for its Hit Dice (vermin keeper's choice, though the creature must qualify for the selected feats) and skill points equal to its Hit Dice +3. The vermin companion's class skills are Listen and Spot.

Class Level: The character's vermin keeper level. Vermin keeper levels do not stack with levels of classes that grant an animal companion ability.

Bonus HD: Extra 8-sided dice, each of which gains a Constitution modifier and improves the vermin companion's base attack bonus and base save bonuses, as normal. A vermin companion's base attack bonus is the same as that of a druid of a level equal to the vermin's Hit Dice. It has good Fortitude saves (treat it as a character whose level equals the vermin's Hit Dice). A vermin companion doesn't gain any extra skill points or feats for bonus HD.

Natural Armor Adj.: The number noted here is an improvement to the vermin companion's existing natural armor bonus.

He may choose any kind of vermin for which statistics are provided in the Monster Manual.

A vermin keeper cannot retain the animal companion he had from his previous class (if any) after he calls a vermin companion.

Except as noted in the sidebar, this ability works the same as a druid's animal companion ability.

Str/Dex Adj.: Add this value to the vermin companion's Strength and Dexterity scores.

Bonus Tricks: The value given in this column is the total number of "bonus" tricks that the vermin knows in addition to any that the vermin keeper might choose to teach it (see the Handle Animal skill description in the Player's Handbook). These bonus tricks don't require any training time or Handle Animal checks, and they don't count against the normal limit of tricks known by the vermin. The vermin keeper selects these bonus tricks, and once selected, they can't be changed.

Link (Ex): A vermin keeper can handle his vermin companion as a free action, or push it as a move action. He gains a +4 circumstance bonus on all wild empathy checks and Handle Animal checks made regarding a vermin companion.

Share Spells (Ex): At the vermin keeper's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts upon himself also affect his vermin companion. The vermin companion must be within 5 feet of him at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the vermin companion if the latter moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the creature again even if it returns to the vermin keeper before the duration expires. Additionally, the vermin keeper may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his vermin companion (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself. The vermin keeper and his vermin companion can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the vermin type.

Evasion (Ex): If a vermin companion is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw.

Devotion (Ex): A vermin companion's devotion to its master is so complete that it gains a +4 morale bonus on Will saves against enchantment spells and effects.

Multiattack: A vermin companion gains Multiattack as a bonus feat if it has three or more natural attacks (see the Monster Manual for details on this feat) and does not already have that feat. If it does not have the requisite natural attacks, the vermin companion instead gains one additional attack with its primary natural weapon, albeit at a -5 penalty.

Extra Wild Shape Feat: A vermin keeper gains Extra Wild Shape as a bonus feat at 4th and 6th levels.

Swarm Form (Su): At 10th level, a vermin keeper can use his wild shape to assume the form of any vermin swarm (any swarm whose constituent creatures are of the vermin type).

YATHCHOL WEBRIDER

Chitines know that webs, once woven, belong to a greater complex that they reverently call the Overweb.

With their intimate understanding of webspinning and their familiarity with the Overweb, Yathchol webriders can move about the Underdark as they choose, riding the hidden lines of the Overweb and calling on its servants to protect them and deal with their enemies.

Chitine rogues, bards, and monks are the most likely candidates for the Yathchol webrider prestige class, although spellcasters and psionic characters occasionally find this route attractive as well.

Becoming a webrider without sharing in the chitine culture is difficult, but possible.

Yathchol webriders usually move about in small, closely-knit groups, in which each member refers to the others as "egg companions".

Some such groups move about the Underdark righting wrongs and meting out justice, while others use their abilities to infiltrate defenses, dupe others, and help themselves to treasure wherever they find it.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Yathchol webrider, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Chitine, or any race that can spin webs from its body. Characters who know or can prepare web as either a spell or a spell-like ability also qualify.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Skill Focus (Craft [trapmaking]).

CLASS SKILLS

The Yathchol webrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Craft (trapmaking) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the Yathchol webrider prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Yathchol webriders are proficient with the club, crossbow (hand, light, or heavy), dagger (any type), dart, mace, morningstar, quarterstaff, rapier, sap, shortbow (normal and composite), and short sword.

They are proficient with light armor but gain no proficiency with any shield.

Web Hide (Su): Beginning at 1st level, a Yathchol webrider can hide herself from view in the open without anything to actually hide behind, so long as she is within 5 feet of natural or magical webs that cover an area measuring at least 5 feet on each side.

Web Ride (Sp): A Yathchol webrider can travel instantaneously between separate sections of webbing. This magical transport must begin and end in an area adjacent to or within webbing that covers at least a 5-foot-square.

At 1st level, the webrider can move up to a total of 20 feet per day in this way.

This distance may be covered in a single ride of 20 feet, or two rides of 10 feet each.

Moves shorter than 10 feet are possible, but the distance covered in each move is rounded up to the next 10-foot increment for the purpose of determining how much movement potential has been used.

The total distance that a Yathchol webrider can move per day with the web ride ability increases with her level, to 160 feet at 4th level, 320 feet at 6th level, 640 feet at 8th level, and 1,280 feet at 10th level.

These extended distances can likewise be split among many web rides, though the actual distance moved with each ride is rounded up to the next 10-foot increment, as above.

Spider Climbing (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a Yathchol webrider can climb and travel on vertical surfaces and even traverse ceilings as well as a spider does if she has her bare hands and feet free for climbing.

She has a climb speed of 20 feet and need not make Climb checks to scale a surface.

Summon Spider (Sp): When she reaches 2nd level, a Yathchol webrider can summon a Large monstrous spider or spider swarm once per day.

This ability is the equivalent of a summon monster III spell (caster level 5 + Yathchol webrider level).

At 5th level, the webrider can summon a Huge monstrous spider as the equivalent of a summon monster V spell, and at the target to succeed on a Reflex save (DC 10 + webrider level + webrider's Con modifier) or be stuck in place. A stuck creature can attempt to break loose as a full-round action by making either a DC 20 Strength check or a DC 25 Escape Artist check, or it can take purely mental actions. No other actions are possible while the creature is stuck. This ability is usable four times per day at 7th level and six times per day at 10th level.

9th level, she can summon a Gargantuan monstrous spider as the equivalent of a summon monster VII spell. See the Monster Manual for each spider's statistics. Web Blast (Su): At 3rd level, a Yathchol webrider can produce a blast of hardened webbing (range 60 feet) as a standard action twice per day. The webbing springs from the webrider's hand (or spinnerets, if any) and speeds toward its target. If the webrider succeeds at a ranged touch attack, the web blast deals 4d6 points of bludgeoning damage and forces

UNEARTHED ARCANA (3.5)

UNIQUE SPELLS

The bard, paladin, and ranger spell lists in the Player's Handbook (as well as similar lists in other books) contain a number of spells that don't appear on other classes' spell lists. In general, any character who enters one of these prestige classes should gain access to spells unique to that class's spell list from the Player's Handbook, at the same levels indicated for the standard class. At the DM's discretion, spells unique to that class's spell list found in other books may also be available, but on a case-by-case basis. The DM may require such spells to be researched or learned specifically by the character, rather than simply making them freely available.

MULTICLASSING AND VARIANT CLASSES

Multiclassing between variants of the same class is a tricky subject, and the DM has to make rulings based on what is appropriate for his campaign. In cases where a single class offers a variety of paths (such as the totem barbarian or the monk fighting styles), the easiest solution is simply to bar multiclassing between different versions of the same class (just as a character can't multiclass between different versions of specialist wizards). For variants that are wholly separate from the character class—such as the bardic sage or the urban ranger—multiclassing, even into multiple variants of the same class, is probably okay. Identical class features should stack if gained from multiple versions of the same class (except for spellcasting, which is always separate).

In any case, only the first version of a favored class is treated as favored; a halfling rogue/wizard who later begins gaining levels in the wilderness rogue variant class can't treat both the rogue and wilderness rogue classes as favored, only the class gained first (in this case, rogue). Under no circumstances does spellcasting ability from multiple classes (even variants of the same class) stack. A character with levels of bard and levels of bardic sage has two separate caster levels and two separate sets of spells per day, even though the classes are very similar.

HOUSE RULE: SPONTANEOUS DOMAIN CASTING

Rather than allowing a cleric to prepare one spell each day from either of his domains, allow the cleric to spontaneously cast any domain spell in place of a prepared spell of the same level or lower.

This functions identically with the cleric's ability to spontaneously cast cure spells. The cleric "loses" a prepared spell to cast either one of his domain spells of the same level or lower.

This house rule reduces a cleric's overall spell power by one spell per spell level, and makes his choice of domains much more significant. A cleric of Kord who selects the Chaos and Luck domains seems a very different spellcaster from one who selects the Good and Strength domains.

If you use this variant, the Healing domain loses much of its appeal, since six of the nine spells associated with that domain are cure spells and thus available for spontaneous casting by all clerics who channel positive energy. (To a lesser extent, this variant diminishes the value of the Destruction domain, but since only three of that domain's spells are inflict spells, the effect is much less severe.) Consider granting clerics who select the Healing domain the ability to use d12s instead of d8s when casting cure spells. Thus, such a cleric's cure light wounds spell would cure 1d12 damage +1/level, and his caster level is treated as one higher than normal thanks to the granted power.

BEHIND THE CURTAIN: SPONTANEOUS CASTING

This option trades versatility—one of the divine spellcaster's strengths—for sheer spellcasting power (much like the difference between sorcerers and wizards). Since the cleric and druid spell lists depend on versatility of effect, particularly defensive or utilitarian spells, the spontaneous-casting divine caster is allowed to know more spells per spell level than the sorcerer (by adding domain spells or summon nature's ally spells on the list of spells known). No longer is the divine caster the character who can come up with any effect under the sun; instead, he becomes a much more specialized member of the adventuring group.

HOUSE RULE: DRUID DOMAINS

In my campaign, each druid may choose a single domain from the following list: Air, Animal, Earth, Fire, Plant, Sun, and Water. The druid gains a bonus spell of each spell level, which may be used only to prepare a domain spell of that level (or of a lower level, if affected by a metamagic feat). The druid also gains the domain's granted power, except as noted below.

BATTLE SCION

A battle scion has earned the right to fight with a particular legendary weapon, either because the weapon is an ancestral heirloom or because he upholds the principles for which the weapon was originally created.

While characters of any class can eventually qualify for the battle scion class, those who wield weapons professionally—fighters, barbarians, rangers, and paladins—are ideal candidates.

No two battle scions are identical, by virtue of the weapons that grant them access to this prestige class.

One scion might wield an heirloom weapon that provides him with the abilities needed to uphold the family's honor. Another could be the scourge of an evil temple, using his legendary sword to prove that might does indeed make right.

Alternatively, you can simply eliminate the normal cleric's ability to spontaneously cast cure or inflict spells. This makes the selection of the Healing domain (or the Destruction domain, for evil clerics) into an extraordinarily powerful choice, but simultaneously places a dramatic limitation on the average cleric's ability to heal damage. If you use this option, you might want to allow a cleric of any good deity to select the Healing domain as one of his domains.

For example, a 1st-level cleric of Obad-Hai has selected access to the domains of Air and Animal. He may cast one 1st-level spell for being a 1st-level cleric, plus one 1st-level bonus spell because of his 15 Wisdom. Instead of preparing one domain spell (either obscuring mist or calm animals) each day, he may spontaneously cast obscuring mist or calm animals in place of either or both of his prepared 1st-level spells. He does not prepare domain spells. If this cleric had chosen the Earth and Plant domains, he could spontaneously cast magic stone or entangle in place of either or both of his prepared 1st-level spells.

If you use the Druid Domains house rule described elsewhere in this chapter, you could allow such characters to use these same spontaneous casting rules (either in addition to or in exchange for the existing druid ability to spontaneously cast summon nature's ally spells).

—Andy Collins

This variant has the secondary effect of individualizing the divine casters in your game, since no two characters choose to learn the same set of spells. With only a limited number of spells known from which to choose, characters must make tough choices each time they gain new spells known. For instance, is it more important that a 4th-level cleric learn cure moderate wounds—particularly if he already knows cure light wounds—or bear's endurance? Should your druid learn resist energy as a 2nd-level spell, or should she wait until she gains access to 3rd-level spells and learn protection from energy instead? The cleric's choice of domains becomes crucial, because those areas form the backbone of his available spells.

Druids who select the Animal domain or the Plant domain gain Skill Focus (Knowledge [nature]), since Knowledge (nature) is already a class skill for druids.

A druid who chooses the Sun domain gains the ability to turn undead 1/day as a cleric of her level, and cannot perform a greater turning.

—Andrew Finch

Yet another could be wielding an axe, hammer, or staff dedicated to his profession, or to his race, with abilities that draw on the strengths thereof.

For all the powers his sword grants him, a battle scion isn't terribly different from any other fighter, barbarian, ranger, or paladin who uses his share of the treasure to upgrade his favorite weapon every so often.

What really sets him apart is the fact that his weapon is leading him toward a particular destiny, if only by shaping his future advancement choices.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a battle scion, a character must fulfill the criteria given in his particular weapon's entry. (For an example, see Dragonblade, below).

CLASS SKILLS

The battle scion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the battle scion prestige class.

A legendary weapon associated with the class provides a unique set of additional special abilities, which are detailed in the weapon's description.

(For an example, see Dragonblade, below).

These abilities accrue in addition to those already noted in the Special column on Table 5–8.

However, because those abilities are functions of the weapon rather than the wielder, they are lost if the legendary weapon that granted them is lost.

The features mentioned on Table 5–8 are retained even if the weapon is lost.

Bonus Feats: At 1st level, a battle scion receives a bonus feat.

Thereafter, he gains an additional bonus feat at 4th, 7th, and 10th level.

These bonus feats must be drawn from the list of feats noted as fighter bonus feats on Table 5–1: Feats, page 90 of the Player's Handbook.

A battle scion must still meet all prerequisites to take a bonus feat.

DRAGONBLADE

Reputedly carved from the fang of a great wyrm red dragon, the bastard sword known as Dragonblade has served many masters over the centuries, from bloodthirsty warlords to treasure-seeking adventurers.

It is a legendary weapon that provides many benefits to its wielder, but most of the benefits apply only if the wielder has levels in the battle scion prestige class.

Requirements: Any character can wield Dragonblade as a +2 bastard sword and also gain the benefit of the bravery special ability described below.

A battle scion who wields Dragonblade gains additional special abilities if the character fulfills the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +9.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks.

Feats: Improved Critical (bastard sword), Iron Will.

Attributes: Dragonblade has the following attributes.

Hardness/Hit Points: 20/55.

Caster Level: 15th.

Value: To any character other than a battle scion who meets the above requirements, Dragonblade appears to be worth as much as a Medium +2 bastard sword that grants the bravery special ability (market price 14,335 gp).

Special Abilities: Dragonblade provides a number of special abilities to its wielder, depending on the character's class level in the battle scion prestige class (see the table below).

ABILITIES GRANTED BY DRAGONBLADE

Battle Scion
Level	Ability Gained
—	Bravery
1st	Bane (dragons)
2nd	Resistance to energy 10
3rd	Enhancement bonus +3 (+5 against dragons)
4th	Intimidating presence
5th	Resistance to energy 20
6th	Enhancement bonus +4 (+6 against dragons)
7th	Dodge bonus
8th	Resistance to energy 30
9th	Frightful presence
10th	Enhancement bonus +5 (+7 against dragons)

Initial Abilities: When first acquired, Dragonblade functions as a +2 bastard sword.

Anyone who wields it, whether a battle scion or not, also benefits from the bravery ability (see below).

Bravery (Ex): The wielder of Dragonblade has immunity to a dragon's frightful presence ability.

All allies within 30 feet of the wielder gain a +4 morale bonus on saves against the frightful presence of dragons.

Bane (Dragons) (Su): When wielded by a battle scion, Dragonblade gains the bane (dragons) special ability.

Its enhancement bonus is treated as 2 points higher when attacking a dragon, and it deals an extra 2d6 points of damage on a successful strike against a dragon.

Resistance to Energy (Su): Once per day, when a battle scion of 2nd level or higher wielding Dragonblade is dealt at least 1 point of damage from any type of energy (acid, cold, electricity, fire, or sonic), the scion gains resistance 10 to that form of energy for 1 hour thereafter (including against the damage that activated the ability).

For example, if the scion were engulfed in a fireball, the resistance would immediately take effect, reducing the damage taken by the fireball (and any other source of fire damage for the next hour) by 10 points.

Once the energy type is determined, it cannot be changed for the current use of the ability.

If two or more types of energy strike the scion simultaneously, he may select the energy type against which his resistance protects.

When a battle scion attains 5th level, the resistance granted by this ability increases to 20 points.

At 8th level, it increases to 30 points.

Intimidating Presence (Ex): A battle scion of 4th level or higher wielding Dragonblade may add his class level as a bonus on Intimidate checks made against dragons (or one-half his class level as a bonus on Intimidate checks made against nondragons).

Dodge Bonus (Ex): At 7th level and higher, a battle scion wielding Dragonblade gains a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class against creatures at least two size categories larger than himself.

Frightful Presence (Ex): A battle scion of 9th level or higher wielding Dragonblade can unsettle foes with his mere presence.

This ability takes effect automatically whenever the scion attacks or charges.

Creatures within a radius of 60 feet are subject to the effect if they have fewer Hit Dice than the scion's character level. A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a Will save (DC 10 + class level + scion's Cha modifier) remains immune to that scion's frightful presence for one day.

On a failure, creatures with 4 or less HD become panicked for 4d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 4d6 rounds.

Even dragons can be affected by the scion's frightful presence.

FAITH SCION

A faith scion wields his legendary blade in the name of his deity—or, in the case of a druid, in the service of nature. A legendary weapon usually comes into the hands of a faith scion either as a gift from his religious order or as a blessing from his deity.

Because of the divine nature of these weapons, clerics, druids and paladins are ideally suited for this prestige class, though other classes can also qualify.

A divinely influenced legendary weapon should be rare and unique.

Certainly no deity would create multiple copies of one weapon as a matter of course, and few religious orders can afford to do so.

Thus, each weapon should grant different abilities, except in special cases.

For example, duplicate weapons might be created especially to combat the enemies of a church, or perhaps to destroy (or create) undead.

A divine legendary sword of an order devoted to healing might even be less a weapon than an instrument for easing the suffering of others.

A faith scion usually has high status within his religious order.

His possession of a legendary weapon implies that he has the favor of his deity, or that he is more in tune with nature than others of his order, in the case of a druid.

Depending on the alignment of his deity, though, his ownership of the weapon could be construed as an invitation to try to take it from him.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a faith scion, a character must fulfill the criteria given in his particular weapon's entry. (For an example, see Hammer of All Souls, below).

CLASS SKILLS

The faith scion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

Domains and Class Skills: A cleric who gains additional class skills from his domain can treat those skills as class skills for the faith scion class.

See Deity, Domains, and Domain Spells, page 32 of the Player's Handbook, for more information.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the faith scion prestige class.

A legendary weapon associated with the class provides a unique set of additional special abilities, which are detailed in the weapon's description.

(For an example, see the Hammer of All Souls, below).

These abilities accrue in addition to those already noted on Table 5-9.

However, because those abilities are functions of the weapon rather than the wielder, they are lost if the legendary weapon that granted them is lost.

The features mentioned on Table 5-9 are retained even if the weapon is lost.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each faith scion level, a character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a faith scion, the player must decide to which class to add each faith scion level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Special Abilities: Faith scion levels stack with other class levels for determining the effectiveness of the following abilities: animal companions, lay on hands, special mount, turn or rebuke undead, wild shape (including additional daily uses or increased range of sizes or creature types), and wild empathy.

For instance, a 5th-level druid/6th-level faith scion could assume wild shape four times per day (including Tiny creatures), and would add 11 (plus Cha modifier) to his wild empathy checks.

His animal companion would be treated as that of an 11th-level druid.

HAMMER OF ALL SOULS

The Hammer of All Souls is said to have been crafted by Moradin Dwarffather himself in the image of his own weapon, Soul hammer.

It symbolizes the glory of the dwarven race.

Requirements: Any character can wield the Hammer of All Souls as a +2 adamantine warhammer and also gain the benefit of the Craft bonus and lore of souls special ability described below.

A faith scion who wields the Hammer of All Souls gains additional special abilities if the character fulfills the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Craft (armorsmithing) or Craft (weaponsmithing) 10 ranks.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (warhammer).

Spells: Ability to cast protection from evil as a divine spell.

Restrictions: Should the wielder of the Hammer of All Souls become an alignment other than lawful good, or attack a lawful good, lawful neutral, or neutral good-aligned dwarf, he loses all special abilities granted by the faith scion prestige class.

To regain these abilities, the scion must receive an atonement spell from a dwarf cleric of Moradin.

Maintenance: A wielder of the Hammer of All Souls must strike the hammer against an anvil at least once every seven days.

Failure to perform this task reduces the hammer's enhancement bonus by 1.

Multiple failures are not cumulative (that is, if the hammer goes two weeks without striking an anvil, the reduction does not increase to 2).

Attributes: The Hammer of All Souls has the following attributes.

Hardness/Hit Points: 30/76.

Caster Level: 15th.

Value: To any character other than a faith scion who meets the above requirements, the Hammer of All Souls appears to be worth as much as a Medium +2 adamantine warhammer that grants the Craft bonus and lore of all souls special ability (market price 21,812 gp).

Special Abilities: The Hammer of All Souls provides a number of special abilities to its wielder, depending on the character's class level in the faith scion prestige class (see the table below).

ABILITIES GRANTED BY THE HAMMER OF ALL SOULS

Faith Scion

9th	+6	+6	+3	+6	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class
10th	+7	+7	+3	+7	+1 level of existing divine spellcasting class

Initial Abilities: When first acquired, the Hammer of All Souls functions as a +2 adamantine warhammer.

Anyone who wields it, whether a faith scion or not, also benefits from the Craft bonus and lore of souls ability (see below).

Craft Bonus (Ex): The owner of the Hammer of All Souls gains a +5 insight bonus on all Craft checks related to stone or metal.

This bonus increases by an additional +1 for every faith scion class level gained, including 1st level.

Lore of Souls (Su): Three times per day, the owner of the Hammer of All Souls can use a full-round action to consult the knowledge of his dwarven ancestors.

This gives the character a bonus on any one Knowledge check (made as part of the action) equal to his faith scion level (if any) + his Wisdom bonus (if any).

(At the DM's discretion, if the Knowledge check is directly related to dwarvenkind, the bonus granted by the character's faith scion level is doubled).

The check is treated as a trained skill check, even if the character has no ranks in that Knowledge skill.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, a faith scion wielding the Hammer of All Souls may smite evil with an attack.

The attack may be a melee attack or a ranged attack, but must be delivered by the Hammer of All Souls.

The wielder adds 4 to his attack roll and deals 2 extra points of damage per faith scion level.

If the wielder accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

A wielder may use this ability twice per day at 5th level and three times per day at 9th level.

Fortitude of Souls (Su): A faith scion of 2nd level or higher wielding the Hammer of All Souls derives endurance from the support of his ancestors, gaining a +2 enhancement bonus to Constitution.

At 6th level, the bonus increases to +4, and at 8th level to +6.

Throw and Return (Su): Three times per day, a faith scion of 3rd level or higher wielding the Hammer of All Souls can treat the weapon as a throwing returning weapon (see the special ability descriptions on pages 225 and 226 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

Activating this ability is a free action, and it lasts for 1 round.

PRESTIGE BARD

The prestige bard is a jack-of-all-trades, master of none. She relies on wit, agility, and no small amount of magic to see her through her daring adventures.

Virtually all characters who become prestige bards are already multiclass characters, usually mixing rogue and wizard or rogue and sorcerer.

Some dabble in barbarian or fighter as well, depending on their social backgrounds.

NPC prestige bards may serve as heralds, tale-tellers, spies, ne'er-do-wells, or all of the above.

Some work in troupes, others form colleges, but most share a strong streak of independence.

Compared to the standard character class, the prestige bard gains her bardic music abilities later in her career, but has a greater range of spells available.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a prestige bard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Knowledge (any one) 4 ranks, Perform (any one) 8 ranks.

Special: Ability to cast at least one 1st-level arcane spell from each of the divination, enchantment, and illusion schools.

CLASS SKILLS

The prestige bard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (n/a), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the prestige bard class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: As the standard bard in the Player's Handbook.

A prestige bard can cast any arcane spells in light armor without the normal arcane spell failure chance.

Spellcasting: When a new prestige bard level is gained (except at 1st, 3rd, 7th, and 13th level), the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

A prestige bard casts arcane spells from the schools of divination, enchantment, and illusion at +2 caster level.

She casts arcane spells from the schools of evocation and necromancy at -2 caster level.

Bardic Knowledge (Ex): As the standard bard ability of the same name.

Bardic Music: As the standard bard ability of the same name, except that the minimum number of ranks in Perform required is increased by 5 (8 ranks for countersong, fascinate, or inspire courage; 11 ranks for inspire competence, and so forth).

TABLE 2-4: THE PRESTIGE BARD

PRESTIGE PALADIN

After training in the arts of combat and the mysteries of the divine, the prestige paladin is anointed as a holy warrior dedicated to the protection of law and goodness.

Most prestige paladins are clerics or fighter/clerics, though rare cleric/monks might pursue this path as well.

NPC prestige paladins usually belong to a holy order dedicated to a lawful good deity such as Heironeous.

Some are lone wanderers, dealing out justice while walking the earth.

Compared to the standard paladin, the prestige paladin gives up a small amount of combat prowess in exchange for a larger spell list and a higher top end of his spellcasting powers.

Also, his class features aren't quite as powerful as the standard paladin's as a result of his reduced paladin class level.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a prestige paladin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks, Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 2 ranks, Ride 4 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast protection from evil as a divine spell.

Special: Ability to turn undead.

CLASS SKILLS

The prestige paladin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Sense Motive (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the prestige paladin class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: As the standard paladin in the Player's Handbook.

Spells per Day: A prestige paladin's training focuses on divine spellcasting.

At every odd-numbered level reached, the prestige paladin gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

Detect Evil (Sp): As the standard paladin ability of the same name.

Smite Evil (Su): As the standard paladin ability of the same name.

Turn Undead (Su): For the purpose of determining his ability to turn undead, a prestige paladin's class levels stack with his levels from all his other classes from which he has gained the ability to turn undead.

For instance, a 4th-level fighter/1st-level cleric/2nd-level prestige paladin would turn undead as a 3rd-level cleric.

Divine Grace (Su): As the standard paladin ability of the same name.

Lay on Hands (Su): As the standard paladin ability of the same name, except that the total number of hit points of damage that a prestige paladin can heal per day is equal to his Charisma modifier × (his paladin level + 3).

For example, a 3rd-level prestige paladin with a Charisma of 16 (+3 modifier) can heal 18 points of damage per day.

Special Mount (Sp): As the standard paladin ability of the same name, except treat the prestige paladin's effective level as three higher when calculating the mount's bonus Hit Dice, powers, and so forth (see the sidebar The Paladin's Mount on page 45 of the Player's Handbook).

Aura of Courage (Su): As the standard paladin ability of the same name.

Divine Health (Ex): As the standard paladin ability of the same name.

Remove Disease (Sp): As the standard paladin ability of the same name, except that a prestige paladin gains the ability at 4th level and can use this ability one additional time per week for every four levels gained thereafter (twice at 8th and three times at 12th).

Code of Conduct and Associates: These restrictions are the same as those described in the Player's Handbook.

EX-PALADINS

Same as for the standard paladin, but with no restrictions on multiclassing.

PRESTIGE RANGER

The prestige ranger navigates the dark forests, craggy mountains, or desert wastes of her homeland with unparalleled skill.

She becomes one with nature while remaining a deadly hunter.

Most prestige rangers are former druids, though some multiclass in barbarian, fighter, or rogue.

Some replace druid levels with cleric levels, selecting the Animal domain.

If your campaign uses the wilderness rogue (described earlier in this chapter), that class also provides a good starting point for a would-be prestige ranger.

NPC prestige rangers are typically loners, trusting few but themselves while on the hunt.

Some form loose affiliations of like-minded individuals, occasionally relying on each other for assistance in dire times.

Compared to the standard ranger, the prestige ranger gives up immediate access to some of her iconic abilities (such as favored enemy) by having to qualify for the class, but has a much wider selection of spells.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a prestige ranger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 2 ranks, Survival 4 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Track, and either Rapid Shot or Two-Weapon Fighting.

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast calm animals as a divine spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The prestige ranger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).
Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the prestige ranger class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: As the standard ranger in the Player's Handbook.

Animal Companion (Ex): At 1st level, a prestige ranger gains an animal companion.

This is identical to the standard druid ability of the same name.

If a prestige ranger already has an animal companion from another class, the character's prestige ranger levels stack with those class levels for purposes of determining the companion's abilities.

Favored Enemy (Ex): As the standard ranger ability of the same name.

Wild Empathy (Ex): As the standard ranger ability of the same name.

If a prestige ranger already has the wild empathy ability from another class, the character's prestige ranger levels stack with those class levels when making animal empathy checks.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level, a prestige ranger gains either Manyshot or Improved Two-Weapon Fighting as a bonus feat.

She must have the Rapid Shot feat to select Manyshot as a bonus feat, and she must have Two-Weapon Fighting to select Improved Two-Weapon Fighting as a bonus feat.

However, the ranger need not have any of the other normal prerequisites for the bonus feat selected.

At 7th level, a prestige ranger gains either Improved Precise Shot or Greater Two-Weapon Fighting as a bonus feat.

She must have the Manyshot and Rapid Shot feats to select Improved Precise Shot as a bonus feat, and she must have Two-Weapon Fighting and Improved Two-Weapon Fighting to select Greater Two-Weapon Fighting as a bonus feat.

However, the ranger need not have any of the other normal prerequisites for the bonus feat selected.

Woodland Stride (Ex): As the standard ranger ability of the same name.

Camouflage (Ex): As the standard ranger ability of the same name.

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): As the standard ranger ability of the same name.

SPELL SCION

Sometimes a magic weapon is not so much a weapon as a magic device in the shape of a weapon.

The spell scion is the ideal wielder for a legendary weapon of this sort.

Spellblades and similar items are weapons of significant arcane power, and their wielders often have great magical destinies.

Such a character might wield a fey sword, or a demon blade, or a magic staff that is actually an important symbol of his or her arcane order.

Wielding an arcane legendary weapon is a great responsibility because the weapon contains so much magical power.

Arcane spellcasters who recognize a particular weapon usually afford the wielder more respect—or perhaps fear—than they might another of their ilk who was not so equipped.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spell scion, a character must fulfill the criteria given in her particular weapon's entry. (For an example, see Ionon, below).

CLASS SKILLS

The spell scion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the spell scion prestige class.

A legendary weapon associated with the class provides a unique set of additional special abilities, which are detailed in the weapon's description.

(For an example, see Ionon, below).

These abilities accrue in addition to those already noted on Table 5–10.

However, because those abilities are functions of the weapon rather than the wielder, they are lost if the legendary weapon that granted them is lost.

The features mentioned on Table 5–10 are retained even if the weapon is lost.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each spell scion level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a spell scion, the player must decide to which class to add each spell scion level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

IONON, THE BURNING STAFF

Created by a wizard from pure elemental fire, Ionon is a conduit between the wielder and the Elemental Plane of Fire.

The staff is made of polished obsidian and is wreathed at all times in wispy blue-white flame.

This flame deals no damage to the wielder.

Requirements: Any character can wield Ionon as a +1 flaming/+1 flaming quarterstaff and also gain the benefit of the resistance to fire special ability described below.

A spell scion who wields Ionon gains additional special abilities if the character fulfills the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Empower Spell.

Spells: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane spells, including at least three spells with the fire descriptor.

Special: Must have been reduced to –1 or less hit points on at least one occasion from a hit that dealt fire damage.

Restrictions: If Ionon is grasped by a creature with vulnerability to cold, the weapon's flame goes out temporarily.

This renders all the staff's special abilities (except for its enhancement bonus) inactive.

The creature grasping the staff takes 1 point of fire damage in every round when the weapon remains grasped.

Maintenance: Ionon must be kept in a warm environment to remain at full power.

If the staff spends at least 1 hour in an area where the temperature is below 50°F, its flame goes out temporarily.

This renders all the staff's special abilities (except for its enhancement bonus) inactive.

This loss of special abilities can be postponed by dealing at least 5 points of fire damage to Ionon every hour.

(Damage dealt to the staff "counts" for this purpose even if the staff actually takes no damage, such as because of its hardness).

Attributes: Ionon has the following attributes.

Hardness/Hit Points: 14/45.

Caster Level: 15th.

Value: To any character other than a spell scion who meets the above requirements, Ionon appears to be worth as much as a Medium +1 flaming/+1 flaming quarterstaff that grants the resistance to fire ability (market price 24,600 gp).

Special Abilities: Ionon provides the following special abilities to its wielder, depending on the character's class level in the spell scion prestige class (see the table below).

ABILITIES GRANTED BY IONON

Spell Scion Level	Ability Gained
—	Resistance to fire 5
1st	Resistance to fire 10, empowered spells
2nd	Recall spell 1/day
3rd	Fire shield
4th	Resistance to fire 20
5th	Enhancement bonus +2/+2, recall spell 2/day
6th	Plane shift
7th	Resistance to fire 30
8th	Recall spell 3/day
9th	Enhancement bonus +3/+3
10th	Immunity to fire

Initial Abilities: When first acquired, Ionon functions as a +1 flaming/+1 flaming quarterstaff.

Anyone who wields it, whether a spell scion or not, also benefits from the resistance to fire ability (see below).

Resistance to Fire (Ex): The wielder of the staff gains resistance to fire 5, even if she has no levels in the spell scion class.

A spell scion who wields the staff gains resistance to fire 10. At 4th level, the resistance improves to 20, and at 7th level to 30.

This resistance does not stack with any other resistance to fire the wielder may have.

Empowered Spells (Su): Three times per day, a spell scion wielding Ionon can empower (as the Empower Spell feat) any arcane spell she casts that has the fire descriptor.

She may apply this effect to any spell whose level is equal to or less than her spell scion level, and may even apply it to spell-like abilities cast by the staff itself.

Activating this power is a free action and has no effect on the spell's level or its casting time.

Recall Spell (Su): As a free action, a spell scion of 2nd level or higher can recall any arcane spell she has just cast, as long as that spell has the fire descriptor, up to a maximum spell level equal to her spell scion level.

She either restores that spell to her list of prepared spells (if she prepares spells) or regains that spell slot (if she does not prepare spells).

She may only recall a spell cast in the same round that she uses this ability.

This ability can be used once per day at 2nd level, twice per day at 5th level, and three times per day at 8th level.

Fire Shield (Sp): Once per day, when wielded by a spell scion of 3rd level or higher, Ionon can wreath the wielder in a warm fire shield of blue flames.

Enhancement Bonus (Ex): When Ionon is wielded by a spell scion of 5th level or higher, the staff's enhancement bonus improves from +1/+1 to +2/+2.

The bonus increases to +3/+3 when the wielder attains 9th level as a spell scion.

Plane Shift (Sp): Once per day, Ionon can transport a spell scion of 6th level or higher to the Elemental Plane of Fire, just as if it had cast plane shift.

Additional willing characters can accompany the scion, as described in the plane shift spell.

The effect is more accurate than normal for plane shift, delivering the scion 5 to 500 yards (not miles) from her intended destination.

The spell scion must have her own method of return, since Ionon provides no return trip.

Immunity to Fire (Ex): At 10th level, a spell scion wielding Ionon gains immunity to fire.

SWIFT SCION

Some legendary weapons are meant for the hands of the quick and the silent.

A swift scion might inherit her weapon or acquire it “by accident”, but the weapon is no less part of her destiny than is the legendary weapon of any other scion.

Characters of any class can become swift scions, but rogues, bards, rangers, and monks benefit most from the special abilities of the legendary weapons associated with this class. Swift scions wield their weapons for a wide variety of purposes.

A rogue may use it to supplement her income, while a monk might merely seek to master its use.

A bard could draw upon the power of her weapon's rich history to enhance her music, while a ranger might use it as part of the hunt.

Of all legendary weapons, the ones associated with the swift scion class are the most focused in their application. Each tends to favor rogues, monks, rangers, or bards specifically, rather than a broad range of classes as the other legendary weapons do.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a swift scion, a character must fulfill the criteria given in her particular weapon's entry. (For an example, see Dreamstriker, below).

CLASS SKILLS

The swift scion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).
Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the swift scion prestige class.

A legendary weapon associated with the class provides a unique set of additional special abilities, which are detailed in the weapon's description.

(For an example, see Dreamstriker, below).

These abilities accrue in addition to those already noted on Table 5–11.

However, because those abilities are functions of the weapon rather than the wielder, they are lost if the legendary weapon that granted them is lost.

The features mentioned on Table 5–11 are retained even if the weapon is lost.

Bonus Class Skill: At 1st level, 5th level, and 9th level, a swift scion may choose an additional class skill from the following list: Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Dex), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Survival (Wis), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

Once designated, that skill is considered a class skill for the swift scion prestige class.

Bonus Special Ability: At 2nd level, 6th level, and 10th level, a swift scion may choose an additional special ability from the following list.

She may select the same ability more than once if desired, and the effects stack where appropriate.

Arcane Spells per Day/Spells Known: A swift scion may gain a number of new spells per day and spells known (if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a swift scion, the player must decide to which class to add each swift scion level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bardic Music: A swift scion may choose to gain an extra two daily uses of the bardic music ability (as described on page 29 of the Player's Handbook), provided that she already has the ability.

She doesn't gain any new bardic music abilities, nor do her existing bardic music abilities improve in effectiveness.

Fast Movement (Ex): If a swift scion has an enhancement bonus to her speed from a class feature, she may choose to increase this enhancement bonus by 10 feet.

This enhancement bonus follows the same rules as her existing enhancement bonus to speed (for instance, a monk who selects this feature only benefits from the enhancement bonus when wearing no armor).

Improved Bardic Knowledge: A swift scion can choose to gain a +4 bonus on bardic knowledge checks.

(If the character doesn't have the bardic knowledge class feature, this benefit has no effect).

Improved Evasion (Ex): A swift scion may choose to gain the improved evasion ability (as described on page 42 of the Player's Handbook), provided that she already has the evasion ability.

Improved Favored Enemy: If a swift scion has at least one favored enemy (see page 47 of the Player's Handbook), the bonus gained on damage rolls and certain skill checks against any one favored enemy improves by +2.

The character doesn't gain any additional favored enemies by selecting this ability.

Improved Unarmed Damage: If a swift scion has the Improved Unarmed Strike feat, she may choose to increase the damage dealt by her unarmed strikes.

Treat this as if the character's monk level had increased by four.

For instance, a 6th-level monk/2nd-level swift scion who selects this ability would increase her unarmed strike damage from 1d8 to 1d10.

(If the character has no monk levels, she gains unarmed damage as a 4th-level monk).

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): If a swift scion has the uncanny dodge class feature, she may select improved uncanny dodge.

Her swift scion levels stack with her levels in other classes that grant uncanny dodge to determine the minimum rogue level required to flank the character.

(See page 26 of the Player's Handbook for details).

Sneak Attack: If a swift scion has the sneak attack ability, she may choose to increase the extra damage it deals by 2d6 points.

Swift Tracker (Ex): If a swift scion has the Track feat, she may select this special ability.

A swift scion with this ability can move at her normal speed while following tracks without taking the normal -5 penalty.

She takes only a -10 penalty (instead of the normal -20) when moving at up to twice normal speed while tracking.

Trap Sense: If a swift scion has the trap sense ability, she can take this special ability to increase her bonus on Reflex saves and to AC against traps by 1.

DREAMSTRIKER

A cabal of halfling clerics created the bow called Dreamstriker long ago.

Since then, it has been passed down along a line of elite rangers and rogues, but was recently lost when its wielder was slain while away from her village.

Requirements: Any character can wield Dreamstriker as a +2 composite shortbow (+2 Str bonus) and also gain the benefit of the stealth special ability described below.

A swift scion who wields Dreamstriker gains additional special abilities if the character fulfills the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Hide 10 ranks, Move Silently 10 ranks.

Feats: Point Blank Shot, Far Shot, Stealthy.

Special: The wielder must be of Small size.

Restrictions: Dreamstriker does not grant its stealth ability to a wielder who is not of Small size, though its enhancement bonus is still effective.

Attributes: Dreamstriker has the following attributes.

Hardness/Hit Points: 15/55.

Caster Level: 15th.

Value: To any character other than a swift scion who meets the above requirements, Dreamstriker appears to be worth as much as a Small +2 composite shortbow (+2 Str bonus) that grants the stealth ability (market price 10,525 gp).

Special Abilities: Dreamstriker provides a number of special abilities to its wielder, depending on the character's class level in the swift scion prestige class (see the table below).

ABILITIES GRANTED BY DREAMSTRIKER

Swift Scion Level	Ability Gained
—	Stealth
1st	Invisibility
2nd	Ghost touch
3rd	Ephemeral presence (trackless)
4th	Enhancement bonus +3
5th	Dreamstrike arrows
6th	Greater invisibility
7th	Enhancement bonus +4
8th	Ephemeral presence (scentless)
9th	Etherealness
10th	Enhancement bonus +5

Initial Abilities: When it is first acquired, Dreamstriker functions as a +2 composite shortbow (+2 Str bonus).

Any Small character who wields it, whether a swift scion or not, also benefits from the stealth ability (see below).

Stealth (Su): The wielder of Dreamstriker may use her Wisdom bonus (if any) as a bonus on her Hide and Move Silently checks.

Invisibility (Sp): A swift scion wielding Dreamstriker can become invisible once per day as a free action.

The effect lasts for 1 round per class level.

For a swift scion of 6th level or higher, the invisibility granted by this power is the equivalent of greater invisibility.

The duration remains 1 round per class level.

Ghost Touch (Su): When Dreamstriker is wielded by a swift scion of 2nd level or higher, any arrow fired from the bow can damage incorporeal creatures as if it had the ghost touch special ability.

Ephemeral Presence (Su): A swift scion of 3rd level or higher bearing Dreamstriker leaves no trail and cannot be tracked.

At 8th level, a swift scion bearing the weapon no longer gives off a scent.

Creatures with the scent ability cannot detect her presence by means of that ability, nor can she be tracked by scent.

Enhancement Bonus (Ex): When Dreamstriker is wielded by a swift scion of 4th level or higher, the bow's enhancement bonus improves from +2 to +3.

The bonus increases to +4 at 7th level and +5 at 10th level.

Dreamstrike Arrows (Su): Three times per day (but no more than once per round), a swift scion of 5th level or higher can fire a special arrow from Dreamstriker.

The arrow strikes as a touch attack (ignoring armor, shield, and natural armor bonuses to AC).

The arrow deals only half the normal damage, but the damage dealt is Wisdom damage, not hit point damage.

Bonus damage dice, if any, do not apply to the damage dealt by a dreamstrike arrow.

Etherealness (Su): At 9th level or higher, a swift scion bearing Dreamstriker can become ethereal for up to 10 rounds per day (which need not be spent all at one time) Activating this power, or deactivating it to become material, is a standard action.

TAINED SORCERER

Tainted sorcerers find an easy path to tremendous magical power.

Young wizards frustrated at the slow pace of their studies, old scholars chafing at the limitations of traditional magic, peasant folk-magic practitioners, even those who wage endless battle against unspeakable evil and thus succumb to taint—for all these spellcasters, taint offers a way to overcome obstacles that the sanctioned magic of the world cannot provide.

At the mere cost of the character's soul...

Tainted sorcerers come from a variety of backgrounds.

Many are sorcerers or wizards—some inexperienced, some quite advanced—who stumble across or seek out the forbidden secrets of taint in arcane libraries.

Others are adepts who learn tainted magic from an older practitioner.

Some are clerics or druids of evil cults who learn from their elders, in the same way that their cult has passed on knowledge for centuries.

NPC tainted sorcerers are everywhere, though they usually hide very carefully.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tainted sorcerer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Will Save: +4.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 1st-level spells.

Taint: Character's taint score must be 4 or higher.

Special: Must have learned the basics of taint magic from a tainted sorcerer of at least 4th level, or must have summoned a demon or devil to gain instruction.

CLASS SKILLS

The tainted sorcerer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the tainted sorcerer.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tainted sorcerers are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or shield.

Armor of any type interferes with a tainted sorcerer's arcane gestures, which can cause her spells to fail (if those spells have somatic components).

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new tainted sorcerer level is gained, the character gains new spells known and spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

This essentially means that she adds the level of tainted sorcerer to the level of whatever other spellcasting class she has, then determines spells known, spells per day, and caster level accordingly.

Blood Component: A tainted sorcerer must use blood in place of any spell's material component (if the spell has no material component, ignore this cost).

She has two choices for a source of blood: herself or someone else.

If she uses her own blood, the minor knife cut to draw the requisite blood is a free action that becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

Using this ability deals 1 point of damage to the tainted sorcerer, but the character does not need to make a Concentration check to successfully cast the spell, despite the wound.

Substituting blood for a costly material component requires drawing a greater amount of blood.

A tainted sorcerer deals more damage to herself when drawing a large amount of blood, as shown on the table below.

Component Cost	Damage Dealt
50 gp or less	5
51gp–300 gp	11
301 gp–750 gp	17
751 gp or more	23

Also, when using blood to replace a costly component in this way, the tainted sorcerer must make a Concentration check (DC 10 + damage taken + spell level) to successfully cast the spell.

If the tainted sorcerer draws someone else's blood to use as a material component, the rules given above generally apply.

If the source of blood is willing (or helpless) and is adjacent to the tainted sorcerer, she can make a minor knife cut to obtain a small amount of blood as a free action during the casting of the spell.

(If the source is not willing or helpless and not adjacent, how long it takes to draw blood depends entirely on the circumstances).

No single source of blood can be used to replace a costly material component unless the character or creature's current hit point total is high enough to absorb all the damage without falling below –10.

For example, the blood of an orc with 6 hit points remaining is not sufficient to replace a component that costs 301 gp or more, because the orc cannot take the necessary 17 points of damage before it is dead.

Taint Suppression: While a tainted sorcerer is likely to accumulate a high taint score over the course of her life, this taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

A tainted sorcerer's taint manifests in mental effects—insanity, rage, and nightmares—and in internal physical effects.

If a tainted sorcerer is split open, the character's internal corruption is obvious: Her body is full of bloody pus and strange growths, even internal limbs.

If a tainted sorcerer enters a tainted area, her corruption immediately manifests externally as well.

Barring these two conditions, it is impossible to detect a tainted sorcerer based on appearance.

A tainted sorcerer no longer applies her taint score as a penalty to her Constitution, and only applies one-half her taint score as a penalty to her Wisdom.

Tainted Metamagic: A tainted sorcerer who learns metamagic feats can apply them by paying an additional cost in blood.

By draining blood, a tainted sorcerer can enhance her spells without using a higher-level spell slot.

The cost is a number of points of Constitution damage equal to the spell slot adjustment of the metamagic feat. Thus, casting an empowered vampiric touch spell costs a tainted sorcerer 2 points of Constitution damage, because an empowered spell uses up a spell slot two levels higher than normal.

A tainted sorcerer cannot enhance a spell to a level higher than she can cast by this means.

For example, a tainted sorcerer must be at least a 9th-level caster to cast an empowered vampiric touch spell (or at least 10th level, if the character is casting as a sorcerer), since the empowered spell requires a 5th-level spell slot.

A tainted sorcerer without a Constitution score cannot use this ability.

Tainted Spellcasting (Su): Rather than using a key ability score for spellcasting, a tainted sorcerer uses her taint score. To cast a spell, a tainted sorcerer must have a taint score at least equal to the spell's level.

Tainted sorcerer bonus spells are based on a number equal to the character's taint score + 10, and saving throws against tainted sorcerer spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the tainted sorcerer's taint score.

A tainted sorcerer accumulates taint for casting her spells.

All spells a tainted sorcerer casts are evil spells.

She must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + spell level) or increase her taint score by 1.

Level Advancement: The power of taint is seductive.

Once a character has tasted its attractions, it is hard to resist.

Whenever a tainted sorcerer gains a new level and wishes to advance a level in some other class, she must succeed on a Will saving throw (DC 10 + taint score).

If she fails the saving throw, she must advance her tainted sorcerer level.

If she succeeds on this saving throw, she can advance a level in some other class.

TAINED WARRIOR

When a character's taint threatens to exceed the capacity of his body and soul to contain it, he may become possessed by its evil power and transformed into a creature of taint. Such characters feel an irresistible urge to travel to regions of taint, often walking until their feet bleed, slaughtering anyone in the way.

The lucky ones are killed by adventurers, militias, or monsters.

The unlucky ones are guided by evil cults of Erythnul and Hextor and become transformed into living servants of evil. Most tainted warriors were barbarians, fighters, or rangers before their taint overcame them, although a member of any race or character class can adopt this prestige class.

Clerics, druids, sorcerers, and wizards are usually seduced by the tainted sorcerer class instead.

NPC tainted warriors are found near regions of taint, often serving as commanders for small groups of evil humanoids. Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tainted warrior, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Taint: Character's taint score must be 10 or more.

Special: Character must locate and join a temple devoted to an evil deity.

CLASS SKILLS

The tainted warrior's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the tainted warrior.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tainted warriors do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiencies.

Taint Suppression: By definition, a tainted warrior is overwhelmed with taint, but this taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

A tainted sorcerer's taint manifests in mental effects—delirium, anger, and cruelty—and in internal physical effects.

If a tainted warrior is split open, the internal corruption is obvious: His body is full of vile liquids and distorted growths, even internal limbs.

If a tainted warrior enters a tainted area, his corruption immediately manifests externally as well.

Barring these two conditions, it is impossible to detect a tainted warrior based on appearance.

A tainted warrior no longer applies his taint score as a penalty to his Constitution, and only applies one-half his taint score as a penalty to his Wisdom.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, a tainted warrior gains damage reduction 1/good.

The value of the character's damage reduction increases by 1 point at every even-numbered level thereafter.

Tainted Strike (Ex): A tainted warrior of 3rd level or higher can infuse a melee attack with the power of his taint.

The character adds his taint score to the damage dealt by the melee attack, and the target's taint score increases by 1.

If a tainted warrior strikes a creature immune to the effects of taint (such as an undead creature or a creature with the evil subtype), the tainted strike has no effect.

A tainted warrior can use this ability once per day upon attaining 3rd level and one additional time per day for every four levels gained thereafter.

WEAPONS OF LEGACY (3.5)

LEGACY CHAMPION

"In my hand, talismans of ancient manufacture have no secrets. Their primeval power is mine."

—Marrush Scarhand

As a legacy champion, you are so devoted to the history and chronicle of a particular item of legacy that you enjoy enhanced access to your item's legacy abilities.

You can learn the needed rituals more quickly and use the item's abilities more often, and you can even customize the item's abilities to your own purpose.

The story of a particular legacy item becomes central to your own identity, so much so that you might change part of your name, behavior, clothing, or other attributes to more closely reflect historical or visual aspects of your item.

BECOMING A LEGACY CHAMPION

To become a legacy champion, you must already possess an item of legacy, have unlocked its least abilities, and be on the cusp of unlocking its lesser abilities.

No particular class is most associated with legacy champions—obsession can be visited upon anyone.

Members of classes more inclined to study ancient texts, such as wizards, have a slight predilection for becoming legacy champions; however, reduced spellcasting ability keeps wizards from predominating.

LEGACY CHAMPION ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skill: Knowledge (history) 5 ranks.

Feat: Least Legacy*.

Special: Must possess a legacy item, character level 10th.

* New feat; see page 14.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Decipher Script, Gather Information, Knowledge (history), Use Magic Device, plus existing class skills from all your classes.

CLASS FEATURES

As a legacy champion, you are focused on exploring to the fullest the potential of your legacy item.

Your class features deal with getting needed information more quickly and exploiting it effectively.

Your existing class abilities continue to advance at nearly their full rate, interrupted only by opportunities to unlock legacy abilities at greatly reduced cost.

Class Features: At each level except 1st and 7th, you gain class features and an increase in effective level as if you had also gained a level in a class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

The specific class features you gain include spells per day (and spells known, if applicable), improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, bonus feats, monk special abilities, sneak attack progressions, and so on, depending on the class.

You do not, however, gain the benefit of your previous class's Hit Dice, attack progression, skill points, or saving throws.

If you had more than one class before becoming a legacy champion, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining class abilities.

Reduced Ritual Cost: After you've made a successful Knowledge (history) check to learn the lesser legacy ritual for your legacy item, you can perform that ritual and gain the Lesser Legacy feat as normal.

However, you do not pay the ritual's associated gp cost.

You must still perform all other aspects of the ritual and pay any personal costs required to unlock lesser abilities.

If you have more than one legacy item, you must decide to which one this reduction applies.

On reaching 7th level, you can perform the greater legacy ritual for your item without paying the associated gp cost.

Bond of Lore (Ex): You add your class level as an insight bonus to Knowledge (history) checks made in relation to your legacy item.

Replace Legacy Ability (Ex): As your bond with your legacy item strengthens, you become capable of permanently changing the item's abilities to suit your needs.

At 2nd level, you can replace any one least ability granted by your item with your choice of any least ability from Menu A in Chapter 4: Founding Legacies.

At 5th level, you can replace any one least or lesser ability with your choice of any least ability from Menu A or any lesser ability from Menu D, respectively.

At 10th level, you can replace any one least, lesser, or greater ability with your choice of any least ability from Menu A, any lesser ability from Menu D, or any greater ability from Menu G, respectively.

Extra Legacy Ability Use (Su): As your bond with your legacy item strengthens, you can draw on its abilities more often than normal.

At 3rd level, choose one of your item's least abilities with a daily use limit.

You can use that ability one extra time per day.

Once you have chosen an ability, you cannot change it later.

At 6th level, you can also gain an extra daily use of one of your item's lesser abilities.

At 9th level, you can also gain an extra daily use of one of your item's greater abilities.

You can instead choose to gain an extra daily use of a lower ability (for example, choosing a second least ability instead of a lesser ability at 6th level), but you can't gain more than one extra daily use of a given ability.

If your item has no legacy abilities with a daily use limit, you gain no benefit from this class feature.

If you later gain access to an eligible legacy ability, you can immediately choose that ability for an extra daily use.

Bonus Legacy Feat: At 4th and 8th level, you gain a bonus feat related to your legacy item, which can be selected from any of the legacy feats in this chapter for which you meet the prerequisites.

PLAYING A LEGACY CHAMPION

You hold a deep reverence for the historical significance of your legacy item.

You know that many useful and valid lessons lie in the story of its founding and the events that surround its passage down the ages to your current stewardship.

The pageant of its history contains myriad stories that, if properly interpreted, remain as relevant today as the day the item was founded.

The history of the legacy item is more than a litany of craving for power, of bloodlust, violence, destruction, and war—you are part of that history, even as it unfolds.

In your hands, the item continues its great journey through the ages, becoming a part of events yet to take shape.

In some distant future, it might be your name that is repeated in awe when some lucky person finds the legacy item and learns something of its past.

COMBAT

If your legacy item is primarily made for battle, then obviously it is your first and last recourse when conflict beckons.

In fact, the more attention you draw to yourself and the wonder you wield, the more you might intimidate foes with its unparalleled potency.

Use Bluff, Diplomacy, or Intimidate before or during combat while reciting your item's pedigree to shake your enemies' confidence in their ability to defeat you.

ADVANCEMENT

Your advancement as a legacy champion can vary widely, depending on your original class.

Because you continue to have limited access to some of that class's abilities, your best strategy is to customize your item's legacy abilities to your original class.

For instance, if you were originally a fighter, your legacy item is probably a weapon.

A reasonable advancement plan is continuing to choose bonus fighter feats that enhance your prowess with that weapon; in addition, you can customize the weapon's legacy abilities to work better with your existing talents.

RESOURCES

Since this prestige class depends on possessing an item of legacy, your first resource is obvious.

Beyond that, you need to continue your research into the specific details needed to unlock your item's history.

In this regard, your singular knowledge of obscure history can get you ready access to many libraries.

Likewise, the reputation of your learning is sufficient to grant you audiences with sages who might be able to provide additional information in return for your own expertise.

LEGACY CHAMPIONS IN THE WORLD

Characters particularly proficient with legacy items are a rare breed, especially since legacy items are not nearly as common as standard magical items.

ORGANIZATION

Legacy champions have no particular or overarching organizations.

Each is unique, and other than an all-consuming desire to learn as much as possible about his legacy item, each legacy champion has little in common with any other.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people generally do not recognize a legacy champion as anything more than someone with a particularly powerful magic item.

If he further advertises his item's pedigree, NPCs might be impressed or afraid, but no more so than with any other character displaying an impressive weapon or staff.

Those NPCs who understand the concept of legacy items are likely to be impressed by the legacy champion's possession, whether or not they understand that he has more fully tapped into its power than most could ever hope for.

Their reaction might be mere admiration, but often this is mixed with envy and greed.

As with any wielder of potent magic, a legacy champion must be vigilant against those who want only to take the legacy item for themselves (for all the good it would do them).

LEGACY CHAMPION LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), or Gather Information can research legacy champions to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.
DC 10: Some magic items possess hidden powers that are difficult, if impossible, to wake.

DC 15: Some magic items of epic pedigree, called items of legacy, can be awakened to greater power if enough of their history is researched and understood.

DC 20: Among the wielders of legacy items are those who more fully tap into their items' powers.

These are called "legacy champions".

DC 30: Legacy champions do not have to pay the enormous costs associated with awakening a legacy item to its full potency.

Moreover, they gain access to their items' abilities more quickly and can use them more often.

Establishing contact with a legacy champion is difficult. Characters trying to do so should make a DC 25 Gather Information check to find a library or sage, through which a meeting can be arranged, or a DC 30 Gather Information check to track the legacy champion down directly.

If a PC possesses a legacy item or has information about a legacy item, the check has a +2 circumstance bonus.

LEGACY CHAMPIONS IN THE GAME

Legacy champions can show up anywhere—they have no particular creed or affiliation and thus are not constrained to particular situations or styles of game play.

RACIAL CLASSES

CHAMPIONS OF RUIN (3.5)

DRAEGLOTH

Draegloths are half-fiend terrors that are ritually created by drow priestesses who test their devotion to Lolth by mating with summoned demons.

Only once in a great while does this coupling produce a child, and the birth of a draegloth is seen as an omen of the goddess's favor, often sparking wars, assassinations, and other intrigues.

Draegloths are genderless, sexless creatures incapable of procreation.

Most draegloths are incredibly loyal to the priestess that bore them, serving them as enforcers, bodyguards, and occasionally lovers.

When a draegloth's mother dies or the house it serves is destroyed, it is often left to wander the Underdark, becoming a scourge wherever it goes.

Draegloths are cruel creatures known for their great strength and stealth.

They hunt the tunnels of the Underdark for food and the opportunity to spread evil.

A lone draegloth can terrorize an entire village of deep gnomes or grimlocks, and it will usually move on before a concerted effort to slay it can be put together.

Draegloths rarely venture out of the Underdark, knowing that their natural advantages would be neutralized in the world above, and that their unique ancestry would make them targets for heroes and villains alike.

RACIAL HISTORY

The point of origin of the draegloth race is unknown.

Many of the historically dominant drow houses have their own legends, each of which claims that the house was the first to receive Lolth's blessing.

Of course, the veracity of such claims is questionable at best, and they have been responsible for more than one conflict between matron mothers.

Draegloths have been around long enough that no one can say that any of these claims are invalid, but House Baenre of Menzoberranzan was likely the first beneficiary of a draegloth servant.

This theory probably holds more truth than others; a draegloth loyal to House Baenre is known to have sheltered its leaders during the strife that eventually made them the undisputed rulers of Menzoberranzan.

For thousands of years, draegloths were extremely rare, appearing infrequently in a few drow enclaves across the Underdark.

Starting around two thousand years ago, draegloth sightings became more and more frequent, even being reported far from the nearest drow enclave.

Such reports were often dismissed as the frightened ramblings of Underdark travelers, but it was true—a small number of draegloths had broken free of their dependence on the drow, who were, of course, unconcerned by this development.

After all, free-roaming draegloths had been present in their cities for some time, having been set loose as wars and internal conflicts saw their matron mothers and houses destroyed.

This oversight would prove to be costly to the drow enclave of Ir'Sylin.

The drow of Ir'Sylin thought nothing of rumors that a draegloth had been terrorizing a nearby settlement of duergar.

Refugees from the dwarf enclave told of a rampaging, four-armed demon that dragged bodies away to be eaten.

When this lone draegloth appeared at the edge of Ir'Sylin, the lizard riders guarding the city greeted it with a cautious deference, for even a free draegloth is Lolth's child.

The draegloth did not attack immediately, instead biding its time until the enclave's suling matron mother demanded an audience.

There, the draegloth sprung his trap; within seconds, the matron's elite guard had been torn apart, and the rogue draegloth's slavering jaws were inches from her throat.

A teleport contingency saved her life and preserved the tale of Ir'Sylin; all the other members of the enclave were either slaughtered in their homes or hunted down in the following weeks.

Since that time, the drow have attempted to maintain tighter controls on draegloths who are without a house.

They are not allowed to live in drow cities without a house affiliation or the sponsorship of a powerful noble.

Rogue draegloths find themselves watched at all times—even if they do have a sponsorship—and some seek out new matron mothers to pledge themselves to in order to avoid this suspicion.

There has been at least one case of falsifying the birth of a draegloth in order to legitimize a house's claim to Lolth's blessing.

Such deceptions were considered blasphemous before Lolth's disappearance, but now they have an almost cultlike effect on those who wish to believe that the Spider Queen has returned to their house.

Since their goddess's disappearance, draegloths have become more independent, many no longer serving the matron mothers without demanding equal status.

More and more have gone wandering the Underdark in search of adventure and a means to either restore Lolth to her former glory, or, barring that, to increase their demonic sires' power on the Material Plane.

As a result, demon cults have found themselves with unexpected allies, and draegloths are starting to form their own cults to elevate their fathers' names.

Draegloths rarely work together, but they are not above working with others to achieve their goals.

This is especially true for the younger members of the race, in whom Lolth's grip never firmly took hold.

OUTLOOK

Draegloths are sly and cunning creatures with a penchant for wild rages that end in the deaths of those around them.

They are excellent advisors, because their minds are seemingly created for understanding the many threads of drow intrigues, and their innate savagery allows for a plethora of options in dealing with any enemies.

They can be patient listeners when around those they respect, and Lolth has given them the ability to meditate and pray for hours while searching for a solution.

Their unique combination of patience, cunning, and ruthlessness makes them among the most feared hunters in the Underdark.

Draegloths see all creatures in the world other than drow and other Lolth-blessed beings as cattle or puppets.

They have no problem with killing other sentient beings for food or pleasure.

This does not mean that they cannot respect another being for her status or power, and draegloths make excellent companions and servants to the matron mothers who bore them.

But outside of this well-defined religious and social role, selfless acts on behalf of another are outside the draegloths' realm of comprehension.

The only thing that outshines a draegloth's loathing for other creatures is its faith.

Worship of Lolth (or more recently Vhaeraun) drives a draegloth's existence, and many become clerics devoted to her.

They act as bodyguards and advisors to the matron mothers out of respect for Lolth, and even now that she has disappeared, most draegloths continue to worship her with their customary fervor.

However, some draegloths have lost faith in the Spider Queen and now look to their demonic sires for guidance.

For other denizens of the Underdark, these are the most dangerous draegloths, because while their faithful cousins war with the drow and search for signs of Lolth, those who have left her are organizing demon-worshipping humanoids around them.

Such draegloths have started interacting with more weak-minded humanoids recently, rather than hunting them as they once would have, in order to gain power and reach for their new organizations.

Grimlocks are their favorite recruits, thanks to those creatures' barbaric ferocity and willingness to follow a strong leader in exchange for the ability to thrive in the dangerous Underdark environment.

PERSONALITY

Draegloths are possibly the most purely evil race in all of Toril.

They are born from the confluence of two great evils into a world where vileness is normal and goodness is as absent as the light of the sun.

Members of this race enjoy inflicting great cruelty on others, and they learn how to do so from their mothers, who nurture this trait with great relish and care.

Draegloths are known for their lack of appreciation of beauty.

Unlike most other races, they do not have any aesthetic sense, they do not appreciate art in any form, and they are not swayed by attractive members of their own race or others.

It is whispered that the only time a draegloth feels peace is when it is committing acts of evil and depravity.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Draegloths resemble impressively large drow, with black skin, a long white mane, and glowering red eyes.

They stand between 7-1/2 and 8 feet tall and weigh between 300 and 375 pounds.

Their legs have two joints, making them extremely quick and agile, and their bodies are framed with thick, powerful muscles.

A draegloth's face is elongated and skeletal.

It has four arms, two of which are normal-looking drow arms that appear undersized compared to its body and are often used for spellcasting.

The other two arms are long and powerful extremities, ending in wicked claws and with hands hanging low, much like an ape's.

Draegloths do not feel the need to wear clothing, since each individual's body is covered with a fine coat of white fur.

Draegloths are born fully developed and live to be about 300 years old, although the savage life of the Underdark robs most of their full lifespan.

RELATIONS

Most draegloths spend their lives around drow, who either revere them, fear them, or both.

For their part, the half-demons enjoy their special place in the drow community, and might act arrogantly toward what they often see as the lesser half of their lineage.

They regard the rest of the Underdark races as little more than animals, there only to please them or provide them with food and treasure.

The draegloths have exhibited a particularly strong antipathy toward gloamings (see Underdark page 12), who return the emotion with equal intensity.

Some arcanists who are familiar with both races have suggested that the feud originates amongst the demons who spawned the races, but to date no one has corroborated such claims.

On the rare occasion that a draegloth leaves its Underdark habitat, it finds none of the surface races to be palatable companions.

These draegloths often live in surface caverns, only leaving at night, while others find drow communities such as those in the forest of Cormanthor in which to live.

ALIGNMENT

Draegloths are creatures of pure evil, no matter which side of the family each individual favors; they desire to be nothing more than they are.

They favor the chaotic alignment of both parents as well, although their devotion to their mothers often drives them to orderly behavior in their service.

Draegloths who remain without the guiding force of a matron mother for a long period of time are likely to abandon their house and wander the Underdark alone.

DRAEGLOTH LANDS

Draegloths are found primarily in the drow cities scattered throughout the Underdark.

They tend to stick close to their creators unless their house is destroyed or weakened so badly that it becomes dangerous to remain.

At that point, they venture off to find new areas to exploit and new victims for their depraved minds.

Some of these draegloths might remain in the city, having built up their own independent power bases while serving their matrons.

While some displaced draegloths are content to wander the dark tunnels beneath the surface of Faerûn, others decide to see what lies above.

Some are drawn by rumors of drow encampments on the surface, while others leave in order to avoid being hunted by their numerous enemies.

RELIGION

Draegloths are very devoted to Lolth, the deity whose blessing brings them into existence.

They have been as distraught as the matron mothers over Lolth's recent disappearance, and the vast majority of draegloths remain devoted to her cause.

Some draegloths have wavered in their faith, however, and find themselves drawn to one of the other deities of the Dark Seldarine; Vhaeraun has gained a few powerful followers this way, and he is actively recruiting them into his forces.

Selvetarm accepts draegloths into his worship, but only temporarily, since he plans to return them to Lolth should she ever regain her power.

The recruitment of the draegloths into Vhaeraun's service is said to have been a warning to Selvetarm that the Masked Lord was actively working to supplant Lolth's rule of the drow gods.

LANGUAGE

Draegloths speak the languages of the Underdark drow, as well as the Abyssal tongue of their sires.

ADVENTURERS

Draegloth adventurers are most often on a mission directed by their matron mothers, or have been turned loose to wreak havoc on their house rivals.

Individual draegloths adventure to find a way to get closer to their demonic sires, or to cause misery and destruction to anyone who comes across them.

Their chaotic nature makes it difficult for them to stay in one place without a clear goal, and they enjoy taking the treasure and lives of others more than they care about enriching themselves.

DRAEGLOTH RACIAL TRAITS

- +2 Constitution.

Draegloths are incredibly tough.

They become stronger, tougher, and more agile as they gain draegloth levels (see the table below for additional ability modifiers).

- Draegloth base land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision out to 60 feet.
- Immune to sleep-inducing spells and effects.

- +2 racial bonus on saving throws against enchantment spells or effects.

• Automatic Languages: Abyssal, Elven, Undercommon.
 Bonus Languages: Aquan, Common, Draconic, Drow Sign Language, Gnome, Goblin, Kuo-toan.

- Favored Class: Cleric.

A multiclass draegloth's cleric class does not count when determining whether he takes an experience point penalty.

- Level Adjustment +4: With its 6 Hit Dice, this adjustment gives the draegloth an ECL of 10 (see the monster class table for details).

CLASS SKILLS

A draegloth's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the draegloth monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Draegloths are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A draegloth receives one feat at 1st level and additional feats at 4th and 10th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level.

Claws: A draegloth has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: Starting at 3rd level, a draegloth gains a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: A draegloth can use these spell-like abilities the indicated number of times per day as a 6th-level sorcerer: dancing lights, darkness, desecrate, faerie fire, and unholy blight.

COMPLETE PSIONIC (3.5)

DUERGAR

The duergar, or gray dwarves, lead lives of neverending toil in great underground foundry-cities.

They are a courageous and determined people, defeating obstacle after obstacle in their quest to thrive.

No obstacle deters a gray dwarf who has settled on a goal. Duergar might not have much loyalty to anyone other than themselves, but they never leave a job half done.

On the other hand, their difficult lives have brought out a number of predatory aspects in their culture.

The average duergar is avaricious, quick to anger, sullen, and violent.

Gray dwarves never forget a slight or an injury.

Within their society, might makes right.

They have no pity for those who are too weak to defend themselves or their property.

For more details on duergar, see page 8 of Expanded Psionics Handbook.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take duergar racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

Class Level: The Class Level column of the duergar racial class table indicates whether a duergar gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a duergar-specific ability, and some grant both.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase.

This includes granting another Hit Die, gaining other class abilities, and advancement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

Duergar Base Traits: Duergar have the following base racial traits.

+2 Constitution, -4 Charisma.

Medium size: Duergar have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Duergar base land speed is 20 feet.

Gray dwarves can move at this speed even when wearing medium or heavy armor or when carrying a medium or heavy load (unlike other creatures, whose speed is reduced in such situations).

Stonecunning: This ability grants a duergar a +2 racial bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework, traps, new construction (even when built to match the old), unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and so forth.

Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework.

A gray dwarf who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if he were actively searching, and a duergar can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can.

A duergar can also intuit depth, sensing his approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up.

Duergar have a sixth sense about stonework, an innate ability that they have plenty of opportunity to practice and hone in their underground homes.

Stability: Duergar are exceptionally stable on their feet.

A duergar receives a +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped when standing on the ground (but not when climbing, flying, riding, or otherwise not standing firmly on the ground).

+2 racial bonus on saves against poison.

This ability is superseded by a 2nd-level duergar's immunity to poison.

+2 racial bonus on saves against powers, spells, psi-like abilities, and spell-like effects.

+1 racial bonus on attack rolls against orcs (including half-orcs) and goblinoids (including goblins, hobgoblins, and bugbears).

+4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against creatures of the giant type (such as ogres, trolls, and hill giants).

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Duergar are dazzled in sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Duergar have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks and a +1 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

They have a +2 racial bonus on Appraise and Craft checks that are related to stone or metal.

Automatic Languages: Common, Dwarven, Undercommon.

Bonus Languages: Draconic, Giant, Goblin, Orc, Terran.

Favored Class: Fighter.

Darkvision: At 1st level, duergar gain darkvision out to 60 feet.

A duergar who takes the 2nd duergar racial level increases the range of his darkvision ability to 120 feet.

Naturally Psionic: At 1st level, duergar gain 1 bonus power point.

This benefit does not grant them the ability to manifest powers unless they gain that ability through another source, such as levels in a psionic class.

Power points do allow a character to make use of psionic feats and attempt to gain psionic focus.

Feat: Like every other character, a duergar character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Bonus Power Points: At 2nd level, a duergar gains 2 bonus power points.

Expansion (Ps): At 2nd level, a duergar gains the use of expansion (EPH 105) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifested level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Invisibility (Ps): At 2nd level, a duergar gains the use of invisibility as a psi-like ability once per day (manifested level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Immunities: At 2nd level, a duergar gains full immunity to paralysis, phantasms, and poison.

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any Hit Die divisible by 4, a duergar character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve. The ability improvement is permanent.

GITHYANKI

Githyanki are an ancient race of martial humanoids residing on the Astral Plane.

Widely known as planar travelers, githyanki venture to all corners of the multiverse in search of power and wealth. Githyanki are widely perceived as rapacious marauders who revel in warfare and conquest.

True, they can be arrogant, and sometimes view other humanoids native to the Material Plane with contempt. Other githyanki are more open-minded, however, and can work with other races toward mutual goals.

Regardless, every githyanki is convinced of her ability to handle any kind of trouble that might arise on whatever plane she happens to be traveling.

For more details on githyanki, see page 10 of Expanded Psionics Handbook.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take githyanki racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

Class Level: The Class Level column of the githyanki racial class table indicates whether a githyanki gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a githyanki-specific ability, and some grant both.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase.

This includes granting another Hit Die, gaining other class abilities, and advancement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

Githyanki Base Traits: Githyanki have the following base racial traits.

+2 Dexterity, –2 Wisdom.

Medium size: Githyanki have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Githyanki base land speed is 30 feet.

Darkvision out to 60 feet.

Automatic Languages: Common, Gith.

Bonus Languages: Abyssal, Celestial, Draconic, Infernal, Undercommon.

Favored Class: Fighter.

Naturally Psionic: At 1st level, githyanki gain 1 bonus power point.

This benefit does not grant them the ability to manifest powers unless they gain that ability through another source, such as levels in a psionic class.

Power points do allow a character to make use of psionic feats and attempt to gain psionic focus.

Feat: Like every other character, a githyanki character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Far Hand (Ps): At 1st level, a githyanki gains the use of far hand (EPH 106) as a psi-like ability three times per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Bonus Power Levels: At 2nd level, githyanki gain 2 bonus power points.

+2 Constitution: At 2nd level, githyanki gain a +2 increase to their Constitution ability score.

Psionic Daze (Ps): At 2nd level, a githyanki gains the use of psionic daze (EPH 90) as a psi-like ability three times per day (DC 10 + 1/2 HD + Cha modifier).

Manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice (minimum 1st).

Concealing Amorpha (Ps): At 3rd level, a githyanki gains the use of concealing amorpha (EPH 85) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Starting at 4th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability twice per day.

Starting at 5th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability three times per day.

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any Hit Die divisible by 4, a githyanki character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve.

The ability improvement is permanent.

Power Resistance: At 4th level, a githyanki gains power resistance equal to her Hit Dice +5.

Psionic Dimension Door (Ps): At 6th level, a githyanki gains the use of psionic dimension door (page 83) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Starting at 7th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability twice per day.

Starting at 8th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability three times per day.

Psionic Plane Shift (Ps): At 9th level, a githyanki gains the use of psionic plane shift (EPH 124) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Telekinetic Thrust (Ps): At 9th level, a githyanki gains the use of telekinetic thrust (EPH 135) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Starting at 10th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability twice per day.

Starting at 11th level, a githyanki can use this psi-like ability three times per day.

GITHZERAI

The githzerai are attuned to the mysteries of the inner self and are considered a race of ascetics who harness the power of the mind and the spirit.

They travel far and wide across the planes, opposing the sinister plots of both mind flayers and their own githyanki kin.

Githzerai rarely use two words when one will do. Cynical and suspicious, githzerai don't waste time on fools, and are rarely moved to help those unprepared to help themselves.

They are pragmatic to a fault, slow to give trust, and cautious in their dealings with others.

For more details on githzerai, see page 11 of Expanded Psionics Handbook.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take githzerai racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

Class Level: The Class Level column of the githzerai racial class table indicates whether a githzerai gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a githzerai-specific ability, and some grant both.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase.

This includes granting another Hit Die, gaining other class abilities, and advancement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

Githzerai Base Traits: Githzerai have the following base racial traits.

+2 Dexterity, -2 Intelligence.

Medium size: Githzerai have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Githzerai base land speed is 30 feet.

Darkvision out to 60 feet.

Automatic Languages: Common, Gith.

Bonus Languages: Abyssal, Celestial, Draconic, Slaad, Undercommon.

Favored Class: Monk.

Naturally Psionic: At 1st level, githzerai gain 2 bonus power points.

This benefit does not grant them the ability to manifest powers unless they gain that ability through another source, such as levels in a psionic class.

Power points do allow a character to make use of psionic feats and attempt to gain psionic focus.

Feat: Like every other character, a githzerai character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Catfall (Ps): At 1st level, a githzerai gains the use of catfall (EPH 82) as a psi-like ability three times per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Psionic Daze (Ps): At 2nd level, a githzerai gains the use of psionic daze (EPH 90) as a psi-like ability three times per day (DC 10 + 1/2 HD + Cha modifier).

Manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice (minimum 1st).

+2 Dexterity: At 2nd level, a githzerai gains a +2 increase to his Dexterity score.

At 4th level, a githzerai gains an additional +2 increase to his Dexterity score.

+2 Wisdom: At 2nd level, a githzerai gains a +2 increase to his Wisdom score.

Inertial Armor (Ps): At 3rd level, a githzerai gains the use of inertial armor (EPH 113) as a psi-like ability three times per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Power Resistance: At 4th level, a githzerai gains power resistance equal to his Hit Dice +5.

Concussion Blast (Ps): At 4th level, a githzerai gains the use of concussion blast (EPH 85) as a psi-like ability once per day.

Manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice (minimum 1st).

Starting at 5th level, a githzerai can use this psi-like ability twice per day.

Starting at 6th level, a githzerai can use this psi-like ability three times per day.

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any Hit Die divisible by 4, a githzerai character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve.

The ability improvement is permanent.

Psionic Plane Shift (Ps): At 13th level, a githzerai gains the use of psionic plane shift (EPH 124) as a psilike ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

HALF-GIANT

Human-giant hybrids, half-giants were bred by cruel sorcerer-kings who used them as warriors and laborers in a dry land.

Half-giants who survived early childhood faced a life of slavery and suffering.

Some managed to tap into a spark of psionic power within themselves, however, and used that new ability to escape and find their own paths.

For the most part, half-giants have human sensibilities.

They are curious, interested in cooperation and communication, and have a general tendency toward kindness.

They are quick to pick up the morals, customs, and habits of the areas in which they settle.

For more details on half-giants, see page 12 of Expanded Psionics Handbook.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take half-giant racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

Class Level: The Class Level column of the half-giant racial class table indicates whether a half-giant gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a half-giant-specific ability, and some grant both.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase.

This includes granting another Hit Die, gaining other class abilities, and advancement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

Half-Giant Base Traits: Half-giants have the following base racial traits.

+2 Constitution, -2 Dexterity.

Giant: Half-giants are not subject to spells or effects that affect humanoids only, such as charm person or dominate person.

Medium size: Half-giants have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Half-giant base land speed is 30 feet.

Low-Light Vision: A half-giant can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

He retains the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

Fire Acclimated: Half-giants have a +2 racial bonus on saving throws against all fire spells and effects.

Half-giants are accustomed to enduring high temperatures.

Automatic Language: Common.

Bonus Languages: Draconic, Giant, Gnoll, Ignan.

Favored Class: Psychic warrior.

Feat: Like every other character, a half-giant character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Powerful Build (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-giant reaches his full growth.

The physical stature of a fully grown half-giant lets him function in many ways as if he were one size category larger.

Whenever a half-giant is subject to a size modifier or special size modifier for an opposed check (such as during grapple checks, bull rush attempts, and trip attempts), the half-giant is treated as one size larger if doing so is advantageous to him.

A half-giant is also considered to be one size larger when determining whether a creature's special attacks based on size (such as improved grab or swallow whole) can affect him.

A half-giant can use weapons designed for a creature one size larger without penalty.

However, his space and reach remain those of a creature of his actual size.

The benefits of this racial trait stack with the effects of powers, abilities, and spells that change the subject's size category.

+2 Strength: At 2nd level, half-giant characters gain a +2 increase to their Strength ability score.

Naturally Psionic: At 2nd level, half-giant characters gain 2 bonus power points.

This benefit does not grant them the ability to manifest powers unless they gain that ability through another source, such as levels in a psionic class.

Power points do allow a character to make use of psionic feats and attempt to gain psionic focus.

Stomp (Ps): At 2nd level, a half-giant gains the use of Stomp (EPH 133) as a psi-like ability once per day (DC 10 + 1/2 HD + Cha modifier).

Manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice (minimum 1st).

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any Hit Die divisible by 4, a half-giant character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve.

The ability improvement is permanent.

THRI-KREEN

Fierce hunters and faultless trackers, the thri-kreen are a race of insectfolk sometimes known as “mantis warriors”. They are inscrutable, alien creatures; those who do not know them well believe them to be bloodthirsty monsters. Nomadic folk who spend their brief lives roaming vast distances of the deserts, scrublands, and savannas of the south, thri-kreen are near-perfect hunters. Each thri-kreen forms deep attachments with a handful of other individuals, regarding them as clutchmates, companions to be defended with one’s own life if need be. For more details on thri-kreen, see page 14 of Expanded Psionics Handbook.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take thri-kreen racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

Class Level: The Class Level column of the thri-kreen racial class table indicates whether a thri-kreen gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a thri-kreen-specific ability, and some grant both.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase.

This includes granting another Hit Die, gaining other class abilities, and advancement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

Racial Hit Dice: 1st-level and 2nd-level thri-kreen do not possess class levels.

Instead, they have 2d8 racial Hit Dice, gaining one at 1st level and one at 2nd level.

At 1st level, the thri-kreen’s first racial Hit Die grants 8 hit points, a base attack bonus of +1, and base saves of Fortitude +0, Reflex +2, and Will +2.

A 1st-level thri-kreen gains a number of skill points equal to 2 + Int modifier (minimum 1).

Its racial skills are Balance, Climb, Hide, Jump,

Listen, and Spot.

At 2nd level, a thri-kreen gains an additional 1d8 hit points, a base attack bonus of +2, and base saves of Fortitude +0, Reflex +3, and Will +3.

A 2nd-level thri-kreen gains a number of additional skill points equal to 2 + Int modifier (minimum 1) that it can spend on racial skills.

Thri-Kreen Base Traits: Thri-kreen have the following base racial traits.

+2 Strength, –2 Intelligence, +2 Wisdom, –4 Charisma.

Medium size: Thri-kreen have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Thri-kreen base land speed is 40 feet.

Dark vision out to 60 feet.

A thri-kreen has a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks in sandy or arid settings.

Immunity to magic sleep effects.

Multiple Limbs: Thri-kreen have four arms and can take the Multiweapon Fighting and Multiattack feats (MM 304).

These are not bonus feats.

Weapon Familiarity: The gythka and chatkcha (EPH 14) are martial weapons for thri-kreen.

Automatic Languages: Common, Thri-Kreen.

Bonus Languages: Elven, Giant, Gnoll, Goblin, Halfling.

Favored Class: Ranger.

Natural Armor (Ex): A thri-kreen’s exoskeleton is tough and resistant to blows.

At 1st level, a thri-kreen has a +1 natural armor bonus.

At 2nd level, a thri-kreen’s natural armor bonus increases to +2.

At 6th level, a thri-kreen’s natural armor bonus increases to +3.

Natural Attacks (Ex): Thri-kreen can attack with four claws and a bite.

The claws deal 1d4 points of damage, and the bite is a secondary attack that also deals 1d4 points of damage.

A thri-kreen can attack with a weapon (or multiple weapons) at its normal attack bonus, and make either a bite or claw attack as a secondary attack.

For example, a thri-kreen with the Multiweapon Fighting feat who is armed with three short swords could attack with all three swords at a –2 penalty (the normal penalty for fighting with multiple weapons while using light weapons in its off hands) and also make a bite attack at a –5 penalty.

Feat: Like every other character, a thri-kreen character gains one fear at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Deflect Arrows: At 2nd level, thri-kreen characters gain Deflect Arrows as a bonus feat.

Leap (Ex): At 2nd level, thri-kreen characters fully master their ability to excel at jumping.

They gain a +30 racial bonus on Jump checks.

Naturally Psionic: At 3rd level, a thri-kreen’s latent potential for psionic power suddenly reveals itself, granting the character 1 power point.

This benefit does not grant him the ability to manifest powers unless he gains that ability through another source, such as levels in a psionic class.

Power points do allow a character to make use of psionic feats and attempt to gain psionic focus.

Know Direction and Location (Ps): At 3rd level, a thri-kreen gains the use of know direction and location (EPH 114) as a psi-like ability three times per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Poison (Ex): At 4th level, thri-kreen characters learn how to muster their naturally occurring venom in a quantity sufficient to inflict one poisonous bite per day.

The poison delivered by the bite has an initial damage of 1d6 Dex, but the secondary damage paralyzes victims for 2d6 minutes (DC 11 + Con modifier).

Chameleon (Ps): At 4th level, a thri-kreen gains the use of chameleon (EPH 82) as a psi-like ability three times per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Metaphysical Claw (Ps): At 4th level, a thri-kreen gains the use of metaphysical claw (EPH 118) as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any Hit Die divisible by 4, a thri-kreen character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve.

The ability improvement is permanent.

+4 Dexterity: At 6th level, thri-kreen characters gain a +4 increase to their Dexterity score.

Greater Concealing Amorphia (Ps): At 6th level, a thri-kreen gains the use of greater concealing amorphia as a psi-like ability once per day (manifest level equal to 1/2 Hit Dice, minimum 1st).

DROW OF THE UNDERDARK (3.5)

DROW

The drow, also known as dark elves, are a depraved and evil offshoot of the more commonly known surface elves.

They spend their lives continually plotting the downfall of their hated light-skinned kin.

Although they share a common enemy, there is certainly no love lost among the drow themselves, since every individual only looks out for himself and sees any weakness in a compatriot as a chance to enhance his own place in society.

Through the millennia of their subterranean exile, and the machinations of their foul goddess, the drow have developed an affinity for arachnids and are typically accompanied by several of these vermin, from the smallest normal spiders to the most gargantuan monstrous varieties. For more details on drow, see MM 103.

RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take drow racial levels that are integrated with a standard class.

CLASS LEVEL

The Class Level column of the accompanying table indicates whether a drow gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, some racial levels provide a drow-specific ability, and some grant both. Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with level advancement.

This includes another Hit Die, other class abilities, and improvement in base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores.

DROW BASE TRAITS

Drow have the following base racial traits, which apply to any character who takes 1st level in the drow racial class. +2 Dexterity, -2 Constitution.

Medium Size: Drow have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

Drow base land speed is 30 feet.

+2 racial bonus on saving throws against enchantment spells or effects.

+2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

A drow who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he was actively looking for it.

+2 racial bonus on Will saves against spells and spell-like abilities.

Light Blindness (Ex): Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round.

In addition, they take a -1 circumstance penalty on attack rolls, saves, and checks when in bright light.

Automatic Languages: Common, Elven, Undercommon.

Bonus Languages: Abyssal, Aquan, Draconic, Drow Sign Language, Gnome, Goblin, Kuo-Toan.

Favored Class: Wizard (male) or cleric (female).

Darkvision: At 1st level, drow gain darkvision out to 60 feet.

Feat: Like every other character, a drow character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Die divisible by 3. These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

ABILITIES GAINED AT HIGHER LEVELS

Spell-like Abilities: At 2nd level in the racial class, a drow gains the ability to use each of the following spell-like abilities once per day: dancing lights, darkness, faerie fire. Caster level equals the drow's class level.

+2 Intelligence: Also at 2nd level in the racial class, drow gain a +2 increase to their Intelligence scores.

+2 Charisma: At 2nd level in the racial class, drow also gain a +2 increase to their Charisma scores.

Darkvision: A drow who takes the 3rd drow racial level increases the extent of his darkvision to 120 feet.

Immunities: Also at 3rd level in the racial class, a drow gains immunity to magic sleep spells and effects.

Spell Resistance: At 4th level in the racial class, a drow gains spell resistance equal to 11 + class level.

Feat: Like every other character, a drow character gains an additional feat at every class level divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Ability Score Increase: Upon attaining any class level divisible by 4, a drow character increases one of his ability scores by 1 point.

The player chooses which ability score to improve.

The ability improvement is permanent.

LIBRIS MORTIS (3.5)

GHOUL/GHAST

Although usually portrayed as bloodthirsty killers content to dine on carrion, ghouls (and their tougher cousins, the ghastrs) were once living humanoidr with true emotions. Sometimes memories of that previous life comes back to haunt a ghoul, and such qualities make for an excellent tragic character.

Because of the similarity between ghouls and ghastrs, a single undead monster class covers both creatures.

In effect, a ghoul “becomes” a ghast at 6th level.

Adventures: A ghoul might turn to adventuring out of a wish to avenge its death, protect a loved one, or destroy an old enemy.

Characteristics: Ghouls are strong characters because of their combat ability, particularly their resistance to many kinds of damage.

Most of a ghoul’s power comes from the fact that it is undead.

On top of the standard undead immunities, it has favorable ability score modifiers and (after 1st level) multiple attacks per round.

Although it is at risk of being destroyed or controlled by a cleric’s use of positive or negative energy, even the weakest ghoul has turn resistance.

Alignment: Ghouls are traditionally chaotic evil, though this restriction can be relaxed in a campaign that features undead player characters.

Even so, most ghouls tend toward chaos and/or evil.

Lawful or good ghouls are extremely rare.

Religion: Ghouls, like most undead, rarely devote themselves to any religion.

As intelligent undead, ghouls are rightfully wary of divine power.

Those that seek out a divine power to follow often gravitate to the worship of Orcus.

Background: Some ghouls are created upon the death of a living individual who savored the taste of humanoid flesh.

Others are transformed by the bite of a ghoul or ghast; these ghouls are the most likely to deviate from the normal ghoul alignment of chaotic evil.

Races: Most ghouls were formerly human or a member of one of the savage humanoid races (orcs, gnolls, goblinoids, and the like).

Evil dwarves sometimes prove wicked enough to transform into ghouls, but elves, gnomes, and halflings rarely descend to such depths of depravity.

Of course, any humanoid afflicted by ghoul fever might become a ghoul, even without resorting to such behavior.

Other Undead Classes: Ghouls get along reasonably well with wights, though they sometimes look down on the wights’ lack of subtlety.

They respect the power and “vision” of the mass-murdering mohrgs, but vampire spawn are much too haughty for a ghoul’s liking, and mummies are generally too lawful.

Role: Ghouls can serve as adequate front-line fighters, but they are better at scouting and skirmishing.

A ghoul’s natural cunning and agility lends itself to a role of stealth over sheer power.

RACIAL TRAITS

Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Wis, Con —

Ghouls are more agile than humans and have a natural cunning and insight.

As an undead creature, a ghoul does not have a Constitution score.

Speed: A ghoul’s base land speed is the same as that of the base race.

Darkvision: Ghouls can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Automatic Languages: Common.

Once humanoids themselves, ghouls remember the language of their own former existence.

Favored Class: Ghoul.

The best multiclass choices for a ghoul are ranger, rogue, and fighter.

Those who choose to pursue spellcasting classes often take well to sorcery or even the role of a cleric, typically of a deity of death or undeath.

CLASS SKILLS

The ghoul’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Move Silently (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at 1st Level: (4 + Int modifier) × 4.

Skill Points at Each Additional Hit Die: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ghoul monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ghouls are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Bite: A ghoul has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus its Strength bonus.

The damage value given is for Medium ghouls.

Claws: Beginning at 2nd level, a ghoul has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 its Strength bonus.

The damage value given is for Medium ghouls.

Paralysis (Ex): A creature hit by a bite or claw attack from a ghoul of 2nd level or higher must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 ghoul's HD from class levels + ghoul's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed for the indicated duration. Elves are immune to the paralysis of ghouls of 7th level or lower.

Ghoul Fever (Su): Disease—bite, Fortitude DC 10 + 1/2 ghoul's HD from class levels + ghoul's Cha modifier, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d3 Con and 1d3 Dex.

The save DC is Charisma-based.

An afflicted humanoid who dies of ghoul fever rises as a ghoul at the next midnight.

A humanoid who becomes a ghoul in this way retains none of the abilities it possessed in life.

It is not under the control of any other ghouls, but it hungers for the flesh of the living and behaves like a normal ghoul in all respects.

A humanoid of 4 Hit Dice or higher rises as a ghast (an 8th-level ghoul).

Stench (Ex): The stink of death and corruption surrounding an 8th-level ghoul (also known as a ghast) is overwhelming. Living creatures within 10 feet must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 ghoul's HD from class levels + ghoul's Cha modifier) or be sickened for 1d6+4 minutes.

A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected by the same ghoul's stench for 24 hours.

A delay poison or neutralize poison spell removes the effect from a sickened creature.

Creatures with immunity to poison are unaffected, and creatures resistant to poison receive their normal bonus on their saving throws.

MOHRG

A mohrg is the undead form of a horrifyingly evil individual, typically a mass murderer or similar villain, who died without atoning for his crimes.

As punishment for a life of evil, a mohrg is tortured by an endless existence dominated by an all-consuming hatred of living things.

Adventures: Like any other normally viciously evil undead creature, a mohrg that becomes an adventurer typically does so either to further its horrid goals or to atone for its vile ways.

Characteristics: Mohrgs are extraordinarily strong and agile, making them deadly combatants.

A mohrg relies on its paralyzing tongue and improved grab ability to quickly neutralize an enemy, following up with brutal slam attacks.

Alignment: Mohrgs are traditionally chaotic evil, though this restriction can be relaxed somewhat in a campaign that features undead player characters.

Even in such cases, most mohrgs lean strongly toward chaos and evil.

Good-aligned mohrgs are virtually unknown.

Religion: Like other intelligent undead, mohrgs rarely come into voluntary association with religions of any kind.

Background: Unlike most other undead creatures described in this section, the most common trait among mohrgs is the evil that they performed in life.

As the animated corpse of an unrepentant mass murderer or similarly vile person, a mohrg is a tortured personification of pure evil.

Races: Among the civilized races, the pure evil necessary to become a mohrg is found most often among humans and half-orcs.

Few other races possess both the murderous rage and the ability to deal the amount of death necessary to damn oneself to eternal unlife as a mohrg.

Other Undead Classes: Mohrgs have the greatest respect for wights, which share their all-consuming hatred for the living.

Ghouls are mere pawns in the fight against living creatures, and mummies are dim-witted thugs.

Vampire spawn have vision, a quality that mohrgs respect, but they depend far too much on the living for the mohrgs' taste.

Role: Mohrgs are best as front-line warriors, thanks to their powerful combat abilities.

They also make fine assassins, and if they can rein in their murderous attitudes, can be good scouts as well.

RACIAL TRAITS

Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, Con —.

Mohrgs are stronger than an average creature of the base race.

As an undead creature, a mohrg does not have a Constitution score.

Speed: A mohrg's land speed is the same as that of the base race.

Darkvision: Mohrgs can see in the dark out to 60 feet.
 Automatic Languages: Common.
 Once humanoid themselves, mohrgs remember the languages of their own former existence.
 Favored Class: Mohrg.

The best multiclass choices for a mohrg are fighter or barbarian.

CLASS SKILLS

The mohrg's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at 1st Level: $(4 + \text{Int modifier}) \times 4$.

Skill Points at Each Additional Hit Die: $4 + \text{Int modifier}$.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the mohrg monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mohrgs are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Slam: A mohrg has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus $1-1/2$ times its Strength bonus.

Improved Grab (Ex): At 9th level, a mohrg gains the improved grab ability.

To use this ability, a mohrg must hit a creature of its size or smaller with its slam attack.

It can then attempt to start a grapple without provoking attacks of opportunity.

Paralyzing Touch (Su): Beginning at 12th level, a mohrg gains a paralyzing touch attack that it executes by lashing out with its tongue.

An opponent hit by a melee touch attack must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC $10 + 1/2$ mohrg's HD from class levels + mohrg's Cha modifier) or become paralyzed for 1d4 minutes.

Create Spawn (Su): Creatures killed by a mohrg rise after 1d4 days as zombies under the mohrg's control.

They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

MUMMY

A mummy is a preserved corpse, typically animated through the auspices of dark desert gods.

Traditionally, mummies serve as guardians of tombs or temples, destroying intruders or thieves who desecrate those areas.

Adventures: What could bring a mummy to abandon its eternal vigilance and take up the career of a traveling adventurer?

Some are seekers of vengeance, pursuing grave robbers or desecrators of the dead.

Others have memories of their lives long past, in which they performed feats of daring or heroism.

Alternatively, this creature of the dead might seek to end its years of service to uncaring powers, and perhaps even long to pursue a more noble calling.

Characteristics: The mummy has in its repertoire despair, mummy rot, improved ability scores, natural armor, and its status as an undead creature.

The undead status comes first, and because of this type advantage, a mummy must wait for several levels to acquire any special abilities.

What is frequently the most feared aspect of an encounter with a hostile mummy, its supernatural rotting disease, does not add much to the effectiveness of a player character mummy.

While PCs must deal with long-term consequences such as diseases and curses, the typical monster won't be alive long enough for the disease to matter—or if it is, it's only because the player characters have met an untimely end.

The mummy's despair ability, on the other hand, is much more useful, even if it is troublesome for companions to deal with its paralyzing visage each morning.

Alignment: Mummies are usually lawful evil, but exceptions to this alignment are much more common than for most undead creatures.

In fact, of all the undead monster races presented here, the mummy is perhaps the most likely to follow the path of good.

Most retain their lawful tendency, as befits their typical role as guardians.

Religion: Unlike most other intelligent undead, mummies often have ties to established religions, either having been created specifically to guard the tombs of the dead or having once been priests themselves.

Background: Mummies are always created, never spawned. Some are the ancient guardians of long-deserted tombs, while others are the more recent creations of powerful necromancers or evil priests.

Rarely, an otherwise noble or good individual might be transformed by divine powers into a mummy as punishment or a curse for transgressions (real or imagined).

Races: Creatures of all humanoid races can become mummies, though most are from highly religious cultures inhabiting desert lands.

For that reason, sylvan races such as elves or halflings rarely practice techniques of mummification.

Other Undead Classes: Mummies interact poorly with most other undead.

They find flesh-eating or blood-drinking undead creatures such as ghouls and vampire spawn distasteful, and have little patience for the chaotic nature of most undead, particularly the hateful mohrgs.

Wights at least share some of the mummies' disciplined nature, and mummies can find common cause with them against a shared enemy.

Role: Mummies are formidable combatants.

They are usually insightful and possessed of strong personalities, but don't have the intellect to serve effectively as leaders.

They are often very spiritual, and one may serve as a group's conscience.

RACIAL TRAITS

Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, Con —, -4 Int. Mummies are strong but slow, and they tend to be single-minded.

As an undead creature, a mummy does not have a Constitution score.

Speed: A mummy's base land speed is 10 feet slower than that of the base race, to a minimum of 10 feet.

Darkvision: Mummies can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Vulnerability to Fire: A mummy takes half again as much (+50%) damage as normal from fire attacks.

Damage Reduction: A mummy gains damage reduction as it advances in level, as noted on the accompanying table.

Automatic Languages: Common.

Once humanoids themselves, mummies remember the languages of their own former existence.

Mummies often study rare or exotic languages to preserve their connection to an ancient past.

Favored Class: Mummy.

The best multiclass choice for a mummy is fighter, though sorcerer and cleric can also be interesting choices.

A unique mummy paladin or bard could be an intriguing character.

CLASS SKILLS

The mummy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at 1st Level: (4 + Int modifier) × 4.

Skill Points at Each Additional Hit Die: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the mummy monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mummies are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Slam: A mummy has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1-1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Mummy Rot (Su): Starting at 5th level, once per day a mummy can infect a creature hit by its slam attack with mummy rot.

At 8th level it can do this three times per day, and at 12th level every one of its slam attacks can bring about the disease if the mummy wishes.

Mummy rot is a supernatural disease—Fortitude save DC 10 + 1/2 mummy's HD from class levels + mummy's Cha modifier, incubation period 1 minute; damage 1d6 Con and 1d6 Cha.

Unlike normal diseases, mummy rot persists until the victim reaches Constitution 0 (and dies) or is cured as described below.

Mummy rot is a powerful curse, not a natural disease.

A character attempting to cast any conjuration (healing) spell on a creature afflicted with mummy rot must succeed on a DC 20 caster level check, or the spell has no effect on the afflicted character.

To eliminate mummy rot, the curse must first be broken with break enchantment or remove curse (requiring a DC 20 caster level check for either spell), after which a caster level check is no longer necessary to cast healing spells on the victim, and the mummy rot can be magically cured as any normal disease.

An afflicted creature that dies of mummy rot shrivels away into sand and dust that blow away into nothing at the first wind.

Despair (Su): A mummy of 10th level or higher causes fear in any creature that views it.

Such a creature must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 mummy's HD from class levels + mummy's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed with fear for 1d4 rounds.

Whether or not the save is successful, that creature cannot be affected again by that mummy's despair ability for 24 hours.

VAMPIRE SPAWN

Forever anchored to their unholy graves, the nocturnal predators known as vampire spawn scheme for power. They tend toward decadence, believing themselves superior to other living (or undead) creatures.

Would-be player character vampires are limited to advancing as free-willed vampire spawn.

In order to take the class described here, a character must die as a result of a vampire's energy drain (or as a victim of its blood drain if the character has less than 5 HD).

Characters with 5 or more Hit Dice who are killed by a vampire's blood drain must acquire the vampire template (see page 250 of the Monster Manual), and its +8 level adjustment places that template beyond the scope of the monster classes presented here.

Adventures: A vampire spawn might turn to adventuring to gain revenge upon the bloodsucking fiend that cursed it to eternal unlife, or as penance for untold years of spreading evil and death.

Those that can overcome (or ignore) their emotions may instead seek knowledge, power, or both.

Characteristics: Vampire spawn have great talents of stealth and persuasion.

They can stand their ground in melee combat, knowing that an easy escape (whether by gaseous form or spider climb) is always available.

Their blood drain, domination, and energy drain abilities make them the bane of most living creatures.

Alignment: Vampire spawn are traditionally evil, though a DM may relax this restriction in a campaign that features undead player characters.

The innate selfishness of the typical vampire spawn makes a good alignment difficult to uphold.

Religion: Like other intelligent undead, vampire spawn rarely voluntarily associate with religion of any kind.

Background: Unlike with most other undead creatures, every vampire spawn is the creation of a true vampire.

In some cases, entire societies or cultures of vampire spawn exist in the shadows of normal civilization, hewing to their own arcane rules of behavior, often set down by one or more original "procreators" of the culture.

Races: Vampire spawn come from all humanoid races.

They tend to be more common among the civilized races—including humans, elves, and half-elves—than the savage tribal races.

That said, the ferocity of a half-orc or gnoll vampire spawn is indeed something to be reckoned with.

Other Undead Classes: Vampire spawn look down on all other undead as lesser beings, regardless of the actual power of such creatures.

Still, some of the other undead have their place—ghouls and wights make fine soldiers, and some vampire spawn use mummies or mohrgs as bodyguards.

Role: Vampire spawn are natural leaders, and they know it. They are smart, insightful, and charismatic, though their sense of superiority often leads them to take on tasks best left to subordinates.

Vampire spawn make excellent warriors and also fine scouts or assassins.

RACIAL TRAITS

Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Cha, Con —. Vampire spawn are stronger than humans and arrogant enough to consider most humanoids little more than prey. As an undead creature, a vampire spawn does not have a Constitution score.

Speed: A vampire spawn's base land speed is the same as that of the base race.

Darkvision: Vampire spawn can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

+2 racial bonus on Bluff checks.

Vampire spawn are very persuasive.

+2 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks.

Vampire spawn are quiet and sneaky.

+2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks.

Vampire spawn are very perceptive.

Vampire Spawn Weaknesses: Vampire spawn are vulnerable to all attacks and effects that repel or slay vampires.

See Vampire Weaknesses, page 253 of the Monster Manual.

Automatic Languages: Common.

Favored Class: Vampire spawn.

The best multiclass choices for a vampire spawn are fighter, rogue, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The vampire spawn's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at 1st Level: (4 + Int modifier) × 4.

Skill Points at Each Additional Hit Die: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the vampire spawn monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Vampire spawn are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Bonus Feats: Vampire spawn gain Alertness at 2nd level, Lightning Reflexes at 5th level, and Improved Initiative at 8th level.

Blood Drain (Ex): A vampire spawn can suck blood from a living victim with its fangs by making a successful grapple check.

If it pins the foe, it drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution drain each round the pin is maintained.

On each such successful attack, a vampire spawn gains 5 temporary hit points that last for up to 1 hour.

Spider Climb (Ex): A vampire spawn can climb sheer surfaces as though with a spider climb spell.

Skill Bonus (Ex): At 4th level, a vampire spawn's racial bonus on Bluff, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks increases from +2 to +4.

Fast Healing (Ex): A vampire spawn gains fast healing 1 at 5th level.

At 8th level, this improves to fast healing 2.

A vampire spawn heals damage each round so long as it has at least 1 hit point.

If reduced to 0 hit points in combat, it automatically assumes gaseous form and attempts to escape.

It must reach its coffin home within 2 hours or be utterly destroyed.

(It can travel up to nine miles in 2 hours).

Once at rest in its coffin, it is helpless.

It regains 1 hit point after 1 hour, then is no longer helpless and resumes healing at the rate of 2 hit points per round.

Gaseous Form (Su): As a standard action, a vampire spawn can assume gaseous form at will, as the spell (caster level 5th), but it can remain gaseous indefinitely and has a fly speed of 20 feet with perfect maneuverability.

Domination (Su): A vampire spawn can crush an opponent's will just by looking into his or her eyes.

This effect is similar to a gaze attack, except that the vampire spawn must use a standard action, and those merely looking at it are not affected.

Anyone the vampire spawn targets must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 vampire spawn's HD from class levels + vampire spawn's Cha modifier) or fall instantly under the vampire spawn's influence as though by a dominate person spell (caster level 12th).

The ability has a range of 30 feet.

Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by a vampire spawn's slam attack gain one negative level.

The Fortitude save to remove a negative level is DC 10 + 1/2 vampire spawn's HD from class levels + vampire spawn's Cha modifier.

For each such negative level bestowed, a vampire spawn gains 5 temporary hit points that last for up to 1 hour.

WIGHT

The wight is an undead creature given a semblance of life through sheer violence and hatred.

It is spiteful and cruel, seeking only to destroy all living creatures.

Even those rare few that overcome their pure hatred of all living things remain jealous of such creatures.

Adventures: Wights prefer lurking in places that reek with death, though some leave such lairs to seek out additional victims.

Those that are less murderous might seek adventure as a way of righting the scales for the evil they have done in the past, or as vengeance against those that put them in this form.

Characteristics: Wights are strong of will and personality. Though hateful and violent, they are much more disciplined than other undead creatures that share these tendencies, such as mohrgs.

They are naturally stealthy, making them good scouts or assassins.

Alignment: Wights are traditionally lawful evil, though this restriction can be relaxed in a campaign that features undead player characters.

Even so, most wights lean strongly toward evil.

Good-aligned wights are exceedingly rare, and even neutral wights are rare.

Religion: Like other intelligent undead, wights rarely come into voluntary association with religions of any kind.

Background: Some wights are cursed to walk the earth because of their violent and horrid lives, but a good many are merely the victims of other wights, themselves spawned from violence.

Wights spawned by other wights are more likely to have alignments differing from the traditional lawful evil.

Races: Wights are most often former humans or members of evil humanoid races (such as hobgoblins or orcs).

Some particularly vile dwarves become wights, but other races only rarely are so cursed.

Of course, any humanoid can become a wight through the actions of another wight.

Other Undead Classes: Wights get along well with mummies, since these sorts of undead share a level of discipline.

They respect the cunning of ghouls, and the mohrgs' all-consuming hatred of living things, but in general find both of those creatures too savage.

They see vampire spawn as embarrassing poseurs, trying far too hard to pass themselves off as living beings.

Role: A wight is a competent combatant, though its strengths lie in stealth and patience.

A wight can make an excellent group leader, assuming the others in the group can put up with its cold, festering hatred.

RACIAL TRAITS

Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, Con —.

Wights are agile and sneaky.

As an undead creature, a wight does not have a Constitution score.

Speed: A wight's base land speed is the same as that of the base race.

Darkvision: Wights can see in the dark out to 60 feet. +8 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Wights are especially good at moving quietly in pursuit of their prey.

Automatic Languages: Common.

Once humanoids themselves, wights remember the languages of their own former existence.

Favored Class: Wight.

The best multiclass choice for a wight is rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The wight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at 1st Level: $(4 + \text{Int modifier}) \times 4$.

Skill Points at Each Additional Hit Die: $4 + \text{Int modifier}$.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the wight monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Wights are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Slam: A wight has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus $1\frac{1}{2}$ times its Strength bonus.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid slain by a wight becomes a wight in 1d4 rounds.

Spawn are under the command of the wight that created them and remain enslaved until its death.

They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by an 8th-level wight's slam attack gain one negative level.

The Fortitude save to remove this negative level is DC $10 + 1\frac{1}{2}$ wight's HD from class levels + wight's Cha modifier).

For each such negative level bestowed, a wight gains 5 temporary hit points that last for up to 1 hour.

MONSTER MANUAL 4 (3.5)

VARAG

If your DM allows it, you can play a varag character.

While these creatures are vile and evil in most settings, they can be viable characters.

This is especially true in the EBERRON campaign setting, where alignment is less restrictive, and monstrous creatures often share settlements with normal player races. Normally, you can't begin with a 1st-level varag character because of the race's level adjustment.

With your DM's permission, however, you can use the varag racial class presented here to begin play, though you don't gain the full complement of abilities granted by the race until you are more experienced.

In essence, you are applying the varags level adjustment to your character over time, increasing effective character level (ECL) gradually rather than all at once.

Effective character level equals the varag's racial level on the Varag Racial Class table that follows.

THE VARAG RACIAL CLASS

Racial Class	Level	Special
1st	0	Racial Hit Die (1d8), varag base traits, natural armor +1, feat
2nd	0	Racial Hit Die (2d8), +2 Dex, scent 10 ft., Run
3rd	0	+2 Con, natural armor +2, scent 20 ft., Move Silently (+8)
4th	0	Racial Hit Die (3d8), +2 Dex, scent 30 ft., feat
5th	0	+2 Str, natural armor +3, Spring Attack, Move Silently (take 10)
6th	1st	Ability score increase
7th	2nd	—
8th	3rd	Feat
9th	4th	—
10th	5th	Ability score increase
11th	6th	Feat
12th	7th	—
13th	8th	—
14th	9th	Ability score increase, feat
15th	10th	—
16th	11th	—
17th	12th	Feat
18th	13th	Ability score increase
19th	14th	—
20th	15th	Feat

The varag racial class must be taken at character creation. It cannot be gained later during a character's career if it is not initially chosen.

CLASS FEATURES

The following features are gained by characters who take varag racial levels that are integrated with a standard class. Class Level: The Class Level column of the varag racial class table indicates whether a varag gains a standard class level at any given racial level.

Some racial levels provide a standard class level, while others provide a varag-specific ability.

Class levels grant all the benefits normally associated with a level increase, including another Hit Die and increasing base attack bonus, base saves, and ability scores, along with other class features.

Racial Hit Die: 1st- through 5th-level varags do not possess class levels.

Instead, they gain racial Hit Dice and abilities.

At 1st level, the varag's first racial Hit Die grants 8 hit points and +0 base attack bonus, and base saves of Fortitude +0, Reflex +2, and Will +0.

A 1st-level varag gains a number of skill points equal to $(2 + \text{Int modifier} [\text{minimum } 1]) \times 4$.

Its racial class skills are Jump, Move Silently, and Survival.

At 2nd level, a varag gains an additional 1d8 hit points and +1 base attack bonus, and base saves of Fortitude +0, Reflex +3, and Will +0.

A 2nd-level varag gains a number of additional skill points equal to $2 + \text{Int modifier}$ (minimum 1).

At 4th level, a varag gains an additional 1d8 hit points and +0 base attack bonus, and base saves of Fortitude +1, Reflex +3, and Will +1.

A 4th-level varag gains a number of additional skill points equal to $2 + \text{Int modifier}$ (minimum 1).

Varag Base Traits: Varags have the following base racial traits.

—+2 Strength, -4 Intelligence.

—Medium size: Varags have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

—Humanoid (goblinoid): A varag is a humanoid that has the goblinoid subtype.

—Varag base land speed is 40 feet.

—Darkvision out to 60 feet.

—+4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks and a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

—Automatic Languages: Goblin.

Bonus Languages: Common, Draconic, Dwarves, Infernal, Giant, Orc.

—Favored Class: Scout (Complete Adventurer 10).

Natural Armor (Ex): A varag's skin is tough, and it toughens further as the varag does—at 1st level, a varag has a +1 natural armor bonus.

At 3rd level, a varag's natural armor bonus increases to +2.

The varag's natural armor bonus increases to +3 at 5th level.

Feat: Like every other character, a varag character gains one feat at 1st level and another at every Hit Dice total divisible by 3.

These feats are in addition to any bonus feats granted as class features or any other bonus feats.

Ability Score Increases: At 2nd level, a varag character's Dexterity score increases by 2.

At 3rd level, Constitution increases by 2.

At 4th level, Dexterity increases again by 2, and at 5th level, Strength increases by 2.

Upon attaining any Hit Die total divisible by 4, a varag character increases one ability score by 1 point, as any character does.

The player chooses which ability score to improve in this case.

The ability improvement is permanent.

Scent (Ex): At 2nd level, a varag gains scent, but this ability has a range of 10 feet instead of the normal 30 feet.

Beginning at 3rd level, the range increases to 20 feet.

At 4th level, it increases to 30 feet, becoming the normal scent ability.

Run: At 2nd level, a varag gains Run as a bonus feat.

Move Silently: At 3rd level, a varag's racial bonus on Move Silently checks improves by +4, for a total of +8.

Upon reaching 5th level, a varag can always choose to take 10 on Move Silently checks, even if rushed or threatened.

Spring Attack: At 5th level, a varag gains Spring Attack as a bonus feat.

VITAL STATISTICS

You can choose your varag character's starting age, height, and weight, based on the typical physical characteristics detailed in the ecology section of the monster entry and the random ages here.

Or, you can use the tables that follow to determine these statistics randomly.

RANDOM STARTING AGES

Race	Adulthood	Barbarian, Rogue, Scout, Sorcerer	Bard, Fighter, Paladin, Ranger	Cleric, Druid, Monk, Wizard
Varag	8 years	+1d3	+1d4	+2d4

AGING EFFECTS

Race	Middle Age	Old	Venerable	Maximum Age
Varag	16 years	24 years	32 years	+2d8 years

RANDOM HEIGHT AND WEIGHT

Race	Base Height	Height Modifier	Base Weight	Weight Modifier
Varag, male	5' 11"	+2d12	230 lb.	× (2d6) lb.
Varag, female	5' 7"	+2d12	200 lb.	× (2d6) lb.

PLANAR HANDBOOK (3.5)

AVORAL GUARDINAL

Outsider (Extraplanar, Good, Guardinal) In their home on Elysium, avoral guardinals are peaceful and friendly. Elsewhere, they serve as powerful emissaries of pure good, confronting evil wherever they find it.

Adventuring avorals are more common than one might think, since they often travel the planes in search of evil activities to thwart.

AVORAL GUARDINAL RACIAL TRAITS

Avoral guardinals have the following racial abilities and characteristics.

- +2 Dexterity, +2 Charisma.
- Outsider: Avoral guardinals are native to the Blessed Fields of Elysium, and thus have the outsider type. They gain the extraplanar subtype when not on Elysium. They are not subject to spells or effects that affect only humanoids, such as charm person and dominate person.
- Medium: As Medium creatures, avoral guardinals have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.
- An avoral guardinal's base land speed is 40 feet. Avoral guardinals also have a fly speed of 30 feet with poor maneuverability. Their fly speed and maneuverability improve as they gain levels (see Wings, below).
- Avoral guardinals have darkvision out to 60 feet and low-light vision.
- Skills: Avoral guardinals have a +2 racial bonus on Spot checks.
- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, Draconic. Bonus Languages: Common, Abyssal, Auran.
- Favored Class: Avoral guardinal.
- The best multiclass choice for an avoral is ranger.
- Level adjustment: An avoral guardinal that has progressed through its monster class has 7 Hit Dice and a level adjustment of +8, making it effectively a 15th-level character.

CLASS SKILLS

The avoral guardinal's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the avoral guardinal class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Avoral guardinals are proficient with all simple and martial weapons.

An avoral guardinal's natural weapons, as well as any weapons it wields, are treated as good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Feats: An avoral guardinal receives one feat at 1st level and additional feats at 5th and 11th level.

After 15th level, it gains feats normally according to its Hit Dice, as shown on Table 3–2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook.

Natural Weapons: The avoral guardinal has two different types of natural attacks.

On the ground, it has two primary wing attacks, each dealing 1d8 points of damage.

In the air, it has two primary claw attacks, each dealing 1d6 points of damage.

It can't make claw and wing attacks in the same round.

At 6th level, the damage dealt by an avoral's wing attacks increases to 2d6, and the damage dealt by its claw attacks increases to 1d8.

At 11th level, these damage values increase to 2d8 and 2d6.

Wings: An avoral guardinal has powerful feathery wings that allow it to fly at a speed of 30 feet with poor maneuverability.

Its fly speed increases to 40 feet at 3rd level, to 50 feet at 5th level, to 60 feet at 7th level, to 70 feet at 11th level, to 80 feet at 13th level, and to a maximum of 90 feet at 15th level.

Its maneuverability also improves as it gains levels—to average at 5th level and to good at 9th level.

Keen Eyesight: An avoral guardinal has a +2 racial bonus on Spot checks at 1st level.

This racial bonus increases to +4 at 4th level, to +6 at 8th level, and to a maximum of +8 at 12th level.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 2nd level, an avoral guardinal gains damage reduction 1/evil or silver.

The avoral's damage reduction increases by 1 at 4th, 6th, 8th, 10th, and 12th level.

At 14th level, it increases to DR 8/evil or silver, and at 15th level to DR 10/evil or silver.

Resistance to Electricity (Ex): A 2nd-level avoral guardinal has resistance to electricity 5.

This resistance increases to 10 at 6th level and to 20 at 10th level.

At 14th level, an avoral guardinal gains immunity to electricity.

Spell-Like Abilities (Sp): At 2nd level, an avoral guardinal gains the following spell-like abilities: At will—detect magic, light; 3/day—command, magic missile.

Caster level 1st.

A 5th-level avoral guardinal's list of spell-like abilities changes to the following: At will—command, detect magic, light, magic missile; 3/day—aid, blur (self only), gust of wind.

Caster level 3rd.

A 9th-level avoral guardinal's list of spell-like abilities changes to the following: At will—aid, blur (self only), command, detect magic, gust of wind, light, magic missile;

3/day—hold person, magic circle against evil (self only), see invisibility.

Caster level 5th.

A 13th-level avoral guardinal's list of spell-like abilities changes to the following: At will—aid, blur (self only), command, detect magic, gust of wind, hold person, light, magic missile, magic circle against evil (self only), see invisibility; 3/day—dimension door, dispel magic, lightning bolt.

Caster level 7th.

A 15th-level avoral guardinal's list of spell-like abilities changes to the following: At will—aid, blur (self only), command, detect magic, dimension door, dispel magic, gust of wind, hold person, light, magic circle against evil (self only), magic missile, see invisibility; 3/day—lightning bolt.

Caster level 8th.

Petrification Immunity (Ex): At 3rd level, an avoral guardinal gains a +4 bonus on saves against petrification.

At 9th level, an avoral gains immunity to petrification.

Poison Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, an avoral guardinal has a +4 bonus on saves against poison.

Speak with Animals (Su): At 4th level, an avoral gains the ability to use speak with animals as a free action (caster level 8th).

Lay on Hands (Su): This ability, gained at 5th level, functions as the paladin class feature, except that each day, an avoral guardinal can heal an amount of damage equal to his full normal hit points.

Resistance to Cold and Sonic (Ex): An avoral guardinal gains resistance to cold 5 and sonic 5 at 7th level.

These resistances improve to 10 at 11th level.

Fear Aura (Su): Once per day, a 13th-level avoral guardinal can create an aura of fear in a 20-foot radius.

It is otherwise identical to fear from an 8th-level caster (save DC 14 + Cha modifier).

True Seeing (Su): At 15th level, an avoral guardinal gains the ability to see through illusions, invisibility, and the like. This ability is identical to true seeing (caster level 14th), except that it has personal range and the avoral must concentrate for 1 round before it takes effect.

Thereafter, the ability remains in effect as long as the avoral concentrates on it.

CHAIN DEVIL

Outsider (Evil, Extraplanar, Lawful) Truly lawful evil, chain devils (also called kytons) fit into the hierarchy of hell as fierce enforcers and disciplinarians.

They usually fall under the command of higher-echelon bone devils who serve as the police force of Baator. Some chain devils travel the planes, spreading their particular brand of evil and tyranny throughout the multiverse.

In their native environment of the Nine Hells of Baator, chain devils wrap themselves in chains instead of wearing clothing.

If actively adventuring elsewhere, they usually deign to wear clothing under their chains.

The chains give them a +4 armor bonus, the equivalent of a chain shirt.

They may wear other armor, in which case they gain whichever armor bonus is higher, but they are not naturally proficient with it.

CHAIN DEVIL RACIAL TRAITS

- +2 Strength, -4 Intelligence.
- Outsider: Chain devils are native to The Nine Hells of Baator, and thus have the outsider type. They gain the extraplanar subtype when not on Baator. They are not subject to spells or effects that affect only humanoids, such as charm person and dominate person.
- Medium: As Medium creatures, chain devils have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.
- A chain devil's base land speed is 30 feet.
- Chain devils have darkvision out to 60 feet.
- Skills: Chain devils have a +8 racial bonus on Craft checks involving metalwork.
- Automatic Languages: Infernal and Common.
- Favored Class: Chain devil.

The best multiclassing choice for a kyton is rogue, fighter, or barbarian.

- Level adjustment: A chain devil that has progressed through its monster class has 8 Hit Dice and a level adjustment of +6, making it effectively a 14th-level character.

CLASS SKILLS

The chain devil's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (any involving metalwork) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the chain devil monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Chain devils are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and all chains.

A chain devil's natural weapons, as well as any weapons it wields, are treated as evil-aligned and lawful-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Spiked Chains: Chain devils treat spiked chains as primary natural weapons and can make two attacks per round with them.

Each attack uses the kyton's full Strength bonus.

Feats: A chain devil receives one feat at 1st level and additional feats at 4th and 10th level.

After 14th level, it gains feats normally according to its Hit Dice, as shown on Table 3-2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook.

Dancing Chains (Su): A chain devil's most awesome attack is its ability to control up to four chains within 20 feet as a standard action, making the chains dance or move as it wishes.

At 2nd level, a chain devil can control only one chain.

It gains additional chains at 4th, 8th, and 12th level.

In addition, a chain devil can increase these chains' length by up to 15 feet and cause them to sprout razor-edged barbs. These chains attack as effectively as the devil itself.

If a chain is in another creature's possession, the creature can attempt a DC 15 Will save to break the chain devil's power over that chain.

If the save is successful, the kyton cannot attempt to control that particular chain again for 24 hours or until the chain leaves the creature's possession.

A chain devil can climb chains it controls at its normal land speed without making Climb checks.

Unnerving Gaze (Su): Range 30 feet, Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 Hit Dice + Cha modifier) negates.

A chain devil can make its face resemble one of an opponent's departed loved ones or bitter enemies.

Those who fail their saves take a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 1d3 rounds.

Regeneration (Ex): Chain devils take normal damage from silver weapons, good-aligned weapons, and spells or effects with the good descriptor.

A chain devil that loses a piece of its body regrows it in 2d6×10 minutes.

Holding the severed member against the stump enables it to reattach instantly.

HOUND ARCHON

Outsider (Archon, Extraplanar, Good, Lawful) Hound archons travel throughout the Upper Planes, serving the greater powers as protectors and defenders against evil. Hound archons serve powerful masters, but their duties often allow them to visit other planes and interact with other creatures.

Their broad shoulders and meaty fists mark hound archons as able combatants.

Likewise, their strong legs indicate that fleeing enemies won't get very far.

HOUND ARCHON RACIAL TRAITS

Hound archons have the following racial abilities and characteristics.

- Outsider: Hound archons are native to the Seven Mounting Heavens of Celestia, and thus have the outsider type.

They gain the extraplanar subtype when not on Celestia. They are not subject to spells or effects that affect only humanoids, such as charm person and dominate person.

- Medium: As Medium creatures, hound archons have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

- A hound archon's base land speed is 40 feet.

- Hound archons have darkvision out to 60 feet and low-light vision.

- Bite (Ex): A hound archon has one bite attack that is a natural weapon and deals damage as indicated on Table 1-8 plus its Strength bonus.

Hound archons can bite in addition to making a weapon attack (they prefer greatswords) and can bite when in canine form (see below).

- Slam (Ex): A hound archon has one secondary slam attack that is a natural weapon and deals damage as indicated on Table 1-8 plus 1/2 its Strength bonus.

A hound archon can use its slam in addition to its bite if it is not wielding a weapon.

- Natural Armor: A hound archon has +2 natural armor at 1st level.

This bonus increases as the creature gains higher levels, as shown on Table 1-8.

- Hound archons have a +4 racial bonus on saves against poison.
- Resistance to electricity 5: A hound archon has resistance to electricity that improves as the creature gains higher levels.

- Skills: While in canine form (an ability a hound archon gains at higher levels), a hound archon has a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide and Survival checks.

- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Draconic, Infernal, Sylvan.

- Favored Class: Hound archon.

The best multiclass choices for a hound archon are fighter and paladin.

- Level adjustment: A hound archon that has progressed through its monster class has 6 Hit Dice and a level adjustment of +5, making it effectively an 11th-level character.

CLASS SKILLS

The hound archon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hound archon monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hound archons are proficient with all simple and martial weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or shield.

Feats: A hound archon gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 3-2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook. A hound archon also gains bonus feats at 1st, 3rd, and 9th level.

Spell-Like Abilities: Beginning at 2nd level, a hound archon gains spell-like abilities (aid, continual flame, detect evil, dispel magic, and message).

Each is usable the number of times per day indicated on Table 1-8.

The archon's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a hound archon can speak with any creature that has a language, as the tongues spell cast by a 14th-level cleric.

This ability is always active unless the hound archon chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the hound archon can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon of 5th level or higher can assume any canine form of Small to Large size.

While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses.

For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

Scent (Ex): At 5th level, a hound archon gains the scent ability.

See page 314 of the Monster Manual for details.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds hound archons of 7th level or higher that fight or get angry.

Any hostile creature within a 20-foot radius of a hound archon must succeed on a Will save (DC 12 + 1/2 archon's Hit Dice from class levels + archon's Cha modifier) to resist its effects.

Those who fail take a -2 penalty on attack rolls, Armor Class, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura.

A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Greater Teleport (Su): Beginning at 8th level, a hound archon can teleport the number of times per day indicated on Table 1-8, as the greater teleport spell cast by a 14th-level sorcerer.

It can transport only itself and up to 50 pounds of objects.

Spell Resistance (Ex): At 8th level, a hound archon gains spell resistance 13.

Subsequently, a hound archon's spell resistance increases by 1 each time it gains an additional level in hound archon.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 9th level, a hound archon gains damage reduction 5/evil.

This damage reduction improves to 10/evil at 11th level.

Immunities (Ex): At 10th level, a hound archon gains immunity to electricity and petrification.

Magic Circle against Evil (Su): This effect continually surrounds a hound archon of 11th level, as the spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the hound archon's Hit Dice from class levels.

JANNI

Outsider (Native) Formed of all four elements, the jann spend most of their time on the Material Plane.

They tend to favor privacy, but can easily pass as human.

Curious (or outcast) jann often spend time among humans and other races, sometimes even forming bonds of friendship.

The nomadic lifestyle of a janni transfers well to the life of an adventurer, and a courageous janni who undertakes one exciting venture often finds himself pursuing another and another.

JANNI RACIAL TRAITS

Janni characters have the following racial abilities and characteristics.

- +2 Wisdom.
- Outsider: Jann are outsiders native to the Material Plane, and thus have the outsider (native) type.
- They gain the extraplanar subtype when not on the Material Plane.
- They are not subject to spells or effects that affect only humanoids, such as charm person and dominate person.
- Medium: As Medium creatures, jann have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.
- A janni's base land speed is 30 feet.
- Jann have darkvision out to 60 feet.
- Improved Initiative: A janni has Improved Initiative as a bonus feat.
- Automatic Language: Common.
- Bonus Languages: Abyssal, Aquan, Celestial, Ignan, Infernal, Terran.
- Favored Classes: Janni and rogue.

• Level adjustment: A janni that has progressed through its monster class has 6 Hit Dice and a level adjustment of +5, making it effectively an 11th-level character.

CLASS SKILLS

The janni's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the janni monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Janni are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and with light and medium armor.

Feats: A janni receives one feat at 1st level and additional feats at 5th and 11th level.

After 11th level, it gains feats normally according to its Hit Dice, as shown on Table 3–2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook.

Change Size (Sp): Twice per day, a janni of 2nd level or higher can magically change a creature's size.

This effect works just like an enlarge person or reduce person spell (the janni chooses which when using the ability), except that the ability can work on the janni.

The target can make a Fortitude save (DC 12 + janni's Cha modifier) to resist the effect.

This effect is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell.

Natural Armor: At 2nd level, a janni gains a natural armor bonus of +1.

Resistance to Fire (Ex): A 3rd-level janni gains resistance to fire 5.

This resistance increases to 10 at 7th level.

Speak with Animals (Sp): At 3rd level and higher, a janni can use speak with animals three times per day as a 12th-level caster.

Invisibility (Sp): Beginning at 4th level, a janni can use invisibility (self only) once per day as a 12th-level caster. He can use this ability twice per day at 6th level and three times per day at 8th level.

Fly: At 5th level, a janni gains the ability to fly at a speed of 10 feet with perfect maneuverability.

His fly speed increases to 20 feet at 10th level.

Create Food and Water (Sp): A janni of 7th level or higher can use create food and water once per day as a 7th-level caster.

Elemental Endurance (Ex): At 9th level, a janni gains the ability to survive for up to 48 hours on any of the elemental planes of (Air, Earth, Fire, or Water).

Failure to return to the Material Plane before that time expires causes a janni to take 1 point of damage per additional hour spent on the elemental plane, until it dies or returns to the Material Plane.

Plane Shift (Sp): At 9th level and higher, a janni can use plane shift to enter any of the elemental planes, the Astral Plane, or the Material Plane.

This ability works once per day and transports the janni and up to eight other creatures, provided they all link hands with the janni.

It is otherwise similar to the plane shift spell (caster level 13th).

At 11th level, a janni can use this ability at will.

Telepathy (Su): At 10th level and higher, a janni can communicate telepathically with any other creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Ethereal Jaunt (Sp): Once per day, a janni of 11th level can use ethereal jaunt as a spell-like ability lasting for up to 1 hour.

LILLEND

Outsider (Chaotic, Extraplanar, Good) The ultimate aesthete, a lillend values beauty above all.

Lillends appreciate magnificence in every aspect of art. They take pleasure in lovely items such as paintings and sculptures.

More esoteric creations ranging from poetry to flower arranging also please them.

Lillends care intensely about the natural beauty of a forest spring, a windswept mountain, or an unspoiled limestone cave.

Those who take up the life of an adventurer do so to actively protect the treasures of beauty and art, or to punish those who would destroy such things.

LILLEND RACIAL TRAITS

Lillends have the following racial abilities and characteristics.

- +2 Intelligence, +2 Charisma.
- Outsider: Lillends are native to the Heroic Domains of Ysgard, and thus have the outsider type. They gain the extraplanar subtype when not on Ysgard. They are not subject to spells or effects that affect only humanoids, such as charm person and dominate person.

- Large: As Large creatures, lillends have a -1 penalty to Armor Class, a -1 penalty on attack rolls, a -4 penalty on Hide checks, and a $+4$ bonus on grapple checks. Their lifting and carrying limits are double those of a Medium character.
 - A lillend's base land speed is 20 feet. Lillends also have a fly speed of 70 feet with average maneuverability.
 - Lillends have darkvision out to 60 feet.
 - Skills: Lillends have a $+4$ racial bonus on Survival checks.
 - Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, Abyssal, Common.
 - Favored Class: Lillend.
- The best multiclassing choice for a lillend is bard.
- Level adjustment: A lillend that has progressed through its monster class has 7 Hit Dice and a level adjustment of $+6$, making it effectively a 13th-level character.

CLASS SKILLS

The lillend's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the lillend monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Lillends are proficient with all simple and martial weapons.

A lillend's natural weapons, as well as any weapons it wields, are treated as chaotic-aligned and good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Saving Throws: A lillend has a $+5$ racial bonus on saving throws against poison.

Tail Slap: A lillend has a tail slap attack that is a natural weapon dealing the damage indicated on Table 1–10 plus $1/2$ the lillend's Strength bonus.

Feats: A lillend receives one feat at 1st level and additional feats at 4th and 10th level.

After 13th level, it gains feats normally according to its Hit Dice, as shown on Table 3–2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook.

Constrict (Ex): A lillend deals points of damage equal to $2d6$ + its Str modifier with a successful grapple check.

Constricting uses the entire lower portion of its body, so it cannot take any move actions when constricting, though it can still attack with its sword.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a lillend must hit with its tail slap attack.

It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Bard Abilities: A lillend has the spellcasting and bardic music ability of a bard of $1/2$ its class level.

Spell-Like Abilities: As they advance in level, lillends gain certain spell-like abilities, or more uses per day for an existing ability.

At 2nd level, a lillend can use speaking with animals once per day.

At 3rd level, it gains charm person, darkness, and knock once per day each.

At 4th level, darkness and knock become usable twice per day.

At 5th level, a lillend gains speaking with plants once per day and can use darkness and knock three times per day.

At 8th level, it gains hallucinatory terrain three times per day.

RACES OF DESTINY (3.5)

DOPPELGANGER

Scholars have debated for centuries about the origin of the doppelgangers.

Shadowy, mysterious, and enigmatic, these shapeshifters learned long ago how to integrate themselves into human society.

For this reason, learned men and women believe that doppelgangers were once human.

How doppelgangers gained their unique abilities is unknown, even to themselves.

Doppelgangers do not have a society of their own. They fill any desire for companionship and social interaction through their association with other races.

Although doppelgangers act independently, following their own motivations and goals, rumors persist of a “secret cabal” of elder doppelgangers who desire nothing less than control of the world.

Little evidence corroborates these rumors, which may have been perpetuated by the doppelgangers themselves to lend even more mystery to their race's reputation.

Personality: Discerning a doppelganger's true personality is akin to grasping quicksilver, although certain traits seem to be common among members of the race.

In their natural form, doppelgangers are cold, mysterious, and aloof, and almost never give any indication what they are actually feeling or thinking.

Doppelgangers are natural liars, and even allies wonder at the validity of a doppelganger's acknowledgment of an emotional state.

While in disguise, doppelgangers behave according to the personality of the mimicked humanoid.

Because they can only imitate a creature's physical form, not emotional or psychological qualities, doppelgangers watch their quarry from afar for as long as possible, getting every idiosyncrasy, nuance, and personality trait down pat before assuming the creature's form.

Doppelgangers feel the same basic desires as members of any other race, but more than anything, they wish to simply “belong” to a group, even if for just a short while.

Doppelgangers use their abilities as a test of their own cunning and superiority, and they believe that they succeed only when they remain completely unnoticed by the race they are trying to mimic.

Clinically curious, doppelgangers seek to understand a race by becoming part of that race for a while, before moving on to infiltrate another, more challenging group.

Physical Description: In their natural form, doppelgangers are gaunt, gray-skinned, genderless humanoids with long, gangly limbs, standing around 5-1/2 feet tall and weighing about 150 pounds.

Doppelganger bodies are slender and frail-looking, although this appearance belies their hardy constitution and natural agility.

Their heads are large in proportion to the rest of their bodies, and their faces are featureless except for two large, octopoidlike eyes.

Doppelgangers are rarely seen in their true form, and spend most of their time mimicking other humanoids.

A doppelganger can only duplicate the appearance of a humanoid and does not gain any special abilities of a mimicked race, such as an elf's low-light vision.

Its ability to duplicate another form is remarkable, and it can copy a humanoid form to the minutest detail.

Doppelgangers have an incredible memory when it comes to retaining forms, and a doppelganger can remember any shape it has mimicked, even if it was years in the past.

Relations: Either despite or because of their shapeshifting nature, doppelgangers do not have strong relations with other races.

They view all humanoid races with the same level of neutrality, heavily influenced by contempt.

Doppelgangers consider themselves superior to other humanoid races, although they rarely espouse this viewpoint while dealing with the races in question.

They see humanoids as mere pawns to be deceived and used in whatever manner seems necessary at the time.

On the other hand, most doppelgangers do not have any preconceived notions about a race—they all have their positive and negative qualities, and none are any better or worse in comparison (except for doppelgangers themselves, of course).

In turn, other races are extremely suspicious of a creature that can assume their own forms and blend in with impunity.

In some places, doppelgangers have thoroughly infiltrated positions of authority, using their newfound power in whatever way they see fit.

When a doppelganger is discovered, pogroms and witch-hunts inevitably follow, as the panicked populace accuses anyone and everyone of being a shapeshifter.

Alignment: Because they live according to the borrowed morals and ethics of other races, doppelgangers are usually neutral in alignment, with no strong opinions on the properties of good, evil, law, or chaos.

Doppelgangers regularly “portray” creatures of different alignments, although their psyches are amazingly toughened to resist any permanent shift from acting in such a manner.

They retain their own objectivity regardless of the intensity of emotions that they exhibit on the surface.

On occasion, doppelgangers stray from the racial norm of neutrality—and their inclination toward duplicity and deceit means that most of these individuals fall to evil.

Doppelganger Lands: Doppelgangers have no lands that they openly declare as their own.

However, they consider all the lands of the other races free for the taking.

Doppelgangers with a longing for power simply overthrow an authority figure and assume his or her place instead of trying to garner power from the ground up.

Religion: Doppelgangers lack religious conviction.

They understand why a race would worship a higher being, although they do not feel much desire to propitiate a deity.

For this reason, doppelganger clerics are exceedingly rare, despite the fact that doppelgangers occasionally masquerade as members of the clergy for one church or another.

Of all the deities, Boccob, the Uncaring God of Magic, is most likely to hold a doppelganger's attention, if only because of his neutral attitude.

Language: Doppelgangers have no language of their own and communicate among themselves by means of their detect thoughts ability.

Doppelgangers learn a multitude of languages to lend credence to their disguises.

Their mastery of shapechanging carries over to speech, and they can imitate particular accents with ease.

Names: To a doppelganger, a name is just another “prop” to be used in its disguise.

A doppelganger uses hundreds of names throughout its lifetime, although none of those names can truly be said to “belong” to that individual.

Still, each doppelganger does have a single, unique name, which is almost never used.

Doppelganger names are derived from an ancient human language that died millennia ago, giving further weight to the theory that they descended from human origins.

Since doppelgangers lack distinct gender, there are no male or female variations in naming.

Doppelganger Names: Ansilikus, Melanuxor, Sanjakilar, Tepilmurae, Verenkilar, Xestilophon.

Adventurers: Naturally stealthy and deceptive, doppelganger adventurers favor the rogue class.

Doppelganger bards number a close second.

Those who spend a great deal of time mimicking warriors become fighters or rangers.

As mentioned above, doppelganger clerics are notoriously rare, and druids even more so, mainly because doppelgangers are so focused on social intricacies that they barely think about the natural world.

Doppelganger paladins are one in a million, and are viewed with considerable suspicion by the rest of their race.

DOPPELGANGER RACIAL TRAITS

- +2 Strength, +2 Dexterity, +2 Constitution, +2 Intelligence, +4 Wisdom, +2 Charisma: Doppelgangers have improved their minds and bodies through centuries of mimicking humanoid forms.
- Monstrous Humanoid (Shapechanger): Doppelgangers are monstrous humanoids with the shapechanger subtype. They retain this type and subtype regardless of any humanoid form they may assume.
- Medium: As Medium creatures, doppelgangers have no special bonuses or penalties due to size.
- Doppelganger base land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Doppelgangers can see in the dark out to 60 feet.
Darkvision is black and white only, but it is otherwise like normal sight, and doppelgangers can function just fine with no light at all.
- Racial Hit Dice: A doppelganger begins with four levels of monstrous humanoid, which provide 4d8 Hit Dice, a base attack bonus of +4, and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +1, Ref +4, and Will +4
- Racial Skills: A doppelganger's monstrous humanoid levels give it skill points equal to $7 \times (2 + \text{Int modifier})$. Its class skills are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).
- Racial Feats: A doppelganger's monstrous humanoid levels give it two feats.
- +4 natural armor bonus: Doppelganger skin is resilient and tough.
- +4 racial bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks: Doppelgangers have a talent for deception.

When using its change shape ability, a doppelganger gets an additional +10 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks.

If it can read an opponent's mind, it gets a further +4 circumstance bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks.

• Detect Thoughts (Su): A doppelganger uses detect thoughts as the spell (caster level 18th; Will DC 13 negates).

It can suppress or resume this ability as a free action.

• Change Shape (Su): A doppelganger can assume the shape of any Small or Medium humanoid.

In humanoid form, the doppelganger loses its natural attacks.

A doppelganger can remain in its humanoid form until it chooses to assume a new one.

A change in form cannot be dispelled, but a doppelganger reverts to its natural form when killed.

A true seeing spell or ability reveals its natural form.

• Immunities: A doppelganger is immune to sleep and charm effects.

• Automatic Language: Common.

Bonus Languages: Auran, Dwarven, Elven, Gnome, Halfling, Giant, and Terran.

• Favored Class: Rogue.

A multiclass doppelganger's rogue class does not count when determining whether it takes an experience point penalty for multiclassing.

• Level adjustment: +4.

DOPPELGANGER MONSTER CLASS

Monstrous Humanoid (Shapechanger) If you want to play a doppelganger at 1st level, you can use the doppelganger monster class.

To use the monster class, generate your character with the racial traits given below (rather than the doppelganger racial traits presented above), and then take levels in the doppelganger class as you would levels of other classes.

For more information on monster classes, see the Monster Classes section at the beginning of this chapter.

As the ultimate infiltrators and spies, doppelgangers may seem like the perfect choice for players who enjoy stealthy and deceptive characters.

Extremely well rounded and adaptable with excellent natural armor, doppelgangers excel at any class, although their lack of moral or ethical conviction hinders them from becoming clerics or paladins.

A doppelganger begins play with relatively few abilities: immunity to sleep and charm effects, a Constitution bonus, and two good saving throws.

As it advances in level, a doppelganger learns how to detect thoughts, receives increases in its ability scores, and ultimately acquires the change shape ability that defines the race.

This ability comes to them slowly, however, and young doppelgangers keep a low profile until they reach their full strength.

RACIAL TRAITS AT 1ST LEVEL

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Constitution. Even young doppelgangers are exceptionally hardy.
- Medium: As Medium creatures, doppelgangers have no special bonuses or penalties due to size.
- Special: Doppelganger base land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Doppelgangers can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Darkvision is black and white only, but it is otherwise like normal sight, and doppelgangers can function just fine with no light at all.

- Immunity to sleep and charm effects
- Automatic Language: Common.

CLASS SKILLS

A doppelganger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the doppelganger monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Doppelgangers are proficient with all simple weapons, but have no proficiency with any armor or shield.

Natural Armor: A doppelganger gains a +1 natural armor bonus at 2nd level.

This bonus improves by 1 every two levels thereafter, up to +4 at 8th level.

Detect Thoughts (Su): At 2nd level, a doppelganger can detect thoughts, as the spell (caster level 18th; Will DC 10 negates).

Change Shape (Su): At 3rd level, a doppelganger becomes able to assume the shape of any Small or Medium humanoid.

A doppelganger can change its shape once per day at 3rd level (but can revert to its normal form at any time), three times per day at 5th level, and an unlimited number of times per day at 8th level.

In humanoid form, a doppelganger loses its natural attacks. A doppelganger can remain in its humanoid form until it chooses to assume a new one.

A change in form cannot be dispelled, but a doppelganger reverts to its natural form when killed.

A true seeing spell or ability reveals its natural form.

SKULK

Once members of an underprivileged caste of an ancient empire, the humans who would become skulks withdrew from the world through a magical ceremony that solidified their "untouchable" status.

The ritual granted them natural camouflage, allowing skulks to blend in perfectly with their surroundings. Skulks gather in small bands within or near human communities.

When night falls, they engage in raids that result in bloodshed as the skulks' innate hatred for humans manifests itself in murderous rage.

They use ambush, deception, and superior numbers to overwhelm their victims.

Personality: Skulks are angry, violent creatures who harbor jealous hatred for all beings more fortunate than them (which includes just about everyone).

They have a powerful self-preservation instinct, often mistaken for cowardice, that keeps them to the shadows. They have little regard even for their own people, and skulk mothers have been known to abandon their own young if it meant protecting their own skin.

Physical Description: Skulks stand between 5 feet and 6 feet tall and weigh 120 to 180 pounds.

They are completely hairless and wear little or no clothing. It is difficult to determine, at first glance, whether a skulk is male or female.

Their skin is usually dull gray, but an individual can change its color on a whim, from a subdued brown to a lurid red or yellow.

Skulks are capable of assuming any "natural" human flesh tone to better blend in.

They have pupilless blue eyes, regardless of their skin coloration.

Relations: Skulks typically hate all humanoid races, but display particular viciousness toward their human forebears.

Even those skulks who aren't evil don't usually trust other races, remaining on the outskirts of civilization rather than trying to integrate themselves.

Alignment: Naturally violent and cruel, skulks tend toward chaos and evil, though a few manage to avoid these tendencies.

Good skulks are outcasts even among their own people, and lawful skulks are extraordinarily rare (but can become leaders among their race).

Skulk Lands: Skulks have no lands of their own, instead living near or within human towns and cities.

They are parasitic in nature, living off what they can scrounge or steal.

Particularly bold skulks even live among humans for short periods of time, using disguise and subterfuge to survive.

Religion: Skulks typically worship deities devoted to evil, deception, treachery, and murder.

Nerull and Vecna find numerous worshipers among the skulks.

Nonevil skulks venerate deities such as Boccob or Olidammara.

Their most revered deity is the god Syrul, a neutral evil god of lies, deceit, treachery, and false promises.

Her domains are Evil, Knowledge, and Trickery, and her favored weapon is the dagger.

Language: Skulks speak a bastardized version of Common, rife with words and concepts from long-dead human cultures.

They can understand speakers of Common, and vice versa.

Names: Skulk names are typically simple, one- or two-syllable monikers.

They avoid harsh, sibilant sounds (such as f, s, or x), the better to signal their allies quietly.

Skulks do not recognize any ties to family or clan, and thus rarely use anything more than a single name.

Male Names: Hadan, Krem, Lar, Lorrid, Mullev.

Female Names: Adal, Ev, Ilen, Olleg, Udge.

Adventurers: Skulks who are brave enough to leave their people are rare, but can prove effective adventurers.

Skulk adventurers, however, are outcasts from their coterie, forced into a life of danger by necessity rather than choice.

In any case, skulk adventurers are most often rogues, fighters, or barbarians.

Skulk bards who overcome the race's naturally insensitive personality can become exceptional spies.

SKULK RACIAL TRAITS

- +4 Dexterity, -2 Wisdom, -4 Charisma: Skulks are agile and graceful, but have weak wills and subdued personalities.
 - Humanoid (human): Skulks are humanoid creatures with the human subtype.
 - Medium: As Medium creatures, skulks have no special bonuses or penalties due to size.
 - Skulk base land speed is 30 feet.
 - Racial Hit Dice: A skulk begins with two levels of humanoid, which provide 2d8 Hit Dice, a base attack bonus of +1, and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +0, Ref +3, and Will +0.
 - Racial Skills: A skulk's humanoid levels give it skill points equal to $5 \times (2 + \text{Int modifier})$.
- Its class skills are Hide (Dex) and Move Silently (Dex).
- Racial Feats: A skulk's humanoid levels give it one feat.
 - +8 racial bonus on Move Silently checks and a +15 racial bonus on Hide checks: Skulks excel at keeping to the shadows.

These bonuses apply only when a skulk is wearing light armor or no armor.

- Innate Nondetection (Su): Skulks are difficult to detect by divination spells such as clairaudience/clairvoyance, locate creature, detect spells, and items such as a crystal ball.

If a divination is attempted upon a skulk, the caster of the divination must succeed on a DC 20 caster level check.

- Peerless Camouflage (Ex): Skulks can move at full speed (and can even run) while hiding, taking no penalties on Hide checks due to movement.

- Trackless Path (Ex): The DC of any Survival check to follow the trail of a skulk is increased by 10.

- Automatic Language: Common.

Bonus Languages: Dwarven, Elven, Gnome, Goblin, Halfling, and Orc.

- Favored Class: Rogue.

A multiclass skulk's rogue class does not count when determining whether he takes an experience point penalty for multiclassing.

- Level adjustment +1.

SKULK MONSTER CLASS

Humanoid (Human) If you want to play a skulk at 1st level, you can use the skulk monster class.

To use the monster class, generate your character with the racial traits given below (rather than the skulk racial traits presented above), and then take levels in the skulk class as you would levels of other classes.

For more information on monster classes, see the Monster Classes section at the beginning of this chapter.

Skulks are masters of stealth, relying on superior camouflage and other talents to sneak up on victims.

They make excellent burglars, spies, and, of course, assassins.

They lack versatility, but make up for that with unparalleled excellence at defying detection.

Skulks begin play with none of their extraordinary or supernatural abilities, but are quite capable at sneaking already.

They soon master the race's innate talents of stealth and camouflage, reaching full strength by 3rd level.

RACIAL TRAITS AT 1ST LEVEL

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dexterity, -2 Wisdom, -4 Charisma.
- Skulks are agile and graceful, but have weak wills and subdued personalities.
- Speed: Skulk base land speed is 30 feet.
 - Medium: As Medium creatures, skulks have no special bonuses or penalties due to size.
 - +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks and +5 racial bonus on Hide checks: Skulks excel at keeping to the shadows.
- These bonuses apply only when a skulk is wearing light armor or no armor.
- Automatic Language: Common.

CLASS SKILLS

The skulk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Hide (Dex) and Move Silently (Dex).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the skulk monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Skulks are proficient with all simple weapons, but have no proficiency with any armor or shield.

Racial Skill Bonus: A skulk's racial bonus on Move Silently checks improves to +6 at 2nd level and to +8 at 3rd level.

A skulk's racial bonus on Hide checks improves to +10 at 2nd level and to +15 at 3rd level.

Trackless Path (Ex): Beginning when a skulk reaches 2nd level, the DC of any Survival check to follow his trail is increased by 10.

Innate Nondetection (Su): A skulk of 3rd level or higher is difficult to detect by divination spells such as clairaudience/clairvoyance, locate creature, detect spells, and items such as a crystal ball.

If a divination is attempted upon the skulk, the caster of the divination must succeed on a DC 20 caster level check.

Peerless Camouflage (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a skulk can move at full speed (and can even run) while hiding, taking no penalties on Hide checks due to movement.

RACES OF STONE (3.5)

FERAL GARGUN

A small offshoot of the goliath race, feral garguns tear their livelihood out of the frigid northern regions with tooth and claw.

Feral garguns derive from goliath and giant parentage. These large, savage humanoids fight in quick, furious bursts of energy.

In the barren areas of the north, there is little room for mercy, and the feral garguns have had to learn to be aggressive just to survive.

Even more than their goliath kindred, feral garguns find cities and the trappings of civilization confusing and intimidating.

Although individual feral garguns have found ways to adapt to the cities and villages of other races, the majority prefers the simple, nomadic lifestyle of the far north.

Personality: Fierce, quick-tempered warriors, feral garguns usually assume that the strongest individual is the leader, and they usually settle disagreements with some nonlethal test of strength.

Despite this outward ferocity, feral garguns have a deep sense of personal honor and place a great deal of importance on self-reliance.

Physical Description: A typical feral gargun is as big as a goliath and larger than the largest half-orc.

Most stand between 7 and 8 feet tall and weigh between 280 and 340 pounds.

As with their goliath kindred, there is no appreciable difference in height or weight between male and female feral garguns.

Feral garguns are covered in smooth, thick fur.

This fur ranges in color from white to light gray to dark brown.

Although their bodies are humanoid in shape, the faces of feral garguns are similar to those of bears, and they have longer, narrower faces than other humanoids.

Relations: Most feral garguns have little to no interaction with other humanoid races, so when they do interact, they remain curious and polite, at least by their standards.

They get along well with goliaths, who trade the feral garguns metal weapons and armor when they have them to spare.

Feral garguns also enjoy the company of halflings, valuing their success at maintaining a nomadic lifestyle.

Feral garguns sometimes see halflings as mentor figures because of this attitude—a role that most halflings find both amusing and appealing.

Feral garguns hate giants.

Bigger and better equipped than the feral garguns, a tribe of giants can usually drive a group of feral garguns from an area, or worse, capture and enslave them.

Feral garguns attack and kill giants whenever they have the opportunity.

Alignment: Feral garguns tend toward chaotic alignments, valuing freedom and personal choice very highly.

Even the most organized group of feral garguns is really just a collection of self-sufficient individuals traveling together for safety.

Feral Gargun Lands: Feral garguns roam the plains and tundra of the far north, covering huge areas in the search for food, shelter, and tools.

Small bands of feral garguns join together once or twice a season to share stories, trade tools and goods, and discuss the dangers of the coming season.

Feral gargun lands face constant pressure from groups of giants, orcs, and goblinoids, as well as from powerful individual creatures such as dragons.

When such foes appear, the feral garguns meet and decide as a group whether to move on or to fight.

Religion: Feral garguns pay homage to their own deities, chief among them Galtha, the Mother of Winter.

Galtha teaches her people to survive even in the harshest cold and when food is scarce.

“When you can thrive where others cannot even eke out an existence”, says the teachings of Galtha, “then survival and success are assured”.

Language: Feral garguns speak the goliath language of Gol-Kaa.

Gol-Kaa has only recently been put down in written form using the Dwarven alphabet, and no feral gargun tribe has yet warmed to the concept of a written language.

Individual feral garguns who have moved away from their homelands and adventured among other races have learned to read and write in other languages, but they remain the exceptional few.

Names: All feral garguns remain unnamed until their second birthday.

The infant mortality rate is high in the cold northlands, and leaving infants unnamed makes it easier for the tribe to accept the death of a young feral gargun when it occurs.

On his or her second birthday, a feral gargun is given two names: a first name, and a last name taken from his mother's name.

The last name translates roughly into “son/daughter of [the mother's name]”.

A feral gargun can earn the right to adopt his father's name by performing some great deed.

This deed is never specified beforehand, and only a council of elder feral garguns can make this award.

Few feral garguns actually earn their father's name, and not failing to do so carries no shame or stigma.

Male Names: Agam, Agath, Gethik, Gothan, Thokan.

Female Names: Evva, Maka, Makin, Prenna, Vulla.

Adventurers: Feral gargun adventurers seek to explore the world.

They often wish to learn from other races and cultures, seeking to return to their people with treasure, tools, and knowledge that will make life in the northern reaches easier.

Some feral garguns leave their tribe hoping to perform some deed great enough for them to earn their father's name.

Because of their size and ferocity, feral gargun barbarians easily find a place in adventuring groups, mercenary squads, or other martial organizations.

Feral garguns find the sea fascinating, and the few who learn to make their way as sailors seldom abandon that profession.

FERAL GARGUN RACIAL TRAITS

- +4 Strength, +2 Dexterity, +4 Constitution, -2 Intelligence, -2 Charisma: Feral garguns are strong, tough, and agile, but they are not as smart or personable as their goliath kindred.

- Medium: As Medium creatures, feral garguns have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

- Feral gargun base land speed is 30 feet.

- Darkvision: Feral garguns can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Darkvision is black and white only, but it is otherwise like normal sight, and feral garguns can function just fine with no light at all.

- Powerful Build: The physical stature of a feral gargun lets him function in many ways as if he were one size category larger.

Whenever a feral gargun is subject to a size modifier or special size modifier for an opposed check (such as during grapple checks, bull rush attempts, and trip attempts), the feral gargun is treated as one size larger if doing so is advantageous to him.

A feral gargun is also considered to be one size larger when determining whether a creature's special attacks based on size (such as improved grab or swallow whole) can affect him.

A feral gargun can use weapons designed for a creature one size larger without penalty.

However, his space and reach remain those of a creature of his actual size.

The benefits of this racial trait stack with the effects of powers, abilities, and spells that change the subject's size category.

- Racial Hit Dice: A feral gargun begins with two levels of monstrous humanoid, which provide 2d8 Hit Dice, a base attack bonus of +2, and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +0, Ref +3, and Will +3.

- Racial Skills: A feral gargun's monstrous humanoid levels give him skill points equal to $5 \times (2 + \text{Int modifier})$.

A feral gargun's class skills are Climb, Hide, Jump, Listen, Search, Spot, and Survival.

- Racial Feats: A feral gargun's monstrous humanoid levels give him one feat.

- Mountain Movement: Because feral garguns practically live on the ledges and cliffs of the most forbidding mountains, they are particularly adept at negotiating mountain hazards.

A feral gargun can make standing long jumps and high jumps as if they were running long jumps and high jumps.

He can engage in accelerated climbing (climbing half his speed as a move action) without taking the -5 penalty on the Climb check.

- Acclimated: Feral garguns are automatically acclimated to life at high altitudes.

They don't take the penalties for altitude described in the Mountain Travel section on page 90 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Unlike other denizens of the mountains, feral garguns don't lose their acclimation to high altitude even if they spend months or years at lower elevations.

- Resistance to Cold 5 (Ex): Feral garguns have adapted to the harsh conditions of their homelands, growing a tough hide and thick fur to protect them from low temperatures. They can ignore the first 5 points of cold damage dealt by any attack, whether mundane or magical.

- Natural Armor: A feral gargun's tough hide and thick fur protect him from harm, giving him a +2 natural armor bonus to AC.

- Weapon and Armor Proficiency: As a monstrous humanoid, a feral gargun is proficient with all simple weapons but has no proficiency with any armor or shield.

- Natural Attack: A feral gargun has two claw attacks, each dealing 1d6 points of damage.

A feral gargun armed with a weapon sometimes uses the weapon as its primary attack and a claw as a natural secondary attack (provided it has a claw free to make the secondary attack).

- Goliath Blood: For all effects related to race, a feral gargun is considered a goliath.

Feral garguns, for example, are just as vulnerable to special effects that affect goliaths as their goliath ancestors are, and they can use magic items that are only usable by goliaths.

- Favored Class: Barbarian.

A multiclass feral gargun's barbarian class does not count when determining whether he takes an experience point penalty.

The rough life of the feral garguns in the wild produces many barbarians.

- Level adjustment +2.

FERAL GARGUN MONSTER CLASS

Monstrous Humanoid If you want to play a feral gargun at 1st level, you can use the feral gargun monster class.

To use the monster class, generate your character with the racial traits given below (rather than the normal feral gargun racial traits presented above), and then take levels in the feral gargun monster class as you would levels of other classes.

For more information on monster classes, see the Monster Classes section at the beginning of this chapter or Savage Species.

Feral garguns sacrifice a few Hit Dice (and therefore base attack bonus, feat, and skill point accrual) in exchange for bonuses to Strength and Constitution, the powerful build ability, and natural armor.

Because of these bonuses, a high-level feral gargun barbarian or ranger is a formidable foe.

Dungeon Masters can also use the feral gargun monster class to create less powerful feral garguns to use as low-level antagonists or young NPCs for their campaigns.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Strength, -2 Intelligence, -2 Charisma.

Feral garguns are strong, but they are uncultured and not very smart.

- Medium: As Medium creatures, feral garguns have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.
- Speed: Feral gargun base land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Feral garguns can see in the dark out to 60 feet.
- Goliath Blood: For all effects related to race, a feral gargun is considered a goliath.
- Mountain Movement: Feral garguns can make standing long jumps and high jumps as if they were running long jumps and high jumps. They can engage in accelerated climbing (climbing half their speed as a move action) without taking the –5 penalty on the Climb check.
- Resistance to Cold 5 (Ex): Feral garguns have resistance to cold 5.

CLASS SKILLS

The feral gargun's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

STONECHILD

Born of a union of mortal and elemental, a stonechild is a hardy entity grounded in soil and stone and gifted with incredible strength, fortitude, and a keen intellect. Although they are not the outcasts that half-orcs often are, stonechildren are rarely raised among others of their kind. Most stonechildren grow to maturity while living in dwarf or human communities, and those few who stay on the Material Plane often wander alone, taking up the mantle of adventurer.

Stonechildren are most comfortable in and under the mountains; because of this preference, they usually end their wandering by settling with a community of dwarves. As they grow older, even the most adventurous stonechildren become more and more likely to seek a way to the Elemental Plane of Earth and surround themselves with others of their kind.

Personality: Stonechildren relish challenges and enjoy proving their own strength.

They admire those who make their own way in life, and they feel a sense of camaraderie with the earth itself. Even when traveling alone through dangerous areas, stonechildren remain solid and sensible.

Stonechildren keep their feelings hidden behind a slow practicality, and when they find someone's company unpleasant they usually just leave quietly.

Stonechildren are stalwart in the face of adversity, whether it takes the form of the physical dangers of combat or the long solitude of life as a wanderer.

Physical Description: With rough, gray skin and a stony bulk, a stonechild looks like a powerful human made out of stone.

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the feral gargun monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A feral gargun is proficient with all simple weapons, but has no proficiency with any armor or shield.

Acclimated: Beginning at 2nd level, feral garguns become acclimated to life at high altitude.

They don't take the penalties for altitude described on page 90 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Unlike other denizens of the mountains, feral garguns don't lose their acclimation to high altitude even if they spend months or years at lower elevations.

Powerful Build: From 3rd level on, feral garguns grow large enough that, although they are Medium creatures, they are treated as Large for many purposes.

See the Powerful Build racial trait described above for details.

Stonechildren have tremendous physical strength and fortitude, and can easily overpower most humanoids. Stonechildren do not have hair, and their eyes are limited to shades of gray, black, or the occasional gemlike hue (usually a muted blue or green).

Although their tough hide resembles stone, they are outsiders, not elementals.

Stonechildren grow nearly 7 feet tall, and they can easily weigh more than 300 pounds.

Relations: Tough, reliable, and focused on the utilitarian, stonechildren get along with most races.

Stonechildren are closer to dwarves than any other race, and they often settle in dwarf communities for a time.

Many humans and dwarves seek to emulate the strength and silence of the stonechildren, but their strength and practicality can seem alien to elves and gnomes.

Of the few stonechildren who do not live on the Elemental Plane of Earth, most are wanderers, and as such they enjoy the company of halflings.

For their part, halflings readily acknowledge the value of having a large, physically powerful stonechild with their troupe.

On the other hand, stone children sometimes have a difficult time understanding the elf mind-set.

Like stonechildren, elves are close to nature, but elves share none of the stonechildren's connection to stone and the power of the earth, making them seem flighty and unfocused.

Alignment: Stonechildren make their own way in life, keeping a balance between following the rules and laws of others and adhering to their own sense of honor.

This outlook leads many stonechildren to adopt an attitude of neutrality.

Although they make their own choices, stonechildren have a deep love of the earth and a compassion for others. In their own way, stonechildren are workers for the cause of good, quietly protecting others when they can. Stonechild Lands: Stonechildren do not have lands of their own on the Material Plane.

Even on the Elemental Plane of Earth, their numbers are sparse, but they occasionally form permanent communities along with elementals and other earth creatures.

On the Elemental Plane of Earth, stonechildren build secure dwellings in the sides of great caverns, usually with the help of powerful elementals.

Religion: Because they often wander alone, stonechildren do not have any racial religion.

Most stone children adopt the religion of their mortal parent or the community in which they grew up, making a wide array of deities the norm for any group of stonechildren.

Although Moradin the Soul Forger is primarily seen as the deity of the dwarves, stonechildren also venerate his powers over stone, his solid strength, and his prodigious skills at the forge.

More stonechildren revere Moradin than any other single deity, but even his worshipers fall far short of constituting a majority.

Language: Stonechildren speak both Terran and Common, but they prefer Terran.

They are more intelligent than many humanoids, and they pick up languages readily.

Almost all stonechildren learn Dwarven early in their life, and many master other languages as well.

Stonechildren do not have a literature of their own, although many individual members of the race have kept records and stories of their travels.

Names: Stonechildren share some of the naming conventions that dwarves have, but they are far less rigid about the process.

Whereas dwarf names belong to the family and clan, stonechildren bond closely to their names, making them intensely personal things.

Stonechildren also do not follow the strict naming traditions of dwarves, and they create new names with each new generation.

Some of their typical names derive from the Common names for different types of stone.

Male Names: Beltan, Fartach, Ingot, Ored, Slate.

Female Names: Berna, Kihild, Merna, Shale, Zeea.

Family Names: Angaran, Kar-Gulduk, Pal-Mituk, Raskanik, Rendark.

Adventurers: Stonechild adventurers usually travel in search of something they desire.

For some, this goal is material wealth; for others, it is a chance to study with famed craftsmen.

Some want to seek out more of their kind on the Material Plane, while others search for new ways to test themselves in physical combat.

Stonechildren are tough and ready for whatever comes their way, and many stonechildren go off on adventures at least once or twice in their lives.

STONECHILD RACIAL TRAITS

- +8 Strength, +8 Constitution, +2 Intelligence, -2 Charisma.
- Size: As Medium creatures, stone children have no special bonuses or penalties due to size.

- A stonechild's base land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Stonechildren can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Darkvision is black and white only, but it is otherwise like normal sight, and stonechildren can function just fine with no light at all.

- Racial Hit Dice: A stonechild begins with two levels of outsider, which provide her with 2d8 Hit Dice, a base attack bonus of +2, and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +3, Ref +3, and Will +3.

- Racial Skills: A stonechild's outsider levels give her skill points equal to $5 \times (8 + \text{Int modifier})$.

Their class skills are Appraise, Climb, Craft (stoneworking), Intimidate, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Search, Spot, and Survival.

- Racial Feats: A stonechild's outsider levels give her one feat.

In addition, stonechildren get Blind-Fight as a bonus feat.

- Weapon and Armor Proficiency: As an outsider, a stonechild is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields (except tower shields).

- Natural Armor: A stonechild's tough hide protects her from harm, giving her a +4 natural armor bonus to Armor Class.

- Immunity to Acid and Poison: Stonechildren take no damage and suffer no ill effects from acid or poison.

- Magic Stone (Sp): Three times per day, a stonechild can use a magic stone effect, as the spell (caster level 3rd).

- Automatic Languages: Common and Terran. Bonus Languages: Celestial, Dwarven, Ignan.

- Favored Class: Fighter.

- Level adjustment +4.

STONECHILD MONSTER CLASS

Outsider (Earth, Extraplanar) If you want to play a stonechild at 1st level, you can use the stonechild monster class.

To use the monster class, generate your character with the racial traits given below (rather than the normal stonechild racial traits presented above), and then take levels in the stonechild monster class as you would levels of other classes.

For more information on monster classes, see the Monster Classes section at the beginning of this chapter or Savage Species.

Stonechildren sacrifice a few Hit Dice (and therefore base attack bonus, feat, and skill point accrual) in exchange for tremendous bonuses to their Strength, Constitution, and natural armor.

Because of these benefits, a high-level stonechild barbarian, fighter, or ranger is a formidable foe.

Dungeon Masters can also use the stonechild monster class to create less powerful stonechildren for use as low-level antagonists or young NPCs for their campaigns.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Constitution, +2 Intelligence, -2 Charisma.

Stonechildren are tough and smart, but they seem strange and alien to other races.

- Medium: As Medium creatures, stonechildren have no special bonuses or penalties due to their size.

- Speed: Stonechild base land speed is 30 feet.

- Darkvision: Stonechildren can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

• Immunity to Acid and Poison: Stonechildren take no damage and suffer no ill effects from acid or poison.

CLASS SKILLS

The stonechild's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Climb (Str), Craft (stoneworking) (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stonechild monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A stonechild is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields (except tower shields).

Magic Stone (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, stonechildren can use a magic stone effect once per day (caster level 3rd).

At 5th level, this ability is usable twice per day, and at 6th level it is usable three times per day.

Blind-Fight: Stonechildren get Blind-Fight as a bonus feat at 4th level.

RACES OF THE DRAGON (3.5)

DRACONIC

Normally, you can't begin with a 1st-level draconic or half-dragon character because of the level adjustments applied by these templates.

With your DM's permission, however, you can use the draconic racial class presented here to begin play as a draconic or half-dragon character, though you don't gain the full complement of abilities granted by the template until you are more experienced.

In essence, you are applying the level adjustment to your character over time, increasing his effective character level (ECL) gradually rather than all at once.

To use this option, you must declare when creating your character that you are creating a draconic character. (You don't have to decide yet whether you'll eventually be using the draconic template or the half-dragon template). You gain the normal racial traits for your base race and the normal class features for a typical 1st-level character of your chosen class.

In addition, you begin play with a +2 racial bonus on Intimidate and Spot checks—the first sign of your nascent draconic nature.

When you reach 2nd level, you do not gain a normal class level.

Instead, you gain an "effective class level" in the draconic racial class and the benefits it grants.

At this point, you have the draconic template.

Your level adjustment increases by 1; you are now a 1st-level character with an ECL of 2nd.

For example, a draconic human fighter using this option begins with all the normal racial traits for a human and all the normal class features for a 1st-level fighter.

In addition, he has a +2 racial bonus on Intimidate and Spot checks.

When the character reaches 2nd level, he does not gain a normal class level; instead, he gains an effective class level in the draconic racial class.

This grants him a +2 bonus to Strength, Constitution, and Charisma, darkvision out to 60 feet, low-light vision, a +1 natural armor bonus to AC, and a pair of claw attacks.

He now has the draconic template and an ECL of 3rd.

Anytime you gain another class level after 2nd level, you can choose to continue to manifest additional draconic traits instead of gaining another class level.

In effect, you are upgrading your draconic template to the half-dragon template.

Once you decide to follow this path, you must give up your next two class levels in exchange for the benefits of the 2nd and 3rd effective class levels of the draconic racial class.

Each time you take one of these levels, your level adjustment and ECL increase by 1.

Upon taking all three levels, you have the half-dragon template, and your level adjustment and ECL are 3 higher than normal for your original race.

For example, a 4th-level human fighter with the draconic template (ECL 5th) wishes to become a half-dragon.

When he gains enough experience for 6th level, he forgoes gaining a class level in favor of gaining an effective class level in the draconic racial class.

Once this level is taken, the character has no choice but to take the final effective class level in the draconic racial class when he reaches 7th level.

At this point, he is a 4th-level half-dragon and half-human fighter with an ECL of 7th.

The draconic racial class must be taken at character creation.

It cannot be gained later during a character's career if it is not initially chosen.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the draconic racial class.

Skill Bonus (Ex): A character pursuing the draconic racial class begins play with a +2 racial bonus on Intimidate and Spot checks.

Ability Score Increases (Ex): At 2nd level, the draconic racial class grants the following increases to ability scores: Strength +2, Constitution +2, and Charisma +2.

At 3rd level, Strength and Intelligence each increase by 2. Strength increases by 4 at 4th level.

All ability increases are cumulative.

Claws (Ex): The 2nd level of the draconic racial class grants two claw attacks.

These attacks are used and deal damage according to the draconic creature template (see page 74).

At 3rd level, claw damage increases to that granted by the half-dragon template (MM 146).

Darkvision (Ex): At 2nd level, the draconic racial class grants darkvision out to 60 feet.

Dragonblood Subtype (Ex): The draconic racial class grants the dragonblood subtype at 1st level.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): The 2nd level of the draconic racial class grants low-light vision.

Natural Armor (Ex): At 2nd level, the draconic racial class grants a +1 natural armor bonus to AC (existing natural armor improves by 1).

The 3rd level of the class grants another +1.

At 4th level, the natural armor bonus increases by an additional +2, for a total improvement of +4 over three levels.

Racial Bonus on Saves Against Sleep and Paralysis (Ex): The 2nd level of the draconic racial class grants a +4 racial bonus on saving throws against magic sleep effects and paralysis.

Bite (Ex): At 3rd level, the draconic racial class grants a bite attack that deals damage according to the half-dragon template.

Breath Weapon (Su): The 3rd level of the draconic racial class grants a weak breath weapon.

The form of this breath weapon depends on the character's dragon parentage.

See the half-dragon template for details.

This breath weapon deals half the normal damage of a half-dragon's breath weapon.

If the dragon type doesn't grant a breath weapon (see Half-Dragons Beyond the Monster Manual, below), the draconic racial class doesn't grant one either.

If the dragon type granted a weak breath weapon at 3rd level and the 4th level is taken, the weak breath weapon becomes a normal half-dragon breath weapon.

It deals the damage granted by the half-dragon template.

If the dragon type didn't grant a weak breath weapon at 3rd level and the 4th level is taken, the racial class grants a special attack according to the dragon parent.

See Half-Dragons Beyond the Monster Manual for details.

Immunity to Energy (Ex): At 3rd level, the draconic racial class grants immunity to an energy type based on the character's dragon parentage and the half-dragon template.

Dragon Type: The 4th level of the draconic racial class grants the dragon type, which replaces the dragonblood subtype previously gained.

As part of this benefit, the character gains immunity to magic sleep effects and paralysis and loses the previously gained +4 racial bonus on saves against these effects.

All the character's racial Hit Dice increase by one die size, to a maximum of d12.

Players are entitled to reroll increased racial Hit Dice for their characters.

Racial skill points per Hit Die change to 6 + Int (or four times this number for the first racial Hit Die).

If this number is higher than the normal quantity of skill points for the recipient creature's racial Hit Dice, it gains skill points equal to the difference between its new skill point total and its old skill point total.

If this number is lower than the normal quantity of skill points for the recipient creature's racial Hit Dice, it loses skill points equal to the difference between its new skill point total and its old skill point total.

Racial class skills do not change.

Wings (Ex): Large or larger creatures that take the 4th draconic racial class level grow a pair of functional wings, or their existing vestigial wings become functional.

Such creatures gain a fly speed equal to twice their base land speed (maximum 120 feet) with average maneuverability.

RACES OF THE WILD (3.5)

CENTAUR

"Swift and sure, that is the way of the centaur."

—Abryxius Bruile, centaur courser

Far stronger and faster than other humanoid races, centaurs rule huge swathes of the wild.

They build peaceful, idyllic communities, hunting what and where they wish.

Centaurians inhabit the plains and forests in tribes of varying size.

Even though they build permanent shelters and live in one place for many years at a time, centaurs roam from their homes on a regular basis, ranging over great distances in relatively short amounts of time.

Centaurians regard such excursions as essential to understanding the world around their homes, and they greatly enjoy such activity for its own sake.

Although their crafts have not reached the level of some of the humanoid races, it is only because centaurs prefer to venture from their homes often rather than to stay in one place and ply a single trade.

CENTAUR RACIAL TRAITS

With the lower body of a large horse and the upper torso and arms of a human, centaurs combine speed and strength in their powerful forms.

A centaur is as big and heavy as a horse, standing about 7 feet high and weighing about 2,100 pounds.

Brown dominates most of a centaur's coloring, the long hair on the top of the head and the glossy fur of the horselike body ranging from a light tan to a deep, dark brown.

A centaur's humanlike torso has a swarthy, earthy complexion.

In some isolated tribes and rare individuals, other colorings emerge, such as white, gray, or black, but these are extremely uncommon.

- +8 Strength, +4 Dexterity, +4 Constitution, -2 Intelligence, +2 Wisdom.

- Large size: -1 penalty to Armor Class, -1 penalty on attack rolls, -4 penalty on Hide checks, +4 bonus on grapple checks, lifting and carrying limits double those of Medium characters.

- Space/Reach: 10 feet/5 feet.

- A centaur's base land speed is 50 feet.

- Darkvision out to 60 feet.

- Racial Hit Dice: A centaur begins with four levels of monstrous humanoid, which provide 4d8 Hit Dice; a base attack bonus of +4; and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +1, Ref +4, and Will +4.

- Racial Skills: A centaur's monstrous humanoid levels give him skill points equal to $7 \times (2 + \text{Int modifier})$.

His class skills are Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Survival.

- Racial Feats: A centaur's monstrous humanoid levels give him two feats.

- +3 natural armor bonus.

- Automatic Languages: Sylvan, Elven.

Bonus Languages: Common, Gnome, Halfling.

- Favored Class: Ranger.

Centaur rangers often choose magical beasts or some variety of humanoid as their favored enemy.

- Level adjustment +2.

CENTAUR SOCIETY

The tribal society of the centaurs regards freedom and personal choice as the highest virtues.

As long as an individual's choices do not hinder the welfare of another centaur of the tribe, these peaceful creatures leave all decisions in the hands of the individual.

The seemingly unorganized society of the centaurs is actually bound by an openness and camaraderie that more civilized cultures have long since lost.

Lands: Centaurs make their lairs in forested areas and prefer to range through temperate plains and forests.

Although centaurs have permanent dwellings, their culture has more in common with nomads and hunters than with the city-building races of humanoids.

Like nomadic cultures, centaur tribes range farther north during the warm months and concentrate in southern temperate regions during the winter.

Settlements: Centaur lairs look little like the permanent structures of other races, consisting of a series of beautiful forest glades, peaceful streams, and perhaps a few scattered lean-tos.

Although these lairs seem simple and unprotected, they provide more protection than even the stoutest walls by allowing the swift-moving centaurs to encircle approaching foes or easily flee if pressed too hard.

Power Groups: A centaur druid is usually a tribe's designated leader and speaker, but groups of centaur warriors hold great sway in any given tribe, mainly because their choices of where and what to hunt greatly impact how well the tribe will eat in the coming weeks.

These hunters, brave and free-spirited as they are, have their passions tempered by the wisdom of the centaur druids who study the wilderness through which the tribe roams.

Although these groups rarely have lasting conflicts, the hunters and druids often wish to pursue differing short-term goals.

Beliefs: Centaurs love and worship nature, and most who wish to devote themselves to a higher power or cause become druids.

Nearly all centaur clerics (who are rare) worship the centaur deity Skerrit.

Clerics of this nature deity can choose any two of the following domains: Animal, Good, or Plant.

Relations: Centaurs shun humans.

Although they bear them no serious ire, they prefer open lands to the closed-in cities that humans invariably build. Centaurs get along well with elves and with many of the wandering races, such as catfolk and halflings.

Centaur have had too many dangerous skirmishes against tribes of vicious gnolls to be anything other than suspicious of the hyena-headed humanoids, but they are open-minded and intelligent enough to get along with an individual gnoll that proves itself trustworthy.

CENTAUR CHARACTERS

Because of their unique physical abilities and physiology, centaurs make versatile warriors and scouts.

Centaur who take a few levels in druid or (more rarely) cleric combine powerful ranged attacks with minor spellcasting abilities much like a multiclass humanoid spellcaster does.

Adventuring Centaurs: Centaur adventurers don't have the problems with outsiders that most centaurs do.

Through a combination of confidence, curiosity, and ambition, these brave centaurs have come to view the cities and communities of other cultures as places to learn and explore rather than places to avoid.

Centaur view adventurers as cultural outsiders.

Many other races of the wild, such as gnolls and catfolk, see only a small difference between an accomplished hunter who provides food for the tribe and an adventurer, but centaurs feel quite differently.

Although centaurs do not shun adventurers of their own race in the same way that they shun humans, orcs, and some other humanoids, they never make centaur adventurers feel truly welcome, and usually encourage such a character to move on to another area or community after a short time among them.

Character Development: Centaur characters have 4 racial Hit Dice and a +2 level adjustment.

As a result, many of a centaur's early choices are simplified. In the early stages of their careers, centaur characters often have fewer hit points than other humanoid warriors of an equal level, causing many centaurs to favor ranged combat. Mastering the use of a powerful composite longbow allows a centaur character to take advantage of his strength, and his high speed allows him to keep his distance from most foes.

For melee combat, centaurs prefer two-handed weapons that allow them to take full advantage of their high strength, such as longspears, greatswords, and greataxes. When playing a centaur, remember that the race's unique anatomy causes problems in certain circumstances.

In a four-member party, it's quite likely that if the centaur character falls in combat, the party will lack the physical strength to move him.

In addition, as pointed out on page 7 of the Monster Manual, some creatures simply aren't made for certain types of physical activity.

Centaur, despite their great strength, are not capable of climbing sheer surfaces, nor do they have much chance of walking a tightrope.

In these situations, the DM is the final arbiter of in-game logic.

Character Names: Centaur given names are multisyllabic and commonly include the letters "z", "x", "r", and "y".

Centaur family names usually have only one syllable.

Centaur use a single given name and a family name.

Male Names: Brynzin, Denryx, Kezzryn, Tyrox, Zerrn.

Female Names: Allyri, Byss, Rynna, Zerry.

Family Names: Bri, Gyr, Hop, Tor, Zym.

ROLEPLAYING A CENTAUR

The most striking difference between centaurs and humanoid characters is obviously their physiology, but there are interesting differences in their outlooks as well. Centaurs cover great distances easily, and therefore they have less attachment to places and possessions than many humanoid races.

Personality: Most centaurs tend to be easygoing, almost mild-mannered; they are usually uninterested in interacting with members of the humanoid races.

Centaur adventurers, however, have an innate curiosity that overcomes the typical centaur hesitation to interact with others, and they are generally friendly and outgoing. Even so, centaur adventurers tend to prefer halflings and elves over adventuring companions of other races.

As thinking, civilized creatures, centaurs frown upon those humanoids who look on them as potential mounts.

It is a grave insult to ask a centaur to serve as a mount, and centaurs usually offer to carry their companions only in dire circumstances.

Roleplaying Application: You should roleplay the tension between your own curiosity and the stereotypes that your people hold toward members of other races.

When you interact with a member of another race, try to convey that you have preconceptions about the character but that you are trying to keep an open mind.

Serving as a mount is beneath you.

Only when the life of a close companion is at risk should you deign to carry a humanoid.

Behaviors: Centaur adventurers know that they can expect a cold welcome should they attempt to return to their homes, and for that reason many view themselves as permanent wanderers.

This attitude is greatly comforting, rather than confining, to the swift-moving centaur adventurer.

Because of this mind-set, however, such characters seldom own more than they can carry on their broad backs.

In combat, centaurs see running as the natural approach to beginning a battle, using their speed to establish a comfortable range before the fighting begins.

Roleplaying Application: Use your increased carrying capacity to be ready for any situation.

You are comfortable making your home nearly anywhere, but you do not expect to stay in one place for long.

You might seek to collect tokens or mementos from the exotic places that you visit, filling your backpacks with these items in the same way that a human might line his mantle with mementos of his own travels.

In combat, you should encourage your companions to fight like centaurs, even to the point of urging them to learn feats such as Spring Attack and Shot on the Run.

Language: Most centaurs are slow to share their thoughts with others, but this reticence seldom hinders their social skills.

When communicating with most humanoids, centaurs keep their statements short and to the point; they are more comfortable and outgoing around halflings and elves.

Roleplaying Application: Although you are neither shy nor intimidated by others, consider your thoughts carefully before sharing them.

One carefully worded statement is better than a long, ill-advised discourse.

Two favored centaur battle cries are "Swift!" and "Run fast, run sure!" Try to differentiate the way you talk to most humanoids from the way you interact with halflings, elves, and your trusted friends.

There should be a marked difference between the ways you interact with these two groups.

CENTAUR ADVENTURES

Centaur often shun outsiders, and therefore adventurers may find themselves unwelcome and unwanted in centaur lands.

In the rare situations where centaurs find themselves unable to flee from a more powerful foe, they have turned to adventurers for assistance.

In addition to these extremely rare situations, centaurs have been known to overcome their distaste for the company of other races long enough to help a group of adventurers locate some monster or foe that threatens their lands.

By guiding the adventurers in this way, centaurs usually minimize the time that the adventurers spend within their lands and make it more likely that the adventurers will inadvertently aid them by driving off or at least weakening one of their foes.

- A tribe of centaurs seems to menace a human community. Although the centaurs have not yet resorted to violence, they have clearly discouraged the humans from taking lumber from the nearby forest.

Despite having only recently moved to the area, the centaurs consider the forest to be their territory and tolerate no interference from the humans.

Rather than moving on, the centaurs have decided to drive the humans away.

They don't wish to resort to violence and would prefer that the humans leave in peace, but their speed and ability with the bow make them confident that they can defend the forest from any human incursion.

Adventurers must succeed at the difficult task of persuading the centaurs, who clearly have the upper hand in the growing conflict, to leave or coexist peacefully with the human community—a difficult task considering the centaur's reluctance to interact with outsiders.

• Centaurs have long avoided the heart of the great forest through which they roam.

Dangerous poisonous gases, unusual patches of magical darkness, and other strange features in the forest's center make it hazardous even to the swift centaurs.

When this terrible region begins to expand through the forest, the centaurs suspect a green dragon lurks deep within the wood, and they finally decide to seek powerful adventurers to help rid them of the menace.

CENTAUR MONSTER CLASS

Monstrous Humanoid Proud and noble beings with the strength and speed of horses and a fondness for archery, centaurs are guardians of the forest.

Centaur tribes trade with many elf communities, and each agrees to protect the other in times of need.

It is under agreements such as these that centaurs may be found traveling with bands of elves, lending their muscles and hooves to defend against evil creatures and despoilers. The centaur is a strong class suitable for any player who enjoys nature-oriented characters.

It has few special abilities and reasonable ability score modifiers, making a centaur character more than capable of holding his own in a fight compared to barbarians, fighters, and rangers.

Over the levels of this class, a centaur's Strength and Constitution increase to an impressive level, he becomes faster and larger, and he deals more damage with his great hooves.

RACIAL TRAITS

Note that these traits are not identical to the regular centaur's full suite of racial traits because the centaur's ability scores and racial Hit Dice increase with level as shown below.

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, -2 Int. Centaurs are quick and agile, but not as mentally adept as humans.
- Medium Size: A 1st-level centaur character has no special bonuses or penalties due to his size.
- A centaur's base land speed is 40 feet.

• Darkvision out to 60 feet.

• Natural Armor: A centaur has a +1 natural armor bonus to Armor Class at 1st level.

• Hooves: A centaur has two hoof attacks that are secondary natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

A centaur can make two hoof attacks as secondary attacks as part of a full attack.

• Automatic Languages: Elven, Sylvan.

• Favored Class: Ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The centaur's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the centaur monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Centaurs are proficient with all simple weapons, longswords, and longbows, but with no armor or shields.

Centaurs count as nonhumanoid creatures for the purpose of determining the cost of armor (see page 123 of the Player's Handbook).

Feats: A centaur receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 4th level.

After 6th level, he gains feats normally according to his Hit Dice, as shown on Table 3-2: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits, page 22 of the Player's Handbook.

Natural Armor: A centaur's natural armor bonus improves to +2 at 3rd level and to +3 at 5th level.

Speed: At 5th level, a centaur's base land speed increases to 50 feet.

Large Size: At 6th level, a centaur becomes Large, with a space of 10 feet and a reach of 5 feet.

He gains a -1 penalty to AC, a -1 penalty on attack rolls, a -4 penalty on Hide checks, and a +4 bonus on grapple checks.

His lifting and carrying limits become double those of a Medium quadruped.

TABLE 4-1: THE CENTAUR

Level	Hit Dice	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Skill Points	CR	Special

GNOLL

"The cruelty of our past has made us strong. Now we must prove we can also be just."

—Garnock Truefeather, gnoll druid of Obad-Hai

While most of their people remain mired in the cruelty of their demon prince, a few tribes of gnolls seek to pull themselves out of savagery.

These tribes walk with weapons in hand, knowing that the civilized races hate and fear their people and that other tribes of evil gnolls already seek to strike them down.

Fueled by their own bestial strength and the cruel will of the demon prince Yeenoghu, most gnolls roam the wild in search of sentient prey.

These savages know little of mercy and honor, and nothing of kindness or compassion.

The exceptions to this rule, who have banded together in rough tribes that roam the plains and forests, have begun to learn the value of personal honor.

Some even approach the harsh but ultimately fair codes that tribes of barbaric humans often adopt.

Geared more toward survival than the cruelty of their kin, these gnolls stand at a critical juncture: Either they will succeed in allying with the civilized races and pull some of their people away from the cruel worship of Yeenoghu—or they will fail, and their tribes will slip back into evil and brutality.

GNOLL RACIAL TRAITS

Gnolls have hyenalike heads, and their long limbs possess a lean strength.

Gnolls are covered in coarse yellow or reddish-brown fur, and their feet and legs are structured more like a hyena's hind legs than those of other humanoids.

Despite the somewhat awkward appearance of their legs and feet, gnolls walk as bipeds and are as agile and speedy as a normal human.

The wild gnolls who prey on the civilized races use patchwork armor and rusted weapons that they've stolen from past kills.

Tribes that have found some level of personal honor favor hide or leather armor similar to the barbarian tribes of humans.

Gnoll characters possess the following racial traits:

- Strength +4, Constitution +2, Intelligence -2, Charisma -2.

- Medium size.

- A gnoll's base land speed is 30 feet.

- Darkvision out to 60 feet.

- Racial Hit Dice: A gnoll begins with two levels of humanoid, which provide 2d8 Hit Dice; a base attack bonus of +1; and base saving throw bonuses of Fort +3, Ref +0, and Will +0.

- Racial Skills: A gnoll's humanoid levels give him skill points equal to $5 \times (2 + \text{Int modifier})$.

His class skills are Listen and Spot.

- Racial Feats: A gnoll's humanoid levels give him one feat.

- +1 natural armor bonus.

- Automatic Language: Gnoll.

Bonus Languages: Common, Draconic, Elven, Goblin, Orc.

- Favored Class: Ranger.

- Level adjustment +1.

GNOLL SOCIETY

Most gnoll tribes wander the wilderness, the strongest warrior governing with a brutal adherence to the idea that the strong can freely take from the weak.

A few gnoll tribes attempt to pull away from their savage past, but they are the rare exception rather than the rule.

Lands: Driven into the mountain foothills and deep forests by the armies of human nations and their allies, gnolls live in scattered wilderness areas much like those preferred by tribes of barbaric humans.

Competing against humans, orcs, giants, and more exotic species is the norm for gnolls in these wilderness areas, and the gnolls occasionally form alliances with other evil humanoids.

In rare cases, large groups of gnolls gather above or below ground.

These settlements serve only as a common crossroads for more nomadic gnolls—those who leave to continue wandering are balanced against new tribes arriving to trade or swear fealty to a powerful leader.

As some gnolls turn away from the worship of the dread prince Yeenoghu, however, gnolls grow more and more scattered rather than less so.

Driven away from their kin by the wrath of Yeenoghu's priests, yet still subject to the suspicions of the civilized races, these gnolls wander far and wide in a near-permanent nomadic state.

Settlements: Gnoll settlements are rough and crude, rarely anything more than temporary shelters.

Gnolls prefer underground lairs for longer stays, especially when a traveling group of gnolls must await new births.

Large groups of gnolls often have several crude underground complexes between which they wander.

While these caves might not even be large enough to house the entire group of gnolls, they provide the group's strongest warriors a place to sleep in relative safety.

Weaker members of the tribe must make do with the less trustworthy shelters they can set up outside of the cave complex.

Power Groups: Gnolls have little in the way of power groups.

Among tribes of evil gnolls, the strongest warriors rule by brute force.

Occasionally, exceptionally powerful or persuasive priests of Yeenoghu will lead a tribe, usually by ensuring that the strongest warriors are devoted to the dark worship of the demon prince.

Even those rare gnoll tribes that place a greater value on personal honor are led by the most physically powerful warrior.

Because of this, when a gnoll adventures with members of other races, he will sometimes expect to lead if he is the strongest, regardless of the difficulties he faces when traveling within the members of other races and regardless of other group members' more developed social skills.

Beliefs: Most gnolls pay homage to Yeenoghu, demon prince of gnolls.

Yeenoghu's cruel and selfish beliefs inspire gnoll priests to keep their people firmly on the path of evil.

Those few gnolls who have managed to pull away from the dark cult at the center of their people's existence often revere Obad-Hai or turn away from religion altogether.

Relations: Few races regard gnolls as anything other than feral creatures who pose a menace to peaceful life.

Because of the prevalence of evil gnolls, this assumption isn't far from the truth, and player character gnolls should find it difficult to move unescorted through a human city.

GNOLL CHARACTERS

Gnoll characters balance the challenges of roleplaying contrary to a race's normal image with the novelty of playing a monstrous race.

The gnoll race provides an opportunity to play a strong and powerful warrior character struggling not only against physical foes but also against the opinions of other races.

As a gnoll character grows to trust his fellow adventurers, new roleplaying opportunities arise as bonds of friendship overcome suspicion, and the other characters grow to respect the gnoll's values as well as his physical abilities.

The other PCs might even play a role in helping the gnoll character's tribe of neutral or honorable gnolls build the first few trusting relationships with other races.

Adventuring Gnolls: Gnolls adventure to see the world, to rise above the savagery of their people, and to find what civilization has to offer.

While some return to their tribes thinking less of the civilized races because of their experiences as adventurers, others find wealth, power, or prestige far beyond the normal images of gnoll warriors.

Character Development: Gnolls are most effective when they take levels in barbarian, ranger, or another martially focused class.

Focusing on melee combat allows gnoll characters to capitalize on their high Strength scores and their natural armor.

As your character gains levels, feats such as Power Attack and Cleave help accentuate his physical prowess.

Character Names: Gnoll names often sound like growls to members of other races, featuring multiple “r” sounds.

Gnoll tribal names, although not widely shared with other creatures, are usually compound words, as in the following examples.

Male Names: Derror, Grrer, Remmar, Thurrg.

Female Names: Arrna, Mirrin, Ryssa, Thrrea.

Tribal Names: Bloodfist, Greatfang, Speardeath, Thunderdance.

ROLEPLAYING A GNOLL

Cruelty and viciousness remain the defining traits of most gnolls, but a few tribes have managed to pull away from this bestial outlook and the worship of the demon prince Yeenoghu that usually accompanies and engenders this behavior.

Although far from altruistic, these gnolls temper the viciousness of their kind with a rough sense of honor and an unwavering bond with their chosen companions.

Personality: Even those gnolls who have turned from the evil ways of their demon prince are less intelligent and less charismatic than the average human.

Gnolls don't see this deficiency as a weakness, however, placing more value on physical abilities and natural cunning than on subtle thought or persuasive abilities.

Gnolls also remain very suspicious of other races, especially humans and their allies, with whom they have had generations of conflict and strife.

Roleplaying Application: You should be suspicious of others' motives until they give you reason to trust them.

If you can, devote a few skill points to Sense Motive, and emphasize its use in roleplaying encounters.

Your suspicions rest on the firm foundation of your people's long conflicts with the civilized races, and such mistrust and conflict cannot be erased easily or quickly.

Humans, elves, dwarves, and members of their allied races are likely to use the past behavior of your people as a reason to betray you.

After someone earns your trust completely, however, he or she becomes like a brother or sister to you, and the few powerful emotional bonds that you form with others shape your life and your outlook.

Once you name someone a packbrother, he forever has your trust.

Behavior: Gnolls are travelers, hunters, and scavengers; adventuring gnolls travel almost constantly.

To a gnoll, sitting in one place isn't cowardly or illogical; it's simply unpleasant.

Some gnolls are drawn simply by the thrill and variety of the hunt, while others are motivated only by curiosity.

As a pack of gnolls grows, the bond of the pack serves as a major impetus for travel—the most adventurous gnolls pull the rest of the pack along on their hunts.

Packs of evil gnolls are driven to travel by the will of their demon prince, and packs of neutral gnolls travel to escape the influence of other gnoll packs and the wariness of human cities accustomed to fighting off their cruel and evil kin.

Roleplaying Application: You should often urge your adventuring companions to contemplate long, overland journeys.

In light of this, make sure that you can carry everything you own.

If you can't carry something with you personally, make sure you have a trusted mount or beast of burden to carry it for you.

In general, a few high-quality possessions are much more valuable to you than numerous goods or more visible wealth.

You might emphasize your love of travel by encouraging your group to stay outdoors rather than at an inn.

Focus on adventuring opportunities that will take you on long journeys rather than those in your immediate area. Language: Gnolls who travel beyond the homeland of their tribes usually try to adopt the speaking habits of those around them, hoping to lessen other humanoid's sense of discomfort around them.

Around their own kind, gnolls use their racial tongue and usually speak in the imperative, considering it polite to show strength by phrasing statements as commands rather than requests.

Roleplaying Application: It is a sign of weakness to ask for things, so don't do it often.

You understand that others don't speak in commands the way your people do, but sometimes you slip into old habits. Those who ask too often or who phrase everything as a question are unworthy of respect, for they are weak.

GNOLL ADVENTURES

Adventures featuring evil gnolls as antagonists are usually straightforward affairs—the vicious humanoids attack sentient prey whenever they have the chance, and adventurers must often stop their depredations.

Adventures featuring neutral gnolls, however, pose much greater challenges and might force characters to reevaluate their own beliefs and behaviors.

These adventures could be as simple as the characters siding with the rare group of honorable gnolls to fight off some other menacing force, or they might be more involved, introducing the gnolls first through the suspicious eyes of human villagers and then slowly presenting evidence that the gnolls are not evil like most of their kin.

As the characters face the growing certainty that the gnolls are not evil or cruel, they must decide for themselves how to act and whether or not to believe these unusual gnolls.

If they make the decision to believe them, they must play a part in building trust between the gnolls and the human villagers who still find the hyena-headed humanoids frightening.

- A group of gnolls has approached a human village about opening trade between the tribe and the village.

The village elder who is going to meet with the tribe needs an escort.

While the negotiations take place, a group of evil gnolls attacks the tribe seeking to trade.

Although the first tribe's leaders are sincere in their desire to trade with the civilized races, the tribe still harbors worshipers of Yeenoghu, who have worked to bring the tribe of evil gnolls here to destroy both the peaceful gnolls and the human village.

In addition to fighting the evil gnolls, the adventurers will have their hands full trying to keep the negotiations going after the attacks.

- A powerful gnoll warrior has gathered a huge number of his people together.

Although this warrior-king has no love for the cruelty of Yeenoghu, neither does he trust the kingdoms of man. Facing an incursion by other evil humanoids, the human kingdoms are in dire need of aid.

The adventurers must travel through the gnoll lands, discern whether the gnoll king can be trusted, and then prove themselves to the savage but honorable gnoll king. Earning his respect requires the swift completion of a dangerous quest, and one misstep in deed or etiquette will confirm his suspicions about the civilized races and prevent him from coming to the aid of the human kingdoms.

GNOLL MONSTER CLASS

Humanoid (Gnoll) Gnolls are physically powerful humanoids with hyenalike heads.

Gnolls have 2 racial Hit Dice and a level adjustment of +1, making a regular gnoll the equivalent of a 3rd-level character.

If you want to start playing a gnoll at 1st level, you can use the monster class described below.

RACIAL TRAITS

Characters using the gnoll monster class start with the following racial traits.

Note that these are not identical to the regular gnoll's full suite of racial traits because the gnoll's ability scores and racial Hit Dice increase with level as shown below.

- +2 Strength, -2 Intelligence, -2 Charisma.
 - Medium size.
 - A gnoll's base land speed is 30 feet.
 - Darkvision out to 60 feet.
 - Automatic Language: Gnoll.
- Bonus Languages: Common, Draconic, Elven, Goblin, Orc.
- Favored Class: Ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The gnoll's class skills are Listen and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the gnoll monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Gnolls are proficient with light armor, shields, and simple and martial weapons.

Feats: A gnoll begins with one feat at 1st level.

After 3rd level, he gains feats normally according to his Hit Dice.

Natural Armor: A gnoll gains a +1 natural armor bonus to Armor Class at 3rd level.

SAVAGE SPECIES (3.0)

AASIMAR

Aasimar are good choices for players who want a touch of the divine in their mortal characters.

This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus one racial level.

AASIMAR BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the aasimar.

Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Charisma.

Outsider Type: Aasimar are native outsiders.

Thus, they are vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the outsider type but immune to effects that target other types.

For example, an aasimar would be subject to the extra damage from an outsider bane sword but immune to hold person, since that spell affects only humanoids.

Size: Aasimar are Medium size.

Speed: Aasimar base land speed is 30 feet.

Darkvision (Ex): An aasimar has darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Light (Sp): The aasimar may use light (caster level equals aasimar's character level) once per day.

Skill Bonuses: An aasimar has a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

Resistances (Ex): An aasimar starts play with resistance 2 to acid, cold, and electricity.

Automatic Languages: Celestial, Common.

Bonus Languages: Draconic, Dwarven, Elven, Gnome, Halfling, Sylvan.

Favored Class: Paladin.

A multiclass aasimar's paladin class does not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.

AASIMAR RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the aasimar racial class.

Ability Score Changes: An aasimar's Wisdom increases by +2 at 1st level.

Daylight (Sp): At 1st level, the aasimar may use daylight (caster level equals aasimar's character level) once per day.

This ability replaces the base racial feature light.

Resistances (Ex): A 1st-level aasimar's acid, cold, and electricity resistances increase to 5 each.

Table SP-19: The Aasimar Racial Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Wis +2, daylight, resistances (acid 5, cold 5, electricity 5)

AASIMAR/HALF-CELESTIAL TRANSITION

An aasimar is born with a touch of the divine and a +1 level adjustment.

Aasimars who wish to become half-celestials can do so in just three levels instead of the normal four that the standard template class requires.

AASIMAR/HALF-CELESTIAL TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the aasimar/half-celestial transition class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Natural Armor Improvement: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +1.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +1 at 1st level.

Disease Immunity (Ex): An aasimar/half-celestial is immune to all diseases.

Poison Resistance (Ex): An aasimar/half-celestial has a +4 racial bonus on Fortitude saves against poison.

Resistances (Ex): At 1st level, an aasimar/half-celestial gains acid, cold, and electricity resistance 5.

When she reaches 3rd level, each of these resistances increases to 10.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 1st level, an aasimar/half-celestial with an Intelligence or Wisdom score of 8 or better gains spell-like abilities.

The exact abilities gained depend on her character level and level in the transition class, according to the following table.

Minimum Transition Class Level	Minimum Character Level	Spell-Like Abilities Gained
1st	1st	Bless 1/day, protection from evil 3/day
	3rd	Aid 1/day, detect evil 1/day
	7th	Holy smite 1/day, remove disease 1/day
	13th	Hallow 1/day, holy aura 3/day
2nd	5th	Cure serious wounds 1/day
	9th	Dispel evil 1/day
	15th	Mass charm monster 1/day
	17th	Summon monster IX (celestials only)
3rd	5th	Neutralize poison 1/day
	11th	Holy word 1/day
	19th	Resurrection 1/day

In each case, the caster level equals the aasimar/half-celestial's character level.

Save DCs, where applicable, are Charisma-based (10 + spell level + aasimar/half-celestial's Charisma modifier).

The character gains each spell-like ability as soon as she meets both qualifications for it.

Spell-like abilities are cumulative.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 1st level, an aasimar/half-celestial gains spell resistance equal to her character level (maximum 25).

At 4th level, her spell resistance increases by +10 (maximum 35).

Damage Reduction (Su): A 2nd-level or higher aasimar/half-celestial has damage reduction 5/magic if her character level is 11th or lower, or damage reduction 10/magic if her character level is 12th or higher.

An aasimar/half-celestial treats her natural weapons as magic weapons for the purpose of bypassing the damage reduction of other creatures.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, an aasimar/half-celestial of at least 2nd level may attempt to smite an evil creature with one normal melee attack.

This attack deals extra damage equal to her character level (maximum +20) against an evil foe.

If she accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but is still used up for the day.

Wings (Ex): At 3rd level, an aasimar/half-celestial grows birdlike wings, which she may use to fly at up to double her base land speed with good maneuverability.

Table SP-26: The Aasimar/Half-Celestial Transition Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	*	Str +2, Con +2, natural armor +1, disease immunity, poison resistance, resistance (acid 5, cold 5, electricity 5), spell-like abilities, spell resistance (lesser)
2nd		Str +2, Dex +2, Int +2, damage reduction, smite evil, spell-like abilities (greater)

3rd

Con +2, Wis +2, Cha +2, resistances (acid 10, cold 10, electricity 10), spell-like abilities, spell resistance (greater), wings (fly speed equal to double base speed, good maneuverability)

*A 1st-level aasimar/half-celestial with fewer than eleven character levels has a CR adjustment of +1. One with eleven or more character levels has a CR adjustment of +2.

A 2nd- or 3rd-level aasimar/half-celestial with fewer than five character levels has a CR adjustment of +1. One with five to ten character levels has a CR adjustment of +2. One with eleven or more character levels has a CR adjustment of +3.

AIR ELEMENTAL, LARGE

Elemental (Air)

Fast and gifted with flight from the moment of their creation, air elementals are supreme in the air. They have a natural weapon, special abilities that complement their ability to fly, and favorable ability modifiers.

They make excellent scouts and melee combatants but are less effective at just about anything else.

Air elementals are recognizably alien and have a hard time fitting in with creatures native to the Material Plane.

The greatest advantage of an air elemental is its ability to fly with great speed and precision.

Even a typical specimen can easily carry a gnome or halfling (making it a mobile aerial attack platform), and a high Dexterity score makes up for poor natural armor and difficulty in wearing crafted armor.

This monster class follows the progression for the various elemental sizes, starting at Small, passing through Medium-size, and finally reaching Large at the apex of the class.

Over the course of the class's levels, the elemental's ability scores and slam damage increase.

Its high Constitution modifier helps compensate for its reduced Hit Dice compared to its ECL.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Dex, -4 Int.

Air elementals are as fast as the wind but do not have much in terms of brains.

Their Dexterity and Constitution scores increase as they gain levels.

- Small: As Small creatures, air elementals gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.

- Speed: Air elementals fly at a speed of 100 feet (perfect).

- Darkvision: Air elementals can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Automatic Languages: Auran.

- Elemental: Air elementals are immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning; they are not subject to critical hits.

- Favored Class: Air elemental.

The best multiclassing choices for an air elemental are barbarian, rogue, fighter, and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The air elemental's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Medium-size, an air elemental loses its +4 size bonus on Hide checks.

On reaching Large size, an air elemental takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the air elemental air elemental class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Air elementals are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Air Mastery (Ex): Airborne creatures take a -1 penalty on attack and damage rolls against an air elemental.

Feats: An air elemental receives one feat at 1st level.

It gains Flyby Attack and Improved Initiative as bonus feats at 1st level and Weapon Finesse (slam) as a bonus feat at 2nd level.

It gains additional feats at 3rd level and 9th level.

After 14th level, it gains feats normally according to its character level as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: The elemental has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the creature's Strength bonus.

Whirlwind (Su): The air elemental can form a whirlwind as described in the Monster Manual, except the damage is the elemental's slam damage without adding its Strength bonus and the save DC is $10 + 1\frac{1}{2}$ air elemental's HD from class levels + air elemental's Con modifier.

ANNIS HAG

Monstrous Humanoid

These strange creatures enjoy killing and sowing confusion.

They are gifted with great physical strength and key magical powers to further these desires.

Annis hags are capable of blending into normal society with careful use of clothing (and later their natural ability to change self), making them good spies and easy to incorporate into a normal adventuring party.

The annis hag is a good character choice for a player that wants to play a monstrous witch, later gaining levels in cleric or sorcerer but still having a foundation of powerful melee attacks to fall back upon.

Most of an annis hag's abilities are physical, so building this monster class is a matter of distributing the attack forms, natural armor bonuses, and ability score increases in a balanced manner across the class's twelve levels.

Spell resistance becomes active at mid levels, making the annis a good character to take on an enemy spellcaster in melee.

The improved grab, rend, and tear abilities are placed on the high end of the class because they are particularly dangerous and give a player of an annis character something to look forward to at the end of the class progression.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str.
- Annis hags are very strong, and they get stronger over time.
- Speed: Annis hag land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Annis hags can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common, Giant.
- Favored Class: Annis hag.

CLASS SKILLS

The annis hag's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an annis hag takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the annis hag monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Annis hags are proficient with all simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Spell-Like Abilities: The annis hag's change self and fog cloud abilities have a caster level equal to the character's Hit Dice from class levels.

Feats: An annis hag receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 12th level, it gains feats normally according to its character level as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Steely Skin (Ex): The annis hag has a steely, blue-black skin that reduces damage dealt by slashing and piercing weapons by 1 point of damage per hit.

However, it has brittle bones that increase the damage dealt by bludgeoning weapons by 1 point of damage per hit.

(Treat combination weapons such as morningstars as bludgeoning weapons).

Claws: An annis has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: Starting at 2nd level, an annis has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Spell Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, an annis hag has spell resistance equal to 7 + class level.

Improved Grab (Ex): Starting at 10th level, if an annis hits a creature of its size or smaller with a claw attack, it deals normal damage and attempts to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it gets a hold, it can rend if it has that ability (see below). Alternatively, it has the option to conduct the grapple normally, or simply use its claw to hold the opponent (-20 penalty on grapple check, but the feral creature is not considered grappled).

Rend (Ex): Beginning at 11th level, an annis hag that hits with both claw attacks latches onto the opponent's body and automatically tears the flesh, dealing additional damage equal to two claw attacks.

Tear (Ex): When it attains 12th level, an annis automatically hits a held opponent with all its melee attacks each round it maintains the hold.

ARANEA

Magical Beast (Shapechanger)

Araneas are intelligent shapechanging spiderfolk, less exploitative than doppelgangers and usually not evil despite most preconceptions about spiders.

They have many skills, can assume the form of a humanoid, cast webs and spells, and even have a poisonous bite.

Araneas make moderate melee combatants or rogues, but their natural shapechanging and spellcasting ability make them excellent spies and sorcerers, and they are reasonably good divine spellcasters.

A beginning aranea character can assume its hybrid form for a limited time each day, making it possible to pass among humanoids for short periods.

Araneas have several good ability score modifiers and no penalties.

An aranea can cast spells, and it has a natural bite attack, poison, a fast land speed, and the ability to throw a sticky web.

It has a generous number of skill points, and it starts play with three feats plus bonuses to Dexterity and Charisma. Initially the aranea can use its natural form (a Medium-size spider) and can assume its hybrid form as well, and it eventually perfects its alternate form to create a perfect likeness of one humanoid that it can retain indefinitely. The monster's poison starts out weak (good enough to allow an aranea to catch small prey) but later becomes strong enough to debilitate an average human.

An aranea's spellcasting ability appears at 2nd level and increases to a moderate level over time.

The web spinnerets mature at 5th level and reach their full potential at 7th level.

Over time, an aranea's Dexterity, Constitution, Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma increase.

The main disadvantage to playing an aranea is its low Hit Dice compared to its ECL—a fully grown aranea has 4 HD fewer than a normal character of its ECL.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Cha.

Araneas are light-fingered and have a talent for sorcery.

Over time, many of their ability scores continue to improve.

- Speed: Aranea land speed is 30 feet, with a climb speed of 25 feet.

Like any creature with a climb speed, araneas have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always take 10 when making Climb checks.

- Darkvision: Araneas can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Automatic Languages: Common and Sylvan.

- Favored Class: Aranea.

Bard, rogue, sorcerer, and wizard are the best multiclassing choices for an aranea.

CLASS SKILLS

The aranea's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (weaving) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the aranea monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Araneas are proficient with all simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An aranea receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 5th level.

After 7th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: The aranea has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus $1\frac{1}{2}$ times Strength bonus.

Poison (Ex): The aranea's bite injects a poison that deals the indicated primary and secondary damage (DC $10 + \frac{1}{2}$ aranea's Hit Dice from class levels + aranea's Con modifier).

Spells: Starting at 2nd level, an aranea casts spells as a 1st-level sorcerer.

At 4th level, it casts them as a 2nd-level sorcerer, and at 6th level it casts spells as a 3rd-level sorcerer.

Araneas prefer illusions and charms, and they avoid fire spells.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, an aranea has a natural form resembling a large spider, but it has the ability to assume a hybrid form for a limited time, similar to a humanoid with spider traits.

In hybrid form, it can use its web and poison attacks.

As it gains levels, it gains the ability to change form more often and eventually can assume a truly humanoid form.

At 5th level, the aranea must choose one Small or Medium-size humanoid form with which to use this ability.

An aranea's humanoid form has all the abilities of the form (for example, an aranea in dwarf form has dwarven racial traits).

The aranea keeps its ability scores and can cast spells, but it cannot use webs or poison in humanoid form.

Web (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, araneas are able to spin sticky webs suitable for combat.

These work like nets (see Chapter 7 of the Player's Handbook) and have the abilities mentioned in the Monster Manual aranea description.

Spinning and throwing a web is a standard action. At first, the aranea can use this ability only three times per day, but at 7th level it can use a web six times per day.

ASTRAL DEVA

Outsider (Good)

What player is not tempted, at some point or another, to bear the banner of heaven?

The astral deva may be the closest example, in bearing, appearance, and function, to the classic Western depiction of an angel.

Astral devas are beautiful figures of grace and majesty, human-looking with feathery white wings.

They soar over the mortal realms and the Outer Planes, helping lost travelers and rescuing those in danger.

Not only is a deva good, it's also powerful: It combines significant combat abilities with the power to throw around heal and blade barrier, along with incredible defenses and immunities.

The astral deva stands out as the most difficult monster class to design of all those presented here.

It has the highest possible starting ECL in the standard D&D rules (12 HD + 8 level adjustment = starting ECL 20).

It has a suite of spell-like abilities, numerous celestial qualities, and a full set of superior ability scores.

These are added approximately when a character of a standard class could access these abilities.

Likewise, the deva's powerful defenses are not acquired until a level where opponents have a chance of overcoming them.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Cha.

Astral devas are agents of good in the universe, and they know it.

All of their ability scores climb as they gain levels.

- Speed: Astral deva land speed is 50 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Astral devas can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Darkvision: Astral devas can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

- Saves: +4 racial bonus on Fortitude saves against poison.

- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, and Draconic.

- Favored Class: Astral deva.

Because astral devas have an ECL of 20, multiclassing requires the use of epic level rules (see Epic Level Handbook for more information).

CLASS SKILLS

The astral deva's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any three, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the astral deva monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Astral devas are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An astral deva receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 7th, 13th, and 19th level.

After 20th level it gains feats normally according to its character level (which requires epic level advancement rules).

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, an astral deva is never caught flat-footed.

At 7th level and beyond, it cannot be flanked.

Resistances (Ex): An astral deva is resistant to certain energy types; see Table A-4.

Lesser Deva Powers (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, an astral deva can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: cure light wounds, aid, continual flame, detect evil, dispel magic, invisibility sphere (centered on self only), remove curse, remove disease, remove fear, and see invisibility.

At 6th level it can use them three times per day.

At 10th level it can use cure light wounds and see invisibility seven times per day and the others at will.

The astral deva's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the astral deva class (DC 10 + spell level + astral deva's Cha modifier).

Immunities (Ex): At 3rd level and beyond, an astral deva is immune to electricity and petrification.

At 17th level, the deva also becomes immune to acid and cold.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 4th level, an astral deva can speak with any creature that has a language.

The deva's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from astral deva class levels + 2.

This ability is always active unless the deva chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the deva can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Protective Aura (Su): At 5th level, an astral deva gains the first of two components of its protective aura.

As a free action, it can surround itself with a nimbus of light having a radius of 20 feet.

This light acts as a magic circle against evil (but providing +4 bonuses instead of +2 bonuses).

At 7th level, the protective aura also functions as a minor globe of invulnerability.

The astral deva's caster level for these effects is its Hit Dice from astral deva class levels.

The aura can be dispelled, but the deva can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Spell Resistance (Ex): At 8th level, an astral deva gains spell resistance equal to 10 + class level.

Stun (Su): Beginning at 12th level, if an astral deva strikes an opponent twice in 1 round with a melee weapon, that creature must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + astral deva's Cha modifier) or be stunned for 1d6 rounds.

Deva Powers (Sp): Starting at 10th level, an astral deva can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: discern lies, dispel evil, holy smite, and polymorph self.

At 12th level it can use them three times per day, and at 16th level it can use them at will.

The astral deva's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the astral deva class (DC 10 + spell level + Cha modifier).

Greater Deva Powers (Sp): Beginning at 15th level, an astral deva can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: blade barrier, heal, holy aura, and holy word.

At 18th level it can use holy aura and holy word three times per day, and at 20th level it can use holy aura and holy word at will.

Large Size: Upon attaining 19th level, an astral deva grows to Large size and its natural reach extends to 10 feet.

It incurs all the normal penalties for Large creatures.

ATHACH

Aberration

An athach is a strange, giantlike creature capable of dealing terrible damage in combat and absorbing a lot of punishment.

In addition to its pure physical power, its poisonous bite means that foes caught in a long-term battle with an athach are likely to become less and less able to deal with the creature's defenses.

Their poor Intelligence and Charisma and Huge size make athachs ill suited for any career but that of barbarian or fighter, but they do well at either of those.

An athach's advantages compared to a human are its incredible size, extra arm, natural armor, great Strength and Constitution, poisonous bite, reach, and ability to throw rocks like a giant.

A beginning athach character is bigger than most humans but still Medium-size, growing to its full height over the course of the next eighteen levels.

While its Strength starts out no greater than a human's, it increases quickly over the course of the class's progression, and its extra attacks make up for any initial lack in crushing power.

Eventually the athach is strong enough to hurl small boulders.

As it grows, an athach's bite becomes more potent and gains the ability to inject poison (which also becomes more powerful over time).

With size increases come increasing reach, until the athach has an impressive 15-foot reach when it attains Huge size at 19th level.

The athach's speed, natural armor, and Constitution increase progressively as well.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: -4 Int, +2 Wis, -4 Cha.

Athachs are stupid and shy, but cunning, and eventually develop great Strength and Constitution.

- Speed: Athach land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Athachs can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Giant.
- Favored Class: Athach.

The best multiclassing choices for an athach are barbarian and fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The athach's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an athach takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

On reaching Huge size, an athach takes a -8 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the athach monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Athachs are proficient with all simple weapons and with light armor.

Feats: An athach receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 6th, 11th, and 15th level.

At 9th level it gains Multiattack as a bonus feat.

After 19th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Three Arms: An athach has three arms, and it can use all three of them in combat for wielding weapons.

One arm is the primary arm, which may have iterative attacks (multiple attacks with the same weapon at a cumulative -5 penalty) if the athach's base attack bonus is high enough, and the others are secondary arms, which never get iterative attacks.

The primary arm uses the athach's base attack bonus.

Attacks with the secondary arms are at the normal penalties for fighting with two weapons (see Table 8-2 in the Player's Handbook).

The Multiweapon Fighting feat lessens these penalties by 2 for all three arms.

The Multidexterity feat negates all penalties for using an off hand (making the attack bonus for the secondary arms equal to the attack bonus of the primary arm).

The athach's arms are not natural weapons.

Attacks with the primary arm add the athach's Strength bonus to damage, while attacks with the secondary arms add 1/2 the Strength bonus.

Bite: The athach has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage.

If a bite attack is made in conjunction with other attacks, it uses the athach's base attack bonus with a penalty of -5.

The Multiattack feat lessens the penalty to -2.

Poison (Ex): The athach's bite injects a poison that deals the indicated primary and secondary damage (DC 10 + 1/2 athach's HD from class levels + athach's Con modifier).

Rock Throwing (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, an athach can throw a rock for the indicated damage plus Strength bonus. A rock's maximum range is five range increments.

AVORAL

Outsider (Good)

Born of the heavenly planes, these birdlike celestials serve as warriors, spies, and scouts for the forces of good.

Like all celestials, they are built to survive the attacks of evil and are gifted with many magical abilities to let them carry out their tasks.

A young avoral begins play with several weak resistances, natural armor, and exceptionally keen vision.

Over time its wings become capable of carrying it at great speeds and dealing powerful blows, its ability scores and resistances increase, it can lay on hands, and it develops magic to improve its sight and ability to communicate. Eventually it becomes terrible to behold in battle, immune to many attacks, and skilled at neutralizing enemies and enemy magic at a distance.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Wis, +2 Cha.

Avorals are celestial birdfolk—fast, wise, and confident.

- Speed: Avoral land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Avorals can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Low-Light Vision: Avorals can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Skills: +8 racial bonus on Spot checks.
- Saves: +4 racial bonus on saving throws against poison.
- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, and Draconic.
- Favored Class: Avoral.

Any character class is a good multiclassing choice for an avoral.

CLASS SKILLS

The avoral's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any two, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the avoral monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Avorals are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An avoral receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 10th level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Wings: Starting at 2nd level, an avoral has two wing attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Claws: Beginning at 3rd level, an avoral has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Lesser Avoral Powers (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, an avoral can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: aid, blur (self only), command, detect magic, light, magic missile, and see invisibility.

At 6th level it can use these abilities three times per day, and at 9th level it can use them at will.

The avoral's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the avoral class (DC 10 + spell level + avoral's Cha modifier).

True Seeing (Su): Starting at 3rd level, an avoral can focus its sight, requiring 1 round of concentration but allowing it to see as if it were under the effect of a true seeing spell cast by a 14th-level cleric.

At first this ability lasts only up to 1 minute, but at 8th level the avoral can use it for up to 10 minutes per day.

Each minute used or fraction thereof counts as 1 minute of use.

At 12th level, there is no limit to the number of times per day an avoral can use this ability.

The avoral must maintain concentration to use this ability.

Lay on Hands (Su): This ability, gained at 4th level, works like the paladin ability, except that an avoral can heal as much damage per day as its own full normal hit point total.

Animal Telepathy (Su): Beginning at 4th level, an avoral can mentally communicate with animals as a free action.

This works like speak with animals but does not require speech.

The avoral's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from avoral class levels + 1.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 4th level, an avoral can speak with any creature that has a language.

The avoral's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from avoral class levels × 2.

This ability is always active unless the avoral chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the avoral can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Avoral Powers (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, an avoral can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: dimension door, dispel magic, gust of wind, hold person, lightning bolt, and magic circle against evil (self only).

At 9th level it can use any of these except dimension door three times per day, and at 14th level it can use any of them except dimension door at will.

Fear Aura (Su): Starting at 7th level, an avoral can create an aura of fear in a 20-foot radius once per day.

It is otherwise identical with fear as cast by an 8th-level sorcerer (save DC 14 + Cha modifier).

AZER

Outsider (Fire, Lawful)

As dwarves native to the Elemental Plane of Fire, azers have many of the appealing traits of the dwarf race as well as a touch of the exotic for players who like to run unusual characters.

Strong, smart, intuitive, quick, immune to fire, and with a respectable amount of natural armor, azers excel at any class except those that rely on Charisma.

A young azer begins play immune to fire but vulnerable to cold, with three good saving throws and some natural armor to boot, making it a reasonable counterpart to a fighter despite having a d8 Hit Die instead of a d10.

In just a few short levels an azer's increased natural armor, other ability score bonuses, natural heat, and spell resistance kick in, giving it an impressive list of qualities. The only drawback is the azer's 2 Hit Dice compared to the final ECL of 6.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Con, -2 Cha.
- Azers are much like their dwarven kin.
- Speed: Azer land speed is 30 feet.

TABLE A-7: THE AZER

BARGHEST

Outsider (Evil, Lawful) (Shapechanger)

- Darkvision: Azers can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Ignan.
- Favored Class: Azer.

The best multiclassing choices for an azer are fighter and cleric.

CLASS SKILLS

The azer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the azer monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Azers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Feats: An azer receives one feat at 1st level.

After 6th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Heat (Ex): An azer's body glows intensely hot, and starting at 2nd level it can deal additional fire damage with its unarmed attacks and with metallic weapons.

Evil goblinlike outsiders, barghests are strong combatants with good ability score modifiers and an attractive list of special abilities.

Because it can take the form of a goblin or a wolf, a barghest within an all-humanoid party can be mistaken as a slave or pet of another character in the party.

Barghests are fiendish killing machines and are welcome in most parties for their melee ability—as long as nobody minds their origin or personality.

A barghest starts with a strong attack ability, a bite attack, natural armor, and the ability to temporarily boost its own health by consuming the bodies of humanoid victims. Over the next few levels its ability scores increase, it develops claw attacks, the scent ability, the ability to change form, and some handy spell-like abilities.

Eventually it gains more powerful spell-like abilities and even damage reduction.

These and the ability to feed make up for its low Hit Dice compared to its final ECL.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con.
- Barghests literally are wolves from Hell.
- Speed: Barghest land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Barghests can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Goblin, Infernal, and Worg.
- Favored Class: Barghest.

Any character class is a good multiclassing choice for a barghest.

CLASS SKILLS

The barghest's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the barghest class. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Barghests are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A barghest receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 12th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Feed (Su): When a barghest slays a humanoid opponent, it can feed on the corpse, devouring both flesh and life force, as a full-round action.

Barghests that are not player characters would gain Hit Dice for feeding in this manner, but since PC barghests gain HD as part of gaining class levels, they instead gain a +2 enhancement bonus to Constitution (no matter how many HD the consumed creature had), which lasts for 1 day.

Feeding destroys the victim's body and prevents any form of raising or resurrection that requires part of the corpse. A wish, miracle, or true resurrection spell can restore a devoured victim to life, but there is a 50% chance that even such powerful magic will fail.

Alternate Form (Su): At 2nd level a barghest can assume the form of a goblin or an unusually large wolf as a standard action.

This is similar to using the polymorph self spell but allows only these two forms.

In wolf form, the barghest's speed is 60 feet, it gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide checks, and it can pass without trace (as the spell) as a free action.

Lesser Barghest Powers (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a barghest can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: levitate, misdirection, and project image.

At 6th level it can use these abilities three times per day, and at 11th level it can use them at will.

The barghest's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the barghest class.

The DC for saves against these abilities is 10 + spell level + barghest's Cha modifier.

Greater Barghest Powers (Sp): Starting at 7th level, a barghest can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: charm monster, charm person, dimension door, and emotion. The barghest's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the barghest class.

The DC for saves against these abilities is 10 + spell level + barghest's Cha modifier.

BELKER

Elemental (Air)

Evil, smoky air elementals, belkers are reclusive monsters that have strange powers to allow them to defend their lairs.

The ability to fly, a high Dexterity score, and elemental immunities are the main attractions of playing this monster as a character, and its abilities make it well-suited for combat or stealth.

A belker begins play with some natural armor and the ability to make wing attacks.

As it gains levels, it develops even more attacks, the ability to fly at great speed, and increases its Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution.

Eventually it gets increased size and reach, the ability to move about in the form of smoke, and its strange smoke claws attack.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, -4 Int. Belkers are quick, but no more intelligent than other common air elementals.
- Speed: Belker land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Belkers can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Auran.
- Elemental: Belkers are immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning, and they are not subject to critical hits.
- Favored Class: Belker.

The best multiclassing choices for a belker are fighter and rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The belker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a belker takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the belker monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Belkers are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A belker receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 9th level.

It gains Weapon Finesse (wing) as a bonus feat at 5th level.

After 12th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Wings: The belker has two wing attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: Starting at 2nd level, the belker has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Claws: Upon reaching 4th level, the belker has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Smoke Form (Su): Most of the time a belker is more or less solid, but starting at 3rd level it can assume a smoke form for up to 5 rounds per day.

It can switch forms once per round as a free action.

A belker in smoke form can fly at its indicated fly speed.

The ability is otherwise similar to a gaseous form spell cast by a 7th-level sorcerer.

At 6th, 9th, and 12th level, the belker can assume smoke form for an additional 5 rounds per day.

Smoke Claws (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, a belker in smoke form can engulf opponents by moving on top of them.

It fills the air around one opponent (which must be at least one size category smaller than it) without provoking an attack of opportunity.

The target must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 belker's HD from class levels + belker's Con modifier) or inhale part of the creature.

Smoke inside the victim solidifies into a claw or talon and begins to rip at the surrounding organs, dealing triple claw damage per round (Strength modifier +0).

The affected creature can attempt another Fortitude save each subsequent round to cough out the semivaporous menace.

CENTAUR

Monstrous Humanoid

Proud and noble beings with the strength and speed of horses and a fondness for archery, centaurs are guardians of the forest.

Centaur tribes trade with many elven communities, and each agrees to protect the other in times of need.

It is under agreements such as these that centaurs may be found traveling with bands of elves, lending their muscles and hooves to defend against evil creatures and despoilers.

The centaur is a strong class suitable for any player who enjoys nature-oriented characters.

It has few special abilities and reasonable ability score modifiers, making a centaur character more than capable of holding its own in a fight compared to barbarians, fighters, and rangers.

Over the levels of this class, a centaur's Strength and Constitution increase to an impressive level, it becomes faster and larger, and it deals more damage with its great hooves.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, -2 Int. Centaurs are quick and agile, but not as mentally adept as humans.
- Speed: Centaur land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Centaurs can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Automatic Languages: Elven, Sylvan.
- Favored Class: Centaur and ranger.

A centaur's centaur class level and ranger class level do not count when determining whether it takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

CLASS SKILLS

The centaur's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a centaur takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the centaur monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Centaurs are proficient with all simple weapons, the heavy lance, and the mighty composite longbow, but with no armor or shields.

Centaurs count as nonhumanoid creatures for the purpose of determining the cost of armor (see Chapter 7 of the Player's Handbook).

Feats: A centaur receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 4th level.

After 6th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Hooves: A centaur has two hoof attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

DJINNI

Outsider (Air, Good)

In many campaigns that include an exotic desert land of flying carpets and scimitar-wielding thugs, the most exotic of all the land's features are often the magical djinn, outsiders from the Elemental Plane of Air and naturally inclined toward good.

In some places they walk the land freely, not tied to a summoning device such as a lamp or ring, and pursue adventure just as a mortal would.

Djinn are good characters for players who like to be effective in combat and still want to have a few magical tricks up their sleeve.

As an outsider, a djinni has a favorable base attack bonus and good saving throws in all three categories.

The scaling of the class revolves around its special powers, particularly the whirlwind, invisibility, and plane shift abilities.

Adjusting ability score progression, slam damage, and acid resistance are simple enough, and the djinni has enough interesting abilities and ability score increases to give the class something intriguing at every level, particularly at the middle and higher levels of the class, where the Hit Dice fall behind the ECL.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Int. Djinn are quick and smart.
- Speed: Djinni land speed is 20 feet, fly speed 30 feet (perfect).
- Darkvision: Djinn can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Auran, Celestial, Common, and Ignan.
- Favored Class: Djinni.

The best multiclassing choices for a djinni are fighter, rogue, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The djinni's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a djinni takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the djinni monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Djinn are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A djinni receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 5th and 11th level.

It receives Dodge as a bonus feat at 3rd level and Improved Initiative as a bonus feat at 4th level.

After 13th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Telepathy: A djinni can communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Slam: A djinni has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Djinn get iterative attacks (multiple attacks with the same weapon at a cumulative -5 penalty) with a slam.

Whirlwind (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a djinni can assume a whirlwind form.

The ability is usable once per day at 4th level and three times per day at 8th level.

A djinni of 12th level or higher can assume whirlwind form at will.

See the djinni's Monster Manual entry for detailed rules about this ability.

Plane Shift (Sp): Starting at 5th level, a djinni can use plane shift.

See the table for how the ability improves as the djinni gains levels.

Spell-Like Abilities: A djinni gains some spell-like abilities at 6th level and others at 9th level. Each of these abilities is usable once per day.

A djinni's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels + 13.

A djinni's gaseous form ability lasts for up to 1 hour.

DRIDER

Aberration

Created by the spider goddess Lolth from her drow worshipers who fail a special test of loyalty and power, driders are outcasts from their society and often wander the Underdark looking for allies or like-minded individuals. Drider may be an appealing choice for players who like dark elves and like playing weird monsters.

Driders are good in combat, good at spellcasting, and pretty good at sneaking around, making them well-rounded creatures suitable for most any role in an adventuring party. The difficulty in balancing the class is that a drider casts spells as a character of its Hit Dice, which means that at most levels a drider gains an automatic benefit of an increase in spellcasting, so its other strong abilities must be placed on levels where it doesn't gain a Hit Die.

The drider progression increases ability scores, spellcasting, poison damage, and natural armor bonus.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Int, +2 Cha.

The selection process that makes drow so powerful means that driders are powerful as well.

- Speed: Drider land speed is 30 feet, climb speed 15 feet. Like any creature with a climb speed, driders have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always take 10 when making Climb checks.
- Darkvision: Driders can see in the dark up to 120 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common, Elven, and Undercommon.
- Favored Class: Drider.

CLASS SKILLS

The drider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a drider takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the drider monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Since every drider is created from a cleric, sorcerer, or wizard, a drider has the same weapon and armor proficiencies as the spellcaster of the appropriate type.

For example, a drider that was once a cleric is proficient with all simple weapons, with all armor, and with shields.

Feats: A drider receives two feats at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: Starting at 2nd level, a drider has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Spell Resistance (Ex): Starting at 6th level, a drider gains spell resistance equal to 4 + class level.

Poison (Ex): The drider's bite injects a poison that deals the indicated primary and secondary damage (DC 10 + 1/2 drider's HD from class levels + drider's Con modifier).

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—clairaudience/clairvoyance, dancing lights, darkness, detect chaos, detect evil, detect good, detect law, detect magic, discern lies, dispel magic, faerie fire, levitate, and suggestion.

A drider's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

The DC for saving throws against these abilities is 10 + drider's Cha modifier + spell level.

Spells: All driders have the ability to cast spells either as a cleric, sorcerer, or wizard (chosen at 1st level).

The drider casts spells as a character of its Hit Dice.

Most drider clerics still worship Lolth and choose two domains from her list (Chaos, Destruction, Evil, and Trickery).

DROW

Drow characters are popular choices for players who like to play evil characters, as well as for those who enjoy scimitar-wielding, misunderstood outcasts.

This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus two racial levels.

DROW BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the drow.

Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dexterity, -2 Constitution, +2 Intelligence.

Size: Drow are Medium size.

Speed: Drow base land speed is 30 feet.

Proficiencies: A drow is proficient with the hand crossbow, rapier, and short sword.

Dancing Lights (Sp): A drow may use dancing lights (caster level equals drow's character level) once per day.

Darkvision (Ex): A drow has darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Immunities (Ex): A drow is immune to magic sleep effects.

Light Blindness (Ex): Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds a drow for 1 round.

On subsequent rounds, he is dazzled as long as he remains in the affected area.

Skill Bonuses: A drow has a +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

Furthermore, a drow who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he were actively looking for it.

Automatic Languages: Common, Elven, Undercommon.

Bonus Languages: Abyssal, Aquan, Draconic, Drow Sign Language, Gnome, Goblin.

Favored Class: Wizard (male) or cleric (female).

A multiclass drow's wizard or cleric class (male or female, respectively) does not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.

DROW RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the drow racial class.

Darkvision (Ex): A 1st-level drow's darkvision range increases to 120 feet.

Faerie Fire (Sp): At 1st level, the drow may use faerie fire (caster level equals drow's character level) once per day.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 1st level, the drow gains spell resistance equal to 5 + character level.

At 2nd level, her spell resistance increases to 11 + character level.

Darkness (Sp): At 2nd level, the drow may use darkness (caster level equals drow's character level) once per day.

Saving Throw Bonuses (Ex): At 2nd level, a drow gains a +2 racial bonus on Will saves against spells and spell-like abilities.

Table SP-20: The Drow Racial Class

Level	CR	Special

DUERGAR

A duergar is a good character choice for players who like dwarves with a creepier and darker edge.

This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus one racial level.

DUERGAR BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the duergar.

Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Constitution, -4 Charisma.

Size: Duergar are Medium size.
Speed: Duergar base land speed is 20 feet. However, a duergar can move at this speed even when wearing medium or heavy armor or when carrying a medium or heavy load (unlike other creatures, whose speed is reduced in such situations).
Combat Bonuses: A duergar gains a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against monsters of the giant type. Any time a creature loses its Dexterity bonus (if any) to Armor Class, such as when it's caught flat-footed, it loses its dodge bonus, too.
Darkvision (Ex): A duergar has darkvision to a 60-foot range.
Enlarge Person (Sp): Once per day, duergar may use enlarge person (caster level equals twice the duergar's character level, minimum 3rd). This ability affects only the duergar and whatever she carries.
Light Sensitivity (Ex): Duergar are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.
Stonecunning: This ability grants a duergar a +2 racial bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework traps, new construction (even when built to match the old), unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and the like. Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework. A duergar who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if she were actively searching, and she can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can. A duergar can also intuit depth, sensing her approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up.

DWARF/DUERGAR TRANSITION

In some campaigns (such as the Forgotten Realms Campaign Setting), duergar were normal dwarves until their clan was enslaved by mind flayers. Over the course of many generations, these dwarves eventually developed magical powers and the ability to resist certain attacks, and they used these abilities to escape their monstrous captors. Using the transition class rules, a normal dwarf could explore the inner magical potential of his duergar kin and actually become a gray dwarf at the cost of a 1-level transition class. This transition class assumes the base creature is a hill dwarf (a standard dwarf as presented in the Player's Handbook), though it can easily be adapted for other dwarf subtypes (such as the gold dwarves of the Forgotten Realms Campaign Setting).

Saving Throw Bonuses: A duergar gains a +2 racial bonus on saving throws against paralysis, phantasms, poison, spells, and spell-like effects and a +1 racial bonus on attack rolls against orcs and goblinoids.
Skill Bonuses: A duergar gains a +2 racial bonus on Appraise checks that are related to stone or metal items and on Craft checks that are related to stone or metal.
Stability: A duergar gains a +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped when standing on the ground (but not when climbing, flying, riding, or otherwise not standing firmly on the ground).
Automatic Languages: Common, Dwarven, Undercommon.
Bonus Languages: Draconic, Giant, Goblin, Orc, Terran.
Favored Class: Fighter. A multiclass duergar's fighter class does not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.
DUERGAR RACIAL CLASS FEATURES
 All of the following are class features of the duergar racial class.
Darkvision (Ex): A 1st-level duergar's darkvision range increases to 120 feet.
Immunities: At 1st level, the duergar becomes immune to paralysis, phantasms, and poison. This ability replaces the base saving throw bonuses against these effects included in the duergar's base racial features.
Invisibility (Sp): A duergar may use invisibility (caster level equals twice the duergar's character level, minimum 3rd) once per day. This ability affects only the duergar and whatever she carries.
Skill Bonuses (Ex): A 1st-level duergar gains a +1 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

DWARF/DUERGAR TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dwarf/duergar transition class.
Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.
Darkvision (Ex): When the dwarf/duergar reaches 1st level, the range of his darkvision increases to 120 feet.
Enlarge Person (Sp): Once per day, a dwarf/duergar may use enlarge person (caster level equals twice the dwarf/duergar's character level, minimum 3rd). This ability affects only the character and whatever he carries.
Immunities: The dwarf/duergar becomes immune to paralysis, phantasms, and poison. This ability replaces the base dwarf's resistance to poison.
Invisibility (Sp): A dwarf/duergar may use invisibility (caster level equals twice the dwarf/duergar's character level, minimum 3rd) once per day.

This ability affects only the character and whatever he carries.

Languages: The dwarf/duergar becomes fluent in Common, Dwarven, and Undercommon if he was not already.

If he has any bonus language slots available, he may select bonus languages from the following list: Draconic, Giant, Goblin, Orc, Terran.

These languages are in addition to the hill dwarf's automatic and bonus languages.

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Once the dwarf/duergar completes his transformation, his eyes become sensitive to light.

He is dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Skill Bonuses (Ex): The dwarf/duergar gains a +1 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

EARTH ELEMENTAL, LARGE

Elemental (Earth)

Formed of the essence of stone, earth elementals are strong, patient, and enduring.

Their rocky fists can beat enemies to a pulp, and they have an innate understanding of how best to crush a landbound opponent.

Earth elementals are natural fighters or even barbarians, but they are too slow and dumb to be much good at anything else.

The earth elemental class begins with a Small elemental that eventually progresses to Large size.

An earth elemental has only three special abilities, two of which are low-powered enough to grant at low level.

The third special ability, damage reduction, is shifted to the higher portion of the class progression because it is a significant ability and is something that the Medium-size elemental does not have.

The rest of the class features are predominantly ability score increases, natural armor improvements, and increases to the elemental's slam damage.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Str, -2 Dex, -4 Int. Earth elementals are immensely strong, but ponderous in action and thought.
- Small: As Small creatures, earth elementals gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.
- Speed: Earth elemental land speed is 20 feet.
- Darkvision: Earth elementals can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Elemental: Earth elementals are immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning, and they are not subject to critical hits.

• Automatic Languages: Terran.

• Favored Class: Earth elemental.

The best multiclassing choices for an earth elemental are barbarian and fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The earth elemental's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Medium-size, an earth elemental loses its +4 size bonus on Hide checks.

On reaching Large size, an earth elemental takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the earth elemental monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Earth elementals are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: An earth elemental receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 8th level.

It gains Power Attack as a bonus feat at 1st level.

After 13th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: The earth elemental has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus $1\frac{1}{2}$ times its Strength bonus.

Earth Mastery: An earth elemental gains a +1 bonus on attacks and damage if both it and its foe touch the ground.

If an opponent is airborne or waterborne, the earth elemental takes a -4 penalty on attack and damage rolls.

Push: An earth elemental can start a bull rush maneuver without provoking an attack of opportunity.

The combat modifiers from the earth mastery ability also apply to its opposed Strength checks.

EFREETI

Outsider (Evil, Fire)

Like their cousins the djinn, efreet have all of the mystique of the lands of swirling sands and flying carpets, plus a treasure chest of magical powers and physical ability. Efreet make excellent fighters, rogues, sorcerers, and wizards.

Efreet are appealing character choices to players who like to be devastating in melee combat and still have a few magical abilities for use in situations where sheer brawn is insufficient.

Efreet are strong and powerful with several spell-like abilities.

Building the monster class involves spacing out the availability and use of the spell-like abilities and distributing the ability score increases across all the class's levels.

By far the class's most powerful ability is wish, which does not become available until an efreeti reaches 18th level and initially at a smaller number of uses per day than a wizard of the same level.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con.
- Sometimes said to be made of bronze and flame, efreet are built physically tough to withstand the harsh environment of their home plane.
- Speed: Efreeti land speed is 20 feet.
- Darkvision: Efreet can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Auran, Common, Ignan, and Infernal.
- Favored Class: Efreeti.

The best multiclassing choices for an efreeti are barbarian, fighter, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The efreeti's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an efreeti takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the efreeti monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Efreet are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An efreeti receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 5th, 11th, and 17th level.

It also receives Improved Initiative as a bonus feat at 14th level.

After 19th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: An efreeti has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Efreet get iterative attacks (multiple attacks with the same weapon at a cumulative -5 penalty) with a slam.

Telepathy: An efreeti can communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Heat (Ex): The efreeti's red-hot body deals the indicated amount of fire damage in addition to normal damage when it hits in melee with a slam, or when grappling, and each round it maintains a hold.

Spell-Like Abilities: An efreeti gains spell-like abilities at 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 6th, 8th, 12th, and 18th level.

Each of these abilities is usable either once per day or at will, as indicated.

At 19th level, an efreeti can use wish three times per day instead of once.

An efreeti's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels + 8.

An efreeti's gaseous form ability lasts for up to 1 hour.

Plane Shift (Sp): Starting at 5th level, an efreeti can use plane shift.

The table indicates how the ability improves as the efreeti gains levels.

ETTERCAP

Aberration

Weird, spiderlike creatures, ettercaps are cunning but not particularly strong or intelligent.

They are good at sneaking about, and if dressed in a heavy cloak, one can pass for a fat, squat human.

They have few interests other than eating and breeding, but it is possible to find a wandering ettercap in search of a mate or a particularly large meal.

Ettercaps are fun characters for players who like things a little weird and like arachnid monsters.

The bulk of an ettercap's power comes from its debilitating poison, which is handy for those wanting to capture prisoners for interrogation.

Its ability to make webs is useful when an area can be prepared in anticipation of an attack, and it has a strong bite attack and good Hit Dice.

Although not the best fighters, ettercaps make good second-rank allies that fill the role of a rogue, using poison instead of a sneak attack and carrying a natural supply of rope and nets.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Dex, -4 Int, -2 Cha.

Like the vermin they resemble and live with, ettercaps are quick but not too smart or personable.

- Speed: Ettercap land speed is 30 feet, with a climb speed of 30 feet.

Like any creature with a climb speed, ettercap have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks, and can always take 10 when making Climb checks.

- Darkvision: Ettercaps can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Ettercaps can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Hide checks and Spot checks in shadow.

- Automatic Languages: Common.

- Favored Class: Ettercap.

The best multiclassing choice for an ettercap is rogue, and ettercaps also make good monks.

CLASS SKILLS

The ettercap's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ettercap monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ettercaps are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: An ettercap receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 5th level.

After 9th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: An ettercap has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Poison (Ex): The ettercap's bite injects a poison that deals the indicated primary and secondary damage (DC 10 + 1/2 ettercap's HD from class levels + ettercap's Con modifier).

Claws: Starting at 2nd level, an ettercap has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Web (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, ettercaps are able to spin sticky webs suitable for combat.

These work like nets (see Chapter 7 of the Player's Handbook) and have the abilities given in the Monster Manual ettercap description.

Spinning and throwing the web is a standard action.

At first the ettercap can use this ability only one time per day; at 5th, 7th, and 9th level this increases to two, four, and eight times per day.

FEYTOUCHED

Feytouched are good choices for players who like exotic characters with a touch of mischief and mystery. This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus one racial level.

FEYTOUCHED BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the feytouched.

Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dexterity, -2 Constitution, +2 Charisma.

Fey Type: Feytouched are fey.

Thus, they are vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the fey type but immune to effects that target other types.

For example, a feytouched would be subject to the extra damage from a fey bane sword but immune to hold person, since that spell affects only humanoids.

Size: Feytouched are Medium size.

Speed: Feytouched base land speed is 30 feet.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A feytouched can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

He retains the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

Saving Throw Bonuses: A feytouched has a +4 racial bonus on saving throws against mind-affecting effects.

Automatic Languages: Common, Sylvan.

Bonus Languages: Elven, Gnome, Halfling.

Favored Class: Bard or rogue.

A multiclass feytouched's bard and rogue classes do not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.

FEYTOUCHED RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the feytouched racial class.

Charm Person (Sp): A 1st-level feytouched may use charm person (caster level equals feytouched's character level; save DC 11 + feytouched's Cha modifier) once per day.

Immunities (Ex): At 1st level, a feytouched becomes immune to all mind-affecting effects.

This ability replaces the saving throw bonuses against these effects included in the feytouched's base racial features.

Skill Bonuses: At 1st level, a feytouched gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks.

Table SP-22: The Feytouched Racial Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Charm person , immunities, skill bonuses

FEYTOUCHED/HALF-FEY TRANSITION

Feytouched creatures bear the fingerprint of the weird and pay for it with a +1 level adjustment.

Those who embrace their wild side can go on to become half-fey, and this transition requires only one level instead of the normal two for the standard template class.

FEYTOUCHED/HALF-FEY TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the feytouched/half-fey transition class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Immunity to Enchantments (Ex): A feytouched/half-fey is immune to all spells and effects from the Enchantment school.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 1st level, a feytouched/half-fey with an Intelligence or Wisdom score of 8 or better gains spell-like abilities.

The exact abilities gained depend on her character level, according to the following table.

Minimum Character Level	Spell-Like Abilities Gained
1st	Charm person at will, faerie fire or glitterdust 1/day, hypnotism 1/day
3rd	Detect law 3/day, enthrall or sleep 1/day
5th	Protection from law 3/day
7th	Confusion or emotion 1/day
9th	Eyebite or lesser geas 1/day
11th	Dominate person or hold monster 1/day
13th	Mass invisibility 1/day
15th	Geas/quest or mass suggestion 1/day
17th	Insanity or mass charm 1/day
19th	Otto's irresistible dance 1/day

In each case, the caster level equals the feytouched/half-fey's character level. Save DCs, where applicable, are Charisma-based (10 + spell level + feytouched/half-fey's Charisma modifier).

Wings (Ex): A feytouched/half-fey grows insectlike wings (usually butterfly-type), which she may use to fly at up to double her base land speed with good maneuverability.

Level	CR	Special

FIENDISH

Fiendish creatures are evil versions of creatures from the Material Plane.

Drawn to the world of mortals by magic, they do the bidding of their summoners for the most part, though some simply wreak havoc on their own until they are slain or banished to their native planes.

"Fiendish" is usually an inherited template, but it could be acquired through special magical rituals as well.

Through powerful evil ceremonies or exposure to strange energies from the home planes of fiends, a nonfiendish character can acquire the fiendish template.

Such beings can advance in the fiendish template class, just as natural-born fiendish creatures can if they wish to develop their powers more slowly.

Since all fiendish creatures are evil, the DM is free to require that a good or neutral character who advances as a fiendish creature become fully evil by the time she has completed the class progression.

Because the fiendish template and the celestial template differ only in alignment focus, the fiendish template class can easily be used as a model to create a celestial template class.

The book Anger of Angels (also by Sean K Reynolds) from Malhavoc Press presents the celestial template as a template class.

FIENDISH TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the fiendish template class.

Many of these features are gained only at certain minimum character levels.

When the character gains a new level in any class, consult Table SP-9 to determine whether she gains any new benefits from the fiendish class.

Darkvision (Ex): At 1st level, the fiendish creature gains darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Minimum Intelligence (Ex): If the base character's Intelligence score was below 3, increase it to 3.

Do not recalculate her racial skill points (if any), but skill points derived from future Hit Dice use the character's Intelligence score at the time the new levels or Hit Dice are gained, as normal.

Resistances (Ex): At 1st level, a fiendish creature gains resistance 5 to cold and fire.

At 2nd level, each of these resistances increases to 10, provided that the fiendish creature has 8 or more HD. The resistances of a fiendish creature with 7 or fewer HD do not change.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day, a fiendish creature may attempt to smite a good creature with one normal melee attack.

This attack deals extra damage equal to her character level (maximum +20) against a good foe.

If she accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but is still used up for the day.

Extraplanar Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, a fiendish character gains the extraplanar subtype.

Type Change (Ex): If the base creature is an animal or vermin, its type changes to magical beast, but otherwise the type is unchanged.

If the type does change, do not recalculate the character's Hit Dice, base attack bonus, base save bonuses, or skill points.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 2nd level, a fiendish character gains spell resistance equal to her character level +5 (maximum 25).

Damage Reduction (Su): A 2nd-level fiendish character has no damage reduction if her character level is 3rd or lower.

Table SP-9: The Fiendish Template Class

Fiendish Class Level	Character Level	CR	Special

	8th+	+2	Resistances (cold 10, fire 10)
	12th+		Damage reduction 10/magic

FIRE ELEMENTAL, LARGE

Elemental (Fire)

These beings of sentient, animate fire are capable of incredible destruction, able to burn an entire village with a minimum of effort.

The fascination of fire and the strangeness of being an elemental creature are two strong attractions of this monster class, and a fire elemental player character can make a powerful fighter or even a respectable sorcerer, particularly if the character focuses on "ground-zero" fire magic.

When part of a group that does not mind some reckless action and collateral damage, a fire elemental can be a valuable party member.

The fire elemental class begins with a Small elemental that eventually progresses to Large size.

Creating the fire elemental monster class is centered on the creature's attack ability.

While its slam does a respectable amount of damage, it is the additional fire damage and potential for igniting the target that really make the elemental's attacks dangerous. The fire elemental also has favorable ability score modifiers that must accrue over several levels, and at the highest levels in the class it gains enough damage reduction to negate most attacks from weak creatures.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Dex, -4 Int. Fire elementals are remarkably nimble but can be as mindless as normal fires.
- Small: As Small creatures, fire elementals gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.
- Speed: Fire elemental land speed is 50 feet.

She has damage reduction 5/magic if her character level is between 4th and 11th (inclusive), or damage reduction 10/magic if her character level is 12th or higher.

A fiendish character with damage reduction treats her natural weapons as magic weapons for the purpose of bypassing the damage reduction of other creatures.

- Darkvision: Fire elementals can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Ignan.
- Elemental: Fire elementals are immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning, and they are not subject to critical hits.
- Favored Class: Fire elemental.

The best multiclassing choices for a fire elemental are fighter, barbarian, and rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The fire elemental's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Medium-size, a fire elemental loses its +4 size bonus on Hide checks.

On reaching Large size, a fire elemental takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the fire elemental monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fire elementals are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A fire elemental receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 9th level.

It gains Improved Initiative as a bonus feat at 1st level and Weapon Finesse (slam) as a bonus feat at 2nd level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: The elemental has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus to the normal (nonfire) damage.

For example, a 1st-level fire elemental with 12 Strength deals 1d4+1 points of damage plus 1d4 points of fire damage with a slam.

Fire Subtype (Ex): A fire elemental is immune to fire damage and takes a -10 penalty on saves against cold attacks.

If a cold attack does not allow a saving throw, the creature takes double damage instead.

Burn (Ex): When a fire elemental reaches 2nd level, a creature hit by its slam attack must succeed on a Reflex saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 fire elemental's HD from class levels + fire elemental's Con modifier) or catch on fire.

A burning creature can take a move-equivalent action to put out the flames.

Creatures hitting a fire elemental with natural weapons or unarmed attacks take fire damage as though hit by the elemental's attack, and also catch fire unless they succeed on a Reflex save.

Water Avoidance: A fire elemental cannot enter water or any other nonflammable liquid.

A body of water is an impassible barrier unless the elemental can step or jump over it.

FIRE GIANT

Giant (Fire)

Of great size and physical strength, fire giants are the most military-minded of all evil giants and the most likely to use quality weapons and armor.

Raised in a strict hierarchy of family and clan status, fire giants are used to taking orders and can fit in quite well with a group of adventurers once they have established their place in the pecking order.

Fire giants can withstand ballista bolts and powerful fireballs without flinching, and the toughest ones have been known to singly take on dragons of their own size and live to talk about it.

Fire giants have few special abilities.

Their fire immunity takes effect early, leaving only reach and the ability to throw rocks as ranged weapons, neither of which is particularly unusual for creatures of their size and Hit Dice.

The Hit Dice and ability scores increase from level 1 to the final ECL of 19.

Fire giants are so strong and tough that they have an ability score increase at almost every level, which makes a fire giant attractive even though it doesn't gain the feats or special abilities of a fighter or other martial class.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Str.

Fire giants are very strong and become even stronger as they mature.

- Speed: Fire giant land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Fire giants can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common, Giant.
- Favored Class: Fire giant.

The best multiclassing choice for a fire giant is fighter.

- Patron Deity: Surtur, deity of all fire giants.

Most fire giants that multiclass as clerics worship Surtur, a fire giant of immense size with a sword of flame, and choose two domains from his list (Evil, Law, Trickery, and War).

CLASS SKILLS

The fire giant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a fire giant takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the fire giant monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fire giants are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Feats: A fire giant receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 8th, 12th, 15th, and 19th level.

After 19th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Fire Subtype (Ex): A fire giant is immune to fire damage and takes a -10 penalty on saves against cold attacks.

If a cold attack does not allow a saving throw, the creature takes double damage instead.

Rock Throwing (Ex): Fire giants have a +1 racial bonus on attack rolls when throwing rocks.

A giant can throw a rock for the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

A rock's maximum range is five range increments.

Rock Catching (Ex): A fire giant can catch Small, Medium-size, or Large rocks (or similar projectiles).

Once per round, a fire giant that would normally be hit by a rock can make a Reflex save to catch it as a free action.

The DC is 15 for a Small rock, 20 for a Medium-size one, and 25 for a Large one.

(If the projectile has a magical bonus to attack, the DC increases by that amount).

The giant must be ready for and aware of the attack.

FLAMEBROTHER

Outsider (Fire)

Like their larger cousins, flamebrother salamanders are quasi-serpentine creatures from the Elemental Plane of Fire.

Gifted with a natural talent for metalworking and quite effective in combat with their multiple attacks and constant fire damage, flamebrothers are a good choice for players who want a monster with a low starting ECL yet with some exotic abilities.

A flamebrother sometimes joins an adventuring party after being brought to the Material Plane by lesser planar ally spells and then choosing to remain on this plane after completing its mission.

The building blocks of the flamebrother monster class are its immunity to fire, strong natural armor, ability score increases, constrict ability, and additional fire damage to its attacks.

Damage from heat starts out low and increases slightly at the end of the class.

The constrict ability is gained in the middle of the class progression.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Int, +2 Wis. Flamebrothers are smart and alert.
- Small: As Small creatures, flamebrothers gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.
- Weapon Familiarity: Flamebrothers treat the salamander halfspear (see Chapter 5: Equipment) as a martial weapon rather than as an exotic weapon.
- Speed: Flamebrother land speed is 20 feet.

- Darkvision: Flamebrothers can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Craft (metalworking) checks.
- Automatic Languages: Ignan.
- Favored Class: Flamebrother.

CLASS SKILLS

The flamebrother's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the flamebrother monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Flamebrothers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A flamebrother receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 5th level.

After 7th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Tail Slap: The flamebrother has a tail slap attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Fire Subtype (Ex): A flamebrother is immune to fire damage and takes a -10 penalty on saves against cold attacks.

If a cold attack does not allow a saving throw, the creature takes double damage instead.

Heat (Ex): A flamebrother's body generates so much heat that its natural attacks and attacks with metal weapons deal the indicated amount of fire damage in addition to the damage dealt by the attack.

Constrict (Ex): A flamebrother deals automatic tail slap damage (including fire damage) with a successful grapple check against creatures of up to Medium-size.

FLESH GOLEM

Construct

Usually created as guardians by spellcasters or perhaps some lunatic with the proper tools, flesh golems are unique creations, each with its own story and purpose.

Those rare few that gain a spark of actual intelligence and manage to wrest themselves free of their masters are one in a million and are often haunted by images of their past.

Flesh golems are interesting character choices for players that wish to explore the “misunderstood formerly human monster” stereotype, as well as those that simply enjoy near-invulnerability and powerful melee skills.

The core of the flesh golem character class is its immunities.

The construct template and its energy immunities are with the class from the start, but are balanced by its poor attack bonus and saving throws and the risk of instant death if brought to 0 hit points.

Over time the golem’s resistance to magic builds up in the form of spell resistance, eventually becoming complete magic immunity.

The rest of the class’s abilities are based on increasing its ability scores, natural armor, damage reduction, and slam damage, which progress at a linear rate.

Upon attaining the last few levels of the class, the golem grows to its full size and gains an extended reach.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: –2 Dex, –6 Int, Con —, Cha 1.

Flesh golems are dead flesh given a semblance of life through magic, but are not as fast or smart as truly living things.

As a construct, a flesh golem does not have a Constitution score.

The flesh golem’s Charisma score of 1 is permanent. It cannot be increased by any means.

• Construct: A flesh golem is immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, disease, and similar effects.

It is not subject to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, energy drain, or death from massive damage. While constructs do not heal damage naturally through rest, a flesh golem character can.

A flesh golem is immune to any effect that requires a Fortitude save unless it affects objects.

When a flesh golem is reduced to 0 hit points, it is immediately destroyed.

A destroyed golem can be reanimated with a limited wish, wish, or miracle spell (the first spell causes the golem to lose a level; the latter two do not).

• Energy Immunity: A flesh golem takes no damage from acid, cold, electricity, fire, or sonic attacks.

However, certain energy attacks can affect it (see below).

• Speed: Flesh golem land speed is 30 feet.

Golems cannot run.

• Darkvision: Flesh golems can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Automatic Languages: Common.

• Favored Class: Flesh golem.

The best multiclassing choice for a flesh golem is fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

As a construct, the flesh golem receives no class skills or skill points.

Once a flesh golem multiclassed after 15th level, it receives skill points normally for its other classes.

On reaching Large size, a flesh golem takes a –4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the flesh golem monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A flesh golem has no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A flesh golem receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 8th, and 14th level.

After 15th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: A flesh golem has two slam attacks that are natural weapons, dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Energy Vulnerability (Ex): While flesh golems are not damaged by any energy attack, certain energy attacks from a magical source affect them in strange ways.

Spells, spell-like abilities, and supernatural abilities that create cold or fire cause them to slow (as the spell) for 2d6 rounds.

Those that create electricity heal a flesh golem 1 hit point for every 3 points of damage the electricity would otherwise deal.

For example, a flesh golem hit by a lightning bolt for 18 points of damage would instead heal 6 hit points.

Flesh golems never roll saving throws against electricity effects.

Berserk (Ex): When a flesh golem enters combat, there is a cumulative 1% chance each round that the spirit that gives it a semblance of life goes berserk.

The uncontrolled golem goes on a rampage, attacking the nearest living creature or smashing some object smaller than itself if no creature is within reach, then moving on to spread more destruction.

A golem stops berserking when it has no creatures or appropriate objects within its line of sight.

The golem’s creator, if within 60 feet, can try to regain control by speaking firmly and persuasively to the golem, which requires a successful Charisma check (DC 19) and can be attempted every round.

It takes 1 minute of rest by the golem to reset the golem's berserk chance to 0%.

Spell Resistance (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a flesh golem gains spell resistance equal to its class level + 10.

Magic Immunity (Su): At 9th level, a flesh golem becomes immune to all spells, spell-like abilities, and supernatural abilities (except fire, cold, and electricity effects, as described in the Energy Vulnerability entry).

This ability supersedes the golem's spell resistance ability.

FROST GIANT

Giant (Cold)

Like fire giants, frost giants are big, strong, and mean.

Unlike fire giants, they are reckless and wantonly destructive, more likely to fight as a loose horde than in strict military formation.

Their rebellious nature makes it likely for individual giants to strike out on their own to escape a tribal rival and come into contact with groups of adventurers.

Frost giants are good choices for players who like barbarian characters or Vikings and want something a little more out of the ordinary.

Frost giants have few special abilities.

Their cold immunity takes effect early, leaving only reach and the ability to throw rocks as ranged weapons, neither of which is particularly unusual for a creature of their size and Hit Dice.

The Hit Dice and ability scores increase from 1st level to the final ECL of 18.

Frost giants are so powerful that they have an ability score increase at almost every level, which makes a frost giant attractive even though it doesn't gain the feats or special abilities of a fighter or other martial class.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Str.

- Patron Deity: Thrym, deity of all frost giants.

Most frost giants that multiclass as clerics worship Thrym, a frost giant of immense size with an icy greataxe, and choose two domains from his list (Chaos, Destruction, Evil, and War).

CLASS SKILLS

The frost giant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a frost giant takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the frost giant monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Frost giants are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

Feats: A frost giant receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 8th, 12th, and 15th level.

After 18th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Rock Throwing (Ex): Frost giants have a +1 racial bonus on attack rolls when throwing rocks.

The giant can throw a rock for the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

A rock's maximum range is five range increments.

Rock Catching (Ex): A frost giant can catch Small, Medium-size, or Large rocks (or similar projectiles).

Once per round, a frost giant that would normally be hit by a rock can make a Reflex save to catch it as a free action.

The DC is 15 for a Small rock, 20 for a Medium-size one, and 25 for a Large one.

(If the projectile has a magical bonus to attack, the DC increases by that amount).

The giant must be ready for and aware of the attack.

GHAELE

Outsider (Chaotic, Good)

The ghaeles are the knight-errants of the celestials, tasked with seeking out evil wherever it rears its head.

Although quite capable of fighting evil outright, they prefer to aid mortals in their fight against evil, training them to use their abilities and setting them on the right course.

Ghaeles have phenomenal powers at their disposal, which make them appealing choices for players.

A ghaele begins play with the ability to cast spells as a cleric, plus resistance to three energy types.

As it gains levels, its spellcasting ability increases, as do its resistances (some of which eventually become immunities).

It develops many spell-like abilities, spell resistance, and damage reduction, all of which increase in power over time.

Its ability scores increase as well, and it gains the power to become a globe of pure energy that can fly and fire beams of pure light.

A ghaele has so many abilities that they must be spread over twenty levels to create a balanced character.

Because its 10 Hit Dice are far below its actual ECL, when part of a group of adventurers, a ghaele must take care that it does not overestimate its ability to keep up with the clerics and fighters during combat.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: None.

Young ghaeles are physically and mentally no greater or lesser than a typical human, but over time they become very powerful.

- Speed: Ghaele land speed is 50 feet.

- Darkvision: Ghaeles can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Ghaeles can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Saves: +4 racial bonus on saving throws against poison.

- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, and Draconic.

- Favored Class: Ghaele.

Because ghaeles have an ECL of 20, multiclassing requires the use of epic level rules (see Epic Level Handbook for more information).

CLASS SKILLS

The ghaele's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any three, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ghaele monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ghaeles are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A ghaele receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 7th, and 15th level.

After 20th level it gains feats normally according to its character level (which requires epic level advancement rules; see Epic Level Handbook for more information).

Spells: A ghaele casts spells as a cleric of its class level (maximum caster level 14th) and may also prepare spells from the Air, Animal, Chaos, Good, and Plant domains as if they were on the cleric spell list.

Lesser Ghaele Powers (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, a ghaele can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: aid, alter self, color spray, comprehend languages, continual flame, cure light wounds, dancing lights, detect evil, detect thoughts, and see invisibility.

At 5th level it can use these abilities three times per day, and at 8th level it can use them at will.

The ghaele's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from the ghaele class, to a maximum caster level of 12th (save DC 10 + spell level + Cha modifier).

Spell Resistance (Ex): At 3rd level, a ghaele gains spell resistance equal to its class level +8.

Ghaele Powers (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, a ghaele can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: chain lightning, charm monster, dispel magic, hold monster, improved invisibility (self only), major image, and wall of force.

At 9th level it can use any of these except chain lightning and wall of force three times per day, and at 12th level it can use any of them except chain lightning and wall of force at will.

Protective Aura (Su): Starting at 6th level, as a free action a ghaele can surround itself with a nimbus of light having a radius of 20 feet.

This light acts as a magic circle against evil (but providing +4 bonuses instead of +2 bonuses).

At 10th level, the protective aura also functions as a minor globe of invulnerability.

The ghaele's caster level for these effects is its Hit Dice from ghaele class levels.

The aura can be dispelled, but the ghaele can create it again as a free action on its next turn.

Alternate Form (Su): Upon reaching 7th level, as a standard action a ghaele can assume the form of an incorporeal globe of color 5 feet in diameter.

In globe form, it can fly at speed 150 feet (perfect), fire light rays (see below), and use its spell-like abilities, but it cannot make other physical attacks, use its gaze, or cast spells.

The ghaele can remain in either form indefinitely, and dispel magic and similar spells do not cause it to revert to another form.

If killed, it does not revert to another form.

A true seeing spell used to view a ghaele with this ability reveals both forms simultaneously.

Light Ray (Ex): A ghaele in globe form can project two light rays per round with a range of 300 feet, dealing the indicated damage.

Gaze (Su): At 7th level, a ghaele gains a gaze attack in its humanoid form that can kill or cause fear.

The range of the attack and the maximum HD of creatures it can affect increase as the ghaele attains higher levels.

Evil creatures of the indicated HD or less must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 ghaele's HD from class levels + ghaele's Cha modifier) or die instantly.

Those that succeed are affected as though by a fear spell for 2d10 rounds.

Nonevil creatures of the indicated HD or less and evil creatures with more than the indicated HD must succeed on a Will save or suffer the fear effect.

Greater Ghaele Powers (Sp): Beginning at 14th level, a ghaele can use prismatic spray and teleport without error (self plus 50 pounds of objects only) each once per day as a sorcerer of his class level (maximum caster level 12th).

At 17th level it can use teleport without error three times per day, and at 20th level it can use teleport without error at will.

Positive Energy (Ex): A ghaele can infuse its melee weapon with celestial power, causing it deal an additional 2d6 points of positive energy damage to evil creatures.

Infusing a melee weapon in this manner requires 1 minute of concentration and lasts for 1 day, but the power vanishes immediately if the weapon leaves the celestial's possession.

GHOST

Ghosts are the spectral remains of dead creatures that stubbornly refuse to leave the world of the living.

Though many adventurers are stubborn, they are no more likely to return as ghosts than normal people are—perhaps because adventurers often have access to raise dead and therefore expect to be brought back to life eventually.

Nevertheless, an occasional adventurer does force herself into an undead state through sheer willpower when the life force leaves her body.

Like all ghosts, such an adventurer must have a strong reason for persisting in an undead form.

Thus, a player wishing to play a ghost character should consult with the DM to develop a suitable reason for the ghost's existence and determine appropriate circumstances under which she can rest in peace.

"Ghost" is an acquired template usually gained upon an intelligent creature's death.

Such a creature can advance in the ghost template class and develop her powers slowly if desired.

GHOST TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ghost template class.

Ethereal (Ex): A ghost is an ethereal creature.

On the Ethereal Plane, she is solid and uses the same natural armor bonus on the Ethereal Plane as she did when she was alive.

Furthermore, she can interact normally with other creatures on that plane, and her attacks and spells function normally against them.

Like all ethereal creatures, a ghost is invisible to and cannot interact with creatures on the Material Plane, nor can material creatures harm her (but see manifestation, below). If somehow bodily transported to the Material Plane (with a plane shift or gate spell, for example) she can physically interact with other material creatures because she is solid, but she cannot manifest or return to the Ethereal Plane without magic.

A ghost is native to both the Ethereal and the Material Planes, so she is not considered extraplanar when on either of those planes.

Fly (Ex): On the Ethereal Plane, a ghost has a fly speed of 30 feet, with perfect maneuverability, though she can also move at same rate she did while alive.

A manifested ghost flies as an incorporeal creature with a speed of 30 feet (again with perfect maneuverability).

Ghostly Equipment (Ex): A ghost normally appears with ethereal copies of the equipment and other items she carried when she died.

This equipment works normally on the Ethereal Plane, but like all ethereal items, it passes harmlessly through material objects or creatures.

A ghost with an ethereal magic weapon can manifest and attack with it, though her attacks are subject to a 50% incorporeal miss chance unless the weapon has the ghost touch property.

This phenomenon works much like a creature on the Material Plane trying to attack an incorporeal creature with a magical weapon.

These ethereal copies of the original items fade away if separated from the ghost or if the ghost is laid to rest.

The original material items that the ghost carried in life remain behind, just as her physical remains do.

If another creature seizes one of the originals, the ethereal copy fades away.

This loss invariably angers the ghost, who stops at nothing to return the item to its original resting place.

A canny ghost character arranges to have her original possessions hidden in a place where they will not be disturbed, so that she can use her ethereal equipment indefinitely.

Ghost Skills: At 1st level, a ghost gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

This bonus increases to +4 at 3rd level, to +6 at 4th level, and to +8 at 5th level.

Manifestation (Su): A ghost on the Ethereal Plane can partially enter the Material Plane at will.

Doing so makes her visible to creatures on the Material Plane, though she remains incorporeal with respect to them.

However, she also remains partially on the Ethereal Plane, where she is not incorporeal.

Opponents on either the Material Plane or the Ethereal Plane can attack a manifested ghost.

The ghost's incorporeality helps to protect her from foes on the Material Plane because of the 50% incorporeal miss chance that applies to attacks from such creatures, but she has no such protection from foes on the Ethereal Plane. A manifested ghost can attack with a ghost power (see below) that requires a touch attack or with a ghost touch weapon (see ghostly equipment, below).

Spells cast by a manifested ghost affect both ethereal and material targets normally, except for those that rely on touch, which work only on ethereal targets.

Undeath: A ghost is the undead spirit of a slain person. Thus, at 1st level, her type changes to "undead (augmented humanoid)", and she gains all the normal benefits and drawbacks that go with that type.

She no longer has a Constitution score, so she loses any Constitution bonus or penalty to hit points, saving throws, and skill checks, though she uses her Charisma score for Concentration checks.

She also becomes immune to many attacks (including critical hits and sneak attacks), but she is subject to turn or rebuke undead attempts and is immediately destroyed if brought to 0 or fewer hit points (but see Rejuvenation, below).

All of her Hit Dice (current and future) increase to d12s. (Rather than rerolling all her Hit Dice, just add 4 hp for every d4 she previously had, 3 hp for every d6, 2 hp for every d8, and 1 hp for every d10).

Familiars and animal companions have the normal reaction to the character's death.

If such a companion encounters her as a ghost, it feels uncomfortable around her and refuses to continue its former association with her.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Lesser Ghost Power (Su): At 2nd level, a ghost gains one of the following ghost powers.

Unless otherwise stated, the DC is 10 + 1/2 ghost's HD + ghost's Cha modifier.

Corrupting Touch (Su): If a ghost with this ability hits a living target with her incorporeal touch attack, she deals 1d6 points of damage.

Against an ethereal opponent, she adds her Strength modifier to her attack and damage rolls when using this attack.

Against a material opponent, she adds her Dexterity modifier to her attack rolls only.

Frightful Moan (Su): A ghost with this ability can emit a frightful moan as a standard action.

Each living creature within a 30-foot spread must succeed on a Will save or become panicked for 2d4 rounds.

This ability is a sonic, necromantic, mind-affecting, fear effect.

A creature that successfully saves against the moan cannot be affected by the same ghost's moan for 24 hours.

Telekinesis (Su): A ghost with this ability can use telekinesis as a standard action (caster level 12th or equal to the ghost's HD, whichever is higher).

Each time she uses this power, she must wait 1d4 rounds before doing so again.

Turn Resistance (Ex): At 2nd level, a ghost gains +2 turn resistance.

When she reaches 4th level, her turn resistance increases to +4.

Rejuvenation (Su): At 3rd level, a ghost becomes stubbornly attached to its new existence, so it is difficult to get rid of her permanently.

Destruction in combat simply allows her a DC 16 level check.

Success means that she reforms in 2d4 days with all of the ethereal equipment she had when she was "destroyed".

As a rule, the only way to get rid of a ghost permanently is to determine the reason for her existence and set right whatever prevents her from resting in peace.

As mentioned in the opening paragraph, the player and DM should discuss what keeps the ghost from staying dead and what circumstances would allow her to rest in peace before the character enters play.

Greater Ghost Power (Su): At 4th level, the ghost can choose one ghost power from the following list or two from the Lesser Ghost Powers list.

Corrupting Gaze (Su): A ghost with this power can blast living beings with a glance at a range of up to 30 feet.

Any creature that meet the ghost's gaze must succeed on a Fortitude save or take 2d10 points of damage and 1d4 points of Charisma damage.

Draining Touch (Su): If a ghost with this ability hits a living target with her incorporeal touch attack, she deals 1d4 points of ability drain to any one ability score she selects. With each such successful attack, she heals 5 points of damage to herself.

Against an ethereal opponent, she adds her Strength modifier to her attack and damage rolls when using this attack.

Against a material opponent, she adds her Dexterity modifier to her attack rolls only.

Horrific Appearance (Su): Any living creature within 60 feet that views a ghost with this ability must succeed on a Fortitude save or immediately take 1d4 points of Strength damage, 1d4 points of Dexterity damage, and 1d4 points of Constitution damage.

A creature that successfully saves against this effect cannot be affected by the same ghost's horrific appearance for 24 hours.

Malevolence (Su): Once per round, an ethereal ghost who has this power can merge her body with that of a creature on the Material Plane.

This effect is similar to that of a magic jar spell (caster level 10th or the ghost's Hit Dice, whichever is higher), except that no receptacle is required.

To use this ability, the ghost must be manifested, and she must try to move into the target's space, but doing so does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The target can resist the attack with a successful Will save (DC 15 + the ghost's Cha modifier).

A creature that successfully saves is immune to that same ghost's malevolence for 24 hours, and the ghost cannot enter the target's space.

If the save fails, the ghost vanishes into the target's body.

GHOUL

Undead

Although usually portrayed as bloodthirsty killers content to dine on carrion, ghouls were once living humanoids with true emotions.

Sometimes memories of that previous life comes back to haunt the ghoul, and such a character makes an excellent tragic character.

A player character ghoul might wish to avenge its death, protect a loved one from its life, or destroy an old enemy. Ghouls are strong characters because of their combat ability, particularly their resistance to many kinds of damage.

Most of a ghoul's power comes from the fact that it is undead.

On top of the standard undead immunities, it has favorable ability score modifiers and (after 1st level) multiple attacks per round.

Although it is at risk of being destroyed or controlled by a cleric's use of positive or negative energy, even the weakest ghoul has turn resistance.

Probably the greatest drawback to playing a ghoul is the danger of immediate destruction upon reaching 0 hit points, so a smart ghoul should be careful in combat or invest in armor, magical protection, or the Toughness feat.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Cha, Con —

Ghouls are stronger than humans and arrogant enough to consider most humanoid to be little more than prey animals.

As an undead creature, a ghoul does not have a Constitution score.

- Undead: Ghouls are immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and disease. They are not subject to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, energy drain, or death from massive damage.
- Speed: Ghoul land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Ghouls can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common.
- Favored Class: Ghoul.

The best multiclassing choices for a ghoul are fighter, rogue, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The ghoul's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ghoul monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ghouls are proficient with simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A ghoul receives one feat at 1st level.

After 6th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: A ghoul has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Claws: Beginning at 2nd level, a ghoul has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Paralysis (Ex): A creature hit by a bite or claw attack from a ghoul of 2nd level or higher must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 ghoul's HD from class levels + ghoul's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed for the indicated duration. Elves are immune to this paralysis.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid slain by a 5th-level ghoul rises as a 5th-level ghoul in 1d4 days.

Casting protection from evil on a body before the end of that time averts the transformation.

A created spawn is under the command of the ghoul that created it and remains enslaved until its master's death.

A ghoul can control a number of spawn equal to its HD × 2. If it creates a spawn that causes it to exceed this limit, the spawn longest under its control is released.

GNOME/SVIRFNEBLIN TRANSITION

Callarduran Smoothhands is the patron deity of the deep gnomes, or svirfneblin.

It is he who watches over them in the deep places of the earth and keeps them safe from drow, duergar, and other evil beings.

Surface gnomes can participate in a religious ritual with the clerics of Callarduran to become one of the svirfneblin via a 3-level transition class.

This transition class assumes the base creature is a rock gnome (a standard gnome as presented in the Player's Handbook), though it can easily be adapted for other gnome subtypes (such as forest gnomes).

GNOME/SVIRFNEBLIN TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the gnome/svirfneblin transition class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Darkvision (Ex): At 1st level, the gnome/svirfneblin gains darkvision to a range of 60 feet.

When he reaches 2nd level, the range of her darkvision increases to 120 feet.

This ability is in addition to normal gnome low-light vision.

Disguise Self (Sp): The gnome/svirfneblin may use disguise self (caster level equals gnome/svirfneblin's class level) once per day.

Hide Bonus: At 1st level, a gnome/svirfneblin gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks when underground.

At 2nd level, she gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks under all circumstances, and her bonus while underground increases to +4.

Languages: The gnome/svirfneblin becomes fluent in Common, Gnome, and Undercommon if she was not already.

If she has any bonus languages slots available, she may select bonus languages from the following list: Dwarf, Elf, Giant, Goblin, Orc, Terran.

These languages are in addition to the rock gnome automatic and bonus languages.

Saving Throw Bonus: At 1st level, a gnome/svirfneblin gains a +1 racial bonus on all saving throws.

This bonus overlaps (does not stack) with her normal +2 racial bonus on saves against illusions.

When she reaches 2nd level, her bonus on all saves increases to +2.

Stonecunning: This ability grants a 1st-level or higher gnome/svirfneblin a +2 racial bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework traps, new construction (even when built to match the old), unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and the like. Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework.

A gnome/svirfneblin who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if she were actively searching, and she can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can.

A gnome/svirfneblin can also intuit depth, sensing her approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up.

Blur (Sp): At 2nd level, the gnome/svirfneblin may use blur (caster level equals gnome/svirfneblin's class level) once per day.

Favored Class: A gnome/svirfneblin taking this class may either keep her original favored class (bard) or adopt the standard svirfneblin favored class (rogue).

Spell Resistance (Su): At 2nd level, the gnome/svirfneblin gains spell resistance equal to 5 + character level.

At 2nd level, her spell resistance increases to 11 + character level.

Blindness/Deafness (Sp): Once per day, a 3rd-level gnome/svirfneblin may use blindness/deafness (caster level equals gnome/svirfneblin's class level).

The save DC is Charisma-based, and a +4 racial bonus applies.

Nondetection (Su): At 3rd level, the gnome/svirfneblin gains a continuous nondetection ability, as the spell (caster level equals the character's class level).

Svirfneblin Dodge: When the gnome/svirfneblin reaches 3rd level, her +4 dodge bonus against giants becomes effective against all creatures.

Table SP-30: The Gnome/Svirfneblin Transition Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Dex +2, Cha -2, darkvision 60 ft., disguise self , Hide bonus +0/+2, languages, saving throw bonus +1, stonecunning
2nd	+1	Wis +2, blur , darkvision 120 ft., favored class, Hide bonus +2/+4, saving throw bonus +2, spell resistance (lesser)
3rd	+1	Cha +2, blindness/deafness , nondetection, spell resistance (greater), svirfneblin dodge

GREEN HAG

Monstrous Humanoid (Aquatic)

Smaller than (but of comparable power to) the annis hag, the green hag prefers swampy, wet environments where it can take advantage of its ability to breathe water.

Green hags, too, can blend in with humanoid civilizations, and they may join an adventuring party in disguise to further their own goals.

Slightly weaker than an annis in terms of melee ability, a green hag still is a formidable combatant and has even more magic than its larger cousin.

Green hags are good choices for players who want a monstrous witch character that eventually multiclasses into a spellcasting class.

The green hag monster class starts with relatively weak melee attacks, low natural armor, and access to its weakest spell-like abilities.

Over time the attacks grow more powerful, the natural armor increases, and greater spell-like abilities are gained. In the middle of the level progression, a green hag gains limited spell resistance and its weakness-inducing ability. The highest levels round out its ability score increases, boost natural armor, and grant its last feat.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Int, +2 Wis.

Green hags are smart and cunning.

• Speed: Green hag land speed is 30 feet, swim speed 30 feet.

Like any creature with a swim speed, green hags can move through the water at that speed without making Swim checks, they have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard, and can always take 10 when making Swim checks.

They can use the run action while swimming, provided they swim in a straight line.

- Darkvision: Green hags can see in the dark up to 90 feet.
- Mimicry: Green hags can imitate the sounds of almost any animal found near their lairs.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Giant.
- Favored Class: Green hag.

The best multiclassing choices for a green hag are fighter, cleric, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The green hag's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any one, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the green hag monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Green hags are proficient with all simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Aquatic Subtype: Green hags can breathe water or air equally well.

Feats: A green hag receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 7th, and 13th level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: The green hag has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Lesser Green Hag Powers (Sp): A green hag can use the following abilities the indicated number of times per day: change self, dancing lights, ghost sound, and pass without trace. A green hag's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

Greater Green Hag Powers (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a green hag can use the following abilities the indicated number of times per day: invisibility, tongues, and water breathing.

A green hag's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

Weakness (Su): Starting at 4th level, a green hag can weaken a foe by making a melee touch attack.

The affected opponent must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 green hag's HD from class levels + green hag's Cha modifier) or take the indicated amount of Strength damage.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A green hag of 7th level or higher has spell resistance equal to 4 + its class level.

GRIFFON

Magical Beast

Griffons fly.

They bear riders.

They fight well, with all the advantages of an eagle and the ferocity of a lion.

It takes an unusual player to accept a lesser role as a steed, exceptional though a griffon may be.

It takes an even more determined character to break that mold and form more equal relationships, yet still befriend, and sometimes serve as a steed for, another character.

The griffon remains an interesting choice as a monster character despite its lack of hands or limbs that can manipulate objects, wield weapons, or hold shields.

That is a major disadvantage, and it takes a devoted player to accept it—even in exchange for the ability to fly.

The monster class's advancement is based on the griffon's ability to fly, its ability score and natural armor increases, and scent.

Initially it is not strong enough to fly on its own, but eventually it gains flight and even enough strength to carry a rider.

It gains the pounce ability soon after gaining the ability to fly, and the rake ability follows shortly thereafter.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: -6 Int, -2 Cha. A griffon has great potential because of the strength, agility, and toughness for which its kind are known, yet it is hindered by a low Intelligence score.
- Magical Beast: Griffon characters are magical beasts.
- Speed: Griffon land speed is 30 feet.
- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Jump checks and on Spot checks made in daylight.
- Darkvision: Griffons can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Griffons can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Automatic Languages: None.

A griffon cannot speak or communicate without the assistance of magic, but it can understand Common.

- Favored Class: Griffon.

The best multiclassing choices for a griffon are fighter and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The griffon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a griffon takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the griffon monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A griffon has no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A griffon receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 7th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: The griffon has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Claws: At 3rd level, a griffon gains two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Pounce (Ex): If a griffon of 4th level or higher charges a foe, it can still make a full attack in the same round.

Rake: A griffon of 6th level or higher that pounces on an opponent can make two rake attacks with its hind legs (at the same attack bonus as its normal claw attack) for 1d6 points of damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

These rake attacks are in addition to its other attacks for the round.

GRIG

Fey

Grigs are mischievous and the fiercest of the sprite kindred. Very small and weak physically, they are clever and use tactics, ranged weapons, and magic to defeat their enemies. Sometimes they make friends with elves or other folk that respect the forest and join adventuring groups. Their frail and tiny bodies make them unsuited to melee combat, but they can be deadly with a bow and can make themselves invisible to compensate for the risk. Grigs are good characters for players who want the challenge of playing a trickster that is not terribly powerful. The greatest disadvantage to playing grigs is their low Hit Dice.

Even a 4th-level grig has only 1/2 Hit Die and can be killed by a critical hit from a short sword.

Balancing this vulnerability is a very high Dexterity and a size bonus to Armor Class, plus the ability to fly and become invisible, all of which should keep a grig out of harm's way until it can take levels in a character class that will grant more Hit Dice.

The short progression of the grig monster class to its final ECL of 4 grants it ability score increases, more uses of its spell-like abilities, a small amount of natural armor, and a bonus feat.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: -6 Str, +6 Dex. Grigs are physically weak but incredibly agile.
- Tiny: As Tiny creatures, grigs gain a +2 size bonus to Armor Class, a +2 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +8 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are one-half of those of Medium-size characters. Grigs have a face of 2 1/2 feet by 2 1/2 feet and a reach of 0 feet, which means they must enter an opponent's square to attack in melee combat and draw an attack of opportunity when doing so.
- Speed: Grig land speed is 20 feet, fly speed 20 feet (poor).
- Low-Light Vision: Grigs can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination. They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks; +8 racial bonus on Jump checks; +5 racial bonus on Move Silently checks in a forest setting.

- Automatic Languages: Common and Sylvan.

- Favored Class: Grig.

The best multiclassing choices for a grig are rogue and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The grig's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the grig monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Grigs are proficient with all simple weapons, with the composite longbow, and with the short sword, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A grig receives one feat at 1st level and Dodge as a bonus feat at 2nd level.

After 4th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Spell-Like Abilities: A grig can use these spell-like abilities the indicated number of times per day as a 9th-level sorcerer: change self, entangle, invisibility (self only), pyrotechnics, and ventriloquism.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A grig has spell resistance equal to its class level + 13.

Attune Fiddle (Su): Using a process similar to crafting a magic item, a 4th-level grig with a fiddle appropriate to its size can spend one day attuning that instrument to itself and its natural magic.

Once the fiddle is attuned, the grig may invoke a special magic.

When the fiddler plays, any nonsprite within 30 feet of the instrument must succeed on a Will save (DC 15) or be affected as though by Otto's irresistible dance as long as the playing continues.

The fiddle cannot be used in this manner by anyone else, and if separated from the grig for more than a week, it must undergo the attunement process again.

Only grigs who have chosen "fiddle" as a type of performance with the Perform skill can attune a fiddle in this manner.

HALF-DRAGON

With the creation of monster templates, half-dragons of all kinds have become so popular with DMs that some players have begun to wonder if the big lizards ever get around to mating with their own kind.

But dragon-blooded beings are just as popular with players who want exotic and powerful characters as they are with DMs who want interesting monsters.

The dragon disciple prestige class in the Dungeon Master's Guide offers one way for a character to take on more draconic aspects; the half-dragon template offers a different option.

Both are equally viable choices, depending on what the player wants to gain.

The prestige class requires 10 levels to complete, but it also advances the character's base attack bonus, saving throws, Hit Dice, and skill points.

Furthermore, it grants certain powers that aren't available via the template.

In contrast, the half-dragon template class presented here allows a character to gain full half-dragon powers in only 3 levels, but at the expense of sacrificing development in certain other areas.

"Half-dragon" is usually an inherited template, but it could be acquired through special magical rituals as well.

HALF-DRAGON TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the half-dragon template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Resistances (Ex): A half-dragon has energy resistance 10 to one type of energy.

The specific type is determined by the dragon kind that provided the benefits of the template, according to the following table.

Dragon Variety	Energy Type Resisted
Black	Acid
Blue	Electricity
Brass	Fire
Bronze	Electricity
Copper	Acid
Gold	Fire
Green	Acid
Red	Fire
Silver	Cold
White	Cold

At 2nd level, this resistance increases to 20.

At 3rd level, the half-dragon becomes completely immune to the indicated energy type (see Immunities, below).

Racial HD Type Increase (Ex): At 1st level, each of a half-dragon's racial Hit Dice increases by one die type: d4 to d6, d6 to d8, d8 to d10, or d10 to d12.

Class Hit Dice are unaffected.

Rather than rerolling all racial Hit Dice, you can simply add 1 hit point per racial Hit Die to the half-dragon's hit point total.

Natural Armor Improvements: At every level of the prestige class, the half-dragon's natural armor bonus increases by the indicated amount.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level, to +3 at 2nd level, and finally to +4 at 3rd level.

Darkvision (Ex): At 1st level the half-dragon gains darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): At 1st level, the half-dragon gains low-light vision.

Claws: At 2nd level, the half-dragon gains two claw attacks if she didn't already have them.

For the base damage of the half-dragon's claw attacks, use the appropriate value from the table below if the base creature did not previously have claw attacks.

Size	Bite Damage	Claw Damage
Fine	1	--
Diminutive	1d2	1
Tiny	1d3	1d2
Small	1d4	1d3
Medium	1d6	1d4
Large	1d8	1d6
Huge	2d6	1d8
Gargantuan	3d6	2d6
Colossal	4d6	3d6

If she did, use either the value from the table or the base creature's claw damage, whichever is better.

The half-dragon's claws are natural attacks.

Bite: At 2nd level, the half-dragon gains a bite attack if she didn't already have one.

For the base damage of the half-dragon's bite attack, use the appropriate value from the table below if the base creature did not previously have a bite attack.

If she did, use either the value from the table or the base creature's bite damage, whichever is better.

The half-dragon's bite is a natural attack.

Breath Weapon (Su): At 2nd level, a half-dragon gains a breath weapon similar to that of the dragon that provided the benefits of the template.

The breath weapon is usable once per day and allows a Reflex save (DC 10 + 1/2 half-dragon's racial HD + half-dragon's Constitution modifier) for half damage.

The shape and size of the breath weapon are given by the following table.

Table SP-2: The Half-Dragon Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1	+1	Str +2, Int +2, resistance (lesser), racial HD type increase, natural armor +2, darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision
2	+1	Str +2, Con +2, resistance (greater), 2 claws, bite, natural armor +1, breath weapon 3d8, immunities (lesser)
3	+2	Str +4, Cha +2, immunities (greater), wings, natural armor +1, breath weapon 6d8, dragon type

HALF-DROW/DROW TRANSITION

A half-drow is a half-elf born of a human and drow union.

Dragon Variety Breath Weapon

Black	60-foot line of acid
Blue	60-foot line of lightning
Brass	60-foot line of fire
Bronze	60-foot line of lightning
Copper	60-foot line of acid
Gold	30-foot cone of fire
Green	30-foot cone of corrosive (acid) gas
Red	30-foot cone of fire
Silver	30-foot cone of cold
White	30-foot cone of cold

When first acquired, the breath weapon deals only 3d8 points of damage.

When the half-dragon reaches 3rd level, the base damage for the breath weapon increases to 6d8.

Immunities (Ex): At 2nd level, the half-dragon becomes immune to sleep and paralysis.

When she reaches 3rd level, her template-based energy resistance (see Resistances, above) is replaced by total immunity to that energy type.

Wings (Ex): At 3rd level, a Large or larger half-dragon grows fully functional wings and may use them to fly at up to twice her land speed (maximum 120 feet) with average maneuverability.

A Medium or smaller half-dragon either does not grow wings or grows nonfunctional vestigial ones.

Dragon Type: At 3rd level, the half-dragon completes her metamorphosis, and her type changes to dragon.

She becomes vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the dragon type but is immune to effects that target her original type.

For example, a half-human/half-dragon would be subject to the extra damage from a dragon bane sword, but she is immune to hold person because that spell affects only humanoids.

A half-drow typically has dusky skin, silver or white hair, and eyes of some normal human shade.

Half-drow have the abilities of normal half-elves except that they have darkvision (60-foot range) instead of low-light vision.

A half-drow who wishes to explore his dark elf heritage can become a full drow with a 2-level transition class.

HALF-DROW/DROW TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the half-drow/drow transition class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Dancing Lights (Sp): A half-drow/drow may use dancing lights (caster level equals half-drow/drow's character level) once per day.

Darkvision (Ex): When the half-drow/drow reaches 1st level, the range of his darkvision increases to 120 feet.

Faerie Fire (Sp): At 1st level, the half-drow/drow may use faerie fire (caster level equals half-drow/drow's character level) once per day.

Favored Class: A half-drow/drow who adopts this transition class may keep his original favored class ("any") or adopt the standard drow favored class (wizard if male, cleric if female).

Skill Bonuses: The character's racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks increases from +1 to +2.

Furthermore, a half-drow/drow who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he were actively looking for it.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 1st level, the half-drow/drow gains spell resistance equal to 5 + character level.

At 2nd level, his spell resistance increases to 11 + character level.

Darkness (Sp): At 2nd level, the half-drow/drow may use darkness (caster level equals half-drow/drow's character level) once per day.

Languages: At 2nd level, the half-drow/drow becomes fluent in Common, Elven, and Undercommon if he was not already.

If he has any bonus languages slots available, he may select bonus languages from the following list: Abyssal, Aquan, Draconic, Drow Sign Language, Gnome, Goblin. These choices are in addition to the half-elven automatic and bonus languages.

(Their bonus languages are normally "any", but this ability enables the drow to learn special languages that a DM might deny to surface dwellers).

Light Blindness (Ex): Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds a half-drow/drow for 1 round.

On subsequent rounds, he is dazzled as long as he remains in the affected area.

Proficiencies: At 2nd level, a half-drow/drow becomes proficient with the hand crossbow, rapier, and short sword if he was not already.

If he spent feats to become proficient with these weapons, he may not reassign those feat slots.

Saving Throw Bonuses (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-drow/drow gains a +2 racial bonus on Will saves against spells and spell-like abilities.

Table SP-29: The Half-Drow/Drow Transition Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+1	Dex +2, Con -2, dancing lights , darkvision 120 ft., faerie fire , favored class, skill bonuses, spell resistance (lesser)
2nd	+1	Int +2, Cha +2, darkness , languages, light blindness, proficiencies, saving throw bonuses, spell resistance (greater)

HALF-FEY

Half-fey are the spawn of powerful fey creatures and the mortals they find so intriguing.

Often confused by the ignorant with half-fiends, some half-fey grow up tormented by their peers, but a few use their gifts to win over others and become quite popular.

"Half-fey" is usually an inherited template, but it could be acquired through other means as well.

Certain mortals who are obsessed with the fey study fey magic and dwell in sylvan places in hopes of gaining power, and a few actually do manage to acquire the half-fey template.

Such beings can advance in the half-fey template class, just as natural-born half-fey can if they wish to develop their powers more slowly.

HALF-FEY TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the half-fey template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Fey Type: At 1st level, the half-fey completes her metamorphosis, and her type changes to fey.

She becomes vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the fey type but is immune to effects that target her original type.

For example, a half-fey/half-human would be subject to the extra damage from a fey bane sword, but she is immune to hold person because that spell affects only humanoids.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): At 1st-level, the half-fey gains low-light vision.

Saving Throw Bonuses (Ex): At 1st level, a half-fey gains a +4 racial bonus on saving throws against spells and effects from the Enchantment school.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 1st level, a half-fey with an Intelligence or Wisdom score of 8 or better gains spell-like abilities.

The exact abilities gained depend on the half-fey's character level and level in the template class, according to the following table.

Minimum Half-Fey Level	Minimum Character Level	Spell-Like Abilities Gained
1st	1st	Charm person at will, hypnotism 1/day
	3rd	Detect law 3/day
	5th	Protection from law 3/day
	9th	Eyebite or lesser geas 1/day
	13th	Mass invisibility 1/day
2nd	17th	Insanity or mass charm 1/day
	1st	Faerie fire or glitterdust 1/day
	3rd	Entrhall or sleep 1/day
	7th	Confusion or emotion 1/day
	11th	Dominate person or hold monster 1/day
	15th	Geas/quest or mass suggestion 1/day
	19th	Otto's irresistible dance 1/day

In each case, the caster level equals the half-fey's character level.

Save DCs, where applicable, are Charisma-based (10 + spell level + half-fey's Cha modifier).

The character gains each spell-like ability as soon as she meets both qualifications for it.

Spell-like abilities are cumulative, so a 2nd-level half-fey whose character level is 3rd has charm person at will, detect law 3/day, enthrall or sleep 1/day, faerie fire or glitterdust 1/day, hypnotism 1/day.

Immunity to Enchantments (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-fey becomes immune to all spells and effects from the Enchantment school.

This ability replaces the saving throw bonus against these effects included in the half-fey's base racial features.

Wings (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-fey grows insectlike wings (usually similar to those of a butterfly) and may use them to fly at up to twice her base land speed with good maneuverability.

Table SP-23: The Half-Fey Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Dex +2, Cha +2, Con -2, fey type, low-light vision, saving throw bonuses, spell-like abilities
2nd	+1	Wis +2, Cha +2, immunity to enchantment, wings

HALF-FIEND

Half-fiends are the spawn of mortals and fiends—powerful demons, devils, or other evil outsiders.

Tainted from conception with evil, half-fiends are mistreated by true fiends and feared by mortals.

“Half-fiend” is usually an inherited template, but it could be acquired through special magical rituals as well.

Some depraved mortals voluntarily subject themselves to evil power in hopes of becoming more like fiends, and occasionally such tampering results in a half-fiend.

Such beings can advance in the half-fiend template class, just as natural-born half-fiends can if they wish to develop their powers more slowly.

Because almost all half-fiends are evil, the DM is free to require that a good or neutral character who advances as a half-fiend become fully evil by the time she has completed the class progression.

Because the half-fiend template and half-celestial template differ only in alignment focus, the half-fiend template class can easily be used as a model to create a half-celestial template class.

(See the “About the Author” section at the end of this article for more information on another half-celestial class option).

HALF-FIEND TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the half-fiend template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the half-fiend's natural armor bonus increases by +1.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +1 at 1st level.

Claws: At 1st level, the half-fiend gains two claw attacks if she didn't already have them.

For the base damage of her claw attacks, use the appropriate value from the table below if the base creature did not previously have claw attacks.

Size	Damage
Fine	--
Diminutive	1
Tiny	1d2
Small	1d3
Medium	1d4
Large	1d6
Huge	1d8
Gargantuan	2d6
Colossal	3d6

If she did, use either the value from the table or the base creature's claw damage, whichever is better.

The half-fiend's claws are natural attacks.

Darkvision (Ex): At 1st level, the half-fiend gains darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 1st level, a half-fiend with an Intelligence or Wisdom score of 8 or better gains spell-like abilities.

The exact abilities gained depend on the half-fiend's character level and level in the template class, according to the following table.

Minimum Half-Fiend Level	Minimum Character Level	Spell-Like Abilities Gained
1st	1st	Darkness 3/day
	7th	Poison 3/day
	13th	Unhallow 1/day
2nd	3rd	Desecrate 1/day
	6th	Unholy blight 1/day
	13th	Unholy aura 3/day
3rd	9th	Contagion 1/day
	15th	Horrid wilting 1/day
	17th	Summon monster IX (fiends only) 1/day
4th	11th	Blasphemy 1/day
	19th	Destruction 1/day

In each case, the caster level equals the half-fiend's character level.

Save DCs, where applicable, are Charisma-based (10 + spell level + half-fiend's Charisma modifier).

The character gains each spell-like ability as soon as she meets both qualifications for it.

Spell-like abilities are cumulative, so a 2nd-level half-fiend whose character level is 6th has darkness (1st-level half-fiend) plus desecrate and unholy blight (2nd-level half-fiend).

Outsider Type: At 1st level, the half-fiend completes her metamorphosis.

Her type changes to outsider (native).

She becomes vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the outsider type but is immune to effects that target her original type.

For example, an evil half-human/half-fiend would be subject to the extra damage from an evil outsider bane sword, but she is immune to hold person because that spell affects only humanoids.

Bite: At 2nd level, the half-fiend gains a bite attack if she didn't already have one.

For the base damage of the half-fiend's bite attack, use the appropriate value from the table below if the base creature did not previously have a bite attack.

Size	Damage
Fine	1
Diminutive	1d2
Tiny	1d3
Small	1d4
Medium	1d6
Large	1d8
Huge	2d6
Gargantuan	3d6
Colossal	4d6

If she did, use either the value from the table or the base creature's bite damage, whichever is better.

The half-fiend's bite is a natural attack.

Poison Immunity (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-fiend becomes immune to all poisons.

Resistances (Ex): At 2nd level, a half-fiend gains resistance 5 to acid, cold, electricity, and fire.

At 4th level, each of these resistances increases to 10.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 2nd level, a half-fiend gains spell resistance equal to her character level (maximum 25).

At 4th level, her spell resistance increases by +10 (maximum 35).

Damage Reduction (Su): A 3rd-level or higher half-fiend has damage reduction 5/magic if her character level is 11th or lower, or damage reduction 10/magic if her character level is 12th or higher.

A half-fiend treats her natural weapons as magic weapons for the purpose of bypassing the damage reduction of other creatures.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day, a half-fiend of at least 3rd level may attempt to smite a good creature with one normal melee attack.

This attack deals extra damage equal to her character level (maximum +20) against a good foe.

If she accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but is still used up for the day.

Wings (Ex): At 4th level, a half-fiend grows batlike wings, which she may use to fly at up to her base land speed with average maneuverability.

HAMATULA

Outsider (Evil, Lawful)

Hamatulas, sometimes called barbed devils, are tough and strong.

Gifted with many spell-like abilities and powerful melee attacks, they are used as guardians and patrol troops by the most powerful devils.

Roughly humanoid in appearance, they can disguise themselves as unusually large humans, half-orcs, or tieflings.

Hamatulas make good fighters and clerics, and are a good choice for players who want to play a character resembling the traditional form of a devil.

Most of this monster's abilities are physical, so the monster class is based on an advancement of its attack and defensive abilities, flavored with its more unusual powers at levels where comparable spells become available to standard-race classes.

Its level adjustment is only +5, so it does not suffer greatly compared to fighters, particularly when taking into account its strong ability score modifiers, unusual attack forms, and defenses such as damage reduction.

The capstone of this class is the ability to use teleport without error at will, making the hamatula a good scout, spy, or hit-and-run fighter.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Wis.

Hamatulas are strong and alert.

- Speed: Hamatula land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Hamatulas can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

Hamatula darkvision functions in all magical darkness as well as normal darkness.

- Immunities: Hamatulas are immune to fire and poison, which are omnipresent on their home plane.
- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Draconic, and Infernal.
- Favored Class: Hamatula.

The best multiclassing choice for a hamatula is fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The hamatula's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hamatula monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hamatulas are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A hamatula receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 7th, and 13th level.

After 15th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

See in Darkness (Su): A hamatula can see perfectly in darkness of any kind.

Claws: A hamatula has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Telepathy: A hamatula of 2nd level or higher can communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Summon Baatezu (Sp): Once per day a hamatula of 3rd level or higher can attempt to summon lemures (see the Monster Manual).

The number summoned and the chance of success increase as the hamatula advances in level.

At 11th level a hamatula can instead attempt to summon another of its kind, with the indicated chance of success.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A hamatula has spell resistance equal to 9 + class level.

Lesser Hamatula Powers (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, a hamatula can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: charm person, desecrate, doom, hold person, produce flame, and pyrotechnics.

At 5th level it can use them three times per day, and at 8th level it can use them at will.

The hamatula's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels (save DC 10 + spell level + hamatula's Cha modifier).

Hamatula Powers (Sp): Beginning at 7th level, a hamatula can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: animate dead, major image, and suggestion.

At 10th level it can use them three times per day, and at 13th level it can use them at will.

Impale (Ex): A hamatula of 7th level or higher deals 3d4 points of piercing damage to a grabbed opponent on a successful grapple check, adding 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus to damage.

Fear (Su): A creature hit by a hamatula must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 hamatula's HD from class levels + hamatula's Cha modifier) or be affected as though by fear cast by a sorcerer of the hamatula's Hit Dice.

Whether or not the save is successful, that creature cannot be affected again by that hamatula's fear ability for one day.

Greater Hamatula Powers (Sp): Beginning at 9th level, a hamatula can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: either order's wrath or unholy blight, and teleport without error (self plus 50 pounds of objects only).

At 12th level it can use teleport without error three times per day, and at 14th level it can use teleport without error at will.

HARPY

Monstrous Humanoid

Filthy birdfolk with a fondness for causing suffering, harpies are tough creatures that rely on their powerful song to capture prey.

They gain the ability to fly and expand the range of their song to almost that of a long-range spell, making them well suited for dungeon combat or in open-air surroundings where they can make use of their mobility.

Harpies are good choices for players who want an exotic rogue, bard, or sorcerer, particularly those that focus on spying on and controlling other beings.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, -4 Int, +2 Cha.

Harpies are quick and vain (in their own fashion) but not very clever.

• Speed: Harpy land speed is 20 feet.

• Darkvision: Harpies can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Automatic Languages: Common.

• Favored Class: Harpy.

The best multiclassing choices for a harpy are bard, rogue, and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The harpy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the harpy monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Harpies are proficient with all simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A harpy receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 7th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A harpy has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Captivating Song (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a harpy can sing a captivating song that affects all nonharpies in range that fail a Will saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 harpy's HD from class levels + harpy's Cha modifier).

Affected creatures remain captivated as long as the harpy sings and for a number of additional rounds equal to the harpy's Hit Dice from class levels.

HOUND ARCHON

Outsider (Good, Lawful)

Hound archons are the soldiers, hunters, and trackers of the celestial armies.

Tough, fast, and dedicated to defending the innocent and helpless, hound archons are good choices for players that enjoy playing paladins but are looking for something a little more unusual.

Hound archons have favorable ability score modifiers, natural attacks, fast movement, and a few spell-like abilities. Over time their attacks become more powerful, they become stronger, tougher, and more willful, and they gain damage reduction and immunity to certain attacks.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Wis. Hound archons are built for power and alertness.
- Speed: Hound archon land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Hound archons can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Low-Light Vision: Hound archons can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination. They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.
- Saves: +4 racial bonus on saving throws against poison.
- Alternate Form: A hound archon may assume the form of any normal canine animal (dog, wolf, hyena, or the like) as a standard action, similar to the polymorph self spell but allowing only canine forms. While in canine form, a hound archon's land speed becomes 60 feet, and it gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide and Survival checks.
- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Infernal, and Draconic.
- Favored Class: Hound archon.

The best multiclassing choices for a hound archon are fighter, cleric, and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The hound archon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the hound archon monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hound archons are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A hound archon receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 9th level.

After 11th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Bite: The hound archon has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Slams: Beginning at 3rd level, the hound archon gains two slam attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—aid, continual flame, detect evil, and message.

The archon's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a hound archon can speak with any creature that has a language.

The hound archon's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from hound archon class levels + 8.

This ability is always active unless the hound archon chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the hound archon can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Aura of Menace (Su): A hound archon of 7th level or higher is surrounded by a 20-foot aura.

Creatures within the area must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + archon's HD from class levels) or take a –2 morale penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for one day.

Spell Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, a hound archon gains spell resistance is equal to 5 + class level.

Magic Circle against Evil (Su): At 11th level, a hound archon can create a magic circle against evil that continually surrounds a hound archon, as the spell cast by a sorcerer of a level equal to its Hit Dice.

The ability is usable at will as a free action.

Teleport without Error (Su): A hound archon of 11th level can use teleport without error at will, as the spell cast by a

14th-level sorcerer, except that the archon can transport only itself and up to 50 pounds of objects.

IMP

Outsider (Evil, Lawful)

Imps are among the least powerful devils, but still quite capable of slaying normal humans with little effort.

Often bound to the service of evil spellcasters, imps are sometimes sent to the Material Plane on missions of spying or harassment, or sometimes just to carry messages.

Because it can take the form of normal animals, an imp can blend in with adventuring parties as a pet, familiar, animal companion, or domesticated animal.

Imps are good choices for players who like sneaky characters with some magical power as a backup.

Because it has few powerful physical abilities, the imp class places its spell-like abilities at appropriate levels and delays the acquisition of the regeneration ability until later levels.

An imp's poison is a minor ability, since the save DC is usually going to be very low.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex.

Imps have to be fast to avoid their larger cousins.

- Tiny: As Tiny creatures, imps gain a +2 size bonus to Armor Class, a +2 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +8 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are one-half of those of Medium-size characters.

An imp has a face of 2 1/2 feet by 2 1/2 feet and a reach of 0 feet.

- Speed: Imp land speed is 20 feet.

- Darkvision: Imps can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

Imp darkvision functions in all magical darkness as well as normal darkness.

- Poison Immunity: Imps are naturally poisonous creatures and immune to all poisons.

- Automatic Languages: Celestial, Draconic, and Infernal.

- Favored Class: Imp.

The best multiclassing choice for an imp is rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The imp's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the imp monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Imps are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An imp receives one feat at 1st level and an additional one at 4th level.

It gains Weapon Finesse (sting) as a bonus feat at 2nd level.

After 7th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Sting: An imp has a tail stinger attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Poison (Ex): The imp's sting injects a poison that deals the indicated primary and secondary damage (DC 10 + 1/2 imp's HD from class levels + imp's Con modifier + 2 racial bonus).

Spell-Like Abilities (Sp): An imp's caster level for its detect good, detect magic, invisibility, and suggestion spell-like abilities is equal to twice its Hit Dice from class levels.

An imp's caster level for its commune ability is 12th.

Polymorph (Su): Starting at 3rd level, an imp chooses one alternate form no larger than Medium-size (commonly a monstrous spider, raven, rat, or boar).

It can take this form at will as if using the polymorph self spell (caster level 12th).

At 6th level it can choose a second form.

Regeneration (Ex): Imps take normal damage from acid, and from holy or blessed weapons (if they have a +1 or higher enhancement bonus).

JANNI

Outsider

Born of all four elements, jann are the weakest of the genies and spend most of their time on the Material Plane.

More advanced than humans in every way, jann also have a small number of spell-like abilities, some of which are particularly powerful.

For a plane-traveling adventuring party, a janni with the natural ability to use plane shift is a handy friend.

Jann are good choices for players who want an elemental-based character that is still humanoid and capable of being a go-between for the various elemental and outsider creatures.

Much of the advancement of the janni class is based on distributing the class's potent spell-like abilities, particularly invisibility and plane shift.

As outsiders, jann have a strong base attack bonus and good saves in all three categories.

Their ability score bonuses and Hit Dice are spread over the class's 11 levels.

Although good in combat, their +5 level adjustment means jann tend to have fewer Hit Dice than fighters of the same level, and so they should be aware of their limitations.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Con. Jann are fast like air and fire elementals, and tough like earth and water elementals.
- Speed: Janni land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Jann can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

TABLE A-30: THE JANNI

11th	6d8	+6/+1	+5	+5	+5	—	4	Plane shift (unlimited, 6 passengers), +2 Str

- Elemental Endurance: A janni can survive on the Elemental Plane of Air, Earth, Fire, or Water for up to 48 hours.

Failure to return to the Material Plane after that time deals 1 point of damage per additional hour to the janni, until it dies or returns to the Material Plane.

- Automatic Languages: Auran, Aquan, Ignan, or Terran, plus Abyssal, Celestial, or Infernal.

- Favored Class: Janni.

The best multiclassing choices for a janni are fighter, rogue, wizard, and cleric.

CLASS SKILLS

The janni's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the janni monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Jann are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Feats: A janni receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 9th level.

It gains Improved Initiative as a bonus feat at 7th level. After 11th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Spell-Like Abilities (Sp): A janni's enlarge, invisibility, reduce, and speaking with animals abilities have a caster level equal to class level + 1.

The caster level for its create food and water ability is 7th.

KYTON

Outsider (Evil, Lawful)

Very humanlike in some ways but definitely fiendish, kytons are strange, brutish creatures wrapped in chains that serve as clothing, natural armor, weapons, and pets.

They are very useful in the rare environment that contains a lot of chains but are average fighters in normal melee situations.

Often mistaken for haunting spirits because of their chains, kytons can pass for humans if they wear other clothing.

Kytons are good choices for players who want to play gladiator-style characters with some unusual abilities.

A kyton's most powerful abilities are its dancing chains, spell resistance, and damage reduction, which scale up in the later levels of the class.

The early levels provide the kyton with its natural armor, its melee attacks, and its strange gaze.

It has fewer Hit Dice than a fighter of its level but is comparable to a rogue, and its natural abilities make it a good secondary combatant.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con, -4 Int. Kytons are physically hardy but very simple.
- Speed: Kyton land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Kytons can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Cold Immunity: Kytons hail from the colder parts of Baator and are immune to cold.
- Skills: +8 racial bonus on Craft (metalworking) checks.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Infernal.
- Favored Class: Kyton.

The best multiclassing choice for a kyton is fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The kyton's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the kyton monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Kytons are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with the spiked chain, but with no armor or shields.

A kyton's body chains do not count toward the weight of its equipment.

Feats: A kyton receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Chain Rakes: A kyton can use the chains wrapping its body as melee weapons, making two attacks per round at its normal base attack bonus (without any off-hand or two-weapon fighting penalties) and dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Any feats the kyton has regarding its chain rakes (such as Weapon Focus or Improved Critical) apply to using a spiked chain, and vice versa.

Unwrapping a body chain to use as a weapon is a free action.

A kyton can be disarmed of a chain it is using, but that simply causes the chain to wrap itself around the kyton's body again; pieces broken from a sundered chain wrap themselves automatically in a similar fashion.

A chain is considered a Large weapon, even though the kyton is able to wield chains one-handed.

Chain Reach: A kyton's chain rakes have a reach of 10 feet. Like a spiked chain, a kyton's chains may be used against adjacent targets as well as targets at its maximum reach in the same round.

Unnerving Gaze (Su): Starting at 3rd level, a kyton can make its face resemble one of the opponent's departed loved ones or bitter enemies.

Those subjected to the gaze must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 kyton's HD from class levels + kyton's Cha modifier) or take a -1 morale penalty on all attack rolls for 1d3 rounds.

The gaze affects all enemies within a certain distance.

The radius of the effect increases from 5 feet at 3rd level to 30 feet at 12th level and higher.

Creatures can only be subject to a particular kyton's unnerving gaze attack once per day.

Dancing Chains (Su): As a standard action, a kyton of 4th level or higher may control the indicated number of unattended chains within 20 feet, making them dance or move as it wishes.

In addition, the kyton can increase the chains' length by up to 15 feet and cause them to sprout razor-edged barbs (the chains return to their normal length and shape when the kyton stops controlling them).

Each chain may make one attack per round as if the kyton were wielding it directly.

A kyton can climb chains it controls at its normal speed without a Climb check.

Regeneration (Ex): A kyton of 8th level or higher takes normal damage from fire, acid, and blessed weapons (if they bypass the kyton's damage reduction).

Spell Resistance (Ex): A kyton of 10th level or higher has spell resistance equal to 9 + Hit Dice from class level.

LICH

Feared by mortal beings for their malign magic, their intelligence, and their willingness to embrace undeath for a chance to live forever, liches are evil beings of great power. Though the lich template can be applied to a character all at once to achieve an instantaneous transformation from living to undead, allowing an enemy spellcaster to progress slowly as a lich can be even more useful to a DM.

In that way, the NPC can return to foil the PCs time and again before achieving her full potential as a lich.

Likewise, an evil character pursuing lichdom can experience the process in slow steps while continuing to adventure with her allies, rather than gaining all the template's powers at once and immediately surpassing her comrades in terms of sheer power.

The lich template class has two special requirements.

First, the base character must have the Craft Wondrous Item feat so that she can make a phylactery to hold her life force.

The would-be lich must craft her phylactery over time, as described below.

Second, she must be able to cast spells at a caster level of 11th or higher.

It is this power, coupled with the knowledge of the process required, that allows the transformation to occur.

LICH TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the lich template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

At first, a would-be lich gains an intellectual understanding of the process necessary to become a lich (represented by the Intelligence increase at 1st level).

Then she gains the intuitive understanding of what the process entails (represented by the Wisdom increase at 3rd level).

Finally, she gains a surge of confidence as the process is completed (represented by the Charisma increase at 4th level).

Natural Armor Replacement: At each level of the lich template class, the character uses either her existing natural armor bonus or the value given in Table SP-12, whichever is greater.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would become +2 at 1st level, +3 at 2nd level, +4 at 3rd level, and +5 at 4th level. For example, a bugbear normally has a +3 natural armor bonus.

Thus, a bugbear wizard 11 who chose to become a lich would gain no benefit from this ability until she attained 3rd level in the template class, since only then does the natural armor bonus granted by the template surpass that granted by her race.

Any item or effect that provides an enhancement bonus to natural armor functions normally for a lich—that is, its bonus is added to the lich's base natural armor bonus.

Thus, an amulet of natural armor +2 would give a bugbear wizard 11/lich 1 a total natural armor bonus of +5 (+3 base for bugbear, +2 from the amulet).

That same bugbear as a wizard 11/lich 4 would have a natural armor bonus of +7 (+5 from the template class and +2 from the amulet).

Lich Skills: At 1st level, a lich gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks.

This bonus increases to +4 at 2nd level, to +6 at 3rd level, and to +8 at 4th level.

Damaging Touch (Su): At 1st level, a lich's touch deals 1d6+5 points of negative energy damage to any living target.

A Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 lich's HD + lich's Cha modifier) halves this damage.

A lich who attacks with a natural weapon may deal this damage in addition to the normal damage for that attack. When the lich reaches 2nd level, the damage for her touch increases to 1d8+5 points.

Paralyzing Touch (Su): Any living creature hit by a lich's touch attack must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 lich's HD + lich's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed for 1d4 rounds.

A lich who attacks with a natural weapon may deal this damage in addition to the normal damage for that attack. Remove paralysis or any effect that can remove a curse frees the victim, but the effect cannot be dispelled.

Anyone paralyzed by a lich seems dead, though a successful DC 20 Spot check or DC 15 Heal check reveals that the victim is still alive.

At 2nd level, the duration of this effect increases to 1d4 minutes.

At 3rd level, the duration increases to 1d4 hours.

At 4th level, the effect is permanent until removed.

Resistances (Ex): At 1st level, a lich gains resistance to cold 5 and electricity 5.

Each of these resistances increases to 10 at 2nd level and to 20 at 3rd level.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 2nd level, a lich gains damage reduction 5/bludgeoning and magic.

Her natural weapons are treated as magic weapons for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Her damage reduction increases to 10/bludgeoning and magic at 3rd level and to 15/bludgeoning and magic at 4th level.

Fear Aura (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, a lich is shrouded in a dreadful aura of death and evil.

Any creature in a 10-foot radius that looks at her must make a Will save if it is within 10 feet of her and has fewer than 5 HD.

Failure means the creature is affected as though by a fear spell (caster level equals lich's character level).

A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same lich's aura for 24 hours.

The lich can negate the effect of her aura by concealing all of her withered flesh and hiding her glowing eyes, usually by means of clothing that covers her entire body coupled with some sort of deep cowled cloak or visored helmet.

The radius of this effect expands to 30 feet at 3rd level and to 60 feet at 4th level.

Fortification (Ex): When a lich attains 2nd level, her internal organs begin to shut down as she continues her metamorphosis into an undead creature and starts to transfer her life energy into her phylactery.

Thus, she is treated as if she had the light fortification armor property (25% chance for any critical hit or sneak attack against her to become a normal attack).

If she has any version of the fortification special ability from another source (such as a spell or magic item), use the better value.

At 3rd level, she is treated as if she had moderate fortification (50% chance for any critical hit or sneak attack against her to become a normal attack).

Phylactery: To complete her transformation to a lich, the character must create a phylactery using the Craft Wondrous Item feat.

The phylactery is crafted in three stages, and the lich transfers a bit more of her life force to it at each stage.

It does not, however, grant her any of the normal benefits of a phylactery until it is fully completed.

Paying the cost of each stage of its construction is a prerequisite for the corresponding level in the lich template class.

Thus, to take the 2nd level in this class, the lich must invest 40,000 gp and 1,600 XP in her phylactery.

She must spend the same amount again to take the 3rd level, and once again to take the 4th level (for a total investment of 120,000 gp and 4,800 XP).

She can complete the phylactery early if she wishes, though doing so does not grant her any additional abilities until she takes the appropriate levels in the template class.

For the purpose of determining item saving throws, the phylactery has a caster level equal to that of the lich at the time she completed the most recent stage of work.

For example, if a human wizard 11/lich 1 crafts the first stage of her phylactery, it is caster level 11th.

She gains three more wizard levels before finishing the second stage of construction, giving it caster level 14th.

At that point, she takes the 2nd level of the template class.

She then takes one more level of wizard and completes the phylactery, which is thereafter caster level 15th.

The most common physical form for a phylactery is a sealed metal box containing strips of parchment on which magical phrases have been transcribed.

The box is a Tiny object with 40 hit points, hardness 20, and a break DC of 40.

Other kinds of phylacteries can also exist, such as rings, amulets, or similar items.

Once the phylactery has been completed, the lich can avoid permanent destruction as long as her phylactery survives.

If she dies or is destroyed, she reappears 1d10 days after her old body's death.

She gains her new physical form by grafting her undead spirit to a humanoid corpse, mindless undead, or some weak-minded creature within a few miles of her phylactery.

The new body has all the abilities and powers of her old one, though any items she used to carry are lost (probably taken by those who slew her old body).

Likewise, any spells or effects bound to her old body with permanency do not spontaneously appear on her new one.

Most liches who recover from death spend a year or more tracking down their items and learning more about their attackers, and it is not unusual for a lich to wait decades before exacting her revenge.

If the phylactery is destroyed while the lich is still active in a body, her undead life force automatically joins that body.

She takes no penalties of any kind for that joining, but without a phylactery, she cannot recover if her body is subsequently destroyed.

She may create a new phylactery to replace a lost one if she has the time and resources to do so.

Turn Resistance (Ex): At 4th level, a lich gains +4 turn resistance.

She is treated as an undead with 4 more Hit Dice than she actually has for the purpose of turn, rebuke, command, or bolster attempts.

Immunities (Ex): A 4th-level lich is immune to cold, electricity, and polymorph, though she can still use polymorph effects on herself.

Undeath: Upon reaching 4th level, the lich becomes fully undead.

Her type changes to undead, and she gains all the normal benefits and drawbacks that go with that type.

She no longer has a Constitution score, so she loses any Constitution bonus or penalty to hit points, saving throws, and skills.

She also becomes immune to many attacks (including critical hits and sneak attacks, rendering her fortification ability redundant), but she is subject to turn and rebuke attempts and is immediately destroyed if brought to 0 or fewer hit points (though her phylactery prevents "permanent" destruction).

All of her Hit Dice (current and future) increase to d12s. (Rather than rerolling all her Hit Dice, just add 4 hit points for every d4 she previously had, 3 hp for every d6, 2 hp for every d8, and 1 hp for every d10).

In addition, her alignment immediately changes to evil if it was not already.

A lich cleric becomes an ex-cleric at this time if her deity does not allow evil clerics. However, she can remedy this situation either by offering her allegiance to a god that does accept evil clerics or by devoting herself to an evil cause or a source of evil divine power (selecting new domains if appropriate). A lich cleric who could previously turn undead loses that ability but gains the ability to rebuke undead.

Likewise, a lich cleric who could previously spontaneously cast cure spells can now do so with inflict spells. Upon gaining the undead template, a lich sorcerer or wizard is shunned by her familiar unless it is a bat or rat, but she can acquire a bat or rat familiar to replace her previous one in the usual way.

Table SP-12: The Lich Template Class

Lich Class Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Int +2, natural armor +2, lich skills +2, damaging touch 1d6+5, paralyzing touch (1d4 rounds), resistances (cold 5, electricity 5)
2nd	+1	Natural armor +3, lich skills +4, damage reduction 5/bludgeoning and magic, damaging touch (1d8+5), fear aura (10-ft. radius), fortification (light), paralyzing touch (1d4 minutes), phylactery (1st stage), resistances (cold 10, electricity 10)
3rd	+2	Wis +2, natural armor +4, lich skills +6, damage reduction 10/bludgeoning and magic, fear aura (30-ft. radius), fortification (moderate), paralyzing touch (1d4 hours), phylactery (2nd stage), resistances (cold 20, electricity 20)
4th	+2	Cha +2, natural armor +5, lich skills +8, damage reduction 15/bludgeoning and magic, fear aura (60-ft. radius), immunities (cold, electricity, polymorph), paralyzing touch (permanent), phylactery (3rd stage), turn resistance +4, undeath

LILLEND

Outsider (Chaotic, Good)

Lillends are strange outsiders with a love of music and natural beauty.

Although some might think them fiendish because of their serpentine bodies, their beautiful faces and voices and magnificent feathered wings show their benign nature.

Incredibly strong, wise, and confident, lillends make strong fighters and bards but excel at any task they choose.

Lillends are good choices for players who want exotic characters with a strong desire to do good.

Lillends have good ability scores, natural armor, combat abilities, spellcasting, and spell-like abilities.

They have enough special abilities that the class has a useful ability or ability score increase at every character level.

The biggest drawback to the class is its 7 Hit Dice relative to its ECL of 13, so a lillend cannot take quite as much punishment as a fighter of the same level.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Wis, +2 Cha. Lillends are wise, personable, and confident.
- Speed: Lillend land speed is 20 feet.
- Darkvision: Lillends can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Poison Immunity: Lillends are immune to all kinds of poison.
- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Survival checks.
- Automatic Languages: Abyssal, Celestial, Common, and Infernal.
- Favored Class: Lillend.

The best multiclassing choice for a lillend is bard, but lillends are competent at any class.

CLASS SKILLS

The lillend's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis). On reaching Large size, a lillend takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the lillend monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Lillends are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A lillend receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 8th level.

After 13th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Tail Slap: A lillend has a tail slap attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Bard Abilities: Starting at 2nd level, a lillend casts spells and has the bardic music ability of a bard of half its class level.

Lillend World Powers (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a lillend can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: darkness, hallucinatory terrain, knock, and light.

At 9th level and higher it can use them three times per day. The lillend's caster level is its effective bard level + 4.

Lillend Talk Powers (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, a lillend can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: charm person, speak with animals, and speak with plants.

Its caster level is its effective bard level + 4.

Improved Grab (Ex): Starting at 5th level, a lillend can use this ability if its hits a creature of its size or smaller with its tail attack.

If it gets a hold, it can constrict.

Constrict (Ex): A lillend deals tail slap damage plus Strength bonus against creatures it grapples with its tail. This attack uses the entire lower portion of its body, so it cannot take any move actions when constricting, though it can still attack with a hand-held weapon.

TABLE A-32: THE LILLEND

MAGMIN

Elemental (Fire)

Made from molten rock, magmins are mischievous elemental creatures that do not really understand the damage they can cause.

Quick but dumb, magmins have a hard time carrying nonmetallic equipment.

Because they have such a limited focus, they are good characters for players who have a need to cause some destruction but don't have a long-term interest in a particular character.

A magmin fighter or barbarian could be a workable character if a way is found to restrain its urges when it is in civilized areas.

Magmins are physically weak, with almost all of their power stemming from their natural ability to ignite objects and exude heat.

These two abilities start out weak but develop quickly.

At the highest levels, the magmin's damage reduction kicks in, balancing its weak Hit Dice.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: -2 Str, +2 Dex, -2 Int. Magmins are somewhat weak because of their size and not too smart, but relatively quick.
- Small: As Small creatures, Magmins gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.
- Speed: Magmin land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Magmins can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Ignan.
- Favored Class: Magmin.

The best multiclassing choice for a magmin is rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The magmin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the magmin monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Magmins are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A magmin receives one feat at 1st level.

After 6th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Fire Subtype (Ex): A magmin is immune to fire damage and takes a -10 penalty on saves against cold attacks.

If a cold attack does not allow a saving throw, the creature takes double damage instead.

Burning Touch: The magmin has a burning touch attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage.

If the magmin uses a metal weapon, it adds half its burning touch damage to the weapon damage.

Fiery Aura (Ex): Anyone within a certain distance from a magmin of 2nd level or higher must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 magmin's HD from class levels + magmin's Con modifier) or take the indicated damage from the intense heat.

The radius of the emanation increases from 5 feet at 2nd level to 30 feet at 6th level.

Combustion (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a magmin gains this ability.

Anyone it hits with its burning touch must succeed on a Reflex save (DC 10 + 1/2 magmin's HD from class levels + magmin's Con modifier) or take additional fire damage equal to the magmin's burning touch damage as clothes ignite or armor becomes searing hot.

The damage continues for another 1d4+2 rounds after the magmin's last successful attack.

Magmins can also ignite flammable materials with a touch. Attacks from a magmin with a weapon do not cause the target to combust.

Melt Weapons (Ex): Any metal weapon that strikes a magmin must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 magmin's HD from class levels + magmin's Con modifier) or melt away into slag.

TABLE A-33: THE MAGMIN

Level	Hit Dice	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Skill Points	CR	Special

MEDUSA

Monstrous Humanoid

Whether the image of this snake-haired being emerges from literary description, the imagination, or from a fantasy film, the idea of a creature that can turn a human into unmoving stone with a glance is terrifying.

What if a player character could threaten the denizens of a dungeon or the enemy within a foreign keep with a petrifying countenance?

The troubling side of playing a medusa character is that unless the medusa's face is concealed (in which case the medusa suffers from all the consequences of blindness), its allies risk becoming realistic sculptures.

The important question in building the medusa monster class is where to place its petrifying gaze.

Since it is the most important feature of the class, and the most likely to present game balance concerns to a Dungeon Master, the gaze lies close to the top of the range.

At lower levels, the medusa must make do with ability score increases, natural armor, and poisonous snakes.

The snakes deal Strength damage, a relatively weak poison that doesn't upset game balance.

At higher levels, the medusa's poison grows in efficiency, eventually becoming powerful enough to debilitate a strong warrior with a single snakes attack.

Eventually, the monster class at its highest level offers the medusa the power to control its gaze attacks so it strikes down foes, not friends.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Cha.
- Medusas are quick and have a strong sense of self.
- Speed: Medusa land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Medusas can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common.
- Favored Class: Medusa.

The best multiclassing choice for a medusa is fighter, but its high Charisma and gaze attack make it better suited for some class that does not put the character on the front line of the war, such as bard or sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The medusa's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the medusa monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Medusas are proficient with all simple weapons and with shortbows but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A medusa receives two feats at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Snakes: The medusa has a snake-hair attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

The snakes always attack as one unit (the medusa cannot direct half of its snakes to attack one creature and half another).

Poison (Ex): A medusa's snake attack injects the target with poison (Fort DC 10 + 1/2 medusa's HD from class levels + medusa's Con modifier).

The poison deals the indicated primary and secondary damage.

Petrifying Gaze (Su): Beginning at 6th level, a medusa gains the ability to petrify targets with its gaze.

Unlike a fully developed gaze attack, a young medusa can use this ability only once per day and can only use it as an active attack against a single target within 10 feet.

At 8th level its range extends to 30 feet, and the medusa can use its gaze in this manner up to three times per day.

At 10th level its gaze attack fully matures, and it can use it at will.

Targets of the gaze may resist with a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 medusa's HD from class levels + medusa's Cha modifier).

MIND FLAYER

Aberration

Mind flayers, like drow and driders, have a long history of terrorizing adventurers and heroes who dare to intrude within the deep reaches of the underworld.

These aberrations rip the brains from their foes.

As if that were not enough, the mind flayer triply earns its name with psionic powers and with mind blasts that can reduce foes to quivering inactivity.

The mind flayer's level adjustment is very high (+7), so most of the monster class involves reaching a point where the mind flayer character is a match for the standard mind flayer.

A mind flayer has a number of abilities to disperse to that point, but its mind blast is a trademark ability that is introduced as soon as possible.

The ability first appears at 4th level, but is limited in its uses per day, with a lower save DC, and affecting only a single target.

One by one, those restraints fall away until the character deals its 3d4 rounds of stunning, in a cone, at will.

The rest of the mind flayer's spell-like psionic powers appear in order of their spell levels from lowest to highest. The choice for mind flayer advancement is mostly moot, unless the campaign extends itself to epic levels beyond 20th.

In that case, the old mind flayer tradition of wizardry is the best path for most mind flayers to pursue.

With a +8 bonus to Intelligence, a mind flayer character given time and experience to develop its abilities can make a formidable archmage, and its spells would be very difficult to resist.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Int.
 - Mind flayers are intelligent creatures, albeit with an alien mindset.
 - Speed: Mind flayer land speed is 30 feet.
 - Darkvision: Mind flayers can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
 - Automatic Languages: Undercommon.
- However, mind flayers prefer to communicate telepathically.
- Favored Class: Mind flayer.

The best multiclassing choices for a mind flayer are wizard and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The mind flayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (any two, chosen at 1st level)

(Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the mind flayer monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A mind flayer has no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A mind flayer receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 5th and 11th level.

After 15th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Tentacles: A mind flayer uses its four facial tentacles for eating, but it also becomes adept at using them to attack creatures in combat.

Its tentacles are natural melee weapons and deal the indicated damage plus Strength modifier.

A mind flayer that cannot use all four of its tentacles in combat is still able to use them to eat in a noncombat situation.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a mind flayer must hit a Small, Medium-size, or Large creature with a tentacle attack (or a Huge creature if it can reach the creature's head).

If the grab is successful, on its next action the mind flayer may attempt to attach its remaining tentacles with a single grapple check.

The target can escape all the tentacles with a single grapple check, but the mind flayer gets a +2 bonus to oppose this check for each of its tentacles beyond the first that is attached to the target.

Telepathy (Su): Starting at 2nd level, a mind flayer gains telepathy at the indicated range.

It may communicate telepathically with any creature in range that has a language.

Psionics (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a mind flayer acquires psionic abilities.

Unless otherwise indicated, the abilities may be used at will.

The effective sorcerer level for these abilities is equal to the mind flayer's Hit Dice from class levels.

The save DC for psionics effects is 10 + spell level + mind flayer's Charisma modifier.

Mind Blast (Sp): Beginning at 4th level, a mind flayer can create a blast of mental energy.

A creature attacked by a mind blast can attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 medusa's HD from class levels + medusa's Cha modifier) to avoid being stunned.

Initially this ability is usable once per day against only one creature within 10 feet, and the stunned effect lasts for 1d4 rounds.

As a mind flayer advances in level, its mind blast affects all creatures in a cone extending out from the mind flayer, the ability is usable more often, and the duration of the effect lengthens.

At 14th level, a mind flayer can use its mind blast at will. It affects all creatures in a 60-foot cone, and those that fail their saves are stunned for 3d4 rounds.

Spell Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, a mind flayer gains spell resistance equal to 10 + its class level.

Extract (Ex): A mind flayer of 12th level or higher that begins its turn with all four tentacles attached and makes a successful grapple check automatically extracts the opponent's brain, instantly killing that creature (unless it has multiple brains or can function without its brain).

MINOTAUR

The minotaur is one of the strongest and most combative of the monstrous humanoids.

Graced with a powerful gore attacks and familiarity with weapons, the minotaur represents a tough opponent for dungeon-exploring heroes.

Now, the minotaur class allows the cunning and ferocity of this classic foe to work to the benefit of player characters. Building the minotaur monster class requires examining each of the components that make the monster formidable in combat: Strength, size, natural armor, and natural attacks.

Then, slowly parcel out those benefits in stages until the minotaur reaches its final ECL of 8 (including its +2 level adjustment).

A 1st-level minotaur has a hint of its eventual Strength but must tolerate penalties to Intelligence and Charisma.

It also has a natural attack, the ability to charge for increased damage, and a small natural armor bonus.

The rest of the minotaur's abilities are upgraded along these lines as smoothly as possible until it reaches 8th level (6 HD).

For much of this time, the immature minotaur lacks the advantage of Large size (and the 10-foot reach it provides).

The minotaur grows to its full adult Large size upon reaching 6th level.

After reaching 8th level, the minotaur can continue to advance using the monster advancement rules in the Monster Manual, if desired.

Monstrous humanoids have a great base attack progression (equal to a fighter's) and two good saves, so there is good incentive to advance in this way.

Other good options for continuing to develop a minotaur character include advancing as a fighter (for the bonus feats), a barbarian (for rage and certain skills), or a rogue (for sneak attacks and even more skills).

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Dex, -4 Int, -2 Cha.

While known for cunning and ferocity, minotaurs rely on Strength and natural weaponry to overcome their foes.

The minotaur's Strength and Constitution increase as it gains levels, while its Dexterity decreases.

• Speed: Minotaur land speed is 30 feet.

• Darkvision: Minotaurs can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Automatic Languages: Giant.

A minotaur with enough Intelligence to receive a bonus language usually makes Common its first choice.

Though they are classified as monstrous humanoids, minotaurs frequently associate with various giant kinds, including ogres, ettins, and true giants.

Their size makes minotaurs accepted among these monsters when smaller beings would not be.

• Favored Class: Minotaur.

The best multiclassing choices for a minotaur are fighter, barbarian, and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The minotaur's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a minotaur takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the minotaur monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Minotaurs are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Feats: A minotaur receives one feat at 1st level, one at 4th level, and another at 8th level.

After 8th level, it gains feats normally according to its effective character level (the total of its Hit Dice, level adjustment, and class levels) as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Keen Senses (Ex): A 1st-level minotaur gains a +1 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

At 4th level, the bonus rises to +2, at 6th level to +3, and at 8th level to +4.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Most minotaurs are not clever, but they all possess an innate logical ability.

At 2nd level, a minotaur can never become lost.

At 4th level, when it develops the scent ability, it can track creatures by smell.

At 7th level, a minotaur becomes immune to maze spells and is never flat-footed.

Scent (Ex): A minotaur has a keen sense of smell.

Beginning at 4th level, it can detect opponents within the given range (double range if the scent is upwind, one-half range if it is downwind) and may take a move-equivalent action to determine the direction of a scent.

If an odor source, such as an opponent, is within 5 feet, the minotaur can pinpoint that source.

Minotaurs can use the scent ability to track an enemy by smell.

Large Size: At 6th level, a minotaur grows to Large size and its natural reach extends to 10 feet.

It incurs the usual penalties for Large creatures.

Gore: A gore is a natural attack.

Beginning at 1st level, a minotaur deals 1d4 points of damage plus its Strength modifier when making a gore attack.

At 3rd level the base damage rises to 1d6, and at 7th level to 1d8.

When a minotaur charges to make a gore attack, it deals additional damage according to the following table.

Gore Damage	Charge Damage
1d4	2d6
1d6	2d8
1d8	4d6

A minotaur adds one and one-half times its Strength modifier to its gore damage when charging.

Because a gore is a natural attack, a minotaur can use the full attack action to attack with a melee weapon and follow up with its gore attack as a secondary attack at a –5 penalty. It does get iterative attacks (multiple attacks with the same weapon at a cumulative –5 penalty), if it is entitled to any, with its melee weapon (but not with its gore) when using such an attack routine.

MUMMY

Undead

Undead monsters can be tough to adapt to a setting, but the story that they bring with them often makes it worth the extra effort.

What could bring a mummy to abandon its eternal vigilance and take up the career of a traveling adventurer? The mummy character must answer that question.

Is it vengeance, the pursuit of a grave robber or desecrator of the dead?

Is it the suddenly recovered memory of the life long past? Alternatively, does this creature of the dead, of all of the things that prowl the night, seek to end its years of service to negative powers?

Does it long to be human once more, or simply to end its suffering in pursuit of something more noble?

The mummy has in its repertoire despair, mummy rot, improved ability scores, natural armor, and its very status as an undead creature.

The undead status comes first, and because of this type advantage, the mummy must wait for several levels to acquire any special abilities.

What is frequently the most feared aspect of an encounter with a hostile mummy, its supernatural rotting disease, does not play much into the effectiveness of a player character mummy.

While PCs must deal with long-term consequences such as diseases and curses, the typical monster won't be alive long enough for the disease to matter—or if it is, it's only because the player characters have met an untimely end. The mummy's despair, on the other hand, is much more useful, even if it is troublesome for companions to deal with its paralyzing visage each morning.

The mummy's ability scores encourage it down the path of any character class that does not rely on Dexterity or Intelligence.

Sorcerer, cleric, and fighter are the most likely choices, though that unique mummy paladin or bard could be worth considering.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, Con —, -4 Int. Mummies are strong but slow, and they tend to be single-minded.

As an undead creature, a mummy does not have a Constitution score.

- Undead: Immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and disease.

Not subject to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, energy drain, or death from massive damage.

When a mummy is reduced to 0 hit points, it is immediately destroyed.

A destroyed mummy can be reanimated with a limited wish, wish, or miracle spell (the first spell causes the mummy to lose a level, the latter two do not).

A resurrection or true resurrection spell can bring a mummy back to life as a creature (no longer undead) with a character class appropriate to the mummy's life (the former spell causes the ex-mummy to lose a level, the latter one does not).

- Speed: Mummy land speed is 20 feet.
- Darkvision: Mummies can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common.

Once humanoids themselves, mummies remember the language of their own former existence.

Mummies often study rare or exotic languages in order to preserve their connection to an ancient past.

- Favored Class: Mummy.

The best multiclassing choice for a mummy is fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The mummy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the mummy monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mummies are proficient with all simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A mummy receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 11th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: A mummy has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Fire Vulnerability (Ex): A mummy takes double damage from fire attacks unless a save is allowed for half damage.

A successful save halves the damage and a failure doubles it.

Resistant to Blows (Ex): At 3rd level, a mummy becomes more resistant to damage.

Any physical attacks against it deal only half damage.

Apply this effect before damage reduction.

Mummy Rot (Su): Starting at 5th level, once per day a mummy can infect a creature hit by its slam attack with mummy rot.

At 8th level it can do this three times per day, and at 12th level every one of its slam attacks can inflict the disease if the mummy wishes.

Mummy rot is a supernatural disease, and it cannot be cured without magic.

An afflicted creature that dies shrivels away into sand and dust that blow away into nothing at the first wind unless both remove disease and raise dead (or similar spells) are cast on the remains within 6 rounds.

Despair (Su): At 10th level and higher, a mummy can use its despair ability to cause fear in any creature that views it.

Such a creature must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 mummy's HD from class levels + mummy's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed with fear for 1d4 rounds.

Whether or not the save is successful, that creature cannot be affected again by that mummy's despair ability for one day.

NIXIE

Fey

Sprites have become known for their mischievous nature, for their ability to pull pranks of either incredible complexity or simple mirth.

In truth sprites, especially nixies, are reclusive by nature. A few sprites, however, buck the trend, leaving behind their woods and lakes to learn more of the larger world.

And, perhaps, to make a difference in it.

Perhaps they seek to halt the encroachment of humanity into their forests and wilds.

Or they may realize that as vast as the bounty of their homelands may be, the world is yet larger and more interesting.

The advantage of beginning play as a fey creature lies mostly in the number of skill points with which a fey begins.

Over its first three levels, the nixie character gains all of its minor but helpful abilities and a potent Charisma score. Because of the nixie's low starting ECL and its good ability scores, it is one of the best candidates for a monster spellcaster.

Few monsters with an ECL of more than 3 or 4 are suitable for becoming spellcasters simply because they can never match the spellcasting power of a human of the same character level.

In the nixie's case, the trade may be worth it.

By multiclassing into a sorcerer, the nixie benefits from Charisma and spell resistance, even if that spell resistance eventually grows weak relative to character level.

Nixies can also do well as rogues or bards, given their ability scores.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: -4 Str, +4 Dex, +4 Cha.

Though weak in sheer physical power, the nixie relies on grace and winning personality.

- Small: As Small creatures, nixies gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are one-half of those of Medium-size characters.

- Speed: Nixie land speed is 20 feet, swim speed 30 feet. Like any creature with a swim speed, nixies can move through the water at that speed without making Swim checks, they have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard, and they can always take 10 when making Swim checks.

They can use the run action while swimming provided they swim in a straight line.

- Aquatic Subtype: Nixies can breathe water or air equally well.

- Skills: +2 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks; +5 racial bonus on Hide checks when in water.

- Low-Light Vision: Nixies can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, or similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Automatic Languages: Aquan, Common, and Sylvan.

- Favored Class: Nixie.

The best multiclassing choices for a nixie are bard, rogue, and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The nixie's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the nixie monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Nixies are proficient with all simple weapons, and with the short sword, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A nixie receives one feat at 1st level.

It gains Dodge as a bonus feat at 3rd level.

After 4th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Spell-Like Abilities: A nixie can use the indicated spell-like abilities the indicated number of times per day.

Its caster level for water breathing is its class level +2.

All other spell-like abilities have a caster level of the nixie's class level.

OGRE MAGE

Giant

Said to be magical beings native to distant lands, ogre mages are the opposite of their slow, crude, and brutish cousins.

They can be highly organized and sometimes lead groups of common ogres, devising tactics that make the best of ogre strengths while minimizing their weaknesses.

With the ability to change shape, fly, charm enemies, and escape from danger as smoke, some ogre mages let others believe that they are actually vampires, fooling enemies into wasting time trying to turn them or harm them with holy water.

As smart as the average wizard, ogre mages are clever beings and make good characters for players who like to plan and lead but still hold their own when swords must be drawn.

Ogre mages come with a suite of magical abilities, some of which are very powerful.

Their spell-like abilities are acquired at approximately the same level the equivalent spells become available to wizards, and the ogre mage starts out with limited uses but eventually gains their full potency.

The ability score bonuses accrue for the entire range of the class, and at the highest levels the monster gains spell resistance, regeneration, and its full size.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Cha.

Ogre mages are strong and confident.

- Speed: Ogre mage land speed is 40 feet.

- Darkvision: Ogre mages can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Automatic Languages: Common and Giant.

- Favored Class: Ogre mage.

The best multiclassing choices for an ogre mage are fighter and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The ogre mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an ogre mage takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ogre mage monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ogre mages are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

Feats: A ogre mage receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 4th level.

After 12th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Spell-Like Abilities: An ogre mage can use the indicated spell-like abilities at the indicated frequency.

It has a caster level equal to its Hit Dice from class levels + 4.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A ogre mage has spell resistance equal to 6 + class level.

Regeneration (Ex): Ogre mages take normal damage from fire and acid.

An ogre mage that loses a limb or body part can reattach it by holding the severed member to the stump.

Reattachment takes 1 minute.

If the head or other vital organ is removed, it must be reattached within 10 minutes or the creature dies.

Ogre mages cannot regrow lost body parts.

OGRE

Giant

Ogres stand out as physically powerful combatants, even if they lack sophistication.

Yet style and grace are something that an ogre character seldom needs.

The ogre proves its worth in single combat and to a party of adventurers in almost every encounter, dealing out terrible punishment to its enemies—and that's in addition to its naturally repellent odor.

Building the ogre monster class focuses on the creature's Strength, size, and natural armor.

The 1st-level ogre begins play strong but with less than half of its eventual Strength.

The rest is gained over several levels until the ogre character reaches 8th level.

Similarly, the ogre's natural armor slowly accrues over those levels, beginning at 2nd level.

Finally, at lower levels, the ogre is merely Medium-size.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, -4 Int, -4 Cha.

An ogre is physically powerful but dumb as a post, and severely lacking in social skills.

- Speed: Ogre land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Ogres can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Giant.
- Favored Class: Ogre.

The best multiclassing choices for an ogre are fighter and barbarian.

Training in more than a single additional class is difficult for their uncomplicated minds to accept.

CLASS SKILLS

The ogre's class skills (and the key ability for each skills) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an ogre takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ogre monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ogres are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

Feats: An ogre receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 3rd level.

After 6th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

MERROW

Merrow (aquatic ogres) live in freshwater lakes and rivers. Merrow use all information from the ogre class, with the following changes: They have a swim speed of 40 feet, can breathe water as well as air, and are proficient with the longspear instead of the greatclub.

PIXIE

Fey

Pixies are pranksters and greatly enjoy leading travelers astray, but some break out of this simple mentality and try to learn more about their world, seek great treasures, or avenge a particular insult to themselves, their people, or their homeland.

With their natural ability to fly, sense thoughts, disrupt enemy magic, and become invisible, pixies are formidable creatures when angered.

They are good choices for players who like to play mischievous characters and want some magic to carry out their plans.

Despite their size, full-grown pixies can be very dangerous. Their magical powers and high number of skill points and feats are responsible for their total ECL of 5, but their low Hit Dice are their greatest drawback.

The class is built around scaling the spell-like abilities, and their natural invisibility isn't introduced until 4th level.

At the highest level of the class are the most powerful spell-like abilities and spell resistance.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: –4 Str, +4 Dex, +2 Int, +2 Cha.

Pixies are physically weak but make up for it in other areas.

- Small: As Small creatures, pixies gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.

- Speed: Pixie land speed is 20 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Pixies can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Sylvan.
- Favored Class: Pixie.

The best multiclassing choices for a pixie are rogue, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The pixie's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the pixie monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Pixies are proficient with all simple weapons, with the short sword, and with the composite longbow, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A pixie receives one feat at 1st level.

It gains Dodge as a bonus feat at 2nd level.

After 5th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2–5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Lesser Pixie Powers (Sp): A pixie can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: dancing lights, detect chaos, detect good, detect evil, detect law, entangle, and invisibility (self only).

Its caster level for all spell-like abilities is equal to its class level + 3 (save DC 10 + spell level + pixie's Cha modifier).

Pixie Powers (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, a pixie can use detect thoughts and dispel magic once per day.

Natural Invisibility (Su): At 4th level, a pixie is naturally invisible and remains invisible even when it attacks. This ability is constant, but the pixie can suppress or resume it as a free action.

Craft Special Arrows: Upon reaching 4th level, a pixie can craft pixie sleep arrows and pixie memory loss arrows as though meeting all of the prerequisites.

Greater Pixie Powers (Sp): At 5th level, a pixie can use confusion (by touch), permanent image (visual and auditory elements only), and polymorph self once per day.

A pixie with a Charisma of at least 20 can also use Otto's irresistible dance once per day.

RAKSHASA

Outsider (Evil, Lawful)

Said to be the very embodiment of evil, rakshasas are malevolent and manipulative.

They are the masterminds of evil plots, the leaders of horrible cults, capable of using magic but naturally resistant to it.

Rakshasas are good choices for players who want to play leaders with some magical ability and the ability to ignore most of the spells of enemy casters.

While its ability score increases are significant, a rakshasa's gifts stem from magic.

Its sorcerer abilities progress about half as fast as those of a true sorcerer, but its superior base attack bonus, saving throws, and damage reduction make up for that.

The class's most significant ability is its immunity to most spells, which starts out at very low power but climbs rapidly in the highest levels of the class.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Con, +2 Cha. Rakshasas are tough and diabolically sure of themselves.
- Speed: Rakshasa land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Rakshasas can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common, Infernal, and Undercommon.
- Favored Class: Rakshasa.

The best multiclassing choices for a rakshasa are rogue and sorcerer.

CLASS SKILLS

The rakshasa's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the rakshasa monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Rakshasas are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A rakshasa receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 5th and 11th level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A rakshasa has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: A rakshasa has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Alternate Form (Su): A rakshasa can assume any humanoid form, or revert to its own form, as a standard action.

This ability is similar to the alter self spell cast by an 18th-level sorcerer.

A rakshasa can use this ability the indicated number of times per day at the indicated duration.

Eventually the rakshasa can remain in an alternate form indefinitely.

Vulnerable to Blessed Crossbow Bolts (Ex): Any hit scored with a blessed crossbow bolt instantly slays a rakshasa.

Spells: Starting at 2nd level, a rakshasa casts spells as a sorcerer of a level equal to its Hit Dice from class levels, and can also choose 1st-level cleric spells as known spells and cast them as arcane spells.

Detect Thoughts (Sp): A rakshasa can use this ability the indicated number of times per day with a caster level equal to its class level + 4 (save DC 12 + rakshasa's Cha modifier).

Spell Immunity (Su): Starting at 4th level, a rakshasa is immune to all effects of all 1st-level spells.

As it advances in level it becomes immune to higher-level spells.

Like spell resistance, a rakshasa may suppress this ability in order to accept its own spells or spells from allies.

SATYR

Fey

If nymphs and dryads represent the beauty of the natural world, satyrs represent its lust and fertility.

Lovers and drinkers rather than fighters, satyrs are quite capable of defending themselves, their land, and their mates when needed.

They also have keen senses that help keep them from being ambushed.

Satyrs are good characters for players who like playing bards but want a more natural feel than a city-born entertainer.

Satyrs have few abilities that are very remarkable.

Their level adjustment of only +2 is based on their favorable ability score bonuses, racial bonuses to skills, and magical pipes.

Most of the class is spent advancing the creature's Hit Dice, with its other abilities distributed over its seven levels.

Its only magical ability is one of the last things it gets.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Cha.

Satyrs are nimble and gregarious.

- Speed: Satyr land speed is 40 feet.

- Low-Light Vision: Satyrs can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

- Skills: +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

- Automatic Languages: Common and Sylvan.

- Favored Class: Satyr.

The best multiclassing choices for a satyr are bard and rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The satyr's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the satyr monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Satyrs are proficient with all simple weapons and with shortbows but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A satyr receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 3rd level.

After 7th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Gore: The satyr has a gore attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Attune Pipes (Su): A satyr of 5th level or higher with a set of musical pipes can spend one day attuning that instrument to itself and its natural magic (a process similar to creating a magic item).

Once the pipes are attuned, the satyr may invoke a special magic.

When it plays, all creatures within a 60-foot spread (except satyrs) must succeed on a Will save (DC 14) or be affected by charm person, fear, or sleep (caster level equal to twice the satyr's HD from class levels).

The satyr chooses the tune and its effect.

A creature that successfully saves against any of the pipe's effects cannot be affected by the same set of pipes again for one day.

The pipes cannot be used in this manner by anyone else, and if separated from the satyr for more than a week, they must undergo the attunement process again.

Only satyrs who have chosen "pipes" as a type of performance with the Perform skill can attune a set of pipes in this manner.

SEA HAG

Monstrous Humanoid

Of the many kinds of hag, the sea hag is the most loathsome, repulsive, and wretched.

Most of its magical powers stem from how hideous it is—and the more horrible its appearance, the more proud the sea hag becomes.

As strong as other hags, sea hags have no special ability to disguise themselves or mimic others, and so they must be cautious when away from their lairs.

Sea hags are good characters for players who enjoy dramatic appearances and are looking for a creature with a lower ECL than a medusa (another horrible-looking monster).

While sea hags have only 3 Hit Dice, their two main abilities are very powerful, capable of weakening large numbers of creatures at once or slaying one outright.

They first gain a weak form of their Strength attack, which develops over time into its mature version, and only acquire the deadly gaze attack at later levels.

A sea hag's spell resistance is weaker than that of any other hag, but it gets this ability at a relatively early level.

Like all hags it is very strong, and a sea hag's Strength increases greatly over the class's eight levels.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Wis.

Sea hags are strong and clever.

- Speed: Sea hag land speed is 30 feet, swim speed 40 feet.

Like any creature with a swim speed, sea hags can move through the water at that speed without making Swim checks, have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard, and can always take 10 when making Swim checks.

They can use the run action while swimming provided they swim in a straight line.

- Aquatic Subtype: Sea hags can breathe water or air equally well.
- Darkvision: Sea hags can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Giant.
- Favored Class: Sea hag.

TABLE A-43: THE SEA HAG

8th	3d8	+3	+1	+3	+3	—	4	Horrific appearance (2d8 Str), +2 Str

The best multiclassing choices for a sea hag are barbarian, fighter, and cleric.

CLASS SKILLS

The sea hag's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any one, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a sea hag takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sea hag monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sea hags are proficient with all simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A sea hag receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 6th level.

After 8th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A sea hag has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Horrific Appearance (Su): At 2nd level and higher, a sea hag is so hideous that a creature looking at it must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 sea hag's HD from class levels + sea hag's Cha modifier) or take the indicated amount of Strength damage.

Creatures that save are not affected again by that sea hag's horrific appearance for one day.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A sea hag of 5th level or higher has spell resistance equal to 11 + its HD from class levels.

Evil Eye (Su): As many as three times per day, a sea hag of 7th level or higher can gaze at any single creature within 30 feet.

The target must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 sea hag's HD from class levels + sea hag's Cha modifier) or have a 25% chance of dying instantly.

Even a creature that saves is rendered helpless for three days, although remove curse or dispel evil can break the effect.

SHADOW

Undead (Incorporeal)

Humanity has always been fascinated by the power of shadows, inventing tales of people who removed their shadows to gain power and a magical slave, and noting that mystical creatures such as vampires lack shadows entirely. The undead shadows are no exception, able to pass through walls and drain the very strength from a person's limbs. Spooky and easily capable of creating more creatures like themselves, shadows are often the earliest exposure adventurers have to incorporeal undead because of their relatively low power as adversaries.

Shadows are good characters for players who want a strange, spooky undead creature without any of the nastiness associated with rotting flesh and the need to feast on blood, brains, or carrion.

A shadow's level adjustment is +7, mainly because shadows are incorporeal and can create spawn.

The power of the class is gradually improved; at low levels the shadow's incorporeal touch ability deals only a very small amount of Strength damage, and the creature cannot create spawn.

The creature is able to fly from the very start and eventually gains the ability to create spawn from its dead victims, giving them many allies in a fight.

A shadow's greatest vulnerability is to turning, since a low-level shadow is no more likely to resist a turn attempt than a simple skeleton.

This weakness somewhat offsets the class's powers at low levels, since even a 1st-level cleric has a 50% chance of turning a 1st-level shadow.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: Str —, Con —, -4 Int, +2 Cha.

Shadows aren't very smart, but they're spooky and they know it.

As an incorporeal creature, a shadow does not have a Strength score.

As an undead creature, a shadow does not have a Constitution score.

• Undead: Shadows are immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and disease. They are not subject to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, energy drain, or death from massive damage.

• Incorporeal: Incorporeal creatures can only be harmed by other incorporeal creatures, by weapons with an enhancement bonus of +1 or higher, or by spells, spell-like effects, or supernatural effects.

They are immune to all nonmagical attack forms. They are not burned by normal fires, affected by natural cold, or harmed by mundane acids.

Even when struck by magic or magic weapons, an incorporeal creature has a 50% chance to ignore any damage from a corporeal source—except for a force effect, such as magic missile, or damage dealt by a ghost touch weapon.

Incorporeal creatures move in any direction (including up or down) at will.

They do not need to walk on the ground.

Incorporeal creatures can pass through solid objects at will, although they cannot see when their eyes are within solid matter.

The physical attacks of incorporeal creatures ignore material armor, even magic armor, unless it is made of force (such as mage armor or bracers of defense) or has the ghost touch special ability.

Incorporeal creatures pass through and operate in water as easily as they do in air.

Incorporeal creatures cannot fall or take falling damage.

Corporeal creatures cannot trip or grapple incorporeal creatures.

Incorporeal creatures have no weight and do not set off traps that are triggered by weight.

Incorporeal creatures do not leave footprints, have no scent, and make no noise unless they manifest, and even then they only make noise intentionally.

An incorporeal creature has no natural armor but has a deflection bonus to AC equal to its Charisma modifier (or at least +1).

• Speed: Shadows fly at a speed of 40 ft. (good).

• Darkvision: Shadows can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Automatic Languages: Common.

• Favored Class: Shadow.

The best multiclassing choice for a shadow is rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadow's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the shadow monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadows are proficient with simple weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A shadow receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 5th level.

After 10th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Incorporeal Touch: A shadow has an incorporeal touch attack that is a natural weapon that deals the indicated amount of temporary Strength damage.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow of 6th level or higher rises as a shadow of the same level as the master in 1d4 rounds.

Such a spawn is under the command of the shadow that created it and remains enslaved until its master's death.

At 6th level, a shadow can control a number of spawn equal to its HD.

This limit goes up to $HD \times 1\frac{1}{2}$ at 8th level and $HD \times 2$ at 10th level.

If a shadow creates a spawn that causes it to exceed this limit, the spawn longest under its control is released.

STONE GIANT

Giant (Earth)

An enigma among the giants, stone giants are usually neutral, not directly involving themselves in good causes as storm giants and some cloud giants do, but avoiding the call of evil that their other kin heed.

While some consider them idiots obsessed with throwing rocks, stone giants are actually as smart as humans and relatively civilized, preferring to be left alone and to spend their time devoted to survival and their own culture.

Young stone giants sometimes leave home on quests to establish status or find an answer to a great question.

Stone giants are good characters for players who want to play a giant but don't want one with the stigma of an inherently evil nature.

Stone giants have no strange magical abilities; their level adjustment of +4 derives from their great Strength and Constitution, their ability to throw and catch rocks, and their natural armor.

Because the giant has 14 Hit Dice, this (plus the level adjustment) gives the class a broad range of levels across which to distribute its ability score modifiers, natural armor, and rock catching and throwing abilities, making it easy to present a balanced class at all levels.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Str.
- Stone giants are very strong, and they become even stronger as they mature.
- Speed: Stone giant land speed is 40 feet.
- Darkvision: Stone giants can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Skills: +8 racial bonus on Hide checks in rocky terrain.
- Automatic Languages: Common and Giant.
- Favored Class: Stone giant.

The best multiclassing choices for a stone giant are barbarian, fighter, and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The stone giant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a stone giant takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stone giant monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stone giants are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with light armor, and with shields.

Feats: A stone giant receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 8th, 12th, and 15th level.

After 18th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Rock Throwing (Ex): Stone giants have a +1 racial bonus on attack rolls when throwing rocks.

A stone giant can throw a rock for the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

A rock's maximum range is five range increments.

Rock Catching (Ex): A stone giant can catch Small, Medium-size, or Large rocks (or similar projectiles).

Once per round, a stone giant that would normally be hit by a rock can make a Reflex save to catch it as a free action.

The save DC is 15 for a Small rock, 20 for a Medium-size one, and 25 for a Large one.

(If the projectile has an enhancement bonus on attack rolls, the DC increases by that amount).

The giant must be ready for and aware of the attack.

SUCCUBUS/INCUBUS

Outsider (Chaotic, Evil)

Succubi represent the erotic, seductive aspect of evil. Although their true forms are obviously demonic, they are still strangely attractive—and most mortals never see the creature's true form, but only its idealized humanoid disguises.

Less oriented toward physical combat than other demons, succubi are still powerful creatures with many abilities at their disposal.

They make good characters for players who want to play spellcasters that rely on enchantment effects and still have a few tricks when unseduceable creatures such as undead appear.

Succubi are powerful creatures, with spell resistance, energy resistances, nearly a dozen spell-like abilities, good ability score modifiers, and the ability to converse in any language and sometimes summon a balor.

The energy resistance starts at a low value and scales up over ten levels.

The spell-like abilities are awarded at approximately the levels where a sorcerer might acquire their spell equivalents.

The ability scores increase over most of the class levels, but the powerful summon balor ability doesn't appear until the succubus has fully matured.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +6 Cha.
- Succubi are lithe and very charming.
- Speed: Succubus land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Succubi can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Poison Immunity: Succubi are native to a plane where poison is omnipresent.
- Skills: +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.
- Automatic Languages: Abyssal, Celestial, and Draconic.
- Favored Class: Succubus.

The best multiclassing choices for a succubus are bard, sorcerer, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The succubus's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any 1, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the succubus monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Succubi are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A succubus receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 12th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A succubus has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Telepathy (Su): At 2nd level, a succubus gains telepathy. It may communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A succubus has spell resistance equal to 6 + its HD from class levels.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the succubus chooses one alternate humanoid form from Small to Large size.

At higher levels it masters more such forms until it can assume the appearance of any humanoid of the appropriate size.

Energy Drain (Su): The Fortitude save to remove the negative level has a DC of 10 + 1/2 succubus's HD from class levels + succubus's Cha modifier.

Tongues (Su): A succubus can speak with any creature that has a language.

The succubus's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from succubus class levels × 2.

This ability is always active unless the succubus chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the succubus can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Lesser Succubus Powers (Sp): At 2nd level, a succubus can use the following spell-like abilities once per day: clairaudience/clairvoyance, darkness, desecrate, detect good, detect thoughts, doom, and suggestion.

At 4th level it can use them three times per day, and at 6th level and higher it can use them at will.

A succubus's caster level for all spell-like abilities is equal to its class level.

Succubus Powers (Sp): Beginning at 8th level, a succubus can use unholy blight once per day.

In addition, it can use charm monster, ethereal jaunt (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), and teleport without error (self plus 50 pounds of objects only) once per day at 8th level, three times per day at 10th level, and at will when the succubus attains 12th level.

A succubus's caster level for all spell-like abilities is equal to its class level.

SVIRFNEBLIN

Svirfneblin are a popular choice for players who like playing gnomes with a more serious outlook.

This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus three racial levels.

SVIRFNEBLIN BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the svirfneblin.

Ability Score Adjustments: -2 Strength, +2 Dexterity, +2 Constitution, -2 Charisma.

Size: Svirfneblin are Small size.

As a Small creature, a svirfneblin gains a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but he uses smaller weapons than humans use, and his lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of a Medium character.

Speed: Svirfneblin base land speed is 20 feet.

Combat Bonuses: A svirfneblin gains a +1 racial bonus on attack rolls against kobolds and goblinoids and a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against monsters of the giant type. Any time a creature loses its Dexterity bonus (if any) to Armor Class, such as when it's caught flat-footed, it loses its dodge bonus, too.

Darkvision (Ex): A svirfneblin has darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Illusion Affinity: Add +1 to the Difficulty Class for all saving throws against illusion spells cast by svirfneblin.

This adjustment stacks with those from similar effects.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A svirfneblin can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination.

He retains the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.

Saving Throw Bonuses: A svirfneblin gains a +2 racial bonus on saving throws against illusions.

Weapon Familiarity: A svirfneblin may treat gnome hooked hammers as martial weapons rather than exotic weapons.

Skill Bonuses: A svirfneblin gains a +2 racial bonus on Listen checks and a +2 racial bonus on Craft (alchemy) checks.

Automatic Languages: Common, Gnome, Undercommon.

Bonus Languages: Dwarven, Elven, Giant, Goblin, Orc, Terran.

Favored Class: Rogue.

A multiclass svirfneblin's rogue class does not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.

SVIRFNEBLIN RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the svirfneblin racial class.

Ability Score Changes: An svirfneblin's Wisdom increases by +2 at 1st level.

Darkvision (Ex): A 1st-level svirfneblin's darkvision range increases to 120 feet.

Hide Bonus: At 1st level, a svirfneblin gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks when underground.

At 2nd level, he gains a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks under all circumstances, and his bonus while underground increases to +4.

Disguise Self (Sp): The svirfneblin may use disguise self (caster level equals svirfneblin's class level) once per day.

Stonecunning: This ability grants a 1st-level or higher svirfneblin a +2 racial bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework traps, new construction (even when built to match the old), unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and the like. Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework.

A svirfneblin who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if he were actively searching, and he can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can.

A svirfneblin can also intuit depth, sensing his approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up.

Saving Throw Bonus: At 1st level, a deep gnome gains a +1 racial bonus on all saving throws.

This bonus overlaps (does not stack) with his normal +2 racial bonus on saves against illusions.

When he reaches 2nd level, his bonus on all saves increases to +2.

Blur (Sp): At 2nd level, the svirfneblin may use blur (caster level equals svirfneblin's class level) once per day.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 2nd level, the svirfneblin gains spell resistance equal to 5 + character level.

At 2nd level, his spell resistance increases to 11 + character level.

Blindness/Deafness (Sp): Once per day, a 3rd-level svirfneblin may use blindness/deafness (caster level equals svirfneblin's class level; save DC 16 + svirfneblin's Cha modifier).

Nondetection (Su): At 3rd level, the deep gnome gains a continuous nondetection ability (as the spell, caster level equals svirfneblin's class level).

Svirfneblin Dodge: When the deep gnome reaches 3rd level, his +4 dodge bonus against giants becomes effective against all creatures.

Table SP-24: The Svirfneblin Racial Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Wis +2, darkvision 120 ft., disguise self , Hide bonus +0/+2, stonecunning, saving throw bonus +1
2nd	+1	Blur , saving throw bonus +2, Hide bonus +2/+4, spell resistance (5 + character level)
3rd	+1	Blindness/deafness , nondetection, spell resistance (11 + character level), svirfneblin dodge

TIEFLING

A tiefling is a fun choice for players who want a humanlike character with a touch of evil or a mysterious background. This racial class offers a set of base racial abilities plus one racial level.

TIEFLING BASE RACIAL FEATURES

All of the following are base racial abilities for the tiefling.

Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dexterity, -2 Charisma.

Outsider Type: Tieflings are native outsiders, so they are vulnerable to spells and effects that work on creatures of the outsider type but immune to effects that target other types.

For example, a tiefling would be subject to the extra damage from an outsider bane sword but immune to hold person, since that spell affects only humanoids.

Size: Tieflings are Medium size.

Speed: Tiefling base land speed is 30 feet.

Darkvision (Ex): A tiefling has darkvision to a 60-foot range.

Lesser Darkness (Sp): Once per day, the tiefling may use an effect similar to darkness (caster level equals tiefling's character level), except that the radius is 5 feet.

This ability is the equivalent of a 1st-level spell.

Skill Bonuses: A tiefling has a +2 racial bonus on Bluff and Hide checks.

Resistances (Ex): A tiefling starts play with resistance 2 to cold, electricity, and fire.

Automatic Languages: Common, Infernal.

Bonus Languages: Draconic, Dwarven, Elven, Gnome, Goblin, Halfling, Orc.

Favored Class: Rogue.

A multiclass tiefling's rogue class does not count when determining whether an experience point penalty applies.

TIEFLING RACIAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tiefling racial class.

Ability Score Changes: A tiefling's Intelligence increases by +2 at 1st level.

Darkness (Sp): At 1st level, the tiefling may use darkness (caster level equals tiefling's character level) once per day.

The ability replaces the base racial feature lesser darkness.

Resistances (Ex): A 1st-level tiefling's cold, electricity, and fire resistances increase to 5 each.

Table SP-25: The Tiefling Racial Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+0	Int +2, darkness , resistances (cold 5, electricity 5, fire 5)

TIEFLING/HALF-FIEND TRANSITION

A tiefling is born tainted by evil and saddled with a +1 level adjustment.

Tieflings who wish to become half-fiends can do so in just three levels instead of the normal four that the standard template class requires.

TIEFLING/HALF-FIEND TRANSITION CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tiefling/half-fiend transition class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the tiefling/half-fiend's natural armor bonus increases by +1.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +1 at 1st level.

Claws: At 1st level, the tiefling/half-fiend gains two natural claw attacks if he didn't already have them.

Each claw attack deals 1d4 points of damage.

Bite: At 1st level, the tiefling/half-fiend gains a natural bite attack if he didn't already have one.

His bite attack deals 1d6 points of damage.

Poison Immunity (Ex): At 1st level, a tiefling/half-fiend becomes immune to all poisons.

Resistances (Ex): At 1st level, a tiefling/half-fiend gains acid, cold, and electricity resistance 5.

When he reaches 3rd level, each of these resistances increases to 10.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 1st level, a tiefling/half-fiend with an Intelligence or Wisdom score of 8 or better gains spell-like abilities.

The exact abilities gained depend on the tiefling/half-fiend's character level and level in the transition class, according to the following table.

Minimum Transition Class Level	Minimum Character Level	Spell-Like Abilities Gained
1st	1st	Darkness 3/day
	3rd	Desecrate 1/day
	6th	Unholy blight 1/day
	7th	Poison 3/day
	13th	Unhallow 1/day, unholy aura 3/day
2nd	9th	Contagion 1/day
	15th	Horrid wilting 1/day
	17th	Summon monster IX (fiends only) 1/day
3rd	11th	Blasphemy 1/day
	19th	Destruction 1/day

In each case, the caster level equals the tiefling/half-fiend's character level.

Save DCs, where applicable, are Charisma-based (10 + spell level + tiefling/half-fiend's Charisma modifier).

These abilities are in addition to his tiefling spell-like abilities.

The character gains each spell-like ability as soon as he meets both qualifications for it.

Spell-like abilities are cumulative.

Spell Resistance (Su): At 1st level, a tiefling/half-fiend gains spell resistance equal to his character level (maximum 25).

At 3rd level, his spell resistance increases by +10 (maximum 35).

Damage Reduction (Su): A 2nd-level or higher tiefling/half-fiend has damage reduction 5/magic if his character level is 11th or lower, or damage reduction 10/magic if his character level is 12th or higher.

A tiefling/half-fiend treats his natural weapons as magic weapons for the purpose of bypassing the damage reduction of other creatures.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day, a tiefling/half-fiend of at least 2nd level may attempt to smite a good creature with one normal melee attack.

This attack deals extra damage equal to his character level (maximum +20) against a good foe.

If he accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but is still used up for the day.

Wings (Ex): At 3rd level, a tiefling/half-fiend grows batlike wings, which he may use to fly at up to his base land speed with average maneuverability.

Table SP-31: The Tiefling/Half-Fiend Transition Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	*	Str +2, Con +2, natural armor +1, 2 claws, bite, poison immunity, resistances (acid 5, cold 5, electricity 5, fire 5), spell-like abilities, spell resistance (lesser)
2nd		Str +2, damage reduction, smite good, spell-like abilities
3rd		Dex +2, Int +2, Cha +2, resistances (acid 10, cold 10, electricity 10, fire 10), spell-like abilities, spell resistance (greater), wings

*A 1st-level tiefling/half-fiend with fewer than eleven character levels has a CR adjustment of +1. One with eleven or more character levels has a CR adjustment of +2.

A 2nd- or 3rd-level tiefling/half-fiend with fewer than five character levels has a CR adjustment of +1. One with five to ten character levels has a CR adjustment of +2. One with eleven or more character levels has a CR adjustment of +3.

TREANT

Plant

Scattered among the ancient trees of the great forests of the world are the treants, powerful and wise woodfolk that guard their homes against invaders and natural catastrophes.

Tall and strong like mighty oaks, treants have been known to lead normal trees away from fires and rearrange trees to confuse greedy woodcutters on forest paths.

Treants are good choices for players who like nature-oriented characters but want something stranger and tougher than usual.

Treants have great physical power, so their level adjustment is +5, for a total ECL of 12.

This gives the class plenty of space to handle the treant's two size increases and all of its ability score modifiers. Although young treants are flexible like saplings and have a Dexterity bonus, over time they grow so large and their bark becomes so thick and tough that they have a net Dexterity penalty.

However, their great Strength and Constitution make up for this unusual progression.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Dex, +2 Int. Despite their sometimes provincial knowledge of the world, treants learn and reason well, and they are often sought by forest dwellers for their guidance.
- Plant: Treants are immune to mind-affecting effects, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and polymorphing. They are not subject to critical hits.
- Speed: Treant land speed is 30 feet.
- Low-Light Vision: Treants can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination. They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.
- Skills: +16 racial bonus on Hide checks made in forested areas.
- Automatic Languages: Common, Sylvan, and Treant.

• Favored Class: Treant.

The best multiclassing choices for a treant are barbarian, fighter, and ranger.

CLASS SKILLS

The treant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (any one, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis). On reaching Large size, a treant takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

On reaching Huge size, a treant takes a -8 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the treant monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A treant has no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Treants are "nonhumanoid" for the purpose of determining the cost of armor according to the Armor for Unusual Creatures sidebar in Chapter 7 of the Player's Handbook.

Feats: A treant receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 12th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: A treant has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Fire Vulnerability (Ex): A treant of 6th level or higher takes double damage from fire attacks unless the attack allows a save, in which case it takes a -10 penalty on the save.

Trample (Ex): A treant of 7th level or higher can trample creatures two or more size categories smaller than itself for 2d12 points of damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Opponents who do not make attacks of opportunity against the treant can attempt a Reflex save (DC 20) to halve the damage.

Double Damage against Objects (Ex): A treant of 7th level or higher that makes a full attack against an object or structure deals double damage.

Animate Trees (Sp): A treant of 8th level or higher can animate trees within 180 feet at will, controlling up to the indicated number of trees at a time. It takes a full round for a normal tree to uproot itself. Thereafter it moves at a speed of 10 feet and fights as an 8th-level treant in all respects.

Animated trees lose their ability to move if the treant that animated them is incapacitated or moves out of range. The ability is otherwise similar to liveoak as cast by a 12th-level druid.

TRITON

Outsider (Water)

Tritons are masters of the water, hailing from that elemental plane.

Although poorly adapted for adventures on land, tritons are completely at home in the water and are familiar with combat in their native environment.

Tritons are good choices for players who want a water-adapted character (particularly for a sea-based campaign) but something with magic and more humanity than a locathah, merfolk, or sahuagin.

The triton is a straightforward class, with only natural armor, ability score modifiers, and a single spell-like ability contributing to its level adjustment.

The summon nature's ally ability is acquired just before a druid might, reflecting tritons' natural affinity for bringing aquatic creatures to their aid.

RACIAL TRAITS

• Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con.

Tritons must be strong and tough to move and live in the dangerous seas.

• Speed: Tritons have a swim speed of 40 feet.

Tritons cannot walk on land, but they can drag themselves about at a land speed of 5 feet (a triton on land cannot run or charge).

Like any creature with a swim speed, tritons can move through the water at that speed without making Swim checks, they have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard, and can always take 10 when making Swim checks.

They can use the run action while swimming provided they swim in a straight line.

• Water Subtype: Tritons can breathe water or air equally well.

• Darkvision: Tritons can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

• Automatic Languages: Common and Aquan.

• Favored Class: Triton.

The best multiclassing choices for a triton are cleric, druid, fighter, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The triton's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the triton monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tritons are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A triton receives one feat at 1st level and another one at 4th level.

After 5th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Summon Nature's Ally III (Sp): The triton's caster level for this ability is equal to its class level.

TROLL

Giant

Trolls are big, stupid, and always hungry, driven to acquire food because of their incredible metabolism that can regrow entire limbs.

Almost as strong as some of the true giants, trolls are tough foes and ideally suited for long melee combats, which they almost always win due to attrition.

Trolls are good characters for players who want an exotic melee combatant without too many special abilities to keep track of.

The troll's level adjustment of +5 is almost as much as its normal Hit Dice, giving the class plenty of room to spread out its many advantages.

Ability modifiers continue to increase over time.

The natural attacks start out weak but numerous, eventually becoming a lethal trio.

The creature's scent and reach kick in at mid-levels, with the appearance and improvement of regeneration being the capstone abilities of the class.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +4 Str, -4 Int, -2 Wis, -4 Cha.

Trolls are very strong but are dumb, short-sighted, and thuggish.

- Speed: Troll land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Trolls can see in the dark up to 90 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Giant.
- Favored Class: Troll.

The best multiclassing choices for a troll are barbarian and fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The troll's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis). On reaching Large size, a troll takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the troll monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Trolls are proficient with any simple or martial weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A troll receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 4th and 10th level.

After 11th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A troll has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: A troll has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Rend (Ex): A troll that hits with both claw attacks latches onto the opponent's body and automatically tears the flesh, dealing additional damage equal to two claw attacks plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Regeneration (Ex): Trolls take normal damage from fire and acid.

If a troll loses a limb or body part, the lost portion regrows in 3d6 minutes.

The creature can reattach the severed member instantly by holding it to the stump.

TABLE A-49: THE TROLL

SCRAG

Scrag (aquatic trolls) may live in fresh or salt water just about anywhere. Scrag use all information from the troll class, with the following changes: They have a swim speed of 20 feet, the aquatic subtype (can breathe water as well as air), and they regenerate only when mostly immersed in water.

TRUMPET ARCHON

Outsider (Good, Lawful)

Chosen (or perhaps created) by the powers of good and law, trumpet archons are the messengers of the heavens.

They herald the appearance of deities and significant events related to the powers of good.

In times of war, they serve as leaders in the celestial armies, clearing evil from swaths of land with their magic and their signature weapon, the mighty trumpet.

Trumpet archons make good choices for players who want a character with many special abilities, especially if they don't want to deal with multiclassing (since the class has a full twenty levels).

As with the astral deva and the ghaele, creating the trumpet archon's class progression is actually an exercise in regressing an ECL 20 class all the way back to 1st level.

The factors in the level adjustment are cleric spellcasting ability, the archon's trumpet, spell resistance, ability score modifiers, and natural armor.

All but the trumpet ability are easy to scale, starting weak or not appearing for several levels until crowning somewhere near the highest levels of the class.

The archon's trumpet, a special item awarded by higher powers, is best configured to scale its two different abilities (as a trumpet and as a greatsword) separately over the later levels of the class.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Int. Trumpet archons are powerful and intelligent.
 - Speed: Trumpet archon land speed is 40 feet.
 - Darkvision: Trumpet archons can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
 - Low-Light Vision: Trumpet archons can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, and similar conditions of poor illumination. They retain the ability to distinguish color and detail under these conditions.
 - Saves: +4 racial bonus on saving throws against poison.
 - Automatic Languages: Celestial, Draconic, Infernal.
 - Favored Class: Trumpet archon.
- Because trumpet archons have an ECL of 20, multiclassing requires the use of epic level rules (see Epic Level Handbook for more information).

CLASS SKILLS

The trumpet archon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any three, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the trumpet archon monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Trumpet archons are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but with no armor or shields.

Feats: A trumpet archon receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd, 8th, 14th, and 20th level.

After 20th level it gains feats normally according to its character level (which requires epic level advancement rules; see Epic Level Handbook for more information).

Trumpet (Su): At 4th level, the celestial powers award the archon a mighty trumpet.

The archon's trumpet produces music of utter clarity, piercing beauty, and, if the trumpet archon wills it, paralyzing awe.

All creatures except archons within a certain distance must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 archon's HD from class levels + archon's Cha modifier) or be paralyzed for 1d4 rounds.

The radius of the effect increases from 5 feet at 4th level to 100 feet at 13th level and higher.

An archon can also command its trumpet to become a magic greatsword with an enhancement bonus ranging from +1 at 4th level to +4 at 13th level and higher.

Changing the trumpet to or from a greatsword is a free action.

The trumpet's properties do not function for anyone other than the archon to whom it was awarded; in anyone else's hands, it becomes a chunk of useless lead.

Spells: Starting at 2nd level, a trumpet archon can cast spells as a cleric of its Hit Dice from class levels + 2.

It can prepare spells from the Air, Destruction, Good, Law, and War domains as if they were on the cleric spell list, but it does not have access to any domains or domain spell slots.

Spell-Like Abilities: Starting at 3rd level, a trumpet archon can use detect evil, continual flame, and message the indicated number of times per day.

The archon's caster level is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels.

Tongues (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a trumpet archon can speak with any creature that has a language.

The trumpet archon's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from trumpet archon class levels + 2.

This ability is always active unless the trumpet archon chooses to disable it as a free action.

The effect can be dispelled, but the trumpet archon can create it again on its next turn as a free action.

Aura of Menace (Su): A trumpet archon of 9th level or higher is surrounded by a 20-foot aura of menace.

Hostile creatures within the area must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 archon's HD from class levels + archon's Cha modifier) or take a -2 morale penalty on attack rolls, AC, and saves for one day.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A trumpet archon of 9th level or higher has spell resistance equal to 9 + its class level.

Teleport without Error (Su): A trumpet archon of 9th level or higher can use this ability the indicated number of times per day but can only carry itself and 50 pounds of weight.

The trumpet archon's caster level for this effect is its Hit Dice from trumpet archon class levels + 2.

Magic Circle against Evil (Su): This effect continually surrounds a trumpet archon of 11th level or higher, as the spell cast by a sorcerer of a level equal to its HD.

UMBER HULK

Aberration

Weird, buglike creatures thought by some to be unintelligent, umber hulks are actually smart as orcs and have their own language, although most can't understand it or don't even know that the hulk's clicking noises are a manner of speech.

Obviously inhuman, umber hulks stand out in normal humanoid society, so steps must be taken to prevent them from causing alarm whenever they are seen.

An umber hulk can be a valuable ally in a campaign where its capabilities are most useful (such as underground areas), as long as their driving hunger and nearly constant need for destruction can be assuaged.

Umbur hulks are good characters for players who like big bruisers with one strange magical quirk.

An umber hulk's two most important special abilities are its tremorsense ability and its confusing gaze.

Initially the tremorsense is only sensitive enough to let the hulk detect creatures within claw range, but eventually its senses are refined enough to let it notice more distant creatures.

The confusing gaze is a more powerful ability that appears at mid-level, albeit at a short range, and eventually expands in scope to its full range.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con, -2 Int.
- Uumber hulks are built much like the stone they tunnel through—big, tough, and dense.
- Speed: Uumber hulk land speed is 20 feet.
- Darkvision: Uumber hulks can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Automatic Languages: Uumber Hulk.
- Favored Class: Uumber hulk.

The best multiclassing choices for an umber hulk are barbarian and fighter.

CLASS SKILLS

The umber hulk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), and Profession (Wis).

On reaching Large size, an umber hulk takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the umber hulk monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Uumber hulks are proficient with simple weapons, but not with armor or shields.

Feats: An umber hulk receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 9th level.

After 14th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: An umber hulk has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: An umber hulk has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Tremorsense (Ex): Starting at 4th level, an umber hulk can automatically sense the location of anything that is in contact with the ground and within a certain distance from the umber hulk.

The radius of the effect increases from 10 feet at 4th level to 60 feet at 17th level.

Confusing Gaze (Su): At 7th level, an umber hulk develops its magical gaze, which causes confusion (as the spell, caster level 8th) within a certain distance from the hulk (DC 10 + 1/2 umber hulk's HD from class levels + umber hulk's Cha modifier).

The radius of the effect increases from 5 feet at 7th level to 30 feet at 13th level and higher.

VAMPIRE

“Vampire” is a fairly common acquired template among adventurers.

When an adventuring party is attacked by a vampire, those slain by its special abilities may rise as vampires themselves if the proper measures are not taken.

If the vampire template is applied to such a character, she would appear to be dead for a time, then return to a tenuous life, slowly succumbing to the seductive lure of the vampire’s hunger, sharpened senses, and evil nature.

VAMPIRE TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the vampire template class.

Ability Score Changes: The ability score in question increases or decreases by the indicated amount.

Ability score increases are unnamed bonuses that stack with all other bonuses.

At 1st level, however, the ability score change is a –2 penalty to Constitution, which represents the physical trauma involved in starting along the path toward undeath. No spell or other effect can remove this penalty.

Blood Drain (Ex): Starting at 1st level, a vampire can attempt to bite a victim with his growing fangs and suck blood.

If the vampire makes a successful grapple check and pins the foe, it sucks blood, dealing 1 point of Constitution damage each round that the pin is maintained.

With each such successful attack, the vampire gains 1 temporary hit point.

When the vampire reaches 2nd level, his fangs are fully developed, though he has not yet perfected his technique for drawing blood.

At this point, his blood drain attack deals 1 point of Constitution drain.

At 4th level, the vampire has mastered the art of drawing blood from a victim.

His blood drain attack deals 1d4 points of Constitution drain, and he gains 5 temporary hit points with each successful blood drain.

Resistances (Ex): At 1st level, the vampire gains cold resistance 5 and electricity resistance 5.

When he reaches 3rd level, each of these resistances increases to 10.

Spawn Slavery (Su): Typically, a vampire is created when another vampire kills its mortal body by draining all of its blood (see Create Spawn, below).

A vampire created in this fashion is under influence of the master vampire’s dominate ability, even if it is normally immune to mental control or mind-affecting effects.

This control lasts until the master is destroyed.

Vampires created through other circumstances (such as unholy rituals or strange, spontaneous magical effects) are not under this sort of control.

Spider Climb (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, the vampire can climb sheer surfaces as though with a spider climb spell.

Vampire Bonus Feats: At 1st, 2nd, and 7th level, the vampire gains the feats indicated on Table SP–1, assuming that he doesn’t already have them.

If the vampire doesn’t meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

Fortification (Ex): When the vampire reaches 2nd level, his internal organs begin to cease functioning as they become unnecessary to his altered metabolism.

This process makes him less vulnerable to critical hits, sneak attacks, and other attacks that target a creature’s vital spots.

The vampire is treated as if he had the light fortification armor property active at all times.

This ability gives him a 25% chance to turn a critical hit or sneak attack against him into a normal attack.

If the vampire already has fortification from another source (such as a spell or magic item), use the better value.

At 5th level, this ability becomes moderate fortification (50% chance to turn a critical hit or sneak attack into a normal attack).

Vampire Skills: At 2nd level, a vampire gains a +2 racial bonus on Bluff, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks.

This bonus increases to +4 at 4th level, to +6 at 6th level, and to +8 at 8th level.

Coffin Sanctuary (Ex): Upon reaching 3rd level, a vampire chooses a coffin or similar small enclosed space as his primary resting place.

Thereafter, if he is brought to -1 to -9 hit points (if living) or to 0 or fewer hit points (if undead) while outside the coffin, he is forced to assume gaseous form (see below) immediately and flee for his coffin so that he may heal. If the vampire cannot use his vampiric ability to assume gaseous form (for example, if he has expended all his daily uses of that ability), he cannot enter gaseous form under these circumstances and dies immediately.

Any damage dealt to the vampire after he is forced into gaseous form has no effect.

If the duration of his gaseous form ability expires before he reaches his coffin, or more than 2 hours pass after he is forced into gaseous form in this way, the vampire must assume his normal form at his current location.

In that case, he either begins to die (if he is a living vampire) or is destroyed (if he is an undead vampire).

If he succeeds in reaching his coffin, he is helpless for 1 hour, after which he heals 1 hit point and the helplessness ends.

A nonhelpless vampire resting in his coffin has fast healing 1.

A 5th-level or higher nonhelpless vampire resting in his coffin has fast healing 5.

Dominate (Su): At 3rd level, a vampire gains the ability to crush another creature's will just by looking into its eyes.

This ability is similar to a gaze attack, except that the vampire must use a standard action, and those merely looking at him are not affected.

Anyone the vampire targets must succeed on a Will save or fall instantly under his influence, as though via a dominate person spell (caster level 12th).

The ability has a range of 5 feet and is usable once per day.

At 4th level, the vampire can use this ability three times per day at a range of 10 feet.

At 5th level, his range increases to 30 feet.

At 7th level, the vampire may use his dominate ability at will.

Gaseous Form (Su): Starting at 3rd level, a vampire can assume gaseous form as the spell (caster level 5th) once per day as a standard action.

He can remain in gaseous form for up to 10 minutes.

A gaseous vampire's fly speed is 20 feet.

At 5th level, a vampire can assume gaseous form three times per day.

At 7th level, he may become gaseous at will and remain in gaseous form indefinitely.

Slam: At 3rd level, the vampire gains a slam attack if he didn't already have one.

If he is a Medium creature, his slam deals damage according to the following table.

Size	Damage
Fine	1
Diminutive	1d2
Tiny	1d3
Small	1d4
Medium	1d6
Large	1d8
Huge	2d6
Gargantuan	2d8
Colossal	4d6

Alternate Form (Su): At 4th level, a vampire can assume the shape of a bat or wolf as a standard action.

This ability is similar to a polymorph spell (caster level 12th), except that the vampire does not regain hit points for changing form, and he must choose from among the forms allowed for his level.

While in his alternate form, the vampire loses his natural slam attack and dominate ability but gains the natural weapons and extraordinary special attacks of his new form. He can remain in his alternate form until he assumes another form or until the next sunrise, whichever comes first.

At 8th level, the vampire can also take the form of a dire bat or dire wolf.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 4th, 6th, and 8th level, the vampire's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 4th level, to +4 at 6th level, and finally to +6 at 8th level.

Vampire Aversions: The vampire gains the classic aversions of his kind.

He cannot tolerate the strong odor of garlic and cannot enter an area laced with it.

Similarly, he recoils from a mirror or a strongly presented holy symbol.

These items don't harm the vampire—they merely keep him at bay.

A recoiling vampire must stay at least 5 feet away from a creature holding the mirror or holy symbol and cannot touch or make melee attacks against that creature for the rest of the encounter.

Holding a vampire at bay requires a standard action.

Most vampires are also unable to cross running water, although they can be carried over it while resting in their coffins or aboard a ship.

(A vampire that has a natural swim speed may freely cross running water and is quite comfortable in water of any kind).

Vampires are utterly unable to enter a home or other building unless invited in by someone with the authority to do so.

They may freely enter public places, since such areas are by definition open to all.

Children of the Night (Su): Vampires command the lesser creatures of the world.

Starting at 5th level, a vampire can call forth a rat swarm, a bat swarm, or 1d3 wolves as a standard action once per day. The creature or creatures arrive in 2d6 rounds and serve the vampire for up to 1 hour.

At 7th level, the vampire can call forth 1d6+1 rat swarms, 1d4+1 bat swarms, or a pack of 3d6 wolves.

The creatures arrive and serve as above.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 5th level, a vampire gains damage reduction 5/silver and magic.

At 8th level, this protection increases to damage reduction 10/silver and magic.

A vampire's natural weapons (the slam attack, for a humanoid vampire) are treated as magic weapons for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Sunlight & Water Vulnerability: A 5th-level or higher vampire exposed to direct sunlight is disoriented.

While in this condition, he can take only a single move action or attack action in a round, and 3 full rounds of such exposure destroy it utterly.

Similarly, immersing a typical vampire in running water robs it of one-fifth of its hit points each round until it is destroyed at the end of the fifth round of immersion.

(A vampire with a natural swim speed is not harmed by immersion in running water).

At 7th level, a vampire's flesh becomes even more vulnerable to sunlight and running water.

Upon exposure to sunlight, he takes the above penalties and is destroyed utterly in the next round if he cannot escape.

The vampire loses one-third of his hit points each round of immersion in water instead of one-fifth, and he is destroyed after at the end of the third round of exposure instead of the fifth round.

Fast Healing (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, a vampire heals 1 point of damage each round so long as he has at least 1 hit point, whether or not he is resting in his coffin.

A living vampire reduced to fewer than 0 hp or an undead vampire reduced to 0 hit points is automatically forced into gaseous form (if he still has uses of that ability available) and must retreat to his coffin (see the Coffin Sanctuary, above).

At 8th level, a vampire's fast healing increases to 5.

Energy Drain (Su): When the vampire reaches 7th level, any living creature hit by his slam attack (or any other natural weapon he might possess) gains one negative level. For each negative level so bestowed, the vampire gains 5 temporary hit points.

He can use his energy drain ability once per round.

At 8th level, the vampire's slam attack (or other natural attack) bestows 2 negative levels.

Undeath: Upon reaching 7th level, a vampire gains the undead type, with all of its normal benefits and drawbacks.

He no longer has a Constitution score, and he loses any Constitution bonus or penalty on hit points, saving throws, or skills that he may previously have had.

He uses either his Charisma modifier or his Constitution modifier (+0), whichever is better, for all skills, save DCs, and other quantities that previously incorporated his Constitution modifier.

The vampire becomes immune to many attacks but is subject to turn or rebuke undead attempts and is immediately destroyed if brought to 0 or fewer hit points. All of his current and future Hit Dice increase to d12s.

(Rather than rerolling all the character's Hit Dice, you can simply add 4 hit points for every d4 Hit Die the vampire previously had, 3 hit points for every d6 Hit Die, 2 for every d8, and 1 for every d10, if desired).

The vampire immediately becomes evil and subject to the special rules for staking a vampire through the heart.

A vampire cleric may become an ex-cleric if his deity does not accept evil clerics, but character can remedy this problem either by changing allegiance or by devoting himself to an evil cause or a source of evil divine power (selecting new domains if appropriate).

A vampire cleric who could normally turn undead loses that ability but gains the ability to rebuke undead, and one who can spontaneously convert spells into cure spells now converts them into inflict spells.

A vampire sorcerer, wizard, or other character who has a familiar is shunned by that creature unless it is a bat or rat, but he can acquire one of those creatures to replace the previous familiar.

Create Spawn (Su): A humanoid or monstrous humanoid slain by a 7th-level or higher vampire's energy drain attack rises as a vampire spawn (see the Monster Manual) 1d4 days after burial.

If the vampire instead drains the victim's Constitution to 0 or lower, the victim returns as a spawn if it had 4 or fewer HD and as a vampire if it had 5 or more HD.

In either case, the new vampire or spawn is under the command of the vampire that created it and remains so enslaved until its master's destruction.

At any given time, a vampire may have enslaved spawn whose Hit Dice total no more than his own.

Any spawn he creates that would exceed this limit can be created either as free-willed vampires or as vampire spawn, at the creator's option.

If he chooses the latter option, he must immediately free one or more spawn of his choice until the total Hit Dice of his existing enslaved spawn would allow the addition of the desired new one.

Once freed, a vampire or vampire spawn cannot be enslaved again, except through magic such as control undead, rebuking attempts by evil clerics, and so on.

An enslaved vampire may create and enslave spawn of its own, so a master vampire can control a large number of lesser vampires in this fashion.

At 8th level, the vampire may have enslaved spawn whose Hit Dice total no more than twice his own Hit Dice.

Turn Resistance (Ex): At 8th level, a vampire gains turn resistance +4.

He is treated as an undead 4 Hit Dice higher than his normal total for the purpose of turn, rebuke, command, or bolster attempts.

VROCK

Outsider (Chaotic, Evil)

A vrock may look like a demonic humanoid vulture, but it is best to think of it as a bird of prey, swooping over a battlefield to find a suitable victim, then suddenly diving to rend and tear at its opponent's flesh.

Flight, powerful melee attacks, and significant magical abilities are the key features of this class.

Vrocks are good choices for players who want a flying character that combines the best abilities of a fighter and a sorcerer.

A vrock's level adjustment is equal to its Hit Dice, giving the class many levels in which to place its special abilities. Key powers are its energy resistances (which scale upward from low values), spell-like abilities, summoning tanar'ri, and its two unique abilities (dance of ruin and stunning screech).

While it seems that the vrock gains a lot of power at each level, particularly at higher levels, this benefit is offset by the vrock's lower Hit Dice compared to a fighter of its level.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con, +2 Wis.

Vrocks, like most demons, are always on the lookout for victims and have the power to hold their own in a fight.

- Speed: Vrock land speed is 30 feet.
- Darkvision: Vrocks can see in the dark up to 60 feet.
- Poison Immunity: Vrocks are native to a plane where poison is omnipresent.
- Skills: +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

- Automatic Languages: Abyssal, Celestial, and Draconic.
- Favored Class: Vrock.

The best multiclassing choices for a vrock are barbarian, fighter, and wizard.

CLASS SKILLS

The vrock's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any one, chosen at 1st level) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Large size, a vrock takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the vrock monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Vrocks are proficient with all simple and martial weapons but not with armor or shields.

Feats: A vrock receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 11th level.

After 16th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Claws: A vrock has two claw attacks that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus Strength bonus.

Bite: A vrock has a bite attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Rake: Starting at 4th level, a vrock has two rake attacks with its lower claws that are natural weapons dealing the indicated damage plus 1/2 Strength bonus.

Telepathy (Su): Starting at 3rd level, a vrock gains telepathy.

It may communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that has a language.

Lesser Vrock Powers (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, a vrock can use the following spell-like abilities the indicated number of times per day: darkness, desecrate, detect good, detect magic, and mirror image.

Its caster level for all spell-like abilities is equal to its Hit Dice from class levels + 4 (save DC 10 + spell level + vrock's Cha modifier).

Spores (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, a vrock can release masses of spores from its body.

The spores automatically deal 1d8 points of damage to all creatures within 5 feet of the vrock.

They then penetrate the skin and grow, dealing an additional 1d2 points of damage each round for 10 rounds. At the end of this time, the victim is covered with a tangle of viny growths.

A delay poison spell stops the spores' growth for its duration. Bless, neutralize poison, or remove disease kills the spores, as does sprinkling the victim with a vial of holy water.

Initially a vrock can release spores once per day; at 8th level it can use the attack three times per day; and at 10th level and higher it can release spores once every 3 rounds.

Vrock Powers (Sp): Beginning at 9th level, a vrock can use the following spell-like abilities: mass charm, telekinesis, and teleport without error (self plus 50 pounds of objects only).

Initially a vrock can use these abilities once per day; at 12th level it can use them three times per day; and at 15th level and higher it can use them at will.

Summon Tanar'ri (Sp): Once per day a vrock of 9th level or higher can attempt to summon dretches (see the Monster Manual).

The number summoned and the chance of success increase as the vrock advances in level.

At 16th level a vrock can instead attempt to summon another of its kind, with the indicated chance of success.

Stunning Screech (Su): At 10th level, a vrock gains the ability to emit a piercing screech.

Every creature within 30 feet must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 vrock's HD from class levels + vrock's Con modifier) or be stunned for 1 round.

Initially a vrock can use its stunning screech once per day; at 13th level it can use the ability three times per day; and at 16th level and higher it can use the ability once per hour.

Spell Resistance (Ex): A vrock of 11th level or higher has spell resistance equal to 14 + Hit Dice from class level.

Dance of Ruin (Su): To use this ability, a group of five or more vrocks must join hands in a circle, dancing wildly and chanting.

At least one of the vrocks must be 14th level or higher.

If the vrocks dance for 3 rounds, a wave of crackling energy flashes outward in a 100-foot radius.

All nondemons within the radius take 2d20 points of damage (Reflex half DC 10 + 1/2 vrock's HD from class levels + vrock's Cha modifier; calculate the save DC for each vrock in the group and use the highest one).

WATER ELEMENTAL, LARGE

Elemental (Water)

Like ocean waves, water elementals have the strength to wear down their opponents and the endurance to do it slowly if necessary.

Best used in aquatic situations (where they can use their vortex ability and can easily overturn small watercraft), water elementals are still dangerous opponents on land, as good at battering creatures into submission as air elementals are.

Water elementals are good choices for players who want a tough character with an alien mindset.

A water elemental's progress goes through stages where it matches the abilities of the Small and Medium-size elemental before finally reaching Large size and the abilities appropriate to its size.

Because so many of its abilities are available to the Small elemental, the water elemental's powers all have scaling effects, dealing more damage or having a higher DC the more powerful the elemental becomes.

Its most powerful abilities are damage reduction and an extended reach, both of which are acquired at the highest levels.

RACIAL TRAITS

- Starting Ability Score Adjustments: +2 Str, +2 Con, -4 Int. Water elementals are strong and resilient, but not too smart.

- Small: As Small creatures, water elementals gain a +1 size bonus to Armor Class, a +1 size bonus on attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus on Hide checks, but they must use smaller weapons than Medium-size creatures do, and their lifting and carrying limits are three-quarters of those of Medium-size characters.

- Speed: Water elemental land speed is 20 feet, swim speed 40 feet.

Like any creature with a swim speed, water elementals can move through the water at that speed without making Swim checks, they have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks to perform some special action or avoid a hazard, and can always take 10 when making Swim checks.

They can use the run action while swimming provided they swim in a straight line.

- Water Subtype: Water elementals can breathe water or air equally well.

- Darkvision: Water elementals can see in the dark up to 60 feet.

- Automatic Languages: Aquan.

- Elemental: Water elementals are immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, and stunning, and they are not subject to critical hits.

- Favored Class: Water elemental.

The best multiclassing choices for a water elemental are barbarian, fighter, ranger, and rogue.

CLASS SKILLS

The water elemental's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

On reaching Medium-size, a water elemental loses its +4 size bonus on Hide checks.

On reaching Large size, a water elemental takes a -4 size penalty on Hide checks.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the water elemental monster class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Water elementals are not proficient with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Feats: A water elemental receives one feat at 1st level and additional ones at 3rd and 8th level.

It gains Power Attack as a bonus feat at 1st level.

After 13th level it gains feats normally according to its character level, as shown on Table 2-5: Experience and Level-Dependent Benefits.

Slam: A water elemental has a slam attack that is a natural weapon dealing the indicated damage plus 1 1/2 times its Strength bonus.

Water Mastery (Ex): A water elemental gains a +1 bonus on attack and damage rolls if both it and its opponent are touching water.

If the opponent or elemental is landbound, the elemental takes a -4 penalty on attack and damage.

A water elemental can overturn small craft (5 feet of length per HD), stop larger vessels (10 feet of length per HD), or halve the speed of large ships (20 feet of length per HD).

Drench (Ex): A water elemental of 2nd level or higher can extinguish nonmagical flames of Large size or smaller by merely touching the flames (moving to or through the flames; no attack roll required).

Vortex: A water elemental can form a vortex as described in the Monster Manual, except the damage is the elemental's slam damage without Strength bonus and the Reflex save DC to escape the vortex is 10 + 1/2 water elemental's HD from class levels + water elemental's Con modifier.

TABLE A-53: THE WATER ELEMENTAL

WEREBEAR

Werebears are reclusive creatures that prefer to avoid civilization and hunt down evil beings in the wilderness.

Though they tend to be moody and easily agitated, werebears are the only good-aligned lycanthropes that are commonly known.

Afflicted werewolves are rarely created accidentally, since natural werewolves are careful to slay their evil enemies outright and reluctant to fight good creatures. Sometimes an ailing or elder werewolf arranges to pass on its gifts to a worthy and willing person to ensure that the power to fight evil in this unique way will continue after the original werewolf has died.

A character who chooses to keep his lycanthropic curse can progress in the werewolf template class to gain werewolf abilities.

This template class can also be used by natural werewolves who wish to start play at lower levels and develop their powers, or for characters who somehow acquire this form of lycanthropy from another source.

This template class can be taken only by a lycanthrope who is aware of his condition, whether because he was born a werewolf or because he realizes that he is afflicted with lycanthropy.

Any ability noted as applying to all forms is available to the werewolf in his natural, hybrid, and animal forms, but not forms acquired via polymorph or other means.

Each lycanthrope template class has three levels, but only natural lycanthropes can take all the levels it offers.

An afflicted lycanthrope can take only 1st and 2nd levels in the class, since his level adjustment is +2 instead of +3.

Lycanthrope template classes also follow special rules relating to the benefits such characters acquire from their animal natures.

The template allows for a level adjustment of +3 (or +2 for afflicted lycanthropes), but that value does not include the Hit Dice from the lycanthrope's animal form.

So while a 1st-level human natural werewolf warrior (as presented in the Monster Manual) has a level adjustment of +3, his ECL is actually 10—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +6 for his bear Hit Dice.

Thus, in addition to the levels offered via the appropriate lycanthrope template class, each kind of lycanthrope also has a separate (optional) class progression for his animal abilities.

Essentially, a character progressing as a lycanthrope multiclasses into the template class and can also multiclass into the appropriate animal class if desired.

The animal class is entirely optional.

No would-be lycanthrope is required to take it, but doing so is an advantage, since a character without it is weaker than other lycanthropes of the same type.

Taking levels in the appropriate animal template class gives the character the animal's Hit Dice and hit points (in all forms), saving throw bonuses (in all forms), skill points (in all forms), racial skill bonuses (in all forms), conditional skill modifiers (in animal form), ability score modifiers (in hybrid or animal form), natural armor bonus, and special attacks (such as the bear's improved grab).

Levels in the animal class may be taken at any point after the character takes one level in the lycanthrope template class.

He is also free to take levels in other classes between levels of the template class and the animal class, as desired.

The animal class, like the template class, does not count when determining whether a character takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

An afflicted werewolf that is cured of lycanthropy (as described in the Monster Manual on page 178) immediately loses all werewolf template class levels and brown bear class levels (if any).

These levels cannot be restored with restoration or similar magic; they are simply gone.

Most lycanthropes that do not wish to lose their lycanthropy in this way deliberately fail their saving throws against the spell in order to prevent this traumatic change.

WEREWOLF TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the werewolf template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the werewolf's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

The werewolf also gains additional natural armor increases in hybrid or animal form from the animal class.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the werewolf can take the form of a brown bear, and he undergoes this change involuntarily on the nights of the full moon or in times of stress, as described in the Monster Manual.

Unless the werewolf is a natural lycanthrope, he does not automatically have control over this ability and must attempt a Control Shape check to intentionally change form or to resist an involuntary change.

For an afflicted lycanthrope, Control Shape is a class skill for all classes as well as racial Hit Dice, if any.

Natural lycanthropes have full control over when they change shape and do not need to take ranks in this skill.

Changing form is a standard action that can be attempted once per round.

A werewolf character who is aware of his condition retains his identity and does not lose control of his actions when he changes.

Each time he involuntarily changes to his animal form, however, he must make a Will save (DC 15 + number of times he has been in animal form) or permanently assume the alignment of his lycanthrope kind (lawful good for werewolves) in all forms.

Any voluntary change to bear or hybrid form immediately and permanently changes the character's alignment to lawful good.

Until the character has taken one or more levels in the optional bear animal class (see Bear Abilities, below), changing shape to bear form does not give him the abilities of a bear—he simply is able to take that creature's shape, as if he had a perfect disguise.

Since this ability is of limited use, most characters taking levels in the werewolf template class choose to take levels of the brown bear class as well in order to gain the full abilities of their animal forms.

At 2nd level, the werewolf can assume a hybrid form—a shape between his humanoid and his bear forms.

As with the bear form, this change is purely cosmetic unless the character has taken the brown bear class to gain the appropriate abilities.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A 1st-level werewolf gains low-light vision.

Shapechanger Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, the werewolf gains the shapechanger subtype.

Werewolf Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the werewolf gains the feats indicated on Table SP-10 as bonus feats, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the werewolf doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

Bear Empathy (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a werewolf in any form can communicate and empathize with normal or dire bears.

This ability gives him a +4 racial bonus on checks made to influence the attitude of such creatures.

It also allows the communication of simple concepts and (if the animal is friendly) commands, such as "friend", "foe", "flee", and "attack".

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the werewolf gains damage reduction 5/silver.

At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope gains damage reduction 10/silver.

An afflicted lycanthrope's damage reduction does not improve beyond 5/silver.

Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): At 3rd level, a natural werewolf can infect other creatures with lycanthropy.

Any humanoid or giant hit by the bite attack of a werewolf in animal or hybrid form must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or contract lycanthropy.

Afflicted lycanthropes do not transmit lycanthropy.

Table SP-10: The Werewolf Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+1	Wis +2, natural armor +2, alternate form (brown bear), low-light vision, shapechanger subtype, werewolf feat (Run)
2nd	+1	Alternate form (hybrid), bear empathy, damage reduction (5/silver), werewolf feats (Iron Will, Endurance)
3rd	+2	Curse of lycanthropy, damage reduction (10/silver)

BROWN BEAR ANIMAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the brown bear class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Bear Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the brown bear animal class, the character gains the animal's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-11.

In brown bear form, the werewolf's speed changes to 40 feet, and he gains a +4 racial bonus on Swim checks in brown bear form.

Class skills for the brown bear Hit Dice are Control Shape, Listen, Spot, and Swim.

Bite: The brown bear animal class gives the werewolf a bite attack in his animal and hybrid forms.

The bite is a natural weapon that deals 1d8 points of damage.

Scent (Ex): As a 1st-level brown bear, a werewolf in any form gains the scent ability.

Claws: Upon reaching 3rd level in the brown bear class, a werewolf gains two claw attacks in his animal and hybrid forms.

His claws are natural weapons, each dealing 1d6 points of damage.

Improved Grab (Ex): At 4th level in the brown bear class, the werewolf gains the improved grab ability.

To use it, he must hit a creature at least one size category smaller than himself with a claw attack.

He can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Track: At 4th level in brown bear class, the werewolf gains Track as a bonus feat.

Large (Ex): When a werewolf reaches 6th level in the brown bear class, his animal and hybrid forms become Large size.

In either of those forms, he takes a -1 penalty to AC and attack rolls because of his size, and his Space/Reach changes to 10 ft./10 ft.

His bite damage increases to 2d6 points, and his claw damage increases to 1d8 points.

His ability scores change as indicated on Table SP-11.

Table SP-11: The Brown Bear (Lycanthrope) Class

WEREBOAR

Wereboars are aggressive creatures that often provoke fights to drive other creatures out of their territories, or sometimes just for the sake of fighting.

The ease with which a wereboar's ire can be triggered means that a great many creatures can be exposed to the wereboar's curse.

A character who chooses to keep his lycanthropic curse can progress in the wereboar template class to gain wereboar abilities.

This template class can also be used by natural wereboars who wish to start play at lower levels and develop their powers, or for characters who somehow acquire this form of lycanthropy from another source.

This template class can be taken only by a lycanthrope who is aware of his condition, whether because he was born a wereboar or because he realizes that he is afflicted with lycanthropy.

Any ability noted as applying to all forms is available to the wereboar in his natural, hybrid, and animal forms, but not forms acquired via polymorph or other means.

Each lycanthrope template class has three levels, but only natural lycanthropes can take all the levels it offers.

An afflicted lycanthrope can take only 1st and 2nd levels in the class, since his level adjustment is +2 instead of +3.

Lycanthrope template classes also follow special rules relating to the benefits such characters acquire from their animal natures.

The template allows for a level adjustment of +3 (or +2 for afflicted lycanthropes), but that value does not include the Hit Dice from the lycanthrope's animal form.

So while a 1st-level human natural wereboar warrior (as presented in the Monster Manual) has a level adjustment of +3, his ECL is actually 7—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +3 for his boar Hit Dice.

Likewise, a 1st-level natural werebear human warrior has an ECL of 10—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +6 for his bear Hit Dice.

Thus, in addition to the 2 or 3 levels offered via the appropriate lycanthrope template class, each kind of lycanthrope also has a separate (optional) class progression for his animal abilities.

Essentially, a character progressing as a lycanthrope multiclassed into the template class and can also multiclass into the appropriate animal class if desired.

The animal class is entirely optional.

No would-be lycanthrope is required to take it, but doing so is an advantage, since a character without it is weaker than other lycanthropes of the same type.

Taking levels in the appropriate animal template class gives the character the animal's Hit Dice and hit points (in all forms), saving throw bonuses (in all forms), skill points (in all forms), racial skill bonuses (in all forms), conditional skill modifiers (in animal form), ability score modifiers (in hybrid or animal form), natural armor bonus, and special attacks (such as the boar's ferocity).

Levels in the animal class may be taken at any point after the character takes one level in the lycanthrope template class.

He is also free to take levels in other classes between levels of the template class and the animal class, as desired.

The animal class, like the template class, does not count when determining whether a character takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

An afflicted lycanthrope that is cured of lycanthropy (as described in the Monster Manual on page 178) immediately loses all wereboar template class levels and boar class levels (if any).

These levels cannot be restored with restoration or similar magic; they are simply gone.

Most lycanthropes that do not wish to lose their lycanthropy in this way deliberately fail their saving throws against the spell in order to prevent this traumatic change.

The wereboar template class can also be used for dire wereboars.

The only difference is that a dire wereboar must use Table SP-8 for advancement, while a normal wereboar uses Table SP-7.

WEREBOAR TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the wereboar template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the wereboar's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the wereboar can take the form of a boar, and he undergoes this change involuntarily on the nights of the full moon or in times of stress, as described in the Monster Manual.

Unless the wereboar is a natural lycanthrope, he does not automatically have control over this ability and must attempt a Control Shape check to intentionally change form or to resist an involuntary change.

For an afflicted lycanthrope, Control Shape is a class skill for all classes as well as racial Hit Dice, if any.

Natural lycanthropes have full control over when they change shape and do not need to take ranks in this skill. Changing form is a standard action that can be attempted once per round.

A wereboar character who is aware of his condition retains his identity and does not lose control of his actions when he changes.

Each time he involuntarily changes to his animal form, however, he must make a Will save (DC 15 + number of times he has been in animal form) or permanently assume the alignment of his lycanthrope kind (neutral for wereboars and dire wereboars) in all forms.

Any voluntary change to boar or hybrid form immediately and permanently changes the character's alignment to neutral.

Until the character has taken one or more optional levels in the boar animal class (see Boar Abilities, below), changing shape to boar form does not give him the abilities of a boar—he simply is able to take that creature's shape, as if he had a perfect disguise.

Since this ability is of limited use, most characters taking levels in the wereboar template class choose to take levels of the boar class as well in order to gain the full abilities of their animal forms.

At 3rd level, the wereboar can assume a hybrid form—a shape between his humanoid and his boar forms.

As with the boar form, this change is purely cosmetic unless the character has taken the boar class to gain the appropriate abilities.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A 1st-level wereboar gains low-light vision.

Shapechanger Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, the wereboar gains the shapechanger subtype.

Wereboar Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the wereboar gains the feats indicated on Table SP-6 as bonus feats, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the wereboar doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

Boar Empathy (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a wereboar in any form can communicate and empathize with normal or dire boars.

This ability gives him a +4 racial bonus on checks made to influence the attitude of boars or dire boars.

It also allows the communication of simple concepts and (if the animal is friendly) commands, such as "friend", "foe", "flee", and "attack".

Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): At 3rd level, a natural wereboar can infect other creatures with lycanthropy.

Any humanoid or giant hit by the gore attack of a wereboar in animal or hybrid form must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or contract lycanthropy.

Afflicted lycanthropes do not transmit lycanthropy.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the wereboar gains damage reduction 5/silver.

At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope gains damage reduction 10/silver.

An afflicted lycanthrope's damage reduction does not improve beyond 5/silver.

A character can take levels the dire boar animal class only if he is a natural or afflicted dire wereboar.

Because of the size restrictions on lycanthropy, only Medium, Large, or Huge creatures can become dire wereboars.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Boar Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the boar or dire boar animal class, the character gains the animal's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-7 or SP-8.

In boar or dire boar form, the wereboar's speed changes to 40 feet.

Class skills for the boar or dire boar racial Hit Dice are Control Shape, Listen, and Spot.

Gore: The boar or dire boar animal class gives the wereboar a gore attack.

The gore is a natural weapon that deals 1d8 points of damage.

Scent (Ex): As a 1st-level boar or dire boar, a wereboar in any form gains the scent ability.

Ferocity (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level of the boar or dire boar animal class, a wereboar may fight while disabled or dying without penalty.

Endurance: At 6th level in dire boar class, the wereboar gains Endurance as a bonus feat.

Large (Ex): When the dire wereboar reaches 6th level in the animal class, his animal and hybrid forms become Large size.

In either of those forms, he takes a -1 penalty to AC and attack rolls for size, and his Space/Reach changes to 10 ft./5 ft.

His ability scores and natural armor bonus change as indicated on Table SP-8.

WERERAT

Since most characters spend considerable time in cities, they're bound to encounter wererats at one time or another—particularly when they make their inevitable exploration of the city's sewer system.

A standard wererat's CR is fairly low, so this creature makes an appropriate encounter for a low-level party.

However, such characters are more likely than their higher-level counterparts to fail their saving throws against the curse of lycanthropy and become wererats themselves. Characters who choose to keep their lycanthropic curse can progress in the wererat template class to gain wererat abilities.

This template class can also be used by natural wererats who wish to start play at lower levels and develop their powers, or for characters who somehow acquire this form of lycanthropy from another source.

This template class assumes that the character is aware of his condition, whether because he was born a wererat or because he realizes he is afflicted with lycanthropy. Any ability noted as applying to all forms is available to the wererat in his natural, hybrid, and animal forms, but not forms acquired via polymorph or other means.

Note that each lycanthrope template class has 3 levels, but only natural lycanthropes can take all the levels it offers.

An afflicted lycanthrope can take only levels 1 and 2, since his level adjustment is +2 instead of +3.

Lycanthrope template classes also follow special rules relating to the benefits such characters acquire from their animal natures.

The template allows for a level adjustment of +3 (or +2 for afflicted lycanthropes), but that value does not include the Hit Dice from the lycanthrope's animal form.

So while a 1st-level human natural wererat warrior (as presented in the Monster Manual) has a level adjustment of +3, his ECL is actually 5—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +1 for his dire rat Hit Die.

Likewise, a 1st-level natural werewolf human warrior has an ECL of 10—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +6 for his bear Hit Dice.

Thus, in addition to the 2 or 3 levels offered via the appropriate lycanthrope template class, each kind of lycanthrope also has a separate (optional) class progression for his animal abilities.

Essentially, a character progressing as a lycanthrope multiclasses into the template class and can also multiclass into the appropriate animal class if desired.

The animal class is entirely optional.

No would-be lycanthrope is required to take it, but doing so is an advantage, since a character without it is weaker than other lycanthropes of the same type.

Taking levels in the appropriate animal template class (or just 1 level, as is the case with the dire rat animal class) gives the character the animal's Hit Dice and hit points (in all forms), saving throw bonuses (in all forms), skill points (in all forms), racial skill bonuses (in all forms), conditional skill modifiers (in animal form), ability score modifiers (in hybrid or animal form), natural armor bonus, and special attacks (such as the dire rat's ability to transmit disease). Levels in the animal class may be taken at any point after the character takes 1 level in the lycanthrope template class.

He is also free to take levels in other classes between levels of the template class and the animal class, as desired.

The animal class, like the template class, does not count when determining whether a character takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

An afflicted lycanthrope that is cured of his lycanthropy (as described in the Monster Manual on page 178) immediately loses all wererat template class levels and dire rat class levels (if any).

These levels cannot be restored with restoration or similar magic; they are simply gone.

Most lycanthropes that do not wish to lose their lycanthropy in this way deliberately fail their saving throws against the spell in order to prevent this traumatic change.

WERERAT TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the wererat template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the wererat's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the wererat can take the form of a dire rat, and he undergoes this change involuntarily on the nights of the full moon or in times of stress, as described in the Monster Manual.

Unless the wererat is a natural lycanthrope, he does not automatically have control over this ability and must attempt a Control Shape check to intentionally change form or to resist an involuntary change.

For an afflicted lycanthrope, Control Shape is a class skill for all classes as well as racial Hit Dice, if any.

Natural lycanthropes have full control over when they change shape and do not need to take ranks in this skill.

Changing form is a standard action that can be attempted once per round.

A wererat who is aware of his condition retains his identity and does not lose control of his actions when he changes. Each time he involuntarily changes to his animal form, however, he must make a Will save (DC 15 + number of times he has been in animal form) or permanently assume the alignment of his lycanthrope type (chaotic evil for wererats) in all forms.

Any voluntary change to dire rat or hybrid form immediately and permanently changes the character's alignment to chaotic evil.

Until the character has taken the optional 1 level in the dire rat animal class (see Dire Rat Abilities, below), changing shape to dire rat form does not give him the abilities of a dire rat—he simply is able to take that creature's shape, as if he had a perfect disguise.

Since this ability is of limited use, most characters taking levels in the wererat template class choose to take the optional 1 level of the dire rat class as well in order to gain the full abilities of their animal forms.

At 2nd level, the wererat gains the ability to assume a hybrid form—a shape between his humanoid and his dire rat forms.

As with the dire rat form, this change is purely cosmetic unless the character has taken the dire rat class to gain the appropriate abilities.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the wererat's natural armor bonus increases by +2 in all forms.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

The wererat also gains additional natural armor increases in his hybrid or animal form if he takes the dire rat class.

Shapechanger Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, the lycanthrope gains the shapechanger subtype.

Wererat Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the wererat gains the feats indicated on Table SP-3, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the wererat doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A 1st-level wererat gains low-light vision.

Rat Empathy (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a wererat in any form can communicate and empathize with normal or dire rats.

This ability gives him a +4 racial bonus on checks made to influence the attitude of rats or dire rats.

It also allows the communication of simple concepts and (if the animal is friendly) commands, such as "friend", "foe", "flee", and "attack".

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the wererat gains damage reduction 5/silver.

At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope gains damage reduction 10/silver.

An afflicted lycanthrope's damage reduction does not improve beyond 5/silver.

Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope can infect other creatures with lycanthropy.

Any humanoid or giant hit by the bite attack of a wererat in animal or hybrid form must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or contract lycanthropy.

Afflicted lycanthropes do not transmit lycanthropy.

Bite: The dire rat animal class gives the wererat a bite attack.

The bite is a natural weapon that deals 1d4 points of damage plus disease (see below).

Dire Rat Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the dire rat animal class, the character gains the dire rat's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-4.

In dire rat form, the wererat's speed changes to 40 feet, and he gains a climb speed of 20 feet and a swim speed of 15 feet.

Class skills for the dire rat racial Hit Die are Control Shape, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Swim.

A wererat in rat or hybrid form uses his Strength or Dexterity modifier (whichever is greater) for Climb and Swim checks.

He has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks in dire rat form and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

He gains a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks in all forms.

Disease (Ex): As a 1st-level dire rat, a wererat in rat or hybrid form transmits filth fever (Fortitude DC 10 + Con modifier, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d3 Dex and 1d3 Con) with his bite attack.

Upon gaining this ability, a wererat in any form becomes immune to filth fever (that is, he is a carrier of the disease but is never subject to its effects).

Scent (Ex): As a 1st-level dire rat, a wererat in any form gains the scent ability.

Table SP-3: The Wererat Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1	+1	+2 Wis, natural armor +2, alternate form (dire rat), low-light vision, shapechanger subtype, wererat feat (Alertness)

WERETIGER

Weretigers are powerful but secretive creatures that prefer to remain hidden from humanoid civilization.

But unlike wererats (who usually seek solitude for criminal purposes), weretigers simply enjoy working and hunting alone.

Affliction with this form of lycanthropy only rarely occurs by accident, since weretigers normally attack only for food and choose easy prey.

Now and then, however, a weretiger is driven away from its intended kill after only wounding it, and the victim survives with the lycanthropic curse.

Occasionally, a pride of natural weretigers deliberately infects another creature with lycanthropy in order to strengthen the numbers of the group.

A character who chooses to keep his lycanthropic curse can progress in the weretiger template class to gain weretiger abilities.

This template class can also be used by natural weretigers who wish to start play at lower levels and develop their powers, or for characters who somehow acquire this form of lycanthropy from another source.

This template class can be taken only by a lycanthrope who is aware of his condition, whether because he was born a weretiger or because he realizes that he is afflicted with lycanthropy.

Any ability noted as applying to all forms is available to the weretiger in his natural, hybrid, and animal forms, but not forms acquired via polymorph or other means.

Each lycanthrope template class has three levels, but only natural lycanthropes can take all the levels it offers.

An afflicted lycanthrope can take only 1st and 2nd levels in the class, since his level adjustment is +2 instead of +3.

Lycanthrope template classes also follow special rules relating to the benefits such characters acquire from their animal natures.

The template allows for a level adjustment of +3 (or +2 for afflicted lycanthropes), but that value does not include the Hit Dice from the lycanthrope's animal form.

So while a 1st-level human natural weretiger warrior (as presented in the Monster Manual) has a level adjustment of +3, his ECL is actually 7—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +6 for his tiger Hit Dice.

Thus, in addition to the levels offered via the appropriate lycanthrope template class, each kind of lycanthrope also has a separate (optional) class progression for his animal abilities.

Essentially, a character progressing as a lycanthrope multiclass into the template class and can also multiclass into the appropriate animal class if desired.

The animal class is entirely optional.

No would-be lycanthrope is required to take it, but doing so is an advantage, since a character without it is weaker than other lycanthropes of the same type.

Taking levels in the appropriate animal template class gives the character the animal's Hit Dice and hit points (in all forms), saving throw bonuses (in all forms), skill points (in all forms), racial skill bonuses (in all forms), conditional skill modifiers (in animal form), ability score modifiers (in hybrid or animal form), natural armor bonus, and special attacks (such as the tiger's rake).

Levels in the animal class may be taken at any point after the character takes one level in the lycanthrope template class.

He is also free to take levels in other classes between levels of the template class and the animal class, as desired.

The animal class, like the template class, does not count when determining whether a character takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

An afflicted weretiger that is cured of lycanthropy (as described in the Monster Manual on page 178) immediately loses all weretiger template class levels and tiger class levels (if any).

These levels cannot be restored with restoration or similar magic; they are simply gone.

Most lycanthropes that do not wish to lose their lycanthropy in this way deliberately fail their saving throws against the spell in order to prevent this traumatic change.

WERETIGER TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the weretiger template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the weretiger's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

The weretiger also gains additional natural armor increases in hybrid or animal form from the animal class.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the weretiger can take the form of a tiger, and he undergoes this change involuntarily on the nights of the full moon or in times of stress, as described in the Monster Manual.

Unless the weretiger is a natural lycanthrope, he does not automatically have control over this ability and must attempt a Control Shape check to intentionally change form or to resist an involuntary change.

For an afflicted lycanthrope, Control Shape is a class skill for all classes as well as racial Hit Dice, if any.

Natural lycanthropes have full control over when they change shape and do not need to take ranks in this skill. Changing form is a standard action that can be attempted once per round.

A weretiger character who is aware of his condition retains his identity and does not lose control of his actions when he changes.

Each time he involuntarily changes to his animal form, however, he must make a Will save (DC 15 + number of times he has been in animal form) or permanently assume the alignment of his lycanthrope kind (neutral for weretigers) in all forms.

Any voluntary change to tiger or hybrid form immediately and permanently changes the character's alignment to neutral.

Until the character has taken one or more levels in the optional tiger animal class (see Tiger Abilities, below), changing shape to tiger form does not give him the abilities of a tiger—he simply is able to take that creature's shape, as if he had a perfect disguise.

Since this ability is of limited use, most characters taking levels in the weretiger template class choose to take levels of the tiger class as well in order to gain the full abilities of their animal forms.

At 2nd level, the weretiger can assume a hybrid form—a shape between his humanoid and his tiger forms.

As with the tiger form, this change is purely cosmetic unless the character has taken the tiger class to gain the appropriate abilities.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A 1st-level weretiger gains low-light vision.

Shapechanger Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, the weretiger gains the shapechanger subtype.

Weretiger Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the weretiger gains the feats indicated on Table SP-13 as bonus feats, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the weretiger doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

The Improved Natural Attack feats have no effect until the weretiger gains a bite or claw attack from the tiger animal class or another source (see Monster Manual, page 304, for the effects of this feat).

Tiger Empathy (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a weretiger in any form can communicate and empathize with normal or dire tigers.

This ability gives him a +4 racial bonus on checks made to influence the attitude of such creatures.

It also allows the communication of simple concepts and (if the animal is friendly) commands, such as "friend", "foe", "flee", and "attack".

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the weretiger gains damage reduction 5/silver.

At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope gains damage reduction 10/silver.

An afflicted lycanthrope's damage reduction does not improve beyond 5/silver.

Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): At 3rd level, a natural weretiger can infect other creatures with lycanthropy.

Any humanoid or giant hit by the bite attack of a weretiger in animal or hybrid form must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or contract lycanthropy.

Afflicted lycanthropes do not transmit lycanthropy.

Table SP-13: The Weretiger Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+1	Wis +2, natural armor +2, alternate form (tiger), low-light vision, shapechanger subtype, weretiger feat (Alertness)
2nd	+1	Alternate form (hybrid), tiger empathy, damage reduction 5/silver, weretiger feats (Improved Natural Attack [bite], Improved Natural Attack [claw])
3rd	+2	Curse of lycanthropy, damage reduction 10/silver

TIGER ANIMAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tiger class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character that does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Tiger Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the tiger animal class, the character gains the animal's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-14.

When the weretiger is in tiger form, his speed changes to 40 feet.

In all forms, he gains a +4 racial bonus on Balance, Hide, and Move Silently checks.

When in tiger form and in areas of tall grass or heavy undergrowth, his Hide bonus improves to +8.

Class skills for the tiger racial Hit Dice are Balance, Control Shape, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Swim.

Bite: The tiger animal class gives the weretiger a bite attack in his animal and hybrid forms.

The bite is a natural weapon that deals 1d6 points of damage.

When he attains 2nd level in the weretiger template class and gains the Improved Natural Attack (bite) feat, his base bite damage improves to 1d8.

Scent (Ex): As a 1st-level tiger, a weretiger in any form gains the scent ability.

Claws: Upon reaching 3rd level in the tiger class, a weretiger gains two claw attacks in his animal and hybrid forms.

His claws are natural weapons, each dealing 1d4 points of damage.

When the weretiger attains 2nd level in the weretiger template class and gains the Improved Natural Attack (claw) feat, his base claw damage improves to 1d6.

Improved Grab (Ex): At 4th level in the tiger class, the weretiger gains the improved grab ability.

To use it, he must hit a creature at least one size category smaller than himself with a claw attack.

He can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If he wins the grapple check, he establishes a hold.

If he has the rake ability, he can make two rake attacks at the start of each round against a foe that he is grappling.

He can use this ability only on creatures at least one size category smaller than himself.

Large (Ex): When a weretiger reaches 4th level in the tiger class, his animal and hybrid forms become Large size.

In either of those forms, he takes a -1 penalty to AC and attack rolls because of his size, and his Space/Reach changes to 10 ft./5 ft.

His bite and claw damage each increase by one step (see Monster Manual, page 296).

His ability scores change as indicated on Table SP-14.

Pounce (Ex): If a weretiger who is 5th level or higher in the tiger class charges an opponent while in tiger form, he can make a full attack even though he has moved.

If he has the rake ability, he can include two rake attacks as part of his full attack.

Rake (Ex): At 6th level in the tiger class, the weretiger gains extra attacks with his rear claws in certain circumstances. When he makes a pounce attack or starts a turn grappling with his claws while in animal form, he can make two additional claw attacks against the target for normal claw damage.

The weretiger cannot begin a grapple and rake in the same turn.

Rake attacks are not subject to the usual -4 penalty for attacking with a natural weapon in a grapple.

WEREWOLF

Werewolves are cruel and evil creatures that enjoy killing for the sake of violence and prefer innocents as their targets.

Some werewolves enjoy inflicting lycanthropy on good folks by attacking them and stopping short of killing them. Others kill ruthlessly by night and often prey on family and friends.

Still others spread their infectious curse among like-minded creatures to create a pack of shapechanging allies. Because of these predilections, afflicted werewolves are fairly common.

A character who chooses to keep his lycanthropic curse can progress in the werewolf template class to gain werewolf abilities.

This template class can also be used by natural werewolves who wish to start play at lower levels and develop their powers, or for characters who somehow acquire this form of lycanthropy from another source.

This template class can be taken only by a lycanthrope who is aware of his condition, whether because he was born a werewolf or because he realizes that he is afflicted with lycanthropy.

Any ability noted as applying to all forms is available to the werewolf in his natural, hybrid, and animal forms, but not forms acquired via polymorph or other means.

Each lycanthrope template class has three levels, but only natural lycanthropes can take all the levels it offers.

An afflicted lycanthrope can take only 1st and 2nd levels in the class, since his level adjustment is +2 instead of +3.

Lycanthrope template classes also follow special rules relating to the benefits such characters acquire from their animal natures.

The template allows for a level adjustment of +3 (or +2 for afflicted lycanthropes), but that value does not include the Hit Dice from the lycanthrope's animal form.

So while a 1st-level human natural werewolf warrior (as presented in the Monster Manual) has a level adjustment of +3, his ECL is actually 6—1 from his warrior Hit Die, +3 from the template, +2 for his wolf Hit Dice.

Thus, in addition to the levels offered via the appropriate lycanthrope template class, each kind of lycanthrope also has a separate (optional) class progression for his animal abilities.

Essentially, a character progressing as a lycanthrope multiclasses into the template class and can also multiclass into the appropriate animal class if desired.

The animal class is entirely optional.

No would-be lycanthrope is required to take it, but doing so is an advantage, since a character without it is weaker than other lycanthropes of the same type.

Taking levels in the appropriate animal template class gives the character the animal's Hit Dice and hit points (in all forms), saving throw bonuses (in all forms), skill points (in all forms), racial skill bonuses (in all forms), conditional skill modifiers (in animal form), ability score modifiers (in hybrid or animal form), natural armor bonus, and special attacks (such as the wolf's trip).

Levels in the animal class may be taken at any point after the character takes one level in the lycanthrope template class.

He is also free to take levels in other classes between levels of the template class and the animal class, as desired.

The animal class, like the template class, does not count when determining whether a character takes an XP penalty for multiclassing.

An afflicted werewolf that is cured of lycanthropy (as described in the Monster Manual on page 178) immediately loses all werewolf template class levels and wolf class levels (if any).

These levels cannot be restored with restoration or similar magic; they are simply gone.

Most lycanthropes that do not wish to lose their lycanthropy in this way deliberately fail their saving throws against the spell in order to prevent this traumatic change. The werewolf template class can also be used for werewolf lords.

The only difference is that a werewolf lord must use Table SP-18 for advancement, while a normal werewolf uses Table SP-17.

WEREWOLF TEMPLATE CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the werewolf template class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the werewolf's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character who does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

The werewolf also gains additional natural armor increases in hybrid or animal form from the animal class.

Alternate Form (Su): At 1st level, the werewolf can take the form of a wolf, and he undergoes this change involuntarily on the nights of the full moon or in times of stress, as described in the Monster Manual.

Unless the werewolf is a natural lycanthrope, he does not automatically have control over this ability and must attempt a Control Shape check to intentionally change form or to resist an involuntary change.

For an afflicted lycanthrope, Control Shape is a class skill for all classes as well as racial Hit Dice, if any.

Natural lycanthropes have full control over when they change shape and do not need to take ranks in this skill.

Changing form is a standard action that can be attempted once per round.

A werewolf character who is aware of his condition retains his identity and does not lose control of his actions when he changes.

Each time he involuntarily changes to his animal form, however, he must make a Will save (DC 15 + number of times he has been in animal form) or permanently assume the alignment of his lycanthrope kind (chaotic evil for werewolves) in all forms.

Any voluntary change to wolf or hybrid form immediately and permanently changes the character's alignment to chaotic evil.

Until the character has taken one or more levels in the optional wolf animal class (see Wolf Abilities, below), changing shape to wolf form does not give him the abilities of a wolf—he simply is able to take that creature's shape, as if he had a perfect disguise.

Since this ability is of limited use, most characters taking levels in the werewolf template class choose to take levels of the wolf class as well in order to gain the full abilities of their animal forms.

At 3rd level, the werewolf can assume a hybrid form—a shape between his humanoid and his wolf forms.

As with the wolf form, this change is purely cosmetic unless the character has taken the wolf class to gain the appropriate abilities.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): A 1st-level werewolf gains low-light vision.

Shapechanger Subtype (Ex): At 1st level, the werewolf gains the shapechanger subtype.

Werewolf Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the werewolf gains the feats indicated on Table SP-16 as bonus feats, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the werewolf doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.

Wolf Empathy (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a werewolf in any form can communicate and empathize with normal or dire wolves.

This ability gives him a +4 racial bonus on checks made to influence the attitude of such creatures.

It also allows the communication of simple concepts and (if the animal is friendly) commands, such as "friend", "foe", "flee", and "attack".

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the werewolf gains damage reduction 5/silver.

At 3rd level, a natural lycanthrope gains damage reduction 10/silver.

An afflicted lycanthrope's damage reduction does not improve beyond 5/silver.

Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): At 3rd level, a natural werewolf can infect other creatures with lycanthropy.

Any humanoid or giant hit by the bite attack of a werewolf in animal or hybrid form must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or contract lycanthropy.

Afflicted lycanthropes do not transmit lycanthropy.

Table SP-16: The Werewolf Template Class

Level	CR	Special
1st	+1	Wis +2, natural armor +2, alternate form (wolf), low-light vision, shapechanger subtype, werewolf feat (Track)
2nd	+1	Alternate form (hybrid), wolf empathy, damage reduction (5/silver), werewolf feats (Iron Will, Weapon Focus [bite])
3rd	+2	Curse of lycanthropy, damage reduction (10/silver)

WOLF ANIMAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the wolf class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character who does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability.

Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Wolf Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the wolf animal class, the character gains the animal's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-17.

In wolf form, the werewolf's speed changes to 50 feet. Class skills for the wolf racial Hit Dice are Control Shape, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Survival.

Bite: The wolf animal class gives the werewolf a bite attack in his animal and hybrid forms.

The bite is a natural weapon that deals 1d6 points of damage.

Scent (Ex): As a 2nd-level wolf, the character gains the scent ability in all forms.

Trip (Ex): A werewolf in hybrid or wolf form that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity.

If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the wolf.

Class Level	Base					Skill Points	Special
	Hit Dice	Attack Bonus	Fort. Save	Ref. Save	Will Save
1st	1d8	+0	+2	+2	+0	2 + Int mod.	Str +2, Con +2, natural armor +2, wolf abilities, bite
2nd	2d8	+1	+3	+3	+0	2 + Int mod.	Dex +4, Con +2, scent, trip

THE WEREWOLF LORD

A character can take levels in the dire wolf animal class only if he is a natural or afflicted werewolf lord.

Because of the size restrictions on lycanthropy, only Medium, Large, or Huge creatures can become werewolf lords.

DIRE WOLF ANIMAL CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dire wolf class.

Ability Score Changes: The indicated ability score increases or decreases by the amount noted.

These changes are cumulative.

Natural Armor Improvements: At 1st level, the character's natural armor bonus increases by +2.

A character who does not normally have a natural armor bonus (such as a human) is considered to have an initial natural armor bonus of +0 for the purpose of this ability. Thus, a human's natural armor bonus would increase to +2 at 1st level.

These changes are cumulative.

Wolf Abilities (Ex): Upon taking a level in the dire wolf animal class, the character gains the animal's Hit Dice (in all forms), base attack bonus (in all forms), base saving throw bonuses (in all forms), ability score modifiers (in hybrid and animal forms), skill points (in all forms), and natural armor bonus (in hybrid and animal forms), as well as the special abilities indicated on Table SP-18.

In dire wolf form, the werewolf's speed changes to 50 feet.

Class skills for the dire wolf racial Hit Dice are Control Shape, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Spot, and Survival.

Bite: The wolf animal class gives the werewolf a bite attack in his animal and hybrid forms.

The bite is a natural weapon that deals 1d8 points of damage.

Scent (Ex): As a 2nd-level dire wolf, the character gains the scent ability in all forms.

Trip (Ex): A werewolf lord in hybrid or dire wolf form that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity.

If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the werewolf lord.

Large (Ex): When the dire werewolf reaches 4th level in the animal class, his animal and hybrid forms become Large size.

In either of those forms, he takes a -1 penalty to AC and attack rolls for size, and his Space/Reach changes to 10 ft./5 ft.

His ability scores and natural armor bonus change as indicated on Table SP-18.

Dire Wolf Bonus Feats: At 1st and 2nd level, the werewolf lord gains the feats indicated on Table SP-18 as bonus feats, assuming that he doesn't already have them.

If the werewolf lord doesn't meet the prerequisites (if any) for a bonus feat, he gains the feat but cannot use it until he does meet the prerequisites.
