Eventually, you can take your company of followers into battle, safe in the knowledge that they will not be afraid as long as you are there to lead them.

Your heroic exploits become legendary, and your cohorts gain some notoriety in their own right.

ADVANCEMENT

Serving as a legendary leader simply requires the will and dedication to see the task through.

You start by finding a like-minded individual who has heard tales of your exploits, and you convince her to join you for a while.

As those tales circulate, slowly becoming legendary, more and more petitioners approach you with a desire to follow you.

You establish your organization, adopting a name, and seek out new deeds that can add to your legendary status and draw more people to your cause.

At first, you have a single cohort who works with you, while you in turn work with a group of adventurers.

As you gain more followers, you spend much of your spare time making sure they are all kept busy, setting tasks for new members of the organization, or finding sponsors who can provide work.

You might even send groups of your followers on adventures of their own, either to scout potential adventuring sites or to follow up on loose ends left after your own adventures.

As you gain more levels in the class, you become more suited to the role of party spokesperson while still maintaining a high level of combat prowess.

You'll want to focus on Diplomacy and Gather Information, both of which aid your endeavors when making contacts with NPCs or finding employment for your troop. Tailor your skills to suit your role.

If you are running a thieves guild, then Bluff and Intimidate might be paramount, whereas if you are training a cavalry company, you might instead focus on Handle Animal and Ride.

Choose feats appropriate to your style, but consider taking Improved Cohort (see page 98) more than once to gather a retinue of highly skilled supporters.

RESOURCES

The resources you gain from your organization depend on the kinds of jobs your followers perform.

You might have your thief followers steal key magic items, or you might receive a magic weapon in payment for having your cavalry assist an army.

As you develop your extensive contact list, those contacts can feed you information about jobs, rumors, legends, or other news.

The things you learn could very well kick off a new adventure and more opportunities for heroic exploits.

LEGENDARY LEADERS IN THE WORLD

"I was sure we were dead, but Henrik got us through. Come to think of it, he does that all the time!"

—Light Cavalry Sergeant Karsten, of Henrik's Horsemen

In a war campaign, most legendary leaders the PCs meet will be leaders of mercenary companies, but such characters are not restricted to the ranks of the military. A legendary leader could be a monk establishing a new monastery, a charismatic priest working within a church's hierarchy, or a wizard founding a new arcane college. Legendary leaders might assist the PCs when their goals are compatible, or the PCs might join the leader's organization for a time and learn from his example.

ORGANIZATION

The organizations of legendary leaders are as diverse as the leaders themselves.

The leader leads by example, and the others follow because they respect his ideal or wish to help him attain their shared goal.

Followers and cohorts work to impress the leader of the company; receiving praise validates the decisions they have made and the path they follow.

The group's mission, defined by the legendary leader, is clearly stated for all the followers.

The leader usually adopts a name for the group, often one that hints at its goals or purpose.

A thieves guild might be called the Shadow Hands or the Silent Eye, while a mercenary company might choose an aggressive name such as the Blades of Doom or Bearers of the Shining Light.

Sometimes the band refers to the leader in its name, such as Henrik's Horsemen or Gunther's Dragoons.

Henrik Yensen, the founder of Henrik's Horsemen, first gained fame by riding headlong into a squad of ogres to rescue three cavalymen stuck behind enemy lines.

One of those rescued stays with him to this day and leads the light cavalry of the Horsemen, which now numbers close to one hundred.

Henrik has befriended many kings, queens, and lesser lords by signing on with their armies in times of need.

One of his closest friends is General Ballard, leader of the Army of the Alliance (see page 59), a multiracial army that combats invasions of evil orc and giant foes.

Because the legendary leader is the ideal to which his followers aspire, he is seldom supplanted.

However, he might eventually retire and turn the organization over to his top cohort.

In very rare cases a leader fails to uphold his own standards and his followers disperse, founding their own groups modeled after the ideal.

NPC REACTIONS

A legendary leader with high Charisma and good social skills is ideally situated to influence NPCs.

Such characters typically have a starting attitude of indifferent, usually because they have not yet connected the face to the name.

Nobles and officers who have benefited from the leader's actions will be more aware of who he is and have a starting attitude of friendly; those he has worked against could be unfriendly or even hostile.

An NPC who shares a patron with a legendary leader might sometimes work covertly against him, motivated by greed or petty jealousy.

In such cases, the NPC typically refrains from physically confronting the legendary leader but instead opposes his suggestions or speaks out against his actions in an attempt to undermine the support he receives from their mutual benefactor.

LEGENDARY LEADER LORE

Characters with the Gather Information skill can research a legendary leader to learn more about him.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: This result provides only hints that a legendary leader has recently been nearby; any described exploits could be those of any heroic adventurer.

DC 15: Characters with this level of success hear tales of specific legendary leaders and might discover the names of the organizations they run.

DC 20: The character learns that the legendary leader consistently performs heroic exploits and that the loyalty of the leader's followers is reinforced by these actions.

DC 30: With this measure of success, a character can learn the story of a legendary leader, piecing together bits that comprise the tale, from his origins to his current whereabouts and activities.

The stories of a legendary leader's heroic exploits are the staple of bardic tales.

Therefore, a bard gains a +5 bonus to uncover legends or tales of a legendary leader on these Gather Information checks.

Depending on the type of leader involved, a Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), or Knowledge (nobility and royalty) check might also provide the same information at the given DCs.

Every legendary leader can be researched using the legend lore spell, since they are all aptly considered "legendary".

LEGENDARY LEADERS IN THE GAME

Legendary leaders belong to no specific preexisting organization, making this prestige class easy to add to an ongoing campaign.

In fact, there is no reason why a PC couldn't be the first legendary leader in the campaign world.

Conversely, the PCs as a whole could be followers or cohorts of a legendary leader.

Being a legendary leader encourages a PC to foster development in his followers.

Instead of being merely part of a mass of nameless 1st-level NPCs, each follower should have a name and position.

The presence of the legendary leader's organization allows the DM an opportunity to create a side adventure for which the players each create new PCs who are followers of the legendary leader.

These temporary PCs might be sent on a mission that helps to further the campaign's story by providing background information from a different perspective.

The DM could also set up encounters where the followers must call upon the original PCs for aid.

Conversely, the new PCs might be sent into a dungeon that the higher-level party has already cleaned out, to locate any treasure or secrets that might have been overlooked.

The DM should provide a PC legendary leader with time to manage his organization, but at the same time try not to bog down the entire party with one PC's concerns.

The leader should be able to bring along cohorts on adventures, but the rest of his followers should remain out of the spotlight unless the party is leading the whole troop into battle.

ADAPTATION

If the DM would rather not dramatically increase the size of the adventuring party by adding cohorts into the mix, he can allow a legendary leader's organization to run without the character always being there.

In such a case, the class could be adapted by swapping in a couple of abilities that would help the party—for example, by removing the quick rally, greater command, and to hell and back features, and instead giving the legendary leader the ability to inspire allies in a fashion similar to bardic music.

The legendary leader would need a Leadership score equal to the ranks in Perform normally required for the bardic music effect to be usable, and he could emulate the bardic music effects a number of times per day equal to one-half his level plus his Charisma modifier.

Table 5-4: The Legendary Leader Hit Die: d8

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	Fearless, hero's luck +1, natural commander, legendary reputation
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	Greater command 1/day, quick rally
3rd	+2	+1	+1	+3	Bonus feat, hero's luck +2
4th	+3	+1	+1	+4	Greater command 2/day, heroic success
5th	+3	+1	+1	+4	Additional commander aura, hero's luck +3, to hell and back

WAR WEAVER

"On my count, climb out of the trench and charge toward that hill. Don't worry about the fire raining from the sky—I've got you covered."

—Arvena, war weaver

By weaving together strands of pure arcane power, the war weaver becomes a force to be reckoned with on the battlefield.

A war weaver can establish an eldritch tapestry among her comrades and quickly aid them with her magic.

BECOMING A WAR WEAVER

Entering this prestige class is a relatively straightforward matter: The class is open to any 5th-level wizard who has made the appropriate feat and skill point choices.

It's a little harder for sorcerers and bards to get into the class.

Sorcerers don't have as many feats as wizards, and bards don't get access to 3rd-level spells until 7th level.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Craft (weaving) 6 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks
Feats: Enlarge Spell Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (arcana), Profession, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a war weaver, you gain abilities that allow your spells to affect multiple allies at once.

Eldritch Tapestry (Su): Upon entering the class, you gain an understanding of the rudiments of the war weaver's craft. You can thread together unseen strands of life force to connect willing allies in a magically resonant network known as an eldritch tapestry.

Doing so takes 10 minutes and requires a DC 15 Craft (weaving) check.

(Most war weavers take 10 on the check).

When you weave an eldritch tapestry, you can connect a number of allies equal to your bonus in your arcane spellcasting ability score (Intelligence for wizards, Charisma for sorcerers and bards).

Creatures must be within line of sight to have their life force woven into an eldritch tapestry, and they must be living creatures.

An eldritch tapestry lasts for 24 hours or until you weave a new one.

You're always connected to your own eldritch tapestry, and you don't count against the limit of allies that can be connected.

Once you have woven an eldritch tapestry, you can send your spells across the life-force strands to your allies. Although you cast but a single spell, you can have it affect every creature in your eldritch tapestry as if the group were a single creature.

The maximum level of spell you can cast into an eldritch tapestry is equal to your class level.

For example, a 5th-level wizard/2nd-level war weaver with an Intelligence of 16 could cast a 2nd-level spell such as bull's strength and have it affect herself and the three allies connected to her eldritch tapestry.

Each of the four characters would gain a +4 enhancement bonus to Strength—at the cost of a single spell, not four separate castings.

Only spells with the "harmless" designation in their saving throw entry or ones requiring willing targets can be cast into an eldritch tapestry.

In addition, spells with a range of personal cannot be cast through an eldritch tapestry.

If a spell has a costly material component or an XP cost, you must expend one casting's worth of the material component or pay the XP cost for each creature targeted by the spell (including yourself).

For example, sharing a stoneskin spell with four allies requires the expenditure of diamond dust worth a total of 1,250 gp.

An eldritch tapestry doesn't change the range of a spell.

To cast bull's strength, for example, you must touch all your allies.

You can touch as many willing targets as you can reach as part of the casting, but all targets must be touched in the same round you finish casting the spell.

You can exclude specific creatures connected to an eldritch tapestry from a spell if you like.

If the spell requires decision-making on your part, you must make the same decision for everyone the spell is meant to affect.

For instance, if you cast protection from energy through the eldritch tapestry, you must choose the same energy type for everyone affected by the spell.

An eldritch tapestry doesn't allow your spells to affect illegal targets.

You can't affect objects with spells cast into your eldritch tapestry, even if those objects are held by your allies (for instance, you can't use eldritch tapestry to deliver a greater magic weapon spell).

Quiescent Weaving (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can weave a single spell into your eldritch tapestry for later use. For each level you gain beyond 2nd, you can store one additional spell as a quiescent weaving in your eldritch tapestry.

The maximum level of spell that you can weave into your eldritch tapestry with this ability is equal to your class level. Quiescent weaving enables you to prepare beneficial spells you know your allies will need in a crisis.

You can release the quiescent spells right away at the beginning of a fight, then commence with more offensive spellcasting.

To make a quiescent weave, you must designate the eldritch tapestry as the target for the spell as you cast it (regardless of what the spell's normal target is).

The spell is now woven into the eldritch tapestry in a dormant state; it doesn't use up its duration or affect targets in any way.

As a move action, you can release all the spells in your quiescent weaving.

They immediately and instantaneously take effect in the order they were cast.

The same restrictions apply to a quiescent weaving that apply to any other spell woven into an eldritch tapestry (they must be "harmless", cannot have a range of personal, and require separate expenditures of material components or XP for each target).

The quiescent spells affect only legal targets at the time you release them.

For example, if you have bull's strength and protection from energy in your eldritch tapestry as quiescent weavings, you still have to touch your allies during the move action to target them with the spells.

Spellcasting: At each level other than 1st level, you gain new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) and an increase in caster level as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a war weaver, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, spells known, and caster level.

Enlarged Tapestry (Su): At 5th level, you can stretch your magic across your eldritch tapestry beyond normal distances.

Spells you cast through an eldritch tapestry have their range category increased: touch spells become close range, close-range spells become medium range, and medium-range spells become long range.

Long-range spells and spells with fixed ranges are unaffected.

PLAYING A WAR WEAVER

The stereotypical battlefield wizard blasts his enemies with fireballs and lightning bolts, and so do you.

However, you spend a round or two caring for your comrades first, making them stronger, faster, and better able to survive the rigors of war.

That willingness to help others is what separates you from your fellow arcane spellcasters.

You have mastered the esoteric techniques of the eldritch tapestry so you can channel helpful magic to your comrades as efficiently as possible.

Your magical assistance doesn't necessarily make you any less effective at blasting the enemy, however.

Because a single bull's strength from you can affect multiple allies, you have more spell slots available for offensive magic.

The theory behind eldritch tapestries is well understood by most powerful arcane spellcasters, but few take up the mantle of the war weaver because it requires familiarity with real-world textile weaving.

Your techniques don't get a lot of respect from wizards who crave personal power at all costs, because you're at your best when you have allies to connect to your eldritch tapestry.

Selfish wielders of arcane magic would rather learn new spells for themselves than spend time studying techniques that help only others.

COMBAT

In the early rounds of a typical fight, you'll use your eldritch tapestry to cast beneficial spells on your allies while relying on them to protect you from enemy attacks.

Once your allies have received your magical boosts and protections, you're free to let fly with the attack spells in your repertoire.

Your ability to "buff" your allies gets even stronger once you gain the quiescent weaving ability.

Quiescent weaving is ideal for spells with short durations, because the clock won't start ticking until battle is imminent.

Rather than spending multiple rounds casting beneficial spells, then charging the enemy, your team can charge right away, relying on the spells in the quiescent weaving to aid them.

You're effectively packing multiple rounds of spellcasting into a single move action (potentially dozens of rounds of spellcasting once you attain higher levels).

While you might often want beneficial spells in effect at the beginning of a fight, you can instead save the spells in a quiescent weaving until a critical point in the battle.

Just when your enemies think they have you and your allies figured out, you can release a quiescent weaving and turn all your friends invisible while giving them the ability to fly.

ADVANCEMENT

No globe-spanning organization of war weavers exists. You probably learned the rudiments of eldritch weaving from one of countless arcane texts or from a helpful mentor.

Through self-experimentation, you eventually learned to twist the unseen strands of eldritch power into a tapestry that would accept your spells.

As you attain more levels in the prestige class, you learn to manipulate those strands in more complex ways and eventually stretch them across greater distances.

You also start to collect spells (in your spellbook or your spells known list) that work with an eldritch tapestry.

In time, you become a repository of arcane knowledge about beneficial spells of all sorts.

For wizards, gaining access to tapestry-friendly spells is relatively easy—it's just a matter of paying the inking costs to have the spells put in your spellbook.

However, if you were a bard or a sorcerer before you became a war weaver, spell choice becomes a trickier task. You must carefully balance the "buff" spells on your spells known list with the usual staples of a sorcerer or bard's repertoire—evocations and enchantments that affect enemies, not allies.

RESOURCES

You might be able to cast beneficial spells much faster than other spellcasters, but many of those spells have a range of touch.

Until you become a 5th-level war weaver, you'll have to stay within a few paces of your allies to use your beneficial spells effectively.

Accordingly, you'll want to invest in items that improve your maneuverability on the battlefield (such as boots of striding and springing) and ones that protect you from enemy attack (anything that improves your Armor Class, for example).

WAR WEAVERS IN THE WORLD

"Arvena, our war weaver, is too clever by half, and that cleverness keeps us alive.

I just wish she'd tell us what's in the weaving ahead of time. It's disconcerting when you're suddenly 20 feet up in the air."

—Grumaik, sergeant in Von Hault's Sabers

War weavers are a good addition to a warfare-based campaign because their key power—the ability to benefit multiple allies at once—is extremely useful on the battlefield.

ORGANIZATION

There's no cabal of war weavers anywhere in the world, but individual war weavers are keen to join organizations of other kinds.

They know firsthand that they're at their best when they have allies (or minions, at least) on whom they can cast beneficial spells.

Many war weavers can be found attached to elite squads within a national army—especially if such squads are specialized for infiltration or fast-response missions. The size of the squad is often tailored to the war weaver's relevant ability bonus.

A war weaver who can include five people in her eldritch tapestry, for example, is almost always put in a squad with five soldiers.

NPC REACTIONS

War weavers keep rank-and-file soldiers alive, so they're accorded great respect in most armies.

NPCs in the same army as a war weaver have a starting attitude of friendly (see page 72 of the Player's Handbook) so long as they're aware of a character's status as a war weaver. In general, the war weaver's techniques are too esoteric to draw much attention, good or bad, from other spellcasters and those outside the military structures.

Even enemy soldiers don't have any particular ire for war weavers beyond the "get the wizard" attitude prevalent among soldiers everywhere.

WAR WEAVER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research the war weavers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "War weavers are adept at quickly casting beneficial spells on their comrades".

DC 15: "War weavers can create something called an eldritch tapestry that can store spells.

It lets them cast a single spell on multiple allies at once".

DC 20: "The eldritch tapestry works only on beneficial spells.

They're called war weavers because multiple-cast beneficial spells are more useful on the battlefield than anywhere else".

Knowledge (history) checks can yield similar information, but because the war weavers are relatively obscure, the DCs are 5 higher than those given above.

HEROES OF HORROR (3.5)

CORRUPT AVENGER

"I don't care what it does to me, I only care what I can do to them."

—Shovan the Marked, a corrupt avenger

Born to the sword, the corrupt avenger has experienced firsthand the devastation that violence can cause.

He survived, but someone close to him was not so lucky.

War weavers are easy to work into an ongoing battlefield adventures campaign.

A would-be war weaver might unearth the eldritch weaving techniques during training between battles.

Or perhaps an enemy war weaver surrenders rather than fighting to the death, offering to teach a PC the secrets of war weaving in exchange for her life.

Once she has joined the prestige class, that war weaver is ready to add members of her unit to her eldritch tapestry. Over time, the DM should enable a PC war weaver to gain access to enough beneficial spells to allow for multiple clever combinations.

The player of a war weaver will enjoy the class more if she's not casting the same spells into the eldritch tapestry each time.

Encounters in which the PCs can gain an advantage (such as higher ground or cover) if they act quickly make a war weaver feel important.

The other characters can rush headlong toward the objective, confident that the war weaver is already covering them with beneficial spells.

ADAPTATION

It's easy to invent an organization of war weavers—perhaps arcane spellcasters who venerate a god of war.

Such an organization would have two faces: the war weavers who direct affairs and the minions that benefit from the war weavers' spells.

The war weavers might have rank-and-file soldiers at their command, or they might be monster collectors with strange creatures attached to their eldritch tapestries. One potential adaptation deserves a caution.

The war weaver isn't balanced if you simply replace the arcane magic requirement with a divine magic requirement.

Divine spellcasting war weavers can cast cure spells too efficiently for the class to be balanced with respect to clerics who don't partake in the prestige class and other divine healers.

As a result, he has sworn vengeance against whoever or whatever caused his loss, whether it's a specific individual or every representative of a specific kind of monster. He accepts any cost to have his vengeance, even to the forfeit of his very soul.

What does not kill him makes him stronger.

BECOMING A CORRUPT AVENGER

There are few requirements to becoming a corrupt avenger. The class presumes a martial background, but even a high-level wizard or sorcerer can qualify.

The most significant requirement is a considerable degree of corruption—enough that the character has already experienced the downward slide of moral and physical decay.

By swearing an oath of vengeance and pursuing the course of the corrupt avenger, the character can begin turning this flaw to his advantage.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Non-evil Base attack bonus: +6

Taint: Moderate corruption

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Diplomacy, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Listen, Ride, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

Your thirst for vengeance drives you.

Combined with your willing embrace of the taint you acquire in pursuit of your goal, it also powers your abilities, from the fury that fills you when you battle your foes to the spells you cast.

Spellcasting: You have the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a corrupt avenger spell, you must have a corruption score equal to or greater than the spell's level.

Bonus spells are based on a number equal to 10 + your corruption score, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + your Charisma modifier.

When you get 0 spells per day of a given level, you gain only any bonus spells you would be entitled to based on your corruption score.

You prepare and cast spells just as a wizard does; your spell list appears below.

You can also prepare and cast corrupt spells (see page 125). You record your corrupt avenger spells in a spellbook, just as a wizard does.

At 1st level, your spellbook contains two 1st-level spells of your choice, selected from the corrupt avenger spell list on page 90.

At each new corrupt avenger level, you gain two new spells of any spell level or levels that you can cast (based on your new corrupt avenger level) for your spellbook.

At any time, you can also add spells found in other corrupt avengers' spellbooks to your own, and you can also add spells from another character's spellbook (such as a wizard's or a wu jen's book) to your own as long as those spells appear on your class spell list.

Armored Casting: Because the somatic components required for corrupt avenger spells are simple, you can cast corrupt avenger spells while wearing light armor without incurring the normal arcane spell failure chance.

However, wearing medium or heavy armor, or using a shield, imposes the normal chance of spell failure if the spell in question has a somatic component (most do).

Wearing even light armor still imposes the normal arcane spell failure chance for arcane spells derived from other classes.

Detect Sworn Foe (Sp): You have the spell-like ability to detect the presence of your sworn foe.

This ability is similar to the detect evil spell (see page 218 of the Player's Handbook) in range, area, and duration.

In the first round of concentration, you can ascertain the presence of a sworn foe within the area.

In the second round, you can determine the number of foes in the area and the power of the strongest one (as per the detect evil spell).

In the third round, you can determine the strength and location of each foe.

Sworn Foe (Ex): At 1st level, you must choose a specific kind of monster or an organization as your sworn foe.

This cannot be a broad category such as aberrations but must be a single creature type, like bugbears.

You gain a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks relating to your sworn foe.

This bonus increases to +4 at 4th level, to +6 at 7th level, and to +8 at 10th level.

Unlike a ranger's attack against a favored enemy, you do not gain a bonus on damage rolls against your sworn foe. Instead, whenever you face your sworn foe in combat, you enter a ragelike fury.

You gain a +2 bonus to your Strength and Constitution scores.

This fury lasts for a number of rounds equal to your corruption score, or until none of your sworn foes remain within sight (or within 60 feet if they are invisible or otherwise hidden from your sight).

At the conclusion of your fury, you must make a Fortitude save with a DC equal to 15 + 1 per round that you were in your frenzy.

If you fail this save, your corruption score increases by 1.

Taint Suppression: While you are likely to accumulate high corruption and depravity scores over the course of your career, this taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

Your depravity manifests in the normal range of mental symptoms, but you can replace any physical symptom of corruption with the internal corruption symptom.

If you enter a tainted area, your corruption immediately manifests externally, and you regain the physical symptoms you exchanged for internal corruption.

These physical symptoms disappear 1d4 days after you leave a tainted area.

It is otherwise impossible to tell, based on your external appearance, that you carry corruption.

Tainted Strike (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you can infuse a melee attack with the power of your taint, adding 1/2 your class level to the damage you deal with the attack.

If you strike a creature immune to the effects of taint (such as an undead creature or a creature with the evil subtype), the tainted strike has no effect.

You can use this ability once per day at 2nd level, twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

Grim Resolve (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, you gain a bonus equal to your Charisma bonus (if any) on all saving throws.

This benefit does not stack with other effects that allow you to add your Charisma bonus to saves (such as divine grace).

Frightful Fury (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, when you face your sworn foe and enter your fury, all opponents within 30 feet of you must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + your corrupt avenger level + your Cha modifier) or become shaken, taking a -2 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks.

Unnerving Fury (Ex): When you reach 9th level, your fury becomes even more fearsome.

Opponents within 30 feet of you who fail a Will save (DC 10 + your corrupt avenger level + your Cha modifier) become unnerved, taking a -4 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks.

FALLEN PALADINS

All too often in a horror campaign, paladins become so obsessed with their crusade against a particular evil foe that they lose their good alignment.

Perhaps fortunately for them, they can retain some of their powers or replace them with similar abilities by becoming corrupt avengers.

A fallen paladin who becomes a corrupt avenger gains all the following abilities that apply, according to the number of paladin levels the character has.

1–2: Tainted strike 1/day.

(This use is in addition to, and stacks with, the ability granted to all corrupt avengers at 2nd level).

3–4: Lay on hands.

Once per day, you can use this supernatural ability to cure yourself of damage equal to one-half your corruption score + your combined corrupt avenger and paladin levels.

5–6: You gain an additional bonus use of tainted strike.

In addition, your sworn foe bonus increases by +2.

These bonuses stack with bonuses bestowed by corrupt avenger class levels.

7–8: Bonus tainted feat.

Choose any tainted feat from the Feats section starting on page 119.

You must meet the prerequisites for this feat.

9–10: Death knell.

Whenever you use a coup de grace to kill a living creature, you gain the benefit of the death knell spell (see page 217 of the Player's Handbook).

In addition, you gain an additional bonus use of tainted strike per day.

CORRUPT AVENGER SPELL LIST

The corrupt avenger's spell list appears below.

1st Level: *Cause fear, detect magic, detect poison, detect taint, detect undead, doom, endure elements, magic weapon, read magic, resistance

2nd Level: Bear's endurance, bull's strength, darkness, death knell, false life, resist energy, scare, shatter, summon swarm, undetectable alignment, vampiric touch

3rd Level: Bestow curse, deeper darkness, discern lies, dispel magic, fear, greater magic weapon, haste, protection from energy, remove curse, slow, speak with dead

4th Level: *Cloak of hate, *crushing despair, death ward, enervation, Evard's black tentacles, freedom of movement, phantasmal killer, pronouncement of fate

* New spell (see Dread Magic, starting page 125).

PLAYING A CORRUPT AVENGER

A single-minded dedication to exterminating your sworn foe defines your actions and reactions, consumes your thoughts, and haunts your restless sleep.

Most corrupt avengers are grim and dour, but a few manage to keep up a facade of joviality, laughing and drinking in apparent merriment as their calculating eyes remain ever watchful for signs of their enemies.

COMBAT

Particularly when facing your sworn foe, in melee is where you want to be, fighting in a state of fury and making tainted strikes.

Your superior (d12) Hit Dice, as well as the Constitution bonus you gain in your fury, help to make up for the relatively low AC you have when limiting yourself to light armor.

Against opponents other than your sworn foes, or when the situation calls for some discretion, you prefer to hang back and soften up your enemies with spells, at least at first.

Fear-related spells (cause fear, doom, scare, and so on) can help disperse large groups of opponents, while personal improvement spells (bull's strength, bear's endurance, false life, haste, and others) can be worth the investment in time to improve your performance when you enter melee.

By the time you reach the highest levels of the class, your spells can sometimes kill opponents safely from a distance (phantasmal killer), you can perform multiple tainted strikes, and you can seriously hinder your sworn foes merely by entering melee, thanks to your unnerving fury.

ADVANCEMENT

Becoming a corrupt avenger is a fairly straightforward process, with few requirements that involve any decisions on your part.

If you have a high enough base attack bonus, the key requirement is simply allowing your corruption to build up to the moderate level without taking steps to remove it.

Think of this process as letting the anger and grief you feel fester within you, taking a physical toll on your body as it drives you to acts of greater and greater desperation.

As you advance in levels, your grief and rage continue to burn, but you have found a way to channel them into the external world, so that your corruption no longer warps and deforms your body.

Instead, it smites your enemies, manifests itself in debilitating magic, and strikes terror into the hearts of those around you.

Choosing your sworn foe should ideally be a story-driven concern, based on events in your past—either your previous adventures or your background before you began play.

That said, it's important to choose a sworn foe that you are likely to continue fighting over the course of ten levels in this class and beyond.

Don't be afraid to discuss this point with your DM beforehand.

Choosing black puddings might make a great deal of sense from a character perspective, but unless your DM is running a very unusual campaign, black puddings are unlikely to be a worthwhile sworn foe over the long term of your character's development.

Monsters that commonly advance by character class are often a good choice, because they are more likely to make appearances over a long period of time and remain important challenges over the entirety of your career.

RESOURCES

You provide for yourself.

You don't need help from anyone, and wouldn't accept it if they offered it—which they won't.

You always seem to find what you need, or take it if you have to.

Other corrupt avengers don't feel any responsibility to you, nor you to them.

You're on your own.

CORRUPT AVENGERS IN THE WORLD

"Shovan has gone too far—his desire to destroy evil has made him become a thing of evil himself."

—Alhandra

There's a fine line between an antihero and a true villain, especially when the antihero shares the heroes' goals up to a point but employs methods that shock them.

A corrupt avenger's unceasing thirst for vengeance can make him an interesting opponent, one able to arouse the sympathy of the player characters while nonetheless becoming their foe.

This kind of sympathetic villain is a staple of the horror genre and can add depth to a horror campaign.

ORGANIZATION

There is no organization of corrupt avengers, and members of the class tend to operate as loners.

They show no particular regard for one another, unless two corrupt avengers who share the same sworn foe meet and find their purposes compatible (a rare event).

Corrupt avengers are single-minded in pursuit of vengeance against their sworn foes, and this quest for vengeance dictates their lifestyle and day-to-day activities.

An avenger who has sworn vengeance against an evil baron and his agents might not travel much, except to stay on the run from the baron's soldiers, lurking in villages or woodland hideouts within the baron's lands.

On the other hand, an avenger who has sworn vengeance against the githyanki might travel the length and breadth of the infinite planes in a never-ending quest to rid every plane of the vile githyanki.

The corrupt avengers most commonly mentioned in folklore serve as cautionary tales about allowing the thirst for vengeance to become all consuming.

For example, Talib al-Yawis took up the path of the corrupt avenger after his sisters were destroyed by a lich.

His quest to destroy all liches led him at last to seek undeath himself, in order to continue his crusade beyond his mortal body's demise.

NPC REACTIONS

Few people can identify a corrupt avenger from a casual glance or even careful visual examination.

Those who spend time interacting with one seldom leave the conversation with any great liking for this grim, vengeance-obsessed stranger.

When encountering a corrupt avenger, most NPCs start with an indifferent attitude that shifts to unfriendly once they have engaged the character in conversation and experienced his obsessive nature at first hand.

Characters who cling to high ideals of righteousness and seek to purge the taint of corruption wherever they find it are natural opponents of corrupt avengers.

They might have no quarrel with a particular avenger's aims but cannot abide the methods he uses and the price he is willing to pay.

Such characters always include paladins, purifiers of the Hallowed Doctrine (a prestige class described later in this chapter), and often other heroic characters as well.

From the corrupt avenger's viewpoint, these people are relevant only if they hinder him in his mission of revenge—otherwise, their animosity is meaningless.

CORRUPT AVENGER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research corrupt avengers to learn more about them.

DC 10: Some people are so driven by a thirst for vengeance that they embrace evil magic to attain it.

DC 15: A corrupt avenger is someone who has sworn an oath of vengeance and gains powers from it—powers that seem to come from an evil force that festers inside him.

DC 20: Corrupt avengers embrace the taint of evil and use it to power their spells and become more dangerous in combat, particularly against their sworn foes.

Characters with Knowledge (local) or bardic lore can use those abilities to learn about a specific corrupt avenger or one who has sworn vengeance against a local organization or monster.

CORRUPT AVENGERS IN THE GAME

Corrupt avengers, being loners with no elaborate supporting organization, can be dropped into an ongoing campaign with little explanation.

If taint has not previously been a part of your campaign, a corrupt avenger might serve to introduce it.

Perhaps some kind of demonic incursion wiped out a remote village—leaving one survivor, who became a corrupt avenger.

When the PCs stumble upon the site of the razed village, now festering with taint, the survivor might be the first tainted character the PCs meet.

His appearance could familiarize the characters with the mechanics of taint and introduce a horror-based story arc into an ongoing campaign.

If a player character adopts the corrupt avenger class, it is important to help him choose a sworn enemy that will remain an interesting opponent throughout the rest of the campaign (or at least the rest of that character's life).

Once you have helped the player choose an appropriate sworn foe, make sure you include suitable opponents at least once every adventure, to keep the player feeling like he made a worthwhile choice.

Naturally, an NPC corrupt avenger can have a more narrowly focused sworn foe than would be viable for a PC avenger.

In fact, his sworn foe could be the player characters themselves!

ADAPTATION

One great opportunity for customizing the corrupt avenger to your campaign is to think about the oath of vengeance a character must swear to enter the class.

If there is a god of vengeance in your campaign (such as Hoar in the Forgotten Realms, Re-Horakhty in the Pharaonic pantheon presented in Deities and Demigods, or even St. Cuthbert from the core deities), you might require that this oath be sworn in that deity's temple with a cleric of that deity as witness, and the class might gain a certain divine sanction.

If you prefer not to use the taint mechanics in your campaign, you could change the avenger's abilities so that they are powered by the sanction of this divine patron of retribution.

DEATH DELVER

"Many have gazed into the abyss, but how many have the strength to meet its stare when it gazes back at them?"

—Fortenus, Death Delver

The mystery of death and dying is one that occupies the attention of almost every race, regardless of that race's behaviors or beliefs.

The death delver is that rare individual who, rather than fearing and avoiding death, delves as deeply into its mysteries as he can, to better understand and eventually gain some small power over it.

Unlike necromancers and other classes associated with death magic, the focus of a death delver's studies—or, more accurately, his journey—is much more deeply personal. Rather than concentrating on using death and death magic to affect the outside world, a death delver seeks to attune himself to the ebb and flow of death itself, and thereby draw strength from his understanding and indomitable courage in the face of it.

BECOMING A DEATH DELVER

Unlike many prestige classes, the death delver is open and appealing to characters of any prior class; the only common thread is that the individual possess a reflective disposition and a keen interest in death.

The death delver's meditative nature perhaps makes it most appealing to priests, monks, and other philosophically minded individuals, but any character with a genuine passion for the exploration of death and dying is a good candidate for the class.

Wisdom (for spells), Constitution (for facing death without fear), and Charisma (for several class features) are key abilities for death delvers.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Saving Throws: Base Will Save +2

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Heal 2 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks

Special: Must have had at least one near-death experience (fallen below 0 hit points and lived)

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Gather Information, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Profession, Search, Spellcraft, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in level, death delvers gain abilities that aid in understanding or mastering fear and death.

They also gain a limited spellcasting ability, which focuses on similar themes.

Spellcasting: As a death delver, you have the ability to cast a small number of divine spells.

To cast a spell, you must have a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

Death delver bonus spells are based on Wisdom, and saving throws against your spells have a DC of 10 + spell's level + your Wisdom modifier.

When you get 0 spells per day of a given level, you gain only the bonus spells you would be entitled to based upon your Wisdom score.

The death delver spell list appears on page 94.

You have access to any spell on the list and can freely choose which to prepare.

You prepare and cast spells just like a cleric does.

Death delvers must spend 1 hour each night in the contemplation of death to regain their daily allotments of spells.

Time spent resting has no impact on whether death delvers can prepare spells.

Deathsense (Ex): You have the infallible ability to detect the presence and condition of nearby life.

This ability functions as the spell deathwatch (see page 217 of the Player's Handbook) but can be invoked at will, with no cost, as a swift action.

Rebuke Undead: Like an evil cleric, you can rebuke undead.

Use your death delver level as the cleric level for determining success and damage.

You can do this a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Charisma modifier and can take the Extra Turning feat to gain additional turn attempts.

If you already have the ability to rebuke undead from a previous class, death delver levels stack with those class levels for the purposes of rebuking undead.

Deadened Soul (Ex): Upon reaching 2nd level, your understanding of death has progressed to the point where you no longer fear it, nor anything else.

You are immune to fear effects of any kind.

Spontaneous Casting: By 2nd level, your familiarity with the ebb and flow of death has blossomed to the point that, like a cleric, you can lose any prepared spell in order to cast any cure spell of the same level or lower.

An evil death delver can only spontaneously convert prepared spells into inflict spells of equal level or lower.

Neutral death delvers must choose whether they will cast spontaneous cure or inflict spells and can never change their selection once the choice has been made.

Death Ward (Su): At 3rd level, you gain the ability to mystically protect yourself or another from the depredations of death magic and life-draining attacks.

This supernatural ability functions exactly like the spell death ward (see page 217 of the Player's Handbook), save that the duration is 1 hour per death delver level.

Using this ability is a standard action.

You gain an additional use of this ability per day upon reaching 6th level, and again at 9th level.

Diehard: Death delvers of at least 4th level gain the benefit of the Diehard feat (see page 93 of the Player's Handbook), even if they do not meet the prerequisites.

Fear Aura (Su): Starting at 5th level, once per day you can emanate a nearly palpable aura of fear in a 30-foot radius. The effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

Enemies (not allies) within the area must make a Will save (DC 10 + class level + your Cha modifier) or be affected as if by a fear spell (see page 229 of the Player's Handbook).

Cheat Death (Ex): Upon reaching 7th level, your mastery over death and dying has progressed to the point where you can deny a foe the ability to send you into death's embrace in a single, cowardly blow.

Whenever anyone attempts a coup de grace on you, you automatically make the subsequent Fortitude save (see pages 153–154 of the Player's Handbook).

The attacker still deals just as much damage as she normally would, and you could still die from that damage.

Similarly, when you take massive damage (50 or more points of damage from a single attack), you automatically succeed on the Fortitude save to survive the associated trauma (see page 145 of the Player's Handbook), although you can be killed by sheer damage dealt.

Mantle of Life (Su): Beginning at 8th level, you gain the ability to project your own wisdom and confidence into your allies.

As a full-round action, you can send a surge of vitality through all companions within 60 feet.

This surge grants every ally in the area (including yourself) a +4 bonus on Will saves for 1 minute per class level.

Nine Lives (Ex): The pinnacle of achievement for a death delver is the remarkable ability to step back through death's door when forcibly pushed through it.

Upon reaching 10th level, you gain the ability to cheat death nine times—in effect, gaining nine bonus lives.

Every time a single attack, spell, or effect would drop you below –10 hit points or otherwise kill you, you lose one of your nine lives in lieu of taking the effects of whatever would have killed you; instead you drop to –9 hit points but are stable.

Continuing sources of damage, such as being dropped into lava or held under water, will of course burn through a character's nine lives in no time.

Keep track of how many lives you've used, because once they're gone, they're gone.

For example, consider a death delver with seven lives and 11 hit points remaining who is struck by a critical hit that deals 32 points of damage.

Since dropping to –21 hit points would kill him, he automatically loses one of his remaining bonus lives instead and stabilizes at –9 hit points, leaving him with six lives remaining.

Later in the adventure, after he has been fully healed, a dread witch hits him with a disintegrate spell, which would normally reduce him to a pile of dust.

He is once again reduced to –9 hit points and marks off another life (leaving five bonus lives remaining).

He's not having a very good week, but at least he's still around to complain about it.

DEATH DELVER SPELL LIST

Death delvers choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: bleed, cause fear, detect poison, detect undead, hide from undead, lesser restoration, remove fear

2nd Level: bear's endurance, bull's strength, command undead, delay poison, remove paralysis, resist energy, *rigor mortis

3rd Level: animate dead, deep slumber, halt undead, protection from energy, remove blindness/deafness, remove disease, speaking with dead

* New spell described on page 132.

PLAYING A DEATH DELVER

As a death delver, your primary focus is the furtherance of your understanding of death and dying.

While some death delvers are dour and humorless, others understand enough of death to feel they must exult in life, making them agreeable companions.

Your attitude, whether grim or gregarious, stems from a place of wisdom.

Even if you are deeply religious (and quite a few death delvers are), your understanding and experience aren't tied to your deity; they come from years of hard-won personal achievement.

The voyage of the death delver is a personal one; while you might be willing to bring other wisdom-seekers into the fold, each death delver is responsible for finding his or her own path.

Most death delvers are loners by inclination but can work well in parties that give them opportunities to further their ongoing experience.

Many belong to an organization called the Society of the Sacred Shroud.

The Sacred Shroud is a fellowship of like-minded death delvers, dedicated to pooling the knowledge of its members and aiding one another in times of need.

Not every death delver is a member, but almost all have at least heard of the group.

Rumors abound concerning a shadowy arm of the society composed solely of evil death delvers, but such an offshoot would run counter to the mission of the death delvers as a whole, and most death delvers disavow its existence (at least in public).

COMBAT

You make a truly frightful opponent in melee, since you have no fear of death.

You don't rampage like a barbarian but instead display a disturbingly icy demeanor for someone who's wading into mortal combat.

Much of what you do in combat depends on what class you belonged to before adopting the prestige class.

A wizard/death delver tends to hang back and cast spells, because that's the style of combat he has grown to trust.

Likewise, a paladin/death delver still valiantly charges in to the foe, because that's what she's always done.

The difference comes in how the battle progresses and, to a lesser extent, your specific foe.

If you're fighting undead, you'll have an extra set of tools at your disposal, and that will affect how you approach combat.

A rogue/death delver, for example, won't bother positioning for a sneak attack, since undead are immune to critical hits. Rather, he'll probably try rebuking the enemy at the start of combat.

Once you get to 3rd level and acquire the ability to protect yourself or another with a death ward, you no longer need fear the energy-draining attacks of undead and can therefore close with them more safely than other party members.

By this level, you are already capable of converting prepared spells into healing spells, so you can supplement the PCs' healing potential.

If you are the party cleric, make sure your healing keeps every one of your allies on his or her feet over the course of combat.

Starting at 5th level, you have the ability to generate a powerful fear effect in all enemies within 30 feet.

Unless you specifically want to avoid sending away your opponents, scattering your enemies is a good way to start a combat.

By 7th or 8th level, you have access to more potent magic and can start using spells such as deep slumber and enervation against your party's foes.

ADVANCEMENT

The death delver is largely an intuitive class, which is to say that most characters come to it without the aid of others. Perhaps you learned of the death delvers and sought out one to whom you could apprentice yourself.

Or perhaps agents of the Sacred Shroud heard of an especially promising candidate and sought you out with an invitation to join their society.

However you came to the way of the shroud, by the time you take your first level in the prestige class you have become far more than just an eager mind: You are an explorer of an undiscovered country.

Only truly dedicated seekers ever find their way onto the path of the death delver.

Before you were even eligible to begin studying its ways, you gained a familiarity with life and death that few achieve (or want) over the course of their entire lives.

It takes tremendous willpower to face death and not turn away when its true face begins to emerge from the darkness, and only those with enough depth and strength of character find it within themselves to take that important first step.

In addition, you must have a certain degree of practical, real-world experience with death and dying, experience rarely learned in a cloistered classroom or monastery.

Last, and perhaps most important, you must have experienced the cold hand of death yourself before you are ready to become a death delver.

This is the point where many fail to qualify, balking when their own mortality is on the line.

Once you have become a death delver, your studies have only just begun.

As you gain more levels in the death delver prestige class, you'll want to keep raising your Knowledge skill ranks—not only is the acquisition of wisdom and understanding an essential part of the class's core concept, but understanding a foe is the key to defeating it.

RESOURCES

Perhaps the best resource the Sacred Shroud provides to its members is the knowledge that you are not alone.

You walk the path of the death delver at your own pace, but guidance and support can strengthen your will to proceed. Your vocation can be a grim and even mind-addling pursuit, and a community of likeminded fellows can be a vital support network in times of doubt or need.

Beyond that, you are pledged to provide what aid you can to other death delvers, so long as it does not take you from your own path, so that they can learn and grow in the knowledge of death.

You must always give healing to a fellow death delver, unless he refuses to accept aid or was hurt in attacking another death delver.

Although each death delver studies death in his own way, two items are common to every member of the class.

The first is the book in which you record your observations, insights, questions, and conclusions.

A death delver's journal is called a testament, and all such testaments are written in first person declarative.

Another item carried by almost every death delver is a simple hourglass, which you use to time the meditations that replenish your daily spells.

The hourglass is the symbol of the Sacred Shroud.

DEATH DELVERS IN THE WORLD

"Power is both our legacy and destiny, our past and our future. This is the promise of the Testament of Volculos."

—Zousha of Telos, journeyman of the Sacred Shroud
Even if your game doesn't revolve around horror or the macabre, death delvers make a great addition to any game world.

Every campaign setting has death (usually in spades), and wherever there is death there can be death delvers.

Due to their policy of dynamic exploration, death delvers travel everywhere in order to gain a ringside seat for the events they wish to study.

Got a major land war brewing between rival city-states?

Death delvers will certainly be drawn to the area to study the impending carnage.

Need a hired killer who doesn't fit the standard mold?

Consider an evil death delver or, more sinister and deadly yet, a death delver/assassin.

If the PCs get involved with plots that are even tangentially related to the interests of the Sacred Shroud, they are sure to cross paths with a death delver eventually.

ORGANIZATION

When a death delver isn't out exploring with an adventuring party, he is almost always either meditating on the lessons learned from his last mission or out on his current mission for the Sacred Shroud.

When the society does send its own on assignments, it sends them solo, in a pair, or in a trio.

The organization lacks the numbers or inclination to send more than three of its members out together for the same purpose, and even a group of three death delvers represents a hefty deployment of resources, reserved for only the most important tasks.

While the society maintains various bases of operation throughout the land, each has more in common with a lodge or temple's guest hall than a permanent dwelling.

By founding charter, the Sacred Shroud is a nondenominational organization, and members keep whatever faith they might have separate from their work and their dealings with fellow society members.

Although chapter houses differ slightly in methodology and appearance from one region to another, each one is headed by a ferryman (see below), who is responsible for coordinating member efforts in his region. Below the ferryman is a loose hierarchy based primarily on experience, although some of the elder, more learned death delvers prefer to stay out in the field and leave administrative work to their younger and more community-minded fellows.

Active membership in the Sacred Shroud begins with a period of apprenticeship known as the caul.

Members of this rank wear a translucent shroud when meeting senior death delvers.

Once a death delver reaches 3rd level, his caul is ceremonially removed by the ranking death delver of the Shroud in his region and replaced by the deep purple shroud that signifies Shroud members the world over.

At this point, the death delver holds the rank of journeyman in the society.

Upon passing 6th level in the class, he returns his purple shroud to the death delver who presided over the ceremony in which he acquired it (if possible) and receives in exchange a black shroud with delicate silver cross-stitching.

Death delvers of this level are known as ferrymen and make up the inner circle of the society.

It is believed that death delvers who acquire the last level in this prestige class are exalted to some final rank, but nobody who is not of that innermost circle knows what title or privilege goes along with this exaltation.

Perhaps the most famous of all death delvers was the co-founder of the Sacred Shroud, an inscrutable man by the name of Volculos.

According to legend, Volculos was a high priest who suddenly renounced both his faith and his god after a lifetime of service.

Nobody knows what spurred this drastic change, but shortly after leaving the priesthood he co-founded the Society of the Sacred Shroud with two other theathanatological scholars.

After twelve years of building and expanding the organization—long enough for the brightest of the first crop of death delvers to advance to ferryman status—Volculos vanished from his chapter house without a trace. Even the best scholars of his own society were at a loss to explain where he'd gone.

According to legend, even their strongest divinations showed only empty pools of blackness.

NPC REACTIONS

To say that death delvers can expect a wide variety of reactions from NPCs is an understatement.

The death delvers' obsession with death and dying strikes many NPCs as bordering on the macabre, and there are many who would sooner listen to cats singing than spend an evening in the company of a death delver.

Others value the healing skills for which death delvers are known and appreciate having them around for obvious and practical reasons.

A few priesthoods disapprove of the Sacred Shroud's mission and thus respond negatively to the presence of a death delver.

For the most part, unless a given NPC has had prior interactions with a death delver, she will likely react to one in whatever manner befits the context of their first meeting.

For the archetypically grim death delver, this can result in an indifferent reaction; those who make an attempt at winning people over usually find their efforts rewarded with the other responding in kind.

Death delvers are generally friendly to one another once identities have been mutually revealed.

Sometimes a death delver has a standing order to pass along certain information or a certain request on behalf of the Sacred Shroud.

On these occasions, the death delver receiving the message is expected to take the information or do his best to accommodate whatever request was made, even if he must leave his party or otherwise inconvenience them in order to do so.

DEATH DELVER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) or bardic knowledge can research the death delvers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a successful skill check, read or paraphrase the following information.

DC 10: Rumor tells of a secret society devoted to exploring the mysteries of death.

DC 15: Some death-obsessed truth-seekers, called death delvers, have powers that rival those of necromancers.

DC 20: Death delvers gather in a society called the Sacred Shroud, which has members scattered all over creation.

DC 30: According to legend, one of the founders of the Sacred Shroud—a man named Volculos—was a former priest who renounced his god in favor of the death delver way.

One night, he vanished without trace.

Any spellcaster who witnesses a death delver casting a spell can make a DC 20 Spellcraft check to notice that, even though the source of the magic seems to be divine, it lacks the stamp of any particular deity.

Likewise, those with Knowledge (religion) can make a DC 25 skill check to notice that a death delver's magical trappings do not correspond to that of any known deity. (Even clerical death delvers reveal the nature of their magic when casting death delver spells).

DEATH DELVERS IN THE GAME

The death delver prestige class appeals to players who want unusual or untraditional paths for their characters.

The fact that the death delver is not especially rooted in any one or two of the core classes is a testament to its versatility, and it remains an interesting option for those whose characters led complex or unorthodox lives at lower levels.

Almost every party can benefit from the inclusion of a death delver, because the class is designed to complement whatever core class preceded it, rather than extend or replace it.

ADAPTATION

The death delver was designed for horror campaigns but doesn't require any of the new systems or mechanics introduced in this book and can be dropped into just about any campaign world.

Want to run a game without corruption and depravity? No problem—the death delver's focus has nothing whatever to do with taint.

In the event that your campaign world can't accommodate the notion of a divine caster with no specific divine patron, simply make the Sacred Shroud an organization within or an offshoot of the priesthood of whatever god of death exists in the setting.

DREAD WITCH

“Fear cuts more deeply than any sword, consumes more completely than any spell.

It rages like a conflagration, burning away the flesh of the weak, burning the weakness out of the strong.

Fear is power, and that power is mine.”

—Illyra Zorren, dread witch, to her first apprentice

The dread witch is a spellcaster who manipulates fear as readily and effectively as other casters manipulate magic itself.

Drawing power from her own fear, she can cause even the brave to run screaming into the night or drop to their knees and beg for mercy.

A dread witch is at her most dangerous when cornered and overpowered; at high levels dread witches are among the most terrifying of opponents—literally.

BECOMING A DREAD WITCH

The path of the bard or sorcerer is the most efficient way to become a dread witch.

Most dread witches are innate spellcasters, and their various abilities based on force of personality (that is, Charisma) make such spellcasters more efficient.

Wizards can become dread witches as well, with the proper course of study, but it doesn't come to them quite as easily. Charisma is the primary requirement, in order to make the most efficient use of her class features.

Intelligence is useful for skill points (and for spells, if she is a wizard).

As always, Constitution grants hit points, the better to survive frightening circumstances.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Saving Throws: Base Will save +4

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 3 ranks

Spellcasting: Ability to cast cause fear and scare

Special: Must have suffered at least one fear effect against which she failed her save

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, and Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Dread witches sacrifice a level of spellcasting advancement in order to gain immense power over fear itself—both their own and that of others.

Spellcasting: At every dread witch level except 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class you belonged to before you added the prestige class.

You do not, however, gain any other class benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a dread witch, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Master of Terror (Ex): Your fear-based spells become more potent.

The save DC of any spell you cast with the fear descriptor increases by 1.

This bonus stacks with Spell Focus.

Furthermore, add the spells bane and doom to your arcane spellcaster list as 2nd-level spells.

In addition, you become adept at making people uneasy with the right word, expression, or gesture.

You gain a bonus to all Intimidate skill checks equal to +2 per class level.

Unnatural Will (Ex): You gain Unnatural Will (see page 124) as a bonus feat, even if you do not meet the prerequisites.

Absorb Fear (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can turn your own fear, whether natural or mystical in origin, into extra power for your spells.

(See Dread on page 59 for more on nonmagical fear).

Any time you are exposed to a condition that could make you shaken, all your spells function at +1 caster level; if the condition could make you frightened, they function at +2 caster level; if panicked, they function at +3 caster level.

These bonuses last for the duration of the fear effect, or for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier, whichever is less.

(Of course, if you fail your saving throw against the condition, you might not be in a position to use the bonuses, but you do have them).

These bonuses are treated in all ways as though you had failed the save.

In other words, if you are subject to a spell that causes panic on a failed save but only frightens those who make the save, you gain the bonus from being panicked even if you make the save.

You can, instead of gaining these bonuses, choose to cast a single extra spell; this casting does not use up a spell slot. You must make this choice the instant you are subject to the fear effect, and once you have made your choice you must cast the spell within a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier.

You can cast an additional cantrip if shaken, an additional 1st-level spell if frightened, or an additional 2nd-level spell if panicked.

If you are subject to a second fear effect while still enjoying the effects of the first—either the granted benefits or holding the extra spell—you must decide whether to keep the original effect or replace it with the new one; you cannot benefit from more than one fear effect at a time. Fearful Empowerment (Su): Starting at 3rd level, once per day you can add the fear descriptor to any spell you cast that has some sort of visual manifestation.

For example, you could apply it to a fireball, to a summon monster spell, or to any visual illusion, but not to charm person, since that spell does not directly create any visual effect.

Creatures targeted by a spell modified by fearful empowerment must make a Will save (DC equal to 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) or become shaken for 1d4 rounds; this is in addition to any other effects the spell might have.

Your save DC bonuses from master of terror apply to this spell.

At 5th level, you can invoke this power twice per day.

Delay Fear (Su): Starting at 4th level, you can choose to delay the onset of any fear effect you impose on someone else, such as by casting a cause fear spell.

You can delay the onset up to a number of minutes equal to your Charisma modifier.

You must determine the onset time when casting the spell, and you cannot later change your mind.

Similarly, you can delay fear effects affecting you.

If you fail your save against a fear effect, you can delay its onset for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier.

You still gain the advantages granted by the absorb fear class feature, even though you are delaying the negative effects.

You can invoke this version of delay fear twice per day.

Greater Master of Terror (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, the increased difficulty of all save DCs against all spells you cast with the fear descriptor increases from +1 to +2.

In addition, your fear spells are now so potent that they can even affect individuals normally immune to fear, such as paladins, although the subject still gains a saving throw to resist the spell's effect.

Only a target whose HD exceed your caster level by 4 or more is immune to your mastery of terror.

For instance, if you are a sorcerer 7/dread witch 4 (overall caster level 10), a paladin of 14th level or higher is immune to your fear spells.

Horrorific Aura (Su): At 5th level, you radiate an aura of terror.

Creatures with 6 or fewer HD must succeed in a Will save (DC equal to 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) or remain shaken as long as they are within 10 feet of you.

A creature who successfully saves is immune to your horrific aura for 24 hours.

Creatures of greater than 6 HD are unaffected.

Once per day per point of Charisma modifier, you can channel this aura into a potent touch attack.

Creatures struck by this horrific touch attack who fail their Will save (see above) are panicked for 1d4+1 rounds; creatures who succeed on their save are shaken for 1 round. This touch attack, unlike the standard aura, functions against creatures of any HD and can even affect individuals normally immune to fear.

Reflective Fear (Su): At 5th level, any fear effect against which you successfully save is immediately targeted back at the source.

You still gain the benefits of absorb fear.

If the source of the fear effect fails its save, everyone else who might have been subject to the fear effect (such as your companions) immediately gains a second saving throw to shake off the effects, as they observe the object of their fear itself grow terrified.

PLAYING A DREAD WITCH

You are a practitioner of the occult arts who truly believes that fear is the most potent of all emotions.

Controlling your fear enables you to more effectively channel your spells.

Fear gives you strength and focuses your mind in a way that nothing else can.

You actively seek out dangerous experiences, for only through dread can you forge your mind and soul into the keenest of weapons.

You are neither foolhardy nor suicidal; you just recognize that overcoming danger is the most direct path to knowledge and power.

You probably give your companions the creeps, since you consider fear just another tool or experience and are frankly not bothered by sights and events that other people consider disturbing in the extreme.

(Or at least, you try to appear unbothered).

Dread witches have no organization or guild to speak of.

Each practitioner follows a tradition with its own line of descent, as masters pass their secrets and techniques on to apprentices.

Dread witches recognize one another as fellow students of a demanding discipline but other wise feel no strong connection with other members of the prestige class.

Sorcerers and bards who stumble upon the secrets of fear magic do not share any sense of camaraderie; dread witches who once were wizards, and who must deliberately choose to embark upon this path, sometimes feel a stronger bond.

COMBAT

Dread witches make use of the same general combat tactics as most arcane casters—that is, stay back from melee and use your spells to either destroy opponents or enhance your companions' abilities.

As you gain power as a dread witch, however, you acquire options that standard casters do not possess.

By exposing yourself to danger, you make yourself more powerful, all the while letting your enemy believe he has the upper hand before you suddenly turn the tables.

Combining standard offensive spells with fear effects enables you to drive dangerous foes away from your companions or possibly maneuver your foes into an ambush.

At higher levels, you can protect your allies from fear effects and sow chaos in enemy ranks by striking them with delayed fear effects.

With a sufficiently long delay time, the enemy might be completely ignorant of the source of their terror, failing to associate it with you and your companions.

This strategy can ruin any sort of coordination or tactics they might attempt, leaving them open to counterattack and other disruptions.

In addition, your various fear effects are useful as interrogation techniques, especially considering your hefty bonuses to Intimidate checks.

ADVANCEMENT

Since dread witches have no formal organization, no true recruitment occurs.

Spontaneous arcane casters such as bards and sorcerers discover they have an aptitude for fear spells, and either advance on their own through trial and error or seek out individual dread witches from whom they can learn. In the case of wizards, an apprentice might discover that her master studies an odd discipline of magic, or she might read of dread witches and seek one out to learn his secrets, or she might come across an old spellbook left behind by a dread witch.

In the case of an apprenticeship, it is the elder dread witch who decides whether an applicant is worthy, and she can set whatever conditions she chooses.

Training as a dread witch is much like advancement in any other arcane class, save that the student is inevitably exposed to more dangerous situations, illusions, and fear effects, the better to familiarize her with her own fear and enable her to control it.

RESOURCES

Other than the arcane versions of bane and doom, which wizard-based dread witches can only learn from other dread witches, there is nothing for which you must go to another dread witch.

DREAD WITCHES IN THE WORLD

“Creepy as an undead spider, powerful as all Hells—and crazy bastards, the whole lot of ‘em.”

Only thing scarier than facing a dread witch across a battlefield is having one fighting beside you.”

—Tolliver Withers, former adventurer, now sheriff of the halfling community of Fairnuff

The dread witch is a viable addition to any setting but is particularly appropriate to a horror campaign.

Dread witches are a logical result of spellcasters dwelling in a world of great danger and fear, and they represent an occult and scholastic effort at not only controlling that fear but harnessing its emotional energies.

If your campaign involves horrors from other worlds, such as the strange alien entities of the Far Realm, the fear magic of the dread witch might be tied into those forces.

Alternatively, it might bear some relation to psionic studies, or to the arts practiced by fearsome and emotion-manipulating creatures such as mind flayers or the quori.

For players, this prestige class provides an opportunity to take advantage of the fear their characters experience, using it to empower a character and become a bogeyman to the monsters rather than the other way around, without weakening the mood of the game itself.

No universal organization of dread witches exists, though many individuals believe one does.

This belief stems from the mysterious persona of many dread witches, the knowledge and abilities dread witches share, and superstition, which attributes guilds or cabals to many powerful casters.

Common folk often treat dread witches accordingly, assuming that each knows of (and supports) the activities of her fellows and has met them all personally.

Occasionally, some ambitious dread witch has attempted to take the various solitary practitioners and masters of this difficult discipline and forge them into a true organization. Every effort to date has failed; dread witches seem little disposed to band together.

Given the difficult situations required to advance their mastery of the craft, most dread witches prefer to travel and practice with companions of varied skills.

Furthermore, although the techniques of the dread witch differ from those of other spellcasters, the majority of their spells do not, making it unnecessary for most dread witches to spend much time in the company of their fellows.

Still, some continue to try to build an organization.

The famed dread witch archmage Illyra Zorren, acknowledged in arcane circles as one of the most potent masters of dread magic alive, is the latest to attempt to unify this widespread and scattered discipline.

She has trained half a dozen apprentices in the course of her long life, and each of them is devoutly loyal to Zorren herself and to her dream of a united organization of dread witches.

Combined with a few others who have sporadically joined her over the years, Zorren leads a cabal of slightly over a dozen members.

Though hardly a true guild, this does represent the largest known assemblage of dread witches.

Zorren, now quite aged, is rumored to be seeking the ritual for lichdom so that she can continue building her society.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people know nothing of the difference between dread witches and standard arcane casters.

Such folk react to the dread witch no differently than they would to any other spellcasting character, although they might feel uneasy in her presence for reasons they cannot define.

Those who know of dread witches, however, tend to regard them with no small amount of suspicion and—appropriately enough—fear.

Not only do dread witches study a strange school of magic, they deliberately toy with the emotions of others.

They invoke terror and chaos with their magic and draw power from experiences that would set others to huddling in the corner.

Many of these people assume dread witches are evil, or at least uncaring and manipulative, and react accordingly.

The average individual who knows of dread witches but has no reason to disbelieve the public perception begins any interaction with a known dread witch as one step less friendly than normal.

(For instance, someone who is normally indifferent to strangers would instead be unfriendly).

Such individuals never begin interaction with an attitude better than indifferent.

Many normal wizards and sorcerers distrust dread witches due to their strange methods of manipulating magic.

Certain monsters that have abilities to cause fear or otherwise manipulate emotions consider dread witches to be serious threats, and either avoid them or hunt them down.

DREAD WITCH LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research dread witches to learn more about them.

DC 10: The dread witch is an arcane caster who focuses on the manipulation of fear.

DC 15: The dread witch is not only skilled at causing terror in others, her own power increases when she's frightened.

DC 20: The dread witch can evoke fear in others through apparently mundane spells, or cause someone to grow suddenly terrified long after she's cursed him.

The more dangerous the situation in which she finds herself, the more potent her magic becomes.

Alternatively, similar information might be learned through bardic knowledge checks, or Gather Information checks made in wizards guilds or high-magic communities.

DREAD WITCHES IN THE GAME

It's not difficult to work a dread witch into an ongoing campaign.

Their numbers are few, they are largely scattered, and their techniques do not appear, on casual inspection, to be all that different from those of other arcane casters.

It's entirely possible that dread witches have always existed, part of an ancient tradition, and the PCs have simply never encountered them before.

Alternatively, the study of terror magic might be a new art, perhaps introduced by research wizards in response to the appearance of taint in the campaign world or by a sorcerer who found she had spontaneously developed defenses against fear effects.

Dread witches are most useful when the PCs frequently engage in combat with large numbers of slightly weaker opponents (rendering the dread witch's fear effects most potent) or when the PCs face challenges slightly above their normal range (rendering the dread witch's spells more powerful).

Be certain to include a reasonable number of such encounters, or battles against fear-causing creatures, to give the dread witch the chance to shine.

ADAPTATION

Dread witches excel in campaigns that make use of the various fear and dread rules presented in Chapter 4.

In games that do not use those rules, the class becomes a bit less effective because less fear means fewer fear effects to empower her class abilities.

In these circumstances, the DM might consider creating more situations that invoke the dread witch's fear abilities or allowing the empowerment to last for longer periods.

FIEND-BLOODED

"The power that flows through my veins was born of the Pit, but that power—like my soul—is my own to command."

—Ariana Crattus, daughter of the Marquis Teresius Crattus of the House of Crattus

Every now and then, a fiend or half-fiend will find its way to the lands of the humanoid races and, in the guise of a mortal man or woman (or, in especially rare and gruesome cases, not), take a native mortal for its lover.

Generations later, the mortal descendants of such a union occasionally display a natural talent for the arcane arts.

Those who pursue magical study in earnest begin to feel a calling from deep within their flesh, whispering of the hidden power of their fiendish heritage.

With careful exploration, such a spellcaster can slowly bring the power of that lineage to the surface, shaping it to his own purposes—to focus and empower his own magical advancement.

BECOMING A FIEND-BLOODED

Clearly, the sorcerer is the shortest path to becoming one of the fiend-blooded, but bards can also qualify with ease.

Both have Concentration and Knowledge (arcana) as class skills, and both can meet the spellcasting requirements before 6th level.

Charisma (for spellcasting and dealing with those who look askance at permitting characters with fiendish heritage in their midst) and Intelligence (for the skills required) are the key abilities for a potential fiend-blooded.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Any humanoid race (cannot already be a half-fiend)

Alignment: Any nongood alignment

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks

Feats: Blood Calls to Blood*, Eschew Materials

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells without preparation

* New feat described on page 120.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Intimidation, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), and Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

The fiend-blooded bring aspects of their fiendish forebear to the surface as they advance in levels in this class.

This sinister heritage gives them strength in specific areas and lends their spellcasting a decidedly fiendish edge.

Spellcasting: At each new fiend-blooded level except for 10th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adopting the prestige class.

You do not gain any other class benefit a member of that class would normally gain, except that your fiend-blooded levels also stack with any other arcane spellcaster levels for the purpose of determining familiar abilities.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a fiend-blooded, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Fiendish Companion: Your familiar benefits from your fiendish heritage.

The fiendish template (described on page 108 of the Monster Manual) can be applied to your familiar, if you so desire.

Since this is not possession but rather a sympathetic link, the familiar's alignment need not shift to evil.

Fiendish Heritage (Ex): You draw strength from your fiendish ancestor's essence as you gain increased mastery over your lineage.

At 1st level, a subtle toughening of your physical form grants you a +1 natural armor bonus to AC.

At 3rd level, you gain a +1 boost to your Charisma score.

At 5th level, you gain a +1 boost to your Intelligence score.

At 7th level, you gain a +1 boost to your Dexterity score.

At 9th level, you gain a +1 boost to your Constitution score.

Fiendish Sorcery: You gain insight into the power of your fiendish heritage, and this insight strengthens your spellcasting prowess.

At 2nd level, and again at 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th level, add one additional spell to your spells known list.

Each new spell must be of a level that you can cast but can be any spell having the fire descriptor or any spell from the schools of enchantment, illusion, or necromancy.

Thus, you could add fireball (a fire spell) or speak with dead (a necromancy spell) to your 3rd-level spells known (even though you are an arcane caster and speak with dead is normally a divine spell), but not lightning bolt (which neither carries the fire descriptor nor belongs to one of the three specified schools).

Blood of Fiends (Ex): Upon reaching 3rd level, you gain a +1 bonus on saves against poison.

You also reduce any damage taken from poison (whether hit point or ability damage) by 1 point.

Starting at 6th level, your fiendish essence grants you resistance to cold and fire 5.

Upon reaching 9th level, you have unlocked much of the power of your fiendish lineage, gaining resistance to acid and electricity 5.

Smiting Spell (Su): If you are a fiend-blooded of at least 4th level, you can as a free action, once per day, invest a portion of your fiendish power into any damaging spell you cast. The resulting spell will deal an additional number of hit points of damage equal to your fiend-blooded class level + Charisma modifier to all within the spell's area.

Starting at 8th level, you can use smiting spell twice per day.

Fiendish Exaltation (Ex): At 10th level, you unlock the final secrets buried within your lineage.

In addition to the ability boosts you gained from your fiendish heritage, you now gain an additional +1 to Dexterity, Constitution, and Intelligence, and +2 to Strength.

You also gain complete immunity to poison, and damage reduction 10/magic.

PLAYING A FIEND-BLOODED

Due to your fiendish lineage, and the questions such lineage inevitably raises, you have gotten used to playing your cards close to your chest.

Even if good-aligned, you know the price you might have to pay for someone else's ignorance and often find discretion the better part of valor.

You are not antisocial—far from it!—but you opt to be guarded in choosing with whom you interact and why.

Most of the time, it pays to play up the reputation of sorcerers and bards as chaotic and unusual individuals, the better to deflect otherwise dangerous suspicions from you and your activities.

Most members of this prestige class are solitary individuals, each as unique as your own unusual heritage would suggest.

You might never meet another fiend-blooded over the course of your adventuring career and, if you do, you might not realize it.

The exception lies in a fiend-blooded house, whose members tend to bear a family resemblance (see sidebar).

Good-aligned characters born into a fiend-blooded house typically distance themselves from their depraved kin.

Membership in such a family is a two-edged sword; those seeking to curry favor with your family might flatter or aid you, whereas those repulsed by your family's deeds might automatically be hostile.

If you belong to such a house, you have learned to suspect the motives of everyone you meet.

You find it hard to judge others on the basis of their behavior and not their ancestry.

COMBAT

Your fiendish heritage makes you a powerful spellcaster, proficient with a variety of deceptive and damaging spells.

Complementing this magical prowess is a physical capability beyond that of the average cloistered mage.

This is not to say that you should join the fighters on the front line, but the small edge you have might be enough to get the better of a startled opponent.

Thanks to the fiendish blood in your veins, you become resistant to poison and certain energy forms as you advance in levels, and you can put this ability to good use.

For example, you could comfortably grapple an opponent who was on fire, or run through a snowstorm with little fear of hypothermia.

Once you have become a high-level fiend-blooded, you are a devastating opponent.

Your spell selection is slightly larger than that of many spontaneous spellcasters, and you are capable of dealing extra damage once or twice per day by means of your smiting spell ability.

By 10th level, the damage reduction you have acquired means you can stand toe to toe with opponents who lack magical weapons.

ADVANCEMENT

When you began your training in the arcane arts, you felt an inmost tug, as of some secret voice within whispering messages of hidden power.

Once you had grasped enough of magic to realize what that secret voice signified, you made the willing choice to explore the nature of your calling, and in so doing embarked upon the path of the fiend-blooded.

As you advance in levels in the prestige class, you unlock more and more of the potential hidden within you.

You must either embrace your fiendish heritage—body and soul—as traits of your fiendish ancestor develop in both your physical form and your magic, or you must focus all your will to keep your independence as the negative aspects threaten to take control.

No outside force is necessary for your advancement, and indeed such a force would only complicate your extremely personal quest of self-transformation.

Few fiend-blooded abandon this path after having set foot on it, for the lure of self-discovery is great.

Nevertheless, some good-aligned fiend-blooded grow uncomfortable with the ways in which they are changing and choose to stop advancing in the class at some point.

For most, however, the notion of abandoning the class before reaching the highest possible level is a ludicrous one.

Members of fiend-blooded houses are particularly unlikely to abandon the prestige class, for advancement and opportunity within the family are inexorably linked with a house member's progress in the class.

RESOURCES

It's wisest to expect little in the way of aid from your fellow fiend-blooded.

Among solitary members of the prestige class, the discovery of a fellow fiend-blooded is more often an invitation to murder a potential rival as quickly as possible than to extend a helping hand.

If you are a member of a fiend-blooded house, you can expect to receive considerable aid, in the form of monetary endowments, training in new skills and spells, or inside information, so long as you stay in good standing with the head of the house.

Unfortunately, maintaining that status requires you to carry out all manner of unsavory tasks for the head of the house, from assassinations and murders to pinning various dire or disgusting crimes on those who stand in the way of the house's activities.

FIEND-BLOODED IN THE WORLD

"Oh, Ariana's a blast...literally.

If you want to see what I mean, just ask her about her daddy."

—Quip of Sigil, long-time adventuring and drinking companion

Given the prevalence of demons and devils in most campaign worlds, the existence of the fiend-blooded is easy to accept, requiring little explanation on introducing the class into your game.

Since the fiend-blooded appear much the same as ordinary sorcerers or bards, they could have existed in the campaign all along, although they might now be stepping up their activity.

In addition to making excellent, three-dimensional player characters, the fiend-blooded make terrific villains.

Any local noble family or great merchant house could turn out to be a family of the fiend-blooded, bent on directing all the money and power in an area into their own hands.

ORGANIZATION

The fiend-blooded are either loners or members of fiend-blooded houses.

The head of a given house is known by whatever term is common to the facade the house employs.

Among the more common male titles are Baron, Count, Duke, Guildmaster, Lord, Master, Majordomo, and Marquis, with female titles being more or less equivalent (Baroness, Countess, Duchess, and so forth).

Whatever he or she is called, the head of the house is the undisputed patriarch (or matriarch) of the family.

He alone communes with the house's fiendish patron, on whatever plane of existence it might reside, and he alone directs the fortunes of the house as a whole.

The role of patriarch only passes to another upon the death of the former patriarch, so the plotting and scheming in a house is intense and unending.

Much of a given house's daily operation depends on the lineage of its founder.

Houses with a demonic patron bear an echo of that fiend's chaotic sensibilities and can best be described as states of controlled anarchy.

Conversely, houses with infernal patrons tend to be much more ordered and hierarchical, with complex systems of rank among family members based on an interaction between seniority and achievement.

Regardless of patron, fiend-blooded house members are expected to follow the dictates of their patriarchs—though the fiend-blooded, like their namesakes, are notorious for their capacity to pervert the spirit of an order while preserving the letter of the command.

Some houses, especially merchant houses, are largely merit-based.

In these houses, advancement goes to those who achieve the most or do the most to help the house prosper.

The fiend-blooded on the whole respect both ambition and strength of will; the surest way for a character to advance in the ranks of a fiend-blooded house is to unlock his own potential and prove to both the patriarch and fellow house members that he is worthy of status within the family.

After house loyalty, personal accomplishment is the surest path to glory.

Developing new spells, defeating rivals in such a way as to emerge unscathed from the final battle, or pulling off a spectacular act of treachery are all much admired.

NPC REACTIONS

Luckily for them, the fiend-blooded are not easy to detect on sight.

They strive to blend in, and the most adept and long-lived among them are accomplished at avoiding unwanted attention.

Average villagers or townsfolk will be hostile to anyone they know to be descended from a demon or devil, and with good reason, although they might fear to do anything overtly aggressive toward such a character.

The rare occasion when a fiend-blooded stands revealed as a descendant of fiends serves to reinforce common suspicions of sorcerers and other spontaneous arcane casters.

The fiend-blooded must endure the ignorance and prejudice of most humanoids, who assume that those descended from an Outer Planar being will be predisposed to think and behave like their ancestor.

In the face of this attitude, the fiend-blooded feel compelled to conceal their true nature.

The fiend-blooded often sympathize with half-elves and other persons of mixed heritage, particularly when those of mixed blood undergo abuse at the hands of the so-called pure-blooded members of other races.

It is an ironic fact that the greatest enemies challenging a member of a fiend-blooded house are his or her fellow fiend-blooded, who stand to benefit directly from a rival's falling in disgrace.

FIEND-BLOODED LORE

Characters with Knowledge (the planes) or bardic lore can research the fiend-blooded to learn more about them.

DC 10: Occasionally, fiends will come to the material plane and mate with humanoid partners.

DC 15: The sorcerously inclined descendants of such a union sometimes display fiendish qualities.

DC 20: The fiend-blooded are not fiends themselves, but mortals of great will who voluntarily explore their fiendish ancestry.

In so doing, they can draw great power from it.

DC 30: Marquis Teresius Crattus is one of the most powerful cambions, and his house grows strong despite the sheer willfulness of his only daughter, Ariana, and her cohorts.

Any spellcaster who witnesses a fiend-blooded's smiting spell in action can attempt a DC 20 Spellcraft check to discern that the character is more than likely one of the mysterious fiend-blooded.

Anyone who otherwise witnesses something fiendish about the fiend-blooded can attempt a DC 25 Knowledge (the planes) or DC 30 Knowledge (arcana) check to gain the same knowledge.

FIEND-BLOODED IN THE GAME

Because they have no outward signifiers, it's easy to add fiend-blooded to an ongoing game: they've been there all along, hiding among the sorcerers and bards of the world. This prestige class appeals to players who enjoy a rich backstory for their characters, or for whom a great part of the appeal of the sorcerer lies in the mysterious source of his power.

If you have a fiend-blooded in your game, make sure he has the opportunity to experience both the ups and downs of the class.

A player entering this prestige class is an invitation to the DM to work that character's fiendish ancestor into the game, whether directly or indirectly.

Perhaps the character eventually meets his ancestor, or is even forced to destroy his own progenitor.

Make sure to keep the threat of discovery ever present: Most humanoid will react poorly to the news that they have a fiend-blooded in their midst.

ADAPTATION

The fiend-blooded is designed for campaigns that feature Outer Planar creatures and their schemes.

The class assumes a Material Plane default, where the presence of the fiendish must be kept secret, but campaigns set on other planes or in the City of Doors would change that default considerably.

In such places, the fiend-blooded are much more commonplace and might even be able to live openly.

In settings where fiends never visit the Material Plane, substitute some other powerful, otherworldly creature—or, better yet, find an exciting way to rationalize the existence of a mortal with a fiendish ancestor.

FIEND-BLOODED HOUSES

A house is formed when a fiend-blooded discovers the identity of his fiendish ancestor and then successfully establishes contact with that fiend (or, less frequently, another fiend). He then pledges himself to that fiend, creating in effect a noble house whose patron is a denizen of the Outer Planes. Naturally, only a neutral or evil fiend-blooded would pledge loyalty to a fiend and thus found such a house.

Once a house is founded in mortal lands, it often grows to prominence through the aid of its patron fiend. The progeny of the original fiend-blooded founder become the next generation of fiend-blooded in that house, and so forth. Some houses have been in existence for centuries and are now among the wealthiest and most well known of merchant and noble houses in humanoid areas. Behind closed doors, the inner workings of a family of fiend-blooded are often sick and degenerate by human comparisons. Incest is common, and the Machiavellian intrigues between rival house members (especially in houses whose patron fiend is a devil) are intense beyond belief.

FIEND-BLOODED MANSION

PURIFIER OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE

“Though I walk in the midst of all that is unclean, though the shadow of evil falls over me, I shall not fear. For thou art with me, and thou shalt stand between me and harm.”

—Brother Erland Buckley, Disciple of the Hallowed Doctrine

The holy warriors and miracle-workers known as purifiers of the Hallowed Doctrine represent the primary line of defense between the spreading horror and malevolence that is taint and the innocent people—and possibly even gods themselves—who would suffer if it goes unchecked. Although no less devoted and faithful than the clerics and paladins from which most of them come, purifiers of the Hallowed Doctrine consider themselves servants not of gods but of the spiritual well-being of the world itself. They wield divine energies in ways nobody else can, and they stand stalwart against the greatest corruption and depravity that evil itself has to offer.

Few followers of the Hallowed Doctrine live to old age—only those willing to sacrifice their own lives for the sake of those around them ever take up the purifier’s mantle; many are the innocent lives and souls spared a horrible fate by the purifiers’ efforts.

BECOMING A PURIFIER OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE

The path of the cleric is the most direct route toward becoming a purifier of the Hallowed Doctrine.

The faith required of that class, the call to service, and the ability to channel positive energies all grant a purifier the tools needed to succeed in pursuing the Hallowed Doctrine.

Paladins also step easily into the role of the purifier, although some find it difficult to narrow their focus from battling all varieties of evil to focusing primarily on taint and tainted creatures.

Charisma (for the manipulation of positive energy and use with interpersonal skills) and Wisdom (for spell use and Will saves) are key abilities for purifiers.

Constitution is also important for resisting corruption.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good alignment or true neutral

Feats: Pure Soul*

Special: Ability to turn undead

* New feat described on page 124

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Heal, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, and Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Purifiers of the Hallowed Doctrine gain spellcasting ability more slowly than do clerics, but they grow ever more potent at resisting and even nullifying taint, battling tainted creatures, and protecting those around them. They also gain lesser abilities against evil creatures in general.

Tainted Creatures: For purposes of your special abilities, a tainted creature includes any creature with a corruption or depravity score of 1 or more, any creature with a tainted feat, and any creature that has the ability to bestow corruption or depravity on another creature.

Spellcasting: At every odd-numbered level, you gain new spell levels and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class you belonged to before you added the prestige class.

You do not, however, gain any other class benefit a character of that class would have gained.

Determine spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before you became a purifier of the Hallowed Doctrine, you must decide to which class to add each level of purifier for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Aura of Purity (Ex): You radiate an aura of holiness, making it difficult for you to hide your true nature.

Tainted creatures need only succeed on a Spot check (DC 20 minus your purifier class level) to recognize you for what you are (or at least as a threat).

Detect Taint (Sp): At will, you can use detect taint (see page 128 for spell description).

Turn Undead (Su): Your purifier class levels stack with any cleric or paladin levels you might have for purposes of turning undead.

Lay on Hands (Su): Starting at 2nd level, you can lay on hands as a paladin of your class level (see page 44 of the Player's Handbook).

If you also have paladin levels, these levels stack.

Smite Taint (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, you can smite tainted creatures as a paladin smites evil (see page 44 of the Player's Handbook).

If you have another smite ability, such as a paladin's ability to smite evil, you can choose as need dictates to use that power to smite taint instead of the power's original target. You gain additional uses of this power at higher levels (2/day at 6th level and 3/day at 9th level).

Aura of Sanctity (Su): Starting at 4th level, all allies within 10 feet of you gain a +2 sacred bonus on saves made to resist acquiring taint.

This bonus rises to +4 when you reach 10th level.

Turn Tainted (Su): At 5th level, you can turn any tainted creature as though it were an undead equal to the creature's HD +4.

Purify Soul (Su): Beginning at 6th level, you can cure a living being of 1 point of corruption or depravity by touching that individual and spending a use of your turn undead ability.

Unwilling creatures can attempt saving throws to resist: This is a Fortitude save if you are trying to cure them of corruption and a Will save if you are trying to cure them of depravity.

The DC of this save is equal to 10 + your purifier class level + your Charisma modifier.

This ability cannot remove so much corruption or depravity that it would move the target creature down to a lower taint category.

Creatures who are innately tainted (that is, creatures whose monster entries in this or another book describe them as possessing corruption or depravity scores, tainted feats, or the ability to bestow taint) are unaffected.

At 8th level, your purifying touch improves and henceforward cures 2 points of corruption or depravity per touch; at 10th level this improves still further to cure 3 points per touch.

Cleansing Flame (Su): Starting at 7th level, three times per day you can cast any offensive spell against a tainted creature as though it were maximized (as per the metamagic feat), without preparing in advance to do so and without increasing the effective spell slot of the spell. The spell functions as maximized only against tainted creatures; against any other creature in its area it functions normally.

Shield of Purity (Su): At 8th level, you can surround yourself and your companions with a shield of holy energy. This effect covers up to a 10-foot radius around you.

Any creature with even a single point of taint cannot enter this area, and all within gain a +6 sacred bonus on saves against spells or magical attacks made by tainted creatures from a distance.

This effect requires you to spend a use of your turn undead ability to activate and lasts for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

PLAYING A PURIFIER OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE

You have a holy purpose, a cause you pursue with religious zeal.

Taint, and the evil it represents, is a cancer on the face of the world.

It is your divine mandate to stamp it out.

Even if you serve a specific deity, you do so in a very focused manner.

You are a man (or woman) of the cloth and a warrior for purity.

All evil should be fought, and all innocents helped—but if you must ever choose between battling back the tide of taint or thwarting any other sort of evil, you always choose taint as the greater threat.

You will not throw your life away, but if you must sacrifice yourself to advance the cause you have embraced, you would do so without hesitation.

Even given your mandate, however, your methods are steadfast: The ends do not justify the means, and using evil to battle taint is no more useful than using oil to douse a fire.

You must yourself remain pure, for to be seduced into evil methods is the same as succumbing directly to taint.

All characters with this prestige class are affiliated with the Covenant of the Hallowed Doctrine, a religious organization that spans multiple churches of various good-aligned deities.

The Hallowed Doctrine (dictated by Kardol Erzai, the first purifier, and now considered a true holy text) sets down the techniques of the purifier, establishes the code by which he or she must live and operate, and discusses the evils of taint. Many purifiers work directly for the Covenant, operating alongside other members (which include representatives of almost all character classes, not solely purifiers).

These groups roam the kingdoms and wilderness, seeking out and expunging taint and tainted creatures.

Other purifiers of the Hallowed Doctrine work alone, or with unaffiliated adventurers, thwarting smaller evils most of the time but always on the lookout for signs of taint.

Low-level purifiers are subject to the commands of the Covenant and might well be assigned to work with a specific group or in a particular region (as when, in a religious hierarchy, a bishop assigns a priest to a particular parish or church).

As you gain both levels and esteem within the organization, you'll be left to your own judgment as to where you're needed most.

Eventually, you could even be placed in charge of assigning other purifiers and members of the Covenant to specific tasks.

COMBAT

When engaged in combat with normal foes, your tactics are largely decided by the options made available by the class levels you had before becoming a purifier.

Then again, given your mission statement, it's unlikely you'll be fighting normal foes all that often.

Tainted creatures are extremely dangerous: Use your spells and, more important, your various supernatural abilities against taint to take them down hard and fast.

When facing a tainted creature, don't worry about saving your smite or other limited-use abilities; if you don't destroy this foe, you'll never have to worry about reaching the next one, and you don't want to let even a single carrier of taint escape your justice.

Several of your abilities, such as turn tainted, are effective at driving away tainted creatures.

Use these if you must to protect yourself from certain harm, or if you feel you have a good chance of actually reducing their level of taint.

Don't use these abilities all the time, though, or you'll never have the opportunity to destroy these abominations.

Given your combination of melee and spell abilities, your best bet is to use a few spells to bolster your defenses and weaken your foe from a distance, then move in and destroy it before it can regain its footing or escape.

Once you gain the ability to protect allies from taint, it's a good idea to coordinate with them as much as possible.

Odds are good that any arcane companions of yours have better offensive spells than you do (at least until you gain cleansing flame), so you might wish to focus on protecting them and weakening the foe while they bombard it with damaging spells.

Once you move in, coordinate with your fighter and paladin companions to take the foe down quickly; make certain, if you're facing multiple foes, that you convince your companions to concentrate on the tainted ones first. The others can only kill you, whereas your nemeses always carry the threat of infection.

At the class's highest levels, your ability to heal the taint of others provides a new batch of options against tainted creatures.

Your group can close with the enemy much sooner, because the chance of your companions taking long-term taint is minimal.

Your companions might also be more willing to battle tainted creatures, secure in the knowledge that you can reduce their taint so long as they don't gain too much at a time.

By properly positioning your shield of purity, you can block multiple tainted creatures from reaching your companions, allowing them to focus on one at a time.

ADVANCEMENT

The Covenant of the Hallowed Doctrine has members in most good-aligned priesthoods who keep an eye out for young acolytes and warriors of pure heart and stalwart disposition.

These recruiters attempt to include prospective members in dangerous tasks—although not beyond their abilities—to see how they react under pressure.

When the candidate proves brave, determined, trustworthy, and untainted, the Covenant invites him or her to join.

Members receive continual instruction in martial skills and spellcasting (as appropriate), as well as in history, religion, the holy texts of the Hallowed Doctrine itself, and in the nature of evil and taint.

Almost every moment you do not spend actively battling evil is devoted to study.

Only those who, like you, show great ability and determination are taught the techniques of the purifier, and purifiers are accorded great respect within the organization.

Low-ranking members are usually assigned simple tasks, such as scouting, carrying messages, or accompanying a more powerful member as part of his entourage.

What little time you have to yourself is often devoted to the church from which you were originally drawn.

Purifiers have little in the way of personal lives.

You are expected to improve yourself constantly, and sloth and laziness are dismissible offenses.

As you advance through the ranks of the Covenant, and the levels of the purifier class, you'll want to keep your Knowledge (arcana) and Knowledge (religion) modifiers at peak levels—the first to maintain your knowledge of taint and its effects, the second to represent your studies of the Hallowed Doctrine.

Take ranks in Diplomacy as well, the better to sway others to your way of thinking, or at least to convince them that you really do have their best interests at heart and that they should not hinder you in your pursuits.

Magic items that boost your Wisdom and Charisma are invaluable if you can get them, with good armor and weapons falling a close second.

RESOURCES

The primary resources of the Covenant are training and information.

Without the Hallowed Doctrine, it's impossible to become a purifier.

Further, the organization offers religious instruction and advice on battling taint.

They have scouts constantly wandering, ever alert for any sign of spreading taint.

A truly zealous purifier, burning to root out and destroy such evil, need merely petition the Covenant for a suitable location.

The Covenant keeps track of more mundane forms of villainy as well, since such areas are particularly vulnerable to an outbreak of taint.

So if you must enter the territory of a tyrannical king or wish to rid the region of a vampire while searching for taint, they might be able to give you pertinent advice.

The Covenant also provides backup.

The organization is not huge—although widespread, it has relatively few members, given the duties and sacrifices required—so it often lacks the manpower to support its members as much as its leaders might like.

Still, should you come across a region or creature of taint too powerful for you (or your party) to destroy alone, the Covenant might provide additional assistance.

Finally, the local archimandrite can provide a few magic items to Covenant members who require them.

These are normally restricted to healing and restorative magic (such as potions of cure wounds and scrolls of restoration), but also include certain protective devices (rings of protection) and the potent rod of sanctity, an item unique to the Covenant of the Hallowed Doctrine.

The Covenant expects unused items to be returned, and expended or lost items to be paid back as the purifier has the means.

PURIFIERS OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE IN THE WORLD

"A purifier in my town terrifies me, because I know what his presence implies.

But I don't find the idea nearly as terrifying as the thought of a purifier not appearing in my town, should we need one."

—Danaran Kall, priestess and paladin of Pelor

If taint plays a major part in your campaign or setting, the presence of a purifier of the Hallowed Doctrine is a boon to DM and player alike.

His presence can enable the PCs to proceed farther into tainted regions than they otherwise might, and the purifier's focus on taint provides an easy, in-game hook to steer the campaign in that direction.

Further, you can base stories around the reactions to the purifier's presence: Although most individuals recognize the necessity of the purifier's actions, the ignorant among the populace might actually blame the purifier for drawing taint to their doorstep.

ORGANIZATION

The Covenant of the Hallowed Doctrine is made up of numerous local groups called monasteries, although many of them are based in temples or even private homes.

Each Covenant monastery consists of anywhere from a single individual (in a small town) to a dozen souls (in only the largest monasteries in major cities).

Most members have duties in various local temples or churches and devote themselves to those duties so long as they aren't actively engaged in Covenant activities.

The high priest (or priestess) of each monastery dictates the activities of those beneath him, supervises their training and studies, and essentially rules them just as any religious leader commands his flock.

So long as he obeys the dictates of the Hallowed Doctrine, maintains his monastery's readiness to battle taint, and does not use his position to advance his own temple's agenda over those of his underlings, a high priest can run his monastery as he wishes.

Most monasteries are named after fallen members of the Covenant, although some simply take the name of the town or community in which they are located.

In order to keep matters simple, and to avoid potential rivalries that might dilute the members' focus, the Covenant only recognizes three ranks.

Acolytes are relatively new members to the Covenant; they are usually, but not always, of low- to mid-level.

Disciples are proven members of the Covenant, having served with distinction for years or having completed many dangerous assignments; disciples tend to be mid- to high-level.

Finally, the archimandrite is a leader in the Covenant, someone who has spent many decades in service and moved into an administrative position.

Archimandrites are also of mid- to high-level.

The high priest of a given monastery is usually the highest-level local purifier, cleric, or paladin.

In larger monasteries, the high priest always holds the rank of archimandrite; smaller monasteries might be led by a disciple.

High priests have little time for personal agendas; their lives are wholly devoted to supporting the Hallowed Doctrine and battling taint.

Most high priests of the Covenant are people of faith and determination, not of ambition, since the position holds little temporal power.

The high priest coordinates the information and activities of those who serve under him and remains in constant communication with other monasteries.

It is ultimately his decision where to devote the resources and manpower of his monastery, and which threats should be dealt with first.

The archimandrites come down hard on any conflicts that arise within or between monasteries, for they know that inner turmoil can hamper the Covenant's ability to battle evil.

They have adversaries enough outside the order, such as evil cults and priesthods, some of which seek to spread taint, while others simply dislike the notion of a good-aligned religious organization becoming widespread.

The Covenant also sometimes faces opposition from governments and even good-aligned temples that do not truly understand the nature of taint and see only a strange organization taking root in their backyard.

Finally, rustic villagers who have no notion of taint at all find it easy to blame the purifiers for the strange happenings around their homes, not realizing the Covenant has actually come to help them.

NPC REACTIONS

Clerics, nobles, and others who understand what the Covenant represents usually have a starting attitude of friendly when dealing with purifiers; this might go as far as helpful in situations where the individual is aware of the specific threat that the purifier is attempting to thwart. Common folk tend to be friendly as well, as purifiers are usually clerics or paladins of good-aligned deities.

Nobles and commoners of suspicious bent might be indifferent, and a few—those who secretly venerate evil deities or who believe the purifiers responsible for the evils they have come to destroy—are unfriendly or even hostile. Most nobles and priests will put on at least a show of courtesy, if only to avoid being perceived as rude to a member of the clergy.

Adventurers, or at least those who recognize the value of the purifier, are usually friendly.

A fellow member of the Covenant is automatically helpful in all but the most bizarre of circumstances.

The chief enemies of the purifiers are followers of evil deities, and tainted creatures or those who have embraced taint.

Purifiers run up against more mundane villains, but these are usually standard evildoers who oppose the purifier because he's in the way of their villainous schemes, not out of hatred for the purifier's calling.

PURIFIER OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) can research the purifiers to learn more about them.

DC 10: Purifiers are members of a religious organization called the Covenant of the Hallowed Doctrine.

They span many churches, priesthoods, and communities and are devoted to ridding the world of taint and similar evils.

They organize themselves in groups called monasteries. DC 15: The purifiers are reasonable spellcasters, but their most potent abilities are focused specifically against taint and tainted creatures.

They're capable of driving off or destroying such creatures through sheer faith, and they can channel positive energy in ways other divine casters cannot.

DC 20: Purifiers are fanatical in their battle against taint. Although they can offer their companions protections nobody else can, they can also put those companions in danger due to their single-mindedness.

You should never expect a purifier to compromise or bargain in the face of tainted creatures.

DC 30: At this level of success, characters can learn specific names and details of purifiers and Covenant members in your campaign, including histories and past exploits, as well as current duties and locations.

A DC 20 Gather Information, Knowledge (local), or bardic knowledge check will enable a character to locate a local member of the Covenant, should she need to contact one. If the character is actively seeking aid in thwarting a taint-based threat, and makes this fact known, she gains a +5 circumstance bonus to the check.

The PC also gains this +5 circumstance bonus if she is herself a purifier or member of the Covenant.

If both these things are true, the circumstance bonus is +8.

PURIFIERS OF THE HALLOWED DOCTRINE IN THE GAME

Since the Covenant is a small albeit widespread organization, and the purifiers have a specific focus, it's easy to introduce them into even a long-running campaign. So long as the PCs have had few run-ins with taint or tainted creatures, there's no reason for them to have ever before encountered a purifier.

Because of the purifiers' narrow focus, they can benefit campaigns that make heavy use of taint.

Make certain to include enough tainted encounters for the purifier to remain useful; if a player picks up this prestige class in preparation for a major encounter but never again needs its abilities, she is not going to stick with it very long. Remember that the purifier might sometimes be the only reason the PCs survive unscathed in a tainted region; give her the occasional opportunity to shine by protecting her companions from tainted beasts or curing companions who might otherwise be lost to taint.

ADAPTATION

Purifiers are designed for taint-heavy campaign settings. If you'd like to use them in a campaign in which taint is not a factor, consider focusing their abilities against a specific form of evil entity instead.

A category like outsiders or even fiends is probably too broad, given the intensely focused nature of this prestige class, but perhaps demons would be appropriate.

The purifier's save bonuses, turning, and smite abilities would then apply to the supernatural and spell-like abilities of that specific creature type.

This adaptation can be especially useful in a game that employs a particular kind of evil creature as its primary villain.

TAINTED SCHOLAR

"Cost?"

Gold is a cost.

Servitude is a cost.

My soul is not a cost—or it's one I don't mind paying."

—Thavik of Donegan, a tainted scholar

Great secrets await those minds skilled enough to unearth them, and great secrets unlock great power.

Let others speak in fearful whispers of secrets humanity was not meant to know.

No secret is barred from a tainted scholar's grasp, and if such forbidden knowledge comes at the cost of his soul, he's willing to pay that price.

BECOMING A TAINTED SCHOLAR

Any arcane spellcasting class provides relatively easy access to the path of the tainted scholar.

Because they are more inclined toward scholarship than many other arcane spell casters, dread necromancers and wizards (particularly specialist necromancers) are the most common tainted scholars, but sorcerers, wu jen, warmages, and even warlocks find their way into the class.

The most significant requirement is having a moderate or greater amount of depravity, which the character might experience as a drawback until he acquires enough depravity to enter this class (at which point it helps rather than hinders him).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells or use least invocations (warlock)

Taint: Moderate or greater depravity

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), and Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Like the loremaster class in the Dungeon Master's Guide, your class features are built around uncovering secrets.

Your secrets, however, relate to magical practices that many consider abhorrent—and indeed, your use of blood in your spellcasting is an abomination to most.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you belonged to more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a tainted scholar, you must choose to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Blood Component (Su): You can substitute a drop of your own blood for a spell's material component (if any), and in so doing increase the spell's power.

The pinprick or minor knife cut to draw the requisite blood is a free action (just like using a material component) that becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

Using this ability deals 1 point of damage to the tainted scholar but raises the spell's caster level by 1.

Damage reduction, if you have any, doesn't apply to this damage.

If a spell has a costly material component (greater than 1 gp), you must still provide it but can use this ability to enhance the spell if you desire.

You can similarly enhance a spell that has no material component.

Level Advancement: The power of taint is seductive.

Once you have tasted its attractions, it is hard to resist.

If you wish to advance a level in another class after taking your first level as a tainted scholar, you must succeed on a Will save (DC = 10 + your depravity score).

If you fail, you must stay in this prestige class and advance another level in tainted scholar instead.

If you succeed, you can advance the level in another class, although you must still attempt the saving throw the next time you gain a level or default back to this prestige class.

Once you reach 10th level as a tainted scholar, you can freely advance in other classes.

Tainted Spellcasting (Su): Rather than using a key ability score for spellcasting, you use your corruption and depravity scores.

To cast a spell, you must have a depravity score at least equal to the spell's level.

Your bonus spells are based on a number equal to your depravity score + 10, and saving throws against your spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + 1/2 your corruption score.

For example, a tainted scholar with a depravity score of 3 would gain bonus spells as a wizard with an Intelligence score of 13 or a sorcerer with a Charisma score of 13.

You accumulate taint for casting your spells.

Each time you cast an arcane spell, you must make a Will save (DC 10 + spell level) or increase your depravity score by 1.

All arcane spells you cast are evil spells.

Taint Suppression: You are likely to accumulate high corruption and depravity scores, but this taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

Your depravity manifests in the normal range of mental symptoms, but you can replace any physical symptom of corruption with the internal corruption symptom.

If you enter a tainted area, your corruption immediately manifests externally again, and you regain the physical symptoms you exchanged for internal corruption, if any. These physical symptoms disappear again 1d4 days after you leave a tainted area.

Otherwise, it is impossible to tell from external appearance that you carry corruption.

Secret: In your studies, you unearth all sorts of useful forbidden knowledge.

At 2nd level, and again at 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th level, choose a secret from the table below.

Your class level plus your depravity score determines which secrets you can choose: The table shows the minimum requirement for each secret.

You can't choose the same secret twice.

The details of each secret are given after the table.

TAINED SCHOLAR SECRETS

Min. Level + Depravity	Secret
1	Blooded metamagic
2	Stanch
3	Death knell
4	Clarity of true madness
5	Wholesome corruption
6	Bloodseeking spell
7	Thicker than water
8	Tainted knowledge
9	Forbidden arcana
10	Greater forbidden arcana

Blooded Metamagic: This secret allows you to apply a metamagic feat you know to a spell you cast by paying an additional cost in blood.

By draining your own blood, you can enhance your spells without using a higher-level spell slot.

The cost is a number of points of Constitution damage equal to the spell slot adjustment of the metamagic feat. Thus, casting an empowered vampiric touch spell costs you 2 points of Constitution damage, because an empowered spell uses up a spell slot two levels higher than normal. You cannot enhance a spell to a level higher than you can cast.

For example, you must be at least a 9th-level caster to cast an empowered vampiric touch spell (or at least 10th-level, if you are casting as a sorcerer), since the empowered spell would require a 5th-level spell slot.

If you do not have a Constitution score, you cannot use this ability.

Stanch (Ex): This secret allows you to become stable automatically when your hit points drop below 0.

You still die if you reach -10 hit points or below.

Death Knell (Sp): This secret grants you the ability to use death knell once per day as a spell-like ability (see page 217 of the Player's Handbook).

Clarity of True Madness (Su): Once per day, this secret allows you to add your depravity score as a bonus on one Wisdom-based skill check or Will save.

You must choose to use this benefit before the check or save is rolled.

Wholesome Corruption (Su): Once per day, this secret allows you to add your corruption score as a bonus on one Concentration check or Fortitude save.

You must choose to use this benefit before the check or save is rolled.

Bloodseeking Spell (Su): This secret grants you the ability to imbue your spells with the ability to draw blood from their targets.

To use this ability, you must inflict a minor wound on yourself; this is a free action that deals 3 points of damage to you and becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

Damage reduction, if you have any, doesn't apply to this damage.

A bloodseeking spell deals an extra 1d6 points of damage to each target that takes damage from the spell.

You can't apply this ability to any spell that doesn't deal damage.

This extra damage applies only to spells that deal hit point damage, not to spells that deal ability damage, ability drain, or other kinds of damage.

Constructs, elementals, oozes, plants, undead, and any creatures without blood or a similar substance within their bodies are immune.

Thicker Than Water (Su): This secret grants you partial conscious control over your own vital fluids.

When you are injured, your blood withdraws from the wound, preventing some damage.

This effect gives you damage reduction 1/piercing and slashing.

Tainted Knowledge: This secret grants you a bonus tainted feat, chosen from the list of tainted feats on page 121.

Forbidden Arcana: This secret grants you the ability to use one additional 1st-level spell per day, as if gained through having a high ability or depravity score.

Greater Forbidden Arcana: This secret grants you the ability to use one additional 2nd-level spell per day, as if gained through having a high ability or depravity score.

Lore: Tainted scholars gather knowledge.

At 3rd level, you gain the ability to know legends or information regarding various topics, just as a bard can with bardic knowledge.

You add your tainted scholar class level and your Intelligence modifier to this lore check.

You can add your depravity score instead of your Intelligence modifier to any lore check dealing with supernatural, horrific, tainted, or otherwise forbidden subjects, at the DM's discretion.

See page 28 of the Player's Handbook for more information on bardic knowledge.

Outré Lore (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, your knowledge of lore beyond the realm of common experience is broadened and magically augmented.

Once per day, you can use contact other plane (see pages 212–213 of the Player's Handbook) as a spell-like ability.

If your Intelligence and Charisma temporarily decrease as a result of using this ability, you must make a Will save or have your depravity score increased by 1.

The DC for this Will save equals the DC of the Intelligence check to avoid the ability score decrease +10.

Thus, if you contact an Elemental Plane (spell DC 7), the DC is 17; if you contact a greater deity on an Outer Plane (spell DC 16), the DC is 26.

Aberrant Lore: At 7th level, you gain an innate understanding of objects, places, and creatures that carry the taint of evil.

By concentrating as a full-round action and focusing your attention on a creature, object, or specific site within 60 feet of you, you can determine if it carries or transmits taint.

In the case of a creature, you can determine the strength of its higher taint score (corruption or depravity): mild, moderate, or severe (see pages 62–66).

In the case of an object, by spending a full hour examining it you can determine its magic properties as if you had cast an identify spell on it (see page 243 of the Player's Handbook).

In the case of a location, you can determine its magical properties, if it has any, in the same way as with an object.

If it has no magical properties but is tainted by some horrific event in the past, you receive a vision of the event. Examining a location requires you to spend 1 hour in the location.

Heretical Lore: Beginning at 9th level, you gain contacts among the evil creatures of the planes.

These beings can rescue you from extreme situations or otherwise grant your wishes.

As often as once per day, you can call upon these entities to grant you a limited wish (see page 248 of the Player's Handbook), with no XP cost attached.

However, using this ability increases your corruption and depravity scores by 1d3 points each, and results in the imposition of a geas/quest (see page 234 of the Player's Handbook) that requires you to perform some evil act in repayment for the favor.

PLAYING A TAINTED SCHOLAR

Your years of delving into dark and forbidden secrets have taken a toll on your mental well-being.

You are more than a little insane.

You pay scant heed to the whispers in the back of your mind, the threatening nightmares, or the things you see that others don't seem to notice—these are simply occupational hazards.

So what if a full-blown hallucination unfolds before your unseeing eyes as you contemplate the passage you have just read in Kazerabet's Art of Necromancy, muttering snippets from its dark lore under your breath?

The power and knowledge you seek is worth any price.

COMBAT

Spellcasting remains your greatest strength, and progresses at its full rate as you advance.

Thus, your place in combat is not likely to change much—if you are like most wizards, you will hang back from melee in order to blast opponents with the most debilitating necromantic spells you can manage.

Several of the secrets available to you enhance your spellcasting ability, including a number of ways (through blooded metamagic or bloodseeking spells) to make your spells simply deal more damage—always good in a straightforward fight against a physically powerful foe.

One of the best ways to improve your chances in combat involves actions you can take before combat begins.

You have a variety of ways, from common spells to your outré lore at medium levels, to gain information that might influence the outcome of a battle.

At the highest levels of this class, your access to heretical lore might save your entire party from a desperate situation, in the form of a limited wish through your dark contacts.

ADVANCEMENT

Tainted scholars come from a variety of backgrounds. Many are inexperienced spellcasters who stumble across or seek out the forbidden secrets of magic in libraries or ancient crypts.

Others are little more than hedge wizards who learn sinister secrets from an aging mentor or a darker, otherworldly force.

What they all have in common is a fascination with the interweaving of magic, life, death, blood, knowledge, and power—a delicate balance, an intricate dance.

With that fascination comes a lust for more knowledge, a lust that quickly overpowers any concerns about morality, safety, or sanity.

As a tainted scholar, you spend much of your time seeking out ancient scrolls containing forbidden secrets, lost tombs with esoteric inscriptions, undead wizards and the vanished arts they might yet preserve, and other sources of arcane mysteries.

Between adventures, you pore over the lore you have uncovered, opening your mind to its incomprehensible secrets and bending your thoughts to navigate its warped logic.

Your fragile sanity falls casualty to this exploration, and your soul slowly disintegrates under depravity's rasp, but you give no consideration to the price you pay for your knowledge and all the power that comes with it.

As you advance, you have frequent opportunities to choose the secrets you will pursue and the powers you will unlock as a result.

The secrets you choose depend on your interests and desires.

If you enjoy using metamagic and know a handful of metamagic feats, blooded metamagic enables you to use those feats without expending precious higher-level spell slots.

Bloodseeking spell makes your spells more dangerous, and forbidden arcana secrets give you more spellcasting power—always a boon.

You can combine forbidden arcana with blooded metamagic to wring every drop from these additional low-level spells.

If you find yourself too often paying the price for your high taint scores, clarity of true madness and wholesome corruption can turn a handicap into an advantage.

If you're something of a scrapper, you might instead consider secrets that enhance melee fighting, such as stanch, death knell, and thicker than water.

RESOURCES

The one resource you covet above others is knowledge. If you have other tainted scholars in your acquaintance—or even other wizards, dread necromancers, or similar characters whose interests run in the same vein—the exchange of knowledge can be highly profitable for all of you.

There is no structured organization of tainted scholars, and you might feel competitive animosity toward others who hoard their knowledge and keep their secrets from your grasp.

If you can overcome this emotional reaction, you'll find sharing spells, tomes of forbidden lore, and clues to the locations of ancient secrets a worthwhile enterprise. Besides, keeping in touch with your peers puts you in a good position to seize their effects (and possibly some dark knowledge) should some sad fate befall them.

TAINTED SCHOLARS IN THE WORLD

"His books should be torched, his tower toppled, and as for the man himself—well, I think Thavik of Donegan should be burned at the stake."

The tainted scholar is an example of a classic archetype in horror fantasy—the wizard who delves too deeply into forbidden lore.

The class builds on the idea that some knowledge is beyond mortal ability to comprehend, along with the concept that power is a corrupting influence on the human soul.

ORGANIZATION

There is no general organization of tainted scholars. Secret cabals exist where like-minded scholars come together to share their explorations into forbidden lore, but these are small, egalitarian organizations with little structure.

One feature shared by all such cabals is a strict requirement of secrecy, with violations punished by painful, grisly death.

Cabals of tainted scholars are true communities of equals. If the knowledge of one member exceeds that of the others, he has little or nothing to gain from the association and usually leaves it (often traveling far away to avoid any possible repercussions of his departure).

The scholar with the strongest personality often adopts some kind of leadership role, but this amounts simply to setting a time and possibly declaring a topic for the next gathering of the cabal.

In a community of depraved, often paranoid, power-mad spellcasters, leadership is best handled with a very light touch.

NPC REACTIONS

Even if their calling is not obvious—and few tainted scholars wear their profession on their sleeves—tainted scholars are typically greeted with nervousness, dislike, or outright disgust.

Their corruption might be invisible, but their depravity has manifestations that are often abundantly clear even to casual acquaintances.

As a result, most NPCs have an initial reaction of unfriendly when encountering a tainted scholar, even if they can't put a finger on the reason for their dislike.

Champions of good are natural enemies of tainted scholars, and this applies particularly to those groups of wizards who seek to promote the use of magic for good in the world.

TAINTED SCHOLAR LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research tainted scholars to learn more about them.

DC 10: Some wizards and other spellcasters are obsessed with uncovering secrets that mortal minds were not meant to know—to their ultimate ruin.

DC 15: Tainted scholars practice an ancient and evil form of magic that uses blood as a component.

In their obsessive drive to uncover secrets and mysteries of magic, they destroy their own souls to gain greater power.

DC 20: These scholars embrace the taint of evil and use it to power their spells.

They learn secrets that improve their spellcasting, toughen their bodies, and grant them unearthly knowledge.

DC 30: A success at this DC grants information about the activities of a local cabal of tainted scholars or a prominent individual scholar.

TAINTED SCHOLARS IN THE GAME

Tainted scholars work well as solitary villains in a horror game or as part of a mysterious evil cabal unleashing horrors upon an unwary world.

True to the theme of many horror stories, a tainted scholar villain might, like Victor Frankenstein in Mary Shelley's novel, have no idea that the knowledge he is exploring and putting to use could have unintended and disastrous consequences.

As with the corrupt avenger, a lone tainted scholar could be an interesting way to introduce your players to the taint mechanics.

ADAPTATION

The tainted scholar presented here is an adaptation of a class that has appeared in two earlier versions.

The maho-tsukai prestige class in Oriental Adventures was part of the first exploration of the taint mechanics in D&D, and that class was revised and adapted for a more general D&D campaign in Unearthed Arcana. Comparing these different implementations of the same general concept is an interesting study in adapting a class to different settings and even genres of play.

The tainted scholar is intentionally built like the loremaster class, as a way of highlighting the horror-genre role of a scholar who explores secrets too horrible for the human mind to grasp.

LIBRIS MORTIS (3.5)

DEATH'S CHOSEN

"For the glory of the Deathless One!"

From time to time, mortal beings choose to pledge their lives to the service of a powerful undead creature. Some are terrified of their own mortality and hope that in return for faithful service, the master will consent to make the chosen into one of its spawn in due time.

Others are hateful folk who view service to an undead master as an instrument of vengeance against those who have slighted them, whether those slights are real or imagined.

A rare few death's chosen exist to support an undead creature they perceive as having special knowledge or value, and thus they serve as a matter of duty and honor. If accepted by his would-be master, a death's chosen serves as the master's living minion.

The chosen gains great vigor and power in the service of his master, but slowly becomes tainted by close proximity to his master's unholy power.

Becoming a death's chosen necessitates turning one's back on life and the living.

The demands of the master are all that matter—even if the master hungers for the blood or souls of the living.

A loyal death's chosen can be a great boon to a powerful and predatory undead.

He can go places the master cannot, and can help his master overcome its supernatural vulnerabilities.

For example, a death's chosen in the service of a vampire can lure unsuspecting victims into the vampire's lair, spy on those plotting against his master in the sanctity of a hallowed church, or move his master's coffin to a new lair during the hours of hateful sunlight.

Fighters are the most common death's chosen, since most undead understand the utility of a bodyguard.

Barbarians, rogues, assassins, and monks can also serve effectively as a death's chosen.

Spellcasters rarely become death's chosen, though some clerics dedicated to gods of death take up this mantle.

NPC members of this prestige class typically remain close to their masters, though they sometimes venture forth on important missions.

Individual death's chosen don't have any special allegiance to one another.

They serve their masters above all else.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a death's chosen, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Type: Aberration, dragon, giant, humanoid, magical beast, or monstrous humanoid.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 1 rank, Spot 2 ranks.

Special: The character must be accepted as a death's chosen by a sentient undead creature with at least as many Hit Dice as the character.

CLASS SKILLS

The death's chosen's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the death's chosen prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Death's chosen gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Shield of the Master (Ex): Whenever the master of a death's chosen casts a spell or uses an extraordinary, supernatural, or spell-like ability, it can choose (as a free action) to exempt the death's chosen from its effects.

The master must make this choice when it casts the spell or uses the ability.

If the ability is always active, the master can choose to exempt its death's chosen from the effect; this immunity remains in effect until the master chooses otherwise.

For example, a mummy could (and probably would) choose to make its death's chosen immune to its despair ability.

An undead spellcaster casting a fireball into a fight that included its death's chosen could choose when casting the spell to have it not affect the death's chosen.

Vigor of the Chosen (Ex): The physical needs of a death's chosen are greatly reduced.

He needs to consume only one-tenth the normal amount of food and water each day—a few grubs and a mouthful of water make a full meal.

He can subsist on a mere 2 hours of sleep each night without becoming fatigued (though spellcasters require the normal amount of rest to regain spells).

He gains Endurance as a bonus feat (or, if he already has the feat, the bonuses granted by the feat increase to +8).

He also gains a +4 bonus on Fortitude saves to resist disease.

Will of the Chosen (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a death's chosen serves his master with inhuman intensity.

He gains a +2 morale bonus on Will saves as long as he is within 60 feet of his master.

Bravery of the Chosen (Ex): When within 30 feet of his master, a death's chosen who has attained 3rd level gains a +1 morale bonus on melee attack rolls and melee damage rolls.

If his master has been reduced to half or less of its full normal hit points, this bonus increases to +2.

The bonus disappears if his master is destroyed.

Unnatural Aura (Su): When a death's chosen reaches 3rd level, wild or domesticated animals can sense his unnatural presence out to a distance of 30 feet.

The animals do not willingly approach nearer than that and become panicked if forced to do so.

They remain panicked as long as they are within that distance.

TABLE 3-1: THE DEATH'S CHOSEN

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Shield of the master, vigor of the chosen
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Will of the chosen
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Bravery of the chosen, unnatural aura

Dirgesingers voice melodies not of celebration and joy, but of sorrow and grief.

They seek to spread this melancholy outlook far and wide, believing that only those who give in to their sadness can truly understand the world.

Dirgesingers hold high positions in death-obsessed cultures.

Serving as members of a secret guild or as part of a hierarchy of death priests, they are entrusted with the serious responsibility of composing suitable laments for the dead.

The more important the deceased, the more sorrowful and moving her lament is expected to be.

No one will remember the dead queen in a few short generations, but a great lament might be sung a thousand years hence.

However, most dirgesingers do not belong to any special hierarchy or guild.

Instead, they are rootless wanderers who travel from place to place, wrapped in inconsolable grief from some personal tragedy.

These sad wanderers seek to express their grief through songs that teach the hearts of their listeners the meaning of true sorrow.

Some of these fallen bards want nothing more than for others to understand the depths of their loss.

A few are sinister creatures who believe that, since joy has been extinguished for them, they must in turn extinguish the joy of others by using their powers to teach folk the folly of love, the futility of hope, and the finality of the grave.

Dirgesingers of this last sort often associate themselves with powerful undead, serving in the courts of vampire lords or lich-kings.

All dirgesingers must have at least some expertise as a bard. Some are also trained as rogues or clerics before entering this class.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dirgesinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Perform (any) 8 ranks.

Feat: Requiem.

Special: Bardic music class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

The dirgesinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), and Speak Language (n/a). Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dirgesinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dirgesingers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Dirgesong (Su): A dirgesinger gains the dirgesong ability.

Dirgesong follows the same rules as bardic music (see Bardic Music, page 29 of the Player's Handbook).

Dirgesinger levels stack with bard levels for the purpose of determining how often a character can use dirgesong or bardic music.

Dirgesinger levels do not stack with bard levels for determining which bardic music effects and spells a bard has access to.

Each of these songs counts as a use of bardic music.

Song of Sorrow: A dirgesinger can evoke sorrow and lament in his enemies.

To be affected, an enemy must be able to hear the dirgesinger perform.

The effect lasts for as long as the enemy hears the dirgesinger perform and for 5 rounds thereafter.

An affected enemy takes a -2 penalty on Will saving throws and a -2 penalty on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + the dirgesinger's ranks in Perform) negates the effect and makes the character immune to that dirgesinger's song of sorrow ability for 24 hours.

Song of sorrow is a mind-affecting ability.

Song of Bolstering: At 2nd level and higher, a dirgesinger can bolster undead creatures against turning, much as an evil cleric does.

All undead within 30 feet of the dirgesinger gain a bonus on their turn resistance equal to the dirgesinger's class level plus the dirgesinger's bard class level.

The bolstering lasts for as long as the dirgesinger performs and for 10 rounds thereafter.

An undead dirgesinger can bolster himself in this manner. Song of Grief: A dirgesinger of 3rd level or higher can use song or poetics to inspire maddening grief in a living creature.

The creature must be within 60 feet of the dirgesinger and able to hear him.

Unless the target succeeds on a Will save (DC 10 + the dirgesinger's ranks in Perform), she becomes confused for as long as the dirgesinger performs and for 5 rounds thereafter.

Song of grief is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Song of Horror: At 4th level and higher, a dirgesinger can strike a horrifying chord in the hearts of his enemies.

Any enemy within 60 feet who can hear the dirgesinger must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + the dirgesinger's ranks in Perform) or take 1d6 points of Strength damage and 1d6 points of Dexterity damage.

A creature that is affected by a dirgesinger's song of horror or a creature that successfully saves against this effect cannot be affected by the same dirgesinger's song of horror for 24 hours.

Song of Awakening: At 5th level, a dirgesinger can animate the recently slain corpse of a creature within 30 feet.

This requires the dirgesinger to make a Perform check (DC 10 + target creature's HD).

The slain creature can have no more Hit Dice than the dirgesinger's character level.

If the attempt fails, the dirgesinger can try again in a later round.

The corpse to be awakened must have been dead for no more than 1 hour.

The awakened creature's type becomes undead, and it retains any subtypes it had.

The creature retains all class features, as well as any supernatural or spell-like (but not extraordinary) abilities it possessed in life (though any spells cast or daily uses expended before the creature's death count against its normal limits).

The awakened creature is completely loyal to the dirgesinger and obeys any commands given it (if no commands are given, it simply attacks the dirgesinger's foes).

The creature remains animate as long as the dirgesinger continues to perform.

A dirgesinger can animate no more than one awakened corpse at a time.

If he awakens a second one while the first is still active, the first one falls dead as if the dirgesinger had ceased to perform.

TABLE 3-2: THE DIRGESINGER

EPHEMERAL EXEMPLAR

Ephemeral exemplars are paragons of incorporeality. They gain greater resistance to attacks and turning, and eventually gain the ability to manipulate solid objects as easily as corporeal beings can.

Most ephemeral exemplars are ghosts, spectres, or dread wraiths.

Some advanced allips, shadows, and wraiths can also qualify for this class.

NPC ephemeral exemplars often serve as leaders of weaker undead creatures, particularly those it can spawn.

They typically lair in dark, haunted places, waiting for unsuspecting victims to pass by.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an ephemeral exemplar, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Type: Undead (incorporeal subtype).

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Base Save Bonus: Will +5.

CLASS SKILLS

The ephemeral exemplar's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ephemeral exemplar prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ephemeral exemplars gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Improved Deflection (Su): An ephemeral exemplar adds its class level to its deflection bonus to AC.

Turn Resistance (Ex): An ephemeral exemplar adds its class level to its turn resistance.

Enhanced Spawn (Su): Any spawn created by an ephemeral exemplar of 2nd level or higher gains a +4 enhancement bonus to its Dexterity score.

If the exemplar is destroyed, the spawn loses this bonus.

Ghostly Grasp: At 3rd level, an ephemeral exemplar gains

Ghostly Grasp (see page 27) as a bonus feat, even if it doesn't meet the prerequisite.

TABLE 3-8: THE EPHEMERAL EXEMPLAR

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	Improved deflection, turn resistance
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	Enhanced spawn
3rd	+1	+1	+1	+3	Ghostly Grasp

LURKING TERROR

Most people fear things that goes bump in the night.

Lurking terrors give greater reason to fear things that can't be heard.

These horrible monsters are the quintessential hunting undead, displaying great prowess with their special abilities and amazing powers of stealth.

Any undead creature with a modicum of stealth can become a lurking terror.

Mohrgs, nightshades, vampires, wraiths, dread wraiths, and advanced ghosts commonly enter this prestige class.

NPC lurking terrors are more active than traditional undead, seeking out living prey rather than waiting for it to come to them.

They can be found anywhere that darkness exists.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a lurking terror, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Type: Undead.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks.

Special: If the character possesses the incorporeal subtype, it need not meet the Move Silently requirement.

CLASS SKILLS

The lurking terror's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the lurking terror prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Lurking terrors gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Deathly Power (Ex): A lurking terror adds its class level to any save DCs for the extraordinary and supernatural special attacks possessed by an undead creature of its kind.

This ability has no effect on the lurking terror's spells or spell-like abilities, nor on any special abilities gained from its nonundead kind (such as a vampiric medusa's petrifying gaze), feats, or class features (such as the assassin's death attack).

For example, a vampire that becomes a 1st-level lurking terror increases the DC of its dominate and energy drain special attacks by 1.

If the vampire were also a sorcerer with the Stunning Fist feat, neither its spell save DCs nor the save DC for its stunning attacks would be affected.

Improved Darkvision (Ex): At 2nd level, the effective distance of a lurking terror's darkvision improves to 90 feet. (If the lurking terror doesn't already have darkvision, it gains darkvision out to 60 feet).

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): At 3rd level, a lurking terror can use the Hide skill even while being observed, as long as it has cover or concealment.

TABLE 3-9: THE LURKING TERROR

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	Deathly power
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	Improved darkvision
3rd	+2	+1	+1	+3	Hide in plain sight

MASTER OF RADIANCE

Masters of radiance channel the pure, undiluted power of the sun.

Often originating in a good-aligned druid sect that reveres the sun, they have a holy purpose to scour the earth clean of undead.

Wielding the sun's radiance as a weapon, they are the bane of any evil creature that lurks in the darkness.

Most masters of radiance are druids, due to their historical connection to sun-worshipping sects.

Clerics with the Animal or Plant domain have Knowledge (nature) as a class skill and can easily qualify to enter the class; such clerics often revere Pelor or another sun deity and choose Sun as their second domain.

Some cleric/rangers and even rare paladin/rangers can also qualify for this class, bringing a combination of holy zeal and reverence for nature to their crusade against the undead.

Other characters rarely have the combination of skills and spellcasting to become masters of radiance.

NPC masters of radiance prefer to work proactively against evil, seeking out the lairs of undead and other darkness-dwelling monsters and destroying them with ruthless efficiency.

They often cluster in druid sects to pool their efforts, and frequently ally themselves with other religious groups that share their outlook, such as temples of Pelor.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of radiance, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast daylight as a divine spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of radiance's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master of radiance prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of radiance gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, a master of radiance gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats and so on; but see Turn Undead, below).

If she had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a master of radiance, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Turn Undead (Su): Master of radiance class levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant the ability to turn undead for the purpose of determining the character's effective cleric level for turning.

See Turn or Rebuke Undead, page 159 of the Player's Handbook.

For example, a 7th-level cleric/5th-level master of radiance turns undead as a 12th-level cleric.

Radiant Aura (Su): A master of radiance can emanate an aura of brilliant light that weakens undead creatures.

The aura provides bright illumination in a 30-foot radius around the character, and shadowy illumination for an additional 30 feet beyond that.

Creatures that take penalties in bright light also take them while within the radius of the bright aura.

In addition, undead creatures within the radius of bright light take a -2 penalty on attack rolls, damage rolls, and saving throws.

Activating the radiant aura is a free action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

While her radiant aura is active, a master of radiance casts spells with the light descriptor at +2 caster level.

A master of radiance can use this ability once per day at 1st level, twice per day at 3rd level, and three times per day at 5th level.

Each use lasts 1 minute.

The radiant aura is the equivalent of a 5th-level spell with the light descriptor for the purpose of interacting with spells and effects with the darkness descriptor.

Searing Light (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, a master of radiance can use searing light as a standard action once per round as long as her radiant aura is active.

Treat the character's caster level for this effect as equal to her highest divine caster level, including the +2 caster level adjustment for the radiant aura (for example, a 7th-level druid/2nd-level master of radiance would use this effect as a 10th-level spellcaster).

Beam of Sunlight (Sp): A 5th-level master of radiance can evoke a dazzling beam of intense light (the equivalent of a beam from the sunbeam spell) once per round as a full-round action as long as her radiant aura is active.

Treat the character's caster level for this effect as equal to her highest divine caster level, including the +2 caster level adjustment for the radiant aura (for example, a 7th-level druid/5th-level master of radiance would use this effect as a 13th-level spellcaster).

MASTER OF SHROUDS

The master of shrouds is an evil spellcaster who magically seizes incorporeal undead and sets them to do her bidding. Plucking vile creatures such as wraiths and shadows from their restless haunts, she summons them to her presence and commands them to work her will.

Furious at their forced servitude, the wrathful undead spread fear and death in their wake.

Most masters of shrouds have experience as clerics.

Paladins never become masters of shrouds, though ex-paladins may do so, particularly if they turn far enough from their lawful good roots to become blackguards.

Multiclass clerics are also common followers of this path, including cleric/fighters and cleric/rogues.

A small number of cleric/necromancer/mystic theurges take up the role of master of shrouds at their highest levels.

NPC masters of shrouds operate in secret, pursuing their evil plans under cover of darkness.

They may work individually or in groups, depending on their alignment.

They rarely stay in one place for long, and rarely work in groups larger than four, to avoid attracting too much attention from paladins and good clerics, not to mention hunters of the dead.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master of shrouds, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Save Bonus: Will +5.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks, Spellcraft 5 ranks.

Feats: Augment Summoning, Spell Focus (conjuration).

Spells: Able to cast protection from good as a divine spell.

Special: Able to rebuke undead.

CLASS SKILLS

The master of shrouds's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master of shrouds prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Masters of shrouds gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, a master of shrouds gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats and so on; but see Rebuke Undead, below).

If she had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a master of shrouds, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Extra Rebuking (Ex): A master of shrouds may use her rebuke undead ability four additional times per day.

Rebuke Undead (Su): Master of shrouds class levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant the ability to rebuke undead for the purpose of determining the character's effective cleric level for rebuking.

For example, a 7th-level cleric/5th-level master of shrouds rebukes undead as a 12th-level cleric.

Summon Undead (Sp): At 2nd level and higher, a master of shrouds can summon one or more incorporeal undead creatures a number of times per day equal to 3 + her Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

This ability is otherwise identical to the summon monster spells, except that a master of shrouds adds her Charisma modifier (if positive) to the duration of the effect.

At 2nd level, a master of shrouds can summon a single shadow.

At 4th level, she can summon one wraith or two shadows.

At 6th level, she can summon one spectre, two wraiths, or four shadows.

At 8th level, she can summon one greater shadow, two spectres, four wraiths, or four shadows.

At 10th level, she can summon one dread wraith, two greater shadows, four spectres, four wraiths, or four shadows.

Improved Summoning (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, a master of shrouds summons more powerful undead creatures than normal.

Whenever she casts a summon undead spell or when she uses her summon undead class ability, the summoned creature gains a +2 enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls.

TABLE 3-4: THE MASTER OF SHROUDS

MASTER VAMPIRE

Any vampire can create spawn, but it takes a very special vampire to rule over an entire gang of minions. The master vampire uses its force of personality to control more spawn than any normal vampire could hope to rule. As the name suggests, the master vampire must be a vampire, but the class of the master vampire can vary greatly.

Master vampires are most common among charismatic character classes, including sorcerer, blackguard, rogue, and bard.

An NPC master vampire invariably rules a gang, tribe, or clan of lesser vampires and vampire spawn.

It uses these minions as soldiers, guardians, or gatherers, depending on its goals.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master vampire, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Special: The character must be a vampire (not a vampire spawn).

Special: The character must control at least two vampires or vampire spawn that it has created by means of its create spawn ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The master vampire's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the master vampire prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Master vampires gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells Per Day/Spells Known: At each odd-numbered level, a master vampire gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if it had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which it belonged before adding the prestige class level.

It does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If the creature had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a master vampire, it must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

More Spawn (Su): A master vampire adds its Charisma modifier to its Hit Dice to determine how many spawn it can have enslaved.

For example, a master vampire with 10 HD and a Charisma of 18 is treated as having 14 HD for the purpose of determining its limit of controlled spawn, and therefore can enslave up to 28 HD of spawned vampires.

Turn Resistance (Ex): A master vampire's turn resistance is increased by 1 for each of its spawn within 60 feet.

Enhanced Spawn (Su): Any vampire or vampire spawn created by a master vampire of 2nd level or higher gains a +2 enhancement bonus to its Strength and Dexterity scores. If the master vampire is destroyed or releases the spawn from service, the spawn loses this bonus.

Master's Chosen (Su): At 3rd level, a master vampire can designate a single vampire or a vampire spawn that it created with its create spawn ability as its chosen.

Doing this requires a 1-hour ritual during which the chosen must consume a small portion of the master's flesh.

The chosen gains a +6 enhancement bonus to its Strength and Dexterity scores.

The master can remove this designation as a standard action.

If the master vampire is destroyed or releases the chosen from service, the chosen loses this bonus.

TABLE 3-10: THE MASTER VAMPIRE

PALE MASTER

Necromancy is usually a poor choice for arcane spellcasters—those who really want to master the deathless arts almost always pursue divine means.

However, there is an alternative for those who desire power over the undead but refuse to give up their arcane craft completely.

Enter the pale master, who draws on a font of special lore that provides a macabre power all its own.

Virtually all pale masters are former wizards or sorcerers, due to the arcane talents required for entry into the class.

Some have also dabbled in divine magic, perhaps multiclassing as clerics, before following this path.

NPC pale masters head special strike groups containing lesser undead, supplemented as needed with more powerful summoned undead.

Sometimes they serve or act in collusion with powerful evil characters, such as true necromancers or divine spellcasters with Death as one of their domains.

Wherever pale masters go, undead follow.

Often it is difficult to tell a pale master from the undead that he surrounds himself with.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a pale master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skill: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feat: Skill Focus (Knowledge [religion]).

Spells: Able to cast command undead and vampiric touch as arcane spells.

Special: The candidate must have spent three or more days locked in a tomb with animate undead.

This contact may be peaceful or violent.

A character who is slain by the undead and later raised still meets the requirement, although the resulting level loss may delay compliance with other prerequisites.

CLASS SKILLS

The pale master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int). Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the pale master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Pale masters gain proficiency with light and medium armor.

They gain no proficiency with any weapons or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, a pale master gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If he had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a pale master, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Animate Dead (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, a pale master begins to exercise control over the undead.

Once per day, he can use animate dead, as the spell, without need of a material component.

Use the pale master's highest arcane caster level as the caster level for this effect.

All other level restrictions of animate dead still apply.

For example, a 6th-level sorcerer/3rd-level pale master can animate up to 16 HD of undead with a single use of this ability.

Likewise, he can control up to 32 HD of undead created using this ability, the animate dead spell, or both.

Darkvision (Ex): At 3rd level, the dark begins to lose its mysteries to a pale master, who gains darkvision out to 60 feet.

If he already has darkvision, its effective distance increases by 60 feet.

Undead Armor Affinity (Ex): A pale master has an instinctive feel for undead armor.

At 4th level and higher, he treats the undead armor as if its arcane spell failure chance were 10% less.

At 8th level, this reduction improves to 20%.

Control Undead (Sp): Once per day, a pale master of 5th level or higher can gain control over an undead creature (with Hit Dice equal to or less than his highest arcane caster level) by making a successful touch attack against it. The undead creature receives no saving throw to resist this effect.

The control lasts for 1 round per class level.

When the duration expires, the undead creature returns to its former allegiance, if any.

The newly controlled undead can still be turned or rebuked as normal.

This effect is otherwise identical to the control undead spell.

This ability is in addition to the number of undead a pale master can control using his animate dead ability.

Deathless Vigor (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, a pale master's body becomes more akin to the undying flesh of his undead associates.

The character gains a +4 bonus on Fortitude saves except against effects that also work on objects.

Undead Graft (Su): At 6th level, a pale master gives in to terrible necrophiliac urges.

He cuts off his arm and replaces it with an undead prosthetic, which may be skeletal in form or preserved flesh stitched in place like that of a flesh golem.

Regardless of its composition, the graft grants a +4 inherent bonus to the character's Strength score.

Additionally, the undead graft allows him to deliver horrible touch attacks.

A pale master can use this ability once per day at 6th level, twice per day at 8th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

The character must declare that he is using this ability before making the attack roll; a failed attack roll still expends that use of the ability.

Each time he makes a touch attack using this ability, the pale master can select from any of the effects described below for which he meets the prerequisite class level.

The save DC for the pale master's touch attacks is 10 + his pale master class level + his Cha modifier.

Paralyzing Touch: Any living foe except for an elf that is hit by a pale master's touch attack must succeed on a Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4+1 rounds.

Prerequisite: Class level 6th.

Weakening Touch: A living foe hit by a pale master's touch attack takes 1d6 points of Strength damage (no save).

A creature reduced to Strength 0 dies.

Prerequisite: Class level 7th.

Degenerative Touch: A living foe hit by a pale master's touch attack receives one negative level (no save), and must make a Fortitude save 24 hours later to avoid losing the level permanently.

Prerequisite: Class level 8th.

Destructive Touch: A living foe hit by a pale master's touch attack must succeed on a Fortitude save or take 1d6 points of Constitution drain.

Prerequisite: Class level 9th.

Deathless Master's Touch: A living foe of up to one size category larger than a pale master hit by the pale master's touch attack must succeed on a Fortitude save or die.

A slain creature automatically animates 1 round later as a zombie (see page 265 of the Monster Manual) and is under the pale master's control as if he had animated it.

Undead created using this power do not count against a pale master's HD total for controlling undead.

Prerequisite: Class level 10th.

Tough as Bone (Ex): On reaching 7th level, a pale master takes on even more of the qualities of an undead creature. He becomes immune to disease, nonlethal damage, and stunning.

Undead Cohort: A 9th-level pale master gains the service of a loyal undead cohort.

The cohort follows the rules for undead cohorts described under the Undead Leadership feat (see page 31).

The pale master does not gain any followers from this ability, only a single cohort.
 The cohort's effective character level is determined by the pale master's Leadership score and character level exactly as if the cohort had been gained by means of the Undead Leadership feat.
 Deathless Mastery (Ex): On reaching 10th level, a pale master gains the virtues of his deathless arts.

His body becomes partly mummified (though he is not truly undead), and he becomes immune to poison, sleep effects, paralysis, death effects, critical hits, ability drain, and energy drain, as well as damage to his physical ability scores (Str, Dex, and Con).
 He still needs to breathe, eat, and sleep as normal for his type, and he still ages normally.

SACRED PURIFIER

Sacred purifiers are priestly characters who specialize in destroying undead. They belong to a loose-knit order affiliated with the church of Pelor (or another similar faith), though they disdain hierarchical bureaucracy in favor of action and forthrightness.

Many pursue an “act first, ask questions later” approach, which occasionally frustrates the more traditional-minded clerics in the church's chain of command.

Most sacred purifiers are clerics (often of Pelor), but paladins have also been known to take up the call.

Fighter/clerics also make good sacred purifiers, as do barbarian/clerics (who appreciate the order's forthright nature).

NPC sacred purifiers may work alone or in groups, either with other purifiers, with devotees of Pelor, or with any who share their goals.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a sacred purifier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Base Will Save Bonus: +5.

Skill: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feat: Extra Turning.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: Able to turn undead.

CLASS SKILLS

The sacred purifier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sacred purifier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Sacred purifiers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, a sacred purifier gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats and so on; but see Turn Undead, below).

If he had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a sacred purifier, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Greater Turning (Su): Once per day, a sacred purifier can perform a greater turning against an undead in place of a regular turning.

The greater turning is like a normal turning, except that the undead creatures that would be turned are destroyed instead.

If the character already has this ability (such as from the Sun domain), he can use it one additional time per day.

Turn Undead (Su): Sacred purifier class levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant the ability to turn undead for the purpose of determining the character's effective cleric level for turning.

See Turn or Rebuke Undead, page 159 of the Player's Handbook.

For example, a 7th-level cleric/5th-level sacred purifier turns undead as a 12th-level cleric.

Sacred Strike (Su): Whenever a sacred purifier of 3rd level or higher successfully strikes an undead creature in melee, he can spend a turning attempt as a free action to deal an extra 2d6 points of damage with that attack.

He can deliver such sacred strikes any number of times per round, but no more than once per attack.

If the sacred purifier accidentally attempts a sacred strike against a nonundead creature, the turning attempt is lost with no effect.

Positive Energy Burst (Su): As a full-round action, a 5th-level sacred purifier can spend two turning attempts to create a positive energy burst.

This energy deals 10d6 points of damage to all undead creatures within a 30-foot-radius burst centered on the sacred purifier.

A successful Reflex save (DC 10 + sacred purifier's class level + sacred purifier's Cha modifier) halves this damage.

TOMB WARDEN

Tomb wardens serve as selfless, undying protectors of the dead.

Each one dedicates itself to the eternal guardianship of a tomb, graveyard, or similar repository of the dead, and gains great powers while within that area.

Most tomb wardens are mummies, because the role comes naturally to them.

Advanced wights may become tomb wardens, and some privacy-seeking liches also take up this mantle.

On rare occasions, a ghost might be doomed to protect a crypt or graveyard, and might become a tomb warden as part of its service.

NPC tomb wardens are always solitary, private individuals. They have little use for companions, though some keep minions nearby for additional assistance in their appointed task.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tomb warden, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Type: Undead.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Base Save Bonus: Will +5.

Feat: Toughness.

Special: A tomb warden must dedicate itself to the protection of a tomb, graveyard, or similar resting place of the dead.

CLASS SKILLS

The tomb warden's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Hide (Dex), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tomb warden prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tomb wardens gain proficiency with simple and martial weapons, and with light, medium, and heavy armor.

Turn Immunity (Ex): As long as it is within the tomb, graveyard, or similar resting place that it protects, a tomb warden is immune to turning or rebuking attempts.

It can still be bolstered as normal.

Tomb Sense (Su): While it is within the tomb, graveyard, or similar resting place it protects, a tomb warden of 2nd level or higher automatically knows the precise location of all intruders within that tomb.

This ability is similar to blindsense, except that it functions without regard to line of effect and its effect extends to every portion of the tomb.

Power of the Dead (Su): While it is within the tomb, graveyard, or similar resting place it protects, a 3rd-level tomb warden can call upon the spirits of the dead to gain insight from them.

This ability requires only a free action to activate, and grants the tomb warden an insight bonus on attack rolls, damage rolls, and saving throws equal to its Charisma modifier (minimum +1).

A tomb warden can use this ability once per day, and its effects last for 10 minutes.

EX-TOMB WARDENS

If a tomb warden leaves the tomb it protects for longer than seven days, or if it relinquishes guardianship of the tomb, it loses all class features (except for armor proficiencies).

It must undergo atonement to regain these class features.

TABLE 3-11: THE TOMB WARDEN

TRUE NECROMANCER

Power corrupts.

Power over life and death corrupts absolutely.

The power to raise an undying servant from the husk of the formerly living is darkly tempting—and certainly evil.

Those who seek such unyielding obedience from the dead willingly tread the path of necromancy.

Characters who wish to become true necromancers must take levels in both arcane and divine spellcasting classes, usually cleric and wizard or cleric and sorcerer.

Only then do they begin their sinister schooling, learning how to combine the foulest aspects of both disciplines into a single, necromantic whole.

NPC true necromancers are usually found singly—living in an abandoned graveyard, hidden in the depths of a centuries-old catacomb, or lurking in an unhallowed mausoleum.

Occasionally, true necromancers gather into small societies or evil associations, but eventually most such groups are stamped out.

At least, so hope those concerned with the triumph of good over evil in the world.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a true necromancer, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feat: Spell Focus (necromancy).

Spells: Able to cast summon undead II as a divine spell and command undead as an arcane spell.

Special: Able to rebuke undead.

Special: Access to the Death domain.

CLASS SKILLS

The true necromancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the true necromancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: True necromancers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: A true necromancer gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in either an arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class, a divine spellcasting class she belonged to before adding the prestige class, or both, according to the accompanying table.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats and so on; but see Improved Rebuking and Necromantic Prowess, below).

If she had more than one arcane or divine spellcasting class before becoming a true necromancer, she must decide to which class she adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day and spells known.

Rebuke Undead (Su): True necromancer class levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant the ability to rebuke undead for the purpose of determining the character's effective cleric level for rebuking.

See Turn or Rebuke Undead, page 159 of the Player's Handbook.

For example, a 5th-level cleric/3rd-level sorcerer/2nd-level true necromancer rebukes undead as a 7th-level cleric.

The bonus from her necromantic prowess ability, once it is gained, also applies.

Create Undead (Sp): On attaining 2nd level, a true necromancer can cast create undead once per day, as the spell of the same name.

She can use this ability one additional time per day at 5th level and higher.

She must still supply the requisite material components. The true necromancer's caster level equals her character level plus the bonus from her necromantic prowess ability, once it is gained.

Necromantic Prowess (Ex): At 3rd level, a true necromancer gains unsurpassed power over death. When she rebukes undead, casts a necromancy spell, or uses a spell-like ability that mimics a necromancy spell, her effective caster level increases.

The bonus is +1 at 3rd level, +2 at 6th level, +3 at 9th level, and +4 at 12th level and higher.

Zone of Desecration (Su): At 4th level, a true necromancer begins to exert her authority over undead.

This aura is identical to the effects of the desecrate spell (see page 218 of the Player's Handbook) except that it affects only allied undead.

Major Desecration (Su): At 7th level, a true necromancer extends her authority over undead.

The supernatural aura of negative energy surrounding her (see Zone of Desecration, above) now extends to a radius of 10 feet per true necromancer class level.

Create Greater Undead (Sp): On reaching 8th level, a true necromancer can cast create greater undead (see page 215 of the Player's Handbook) once per day, as the spell.

She can use this ability one additional time per day at 11th level and higher.

She must still supply the requisite material component. The true necromancer's caster level equals her character level plus the bonus from her necromantic prowess ability.

Horrid Wilting (Sp): At 10th level and higher, a true necromancer can use horrid wilting once per day, with a caster level equal to her character level plus her bonus from the necromantic prowess ability.

Energy Drain (Sp): At 13th level and higher, a true necromancer can use energy drain once per day, with a caster level equal to her character level plus her bonus from the necromantic prowess ability.

Wail of the Banshee (Sp): At 14th level, a true necromancer can use wail of the banshee once per day, with a caster level equal to her character level plus her bonus from the necromantic prowess ability.

LORDS OF DARKNESS (3.0)

DARKMASK

Most of the surface drow worship Vhaeraun. Some strike a balance between their faith and their skills at stealth, becoming a specialized sort of cleric/rogue called a darkmask.

The darkmasks are the elite of Vhaeraun's clergy, and they are called upon to handle very special missions for the Masked Lord.

A darkmask is a divine spellcaster skilled in the arts of hiding, sneaking, and stealing.

Mysterious and secretive, the darkmasks are the enigmatic special agents of Vhaeraun, flitting from place to place under the shadow of night to enact the will of Vhaeraun. They usually wear black masks and favor shades of black and gray in their clothing.

Most darkmasks have levels in rogue and cleric, but a few rangers and ranger/clerics have heeded the call of Vhaeraun.

Very few arcane spellcasters become darkmasks, choosing to develop their powers along different lines.

Darkmasks rarely work together, although a rumor is circulating about one group of drow in Cormanthor that is led by four darkmasks of equal power.

This group has no permanent camp and spends most of its time hunting Lolth raiders who come to the surface.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a darkmask, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Drow or half-drow.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 6 ranks, Pick Pocket 4 ranks, Wilderness Lore 2 ranks.

Feats: Daylight Adaptation (drow only), Stealthy.

Special: Must have survived a combat encounter against one or more clerics of Lolth.

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Patron: Vhaeraun.

CLASS SKILLS

The darkmask's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the darkmask prestige class.

Spell-like abilities use the darkmask's divine caster level.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Darkmasks gain no proficiency in weapons, armor, or shields of any type.

Spellcasting: A darkmask continues training in divine magic while practicing his secret skills.

Thus, when a new darkmask level is gained, the character increases his spellcasting ability as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of rebuking or commanding undead, favored enemy, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of darkmask to the level of some other divine spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before he became a darkmask, he must decide to which class he adds each level of darkmask for purposes of determining spellcasting when he adds the new level.

Darkfire (Sp): A darkmask can use the darkfire spell once per day as a spell-like ability.

Pass without Trace (Sp): A darkmask can use the pass without trace spell once per day as a spell-like ability.

Change Self (Sp): A darkmask of 2nd level or higher can use the change self spell once per day as a spell-like ability.

Skill Focus (Ex): A 2nd-level darkmask gains the Skill Focus feat, which must be applied to one of the darkmask class skills.

Dark Embrace (Su): A darkmask of 3rd level or higher has the ability to invoke dark embrace once per day, which manifests as a mask of shadow that girds the darkmask's face.

The darkmask then casts a divine spell, which is absorbed by the mask of shadow; the spell must be a touch spell or a target spell.

As a free action, the darkmask may command the mask to fly at a single creature within 100 feet, at which point that creature is affected by the absorbed spell (saving throws and spell resistance apply normally to the spell) and the dark embrace ends.

The dark embrace can remain for 10 minutes.

If it vanishes before its stored spell is unleashed, the spell is lost.

Sneak Attack (Ex): A darkmask of 3rd level or higher gains the sneak attack ability (as per the rogue class feature).

Resist Illusions (Ex): A darkmask of 4th level or higher gains a +4 bonus on saving throws against illusions.

Cloak of Shadows (Su): A darkmask of 4th level or higher can create a cloak seemingly woven out of mundane shadows.

The cloak provides a resistance bonus on saving throws and a profane bonus on Hide checks equal to +1 per class level of the darkmask.

The cloak lasts 1 round per class level of the darkmask and can be created once per day.

Bladebend (Su): This defensive ability causes the weapon of a single creature attacking the darkmask to turn back and strike its wielder.

The darkmask selects the target creature as a free action. If the target creature attacks the darkmask, it makes an attack roll as normal, but the attack is made against the target creature's AC, and if the attack succeeds, the target creature suffers the damage instead of the darkmask.

This ability can be activated once per day and lasts 5 rounds. It only affects slashing and piercing weapons, and does not affect natural weapons of any kind.

ENTROPIST

As the Karanoks explore their new spellcasting abilities, some of the most advanced students gain an attunement to the body of Entropy or its daughters.

These students develop strange powers and new uses for their divine link, and although doing so retards their progress as spellcasters, they see their new abilities as worth the cost.

An entropist is a cleric of the aspect of Tiamat known as Entropy, which is manifested as a large sphere of annihilation.

Obsessed with destroying wizards, they harness the power of the sphere and learn how to protect themselves against its effects.

Like all clerics of Entropy, they wear white robes, sometimes marked with a single black circle.

Most entropists have gained some levels as a cleric, and most are aristocrats from the Karanok family in Luthcheq. It is possible for others to join this prestige class if they prove their worth to the Karanoks and their loyalty to Entropy.

Sorcerers, wizards, elves, and dwarves are never entropists. Entropists work together and with clerics of Entropy.

Most followers of Entropy hold them in awe for the powers they possess and their strange link to the Great Nothing.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an entropist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful evil.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Scry 4 ranks.

Feats: Education, Great Fortitude.

Special: Must have killed an elf, sorcerer, or wizard, either in combat or by burning in a witchweed execution.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 4th-level divine spells.

Patron: Entropy (Tiamat).

CLASS SKILLS

The entropist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the entropist prestige class.

Spell-like abilities use the entropist's divine caster level.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Entropists gain no proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields of any type.
Spells per Day: An entropist continues training in divine magic while attuning himself to the powers of entropy. Thus, when the character reaches 2nd level or 4th level in this class, he increases his spellcasting ability as if he had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of rebuking or commanding undead, favored enemy, and so on).

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became an entropist, she must decide when she reaches 2nd level or 4th level to which class she adds these spellcasting levels.

Control Sphere (Su): An entropist has the ability to control a sphere of annihilation as if he were using a talisman of the sphere.

Sanctity of Body (Su): An entropist is protected against spells or effects that would destroy or radically transform the shape of his body, such as disintegrate, implosion, petrification, or polymorph.

These effects cannot affect the entropist unless he wishes them to.

He is also unaffected by a sphere of annihilation, passing through it as if it were empty air.

A hand of entropy or eye of entropy (see below) has no effect on him.

Arcane Resistance (Su): An entropist of 2nd level or higher gains a +2 bonus on all saving throws against arcane spells, whether they originate from the Weave or the Shadow Weave.

Hand of Entropy (Sp): By expending an available spell slot, an entropist of 3rd level or higher channels the power of Entropy into a black haze around one hand.

The hand of entropy can be used to make a melee touch attack as a standard action, and deals 1d6 points of damage + 1 point per level of the spell slot used to create it.

The hand can be used on the round it is created and lasts up to a number of rounds equal to the entropist's divine caster level.

For example, a Clr7/Entropist3 could expend a prepared cure moderate wounds spell (2nd level) to create a hand of entropy that deals 1d6+2 points of damage and lasts 10 rounds.

The hand otherwise functions like a touch spell.

The entropist can use this ability multiple times per day as long as a spell slot is expended each time.

Arcane Disruption (Sp): Once per day, an entropist of 4th level or higher can create a magical field of energy, which manifests as a slight smoky haze that interferes with the casting of arcane spells.

The field is a 30-foot emanation centered on the entropist. Anyone attempting to cast arcane spells within the field must succeed at a Concentration check as if casting on the defensive (DC 15 + spell level).

If the check fails, the spell is lost.

The field lasts for a number of rounds equal to the entropist's divine caster level.

Eye of Entropy (Su): Once per day, for a maximum of 5 rounds, an entropist of 5th level can create a miniature sphere of entropy.

The eye of entropy is absolutely black, 2 inches in diameter, and can be moved up to 30 feet by the entropist as a standard action.

Against objects, the eye deals 3d6 points of damage, bypassing the object's hardness.

Against creatures, the entropist must make a ranged touch attack to hit, and if successful the eye deals 3d6 points of damage to the target (Fortitude half, DC 12 + the entropist's Wis modifier); this bypasses damage reduction since it is a magical effect.

The eye appears in the entropist's square when it is created, and can be moved and used to attack on the round it is formed.

If the entropist stops concentrating on the eye, it vanishes.

SPUR LORD

Cyricists who survive to reach higher levels usually show devotion to their deity by advancing in the arcane devotee, divine champion, divine disciple, divine seeker, or hierophant prestige class.

In recent years a unique military order has arisen within the church called the Company of the Ebon Spur, composed of fighters and warriors of at least 3rd level who favor armor spikes and shield spikes.

Fanatics to the extreme, this group is led by evil men and women with the ability to channel Cyric's power.

These strange and terrifying agents of the Dark Sun are called Spur Lords.

The Spur Lords are the elite zealots of the church, wielding the dark power of Cyric and commanding the attention of even the most fanatical clerics.

Some consider them the future dark saints of the church, destined to become powerful extraplanar servants of Cyric after their deaths.

Protected by Cyric's power against threats within the church, the Spur Lords are free to pursue their agendas and watch over the trained soldiers in their care.

Because they can ignore clerical powers with impunity, the Spur Lords work with the clerics without fear of betrayal to promote the cause of Cyric.

Some Spur Lords pursue their own course, with a small contingent of Ebon Spurs in tow.

When not acting as the martial arm of the unholy power of Cyric, a Spur Lord is charismatic, confident, and persuasive. Most Spur Lords are fighters, rangers, rogues, or some combination thereof.

Clerics have never been known to become Spur Lords, perhaps because their connection to Cyric prematurely spoils the part of their soul that Cyric must touch to create a leader of this caliber.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Spur Lord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Bluff 3 ranks, Concentration 3 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks, Sense Motive 3 ranks, Tumble 5 ranks.

Patron: Cyric.

Feats: Iron Will, Leadership, Lightning Reflexes, Quick Draw.

Special: The character must have either made peaceful contact with an evil outsider that served Cyric or received a prophetic dream from Cyric.

CLASS SKILLS

The Spur Lord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Spur Lord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Spur Lords gain proficiency with the longsword and one other simple or martial weapon of their choice.

They gain no proficiency in armor or shields of any type.

Dark Bond (Su): A Spur Lord is immune to any harmful spell, spell-like ability, or supernatural ability that originates from the power of Cyric.

Such effects act as if the Spur Lord is not included in their area.

This includes spells waiting to be triggered (such as glyph of warding) but not magic items created by worshipers of Cyric.

Whenever this ability is triggered, a brief manifestation of a skull surrounded by black flames appears above the Spur Lord's head.

Secret Blade (Su): At 2nd level, a Spur Lord has the ability to magically hide an item as if he were wearing a glove of storing.

Only one item can be concealed at a time in this manner, although the Spur Lord can cause the item to reappear in either hand as a free action, regardless of which hand was used to store the item.

Dark Flames (Su): A Spur Lord of 3rd level or higher can invoke black flames of negative energy from his hands. The flames are a ranged touch attack with a range of 10 feet and deal 1d6 points of damage per Hit Die of the user (maximum 15d6).

Undead are healed rather than damaged by this effect.

A Spur Lord can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma modifier.

Cyric's Glory (Sp): This ability allows a Spur Lord of 4th level or higher to temporarily increase his presence and determination to phenomenal levels once per day.

He gains +4 to Charisma and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves.

Cyric's glory lasts for a number of minutes equal to 1 + the character's (newly improved) Charisma modifier.

Flesh of the Prince (Su): Usable once per day, this extreme manifestation of Cyric's power shows that the Spur Lord has reached the pinnacle of Cyric's favor.

When it is invoked, his skin turns chalk-white and his eyes turn dark and blaze with infernal energy.

In addition to all the abilities of the Cyric's glory ability, any weapon wielded by the Spur Lord becomes a +1 flaming weapon, trailing dark flames (this does not increase the bonus of a weapon with an enhancement bonus, but does add the flaming ability if the weapon does not have it).

The Spur Lord also gains a +2 natural armor bonus and a +2 deflection bonus to AC.

This ability lasts for a number of rounds equal to 1 + the character's (newly improved) Charisma modifier.

When the power ends, the Spur Lord is fatigued until he is able to rest for 1 minute.

Using this ability does not count toward his ability to call upon his Cyric's glory ability.

THAYAN KNIGHT

While the Red Wizards are not opposed to blasting their opponents with deadly spells or shredding the minds of their enemies with dark magic, there are times when they need protectors who have mastered the art of swordplay. These protectors are the Thayan knights, familiar with magic and loyal to none but the tattooed mages.

The Thayan knights act as bodyguards and enforcers for the Red Wizards and as an extension of their reach.

They lead common Thayan troops into battle and help guard the wizard enclaves.

Although they are referred to as knights, they have no code of conduct, and the only rule that binds them is that their lives are worth nothing compared to the safety of the Red Wizards.

Almost all Thayan knights are fighters, although monks and rangers have been known to pursue this career.

Barbarians are typically too reckless to concentrate on defense, and the Red Wizards consider other individuals too weak for the duties of a Thayan knight.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Thayan knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human.

Region: Thay.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.
 Skills: Intimidate 2 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks, Knowledge (local, Thay) 2 ranks.
 Social Status: No slaves.
 Feats: Iron Will, Weapon Focus (longsword).
 Alignment: Any nongood.
 Special: Sworn allegiance to the Red Wizards of Thay.

CLASS SKILLS

The Thayan knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (local, Thay), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Thayan knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Thayan knights are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Horrors of Thay (Ex): Because of long exposure to the cruelty of her homeland, a Thayan knight gains a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm effects.

At 4th level, these bonuses increase to +4 and +2, respectively.

None of these bonuses apply against attacks from Red Wizards.

Zulkir's Favor (Su): At 1st level, a knight undergoes a long and painful tattooing ritual.

This magic tattoo, placed either on the back or the forehead, provides a +2 resistance bonus on Reflex saves. The tattoo also marks the knight as someone loyal to the Red Wizards.

The knight automatically fails all saving throws against mind-affecting spells cast by a Red Wizard.

When the tattoo is visible, the knight gains a +2 morale bonus on Intimidate checks as an extraordinary ability. The tattoo does not count as using a space for a magic item, but it does count toward the limit of magic tattoos permitted by the create magic tattoo spell.

Zulkir's Defender (Ex): A knight of 2nd level gains a +2 morale bonus on attacks and damage against any creature that attacks or that she has previously seen attack a Red Wizard.

Fighter Feat: At 3rd level, a Thayan knight may choose any one feat (except Weapon Specialization) from the fighter bonus feat list in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook or any feat with the [Fighter] descriptor from the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting.

Final Stand (Su): Once per day as a standard action, a knight of 4th level or higher can inspire her troops.

Allies within 10 feet of the knight gain 2d10 temporary hit points.

This ability affects a number of creatures equal to the knight's class level + Charisma modifier and lasts the same number of rounds.

Zulkir's Champion (Su): At 5th level, the knight receives a large magic tattoo across her face signifying her devotion to the protection of the Red Wizards.

Once per day, the knight can take a +2 luck bonus on a single saving throw.

This bonus can be taken after the die is rolled and after other modifiers have been applied to the roll.

When the tattoo is visible, the knight gains a +4 morale bonus on Intimidate checks as an extraordinary ability.

The tattoo does not count as using a space for a magic item, but it does count toward the limit of magic tattoos permitted by the create magic tattoo spell.

ZHENTARIM SKYIMAGE

Every Zhentarim caravan is said to be watched over by a spellcaster of some skill.

Many mages join the Zhentarim for the political power it offers and the access to a large library of spells.

Some of these sorcerers and wizards become Zhentarim skymages, powerful spellcasters who ride strange flying beasts and serve the Zhentarim by performing acts of espionage and causing unrest on the frontiers of civilization.

A Zhentarim skymage is an arcane spellcaster who serves the Zhentarim as a spy or armed deterrent.

Easily recognized by their strange and exotic flying mounts, skymages blast their foes from extreme range, can read the minds of possible enemies, and frequently spy on foes or summon monsters to harass settlements without drawing attention to the Zhentarim.

Most Zhentarim skymages are wizards, with a good number of sorcerers in the ranks.

A small number of bards become skymages, despite the rigid lawful nature of the Zhentarim.

There are few rivalries among the skymages, mostly focused on the merits of different flying steeds.

Owners of larger mounts brag about their size and power, while those who ride smaller creatures tout the better speed and maneuverability of their pets.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Zhentarim skymage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Diplomacy 2 ranks, Handle Animal 2 ranks, Knowledge (geography) 2 ranks, Ride 2 ranks, Scry 3 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Iron Will, Mounted Combat.

Special: Member in good standing of the Zhentarim.

Spellcasting: Must be able to cast detect thoughts, invisibility, and suggestion, plus one summon monster spell of 3rd level or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

The Zhentarim skymage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Zhentarim skymage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Zhentarim skymages gain no proficiency in weapons, armor, or shields of any type.

Spells per Day: A skymage continues training in magic while developing a bond with a flying monster and making political advances within the Black Network.

Thus, when a new skymage level is gained, the character increases his spellcasting ability as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bardic knowledge, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

This essentially means that he adds the level of skymage to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known (if appropriate), spells added to his spellbook, familiar abilities, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a skymage, he must decide to which class he adds each level of skymage for purposes of determining spellcasting when he adds the new level.

Bonus Scrolls (Ex): At each level of Zhentarim skymage gained, the Zhentarim awards the character a scroll of two spells of any level he could cast.

If the character has a spellbook, he may instead add these spells to his spellbook immediately at no cost or time spent. Flying Mount (Ex): A Zhentarim skymage can call a flying monster to serve as his personal mount.

The mount cannot have more Hit Dice than the Zhentarim skymage's class level + his Charisma modifier + 1.

The mount serves the skymage loyally as if it were a druid's or ranger's animal companion, and carries the skymage into combat if desired (if the creature is strong enough to carry the skymage).

Should a flying mount die, the character can replace it after gaining two levels in any spellcasting class.

Necromancer skymages sometimes use undead monsters as mounts (including the animated corpse of a slain flying mount), and certain powerful conjurer skymages even have enslaved fiends as mounts.

If the skymage suffers permanent Charisma damage or loses enough levels that he could no longer have his flying mount, the mount flees at the first opportunity, often attacking its former master before doing so.

Suitable mounts (and Hit Dice) include chimera (9), criosphinx (10), dire bat (4), dragonne (9), dragons (varies), giant eagle (4), giant owl (4), griffon (7), hieracosphinx (9), hippogriff (3), mantichore (6), nightmare (6), peryton (5; see Monsters of Faerûn), roc (18), sinister (4; see Monsters of Faerûn), spider eater (4), wyvern (7), and yrthak (12).

Flying Feat (Ex): The skymage gains one of the following feats: Flyby Attack, Mounted Archery, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge, or Trample.

The skymage must meet all prerequisites for the feat before it can be selected.

The Flyby Attack feat applies to the mount, not to the skymage, and cannot be used if the skymage is flying without a mount (such as with a fly spell).

Spell Focus (Ex): The skymage gains the Spell Focus feat.

Share Spells (Su): The skymage can share spells with his flying mount as if the mount were his familiar.

This ability only works if the skymage is riding the mount, and a shared spell ends for the mount instantly if the skymage is no longer riding it.

Skill Focus (Ex): The skymage gains the Skill Focus feat, which must be applied to one of the Zhentarim skymage class skills.

Enlarge Spell (Ex): The skymage gains the Enlarge Spell feat.

LORDS OF MADNESS (3.5)

ABOLISHER

I have tracked the foul illithid cult for many months now, have waded through the brainless dead they leave in their wake and the empty settlements from which they have recruited their thralls. Yet each time, they leave behind clues to their weaknesses and hints to their goals, and soon indeed I shall be ready to end their lives in the only way they deserve.

When I am done, nothing shall remain, not even the memory of their taint. They shall not haunt the campfire tales of children. It shall be as if they never were.

—Aurah Lirilian, Circle of the True

The abolisher is more than merely a devoted servant of the natural world.

She is a crusader against that which taints, usurps, and replaces the ordered nature of things with alien desires and monstrous needs.

She opposes aberrations with all her will and might in a constant battle to preserve what is pure in nature from that which lurks beyond the rim of sanity.

BECOMING AN ABOLISHER

Although the ranger class provides the easiest path to becoming an abolisher, most abolishers favor the druid class since it enhances spellcasting and the wild shape class feature.

Rarest are those characters who possess only one level of druid or ranger, yet focus the majority of their time in other classes.

No barbarian abolishers exist, since all abolishers oppose the terrible chaos that personifies the taint of the Far Realm, and cannot allow even the slightest hint of such chaos into their own hearts.

Wisdom (for divine spellcasting and observational skills, and to aid in resisting the terrible mental attacks of aberrations), Charisma (for the various special abolisher abilities), and Strength (to better fight against the enemy) are key abilities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Type: Cannot be an aberration.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Skills: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 4 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 9 ranks.

Feat: Track.

Special: Wild empathy class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the abolisher prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 6th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an abolisher, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Favored Enemy (Ex): At 1st level, your hatred of aberrations grants you a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against aberrations.

Likewise, you gain a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

At 4th level, and then again at 8th level, this bonus increases by 2.

If you possess the favored enemy (aberrations) feature from another source, these bonuses stack.

Wild Shape (Su): You gain the druid ability to use wild shape once per day.

Your abolisher wild shape is somewhat more limited than a full druid's wild shape ability, though, and you are limited to Medium animals.

The ability otherwise works as detailed on page 37 of the Player's Handbook.

As you gain levels, you gain additional uses of this ability per day.

At 4th level, you can use wild shape two times per day, and at 8th level you can do so three times per day.

If you already have wild shape uses from another class, such as druid, these wild shape uses stack.

If you have druid levels, each time you gain a level of abolisher, you add 1 to your effective druid level to determine the maximum Hit Dice of a creature you can wild shape into and how long each use of wild shape lasts. The type and size of animal that you can wild shape into does not improve from abolisher levels.

Animal Companion: If you have an animal companion, your abolisher levels stack with your previous class levels (usually druid or ranger) to determine the animal companion's abilities.

If you do not already have an animal companion, you do not gain one from this ability.

Winds of Nature's Grace (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, you gain a +1 bonus on all saving throws made against attacks from aberrations.

The bonus increases to match your Charisma bonus, if any (minimum of +2) when you use wild shape or other magic to assume the form of an animal, elemental, or plant.

Pierce Aberrant Defense (Ex): Many aberrations possess some degree of spell resistance, and abolishers train to overcome this spell resistance.

Beginning at 3rd level, you gain a +1 bonus on caster level checks made to overcome an aberration's spell resistance. This bonus increases to +2 at 6th level, and then to +3 at 9th level.

These bonuses stack with those granted by the Spell Penetration and Greater Spell Penetration feats.

Crystals of Nature's Wrath (Su): At 5th level and higher, your wild shape natural attacks are enhanced with jagged crystals.

These crystals are harmless to most creatures, but to aberrations they cause terrible welts and acidlike burns.

An aberration struck by one of your natural weapons must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + abolisher level + Cha modifier) or become sickened for 1 minute.

An aberration that makes its saving throw is immune to this effect for the duration of that use of wild shape. Waves of Nature's Purity (Su): Beginning at 7th level, you can create a rippling aura of white vapor that spreads in a 20-foot radius.

The vapor does not obscure vision, and it is cool and refreshing against the skin of nonaberrations.

Against aberrations, the waves of nature's purity are foul and unsettling.

An affected aberration must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + abolister level + Cha modifier) each round or become nauseated for that round.

You can use this ability once per day, and the power lasts for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1 round).

Activating this ability is a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

Fires of Nature's Rage (Su): A 10th level, you can infuse your wild shape form with flickering ghostly fire three times per day.

The fires of nature's rage burn any aberration that comes in contact with them.

Your natural attacks do an extra 3d6 points of fire damage against aberrations, and an aberration that hits you, even with a weapon, takes 3d6 points of fire damage.

You can activate the fires of nature's wrath as a free action, as long as you are in wild shape form.

Doing so does not provoke attacks of opportunity, and each activation lasts for 1 round.

PLAYING AN ABOLISHER

An abolister is grim, determined, and often pessimistic. You remain devoted to your cause at all times, but the fact that your enemies are so ancient and powerful weighs upon your soul.

This realization, combined with the fact that you and your fellow abolishers see aberrations at their worst and most mind-numbing, tends to leave most abolishers cold, distant, and difficult to befriend.

COMBAT

Abolishers live to fight aberrations.

When you face an aberration in combat, you should do everything in your power to defeat the creature.

Since you have fewer hit points and a lower base attack bonus than a fighter, though, you want to be careful about engaging in melee with aberrations, especially since many of them have dangerous special attacks.

An abolister is strongest in a fight while in wild shape, and you should take advantage of this fact by spending much of your time in the form of an animal (or plant, if you can) selected for its capabilities against the kind of aberration you expect to fight.

For example, if you're going after aboleths, the form of a shark or a squid might work best.

On the other hand, if you're fighting mind flayers, some fast creature that has several attacks, such as a deinonychus or tiger, is a good choice; you can get up close and tear into an illithid more quickly that way.

Against beholders, it's probably best to assume the form of Small (or Tiny) animals, since the size and Dexterity bonuses to your Armor Class help you avoid their eye ray attacks.

If you are of good alignment, the few good-aligned aberrations (such as silthilar; see page 168) pose a great difficulty to you.

Some good-aligned abolishers are comfortable with simply forcing good-aligned aberrations to relocate, but others take pity on such creatures and do what they can to remove the taint of the aberration from them.

Some good-aligned abolishers merely observe good-aligned aberrations closely to make sure they don't cause trouble, while others have gone so far as to convince a good-aligned aberration to voluntarily submit to a reincarnation spell.

Ultimately, how you react to good-aligned aberrations is something you must decide for yourself.

ADVANCEMENT

Although you don't have to take any druid levels to qualify for the abolister prestige class, the fact that so many of your powers as an abolister are tied to the wild shape ability means that you should at least consider taking a few druid levels to augment this feature.

Reaching at least 5th level as a druid before taking abolister levels works best, since your abolister levels eventually grant you an effective bonus of +3 to your druid level for the purpose of determining how many times per day you can use your wild shape ability.

If you don't have it already, you should take the Natural Spell feat as soon as possible so you can spend the majority of your time in wild shape form and still be able to cast spells.

Since many aberrations have spell resistance, Spell Penetration and Greater Spell Penetration are good choices as feats as well.

Combat feats that can be used in wild shape form are useful too, especially feats such as Improved Grapple and Weapon Finesse if you prefer to wild shape into dexterous creatures. Spend your earnings on items that are equally useful to you in wild shape form as they are in your natural form.

Armor with the wild special ability (see page 219 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) and ioun stones are obvious choices, as are animated wooden shields.

A druid's vestment is helpful as well, since it directly augments your wild shape ability.

RESOURCES

The Circle of the True is your best resource as an abolister. You don't need to establish an allegiance to this group before you take your first abolister level, but a representative of the group should contact you before you reach 3rd level if you don't seek one out yourself.

As a member of the Circle, you have access to more information about aberration activity in the area, as well as emotional and logistical support from a group of like-minded individuals.

Abolishers are solitary individuals for the most part, gathering together only occasionally for meetings of the Circle of the True.

The PCs have a greater chance of encountering abolishers the more they fight against aberrations, and if they build a reputation as aberration-slayers, they might even be contacted by the Circle with an offer to join its ranks.

A less likely way that the PCs can run into an abolister is if they or one of their allies or cohorts is an aberration; in this case, an abolister serves as a powerful and dangerous enemy.

ORGANIZATION

With the exception of the Circle of the True, abolishers operate on their own in the world, focusing their attentions on the unsettled wildlands where aberrations more easily hide.

See page 217 for details about the Circle of the True.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people don't recognize an abolisher for what she is on sight, and assume simply that she is a particularly moody and humorless druid.

Other abolishers, as well as keepers of the Cerulean Sign (see page 194), immediately recognize her for what she is, though, and have a starting attitude of friendly toward her. Likewise, an abolisher's body language and tone of voice make it very difficult for her to get along well with aberrations, and they have a starting attitude of hostile toward an abolisher as a result.

Even those who would not normally wish her harm rarely, if ever, have a starting attitude better than unfriendly.

ABOLISHER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (nature) can research abolishers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Abolishers are druids who have dedicated their lives to fighting and slaying aberrations".

DC 15: "Abolishers are accomplished shapechangers.

They know a vast amount of information about aberrations, and are valuable allies to have on your side if you plan on fighting aberrations".

DC 20: "Most abolishers belong to a group called the Circle of the True.

This group aids those who aren't abolishers, as long as they oppose aberrant creatures".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about powerful abolishers and the Circle of the True in your campaign, including the names of powerful members and locations of hidden bases of operation.

ABOLISHERS IN THE GAME

This prestige class is naturally tied to the amount of aberration activity in your campaign.

If aberrations are rare or absent from your world, abolishers won't have a place there.

If, on the other hand, you're running an aberration-heavy game, abolishers might be one of the most powerful organizations in the world, perhaps even the power behind the throne.

In the standard D&D world, aberrations are fairly prevalent but operate behind the scenes or in distant locations.

In this case, an abolisher should be equally subtle and obscure.

It's not hard to envision a city locked in a mortal war between the abolishers and a hidden cult of neogi slavers in the sewers below, while only a few of the city's citizens ever suspect that such a war is going on around them.

ADAPTATION

If you don't feature aberrations in your game, it's a fairly simple matter to adapt the abolisher to be a devoted enemy of another kind of creature.

You should make sure to select this replacement favored enemy with care; undead, evil outsiders, and giants are all good examples, since these types of creatures work in large groups and are usually evil.

Animals, constructs, elementals, magical beasts, oozes, plants, and vermin are poor choices, since these creatures tend to be unintelligent and unorganized.

Dragons, fey, humanoids, and monstrous humanoids might make interesting choices, although since each of these creature types has a fairly even spread among alignments, you should focus the abolisher in this case on a specific kind of creature such as kobolds, minotaurs, or red dragons.

If you do so, make sure that this creature is encountered enough in your campaign so that the abolishers have something to fight against.

A sample abolisher appears in the description of the Circle of the True on page 217.

BEHOLDER MAGE

A normal beholder can become a wizard or sorcerer.

The more ancient beholders are powerful arcanists (see Elder Orbs, above) that have used magic to extend their lifespans.

Nevertheless, two practical limitations keep beholders from becoming spellcasters.

First, their lack of hands makes it hard for them to use large numbers of spell components.

Second, their central eye's antimagic cone makes the study and use of arcane magic difficult.

However, an increasing number of beholders are embracing a practice once held to be vile and unthinkable to their kind.

Through ritual destruction of its central eye, a beholder can learn to channel and use magic much more quickly and efficiently than can almost any other race.

These are the members of the beholder mage prestige class, and the power they wield is truly impressive.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: True beholder (beholderkin cannot become beholder mages).

Special: Must put out central antimagic eye.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Concentration, Craft (alchemy), Decipher Script, Knowledge (any), Speak Language, Spellcraft, and Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the beholder mage prestige class.

Spells: A beholder mage gains the ability to cast arcane spells.

These spells are drawn from the sorcerer/wizard spell list.

At 1st level, a beholder mage masters all the cantrips detailed in the Player's Handbook and also knows two 1st-level spells.

Each time it gains a level, it automatically learns two more spells of any level it can cast.

To learn or cast a spell, a beholder mage must have an Intelligence score equal to at least 10 + the spell level.

The Difficulty Class for a saving throw against a beholder mage's spell is 10 + the spell level + the beholder mage's Intelligence modifier.

A beholder mage's spells function at a caster level equal to twice its beholder mage level.

A beholder mage can cast only a certain number of spells of each spell level per day.

Its base daily spell allotment is given in Table 3-1.

In addition, it receives bonus spells per day if it has a high Intelligence score.

A beholder mage combines the best of two worlds; it can learn new spells as a wizard can, and there is no upper limit to the number of spells it can learn and know.

However, it casts its spells on the fly like a sorcerer.

A beholder mage of high level typically knows a huge number of spells and can call upon any one of them at any time, providing it has a spell slot open of the appropriate spell level.

Starting at 1st level, whenever a beholder mage gains the ability to cast a new level of spells, it must sacrifice the use of its eye rays from one of its ten small eyestalks.

From then on, that eyestalk casts spells of that level and is referred to as a spell-stalk.

At 10th level, all of its eyestalks are spell-stalks.

As with its eye rays, casting a spell from a spell-stalk is a free action (although a single spell-stalk can cast only one spell per round).

The spell is technically considered a cast spell (as opposed to the use of a spell-like ability), and thus the act of casting provokes attacks of opportunity normally.

A spell cast from a spell-stalk otherwise resolves normally; unlike an eye ray, it does not need to make a ranged touch attack to successfully strike a target (unless the spell itself requires a touch attack).

The standard beholder limitation against turning more than three eyestalks in any particular direction (that is, forward, backward, left, right, up, or down) still applies.

Beholder mages do not require material components to cast their spells.

The ruined central eye acts as an arcane focus for all the creature's spells.

If a spell normally requires a material component that carries with it a gold-piece cost, the beholder mage instead spends a number of experience points equal to one-fifth of the normal gold-piece cost (minimum of 1 experience point).

The somatic components of a beholder mage's spells are supplied by the weaving and waving of its spell-stalks.

The verbal component of a beholder mage's spells is the creature's special spellcasting song.

The song takes effort; a beholder mage that is casting spells cannot speak or use its mouth to do anything else that round, including making bite attacks.

Arcane Hands (Su): A beholder mage develops the ability to manipulate objects as if with a mage hand spell.

This ability is constantly active and can not only manipulate objects but also use magic items like wands, staves, rods, and some wondrous items (like a bag of tricks).

The hand cannot activate items that must be worn to utilize an effect (such as a helm of brilliance).

A beholder mage's arcane hand has an effective Strength score equal to the creature's beholder mage class level.

An arcane hand can be used to perform any attack or defensive action for which a regular hand can be used.

Using an arcane hand to make an unarmed strike provokes attacks of opportunity unless the beholder mage has the Improved Unarmed Strike feat.

Theoretically, a beholder mage with monk levels could use its arcane hand for its unarmed attacks.

Ocular Transformation (Su): At 10th level, a beholder mage's ruined central eye undergoes a supernatural transformation and can absorb magic energy directed at the beholder.

This grants the beholder spell resistance equal to its Hit Dice +5 (maximum spell resistance of 30).

If the creature's spell resistance succeeds in preventing the effect of a spell, its central eye begins to glow with red light equivalent to that of a torch.

While it glows, the eye no longer grants spell resistance.

In order to regain spell resistance, the beholder must spend a full-round action to absorb the energy stored in the eye.

At the end of the full-round action, the eye stops glowing, and the beholder's spell resistance is again effective.

Absorbing the energy stored in the eye does not provoke attacks of opportunity, and it heals the beholder of 5 points of damage per spell level absorbed.

Hit points gained in excess of the beholder's normal maximum are lost.

DARKRUNNER

See that?

The circular patch of ground that's all muddy and smooth, when all the stone around it is rough and solid?

One of them gibbering moutherers jumped someone here, and recently.

Hand me that shovel.

Sometimes they leave their victims buried in the mud they make, and they don't take the poor fool's gear when they're done.

—Jasper Ringlerock of the Darkrunner Guild

Darkrunners devote their lives to traveling the haunted underground depths.

Some hire out their services as guides to those who wish to navigate the lightless ways, while others are lone wolves who simply wish to explore the deepest reaches of this wondrous and dangerous realm.

They understand the lay of the subterranean world like no other, and use its terrain and features to great advantage in combat.

BECOMING A DARKRUNNER

The ranger class is the easiest path to becoming a darkrunner.

Despite having to take cross-class ranks in Knowledge (dungeoneering), barbarians and druids both can qualify fairly quickly (unless they multiclass into a class that has this as a class skill).

Intelligence is perhaps the most important ability for a darkrunner, since it grants bonus skill points and enhances several of the darkrunner's class features.

After Intelligence, Charisma and Dexterity are likely the best abilities for a darkrunner, since both contribute to many of the character's class skills.

Due to the darkvision requirement, most darkrunners come from races already adapted to underground life (dwarves, half-orcs, drow, and the like).

Creatures with the Aberration Blood and Inhuman Vision feats might also find surprising welcome in the Darkrunner Guild.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 5 ranks, Search 5 ranks, Survival 7 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Track.

Special: Darkvision as a racial trait or class feature.

Special: You must seek out a chapter house of the Darkrunner Guild and successfully petition to join the guild.

Once you are a member, you gain your first level of darkrunner.

If at a later time you lose membership in the guild, you become a darkrunner exile.

You can still gain levels in this prestige class, but you can no longer rely upon the support of the guild.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Craft, Diplomacy, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Heal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (geography), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (nature), Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, Speak Language, Spot, Survival, Swim, and Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the darkrunner prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain proficiency with light armor and with martial weapons.

Direction Sense (Ex): You possess an incredible sense of direction.

If you study a single underground location for at least 8 hours, that location becomes your directional focus until you choose a new location and study it for 8 hours.

You must be within your directional focus to successfully study it.

You can use find the path (as the spell) to determine the shortest, most direct physical route to your directional focus, as long as you are within 5 miles of your focus.

This ability works only as long as you remain underground.

Spelunking (Ex): You are well trained in moving in and through natural caverns.

You gain a competence bonus equal to your class level on Climb, Escape Artist, Jump, Survival, and Swim checks as long as you remain underground.

In addition, you are treated as one size category smaller than your actual size for the purpose of squeezing into narrow tunnels or confined areas.

Darkrunner Emblem: Upon becoming a darkrunner, you are granted a darkrunner emblem by the Darkrunner Guild. This minor magic item is detailed in the accompanying sidebar.

If your emblem is lost or destroyed, you can purchase a replacement from any guild chapter house at a 50% discount.

Aberration Lore (Ex): You have picked up a trove of knowledge concerning aberrations.

Beginning at 2nd level, you gain a +2 competence bonus on any skill check, attack roll, or saving throw made against an aberration.

Darkvision (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, the extent of your darkvision increases by 10 feet.

It increases by an additional 10 feet every other level.
Cavefighting (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you are so familiar with the terrain features of the subterranean world that you can use them to enhance your combat ability. While underground, you gain a bonus on initiative checks equal to your Intelligence bonus, and you can move over difficult terrain (see page 148 of the Player's Handbook) at normal speed.

Additionally, as long as you stand in a square of difficult terrain, such as rubble or thick undergrowth, you gain a +2 circumstance bonus to your Armor Class.

Tunnelport (Sp): At 3rd level and higher, you can use an enlarged dimension door effect as a spell-like ability once per day.

You cannot pass through solid barriers as you normally could with a dimension door spell.

Additionally, the route you take when using tunnelport must follow an opening no more than 10 feet wide.

Your caster level equals twice your darkrunner class level.

Tremorsense (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you have tremorsense out to 30 feet.

You are sensitive to vibrations in the ground and can automatically pinpoint the location of anything that is in contact with the ground.

Lore of the Stones (Sp): At 5th level, you gain an affinity with unworked stone.

You treat unworked stone as very soft ground when making Survival checks to track quarry, and can use stone tell as a spell-like ability (caster level equal to your class level) once per day.

Aberration Specialist (Ex): At 6th level, your knowledge about a particular kind of underground-dwelling aberration increases.

You must select a specific kind of aberration that has an environment entry of Underground, such as gibbering moulder, mind flayer, or umber hulk.

Against this kind of aberration, your bonuses from your aberration lore ability increase to +4.

Deepsong (Su): All that occurs in the depths of the earth is witnessed by the stone.

Over the ages, an infinite legion of events have occurred, and in their passing they have left their mark upon the stone.

Beginning at 7th level, you can attune your mind to experience the deepsong.

The deepsong can be seen, felt, heard, and tasted, and it even makes itself known in mystical ways.

While underground, the deepsong fills you with a sense of belonging and welcome.

This effect grants you a +2 morale bonus on all Will saving throws.

In addition, your stone tell spell-like ability becomes much more powerful than the normal spell.

When you use this ability, the stones relate complete descriptions of events when asked.

You can gain knowledge of up to three facts from among the following topics with each use: the layout of caverns and tunnels; the presence of plants and fungi, minerals, bodies of water, or people; local animal population; and the presence of elemental creatures, powerful abominations, or undead.

Improved Cavefighting (Ex): At 8th level, your cavefighting techniques improve further.

You can take 10 at any time with any of the following skills while underground, even if you are threatened or distracted: Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Jump, and Swim. In addition, you master a style of fighting that incorporates the terrain into your attacks.

You might cause an opponent to slip with a successful attack and twist an ankle on loose rocks or to stagger into a sharp stalactite.

You might brace yourself against a cave wall to get a little bit of extra pull on your bow.

In any case, this fighting style works only if you are standing in a square of difficult terrain.

As long as you do so, you add a circumstance bonus equal to your Intelligence bonus (minimum +1) to damage rolls with all melee weapons and any ranged weapon attacks at a range of 30 feet or less.

Greater Tunnelport (Sp): Beginning at 9th level, your tunnelport ability functions like greater teleport, although you are still bound by the restrictions on the width of passages you can teleport through.

Your caster level equals twice your darkrunner class level.

Stonewalking (Su): At 10th level, you no longer need confine your underground exploration to caverns and passageways.

For a limited number of rounds per day, you can glide through stone, dirt, or almost any other sort of earth except metal as easily as a fish swims through water.

While stonewalking, you have a burrow speed equal to your base land speed; this burrowing leaves behind no tunnel or hole, nor does it create any ripple or other signs of a presence.

A move earth spell cast on an area where you are stonewalking flings you back 30 feet and stuns you for 1 round if you fail a DC 15 Fortitude save.

You can stonewalk for a number of rounds each day equal to 10 + your Intelligence modifier.

These rounds need not be continuous; you can activate this ability for 4 rounds to pass through a collapsed tunnel and still have the remainder of your rounds available for use later in the same day.

Activating and deactivating stonewalking is a free action.

If you are still burrowing when you run out of time, you are immediately ejected into the nearest open surface large enough to contain you.

Distance is not a factor, but the ejection is quite painful and forces you to make a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1 per 5 feet traveled to reach the open area) or be stunned for 1d4 rounds.

PLAYING A DARKRUNNER

You are first and foremost an explorer.

You express a near-constant curiosity about what might lie beyond the next bend in the tunnel.

At the same time, you serve as a diplomat, since your wanderings put you in contact with strange and secluded societies.

You should probably try to be friendly and easygoing, someone who can be trusted as a guide and even a friend. Yet beneath the surface, you are a resourceful, solid realist. The deep earth is no place for the naive, and its travelers should constantly suspect danger even when they feel safest.

COMBAT

You should focus your combat skills on fast, quick strikes. Your strength lies in your mobility in confined spaces.

Ranged weapons aren't as useful to you for two reasons: The lightless environs make long-range fighting spotty at best, and the winding tunnels and ample cover mean that you can never count on being able to get a good shot at something more than a few dozen feet away.

As you gain levels, you should focus on feats that allow you increased mobility on the battlefield.

Dodge, Mobility, and Spring Attack are all excellent choices, since you can move through difficult terrain with ease to reach a creature, make your attack, then skitter away before it can retaliate effectively.

Since other creatures can't move as quickly in such cramped conditions, you can easily maintain the advantage in combat.

Feats that enhance charges can also be useful, since the cavefighting ability lets you charge over difficult terrain with ease.

Although you are most at home underground, many of your abilities work just as well in dungeons closer to the surface or in aboveground structures.

Always be on the lookout for difficult terrain from which to establish your combat dominance.

ADVANCEMENT

As you gain levels as a darkrunner, don't forget to keep up your ranks in various Charisma-based skills such as Bluff, Diplomacy, and Intimidate.

Your wanderings underground put you in contact with suspicious or outright hostile settlements, and unless you intend to fight everything (a poor choice for anyone below the earth), you will be called upon to present yourself and your companions as friendly visitors.

Any feats that aid these skills are likewise good choices as you gain levels.

Remember that Speak Language is a class skill for you.

Picking up one or two obscure languages per level is a good idea, for the sake of being able to communicate with some of the creatures you might encounter.

Since you will be wandering through unexplored areas, it's a good idea to be able to carry a lot with you, either supplies from your last visit to town or magic items and other objects you discover on your travels.

Some sort of extradimensional container, such as a bag of holding or a portable hole, is a wise investment.

You should also collect magic to augment your various movement modes.

A helm of underwater action, a ring of swimming, slippers of spider climbing, and wings of flying are all quite useful when navigating unexplored tunnels.

See the presentation of the Darkrunner Guild, page 218.

Although darkrunners are content to simply explore underground, those who belong to the guild (which accounts for over ninety percent of darkrunners) offer their services as guides to merchants, pilgrims, or adventurers who need to traverse the gloomy underground regions of the world.

They are also called upon to serve as mercenaries in armies that move through the deep earth.

PCs might want to hire a darkrunner for any of the above reasons, or they might encounter one alone during an adventure.

See the presentation of the Darkrunner Guild, page 218.

The Darkrunner Guild has a powerful, well-known charter to those who dwell below.

A darkrunner is honor-bound to serve and protect his charges from the dangers of the wild, on threat of expulsion and exile from the guild.

As a result, most nonaberration underground races react favorably to a darkrunner, and have an initial attitude of no worse than indifferent despite any racial tensions that might exist between the individuals.

Aberrations that recognize a character as a darkrunner have an initial attitude of unfriendly at best, since the darkrunners sometimes serve as spies against these races.

DARKRUNNER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can research darkrunners to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The darkrunner is an explorer, guide, and spy who focuses his skills on the realm below".

DC 15: "Most darkrunners belong to a powerful guild. This guild has chapter houses underground, including many in otherwise hostile cities; these houses are excellent places to rest and hide out if you happen to be allied with them".

DC 20: "All darkrunners are expected to wear a magic badge that proclaims their allegiance to the guild.

Some darkrunners have broken their ties with the guild.

These darkrunners are dangerous, but one can tell them apart from others by the red glow their emblems emit.

Someone who refuses to display his emblem even though he claims to be a darkrunner is probably lying about something".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about powerful darkrunners and their guild in your campaign.

They also know certain passwords that can smooth over initial contacts with a darkrunner and grant a +6 circumstance bonus on Diplomacy checks made to adjust a darkrunner's initial attitude.

DARKRUNNERS IN THE GAME

A darkrunner spends most of his time in the vast region of caves and tunnels below the surface world.

If the PCs wish to explore underground, they might wish to secure the aid of a darkrunner as a guide.

Darkrunners are naturally much sought after as guides to various aberration outposts.

A darkrunner NPC could easily ally with adventurers or hire on with them to lead them to an aboleth city or mind flayer stronghold.

ADAPTATION

If your campaign world doesn't include a subterranean region, you can still use the darkrunner after you make a few adjustments.

Simply pick an area of inhospitable terrain, such as a swamp or a high mountain, and base the guild in this region.

You can even have the darkrunners serve as a highly specialized guild within the confines of a particularly large city.

In this case, the guild would function more like a thieves guild, although one more interested in helping visitors adapt to the city than profiting from them in an illegal manner. Several of the darkrunner's abilities can be adapted to work in alleys or dense crowds, although the class's aberration lore feature should be changed to something more appropriate for the city in question. A sample darkrunner appears in the description of the Darkrunner Guild on page 218.

FLESHWARPER

The flesh is the key.

It holds the secrets, the hidden words.

It is the constant between man and beast and monster.

It is a simple matter, once the way of the flesh is understood and embraced, to use it to your will.

It should not be abhorred simply for its differences, because the eye can be retrained to find beauty in all things.

For what is more beautiful than the primal flesh?

It is simply the purest form of expression one can hope to achieve.

—Erkin Tiorki, fleshwarper

The fleshwarper is destined to walk a lonely path, for few have the stomach to accept what he considers enjoyable. To a fleshwarper, there is no greater canvas than flesh itself. To reshape, reform, and rebuild the flesh into a new form is a closer step to divinity.

To a fleshwarper, there are no taboos, only possibilities.

BECOMING A FLESHWARPER

Most fleshwarpers are primarily wizards or sorcerers with a level of cleric (or, more rarely, druid); this cleric or druid level raises your maximum ranks in Heal to your character level + 3 even if you were forced to buy several of the required ranks as a cross-class skill.

The adept NPC class from the Dungeon Master's Guide has access to both Heal and Knowledge (arcana), as well as the summon familiar class feature, and thus can qualify for this class by 6th level without multiclassing.

Such dedication pays in the long run.

The fleshwarper learns countless eldritch and disturbing secrets that most people can never even guess at.

Intelligence is perhaps the most important of the class's abilities, since many of the fleshwarper's class skills are keyed to it.

The ability keyed to the fleshwarper's spellcasting is also important, as is Constitution, since he has fewer hit points than most other characters.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Heal 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Feat: Graft Flesh†.

Special: Summon familiar class feature.

† New feat described on page 216.

CLASS SKILLS

(+ 4 Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Heal, Knowledge (all skills taken individually), Search, Speak Language, Spellcraft, and Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the fleshwarper prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level above 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a fleshwarper, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Aberrant Familiar (Su): Your familiar (if you have one) becomes tainted by your magic.

The familiar's type changes to aberration, it gains darkvision out to 60 feet, and its form becomes warped. Your aberrant familiar gains one of the abilities described below, as chosen by you.

At every third level you gain above 1st, your aberrant familiar gains another ability from those described below. You can't choose the same ability twice.

If your familiar is killed and you obtain a new one, you can choose new aberrant abilities for your new familiar based on your current fleshwarper level.

Your aberrant familiar grants you a +2 bonus on all saving throws against mind-affecting spells and abilities as long as the familiar is within arm's reach.

Your fleshwarper class levels stack with all other class levels used to determine the familiar's other attributes (see page 53 of the Player's Handbook).

The abilities your aberrant familiar can have are as follows: Amorphous Form: A familiar with this ability is immune to extra damage from critical hits and sneak attacks.

Scales: The familiar's natural armor bonus improves by 4.

The familiar gains a +2 bonus on Fortitude saves.

Size Increase: The familiar's size becomes larger by one category.

Consult the Monster Manual for the effects of this size increase on the familiar's ability scores and other statistics.

Tentacle: The familiar gains a tentacle attack with a reach of 5 feet.

The attack deals 1 point of damage (assuming Tiny size). It cannot combine this attack with its other natural attacks.

Wings: The familiar can fly at a speed of 40 feet with good maneuverability.

(If the familiar already has a fly speed, use whichever speed is higher and whichever maneuverability is better).

The familiar gains a +2 bonus on Reflex saves.

Graft Reserve (Ex): You receive a pool of points you can spend instead of experience points when creating a new graft with your Graft Flesh feat.

Each time you gain a class level, you receive a new graft reserve; leftover points from the previous level do not carry over.

If the points are not spent, they are lost.

You can also use your graft reserve to supplement the XP cost of a graft you are creating, taking a portion of the cost from your graft reserve and a portion from your XP.

Elder Secret (Su): Your continuous self-experimentation in grafting results in occasional improvements to your form.

At 2nd level and every three levels thereafter, you make a powerful discovery in your research and learn how to improve your body in a subtle, minor way.

Choose one elder secret from those described below when you reach 2nd, 5th, and 8th level.

Secret of the Aboleth: You gain a swim speed equal to your base land speed.

You also gain a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks, and can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check even when rushed or threatened.

Secret of the Beholder: Your eyes protrude grotesquely from your head and move independently of each other.

You gain a +4 racial bonus on Search and Spot checks, and you can't be flanked.

Secret of the Choker: You become preternaturally quick and alert to danger.

You gain a +4 racial bonus on initiative checks and a +1 racial bonus on Reflex saving throws.

Secret of the Destrachan: You gain immunity to damage from sonic energy.

Secret of the Ettercap: You gain a climb speed equal to your base land speed and a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks, and you can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks even if rushed or threatened.

Secret of the Gibbering Moulder: Your form becomes partially amorphous.

You have a 25% chance to ignore the extra damage dealt by a critical hit or a sneak attack.

Secret of the Mind Flayer: You gain a +4 racial bonus on saves against mind-affecting spells and abilities.

Secret of the Otyugh: You gain immunity to disease.

Secret of the Umber Hulk: You gain a +2 racial bonus to your natural armor.

Graft Mastery (Ex): You learn how to create and apply grafts normally not available to your race by studying forbidden tomes and consulting ancient nameless sources.

When you first gain the Graft Flesh feat, you choose a specific type of graft to associate with the feat (most likely silthilar grafts, or beholder or undead grafts from the Fiend Folio or Libris Mortis).

At 3rd level, you can select a new type of graft to add to the list.

If you choose a graft type that normally requires the creator to be a member of that race (such as aboleth and illithid grafts, or fiendish or yuan-ti grafts from the Fiend Folio), you ignore that restriction completely.

You can select a new graft type every time you gain an odd-numbered fleshwarper level higher than 3rd.

Rapid Grafting (Ex): Starting at 6th level, you can create grafts with shocking speed.

Creating a graft with Graft Flesh now requires only 1 hour for each 1,000 gp.

Aberrant Apotheosis (Su): At 10th level, you undergo a transformation into an aberration.

Your type changes to aberration, and you gain darkvision out to 60 feet.

You also gain a +2 racial bonus to your Constitution score.

PLAYING A FLESHWARPERS

While merely becoming a fleshwarper is by no means an evil act, you need to quickly come to terms with the fact that most people are disgusted and afraid of what you define as beauty.

You take pride in your work, and you defend your body's improvements and those that you gift to others until your dying breath.

Yet you need not do so cruelly or with violence; that is far from the best way to bring word of your experiments to the world at large.

At best, others think of you as a mad scientist of sorts.

You are convinced that your experiments are performed for the betterment of your kind, and that only by improving and refining what the deities have gifted to the world can humanoids hope to survive.

You tend not to be distracted by morality, ethics, or compassion, yet need not be evil.

You find delight in what repulses others, and in so doing you find ways to improve yourself that others could never appreciate.

COMBAT

Although you're far from helpless in a fight, the time you spend ensconced in your laboratory and investigating new methods to improve the flesh does not improve your combat skills.

Therefore, you should usually try to avoid direct combat.

Instead of just wading into melee, use your grafts and spells to attack at range or to offset your inherent weaknesses before entering combat.

If you choose the latter route, you can become quite a menace in combat if you protect yourself beforehand with spells such as bear's endurance, bull's strength, stoneskin, mage armor, and the like.

Once you are forced into melee, any number of grafts can give you a significant advantage in combat.

ADVANCEMENT

As you gain levels, don't be afraid to create new grafts for yourself or your allies.

The combination of grafting and the various elder secrets you can learn make you more versatile than your companions.

Take care not to generalize too much; you should decide early on what your goal should be with your grafts.

Do you want to be a better fighter?

A better scout?

A better spellcaster?

Focus your elder secrets and grafts along these lines, and you'll find yourself in a much stronger position than if your grafts and secrets aren't complementary.

Regarding interactions with others, keep in mind when selecting new grafts for yourself how extreme they appear. If you choose grafts that involve major changes to your appearance, you might find yourself spending resources and time just keeping others from attacking you on sight. One way to combat this problem, of course, is to invest in items such as a hat of disguise or a robe of blending that you can use to disguise your grafts.

If you can use them, a wand of polymorph or alter self can be similarly helpful.

If you're not interested in how others react to your true appearance, though, your best bet is to focus your purchases on items that augment the particular type of grafts you select for yourself.

RESOURCES

While most people are repelled by the fleshwarper's work, a fleshwarper is usually an arcane spellcaster of no small skill. Consequently, a fleshwarper is often tolerated in wizards' guilds or other arcane associations, or even welcomed in a guild of evil spellcasters who aren't very squeamish about a fleshwarper's peculiar interests.

As a member of a guild or similar organization, a fleshwarper can often contribute to the organization by teaching new spells, acquiring rare material components, or capturing interesting creatures for study and vivisection. The exact nature of the benefits available in return for those efforts depend on the guild in question.

Fleshwarpers don't make new friends easily; their bizarre obsession with alien grafts makes them difficult creatures to approach.

As a result, fleshwarpers live in out-of-the-way places, deep in the wilderness or underground.

The few who live in large urban areas tend to be shut-ins and rely on allies or minions to run errands for them. Of course, exceptions exist; rare fleshwarpers take glee in displaying their bodies and discoveries to the world. Too often, the lonely life of a fleshwarper leads to cruelty or insanity.

Evil fleshwarpers are sadists who enjoy the torments they inflict on others as much as they enjoy the thrill of creating new grafts.

The PCs might find themselves pitted against a small army of graft-enhanced minions with a fleshwarper as their leader.

Aberrations are drawn to this prestige class as well; a fleshwarper mind flayer or grell would make a memorable villain.

ORGANIZATION

The study of the fleshwarper's art is a solitary pursuit. No organization composed exclusively of fleshwarpers exists.

However, evil fleshwarpers sometimes strike bargains with powerful aberrations such as aboleths or mind flayers, trading their service and fealty for knowledge of new grafts.

NPC REACTIONS

Fleshwarpers have difficulty interacting with others, especially with the keepers of the Cerulean Sign or the abolishers of the Circle of the True.

They are taken to be aberrations themselves, even well before they actually reach apotheosis.

Such individuals have initial reactions of hostile to a fleshwarper; most others have initial reactions of unfriendly.

This extends even to other fleshwarpers; they guard their secrets jealously and fear the interest of other fleshwarpers more than anything else.

FLESHWARPER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research fleshwarpers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: "Fleshwarpers are spellcasters who specialize in the construction of grafts".

DC 15: "Fleshwarpers have several minions that they use as guardians and experimental stock for their projects".

DC 20: "Not all fleshwarpers are evil; some merely seek ways to enhance their bodies.

The majority of them are cruel and sadistic, though, and society as a whole should fear these individuals".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific fleshwarpers, including the nature of their researches and possibly even what kind of grafts they and their minions have.

FLESHWARPERS IN THE GAME

Fleshwarpers make excellent villainous masterminds. Their minions can have numerous bizarre and deadly grafts to make them more dangerous, and the fleshwarper himself can be a memorable and unique villain.

Yet they can also make interesting allies; a friendly fleshwarper can give PCs powerful grafts and assistance as rewards for accomplishing tasks, or as payment.

ADAPTATION

Fleshwarpers are fairly insulated from the external factors of a campaign world; as long as your world has grafts in it, the fleshwarper can thrive more or less unadapted from the way he is presented here.

KEEPER OF THE CERULEAN SIGN

The enemy is ancient, eternal, and forever.

Yet they are not without weakness, for they have been put down before and shall be put down again.

The power of the Cerulean Sign has not faded over the eons; it has grown.

With its power within my soul, I cannot help but prevail against the Elder Evils, and they cannot help but fall against my might.

—Selsharra Derissor, a keeper of the Cerulean Sign

The Cerulean Sign is an ancient rune of power, created untold eons ago by a race or deity long since vanished.

This ancient race or deity clearly opposed the rise of the aberrant races, yet its efforts were ultimately a failure.

The aberration races prosper, while their ancient adversary is forgotten.

All that remains is the Cerulean Sign and its still-potent power against creatures from outside the realm of sanity.

The power of the Cerulean Sign draws a small group of loyal keepers.

These people work to keep the knowledge of the Cerulean Sign alive, for without it, the ancient aberrations cannot be opposed.

But a keeper does far more than protect the Cerulean Sign. She takes the fight to the aberrations, and specifically to those they have seduced.

She seeks out aberration cults and crushes them, ensuring that the foul taint from beyond can never supplant what is pure in the world.

BECOMING A KEEPER

Since the keeper of the Cerulean Sign prestige class requires both spellcasting and a large number of skill points, the easiest path to entering this prestige class is through the bard class.

Most other spellcasting classes either need to wait until they're at least 16th level so they can acquire 8 ranks in a cross-class skill, or they need to multiclass.

A character of a class that cannot cast spells must multiclass into a spellcasting class, but since all spellcasting classes can cast the required spell to craft a cerulean sign, the choice of spellcasting class is wide open.

Charisma is the most important ability for a keeper of the Cerulean Sign, since it affects many of her skills and most of her class features.

Bard keepers also rely on Charisma for their spellcasting and bardic music powers.

After Charisma, Intelligence and Wisdom are perhaps the most important ability scores.

Keepers of the Cerulean Sign rely on their magic and skills to avoid conflict, and thus the physical ability scores aren't as important to them.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Type: Cannot be an aberration.

Skills: Gather Information 5 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (dungeoneering) 8 ranks, Sense Motive 5 ranks.

Feats: Aberration Banemagic†, Craft Wondrous Item.

Special: Must create a cerulean sign without aid.

† New feat described on page 178.

(6 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Decipher Script, Disguise, Forgery, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot, and Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the keeper of the Cerulean Sign prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a keeper of the Cerulean Sign, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known. Cerulean Focus: Before becoming a keeper of the Cerulean Sign, you must successfully craft your own personal version of the sign.

Once created, this item functions as a cerulean sign (see the sidebar).

In addition, it serves as a focus for most of your class features.

Without this focus, these abilities do not function.

Detect Aberrant Taint (Sp): As long as you wear your cerulean focus, you can detect the taint of aberrations.

This ability functions as the spell detect aberration (see page 211), except that it also allows you to detect the presence or absence of any mind-affecting spells or supernatural abilities in effect on any creature, as long as the effect in question was placed there by an aberration. Additionally, it reveals any creature that willingly belongs to a cult that knowingly worships aberrations.

A cultist who believes he is worshipping Pelor when in fact his devotions are led by a mind flayer in disguise would not register as tainted by the use of this ability, but a cultist who worships knowingly under a mind flayer would be revealed.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to your class level.

Greater Banemagic (Su): At 2nd level, you gain the greater banemagic feature.

This ability works like the Aberration Banemagic feat (see page 178), except that once per day you can triple the benefit gained.

The damage increases by 6d6 instead of 2d6 and the save DC increases by 6 instead of by 2.

You gain an extra use of this ability at every even-numbered class level (two times per day at 4th level, three times per day at 6th level, and so on).

Word of Revelation (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you can utter a word of revelation as a standard action once per day.

This supernatural ability duplicates the effect of an area dispel magic that targets all spells or effects from the school of illusion that were originally cast by an aberration or aberration cultist within a 30-foot burst centered on you. Additionally, any aberration or aberration cultist in the area must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + keeper level + Cha modifier) or take 1d4 points of Charisma damage.

Portal Warding (Su): Starting at 5th level, you can place a potent warding effect on any doorway or magic portal once per day.

An aberration can pass through a warded doorway or magic portal only if it makes a successful Will saving throw (DC 10 + keeper level + Cha modifier); otherwise it cannot use the doorway or portal and takes 3d6 points of damage.

An attempt to destroy the door or magic portal counts as an attempt to pass through it.

You know whenever an aberration attempts to pass through the door or portal, and you also know if the aberration is successful or not, provided you are on the same plane as the warding.

You can maintain this effect indefinitely, but you can sustain only one warded portal at any time.

Mental Backlash (Su): Beginning at 7th level, once per day you can reflexively lash out at any aberration or aberration cultist that targets you but fails to affect you with a mind-affecting spell or ability.

You can do so only if you make a saving throw against a mind-affecting spell or ability directed at you by an aberration or aberration cultist.

When this power is activated, the aberration or cultist must make a Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + keeper level + Cha modifier) or take 1d6 points of damage per keeper level and become nauseated for 1d4 rounds.

A successful saving throw halves the damage and negates the nausea.

Cleanse Aberration (Sp): At 10th level, as a standard action once per day you can attempt to utterly destroy a single aberration within 30 feet.

The aberration must make a Fortitude save (DC 20 + your Cha modifier) or be killed.

If the aberration is destroyed, you heal a number of hit points equal to the number of hit points the aberration had when it died.

PLAYING A KEEPER OF THE CERULEAN SIGN

You tend to be enigmatic, yet intrigue others with your words.

Your beliefs are based on ideals and concepts that predate the world's current governments, religions, and societies, yet those ideas remain as compelling as anything those societies have to offer.

The Cerulean Sign has survived the eons not only because of the power it carries but for the primal ideals and needs it represents.

You can be rather mysterious regarding your motives and needs.

You know that the tendrils of aberrant taint can slip unseen into the minds of the unsuspecting, so you keep what you know to yourself for fear of exposing your plans and secrets to the enemy.

Your enemies include not only beholder cultists, slavers who sell to the neogi, and thralls of the illithids, but also the aberrations themselves, and their ageless, unknowable, primal masters that lurk beyond the veil of reality.

Yet, unlike the abolishers of the Circle of the True, you and your fellows are not pessimistic and dour people.

On the contrary, you have a powerful personality and are quite passionate about what you believe in.

You must be, if you want to combat the insidious aberration cults that fester in the suggestible corners of the world.

COMBAT

As a keeper of the Cerulean Sign, you are best at using your magic and your skills to fight enemies.

In most combats you fall back to a supporting role, using your spells to augment the better fighters in the group or to tend to the injured.

Against aberrations and those who forsake their kin to throw in their lot with aberrations, you can be a terrible foe indeed.

Many keepers take one or two levels in a fighting class just to augment their combat skills for the inevitable conflicts with aberrations and their cultists, but even without such measures, your ability to smite cultists can rapidly turn the battle against these foes.

If you have bard levels, the Music of the Outer Spheres feat (see page 181) is an excellent choice to aid in your struggles against aberrations.

ADVANCEMENT

As you gain levels in this prestige class, you should maintain maximum ranks in Bluff to trick cultists into thinking you're one of them, in Decipher Script to make sense of weird tomes and messages you uncover while investigating a cult, in Knowledge (dungeoneering) to keep up on aberration lore, and in Sense Motive to aid in detecting if people are being magically manipulated. Spell Penetration and Greater Spell Penetration are good choices for feats, since many aberrations have spell resistance.

Likewise, since many aberrations have powerful mental attacks, Iron Will is always a good choice.

Since you will be fighting cultists more often than not, it's probably a good idea to improve your combat skills by taking feats such as Weapon Focus and Dodge.

Similarly, it can't hurt to invest in an aberration bane weapon.

Such a weapon can quickly take apart most of the creatures you will end up fighting.

You might want to look into buying items that enhance your skills, as well, such as a circlet of persuasion or a rod of splendor.

A rod of rulership can go a long way toward wresting control of a large number of cultists away from their unhuman leaders.

You should also not hesitate to seek out magic items that specifically defeat common aberration attacks.

A vest of escape can aid in getting out of grapple attacks, for example, and a scarab of protection is invaluable when you face an aberration with instant death attacks (such as a beholder).

Finally, don't forget to upgrade your cerulean sign as you gain levels.

This magic item is quite helpful, and enhancing its bonuses only makes it more so.

RESOURCES

As a keeper of the Cerulean Sign, you do not have an organization or guild to back you up.

You are guided purely by your own conscience and your need to oppose the aberration cults that constantly threaten society.

Yet you are not alone in the world.

The Circle of the True supports the keepers as best they can, providing a safe place for you to rest and recover, or sending along fighters or abolishers to help eradicate a cult when one is discovered.

See page 217 for more information on the Circle of the True.

KEEPERS IN THE WORLD

The PCs normally won't attract the attentions of a keeper of the Cerulean Sign—unless, of course, one of them is an aberration cultist (or an aberration).

It's far more likely that the PCs find themselves working with a keeper, even if they do not realize it at first.

They might be working to infiltrate a cult base, encounter an undercover keeper already established in the cult, and join forces with her to achieve their common goal.

ORGANIZATION

Although the keepers of the Cerulean Sign operate alone, they understand the value of having friends and allies.

A keeper often offers her services to an organization that has goals similar to her own, such as the Circle of the True or a good-aligned religion.

In such cases, the keeper is afforded a place on the periphery of the organization.

Despite not being a true member, she is nonetheless treated as an equal.

Her quarters on site are set off from the rest of the barracks, more out of respect than for any other reason.

Keepers tend not to be interested in achieving or maintaining positions of power among the leadership of an allied organization.

Likewise, they feel no urge to follow the orders of an allied organization's commanders, but they usually do so nonetheless to maintain goodwill.

NPC REACTIONS

A keeper of the Cerulean Sign who displays the sign, either by wearing her personal cerulean sign openly or wearing clothing or armor emblazoned with the rune, can expect others who recognize the sign to react appropriately.

Aberrations, and those allied with them, almost always have an initial attitude of hostile toward a keeper.

Druids, good clerics, members of the Circle of the True, and similarly minded individuals have an initial attitude of helpful.

Strangely, government leaders, paladins, and others with investment in a lawful society distrust those who wear the sign, most likely because their efforts to uproot and destroy aberration cults can completely disrupt the social order, especially when members of the cult also happen to be high-ranking officials.

The keepers of the Cerulean Sign have a reputation for not helping to sort out the mess this creates, since they would rather turn their efforts toward tracking down the remnants of the cult who might have escaped judgment. As a result, while government officials, paladins, and clerics of lawful deities can have a wide range of initial attitudes toward a keeper (usually indifferent), the keeper takes a -4 penalty on all skill checks made to adjust such an individual's initial reaction.

KEEPER OF THE CERULEAN SIGN LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) can research the keepers of the Cerulean Sign to learn more about them. When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: "The keepers fight against the formation of cults founded by aberrations".

DC 15: "The keepers aren't an organized group; each of their members operates alone.

They do share a common devotion to a strange rune".

DC 20: "The Cerulean Sign that the keepers revere is an ancient rune that is said to predate the gods themselves". This result should also show the character what the Cerulean Sign looks like.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about powerful keepers, including their names, who they ally themselves with, and details of the cults they have disrupted.

KEEPERS OF THE CERULEAN SIGN IN THE GAME

A keeper of the Cerulean Sign might appear whenever a cult of aberration worshipers figures in the storyline.

The keeper might not be an obvious part of the story, but her presence should nonetheless be felt at some point by the PCs.

Perhaps they need to convince the keeper of their honorable intentions to progress in their quest.

Likewise, a keeper might have run into a dead end in her investigations and could make contact with the PCs herself to recruit their aid.

ADAPTATION

If your campaign doesn't feature cultists who worship aberrations or are easily dominated by them, you can still use this prestige class by adjusting its focus.

Perhaps the keepers oppose a specific evil religion in your campaign world or a corrupt government.

One possible way to adapt this prestige class is to reverse its role.

Perhaps the keepers serve an ancient philosophy that would see the aberrations rule the world.

They infiltrate churches and organizations and use their skills to subtly twist and taint the members into worshipping and supporting aberrations, effectively becoming that which the keeper described here works so hard to oppose.

SANCTIFIED MIND

The foes of man are many and varied.

Some seek simple conquest, others desire the fruits of our civilization, and still others want nothing more than to wipe us from the face of this world.

Foes worse, horrifically worse, than these exist.

These foes seize the minds of the innocent and bend them to their own wills, seeking to take our very minds from us.

Some of these evil beings raid civilization for the living, intelligent brains upon which they feed.

Others seek power by controlling our political and religious leaders.

This is the horror we stand against.

We shall bear eternal vigilance to ward our home from these abominations; such is our duty and our honor.

—Sir Jeremy Costineux, founder of the Society of the Sanctified Mind

The Society of the Sanctified Mind is a collection of elite clerics, fighters, monks, paladins, psions, psychic warriors, soulknives, and others who view the threat posed by the presence and goals of evil psionic-using creatures to be the most dire menace facing civilized races today.

Members of this organization consider their cause to be a crusade to rid the world of the awful and invisible influence of those who would seek to corrupt and pervert an individual's right to think for herself.

A sanctified mind believes that all evil-aligned psionics-using creatures (those that have psionic abilities or that use psionic power points) must be crushed.

All members share this devotion, and the most fervent of the order's elite warriors take the name of the society itself as their name.

This way, they say, they can never forget the vital importance of their chosen mission.

The group's emblem is a silhouette of a human head (or a humanoid one, depending on the race of the member bearing the device) with a sword and a mace crossed above it.

This emblem signifies the society's pledge to fight in protection of civilized lives and minds.

BECOMING A SANCTIFIED MIND

While the order includes a wide variety of classes, the martial tradition of the society makes entering the ranks of this prestige class easier for similarly themed classes.

Monks, fighters, paladins, clerics, psychic warriors, and psions make up the bulk of the order's membership. All applicants must have some amount of psionic capability, so even characters who have focused exclusively on their martial skills must take a level or two in a psionic class, or the Wild Talent feat, to enter.

An applicant need not pass a specific test to begin training as a sanctified mind, but a fierce devotion to eliminating evil psionics-using creatures must be evident in the potential recruit's words and deeds.

Applicants undergo (with their knowledge and approval) rigorous magical and psionic examination to ensure that each is acting of his own free will and is not coerced by the powers of evil psions or evil psionic creatures, or those of such a creature's minions.

Once a potential recruit passes these exams, he joins one of the society's ward houses to begin training.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 2 ranks, Knowledge (psionics) 2 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks.

Feat: Iron Will.

Proficiency: Proficient with all martial weapons.

Psionics: Must have a power point reserve of at least 1 power point.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Disguise, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (psionics), Listen, Psicraft, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the sanctified mind prestige class.

Spellcasting/Manifesting: At each level above 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a sanctified mind, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Alternatively, at each level above first, you gain new powers per day, an increase in manifester level, and powers known as if you had also gained a level in a manifesting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one manifesting class before becoming a sanctified mind, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining powers per day, manifester level, and powers known. If you have both divine spellcaster levels and manifester levels upon gaining a level as a sanctified mind, you must choose which class gains the benefit of this ability. You cannot increase both your spellcasting and manifesting levels.

At each level that grants this ability, however, you can choose to improve either your divine spellcaster level or your manifester level.

Choosing one way does not restrict you to the same choice when you gain your next level.

Partition Mind (Su): You can create a bastion of determination and resolve that helps you reduce the effects of mind-affecting spells and abilities.

As an immediate action, you can choose to partition your mind even if dazed or stunned.

While your mind is partitioned, you can choose to be slowed instead of suffering the normal effect of the mind-affecting spell or ability.

Attacks with a duration—for example, a hold person spell, a deep slumber spell, or the stunning effect of a mind flayer's mind blast—are only held in abeyance.

If the duration of your partitioned mind expires while the effect is still operative, you suffer the normal consequences for the balance of the effect's duration.

You can keep your mind partitioned for a number of rounds per day equal to your class level plus your Charisma bonus (minimum 1 round per day).

For example, a 2nd-level sanctified mind with a Charisma score of 13 is subjected to a mind blast and is stunned for 6 rounds.

If he uses his partition mind ability, he can spend 3 rounds slowed instead of stunned.

His partition mind ability then runs out, and he is stunned for the next 3 rounds.

Cleansing Strike (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can expend your psionic focus to smite a psionics-using creature with one melee attack (including melee touch attacks).

You add your Wisdom bonus (if any) to your attack roll and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage per sanctified mind class level.

If you smite a creature that does not use psionics, the smite has no effect but the ability is still used up for the day.

Disrupting Blow (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you can attempt a disrupting blow against a psionics-using creature in melee combat once per day.

You have been taught the weak points and vulnerable areas of a psionic-using creature's source of mental power, and this ability allows you to take advantage of that knowledge. The disrupting blow attempt must be declared prior to the attack roll.

On a successful hit, the target must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + sanctified mind level + Wis modifier) or lose access to all its psionic or psi-like abilities for 1d4 rounds due to the psychic disruption dealt by the blow.

If the attack fails, the disrupting blow attempt is still used up for the day.

At 5th level and higher, you can use this ability two times per day.

Hard to Hold (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you know how to wriggle free of the deadly tentacles that are so common among aberrations and other psionics-using creatures.

You gain a bonus equal to your class level on all grapple checks to resist or escape from a grapple.

Power Resistance: At 6th level, you gain power resistance equal to 5 + your character level.

PLAYING A SANCTIFIED MIND

You adhere to one of two schools of thought within the Society of the Sanctified Mind.

The first is the traditional human member, likely a cleric or paladin of St. Cuthbert.

You believe that while not all psionics-users are evil, the potential is always there, lurking in the background, and you likely distrust psionics-using creatures in general (even those within your organization).

You probably qualified for the prestige class by taking the Wild Talent feat, and you probably advance your divine spellcasting class rather than any manifesting class.

Taking a level in a psionic class would bring you away from your devotion to your deity, and closer in some ways to the enemy you have vowed to fight.

Your involvement in the church, the society's proselytizing about the dire threat posed by evil psionics-using creatures, and the order's urgent need for sturdy warriors drew you to join the ranks of the society.

Not all members of the church's hierarchy share the order's views, but the society's supporters are vocal even as a minority.

This faction suggests that joining the society is the highest honor a worshiper of their deity could hope to achieve; this fact alone reduces the amount of support the order garners from the church at large.

The new commandant, a dwarf fighter named Albaric, takes a different tack.

Neither human nor affiliated in any formal way with St. Cuthbert's church, Albaric opened the ranks of the society to all races and classes.

Albaric has been especially enthusiastic about recruiting members of psionic classes into the order, believing that the best way to confront the mental powers of evil psionics-using creatures is by using warriors who possess similar abilities.

If you subscribe to this second school, you are less bound to the old traditions of the order and its rigidly militaristic, religious history.

You are less likely to be lawful-aligned than old-school members, but Albaric values your fresh perspective, even if you receive the occasional cold stare or social slight from a long-time member of the order.

You likely qualified for the prestige class by taking a level (or more) in a psionic class.

You share Albaric's belief that the best way to battle the threat of evil psionics-using creatures is to use their most potent weapon against them.

COMBAT

Regardless of the circumstances that brought you to the order, you understand that the society considers itself at war with all creatures that would use psionics to enslave or control, with their servant creatures, and with their mind-controlled thralls everywhere. You know from your thorough studies or from bitter experience just how horrible a foe an evil psionics-using creature can be, and you seek to interpose yourself and your special training between such vile entities and their next intended victims.

You do your utmost to destroy any such creature you encounter.

You shouldn't mistake devotion to your cause for reckless bravery.

The society is not a large organization, and the number of sanctified minds, while growing, is still small.

No one in the order receives kudos for needlessly risking his own life or the lives of his comrades by seeking petty glory.

Only ultimate victory over the use of psionics for evil is an achievement worthy of the society and its sanctified members.

Many of the special abilities of this prestige class are usable only in melee.

Remaining alive and in one's own mind long enough to confront your foes can be a difficult task.

Your own psionic abilities and class features give you the ability to fend off the attacks of evil psionics-using creatures until you are close enough to bring your cleansing strike and disrupting blow abilities into play.

ADVANCEMENT

Depending on the class or classes you had levels in before taking levels as a sanctified mind, advancing in this prestige class is not without cost.

A fighter or other martial character loses the opportunity to pick up bonus feats and other combat-related special abilities.

While a sanctified mind is a potent melee opponent against psionics-users, your repertoire is limited against most other creatures.

For those who are disinclined to strictly pursue levels in the prestige class, multiclass options exist.

If you want to gain several feats quickly, a few levels of fighter or psychic warrior nicely round out the melee capabilities of a sanctified mind.

For those willing to abide with little or no mundane armor, levels of sorcerer or even monk complement your sanctified mind levels well.

If you would prefer to keep wearing armor, cleric levels improve your Will save and impart spellcasting ability.

Levels of psion likewise enable you to wear armor, provided you have proficiency with it, while also enabling you to advance your manifesting ability.

RESOURCES

While the sanctified minds are still officially sanctioned by the church of St. Cuthbert, the church's hierarchy has withdrawn much of its support since Albaric became commandant.

Fortunately for the order, government bodies recognize the value of having a society ward house nearby.

Many cities and nations waive taxes on the order and even help it pay some of its maintenance costs (property rental or taxation, foodstuff, gear, weapons, minor magic items, and so on).

The society asks that members tithe some of the earnings from their adventures back to the society, but under Albaric, such tithing is strictly voluntary.

Most members contribute ten percent to twenty percent of their income anyway, either from habit, in gratitude and recognition for the training they receive, or for both reasons.

SANCTIFIED MINDS IN THE WORLD

The society does its best to maintain open channels of communication to local and regional governments, and has its own network of scouts and spies.

Of particular concern to the group is news of any incursions from underground.

Evil psionics-using creatures seem to favor the dark places beneath the earth, and any hint of illithid or aboleth activity brings a society member or ally to investigate further.

If circumstances warrant and a ward house is nearby, the order dispatches a group containing at least one sanctified mind to determine the extent of the incursion and eliminate the threat themselves if possible.

In cases where the full resources of the society cannot be brought to bear, agents invite or even hire independent adventuring groups to take up the matter.

ORGANIZATION

The society's activities revolve around its ward houses.

These places contain sanctuaries, barracks, training grounds, and recruitment offices for the order.

While most ward houses are found in heavily populated areas, some exist on the frontiers or in the wildlands, near underground entrances or mountain cave systems where psionic creatures are likely to lair.

All members of the Society of the Sanctified Mind are welcome to live within the ward house, which is often a converted military barracks, fortified temple, or other defensible site.

Some ward houses lie within religious complexes dedicated to St. Cuthbert, although both Albaric and some among the church's hierarchy would like to see that situation change.

All society members share equally in the tasks of maintaining the ward house, such as kitchen duty, garrison and patrol, or facility maintenance and repair, based on individual background and skill.

As the order itself is led by a commandant, so is each ward house.

A small number of adjutants aids the commandant.

Below them come the sanctified minds; all members of this class technically outrank all nonmembers of the class, but Albaric considers this arrangement unfair and has begun striving to phase out that rule.

The ward house commandant is often, although not always, the highest-level sanctified mind (especially since Albaric became the order's overall commandant) or occasionally the highest-level cleric of St. Cuthbert attached to that ward house.

Other members of the society are given respect and rank based on their experience level.

NPC REACTIONS

In the past, the society was viewed in much the same light as the church that supported it.

If you admired or respected St. Cuthbert and his teachings, you got along well with the society.

This, too, has changed recently.

Albaric's distancing of the order from the church has helped to broaden its support.

Viewed as less rigidly confined to military tradition and a strict code of law, the society now enjoys backing from neutral good and chaotic good races and governments. More groups have begun to view the order in a positive light since members of more races and classes were permitted to join the Society of the Sanctified Mind. Some still feel the society is too narrowly focused; its operations and personnel would better serve civilization if its members weren't so obsessed with such a rare, though admittedly despicable, group of creatures as evil psionics-users.

Given this devotion, the group has occasionally, and with hesitation, worked with other foes of the mind flayers: the githzerai.

The society admires the zeal with which the githzerai seek out and destroy the illithids.

However, the evil nature of the githyanki prevents the order from making the same sorts of alliances with that race, which sanctified minds seek to destroy as much as any other evil psionics-using race.

Information about the Society of the Sanctified Mind has even made its way to Limbo, and some nonevil githzerai have become very interested in a group that loathes their two most hated enemies as much as they do.

Word has recently reached Albaric's ears that a handful of githzerai have applied for membership in the society, and that at least one hopes to begin sanctified mind training soon.

The Society of the Sanctified Mind is not large, but it is not a secret society.

As noted above, Albaric's changes have increased the order's public profile.

The commandant hopes that this results in broader backing, more members, and a higher level of consciousness among the public regarding the threat posed by evil psionics-using creatures.

There are no known instances of evil psionics-users directly attacking order members to assassinate them, nor of outright assaults on society ward houses.

Members of the society remain aware of the possibility of such actions.

They remain vigilant to any attempts evil psionics-using creatures might make to insinuate a spy or other informant into a ward house.

SANCTIFIED MIND LORE

Characters who succeed on a Knowledge (dungeoneering) check can learn the following information, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The church of St. Cuthbert sponsors an order known as the Society of the Sanctified Mind that fights evil psions and psionics-using creatures".

DC 15: "The society's leadership has recently changed, and the new commandant welcomes all heroes of brave heart and strong mind to join the battle against evil psionics-using creatures".

DC 20: "The society gives special training to its elite members.

These members take the name of the group when their training begins".

DC 25: "Sanctified minds specialize in melee combat with psionics-using creatures, using unique and powerful abilities to protect themselves and kill the creatures up close".

DC 30: This level of success rewards the character with campaign-specific details and information, to be determined by the DM.

SANCTIFIED MINDS IN THE GAME

In campaigns in which psionics or psionics-using creatures play a significant or even a major role, incorporating the Society of the Sanctified Mind into your game makes sense. Even if the PCs do not become sanctified minds or join the society itself, the order always welcomes stalwart, reliable heroes as allies.

The society is small and has limited resources; hiring a worthy band of adventurers to explore a set of caverns or investigate rumors of mass abductions allows the group's members to remain focused on their crusade.

The society can also provide gear, minor magic items, and healing and other restorative magic to parties in need.

ADAPTATION

In your campaign, the society's present level of affiliation with the church of St. Cuthbert remains open.

Your game's Albaric might sever all ties completely (alienating society members in doing so), or he might have become a convert during his years with Sir Jeremy.

It's recommended, in any case, that Albaric's reforms allowing more diverse membership in the order and among the ranks of the sanctified mind class should stand.

In this way, the group and the class are more appealing to players and their PCs.

If you do not use the core game's pantheon, replace St. Cuthbert with any lawful good or good-inclined neutral deity that isn't afraid to bash a few heads.

If you use the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting, deities as such Helm, Ilmater, the Red Knight, Torm, or Tyr are suitable replacements, depending on your tastes and those of your players.

In the EBERRON setting, the Church of the Silver Flame, the deities of the Sovereign Host, and even the Undying Court are suitable sponsors for the society.

Good-aligned psion adherents of the Path of Light make particularly apt sanctified minds.

SAVANT ABOLETH

Aboleths are powerfully strong creatures, but they do not value physical strength in their leaders.

Rather, they look to the eldest, the most intelligent, the wisest, and the most forceful of personality to lead them. In short, they look to the savant aboleths.

Savant aboleths are highly arrogant creatures.

They organize and run aboleth society, rarely leaving the boundaries of their chosen city except to trade information or to train a new savant in the ways of the glyph.

Savants lust for magical lore and bend all of their city's resources to the acquisition of new magic—in particular, the capture of new slaves with the ability to cast arcane spells.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Aboleth.

Feats: Ability Focus (enslave), Ability Focus (slime), Craft Aboleth Glyph, Quickslime.

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Forgery, Gather Information, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Listen, Search, Sense Motive, Speak Language, Spellcraft, Spot, Swim, and Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the savant aboleth prestige class.

Spellcasting: At each level, a savant aboleth gains new spells per day as if it had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class it belonged to before adding the prestige class.

It does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained, except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If an aboleth had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a savant, it must decide to which class it adds the new level for the purpose of determining spells per day.

Glyph Mastery (Sp): At 1st level, a savant aboleth has mastered the ancient craft of the aboleth glyph.

When a savant aboleth creates an aboleth glyph, multiply the base cost of the glyph by 75% to determine its cost in XP and raw materials.

Additionally, a savant aboleth gains the ability to cast glyph of warding as a spell-like ability a number of times each day equal to its savant aboleth level.

Each use of this spell-like ability costs 200 gp in raw materials (rare inks, crushed shells, and powdered gemstones).

Alternatively, a savant aboleth can expend 8 XP instead of spending the 200 gp.

Although this ability mimics a divine spell, this spell-like ability uses arcane magic.

Ossification (Ex): As a savant aboleth grows more powerful, its body begins to transform and become more heavily armored.

Ridges of bone form atop its skull and run down its spine, eventually encasing the savant aboleth's brain and back in thick natural armor.

A savant aboleth's natural armor bonus improves by 2 points at 1st level, 3rd level, and 5th level.

Enlarged Enslave (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, the range of a savant aboleth's enslave special attack is doubled from 30 feet to 60 feet.

Recrudescence Memories (Ex): At 2nd level, a savant aboleth's memories surface in a sudden blast of forgotten and hidden knowledge.

The memories quickly return to the hidden depths of the aboleth's mind, but the flash of insight is enough to infuse the creature's mind with a powerful rush of inspiration and spontaneous evolution.

The aboleth can increase its Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma score by 2 points.

This is a permanent, untyped bonus, similar to those gained by advancing four character levels.

At 4th level, a savant aboleth's memories flare again, and it can increase its Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma score by 2 points.

Greater Glyph (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, a savant aboleth's glyph of warding spell-like ability improves and becomes a greater glyph of warding spell-like ability.

It must expend raw materials worth 400 gp (or 16 XP) each time it uses this spell-like ability.

A savant aboleth can voluntarily underpower this spell-like ability to cast a glyph of warding instead.

True Enslave (Su): Beginning at 4th level, a savant aboleth's enslave ability grows much more powerful.

An enslaved creature can no longer make a new Will saving throw each day to break free from the enslavement; the condition is permanent until successfully dispelled.

Additionally, the enslavement lasts no matter how far the savant aboleth moves from its slave.

Slaves on a different plane remain enslaved, but the savant aboleth cannot communicate with them telepathically until they return to the same plane.

Elder Glyph (Sp): At 5th level, a savant aboleth's greater glyph of warding spell-like ability improves and becomes an elder glyph of warding spell-like ability (see below). It must expend raw materials worth 1,000 gp (or 40 XP) each time it uses this spell-like ability.

A savant aboleth can voluntarily underpower this spell-like ability to duplicate either a glyph of warding or a greater glyph of warding instead.

TOPAZ GUARDIAN

No evil that crawls on or below the face of the earth is the equal of our true and righteous wrath.

Be resolute, be determined, be relentless in your pursuit of creatures that enslave or devour human beings.

This is a war of extermination, and failure is unthinkable.

—Jasminder Aree, Grand Sunwarden

The Holy Order of the Supernal Topaz Defenders (or the Topaz Order, for short) is an organization of righteous knights, clerics, and champions united in the defense of humankind and its allies from the threat of unhuman monstrosities.

While it opposes all intelligent races that prey on humanity, the order reserves its special hatred for creatures that use mind-affecting magic to dominate and enslave humans and other good-aligned humanoids.

Followers of Heironeous, members of the order comprise an elite band of warriors.

Resolute crusaders, the topaz guardians are the elite initiates of the order.

They boldly confront unhuman predators such as mind flayers, beholders, aboleths, and neogi, their spies and agents, and any beings allied with the monsters, seeking to exterminate the creatures at every opportunity.

Other aberrations with similarly monstrous and evil schemes also have the enmity of the Topaz Order.

If mind flayers or aboleths aren't close at hand, topaz guardians are more than willing to seek out and destroy the outposts of aboleths, beholders, tsochari, and like creatures.

The Topaz Order is so named because its emblem is a brilliant oval yellow topaz on a field of cobalt blue.

The topaz symbolizes protection, resolve, and the sun, and is always used in the creation of the topaz diadems for which the order is renowned.

BECOMING A TOPAZ GUARDIAN

While the Topaz Order includes a number of good-aligned fighters, clerics, monks, and paladins, only a few of these stalwarts pursue the path of the topaz guardian.

Most topaz guardians are paladins, monks, or fighter/clerics.

A human paladin with a decent Intelligence score has the easiest time qualifying for the class.

An applicant must be a skillful warrior, strong of will, with keen perception, experience in underground exploration and movement, and the ability to shake off effects that would leave other characters stunned and unable to act. As with any combat-oriented character, he'll find that high Strength, Constitution, and Dexterity serve him well in this prestige class.

In addition, he'll most likely want at least one exceptional mental characteristic: Intelligence for the skill points, Wisdom for perception and mental resistance, or Charisma to obtain the best benefit of divine grace (if he is a paladin).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Base Will Save: +3 OR divine grace class feature.

Skills: Knowledge (dungeoneering) 4 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks, Spot 2 ranks.

Feat: Quick Recovery†.

Special: Must be sponsored by an existing member and approved by a High Sunwarden of the order.

† New feat described on page 181.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Sense Motive, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the topaz guardian prestige class.

Spellcasting: At 2nd, 4th, and 5th levels, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a topaz guardian, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Topaz Diadem: All topaz guardians are given a topaz diadem as a symbol of their devotion and a shield against their foes. The diadem is a sturdy headband of finely tooled leather, with a large yellow topaz set in its center.

See the sidebar on this page for a description of the topaz diadem's effects.

At 3rd level, the sacred bonuses offered by the diadem increase to +2.

At 5th level, the bonuses increase to +3.

Topaz diadems function only for members of the topaz guardian prestige class.

If your diadem is lost or destroyed, you can obtain another one from the order at a cost of 6,000 gp and after a wait of twelve days.

Smite Aberration (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can attempt to smite an aberration once per day with one normal melee attack.

You add your Charisma bonus (if any) to your attack roll and deal an extra 2 points of damage per topaz guardian class level.

If you smite a creature that is not an aberration, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for the day.

At 4th level, you can attempt to smite aberrations twice per day.

Hard to Hold (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you learn how to wriggle free of the deadly tentacles that are so common among aberrations and other psionics-using creatures.

You gain a bonus equal to your class level on all grapple checks to resist or escape from a grapple.

PLAYING A TOPAZ GUARDIAN

You are a courageous and honorable defender of your people.

Compassion, piety, and love for your people have inspired you to dedicate yourself to the unending battle against the darkest and most terrible of foes.

While other warriors facing such enemies become grim and cynical, your faith in the righteousness of your cause shields you from such disillusionment.

You are fighting the good fight, and your certainty helps to anchor you against the foul darkness and mind-numbing horrors you must face.

While you embody the virtues of compassion and love for your fellows, you understand that your enemies—aboleths, mind flayers, and other unhuman monstrosities—are creatures of irredeemable evil, deserving of nothing but the swiftest and most thorough destruction you can deliver.

You are an implacable foe, and when you confront your sworn enemies, you burn with a brilliant and righteous wrath that few can withstand.

By your courage and dedication you hope to set an unforgettable example, so that your zeal might serve to ignite in others the will to combat evil.

COMBAT

You live for the opportunity to bring aberrations and other such abominations within reach of your sword or fists. Thanks to your training and your diadem, you can resist the insidious mental attacks of such monsters.

Your superior combat skills provide you with an uncanny ability to oppose the hordes of minions employed by master aberrations.

While you possess no shortage of physical courage and zeal for your cause, you are not a witless thug.

It's true that you are inclined to surprise your aberration foes by battering through their defenses with speed and determination, but you will not recklessly throw away your life if you can help it.

The best weapon against an aberration outpost is a well-coordinated team of heroes with a variety of skills and strengths, not a solitary avenger whose only alternatives are to conquer or die.

Therefore, you look for opportunities to strip away the advantages of your enemies by the clever use of your companions' magic and skills so you can face them as you were meant to: holy steel against writhing tentacles, righteous zeal versus unhuman evil.

ADVANCEMENT

Qualifying for the topaz guardian prestige class requires forfeiting at least one feat that you are likely to miss.

As you gain levels, you will probably want to catch up on the good combat feats you missed earlier.

Weapon Focus and Improved Critical are quick ways to improve your combat ability.

Power Attack and Cleave are also good choices.

Don't overlook Improved Sunder; some creatures that attack with tentacles can be literally disarmed by a determined attack against their natural weapons.

If you want to multiclass while advancing as a topaz guardian, consider taking fighter levels.

You want to gain a lot of feats quickly, and the fighter class is simply the best for that.

A level or two of cleric is not bad, either, since it helps your Will save even more and gives you some spellcasting ability.

RESOURCES

The Topaz Order is naturally strongest and most well established in lands that face serious aberration threats. The church of Heironeous does all it can to support the order in such places.

In general, a topaz guardian can obtain healing (or other spellcasting services) from a cleric of Heironeous at 25% of the normal cost, and his companions can obtain healing at 75% of the normal cost.

The church also goes to some trouble to provide topaz guardians with the magical firepower they need to fight their sworn enemies.

A topaz guardian with a reputation for success can borrow specific items necessary for his expeditions.

If the item is expended, the guardian is expected to compensate the church accordingly.

The specific items available are left to the DM's discretion, but in general, an item or items totaling no more than 10% of the wealth guidelines given on Table 5-1 in the Dungeon Master's Guide is not unreasonable.

For example, a 6th-level paladin/4th-level topaz guardian is a 10th-level character, so items up to 4,900 gp in value (10% of 49,000) could be borrowed.

To borrow items, a topaz guardian must establish a good personal relationship with the locally presiding cleric of Heironeous, and he must possess a reputation for successful adventuring and personal integrity.

Of course, it might take time to obtain unusual or specific items.

TOPAZ GUARDIANS IN THE WORLD

The Topaz Order remains constantly vigilant for signs of aberration incursions—specifically, aboleth raids, grell hunts, neogi slaving raids, and mind flayer attacks.

Individual members of the order seek out adventuring companies going into aberration-held areas and ask them to bring back news of mind flayer sightings or similar threats.

Order members also organize elite bands or companies (including adventurers) to raze aberration outposts and drive them back into the underground depths.

ORGANIZATION

The Holy Order of the Supernal Topaz Defenders is divided into a number of relatively small chapters.

Each chapter includes anywhere from five to twenty clerics, paladins, fighters, monks, and topaz guardians, all of whom share a chapter house or base of operations in a good-sized temple to Heironeous.

The members of a chapter make an effort to assemble once a month to share news, install new members, and recognize notable achievements.

It's not at all uncommon for the chapter house to be virtually deserted at most other times.

The order members have other duties and responsibilities scattered all over the region, and even those who don't have other duties are frequently engaged in efforts to ferret out the secret strongholds of their sworn enemies.

The order recognizes four ranks: Brother (or Sister), Guardian, Sunwarden, and High Sunwarden.

Brothers and Sisters make up about two-thirds of the membership; these are the fighters, clerics, paladins, and others who have sworn allegiance to the Topaz Order, but who have not actually taken levels in the topaz guardian prestige class.

Brothers and Sisters are the foot soldiers of the society, called upon to join companies attacking aberration strongholds, but otherwise left to their own devices.

Guardians have taken levels in the prestige class.

They are champions, commanders, and agents who have no other duties in the church of Heironeous.

The most experienced guardian in a chapter is appointed the chapter's Sunwarden, or leader.

A Sunwarden is considered equal in rank to the high priest of a temple of Heironeous, but defers to the ranking cleric of the temple that hosts his chapter house.

Sunwardens who lead chapters of more than twelve members, or who have been especially recognized by the head of the order, are referred to as High Sunwardens.

The leader of the Topaz Order is Grand Sunwarden Jasminster Aree (LG female human paladin 7/topaz guardian 10), who governs the Hall of the Supernal Topaz, a fortified abbey located near Verbobonc.

NPC REACTIONS

The knights who serve in the Topaz Order form only one of the knightly orders, martial societies, and dedicated fellowships to be found in a typical human kingdom.

Not many common folk know the specific cause or composition of the Topaz Order, and so commoners view topaz guardians in much the same way that they would view any temple-sworn knight or paladin in the service of Heironeous.

Good-aligned people look upon topaz guardians as valorous defenders of the common good—a little overzealous or aristocratic to be really likable, perhaps, but admirable nonetheless.

Evil-aligned creatures detest the crusading zeal of the order, and regard topaz guardians as self-righteous inquisitors who insist on making others adhere to their ridiculous standards of conduct and morality.

The topaz guardians get on well with the abolishers of the Circle of the True; members of the Circle hold a helpful attitude toward topaz guardians, even if they sometimes think that the guardians are a little too focused on master aberrations as opposed to the entire abominable class of monsters.

Keepers of the Cerulean Sign are also friendly toward members of the Topaz Order.

While they believe that the guardians have an overly simple notion about how to go about opposing the machinations of aberrations, the keepers certainly respect the topaz guardians' determination and zeal.

Naturally, any master aberration aware of the order's existence views its adherents in the worst possible light. Aboleths, mind flayers, and other such aberrations are without fail hostile to the topaz guardians and all who travel with them.

The Topaz Order is not particularly secretive, but it is not large either.

All but the most isolated clerics of Heironeous know of the order, but only those clerics who happen to serve in towns near chapter houses of the order know where members can be found.

Clerics of temples of Heironeous located in large cities (or large towns, if the region is subject to aberration activity) host chapters.

Clerics of temples in large towns (or larger communities) can point inquirers toward likely locations for Topaz Order chapter houses, while clerics of temples in smaller towns must ask their fellows in larger or more centrally located shrines to find out where inquiries should be directed.

TOPAZ GUARDIAN LORE

The Topaz Order is closely affiliated with the church of Heironeous.

Characters who succeed on a Knowledge (religion) check can learn the following information, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The church of Heironeous sponsors a knightly order known as the Topaz Order".

DC 15: "Knights of the Topaz Order are dedicated to fighting evil monsters such as mind flayers or aboleths. Members of the Topaz Order work to organize the defenses of humankind against these monsters, and they mount expeditions to go underground and burn out any outposts they find".

DC 20: "The elite champions of the Topaz Order are known as topaz guardians.

Each one carries a special topaz diadem, a magic gem that protects him against evil magic.

They're experts in fighting mind flayers and other aberrations".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success learn important details about specific guardians, their exploits, and their enemies.

TOPAZ GUARDIANS IN THE GAME

The Topaz Order serves as an excellent patron or sponsor for adventuring parties fighting aberration threats.

Even if none of the PCs belong to the order, farsighted members always look out for good-hearted and capable heroes who can be rallied against aberration incursions. The topaz guardian prestige class appeals to players who like to roleplay virtuous and determined heroes, such as paladins or lawful good clerics or monks.

Make sure you give the player the opportunity to be pious, dedicated, and courageous in the face of the foulest horror. The player of a topaz guardian doesn't want to deal with a quagmire of moral ambiguities and hard choices; he wants the opportunity for his character to confront evil and pound it into jelly with his bastard sword.

Your adventures don't have to be simple-minded or absolutely lacking in shades of meaning—make sure you don't run too many adventures that force the PC to choose between evils or make it impossible for him to act courageously and confidently.

ADAPTATION

While the Topaz Order is presented as an arm of the temple of Heironeous here, there is no reason you couldn't make them followers of any lawful good deity.

LOST EMPIRES OF FAERÛN (3.5)

CULTIST OF THE SHATTERED PEAK

"The pride of wizards and arcanists nearly doomed Faerûn once. Never again."

—Khemal Serist, Cultist of the Shattered Peak

The Cult of the Shattered Peak is a highly secretive society whose members are all direct descendants of the Netherese.

Cult cells are scattered all across Faerûn, but the majority are concentrated within and around the former boundaries of Netheril.

Many cultists live among the Bedine tribes of the Anauroch and the folk of the North and Tun.

Smaller cells operate across the Western Heartlands, monitoring Netherese ruins both known and unknown.

Most of the tales about secret Netherese cults depict their members as power-mad wizards bent on raising the Empire of Magic once again, or exploiting its secrets for personal gain.

But the Cult of the Shattered Peak bears no resemblance to the cults in these stories, since its membership includes not a single arcane spellcaster.

The members of this cult recall the hubris of Netheril and its citizens' oppression of those they viewed as "lesser races", and they seek to ensure that the ways of old Netheril remain dead and buried.

To that end, they employ a variety of tactics—spreading misinformation, discrediting scholars who get too close to resurrecting some aspect of Netherese life, and even outright assassination, if necessary.

Their methods may be ruthless at times, but the cultists firmly believe that they are working toward the greater good.

BECOMING A CULTIST OF THE SHATTERED PEAK

Cultists of the Shattered Peak possess skill at arms, stealth, and a smattering of ancient lore.

In the FORGOTTEN REALMS setting, the deities Tyr, Helm, or Torm serve as good patrons for the Holy Order of the Supernal Topaz Defenders.

In the EBERRON setting, the Church of the Silver Flame boasts the greatest number of topaz defenders, who are joined in their battles by adherents of Boldrei and Dol Arrah of the Sovereign Host.

Most of those now operating in Faerûn began their careers as fighter/rogues.

Single-class rogues or ranger/rogues are also fairly common, though they must wait until they have gained the requisite combat training.

The cult's sometimes ruthless tactics make paladins rare in its ranks, and arcane spellcasters are simply not permitted.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Human of Netherese descent (home region Anauroch, Halruaa, Nimbral, the North, the Ride, Uthgardt Tribesfolk, or the Western Heartlands).

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Decipher Script 4 ranks, Disable Device 4 ranks, Knowledge (history) 4 ranks, Speak Language (Loross).

Special: Sneak attack +1d6.

Special: You may not have any levels in an arcane spellcasting class.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Climb, Craft (any), Decipher Script, Disable Device, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (history), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession (any), Sleight of Hand, Spot, and Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As a cultist of the Shattered Peak, you are focused on preventing arcane spellcasters from rediscovering the old ways of Netheril.

Because that goal sometimes places you in direct conflict with arcane spellcasters, cult training grants you a number of abilities aimed at ensuring victory against such foes.

All the following are class features of the cultist of the Shattered Peak prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, as well as with light armor and bucklers.

Spellcasting: You have the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a cultist spell, you must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so if you have an Intelligence of 10 or lower, you cannot cast these spells.

Bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + your Int modifier.

When you get 0 spells per day of a given level (for instance, 0 1st-level spells at 1st level), you gain only the bonus spells you would be entitled to based on your Intelligence score for that spell level.

You can learn sorcerer/wizard spells from the schools of abjuration or enchantment only.

You have access to any spell on those lists and can freely choose which to prepare, just as a wizard can.

You prepare and cast spells just as a wizard does.

Ominous Presence (Ex): When adventurers or explorers come too close to discovering some great Netherese secret, you prefer to frighten them off rather than kill them if at all possible.

Upon becoming a cultist of the Shattered Peak, you gain a bonus equal to your class level on all Bluff and Intimidate checks.

Zeal (Ex): You gain a +1 morale bonus on attack rolls against arcane spellcasters and a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against arcane spells and effects.

The bonus on attack rolls does not apply to a creature with arcane spell-like abilities unless it is also an arcane spellcaster.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you deal extra damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook.

Smite Mage (Su): If you are forced into battle with an arcane spellcaster, your life depends on quick and decisive action.

Starting at 3rd level, you can attempt to smite an arcane spellcaster with one normal melee attack once per day.

You add your Charisma bonus (if any) to your attack roll, and you deal an extra 1 point of damage per cultist level you possess on a successful attack.

If you accidentally smite a creature that is not an arcane spellcaster, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

Death Attack (Ex): Sometimes the only way to stop especially determined foes from acquiring forbidden knowledge is to kill them.

At 5th level, you gain a death attack that works like the assassin ability of the same name, except that the DC of the Fortitude save to avoid the kill or paralysis effect is 15 + your Int modifier.

See the assassin class feature, page 180 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

PLAYING A CULTIST OF THE SHATTERED PEAK

Certain objects and places are best left undisturbed, and sorcerers and wizards are the most likely to disturb them. Your task is to stop such individuals from doing so by any means necessary.

This goal places you in direct or indirect conflict with many of Faerûn's arcane spellcasters.

Not all mages are opposed to your cause, but until you know that a particular arcane spellcaster isn't going to abuse his power, it's only wise to treat him as a potential adversary.

Secrecy allows you to do your work with a minimum of resistance from your adversaries and also protects you from reprisals.

Thus, you usually operate covertly, as part of a hidden cell within the organization.

You receive information and orders through the one or two other cell members you know, or through messages left for you by comrades you never see.

You might also be assigned to protect and assist other members without their knowledge.

This high degree of secrecy means that if you or any of your colleagues are captured or questioned, none of you can reveal much about the cult.

Combat: You admire efficiency.

When combat seems the best way to achieve the cult's goals, you don't shrink from it, but you can often accomplish the same ends through stealth, guile, or distraction.

Your fighting skills are on a par with the rogue's, and you excel in any fight in which a rogue would do well.

A carefully planned sneak attack is your best way to begin any violent encounter, and you should actively seek opportunities to flank opponents so that you can make even more use of sneak attacks.

A well-aimed enchantment spell, such as charm person or sleep, may allow you to avoid a fight altogether, but save such assaults for weaker foes that are more likely to prove susceptible to them.

Defensive spells such as shield can give you a nice edge in a fight and may prove more reliable than offensive spells.

At 5th level, your death attack becomes one of the most powerful weapons in your arsenal.

Studying your foe before you strike is essential, so don't be in a hurry to enter combat if you think you could watch from concealment and strike a decisive blow before the fight really begins.

Advancement: Cultists of the Shattered Peak believe in the value of information.

Upon joining the cult, you receive few orders other than "Keep your eyes open" and "Report back when you find information of interest, especially concerning powerful magic or mages".

Later, you may be called upon to join your fellow cultists on a mission of particular importance.

At this point, you might be asked to steal a dangerous artifact from the vaults of a powerful mage, or attack the camp of an evil adventuring party looking for old magic in Netherese tombs, or assassinate someone who knows too much.

As you advance, you may want to add levels of rogue, fighter, or ranger as well as levels of cultist because increasing your stealth, your combat skills, or both is always a good idea.

Pay attention to your spell selection as well.

Aim for a mix of defensive spells (such as resist energy and nondetection), offensive spells (such as touch of idiocy and deep slumber), and generally useful spells (such as dispel magic, rage, arcane lock, and heroism).

The more varied your spell selection, the more flexibility you have.

Resources: Upon joining the Cult of the Shattered Peak, you receive a badge or other identifying mark that you must wear on your clothing at all times, so that other cultists can easily recognize you.

The Cult of the Shattered Peak has at least twenty such identifiers, ranging from scarves tied in a certain manner to brooches set with a specific type of stone.

A DC 15 Spot check is sufficient to recognize a cultist's secret sigil, provided that the observers know what to look for.

In certain special circumstances (such as the pursuit of a traitor to the cult who knows the sigils), you may choose not to wear the mark for a short time, but if you forgo it without good reason, you face stringent loyalty tests and questioning from cult leaders.

You can also deliver messages to other cult members by means of a variety of special signs and signals.

For example, flowers tied with a green ribbon and hanging upside down in a window might indicate a cult member in trouble, or a discolored stone in a cobbled street might indicate a safe house nearby.

CULTISTS OF THE SHATTERED PEAK IN FAERÛN

The Cult of the Shattered Peak consists of no more than a few dozen individuals of widely disparate origins.

Of necessity, they must sift through countless tidbits of from informants, rumormongers, and the stories of travelers for clues as to who might be seeking ancient Netherese lore.

Cultists often assume cover identities as traveling merchants, peddlers, sellswords, hunters, or other folk who can wander over great distances without inviting suspicion.

Organization: The organization of the cult is simple.

All members, called Brothers or Sisters, are free to act as they see fit to achieve the organization's goals.

Bitter rivalries sometimes spring up between individuals who embrace different methods for accomplishing those goals.

For example, members inclined toward evil tend to favor assassination and intimidation, while those inclined toward good prefer misdirection and suggestion.

The leader of the organization, known as the Master of the Shattered Peak, is the most senior Brother who is willing to take on the mantle of leadership.

He coordinates the efforts of dozens of individuals scattered over many lands, communicating through traveling cult members and secret signs.

The Cult of the Shattered Peak maintains a secret stronghold in the southern reaches of the Scimitar Spires. There, within the legendary Shattered Peak, lies a mountain fortress hidden beyond gaping chasms and torturous cliffs.

NPC Reactions: The few people who are aware of the cult generally view it as an organization of dangerous, wizard-hating zealots.

Arcanists of any sort are likely to hold unfriendly attitudes toward known cultists, but most other individuals are indifferent toward the organization and its goals.

In the past, the cult has often interfered with the activities of Zhentarim wizards skulking about in the sands of Anauroch, and so the Zhentarim are almost always hostile toward members of the cult.

Cultists of the Shattered Peak regard magelords (see page 17) as cruel and dangerous, and most magelords return the sentiment.

CULTIST OF THE SHATTERED PEAK LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can research the Cult of the Shattered Peak to learn more about it.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 15: "A mysterious organization of magic-hating zealots sometimes interferes with adventurers and wizards searching for old lore".

DC 20: "The organization is known as the Cult of the Shattered Peak.

Its members hunt those who seek out the secrets of old Netheril".

DC 25: "The Cult has a stronghold or base somewhere in the Scimitar Spires, in the legendary mountain known as the Shattered Peak.

The Bedine tribesmen of the surrounding desert are allies of the Cult and often conceal cult members in their midst".

DC 35: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific members of the cult in your campaign.

CULTISTS OF THE SHATTERED PEAK IN THE GAME

Any time the PCs seek out the lost lore or magic of fallen Netheril, they risk drawing the attention of the Cult of the Shattered Peak.

The cultists take a dim view of adventurers recklessly opening Netherese tombs or unearthing powerful Netherese magic.

If intimidation and deception fail to turn the intruders away, the cult takes decisive action to remove them, either via its own members or through intermediaries such as mercenaries or paid assassins.

Conversely, PCs pursuing a villain who seeks ancient Netherese power, or who simply wields arcane magic cruelly or recklessly, may find a secret ally in the cult.

Cultists might provide the heroes with information about their adversary's whereabouts and activities, or even offer the services of a cult scout or assassin to ensure the defeat of their common foe.

A player character cultist is apt to receive orders or requests for aid at unexpected times.

Not all the character's cult activities should occur as a result of orders from the cult hierarchy; the cultist should have plenty of opportunities to discover situations or information that allow proactive advancement of the cult's interests.

As the cultist accumulates successes in the field, the character should acquire more cult contacts.

Eventually, he should be in a position to get information through a network of junior cultists and have the authority to direct their activities to some degree.

ADAPTATION

The Cult of the Shattered Peak could be active throughout Faerûn because foolish, irresponsible, and greedy arcane spellcasters can be found almost everywhere.

Cult cells could monitor (and counter) the magical activities of the Zhentarim and the Red Wizards of Thay wherever they operate, and both organizations cover a lot of territory.

Likewise, the cult might be active anywhere arcane spellcasters hold the reins of power, from the Elven Court to Rashemen and from the Vilhon Reach to Waterdeep.

GLORIOUS SERVITOR

"Let the enemies of my lord and god fall before my might. I am his chosen, and I shall let none stand who dare oppose his will!"

—Netheris Ket, Glorious Servitor of Sebek

Glorious servitors are exceptionally loyal and devout servants of the Mulhorandi gods.

Exalted above most other mortals, a glorious servitor strives to live an exemplary life that embodies her deity's beliefs and values.

She has many rivals and enemies both inside and outside her deity's cult, but she welcomes any challenge that gives her an opportunity to demonstrate her faithfulness and dedication.

BECOMING A GLORIOUS SERVITOR

Most glorious servitors are chosen from the multitude of paladins, clerics, fighters, and monks dwelling throughout the Mulhorandi lands.

Of these, clerics and paladins have the easiest route into the prestige class, since they have Diplomacy and Knowledge (religion) as class skills.

Monks and rangers also take up this holy cause from time to time, although some of the required skills are cross-class for them.

Those who were rogues or rogue/assassins before entering this class usually serve Set, while those who were sorcerers or wizards typically serve Thoth.

The key abilities for a glorious servitor are Charisma (to lead and influence her deity's church), Wisdom (to understand the motivations of her religious and political enemies), and Strength (to fight the battles ahead).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Aasimar, human, or tiefling (home region Mulhorand).

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Diplomacy 6 ranks, Knowledge (Mulhorand local) 6 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 6 ranks.

Feats: Godsight (see page 8), Improved Turning.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Any from the Mulhorandi pantheon.

Special: You must have the approval of your patron deity's church.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Craft (any), Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (local), Knowledge (religion), Listen, Profession (any), Sense Motive, Spot, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

As a glorious servitor, you dedicate your life to the service of a single deity.

To that end, you gain a variety of abilities that allow you to advance your deity's agenda in Faerûn.

All the following are class features of the glorious servitor prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You are proficient with the short sword, longsword, and khopesh, as well as with all types of armor and all types of shields except tower shields.

Bestial Form (Su): You can assume the bestial form of your patron deity (animal, vermin, or magical beast, as given on Table I-4, below) as a standard action and remain in that form for up to 1 hour.

TABLE I-4:

BESTIAL FORMS OF MULHORANDI DEITIES

Deity	Bestial Form
Anhur	Lion
Bast	Leopard
Geb	Brown bear
Hathor	Bison
Horus-Re	Giant eagle
Isis	Giant eagle
Nephthys	Huge viper snake
Osiris	Brown bear
Sebek	Giant crocodile
Set	Large monstrous scorpion
Thoth	Giant owl

This ability functions like a polymorph spell (caster level equals your glorious servitor level), except that you can use it only on yourself, you do not regain hit points for changing form, and you can assume only the designated shape.

This ability is usable once per day per glorious servitor level.

Your natural attacks in your bestial form are treated as magic weapons for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Fearlessness (Su): Because the power of your deity suffuses both your body and your mind, you are immune to fear effects.

Spell Resistance (Su): Your deity's glory makes you more resistant to magic than other mortals.

You gain spell resistance equal to 12 + your glorious servitor level.

Divine Shield (Su): At 2nd level, you gain a +2 deflection bonus to AC when you are in animal form.

This bonus increases to +4 at 4th level and to +6 at 6th level.

Increased Strength (Ex): Your connection to the divine grants you great physical strength.

At 2nd, 4th, and 6th level, you gain a +1 inherent bonus to Strength in both your normal and your bestial form.

Divine Voice (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you can speak any languages you know with your normal human voice while in bestial form.

This ability allows you to cast spells with verbal components normally while in bestial form, although you cannot cast spells that require somatic components unless you use the Still Spell or Natural Spell feat.

True Seeing (Sp): Upon attaining 3rd level, you gain the ability to use true seeing once per day (caster level equals your character level).

Greater Command (Sp): At 5th level and higher, you can use greater command once per day (caster level equals your character level).

Divine Transformation (Su): When you attain 7th level, your deity rewards you for your faithful service by changing your type to outsider (native).

Immunity to Poison (Ex): Your devotion to your deity has rendered you immune to poison.

Mass Cure Serious Wounds (Sp): At 7th level, you can use mass cure serious wounds (or mass inflict serious wounds if your patron is Set or Sebek) once per day (caster level equals your character level).

UNFAITHFUL SERVITORS

If you willfully violate the orders of your deity, you lose all supernatural and spell-like abilities of the prestige class and cannot progress further as a glorious servitor.

In much the same way as a paladin, you regain your abilities and advancement potential if you atone for your violations. You can also regain your abilities if you switch allegiance to one of your deity's rivals in the Mulhorandi pantheon—a tactic that earns you the unending enmity of your previous deity's church.

PLAYING A GLORIOUS SERVITOR

Because you maintain such a deep connection with the divine, each action you perform is in fact an act of your deity.

Those outside Mulhorand may perceive you as just a god's pawn, but they are wrong.

In Mulhorand, you are more than a hero—more even than a guardian of the people.

You are a champion of all that Mulhorand was, is, and will be.

From the moment you become a glorious servitor, you play a variety of roles on behalf of your god and your church—messenger, emissary, guardian of the sacred tombs, and more.

As you earn greater trust and accumulate ever more glorious accomplishments, your duties expand to include recruitment, crusading, spying, assassination, and any other tasks that advance your deity's agenda in Mulhorand and the rest of Faerûn.

When you reach the pinnacle of your power, you may be placed in charge of your own church or awarded a high position within the government or military.

Combat: The wishes of your deity dictate your approach to combat.

Horus-Re demands fairness and righteousness from his minions, while Set encourages deception and trickery. Your spell resistance can ward off some magical attacks, especially from low-level spellcasters, allowing you to concentrate your defenses on more formidable foes.

Furthermore, your Godsight feat and your true seeing ability allow you to pierce false illusions, identify your enemies, and see the world as it truly is.

Your ability to change shape is one of your god's greatest gifts to you.

In bestial form, you can travel unnoticed, especially through wilderness lands, and fight using the natural attacks of your bestial form.

If your form allows you to fly or swim, you gain still more strategic options in combat.

When you reach 2nd level, you gain greater protection against attacks while in your bestial form, and that defense grows stronger as you attain higher levels.

At 3rd level, your ability to speak in your bestial form allows you to communicate strategic information to your allies and even cast spells without changing back to humanoid form.

At 5th level, you can use your greater command ability to stop enemies in their tracks before they can attack you. Finally, your transformation to outsider at 7th level renders you immune to many effects that work only against humanoids, though you are still vulnerable to holy word and other spells and effects that target outsiders.

Advancement: Before naming a glorious servitor, the church carefully screens and tests initiates for their loyalty, combat ability, and faithfulness.

Thus, by the time you enter the class, you are fully aware of your place in your deity's grand scheme.

Your role upon entering the prestige class is to serve as a special emissary, agent, and troubleshooter for your church. Your routine duties are likely to involve delivering messages to outposts, other churches, and the far-flung armies of Mulhorand.

In addition, you may be tasked with hunting down the enemies of your deity, seeking out lost artifacts and treasures that might bring glory to your faith, and spying on your church's enemies to discover their secrets.

Keeping your ranks maximized in Diplomacy and one or more Knowledge skills is an excellent strategy, since knowledgeable and politically savvy glorious servitors make the most effective emissaries of the gods.

You may also wish to buy ranks in Bluff and Intimidate if you plan to work in foreign lands where your deity may not have such a fearsome reputation.

Resources: The best resource you have to offer your compatriots is the full support of your church.

In addition to gear, money, and shelter in times of need, the church can offer a wealth of information.

Knowing that you would never willingly cause harm to your church, the faithful rarely question your actions and provide whatever support they can without reservation.

You are also an asset to any group that must navigate the great bureaucracy of Mulhorand.

Because of your high status, your requests are handled with greater urgency than those of lesser citizens.

Finally, you may be able to use your bestial form to spy on others and access forbidden areas inconspicuously, thus reducing the risk to yourself and your comrades.

GLORIOUS SERVITORS IN FAERÛN

Glorious servitors are found primarily in the larger cities of Mulhorand, and to a lesser extent in Murghôm, Semphar, and the conquered lands of Unther.

The glorious servitors of Horus-Re and Anhur may also be encountered in border outposts defending Mulhorand from outside threats.

Many of those who have attained high levels in the prestige class also hold positions of importance in Mulhorand society and act on matters of state on behalf of their patron deities.

Set's glorious servitors, however, tend to assume less prominent positions in Mulhorand so that they can carry out their deity's poisonous plans from the shadows.

Glorious servitors who travel to other regions of Faerûn sometimes serve as ambassadors and spies for Mulhorand, accumulating information while carrying out their deities' plans.

Many of those who have attained high levels in the prestige class hold positions of importance in Mulhorand society and act on matters of state on behalf of their patron deities. Glorious servitors have no common organization, since each is first and foremost a member of her particular church.

NPC REACTIONS

A glorious servitor is a champion of her faith just as a paladin or a high-level cleric is, and she is treated in much the same way by the allies and enemies of her church. Anyone favorably disposed toward a cleric of Anhur, for instance, should also be favorably disposed toward a glorious servitor of Anhur.

Almost all Mulhorandi begin with a helpful attitude toward glorious servitors of any deities except Set and Sebek. Clerics, paladins, and servants of non-Mulhorandi deities are generally suspicious of a glorious servitor's motives and begin with an indifferent or unfriendly attitude toward her.

GLORIOUS SERVITOR LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) can research the various Mulhorandi deities to learn more about their glorious servitors.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Mulhorandi gods are served by special champions known as glorious servitors".

DC 15: "Glorious servitors often begin their careers as clerics or paladins but later become elite emissaries and agents of their gods.

Many high-ranking Mulhorandi bureaucrats, generals, and officials are glorious servitors of one god or another".

DC 20: "Glorious servitors have a number of special powers, including the ability to take on the form of creatures sacred to their gods".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific glorious servitors in your campaign.

GLORIOUS SERVITORS IN THE GAME

Most glorious servitors undertake missions on behalf of their churches in the lands of the Old Empires.

In addition, they sometimes investigate matters of interest to the Mulhorandi in foreign lands.

They often explore newly discovered dungeons, work against Thayan agents, and spy out the strength of various rulers and wizards.

As a character attains higher levels in the prestige class, she gains increasing fame among the faithful.

This added recognition means that she receives an increasing number of requests for assistance and advice from rank-and-file members of her church.

Likewise, she becomes a target for enemies of the faith—particularly the glorious servitors of rival gods.

But fame isn't all bad—the character can expect a warm welcome and a good dose of hospitality whenever she visits a place where her patron is venerated.

Members of the faithful may also be able to provide useful information or timely warnings of impending trouble.

Requests for aid aren't always troublesome, either—the character can accept or reject tasks at her own discretion (though she can't expect to go far if she makes a habit of flatly refusing orders from superiors), and some missions can lead to satisfying and profitable adventures as well as increased rank and status in the faith.

A senior glorious servitor seldom gets ordered around, and she may even get a chance to give a few orders of her own.

ADAPTATION

In campaigns set outside Mulhorand and its environs, most glorious servitors have connections with a Mulhorandi enclave of some kind.

Some such enclaves are mercantile (a group of Mulhorandi families conducting business in a foreign land, for example); others have a diplomatic function (such as the neighborhood around a Mulhorandi embassy in a foreign capital).

A glorious servitor operating in foreign lands might be asked to serve as a scout or spy, or to carry out some other clandestine mission.

She can also serve as a missionary for her faith outside her own country.

MAGELORD

"So they ran me out of Secomber.

They said I wasn't good enough.

They said my spells were too weak.

Now they will see what kind of wizard I've become.

They'll see.

Who'll be sorry then?"

—Rimmen the Magelord

Quick to anger, haughty, and proud of his Art, the magelord is an arcane spellcaster who studies an ancient magical tradition known for extremely fast and versatile spellcasting.

Sometimes a spellslinger for hire, sometimes a professional arcane duelist, the typical magelord believes he has the right to wring respect, wealth, and power from the world around him through the use of arcane force.

In reality, he is little more than a cruel bandit lord who uses his magical gifts to dominate and intimidate less talented individuals.

Like a school of fencing or a martial arts style, the magelord tradition has been passed down over the centuries from one practitioner to another.

Few magelords give away such knowledge—indeed, anyone who would study this aspect of the Art must either bribe a magelord with princely gifts and service or undertake years of research to unearth ancient texts describing the techniques.

The way of the magelord rewards ambition and recklessness, and it tends to encourage a certain contempt for the risks of power.

Thus, most magelords regard their power as a tool with which to fulfill their own desires as opposed to a gift they can use to serve others.

A few, however, study magelord lore in hopes of using their magic against tyranny and injustice.

Magelords are relatively rare, but societies and fellowships of them have arisen in many lands over the centuries.

The most famous of these was based in the old realm of Athalantar, the Kingdom of the Stag.

Bards still sing of the cruelty and evil of the magelords who ruled over the nation, evoking terrible images of a century when tyranny and deadly ambition reigned.

The wizards of the Stag Kingdom were cruel, avaricious, driven men with an exceptional talent for magic.

Ostensibly, they served as high officials of the realm who brutally enforced their prince's will, but in truth they ruled the Stag Kingdom from behind the throne.

BECOMING A MAGELORD

You must find a practicing magelord and persuade her to teach you the secret techniques of using magic in the magelord style.

This process usually requires you to spend at least ten days in that wizard's company and either pay her at least 10,000 gp or offer a service of equivalent value.

If you cannot find a magelord willing to tutor you, you can research the secret traditions of the magelords on your own.

To do so, you must locate and obtain rare tomes and treatises costing at least 10,000 gp and spend 1 month practicing the techniques described therein.

You can fulfill this requirement at any point in your arcane career prior to adding a level of magelord, so you need not wait until you are ready to advance to do so.

Wizards, wizard/rogues, and wizard/assassins make excellent magelords, and wizard/blackguards are also good candidates for this class.

Wizard/fighters are more rare, though their fighting ability lends itself well to this prestige class.

Intelligence is the most important ability for a magelord, since it bears directly on spellcasting.

Constitution is also important, since magelords tend to live in uncivilized lands and often engage in combat, making Concentration checks a frequent necessity.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Intimidate 3 ranks, Knowledge (history) 6 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks.

Feats: Improved Initiative, Spell Mastery, Signature Spell, Weapon Focus (ray).

Spells: Ability to cast 5th-level arcane spells.

Special: You must have the evasion special quality as either a class feature or a racial trait.

Special: You may not be lawful in alignment.

Special: You must be tutored by a magelord or obtain rare tomes to study the tradition.

Either option costs no less than 10,000 gp or a service of equivalent value.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Hide, Intimidate, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Move Silently, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

The magelord tradition emphasizes mastery of a variety of spells and teaches practitioners to employ mastered spells with greater speed and flexibility.

All the following are class features of the magelord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Spellcasting: At each magelord level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a magelord, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, you deal extra damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook.

Bonus Mastered Spell (Ex): When you attain 2nd level, you can choose one spell that you already know.

From that point on, you can prepare that spell without referring to a spellbook, as if you had chosen to master it with the Spell Mastery feat.

You can choose another known spell to master in this manner at 4th, 6th, and 8th level.

Signature Supremacy (Ex): By 3rd level, you have become so familiar with your mastered spells that you can convert any 4th-level or lower prepared spell into any 4th-level or lower mastered spell, just as a good cleric can spontaneously cast prepared spells as cure spells.

Upon attaining 7th level, you can convert any 9th-level or lower prepared spell into a 9th-level or lower mastered spell in the same manner.

Magelord Mastery (Ex): At 10th level, you can apply one or more metamagic feats that you know to a spell that you have converted to a mastered spell by means of either the signature supremacy ability or the Signature Spell feat.

The level of the prepared spell to be converted must equal or exceed that of the mastered spell with the desired metamagic feats applied.

For example, you could convert the 5th-level prepared spell teleport into the 1st-level mastered spell magic missile modified by the Empower Spell, Still Spell and Silent Spell feats.

PLAYING A MAGELORD

To survive and thrive in their treacherous world, the original magelords of Athalantar developed a highly resourceful means of handling spells.

Their new ways of managing magic gave them more personal power, a better chance to survive, and a variety of ways to eliminate foes.

Now those first magelords are gone, and their power is yours.

You can be as intimidating as a thug, as stealthy as a rogue, and as murderous as an assassin without sacrificing the ability to cast potent arcane spells.

You answer to no one and use your power as you see fit.

Though you aid others when doing so suits your purpose, no organization supports your ways or offers you resources. Combat: You have learned to wield magic in an incredibly flexible manner.

Initially, you can use spells that keep you out of sight (such as invisibility) to increase your opportunities for sneak attacks.

At 3rd level, you can swap out a mid-level or low-level prepared spell for a mastered spell on the fly, and at 7th level, you can swap out any prepared spell for any mastered spell.

The key to success as a magelord is to select your mastered spells carefully.

If you prefer a defensive approach to combat, master spells that provide instant protection or a quick escape.

If you want to be ready for a fight at any time, master a good selection of offensive spells.

With the offensive option, for example, you should master attack spells such as magic missile, scorching ray, fireball, phantasmal killer, and cloudkill.

You can then prepare defensive or generally useful spells, such as shield, protection from arrows, fly, globe of invulnerability, and wall of stone, and swap them out for attack spells as needed.

This approach to spell selection allows you to be prepared for most situations you might face and still have a good selection of spells available for attack.

Finally, when you reach the pinnacle of magelord power, you can apply metamagic feats to mastered spells during casting.

Advancement: Your versatile command of magic is your greatest asset, so maximizing the advantage it provides is the wisest course.

Whenever you become eligible for another feat, consider taking Spell Mastery again.

After all, the more spells you master, the less you must rely on a spellbook—a distinct advantage if you must travel light or if your spellbooks are stolen.

If you plan on taking Spell Mastery multiple times, increase your Intelligence to maximize the benefit it offers.

In addition, you should consider taking metamagic feats that power up your already formidable spellcasting ability.

A number of skills can also provide considerable benefit for you.

Improving your stealth-oriented skills aids you in making sneak attacks, which augment your combat prowess considerably.

In addition, purchasing some ranks in Bluff and Intimidate to back up the threat of your magic is a wise move.

Resources: Like all magelords, you are a loner.

Anyone else who follows this path is a rival, not an ally.

You must rely on yourself, because no one else is trustworthy—and that is as it should be.

MAGELORDS IN FAERÛN

Because magelords often hire themselves out to anyone willing to meet their prices, they can be found almost anywhere in Faerûn.

However, their generally greedy and ambitious nature makes them likely to switch employers on the spot when a better deal presents itself.

In fact, it's not uncommon for a hired spellslinger to become the master of the house if his employer proves weak or foolish.

Magelords flourish in lands without a strong central authority, particularly places where an individual's wits, skill, and ruthlessness offer the best opportunities for personal gain, and where issues of law are settled by tests of individual strength.

The fact that no societies or fellowships of magelords exist in Faerûn today is probably a result of the fact that most magelords are loners.

However, if a group of them were to find common cause, a new society could arise at any time.

NPC REACTIONS

Most people regard hired spellcasters as cold-hearted mercenaries who are reliable only to the limits of their own self-interest.

Magelords in Faerûn are viewed in much the same way. All too often, these wizard-robed thieves and tyrants use their power to plunder and dominate those who lack the strength to stop them.

On the bright side, very few nonarcanists can really distinguish between a magelord and any other kind of wizard, so few people are prejudiced against magelords in particular.

Thus, a magelord can expect the same welcome that any wizard would receive in a town or city.

Other wizards are usually indifferent or unfriendly toward the magelord because of his obvious contempt for the Art in its traditional form.

MAGELORD LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (history) can research the magelord tradition and find information on notable magelords (or magelord societies) and their actions.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Wizards who call themselves magelords are skillful, quick, and often quite proud and cruel as well".

DC 15: "At best, magelords are spellslingers or duelists-for-hire.

More often, however, they are petty tyrants and villains who use their magic to plunder and dominate the weak.

In the past, societies of magelords have virtually ruled kingdoms, such as ancient Athalantar".

DC 20: "Their magical tradition emphasizes the alteration or exchange of spells on the fly, so that they always have battle-spells ready and are rarely caught without a good offense or defense at hand”.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific magelords in your campaign.

MAGELORDS IN THE GAME

Evil magelords make excellent adversaries for good-aligned adventurers.

Defeating a black-hearted wizard whose spells and hired swords are terrorizing a town is a classic adventure.

Magelords may also appear as “hired muscle” in the service of other, more powerful lords.

Despite their tarnished reputation, many magelords are perfectly content to work for good- or neutral-aligned princes and nobles.

Such magelords tend to remain quite loyal as long as their employer rewards them handsomely for their services.

Most magelords don’t require much in the way of specialized adventures to be happy.

However, having a magelord in the game can provide lots of adventure opportunities.

As a magelord gains power and accumulates successes, the demand for his specific abilities increases.

Likewise, a high-profile magelord tends to attract rivals in much the same way that notorious gunfighters once did in the American west.

Finally, most magelords (particularly those who delight in mayhem) are natural foes for the Cult of the Shattered Peak.

ADAPTATION

Experienced magelords can be found almost anywhere in Faerûn, but prospective magelords might find it necessary to visit a locale where wizards congregate in order to locate tutors or acquire the necessary research materials.

Such locales include regions in which wizards are a preferred class (see page 28 of the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting).

OLIN GISIR

“Hush!

Know that we walk in the ruins of the temple of Astaroth, a demon lord of the Abyss.

It is said that the demon sleeps here still, seeking to poison the words of those who wander in.

Luckily, I know just the spells to ensure that he remains asleep...”

—Meraera of the Olin Gisiae

As all Faerûnians know, elves have very long memories. Events that took place thousands of years ago and have been largely forgotten by the shorter-lived races are still fresh in the minds of the elves, since they occurred only a generation or so ago from their perspective.

Along with such clear memories comes considerable knowledge, some of which is best kept secret.

The Olin Gisiae (which means “secret keepers” in Elven; singular Olin Gisir) are elite elf mages who have taken it upon themselves to guard these dark secrets from the rest of the world, ensuring that ancient demons remain bound away in protective circles, unholy artifacts remain forgotten, and places of dark power remain unvisited by mortals.

BECOMING AN OLIN GISIR

The Olin Gisiae have an informal organization.

As inveterate collectors of useful information, they’re quick to notice elves and half-elves who might qualify for the class and just as quick to welcome newcomers into their ranks.

Olin Gisiae are recruited exclusively from the ranks of wizards and other arcane casters.

The ideal candidate possesses a keen mind and an irresistible curiosity that sends her hunting for ancient mysteries on her own.

Usually, a seasoned secret-keeper watches prospective recruits for some time to determine their motives and desires.

Those who seem to be seeking power or personal glory are ignored, or sometimes even killed if their searches threaten to reveal dangerous secrets to the world.

Those who respect the secrets they discover are contacted and offered training.

The quickest and easiest path to Olin Gisir is via the wizard class.

A wizard gains access to new spell levels faster than a bard or sorcerer does, and her bonus feats allow her to pick up a second metamagic feat at an earlier level than other spellcasters.

Sorcerers take up this path on occasion, though they must purchase some cross-class skills to meet the requirements.

While bards have easy access to the required skills, their slower spell progression means that they cannot take this class before 13th level.

Intelligence is a key ability, since an Olin Gisir relies heavily upon spellcasting and ancient knowledge.

Charisma is also a key ability for sorcerers who choose to follow this path.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks, Knowledge (history) 10 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will and any two metamagic feats.

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: Abjuration must not be a prohibited school for you.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft (any), Decipher Script, Heal, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession (any), Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Olin Gisir focus on knowledge, both arcane and mundane. Though they are not front-line combatants, their ability to read signs and banish single threats enable them to protect the secrets of the ancients with great efficiency.

All the following are class features of the Olin Gisir prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Spellcasting: At each Olin Gisir level, you gain new spells per day, and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class that granted you access to 3rd-level spells before you added the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you have access to 3rd-level spells from more than one arcane spellcasting class when you gain a level as an Olin Gisir, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Ancient Knowledge (Ex): You have studied ancient lore in considerable depth.

You gain a +1 bonus on all Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (history), and Use Magic Device checks.

You also gain the same bonus on bardic knowledge checks if you possess that class feature.

The bonus increases to +2 at 4th level, to +3 at 7th level, and to +4 at 10th level.

Secret (Ex): You have picked up countless bits of forgotten lore from ancient tomes you have uncovered, the whispers of imprisoned fiends you have been set to guard, and other even more dangerous sources.

Add your Intelligence modifier to your Olin Gisir level.

You can choose any one secret for which that result equals or exceeds the number in the left column of Table 1-7.

TABLE 1-7: OLIN GISIR SECRETS

Level + Int Mod	Secret	Effect
1	Lore of tongues	Learn 3 new languages (any except secret languages)
2	Secret of health	+3 hit points
3	Secret of inner strength	+2 bonus on Will saves
4	Lore of true stamina	+2 bonus on Fortitude saves
5	Dungeon navigation	Trap sense +2 (as the rogue ability, page 50 of the Player's Handbook)
6	Sight of the hidden	+4 bonus on Search checks
7	Ancient artifice	Any item creation feat as a bonus feat
8	Forgotten spell lore	Any metamagic feat as a bonus feat
9	Fiend warding	+2 sacred bonus to AC and on saves against attacks made by evil outsiders
10 or higher	Focused mind	Spell resistance 20 against enchantment spells

You can choose another secret in the same manner at 4th, 7th, and 10th level, though you may not select the same secret more than once.

Signs and Portents (Sp): At 2nd level, you learn to ferret out ancient, hidden evils by reading mystic omens in the world around you.

Three times per day, you can use augury, as the spell (caster level equals your character level).

Word of Dispel (Sp): At 5th level, you gain additional power against the old perils you seek to destroy or subdue.

You can add dispel chaos, dispel evil, or dispel law (your choice) to the 5th-level arcane spells that you can cast.

If you cast spells as a wizard, you simply add the spell to your spellbook.

If you cast spells as a sorcerer, you acquire it as a bonus spell known at that level.

The spell you have chosen is now an arcane spell for you.

Word of Might (Sp): At 8th level, you can use words of power against your enemies.

You can add dictum, holy word, or word of chaos (your choice) to the 7th-level arcane spells that you can cast.

If you cast spells as a wizard, you simply add the spell to your spellbook.

If you cast spells as a sorcerer, you acquire it as a bonus spell known at that level.

The spell you have chosen is now an arcane spell for you.

PLAYING AN OLIN GISIR

You are silent and somber most of the time—after all, the tasks you're charged with aren't trivialities.

You tend to keep silent about what you know, as much for the sake of your companions' sanity as for the preservation of secrets.

If your knowledge can help your companions, though, you freely offer as much as they need, provided that doing so does not compromise a secret.

You keep a detailed journal of odd portents and omens that you see while traveling, so that you can return later and investigate.

Your initiation into the ranks of the Olin Gisiae was almost a seamless transition.

After you had spent years seeking knowledge for its own sake, you were approached by an Olin Gisir, who offered you membership in an association dedicated to seeking knowledge and using it to protect and serve the elf race. Though you have no particular obligation to other members, you are always willing to share information with them, assist them with missions, and offer them hospitality as needed.

Combat: You are a scholar and watcher, not a fighter, so you prefer to rely on allies or mystically summoned creatures to deal with intruders who are attempting to delve into the secrets you guard.

Many of your fellow Olin Gisiae who do not travel learn the art of creating golems, shield guardians, and other loyal constructs that can serve as warriors while their masters stand back and rain down magical destruction on their foes. Your knowledge of history and magic allows you to identify ruins, read inscriptions on ancient tombs, and activate even the most outlandish magical artifacts.

Remain aware of your surroundings—you may be able to avoid perils, elude foes, or summon aid by making good use of the secrets you find in ancient places.

Divination spells help you stay alert and prepared for any danger that might be heading your way.

Spells such as see invisibility, detect thoughts, arcane sight, and true seeing help monitor your immediate surroundings, and clairaudience/clairvoyance, arcane eye, scrying, and prying eyes help you look farther afield.

You can never have too many allies, so don't overlook the various summon monster spells, and make sure you take spells that can boost your allies' abilities.

Haste gives a big boost to your allies in combat, as do heroism and rage.

Glitterdust is also advantageous for making invisible foes visible to those who fight on your side.

Advancement: As an apprentice secret-keeper, you learn the lore of long-forgotten places of power and how to harden your mind against ensorcelment by powerful demons and undead lords.

In addition, you learn the abjuration spells needed to keep such beings bound and sleeping.

As you gain levels in the Olin Gisir class, you should learn as many abjuration spells as possible.

Spells such as magic circle and dismissal are invaluable for keeping creatures of darkness at bay, and other abjurations can help keep you alive if you are forced into combat.

Spell Penetration, Greater Spell Penetration, Spell Focus, and Greater Spell Focus are excellent feat choices, since the creatures you are likely to guard tend to have spell resistance and high saving throw bonuses.

Metamagic and item creation feats are also useful, since they can give your spells some extra punch in emergencies.

Resources: As an Olin Gisir, you are part of a respected fellowship of magical guardians and watchers scattered throughout elf towns and cities.

You can expect a warm welcome in any elf realm, and if you discover that you need immediate and significant help to avert a major catastrophe (such as the escape of a demon or the rising of a lich lord), your fellow elves will do everything in their power to assist you.

Such assistance might come in the form of skilled warriors to guard you, potions or scrolls to provide you with magical aid, or even the loan of powerful magic items for your confrontation with the forces of evil.

Outside elf settlements, the Olin Gisiae are not widely known.

However, a small number of human sages and scholars are aware of your order and inclined to aid you if so requested.

OLIN GISIAE IN FAERÛN

Olin Gisiae can fill many roles in your campaign.

They make excellent NPC advisors, since they can provide information about dungeons the PCs might explore or artifacts they might retrieve.

They can also function as reinforcements for a group on a difficult mission or even as adversaries, should the party be unfortunate enough to wander into a protected area.

Few secret-keepers subscribe to a philosophy of "Strike first and ask questions later", but even reasonable Olin Gisiae can be drawn into conflict with PCs intent on meddling in the secrets they guard.

Olin Gisiae are loosely organized, usually coming together only if a truly terrible secret they have been protecting seems about to emerge.

The typical secret-keeper chooses to guard a single site or a group of nearby sites, such as a demon's prison or a tomb complex that serves as a lair for several powerful undead creatures.

A few, however, prefer to travel with adventuring groups, seeking out places that even their fellows have forgotten.

These roving secret-keepers usually arrange some means, either magical or mundane, to regularly report their findings back to a fellow Olin Gisir, who can quickly send a team to investigate should the missives suddenly cease.

Now and then, an old and very powerful Olin Gisir chooses to sacrifice her mortal life and undergo the transformation into a baelnorn—a powerful, good-aligned elf lich who eternally guards a site important to her people.

Such fearsome guardians usually choose to stand vigil over the most dangerous of sites, such as the ruins of Myth Drannor.

NPC REACTIONS

Most elves understand the mission of the Olin Gisiae and support it wholeheartedly.

Thus, an Olin Gisir can expect a friendly or helpful welcome in almost any elven community.

Among non-elves who know about the Olin Gisiae's mission and duties, good-hearted folk are usually friendly, but those who see the secret-keeper as an obstacle for some reason are usually unfriendly or hostile.

Characters who are unaware of a secret-keeper's appointed task are usually indifferent.

Olin Gisiae get along well with loremasters but find the ambitious magelords reckless and arrogant.

OLIN GISIR LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) or Knowledge (geography) can research the Olin Gisiae to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The Olin Gisiae are elf spellcasters who guard dangerous sites on behalf of their secret fellowship".

DC 15: "An Olin Gisir's protectorate is considered sacrosanct.

Anyone entering one risks the secret-keeper's wrath".

DC 20: “Secret-keepers know powerful magic for binding and banishing demonic beings”.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn specific, detailed information about important Olin Gisiae in your campaign.

OLIN GISIAE IN THE GAME

Because Olin Gisiae operate in relative isolation and seclusion, adding one to your game is simple.

It’s entirely possible that characters with levels in this prestige class have always existed in the campaign world, but the PCs simply haven’t come across one before.

This prestige class appeals to PCs who like to know what mortals were not meant to know.

If one of your PCs takes levels in the Olin Gisir class, be sure to give her an opportunity to use that knowledge from time to time, whether by allowing her to uncover some extra information about an adventure site, or by creating a full-blown adventure focused around slumbering horrors and ancient mysteries.

ADAPTATION

Some Olin Gisiae range far beyond elf lands.

If your campaign is set in an area far from the Elven Court and Evereska, it’s a good bet that any Olin Gisiae operating in the area are seeking out lost lore or trying to track down a foe from ancient times.

In addition, one or two Olin Gisiae usually live with any sizable enclave of elves.

SUNMASTER

“The Netherese of old knew Amaunator, the great sun lord, whose light and order filled the world for an age.

We know him now as Lathander.

For centuries we have thought of Lathander as a god of morning, but his glory now ascends toward its noontide height.

Just as the sun brightens while it climbs into the sky, so will Lathander’s glory and radiance grow as he resumes the glory and mastery that were his of old.

All who worship him will see an end to this long night in which we live.”

—Andar, Sunmaster

The sunmasters are members of a sect within the church of Lathander who believe that the Morninglord is the living reincarnation of Amaunator, the long-vanished sun god who stood high in the ancient Netherese pantheon.

Sunmasters revere this ancient vision of Lathander as a deity of glory, light, and perfect order—a regal god who might one day lay claim to lordship over the Faerûnian pantheon.

Through their deeds and faith, they hope to demonstrate that Lathander’s ascent is nearly complete, and that Amaunator’s long noontime reign is soon to begin.

Although the sunmasters have served Lathander loyally and well for fifteen centuries now, their doctrinal differences with the rest of the Morninglord’s clergy have caused discord and created schisms on more than one occasion.

Most Lathanderites see their deity as a good power—a god of renewal, hope, and rebirth.

Sunmasters view Lathander (or Amaunator, as they often call him) as a deity that brings order to the world, just as the sun provides the regularity of day and night, season after season, year after year.

BECOMING A SUNMASTER

Clerics, especially former Lathanderites, are best suited to take on the role of sunmaster.

The most difficult and important step in entering this prestige class is turning aside from the accepted tenets of Lathander’s faith by choosing the Servant of the Fallen feat, then devoting prayers and faith to Amaunator as an aspect of Lathander.

A small number of nonclerics who oppose darkness, chaos, and disorder (usually paladins and wizard/clerics) become sunmasters because they believe that Lathander will reward their faith with triumph over their shadowy adversaries.

As with clerics, sunmasters benefit from high scores in Wisdom and Charisma.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any lawful.

Skills: Knowledge (history) 8 ranks, Knowledge (geography) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, Speak Language (Loross).

Feats: Servant of the Fallen (Amaunator) (see page 9).

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Domains: Law, Sun.

Patron Deity: Amaunator.

Special: You must own a holy symbol of Amaunator, either personally recovered from a ruined temple of that deity or given to you by an existing sunmaster.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft (any), Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Knowledge (history), Knowledge (religion), Profession (any), Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Since sunmasters wield the unbridled power of the noonday sun, their abilities center around the properties of heat and light.

The following are class features of the sunmaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiency with weapons, armor, or shields.

Spellcasting: At each sunmaster level, you gain new spells per day, and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a sunmaster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Sun Spells: You can prepare any Sun domain spell as if it were on your divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Sun domain list.

Glaring Eyes (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, your eyes glow with the brilliant orange color of the sun.

You can produce a searing light effect from your eyes once per day (caster level equals your character level).

Additionally, you can never be blinded or dazed by spells or effects with the light descriptor, or by natural light of any kind.

You can use searing light twice per day at 5th level and three times per day at 8th level.

Resistance to Fire (Ex): Your link to the sun gives you increasing resistance to its fire.

At 3rd level, you gain resistance to fire 5.

Your fire resistance increases to 10 at 6th level and to 15 at 9th level.

Law Spells: Beginning at 4th level, you can prepare any Law domain spell as if it were on your divine spell list.

The spell uses a spell slot of a level equal to its level in the Law domain list.

Planning Domain: At 7th level, you gain access to the Planning Domain and acquire its granted ability (see Player's Guide to Faerûn).

On any given day, you can choose spells from the Planning Domain or from one of the domains you chose as a 1st-level cleric to fill your domain spell slots.

You do not gain additional domain spells each day, only a broader choice of domain spells at each spell level.

Sunform (Sp): Upon reaching 10th level, you gain the ability to become an insubstantial ball of bright, glowing light the size of a Medium creature.

This effect is identical to that of the gaseous form spell, except as follows.

In sunform, you radiate daylight as the spell, gain a fly speed of 120 feet (perfect), and have immunity to fire, light, and air effects.

In addition, you gain a melee touch attack that deals 6d6 points of fire damage.

You can remain in sunform for up to 10 rounds.

Sunform is the equivalent of an 8th-level spell and is usable once per day.

PLAYING A SUNMASTER

Like the morninglords of Lathander, you represent an elite sect of clerics and holy warriors.

Your task is to demonstrate the superiority of Lathander's faith through your own actions, thereby hastening the day when he completes his millennia-long ascension and once again shines forth as the supreme lord over Faerûn's squabbling and fractious pantheon.

Many of your fellow Lathanderites shrink from the grandeur of your vision for Amaunator's emergence from Lathander's faith, arguing that no one deity can know what is right for all creatures under the sun—but you know they are wrong.

Only your bold action and glorious triumphs in the never-ending war against chaos and darkness will illuminate the truth of your belief for all to see.

The sun will rise tomorrow, as it does every day.

This glowing orb is the absolute representation of your faith, and its supreme dependability is your guide.

Be lawful.

Know what is right, and support the right path in all your doings.

Rid the world of darkness with the sun's perfect fire.

You can expect trouble from rival sects within Lathander's faith and also from followers of Horus-Re, who mistakenly believe that their deity is Faerûn's only sun god.

As a sunmaster, you are still part of Lathander's church, and as such, you are loyal to both its precepts and its officials.

As a new member, you can expect to receive plenty of advice on proper deportment and actions.

Later on, you gain respect and admiration from your fellow sunmasters simply by virtue of your increasing power, which clearly demonstrates your deepening relationship with the sun.

Since the hierarchy within your sect is based largely on merit, however, you can gain even more status by actively promoting its interests, achieving victories in the ongoing battle against chaos, and recruiting new members to the cause.

As you gain more status, junior members may begin coming to you for advice, and elder members may ask you to undertake special missions.

Combat: Your spells and abilities can banish darkness and restore order to chaos.

You possess more offensive spell ability than most clerics because you can prepare spells from the Sun and Law domains as cleric spells.

Your preferred mode of combat is to attack with spells such as searing light and order's wrath, smiting your foes with the pure power of the sun.

To use searing light most effectively, consider taking feats such as Precise Shot and Weapon Focus (ray).

The former allows you to use searing light more readily against foes in melee combat with your allies, and the latter improves your chance to hit.

If you take care to choose lawful allies, you can aim order's wrath nearly anywhere you wish without hurting your friends, because the spell doesn't harm lawful creatures.

When you reach the pinnacle of your power as a sunmaster, you receive the sunform ability, which makes you a formidable melee opponent against any foe that is susceptible to fire damage.

However, your ability to cast spells is severely curtailed while you're using sunform unless you have the Still Spell, Silent Spell, and Eschew Materials feats.

Advancement: Your recruitment into the sunmasters sect was like a burst of brilliant sunlight.

As you listened to the words of another sunmaster, the truth became dazzlingly clear.

You joyfully undertook a quest to find a true holy symbol of Amaunator and were welcomed with open arms by your fellow sunmasters once you had succeeded.

As you attain higher levels in the prestige class, you take on responsibility for advancing those aspects of Lathander's worship that most directly reflect the glory of Amaunator. In particular, you must begin recruiting new followers and clerics for your order, lest Amaunator's worship die out again.

The old temples of Amaunator were called courts, and each was headed by a high priest who held the title of Righteous Potentate.

When you rule over your own army of the faithful, you can make that title your own.

Your abilities closely match those of most typical clerics, so any tool that would serve a cleric well should also aid you. Feats such as Spell Penetration and Spell Focus can help you become a more effective spellcaster in combat, and feats such as Craft Wondrous Item and Craft Magic Arms and Armor allow you to create powerful tools for use in your crusade against the foes of order.

Resources: The Church of Lathander is widespread and powerful, and its members generally support your efforts. While many Lathanderites are uncomfortable with your "heretical" beliefs, they recognize that the sectarian differences within the faith are relatively minor compared with the need to curtail the abominable acts of Faerûn's many evil gods and their clergy.

Unless you make a point of browbeating all the Lathanderites you meet about the inaccuracy of their beliefs, you can expect food, lodging, and shelter in almost any shrine or temple of Lathander.

Your fellow sunmasters are even more inclined to offer you help when needed than is the mainstream Church of Lathander.

Other sunmasters are often willing to assist you in short missions, loan you useful magic items, or heal you when you cannot heal yourself, and they expect the same courtesy in return.

You can also find allies in the Order of the Sun Soul, an organization of monks based in Waterdeep whose origins can be traced to the worship of ancient Amaunator.

SUNMASTERS IN FAERÛN

No proof exists that Amaunator has returned from the dead except the words of the sunmasters.

Lathander has not proclaimed himself the new incarnation of Amaunator, but neither has he denied it.

The god is keeping his own counsel on the matter for now, although he has made it clear to both morninglords and sunmasters that he considers all who follow him true believers, thus heading off the worst of the sectarian infighting.

Organization: The sunmasters are more formally known as the Brotherhood of the Glorious Sun, a recognized knightly and cleric order within Lathander's faith.

Chapter houses and shrines dedicated to the worship of Lathander's sun aspect are often entrusted to the keeping of the brotherhood.

Thus, a sunmaster often reports to the ranking cleric of Lathander in the area, as well as a superior brother of the Glorious Sun who might be located in a different city.

A typical chapter house of the Glorious Sun is headed by a handful of sunmasters who are attached to a large temple of Lathander.

A typical chapter consists of one to five sunmasters, plus two to five clerics and acolytes who have accepted Amaunator as their deity but have no levels in the prestige class yet, and two to ten fighters, paladins, or warriors who adhere to the sunmaster beliefs.

NPC REACTIONS

Most non-Lathanderites view the sunmasters as simply one more faction within Lathander's church, hardly worth distinguishing from groups such as the morninglords or the Order of the Aster.

Thus, a sunmaster can expect the same sort of reaction that any cleric of Lathander would receive from a given group or individual.

Evil characters take a dim view of sunmasters, since they know that Lathander's clerics crusade against evil wherever they find it.

Good folk are sometimes put off by the zeal of the sunmasters but generally admire the good works they accomplish.

SUNMASTER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) can research the sunmasters to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The sunmasters are a particular sect or order within the Church of Lathander".

DC 15: "Sunmasters especially venerate Lathander's aspect as a deity of the sun and crusade fervently against creatures of evil and darkness.

They wield powers of light and fire".

DC 20: "Sunmasters believe that Lathander is the incarnation or continuation of Amaunator, the old god of the sun, who was a powerful deity in the time of ancient Netheril.

They also believe that Lathander's power is ascending, and that he will soon reincarnate himself as Amaunator, claiming the mantle of lordship over the rest of the gods. Their views are considered somewhat heretical by many other Lathanderites".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific chapter houses or fellowships of sunmasters in your campaign.

SUNMASTERS IN THE GAME

While sunmasters strongly lean toward lawful neutral as opposed to lawful good, they typically appear as allies rather than adversaries or rivals to good-aligned adventurers.

This prestige class appeals to players who like to play "offensive-minded" clerics—that is, divine spellcasters who use their spells to attack first and heal later.

Because sunmasters are determined, confident, and sometimes overzealous in confronting evil, players who like to be out front and in charge should enjoy playing them.

ADAPTATION

Sunmasters function openly wherever Lathander is venerated.

They are often covertly active in places where churches of evil deities hold sway or in locales where Horus-Re worshippers wield secular influence.

Their secret activities involve establishing and protecting groups of Lathander worshippers, confronting and eliminating rival clerics, and fighting the spread of chaos in any way they can.

MAGIC OF FAERÛN (3.0)

GNOME ARTIFICER

Gnome artificers dabble in technology to create fantastic devices, delving into shadow magic when their mundane equipment is insufficient for the task.

Their weapons, armor, and tools require frequent maintenance and repair but produce nonmagical effects that rival some arcane spells.

Most gnome artificers are skilled artisans and craftsmen, usually rogues, bards, or wizards (illusionists in particular make good artificers because of their access to shadow magic).

A few rangers and clerics explore this field, but it is very rare for other classes to become artificers because of the breadth and depth of skills needed.

Gnome artificer NPCs enjoy trading information and share a healthy competition for invention and attention.

Sometimes they work together in teams, while others prefer isolation and private study.

Some artificers who retire from active invention study magic or become advisors on large engineering projects such as bridges and castles.

While this prestige class is called the gnome artificer, a few humans are known for their artificer skills, all of them from the island nation of Lantan.

They refer to themselves as “Lantanese artificers” but otherwise have the powers of this prestige class.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a gnome artificer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome (or human from the Lantan region).

Skills: Alchemy 3 ranks, Craft (armorsmithing, blacksmithing, gemcutting, locksmithing, metalworking, trapmaking, or weaponmaking) 8 ranks, Craft (any other two from the previous list) 4 ranks, Disable Device 2 ranks,

Knowledge (architecture) 4 ranks, Knowledge (engineering) 4 ranks, Profession (apothecary, engineer, or siege engineer) 3 ranks.

Feats: Lightning Reflexes, Skill Focus (any of the above Craft skills).

Spellcasting: Able to cast 1st-level arcane spells of the Illusion school.

CLASS SKILLS

The gnome artificer’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Appraise (Wis), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Knowledge (architecture and engineering) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the gnome artificer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Gnome artificers are proficient with all simple weapons, light armor, medium armor, and shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Pick Pocket, and Tumble.

Artificer Item: A gnome artificer has the ability to craft nonmagical devices that duplicate the effects of certain spells.

Rather than using magic to accomplish this, he uses his knowledge of pistons, gears, lenses, and other simple mechanical inventions.

As a result, an artificer item usually appears unwieldy and complex, with many attachments, lenses, protrusions, wires, and hoses.

By default, all artificer devices use two item spaces: any one space plus either the “belt” or “cloak” space.

It is possible to build devices that take up only one space, but they cost twice as much.

An artificer can only craft artificer devices that duplicate the effects of the artificer device powers he knows (see below).

All artificer devices have charges, representing fuel and other substances needed to provide the effect.

After a certain number of uses, the device ceases to function until the artificer expends more time and money to rebuild it.

For example, an artificer creates a bracerlike device that gives its wearer the equivalent of a bull's strength spell; the device has 50 charges, and when those charges are used, the device's power no longer functions until an artificer rebuilds it.

Rebuilding a device costs half as much as it would cost to make it from scratch.

Making artificer devices requires time and expenditure of resources as if the artificer were creating a magic item (1 day per 1,000 gp of the base price).

However, unlike crafting a magic item, the artificer does not spend XP as a part of this process.

He merely spends the appropriate time and gold to create the item, using the table below to determine the base price of the device:

Effect	Base Price
50 charges*, use-activated	Power level × artificer level × 1,000 gp
Uses only one space	Multiply entire cost by 2

*An artificer can create a device with as few as 5 charges, with the cost reduced proportionally.
A 0-level device power is half the value of a 1st-level device power for determining price.
An artificer can create a device with an effective artificer level lower than his own, as long as it is the minimum artificer level necessary to learn that device power.

For example, a 3rd-level artificer wishes to make a bull's strength device (as described above).

Bull's strength is a 2nd-level device power (see below), so creating this device with 50 charges at the minimum level costs $2 \times 3 \times 1,000$ gp, or 6,000 gp, and 6 days of work.

Once these charges are used, the device becomes useless. Artificer devices follow the rules on page 243 of the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide for determining costs of items with multiple abilities.

Artificer devices use the same space limitations as magic items (bracer, helmet, cloak, and so on), so a character cannot wear a device that uses a bracer space at the same time she wears a pair of gauntlets of ogre power.

Artificer devices are large and bulky.

Multiply the level of the device power (with 0-level device powers counting as 1/2 level) by 1 cubic foot and 5 pounds to get the total volume and weight of the device (add together the weights and volumes of devices with multiple powers).

They are large enough to be considered a separate object for the purposes of the strike an object action.

A device has 5 hit points per cubic foot of volume and hardness 10.

A device can be made out of special materials (such as adamantine or mithral) to increase its hardness or hit points; treat each cubic foot of the device as a longsword for the purpose of determining the modifier to the initial base price (the special materials do not affect the rebuilding price of the item).

Gnome Artificer Device Powers: While mages wield arcane power and clerics manipulate divine energy, the artificer uses mundane tools and strange reagents to produce impressive results.

Like a neophyte wizard with a small repertoire of spells, an artificer starts with a few technological tricks that he has mastered.

As he gains levels, the artificer learns new device powers automatically as shown on Table 3-1: The Gnome Artificer. The artificer can also purchase information on other device powers from other artificers or find them in books of crafting, with the prices and value of such objects equal to a scroll of the equivalent spell level.

For example, Hendark Steelwire is a 1st-level gnome artificer.

During his travels he encounters Waywicket Gemcracker, another gnome artificer, and he pays her 25 gp for the secret to one of the 1st-level device powers he doesn't know.

To learn a device power or create an item with it, an artificer must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the power's level.

The Difficulty Class for saving throws is 10 + the level of the device power + the ability bonus of the minimum ability score needed to learn that device power.

Activating a device is a standard action that does not draw an attack of opportunity.

Most device powers rely upon completely nonmagical methods.

Devices that use these powers function normally in an antimagic field and cannot be counterspelled or disrupted.

A few device powers push the boundaries of mundane technology and actually dip into the powers of the school of Illusion (shadow).

Such powers are marked in the list below with double asterisks and are treated as supernatural abilities—they do not function within an antimagic field, but cannot be counterspelled or disrupted.

The gnome artificer must be at least 9th level to incorporate these powers in one of his devices.

Because the device powers duplicate the abilities of the appropriate spells exactly, their effects overlap (do not stack) with the effects of the spell they duplicate.

Therefore, a device that grants cat's grace does not stack with the arcane spell cat's grace.

GNOME ARTIFICER DEVICE POWERS LIST

2nd-level—*battering ram, bull's strength, cat's grace, darkvision, daylight, *flame dagger, fog cloud, glitterdust, Melf's acid arrow, see invisibility, shatter, *speed swim.
3rd-level—flame arrow, *fly, gust of wind, *haste, lightning bolt, *shatterfloor, *sleet storm, stinking cloud, water breathing.
4th-level—*ice storm, quench, rusting grasp, shout, solid fog, *wall of fire, *wall of ice.

* New spell from this book.

 Requires the shadow effect ability.

Bonus Item: At 2nd level, the gnome artificer gains a single-function 50-charge device of any device power he knows. The item functions at his artificer level.

The artificer is assumed to have been working on this item in his spare time, and does not need to spend any money or time to acquire the item.

The gnome artificer gains another bonus item every even-numbered level thereafter.

Skill Focus: At 3rd level, the gnome artificer gains the Skill Focus (Disable Device) feat.

Salvage: An artificer of at least 5th level can dismantle a device (whether built by him or by another artificer) and use its pieces as parts for another device.

This reduces the base price of the new device by 1/2 the market price of the device being dismantled. A device without full charges is worth only a percentage of its original market price equal to the percentage of charges remaining.

Prototype: Beginning at 7th level, an artificer can make a device that has a device power that he doesn't know. These prototype items cost double the normal amount and are unreliable.

Every time an artificer uses a prototype ability, he must make an artificer level check (DC = device power's artificer level +1) to activate the device successfully.

Any other creature trying to activate the prototype device power has a -5 penalty on this check.

Artificer prototype mishaps

A device malfunctions when a mishap occurs, usually in a reversed or harmful manner. The DM determines what sort of mishap occurs, with the malfunction causing 1d6 points of damage per device power level as a default.

- If the device power is a ranged effect, it strikes the user or an ally instead of the intended target, or a random target nearby if the user was the intended target.
- If the device power is a ranged effect, it takes effect at some random location within range.

- Device causes 1d6 points of damage per device power level to the user.
- Device damages user as above and loses 1d10 additional charges.
- Device damages user as above and ceases to function until the artificer has rebuilt the device, costing 1/10 the normal base price.
- Device activates 1d4 rounds later than intended, selecting a random target if a ranged effect.
- Device activates 1d4 hours later than intended, selecting a random target if a ranged effect.

Failure indicates a mishap (see the Artificer Prototype Mishaps sidebar on the previous page).

If a mishap occurs, the charge for that attempted use is expended, regardless of the mishap's outcome.

The device power used in a prototype must be on the device power list, and the artificer can't build a prototype that incorporates powers requiring the shadow effect ability until he reaches 9th level.

Shadow Effect (Su): Starting at 9th level, the artificer can make devices that draw upon the power of shadow to produce supernatural effects.

He may now incorporate powers on the list marked with double asterisks.

GUILD WIZARD OF WATERDEEP

The Watchful Order of Magists and Protectors is one of the most powerful guilds in Waterdeep, but most Waterdhavians are barely aware of its existence.

The Lady Master of the Order, Mhair Szeltune, chooses to take a strictly neutral stance in the political and economic affairs of the city.

She encourages the wizards of the order to pursue the art of magic and leave politics to others.

The wizards of the order study and exchange information, create magic items to help support the guild's financial independence, and offer their services to others in the city as watch-wizards or fire guards (wizards armed with spells and magic items to combat fires).

The order's strict political neutrality and assistance to others in the city has paid dividends, for although the populace may not know much about the order's members, neither do they have cause to fear them.

The majority of the order's members are wizards, but other arcane spellcasters are welcome as well.

Sorcerers are drawn to the order and bards are occasionally associate members, gaining access to much the same information as do the wizards, but deriving less immediate benefit from it, since they acquire their spells differently from wizards.

Guild wizards of Waterdeep are most likely permanent residents of or long-term visitors to the city of that name, though they can be found wandering across the lands.

As many different personalities among the Order exist as there are wizards.

This prestige class can serve as a model for the DM to develop similar prestige classes for other possible guilds in the Forgotten Realms.

A member of the Arcane Brotherhood in Luskan may share some of the abilities of a member of the Watchful Order of Magists and Protectors in Waterdeep (most likely, access to a spellpool), but in other ways will be very different.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a guild wizard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Alchemy 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Scry 4 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Scribe Scroll, any one metamagic feat, and either Spell Penetration or Spell Focus (choice of school).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: Prospective members must pay an initiation fee of 1,000 gp.

CLASS SKILLS

The guild wizard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (any) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

All the following are class features of the guild wizard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Guild wizards gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A guild wizard's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a character gains a new level of guild wizard, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, for example).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a guild wizard, she must decide to which class she adds each level of guild wizard for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Membership: The character becomes a full member of the Watchful Order of Magists and Protectors.

She is entitled to vote on issues before the entire membership, use the order's library and workrooms (though access to these facilities is based upon seniority), and replenish her store of material components (common components are usually free or carry a nominal fee, while components that carry a gold piece value are available "at cost").

Membership in the order incurs the following duties and responsibilities:

- Monthly membership dues of 25 gp (payable up to 1 year in advance);
- Obedience to the rulings of the masters;
- Aid to other members in time of need (this normally means aiding other order members who are in danger, but can mean aiding them in their other endeavors as well);
- Defense of the city of Waterdeep when called upon by the Masters or legitimate authorities of the Waterdhavian government; and
- Devotion of personal time and energy to the order (10% XP penalty).

This last is usually considered the most onerous requirement of membership in the order.

Each season, a member must spend ten days directly aiding the order.

This can mean anything the Masters deem it to mean: working with the city guard, serving as an arcane guardian for a private concern, taking a turn as city fire watch, creating magic items, performing administrative duties, and so on.

The form this aid takes need not be detailed unless the DM and player wish to do so.

Regardless of its form, it results in an XP penalty of 10%, cumulative with any other penalty the character has incurred (such as from multiclassing).

This represents the cost of creating magic items solely for the order, XP costs for spellcasting, and other personal energies contributed to the order.

(The character still pays full gp and XP costs for any magic items created solely for her own use).

Improved Spell Acquisition: At each level of advancement in the guild wizard prestige class, a character gains three spells of her choice of any level she can cast to add to her spellbook.

Spellpool (Sp): Beginning at 2nd level, members of the Watchful Order of Magists and Protectors can call 1st through 3rd-level spells from a common source known as a spellpool.

At 6th level, they may call up to 6th-level spells from the spellpool, and at 10th level they may call spells of up to 9th level from the spellpool.

See the Spellpool description in the previous chapter.

Bonus Item Creation Feat: At 3rd level, a member of the order may select a bonus Item Creation feat (she must still meet the prerequisites for gaining the feat).

Bonus Language: Members of the order study the Art across cultural boundaries.

As such, they pick up other languages so that they may enhance their studies.

The character may add one additional language to the list of those she already knows.

She may include ancient languages (see the section on Language in Chapter 3: Life in Faerûn in the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting).

Improved Counterspell Feat: At 5th level, the character gains the Improved Counterspell feat.

City officials call upon the order to assist in preventing widespread destruction when rogue spellcasters threaten the city.

As a result, the order has perfected its ability to use counterspell techniques to eliminate the threat of such reckless magic use.

The Masters feel that this is preferable to harming the irresponsible magic user, leaving the punishment of such a person to the city authorities.

Focused Dispel: Sometimes members of the order must deal with lingering magical effects.

Over the years, its members have developed more effective dispelling skills.

Beginning at 7th level, they may add +2 to any caster level checks made to dispel magic.

Break Enchantment Spell: At 9th level, the break enchantment spell is added to the 4th-level spell list of the guild wizard of Waterdeep.

He or she must still learn the spell in order to cast it, just as with any other spell.

HARPER MAGE

Wizards and sorcerers have been part of the Harpers since the organization's inception.

Many of its senior members today are powerful mages.

Among the organization's principal allies are several influential wizards and sorcerers who have made some of their accumulated knowledge available to the Harpers. Mystra, the deity of magic, is one of the patron deities of the Harpers; her predecessor was one of the deities who met at the Dancing Place centuries ago to inspire the founding of the organization.

With such a rich magical tradition, it is inevitable that Harpers would develop some of their own magical lore and techniques to pass on to their agents.

The Harper mage has two principal responsibilities.

The first of these is aiding the Harpers with spells and arcane knowledge.

This aid might include anything from casting spells in a battle in which Harper agents are involved to using divination magic to find a missing Harper to examining a vanquished Red Wizard's personal spellbooks.

Of course, many Harper mages are agents themselves, using their magic to investigate the activities of any number of evil groups.

The other primary responsibility of the Harper mage is to study, record, and pass on ancient lore, particularly that dealing with arcane discoveries.

Harper mages do not limit themselves to just the study of arcana, however.

Many a mage becomes an expert in other fields as well. Some study nature, supplementing the knowledge and wisdom offered by druids.

Others study history, synthesizing their understanding of ancient magical lore with an insight into what forces of history may have played a part in shaping a particular approach to magic.

Although perhaps not the equal of some of the more distinguished sages of the Realms, these Harper scholars are nevertheless respected in their own right.

Wizards, sorcerers, and bards all make fine Harper mages. Multiclassed rogue/wizards and rogue/sorcerers are also common among their ranks.

Harper mages generally travel in the company of other Harpers or allies of similar outlooks.

Even alone, the Harper mage can count on support from those friendly to the Harper cause.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Harper mage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (any other) 4 ranks, Scry 4 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Education, Extend Spell.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: Sponsorship by a member of the Harpers, approval of the High Harpers.

CLASS SKILLS

The Harper mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Scry (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Harper mage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Harper mages are proficient with simple weapons.

They gain no proficiency in the use of any armor.
Spells per Day: A Harper mage's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a character gains a new level of Harper mage, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, for example).

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before she became a Harper mage, she must decide to which class she adds each level of Harper mage for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Harper Knowledge: Like a bard, a Harper mage has a knack for picking up odd bits of knowledge.

This ability works exactly like the bardic knowledge ability of the bard class.

If a Harper mage has bard levels (or levels in another class with the same ability, such as loremaster or Harper scout), her Harper mage levels and bard levels (or levels in the other appropriate class) stack for the purpose of using Harper knowledge.

Oghma's Insight: As lorekeepers, Harper mages develop a keen interest in many fields.

The Harper mage gains a free Skill Focus feat in any one Knowledge skill.

Arcane Theory: At 2nd level, the Harper mage gains a free Skill Focus feat in either Spellcraft or Knowledge (arcana). This represents an introduction to theories of magic from other civilizations through study and preservation of old lore.

Extend Spell: In their studies of history and lore, Harper mages have learned something of ancient magic, including rudimentary elements of the mythal magic of the elves. These discoveries allow them to power a few of their spells each day, allowing them to last longer than normal.

The Harper mage may cast a spell as if it were under the effect of the Extend Spell feat without affecting the casting time or spell slot of the spell.

The Harper mage can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma bonus.

Eschew Materials: Further studies into the secrets of magic give Harper mages the ability to cast their spells without resorting to material components.

This ability grants the Harper mage the Eschew Materials feat.

Mystra's Grace: Harper mages gain a +2 insight bonus on all saves against magical effects.

HARPER PRIEST

Nearly every Harper recognizes the importance of the deities who inspired the creation of the Harpers: Deneir, Eldath, Lliira, Mielikki, Milil, Mystra, Oghma, Selûne, Silvanus, and Tymora; and the elven deities Aerdrie Faenya, Angharradh, Corellon Larethian, Erevan Ilesere, Fenmarel Mestarine, Hanali Celanil, Labelas Enoreth, Rillifane Rallathil, Sehanine Moonbow, and Solonor Thelandira. Some, however, choose to pursue a closer relationship with these deities who came together at the Dancing Place.

Although most Harper priests are human, half-elven, or elven clerics who have selected one of the deities listed above as their patron, the Harpers recruit their members from many backgrounds, cultures, and religious affiliations, as long as those deities do not promote evil ends or wanton destruction.

Human druids, dwarven paladins, gnome rangers, halfling rogue/clerics of Brandobaris, and many others are all welcome.

Deities whose portfolios and interests particularly parallel those of the Harper patron deities include Akadi, Azuth, Chauntea, Gwaeron Windstrom, Lathander, Lurue, Red Knight, Savras, Shaundakul, Shiallia, Valkur, and many of the neutral- or good-aligned deities of the various racial pantheons.

Harper priests can be found on their own or in the company of other Harpers or allies of similar outlooks. Even alone, the Harper priest can count on support from those friendly to the Harper cause.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Harper priest, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Iron Will.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Special: Sponsorship by a member of the Harpers, approval of the High Harpers.

Also, the character's patron deity must be nonevil and not one devoted to wanton destruction.

CLASS SKILLS

The Harper priest's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Harper priest prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Harper priests are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are also proficient with all types of armor (light, medium, and heavy) and shields.

Spells per Day: A Harper priest's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a character gains a new level of Harper priest, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a Harper priest, she must decide to which class she adds each level of Harper priest for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Blessings: At each level, a Harper priest may choose one blessing from Table 3–5: Harper Priest Blessings.

TABLE 3–5: HARPER PRIEST BLESSINGS

Level + Wis

Modifier	Blessing	Effect
1	Eldath's Pool	May create water 1/day as a cleric equal to her highest divine spellcasting level
2	Silvanus's Staff	Weapon Focus (quarterstaff) feat
3	Deneir's Eye	+2 holy bonus on saves against glyphs, runes, and symbols
4	Milil's Voice	+1 holy bonus on all Charisma-based skill checks
5	Mielikki's Step	Add +10 ft. to speed in light or medium armor
6	Lliira's Heart	+2 holy bonus on saves against compulsion and fear effects
7	Oghma's Insight	Skill Focus (any Knowledge) feat
8	Selûne's Radiance	Low-light vision (or double range of existing low-light vision)
9	Mystra's Grace	+2 insight bonus on saves against magical effects
10+	Tymora's Smile	Once per day may add +2 luck bonus to single saving throw (can be added after save result is known)

Her Harper priest level plus her Wisdom bonus determines which blessings she can select.

(She may select a lesser blessing than the highest possible if she so chooses).

She can't choose the same blessing twice.

Harper Knowledge: Like a bard, a Harper priest has a knack for picking up odd bits of knowledge.

This ability works exactly like the bardic knowledge ability of the bard class.

If a Harper priest has bard levels (or levels in another class with the same ability, such as loremaster or Harper scout), her Harper priest levels and bard levels (or levels in the appropriate other class) stack for the purpose of using bardic knowledge.

INCANTATRIX

The incantatrixes are the practitioners of metamagic in Faerûn, studying spells that affect other spells and having a particular fondness for magic that thwarts extraplanar beings.

Most incantatrixes are skilled wizards or sorcerers, although a small number of bards study this type of magic.

Few are multiclassed as clerics or druids because those classes often rely on extraplanar entities, which conflicts with the incantatrix's focus.

Incantatrix NPCs usually act independently, but sometimes join together to solve a common problem.

Since they dislike extraplanar intrusions on the Material Plane, most incantatrixes see the destruction of active gates to other planes as their responsibility, and an incantatrix is usually a knowledgeable source of information on functional gates in the area.

Because they have little offensive combat magic against normal creatures, they prefer to avoid combat or travel with companions who balance their shortcomings.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an incantatrix, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, any metamagic feat.
Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The incantatrix's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the incantatrix prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Incantatrixes gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: An incantatrix continues to study standard magic as well as pursuing studies in metamagic.

Thus, when a new incantatrix level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before becoming an incantatrix.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, for example).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became an incantatrix, she must decide to which class she adds each level of incantatrix for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

School Specialization: Upon becoming an incantatrix, the character chooses to focus her studies on protective and metamagic, forsaking other types of spells.

In effect, the incantatrix is a specialist in the school of Abjuration (gaining all the benefits of specializing in a school), and the incantatrix must choose an additional prohibited school or schools using the rules on page 54 of the Player's Handbook (although an incantatrix can never choose Transmutation as an opposed school).

The incantatrix can never again learn spells from that prohibited school or schools.

She can still use the prohibited spells she knew prior to becoming an incantatrix, including using items that are activated by spell completion or spell trigger.

If the incantatrix already is a wizard specialized in Abjuration, she does not need to choose another prohibited school.

A bard or sorcerer who becomes an incantatrix must still choose a prohibited school to gain the benefits of specialization.

Send Away (Ex): The incantatrix gains a +2 bonus to all dispel checks and caster level checks to harm, banish, or overcome the spell resistance of outsiders.

This includes dispel checks to dispel a summon monster spell.

Bonus Metamagic Feat: At 1st, 5th, and 10th level, the incantatrix may select a bonus metamagic feat.

See Ethereal (Su): Once per day, an incantatrix of 3rd level or greater can see into the Ethereal Plane for a number of rounds equal to her class level.

She can see ethereal creatures up to 60 feet away, although they appear gray and insubstantial (as objects on the Material Plane appear to ethereal creatures).

This does not give her any additional ability to attack ethereal creatures, but she can utilize spells and effects that affect ethereal creatures (such as force effects and abjurations) normally, so she could cast a magic missile at an ethereal creature.

Strike Ethereal (Su): Beginning at 4th level, the incantatrix can alter her spells so they strike ethereal targets that she can see.

Altering a spell in this way works similar to a sorcerer using a metamagic feat—spells with a casting time of one action become full-round spells, and spells with a longer casting time take an extra full-round action to cast.

The altered spell takes effect on the Ethereal Plane instead of the Material Plane.

Hardy Spirit (Su): At 6th level, the incantatrix becomes immune to death effects and energy drain attacks.

Instant Metamagic (Su): Once per day, the 7th-level incantatrix can use a single metamagic effect of any metamagic feat she knows on a spell without preparing it beforehand (if a wizard) or increasing its casting time (if a sorcerer or bard).

The wizard's prepared spell works as if prepared with the metamagic feat except it uses the same spell slot.

A sorcerer or bard's spell is cast without the adjustment to the casting time but works as if cast with the metamagic feat.

A 9th-level incantatrix can use this power twice per day.

Improved Metamagic (Su): At 8th level, the incantatrix has mastered metamagic to such an extent that whenever she uses a metamagic feat, the feat's level increase upon a spell is reduced by one (this can't reduce an increase to less than one level, or less than zero levels if the increase is already +0).

For example, an incantatrix wizard could prepare a quickened fireball as a 6th-level spell instead of a 7th-level spell.

Drain Item (Sp): An incantatrix of 10th level can drain a charge from a charged magic item, using the magic to heal herself.

If the item drained is a staff, the spell level is that of the lowest-level spell that uses a single charge.

She gains 1d6 hit points per spell level of the charge drained.

If the incantatrix has reached her maximum hit points, any additional hit points acquired are temporary hit points (maximum +20) that disappear after 10 minutes.

A creature gets to make a Will save (DC 10) to prevent one of its held or carried items from being drained.

MAGE-KILLER

Mage-killers are a rare breed.

They master magic designed for combat against other spellcasters.

They learn not only combat skills such as might be taught to a warrior, but also spells that target the weaknesses of their foes.

Some use traps, others use weapons, but all hone their magical skills to a fine point, for it is those skills that distinguish them from the usual run of hunters and killers. They develop friendships with the sorts of people who can lead them to their foes, but the dirty business of overcoming those foes they take upon their own shoulders. Most mage-killers are essentially bounty hunters specializing in a particular sort of prey.

Some, however, follow such a path out of religious conviction.

Ironically, followers of both Azuth and Shar use mage-killers in the pursuit of their respective deity's aims.

The church of Azuth believes in the responsible use of magic.

This prevents others not gifted in the Art from treating all spellcasters as enemies, but also preserves the very Weave itself.

Azuth's followers usually first offer a warning to any spellcaster who abuses the powers he possesses. Failing that, however, they increase the response, until at last they are forced to send a mage-killer to defeat the reckless spellcaster.

Shar's followers, of course, concern themselves with the Weave only insofar as it affects the Shadow Weave. Their mage-killers instead seek out prominent Weave users and kill them publicly as a warning to those who oppose their deity and as a demonstration of the power of the Shadow Weave.

Through such means, Shar's followers hope to weaken Mystra's power over magic.

So far, her followers have had little success in weakening Mystra's might, since the sorts of spells they prefer are not all so well suited to overcoming other spellcasters.

What mages they have killed were as often as not taken down by her deadly Dark Moon sorcerer-monks.

But if they seem, on the surface, less well suited to the task of killing other spellcasters, their fanatical devotion to their deity's cause more than makes up for it.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mage-killer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Lightning Reflexes, Combat Casting, Martial Weapon Proficiency (any).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane or divine spells. Ability to cast at least three spells that require Fortitude saves and at least three spells that require Reflex saves.

(A spell that inflicts damage but allows no saving throw can substitute for any of these required spells).

CLASS SKILLS

The mage-killer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (any) (Int), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the mage-killer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mage-killers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A mage-killer's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a character gains a new level of mage-killer, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a mage-killer, she must decide to which class she adds each level of mage-killer for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Improved Saves: The mage-killer learns to improve his resistance to the very sorts of spells he uses against others.

At 1st level, and every odd-numbered level thereafter, he gains a +1 bonus on either his Fortitude or Reflex save. These bonuses stack.

Augment Summoning: At 2nd level, the character gains the Augment Summoning feat.

Spell Focus feat: At 4th level, the character gains a bonus Spell Focus feat in one of the following schools: Conjuration, Evocation, Necromancy, or Transmutation.

Every even-numbered level thereafter, the character gains another bonus Spell Focus feat in one of these schools, until at 10th level the mage-killer has Spell Focus for all four schools listed.

MASTER ALCHEMIST

The master alchemist is a spellcaster who specializes in producing potions and elixirs that reproduce the effects of spells of 4th level or higher.

Even spellcasters who dabble in alchemy gain the ability to improve the rate at which they can produce potions, which for adventuring spellcasters can reduce the amount of time they must spend preparing for their next quest.

At its highest levels, the alchemist prestige class allows spellcasters to create potions that reproduce some of the most powerful magical effects available.

All master alchemists need sufficient space in which to work, as well as the right equipment and raw materials. A sizable work table is the minimum space necessary to create alchemical substances and brew potions.

Your Dungeon Master may also require that the character have an alchemist's lab (see page 110 of the Player's Handbook).

Finally, the character must provide the raw materials. These cost half the market price of the finished potion. Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a master alchemist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Alchemy 10 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Brew Potion, Magical Artisan (potions), Skill Focus (Alchemy).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The master alchemist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the master alchemist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Master alchemists gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A master alchemist's training focuses on magic.

Thus, when a character gains a new level of master alchemist, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a master alchemist, she must decide to which class she adds each level of master alchemist for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Brew 2/day: The master alchemist has perfected the art of brewing potions.

As such, she can brew two potions (totaling no more than 1,000 gp market value) in one day (an 8-hour period) instead of one.

Brew Potion (4th): Beginning at 2nd level, the master alchemist's advanced study of alchemy and magic allows her to brew potions of 4th-level spells.

The market price of such a potion is equal to 50 gp per spell level times the level of the caster.

Brew Potion (5th): As Brew Potion (4th), except that the master alchemist can brew potions of 5th-level spells.

Brew Potion (6th): As Brew Potion (4th), except that the master alchemist can brew potions of 6th-level spells.

Brew 3/day: As Brew 2/day, except that the master alchemist may brew three potions in one day.

Improved Identification: Beginning at 6th level, the master alchemist is so sure in her knowledge that she may use her Alchemy skill to identify potions and other such substances more quickly and simply than others.

This master alchemist needs no alchemical equipment, spends no gp, and requires only 1 minute to identify such a substance.

Add +10 to the normal DC required for identification. The master alchemist can't retry this improved identification (which means she can't take 20); if this identification fails, the master alchemist must use the normal identification rules as described under the Alchemy skill.

Brew Potion (7th): As Brew Potion (4th), except that the master alchemist can brew potions of 7th-level spells.

Brew Potion (8th): As Brew Potion (4th), except that the master alchemist can brew potions of 8th-level spells.

Brew 4/day: As Brew 2/day, except that the master alchemist may brew four potions in one day.

Brew Potion (9th): As Brew Potion (4th), except that the master alchemist can brew potions of 9th-level spells.

MYSTIC WANDERER

Mystic wanderers are divine spellcasters who eschew normal church hierarchies and instead embrace freedom, wanderlust, and independence.

They believe that to serve their deities they need to experience the world, learn about its hidden beauties and truths, and learn how their own inner selves relate to the outer world.

Mystic wanderers are known for their skill in creating potions and magic gems.

Most mystic wanderers begin as clerics, although some druids and rangers pursue the life of a mystic wanderer as well.

Because of the mystic wanderer's independence and disdain for authority figures, monks and paladins only become mystic wanderers if they have lapsed from their vows.

Most mystic wanderers follow deities of beauty, individualism, love, hedonism, charisma, self-perfection, darkness, the moon, joy, fertility, motherhood, dance, music, disease, poison, luck, misfortune, or the seasons. Mystic wanderer NPCs usually act alone, preferring to interact with people (including other mystic wanderers) on a person-to-person basis rather than in groups.

They sometimes acquire bodyguards or friends who can act as bodyguards to balance their weaknesses in combat.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a mystic wanderer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Skills: Alchemy 3 ranks, Diplomacy 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 3 ranks, Perform 3 ranks, Profession (herbalist) 3 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The mystic wanderer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Innuendo (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Perform (Cha), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the mystic wanderer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mystic wanderers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Many of the mystic wanderer's abilities rely on her ability to fully utilize the movements of her body and her confidence in her appearance.

When wearing any sort of armor or using a shield, her glory of the divine ability does not function and she cannot use any of her spell-like abilities.

Spells per Day: A mystic wanderer continues to study standard magic as well as pursuing her other studies.

Thus, when a new mystic wanderer level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class she belonged to before becoming a mystic wanderer.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of controlling or rebuking undead, and so on).

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a mystic wanderer, she must decide to which class she adds each level of mystic wanderer for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Glory of the Divine (Su): A mystic wanderer who wears no armor gains a sacred (or profane, if her patron deity is evil) bonus to AC equal to her Charisma bonus (if any).

Sleep (Sp): The mystic wanderer can use sleep once per day as a sorcerer equal to her mystic wanderer level plus her highest divine spellcaster level (DC = 11 + Cha modifier).

Familiar: Beginning at 2nd level, a mystic wanderer can obtain a familiar, just as a sorcerer or wizard can. A mystic wanderer with sorcerer or wizard levels can treat her mystic wanderer levels as sorcerer or wizard levels for determining her familiar's natural armor, Intelligence, and special abilities.

Lore of Nature: At 2nd level, the mystic wanderer gains a +2 competence bonus on all Profession (herbalist) and Knowledge (nature) checks.

Gem Magic (Su): A 3rd-level mystic wanderer learns the secret of gem magic, as described in the previous chapter. She gains the Attune Gem feat, and she can use the feat to store any spell she can cast, whether arcane or divine.

Resist Charm: Beginning at 3rd level, the mystic wanderer gains a +2 sacred (or profane, if her patron deity is evil) bonus on saving throws against enchantment (charm) effects.

Brew Potion: The mystic wanderer gains the Brew Potion feat at 4th level.

Suggestion (Sp): At 5th level, the mystic wanderer can use suggestion once per day as a sorcerer equal to her mystic wanderer level plus her highest divine spellcaster level (DC = 13 + Cha modifier).

Greater Potion I: The 6th-level mystic wanderer can brew potions as if she had access to all 0- and 1st-level sorcerer/wizard spells (even those not on her spell list). He need not have prepared the spell to brew the potion; instead, she must leave one spell slot (of the appropriate level) open when brewing a potion of a spell not on her spell list.

He must still provide any material components or focuses needed.

Charm Monster (Sp): At 7th level, the mystic wanderer can use charm monster once per day as a sorcerer equal to her mystic wanderer level plus her highest divine spellcaster level (DC = 14 + Cha modifier).

Greater Potion II: As greater potion I, except that the 8th-level mystic wanderer can brew potions as if she had access to all 2nd-level sorcerer/wizard spells.

Mass Charm (Sp): The 9th-level mystic wanderer can use mass charm once per day as a sorcerer whose level is equal to her mystic wanderer level plus her highest divine spellcaster level (DC = 18 + Cha modifier).

Greater Potion III: As greater potion I, except that the 10th-level mystic wanderer can brew potions as if she had access to all 3rd-level sorcerer/wizard spells.

Timeless Body: After achieving 10th level, a mystic wanderer no longer suffers ability penalties for aging (see the Player's Handbook, Table 6-5: Aging Effects, page 93) and cannot be magically aged.

Any penalties she may have already suffered, however, remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue, and the mystic wanderer still dies of old age when her time is up.

SPELLDANCER

Spell dancers are an energetic sort of spellcaster who draw on the quasi-primal energy of song and dancing to power their magic.

Functioning similar to a sorcerer or bard, they create magic when they need it, drawing from a wide repertoire of spells but in a taxing manner.

Some call them spellsingers, but the primary component of their magic is the dance, and "spellsinger" is often confused with the slang term for a mage, "spellslinger".

Most spell dancers are primarily sorcerers or bards, but some wizards find the path alluring, and clerics of deities such as Milil, Sharess, and Oghma sometimes walk the path of the spell dancer.

Characters of other classes almost never become spell dancers.

Most spell dancers are female.

NPC spell dancers often join traveling shows of minstrels, bards, and dancers.

Their mundane dancing abilities are remarkable and the mobility of the group prevents too much unwanted attention.

Some conservative spellcasters dislike spell dancers, and some common folk fear them and accuse them of consorting with fiends.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spell dancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Perform (dance) 6 ranks, Tumble 4 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge, Endurance, Mobility.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The spelldancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the spelldancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Spelldancers are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or shields.

Spelldance (Su): Spelldancing is a means of increasing the effectiveness of a spell by performing a vigorous magical dance before casting.

The spelldancer chooses one or more metamagic feats she knows to apply to a spell she wants to cast and begins her spellcasting.

(Spells from the schools of Invocation and Necromancy can't be enhanced via spellcasting).

When she finishes spellcasting, she makes a Perform check with a DC of 10 + spell level (as modified by the metamagic feats).

If she fails, the spell fizzles with no effect.

If she succeeds, she casts the spell and it is modified by the selected metamagic feats (without the level of the spell being altered).

For every spell level higher than normal that a metamagic feat alters a spell, one full round of spellcasting is required to alter the spell.

The spelldancer dances the required number of rounds, and on her next action she may cast a spell with the chosen metamagic feat (if she doesn't cast a spell that round, the spellcasting effect is lost).

For example, a spelldancer could choose to empower a bull's strength spell, spelldance for 2 full rounds (the spell level adjustment for Empower Spell), then cast bull's strength (as a standard action) with the benefits of Empower Spell.

Still Spell and Quicken Spell can never be used in conjunction with spellcasting.

A spelldancer needs to know the metamagic feat in question to spelldance the effects of that feat.

Spellcasting requires extended motion.

A spellcasting character has to move at least half her speed as part of her action on any round she spellcasts.

This movement is included in the full-round action of spellcasting, and means the spelldancer cannot take a 5-foot step on any round she spellcasts.

While spellcasting, the caster provokes attacks of opportunity normally, although she can still make Tumble checks to avoid attacks of opportunity.

A spelldancer can safely spelldance a number of rounds per day equal to her Constitution modifier plus her spelldancer class level.

Every spell she casts with spellcasting after that causes her to make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + total rounds spent spellcasting in the last day) to avoid taking 2 points of temporary Constitution damage and becoming fatigued (if already fatigued, the character becomes exhausted and can't spelldance again until only fatigued).

Enthralling Dance (Sp): Once per day, a 2nd-level spelldancer can enthrall targets with a special dance. The effect is identical to the enthrall spell, except that it requires no vocal component and requires dancing as its somatic component.

The DC to resist is equal to 10 + spelldancer level + Charisma modifier.

The effect lasts as long as the spelldancer continues dancing (which is otherwise identical to spellcasting).

At 4th level, the spelldancer can use her enthralling dance twice per day.

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level, a spelldancer gains evasion.

If exposed to any effect that normally allows a character to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage (such as fireball), she takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

Evasion can only be used if the spelldancer is wearing light armor or no armor.

Cooperative Dance (Ex): A 3rd-level spelldancer can coordinate with another dancing character to share some of the effort of casting spells with spellcasting.

The assisting character must dance during the same rounds as the spelldancer and then make a Perform check; for every 10 points of the check, the "cost" of the spelldance is reduced by 1 round (to a maximum reduction of 3 rounds for a check result of 30 or greater).

This doesn't decrease the number of rounds required for the spelldance; it simply means that not as many rounds are deducted from the spelldancer's total number of spellcasting rounds per day.

The cooperative dance can't reduce the number of rounds of spellcasting "spent" by the spelldancer to less than one for any casting, and the spelldancer can only coordinate with one character per spelldance.

Example: A spelldancer wishes to heighten a spell from 2nd to 5th level (+3 levels).

This requires 3 rounds of spellcasting.

If another character cooperates by dancing for the same 3 rounds as the spelldancer and rolls a 22 on his Perform (dancing) check, the spelldance only "costs" the spelldancer 1 round (of her limited number of spellcasting rounds per day), rather than the full 3.

Sleep Dance (Sp): Once per day, a 4th-level spelldancer can dance in such a manner as to put nearby creatures to sleep. This requires 1 full round of dancing (as spellcasting), after which all creatures in a 30-foot-radius emanation fall into slumber as the sleep spell (Will negates, DC 10 + spelldancer level + Charisma modifier) for 1 minute per spelldancer level.

Confusing Dance (Sp): The 5th-level spelldancer can confuse targets with a special dance once per day.

This requires 1 full round of dancing (as spellcasting), after which all creatures within 15 feet of the spelldancer are affected as the confusion spell (Will negates, DC 10 + spelldancer level + Charisma modifier) for 1 round per spelldancer level.

SPELLFIRE CHANNELER

Spellfire is the raw energy of the Weave.

Most who bear this gift never have the time or opportunity to develop these skills.

Those who do practice their spellfire are able to hone their talent into a tool with fantastic abilities that most dabblers can only dream of.

Characters of all classes can become spellfire channelers, since that ability isn't selective about whom it appears in. Spellcasters of any sort have the easiest time qualifying for this class, however.

As NPCs, spellfire channelers are usually reclusive individuals, for powerful organizations are always on the hunt for beings with unusual abilities that can be turned to evil or experimented upon.

The Cult of the Dragon is one such group, and it has been responsible for driving into hiding many users of spellfire. The most famous of these is Shandril Shessair, who led a life on the run before finally destroying enough cultists to deter their interest in her.

Most spellfire channelers wish only to be left alone, although a rare few use their spellfire to acquire power and influence for themselves.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spellfire channeler, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks, Spellcraft 2 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Spellfire Wielder.

CLASS SKILLS

The spellfire channeler's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the spellfire channeler prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Spellfire channelers are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or shields.

Drain Charged Item (Sp): As a standard action, a spellfire channeler can drain a single charge from a touched charged item (including single-use items such as potions and scrolls), converting the energy into a single stored spellfire energy level.

A fully drained item has no magical properties (a potion becomes water, a scroll becomes blank paper).

Only one feature of a multiple-use charged item (such as a scroll with several spells) can be drained per round.

A creature gets to make a Will save (DC 10) to prevent one of its held or carried items from being drained.

Increased Storage (Ex): The channeler's capacity for storing spellfire energy levels is multiplied by the listed value.

However, spellfire energy levels in excess of the channeler's Constitution score is dangerous, with different effects depending upon the number of levels stored:

Constitution +1 to Constitution ×2: The channeler's eyes glow brightly, and any creature, magic item, or spell effect that touches the channeler causes 1 spellfire energy level to be discharged as a harmless burst of light.

Once per day, the channeler must make a Constitution check (DC 10) or take 1d6 points of damage as one of her spellfire energy level backfires.

Constitution ×2+1 to Constitution ×3: As above, plus the channeler's skin glows (shedding light as a candle), a touch releases 1d4 spellfire energy levels as light, and the channeler must make the backfire Constitution check every hour.

Constitution ×3+1 to Constitution ×4: As above, except the channeler sheds light equal to a torch, feels a burning sensation within her body (treat as if distracted by nondamaging spell, DC 20 to concentrate), and must make the backfire Constitution check every minute.

A touch releases 1d6 spellfire energy levels as a flare spell (DC 10 + number of spellfire energy levels expended) against the channeler and all creatures within 5 feet of her.

Constitution ×4+1 to Constitution ×5: As above, except the character radiates a palpable (but nondamaging) heat to a radius of 20 feet, is in pain (treat as if distracted by nondamaging spell, DC 25 to concentrate), and must make the backfire Constitution check every round.

A touch releases 2d6 spellfire energy levels as a flare spell (DC 10 + number of spellfire energy levels expended) against the channeler and all creatures within 5 feet of her. The channeler must make a Will save (DC 25) every round or be forced to expend a maximum-strength blast of energy at a random target within 30 feet in preference to any other action.

Regardless of the number of spellfire energy levels stored, a channeler can voluntarily expend only a number of spellfire energy levels per round equal to her Constitution score.

(Involuntary expenditure, such as that noted above, isn't limited in this way).

Improved Healing (Su): At 2nd level, the spellfire channeler can release stored spellfire energy levels to heal by touch.

This restores 1d4+1 hit points per spellfire energy level expended (rather than the normal 2 points per spellfire energy level).

Weapon Focus (spellfire): The channeler gains the Weapon Focus (spellfire) feat at 3rd level.

Rapid Blast (Su): At 4th level, the spellfire channeler can release two blasts of spellfire as a standard action.

This increases to three blasts per standard action at 8th level.

Each blast after the first suffers a cumulative -2 penalty to attack rolls (-0 for the first blast, -2 for the second, and -4 for the third).

Drain Permanent Item (Sp): The channeler can drain power from permanent magic items by touch as a standard action.

An item that creates spell effects (such as boots of speed) loses that function for 24 hours, and the channeler gains spellfire energy levels equal to half the caster level of the item.

A creature gets to make a Will save (DC 10) to prevent one of its held or carried items from being drained.

An item with all its permanent abilities drained for the day is still a magic item (for purposes of making saving throws when damaged, and so on).

Flight (Su): The channeler can expend spellfire energy levels to fly as the spell.

Each spellfire energy level expended allows the channeler to fly for 1 minute.

The flying channeler leaves a visible trail of light that fades after 1 round.

Deflect Arrows (Su): The channeler gains the Deflect Arrows feat, although rather than using a hand, a single spellfire energy level is expended to knock the missile away.

If the channeler has no spellfire energy levels available, she cannot use this ability.

Crown of Fire (Su): By expending 10 spellfire energy levels, a channeler can manifest the crown of fire, which appears as a halo of spellfire around her head and provides light equal to a daylight spell.

The crown of fire gives her damage reduction 10/+1 and automatically melts all nonmagical weapons that strike her (after inflicting damage, if any).

The crown of fire grants the channeler spell resistance 32 (as the spell resistance spell).

Maintaining the crown of fire requires expending 10 spellfire energy levels each round, which can be done as a free action.

The crown of fire does not interfere with the channeler's actions, including using other spellfire abilities.

Maelstrom of Fire (Su): The channeler can release spellfire energy in all directions as a 20-foot-radius spread, dealing 1d6 damage per spellfire energy level expended to all creatures in the area (Reflex half, DC 10 + class level + Charisma modifier).

WAR WIZARD OF CORMYR

The Cormyrean war wizards are some of the most respected battle-mages in all Faerûn.

Trained by experienced combat mages, they bring great power to the battlefield.

In the war against the Tuigan horde, they were instrumental in protecting the outnumbered allied troops fighting against the horde.

In the recent war in Cormyr against the dragon and her goblin minions, many war wizards lost their lives holding back the onslaught.

Since their creation, they have been one of Cormyr's most effective tools against subversion by foreign or hostile powers.

The road they must travel to achieve such ends is long, difficult, and often lonely, but the special people who follow this path are made of the stuff that can endure such hardships.

Their reward?

The respect of their peers and the people of Cormyr, and the gratitude of kings.

As expected, wizards make the best war wizards, but despite the name the class is not limited to wizards alone.

Sorcerers often select this path, for their dedication to a specific area of magic can make them powerful servants of Cormyr's crown.

Though bards can qualify, few find this path worthwhile.

Most war wizards serve the kingdom of Cormyr directly, and that duty rarely allows adventuring.

Still, some war wizards work more proactively, seeking out potential threats to Cormyr and rectifying them before the situation merits greater attention.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a war wizard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil, nonchaotic.

Skills: Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Enlarge Spell, Widen Spell, Martial Weapon

Proficiency (any).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 4th-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The war wizard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (any) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the war wizard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: War wizards gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: A war wizard's training focuses on magic. Thus, when a character gains a new level of war wizard, she gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (increased familiar powers, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a war wizard, she must decide to which class she adds each level of war wizard for purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Weapon Focus: The war wizard gains a free Weapon Focus feat for a martial weapon of her choice.

She must be proficient with that weapon in order to apply this feat to it.

Metamagic Feat: War wizards focus their studies of spellcasting efficiency.

In order to achieve that end, they develop expertise in a variety of metamagic techniques.

At 2nd level and again at 4th level, the war wizard gains a bonus metamagic feat of her choice to add to her repertoire of knowledge.

Widen Spell: Part of the war wizard's training involves study of the essence of magic.

In her training, she learns to adapt to the rapidly changing conditions of the battlefield.

Although she may prepare some of her spells with metamagic feats, sometimes she needs to modify a spell on the spur of the moment.

Beginning at 3rd level, a war wizard may cast a spell as if it were under the effects of the Widen Spell feat.

She does not need to prepare this in advance, and it does not increase the casting time or use a higher spell slot.

The war wizard can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + her Charisma bonus (if any).

Enhanced Spell Area: Particularly important to war wizards is the ability to use fewer spells to defeat their enemies, so they perfect their understanding of spell dimensions to cast spells affected by the Widen Spell metamagic feat with even greater area.

Any time a war wizard of 5th level casts a spell modified by the Widen Spell feat, the spell area increases by 100% rather than 50%.

Thus, instead of a widened fireball spell having a 30-ft.-radius spread, it has a 40-ft.-radius spread.

MAGIC OF INCARNUM (3.5)

INCANDESCENT CHAMPION

"The greatest power in the cosmos is the power of the mortal spirit. The gods themselves cannot bear the brilliance of a single perfect soul."

—Sayyara na Retheil, Daughter of the Crescent Moon
Though incarnum is a potent tool, it is still a physical medium—an abstraction that stands between its wielder and the true power of the soul.

The incandescent champion seeks to dispense with barriers and obstacles both tangible and intangible so that she can touch the cosmic soul with her unveiled body, mind, and spirit.

By embracing the ultimate, irreducible energy of the multiverse in this manner, she becomes a living flame—a brilliant spirit whose body is little more than a shell for her true form.

The strength of her soul allows her to withstand almost any peril, scour her foes with deadly luminous blasts, and overcome the physical shackles of the world around her to accomplish miraculous feats.

An incandescent champion acknowledges that every creature harbors a spark of the universal spirit, and she believes that the beings known as deities simply possess a greater share of this precious spark than most others.

She reveres and respects the gods but does not offer them worship.

The incandescent champion considers it her responsibility to protect and aid less enlightened creatures and to serve as a force for good in the world.

BECOMING AN INCANDESCENT CHAMPION

Since an incandescent champion must rely on her fighting ability for most of her career, the best paths into the prestige class are from classes with good base attack bonuses, such as fighter, paladin, or soulborn.

Monks take longer to qualify, but the incandescent champion's class abilities complement their talents quite well, so they often pursue this path.

If the candidate's original class does not have meldshaping ability, she must select a feat that grants essentia—such as Azure Touch, Azure Turning, or Midnight Dodge—to qualify.

The key abilities for an incandescent champion include Charisma (for increasing the effectiveness of class abilities) and Strength (for melee attacks).

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any good.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks.

Essentia Pool: 1.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Ride

CLASS FEATURES

As an incandescent champion, you focus your efforts on battling evil and protecting the innocent.

You learn to use incarnum for both offense and defense in combat.

Furthermore, you can improve the potency of incandescent champion class features by investing essentia in them, as noted in the individual ability descriptions below.

Your essentia capacity for these abilities depends on your character level, as given on Table 2–1: Essentia Capacity on page 19.

All of the following are class features of the incandescent champion prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Incandescent Strike (Su): You can channel incarnum to increase the damage dealt by your melee attacks.

For each such augmented attack, you gain a bonus on your damage roll equal to the number of points of essentia invested in this ability.

Whenever you have essentia invested in incandescent strike, your hands glow with a bright light equivalent to that produced by a light spell.

Fast Healing (Su): When you reach 2nd level, the irrepressible force of your soul restores your vitality whenever you are wounded, granting you fast healing at a rate equal to the points of essentia you invest in this ability. This fast healing is usable for a number of rounds per day equal to your incandescent champion level.

For example, a 5th-level incandescent champion who invests 2 points of essentia in this ability gains fast healing 2 for a maximum of 5 rounds per day.

Activating this ability requires no action, but investing essentia in it requires a swift action, as normal.

At 9th level, each ally who is adjacent to you when you activate the ability gains fast healing at the same rate and for the same duration as you do.

Unbearable Countenance (Su): When you attain 3rd level, inner power begins to shine forth from your face, giving you a radiant countenance that dismays your foes.

With a glance, you can render a single foe within 30 feet shaken for 1 round (Will negates; save DC 10 + invested essentia + Cha modifier).

Your glance becomes a mindaffecting fear effect, and using it requires a move action.

Any foe that successfully saves against this effect is immune to your unbearable countenance for 1 hour thereafter.

This ability is always active.

Incarnum Overload (Ex): At 4th level, you can temporarily boost the maximum essentia capacity of any soulmeld, incarnum feat, or special ability that allows essentia investment.

This effect lasts for 1 round, during which the essentia capacity of the chosen soulmeld, feat, or ability increases by an amount equal to your Charisma bonus (minimum +1). This ability is usable once per day as a free action.

At 7th level, you can use this ability twice per day; at 10th level, you can use it three times per day.

Incandescent Ray (Su): Beginning at 5th level, you can channel incarnum into a ray of pure, brilliant soul energy at will.

Using this ability is a standard action; you must make a successful ranged touch attack to hit your target.

The incandescent ray has a range of 60 feet and deals 1d8 points of damage per point of essentia invested in this ability.

Incandescent Aura (Su): Once you attain 8th level, incarnum has become so integral to your physical form that your body constantly exudes pure, brilliant soul energy.

At the start of your turn, every creature adjacent to you that you designate as a foe takes 1d6 points of damage per point of essentia invested in this ability.

A successful Will save halves this damage (DC 10 + invested essentia + Cha modifier).

This ability is always active.

If you have essentia invested in your incandescent aura ability, you shine with a bright light equivalent to that produced by a daylight spell (caster level equals incandescent champion level).

Incandescent Transcendence: At 10th level, you forsake your mortal nature to fully embrace the power of your spirit.

Your type changes to outsider, and you gain the native and good subtypes.

Your natural weapons and any weapons you wield are treated as good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Furthermore, once per day as a standard action, you can transform your physical body into pure, luminous energy for a number of rounds equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

Upon assuming this form, you become incorporeal and gain a fly speed of 60 feet (perfect maneuverability).

You cannot make attacks, cast spells, or activate special abilities while in your energy form, though you can invest essentia as usual and your incandescent aura functions normally.

Once you activate this ability, you cannot choose to end the effect prematurely.

PLAYING AN INCANDESCENT CHAMPION

The single defining virtue that you share with all other incandescent champions is compassion.

You understand that that all beings are one, and that love—love of life, love of nature, and even love for one's enemies—is the true purpose of the universe.

Some insist that this belief makes you weak or irresolute, but you understand that cruelty, evil, and tyranny can be answered only with strength and conviction.

You do not enjoy destroying evil foes or fighting for your survival against those who would end your life, but you do so when you must.

After all, once a tortured soul is freed from its flawed and evil vessel, it might find redemption and renewal.

Your belief in the worth and divinity of all around you means that although you hope never to strike a single blow more than you absolutely must, you do not hesitate to protect the weak, oppose injustice, and aid all in need.

You are slow to answer violence with violence, and you show mercy to all but the most irredeemable of foes.

You are inclined to offer opponents the chance for surrender, to stabilize dying enemies at the end of a battle, and to offer trust even at the risk of betrayal.

You especially dislike undead creatures, since the imprisonment of a soul that should be free to proceed to its next rightful incarnation or existence is a terrible wrong indeed.

Like most incandescent champions, you are probably a member of an order or knightly chapter dedicated to the service of a particular kingdom, race, or creed.

This organization is a brother hood or fellowship of equals in which all receive respect and aid.

In your work, however, you are something of a knight-errant—a freelance agent of good expected to travel widely and serve with courage, zeal, and compassion.

COMBAT

Because you are primarily a melee combatant, you rely heavily on your incandescent strike ability to augment whatever skill at arms you brought into the class.

Taking levels in this class means trading attack prowess (in the form of a reduced base attack bonus) for damage (your incandescent strike), so look for other ways to enhance your attack rolls and make sure you hit.

If you can shape incarnate soulmelds, incarnate weapon might prove especially useful to you.

At the midpoint of your progress in the class, you gain the incandescent ray—a potent ranged attack.

If you employ your incarnum overload ability with this attack, you can easily deal 4d8 points of damage (or more) with each hit.

This ability works well in conjunction with your unbearable countenance ability, since you can use your move action to afflict an enemy with your glance and your standard action to attack another enemy at range.

The incandescent transcendence ability that you gain at the height of your power provides you with an extremely powerful attack.

Your incandescent aura combined with your ability to fly and become incorporeal lets you defeat your enemies simply by approaching them in your radiant form.

In like manner, approaching your allies in this form allows you to grant them your fast healing ability.

You incur little danger for doing so, since creatures without magic weapons cannot harm you while you are incorporeal.

ADVANCEMENT

Incandescent champions are born, not made.

After all, few individuals set out to “earn their spurs” by winning membership in a knightly order of incandescent champions.

When you begin to nurture the virtues of compassion, courage, and faith in others, and make an honest effort to live and fight by those principles, you demonstrate your readiness to become an incandescent champion.

Chapters of knights or holy warriors who espouse such virtues watch for heroes possessing the necessary qualities and invite them to join when the time is right.

As a member of an order of champions, you are dispatched on solitary crusades to help others deal with specific threats.

Incandescent champions simply aren't numerous enough to gather as a company and strike together against evil.

But although you rarely work with other members of your order, you are expected to ally yourself with other heroes of good heart and guide their efforts to defeat whatever evil is at hand.

Good knights of other orders, paladins, and clerics of good-aligned deities are your natural allies, and your reputation precedes you among these stalwart agents of good in any land where incandescent champions are known.

Your allies do not necessarily expect you to take command of any gathering of good forces you encounter, but they do expect you to advise, serve, and speak from your heart when appropriate.

As you attain higher levels, you should consider taking additional feats that increase your essentia or improve your fighting ability.

Weapon Focus (ray) or Improved Critical (ray) are particularly useful for augmenting your incandescent ray attack.

If you can, seek out magic weapons that have high enhancement bonuses and no special abilities—you would rather have a +3 longsword than a +2 flaming longsword because your incandescent strike provides extra damage but no attack bonuses.

RESOURCES

Incandescent champion orders rarely have many members or accumulate much wealth, so your fellow champions might not be able to assist you directly in your endeavors. However, membership carries a great deal of prestige in kingdoms where such orders exist.

For example, the Knights of the Crescent Moon might number only six or seven individuals, but you can be sure that the monarch and high nobles of the realm know that members of the order are faithful, trustworthy, and courageous.

Furthermore, a chapter of incandescent champions might have one or more noble patrons—high lords or ladies who can bring their wealth and influence to bear on behalf of any champion in need of aid.

INCANDESCENT CHAMPIONS IN THE WORLD

“Evil cannot prevail as long as one incandescent champion still stands on the field.”

—Lady Illeera Suntower, Marshal of the Eastern Marches

Incarnum-wielding characters who seek to serve the cause of good might find that their particular talents lead them along different paths than their divinely inclined fellows. While clerics, paladins, and rangers can choose from numerous knightly orders, church-sponsored fellowships, and elite companies, characters who use essentia have difficulty qualifying for membership.

Such holy-minded incarnum-wielders can easily find their niche, however, in the various orders of incandescent champions.

Membership in such an order gives a player character a great opportunity to play a strongly good alignment as an active choice, rather than simply as a reaction to evil. Members of this prestige class make the world a better place by promoting good, not just by destroying evil.

DAILY LIFE

Incandescent champions continue to pursue whatever avocations or interests they possessed before joining the order.

In particular, a character who functioned as an itinerant adventurer before becoming an incandescent champion is very likely to continue her travels and adventures with little interruption.

Different chapters have different expectations in this regard, but none impose terribly difficult requirements upon their members.

The Knights of the Crescent Moon, for example, require only attendance at a yearly gathering, so that all current members can renew their oaths of fellowship.

NOTABLES

No overarching fellowship of incandescent champions exists, but each chapter or order has its own history of great heroes, tragic figures, and noteworthy leaders.

For example, Prince Harel zur Karmaud, the youngest son of a sultan who was assassinated by his own brother, is revered as the founder of the Knights of the Crescent Moon.

Harel's uncle Yisfar killed or imprisoned all the prince's older siblings to secure his power, but Harel eluded capture and rose to lead a revolt against the usurper.

Though Yisfar was a sorcerer of formidable power, Prince Harel succeeded in overthrowing him.

But rather than assuming the throne, as his supporters urged him to do, Harel freed his sister Analya and surrendered power to her, saying only that he was not worthy to be sultan because he had spilled the blood of his uncle.

Harel is long dead now, but legend holds that he will return someday to defend the land in the hour of its greatest need. Though she is not a member of the order, Lady Illeera Suntower is a noteworthy patron of the Knights of the Crescent Moon.

Her family has sponsored the organization for generations, providing the order with a small chapterhouse known as the Keep of the Moon in its home city of Daristin.

Lady Illeera's generous donations pay for maintenance of the keep, provide new members with crescent moon clasps (see page 121), and ensure that the order can keep a small staff of guards and servants on hand.

While the knights are not often present at the Keep of the Moon, they are generous in sharing their house with various low-level clerics, monks, soulborn, and paladins who minister to the city's needy.

ORGANIZATION

Small chapters and orders of incandescent champions can be found in many lands, particularly in elf and human kingdoms with chivalric traditions.

The Knights of the Crescent Moon is an excellent example of such an order, but similar organizations also exist in a number of other lands.

The rigorous egalitarianism espoused by the Knights of the Crescent Moon means that, at least in theory, all members of the order are equals and none may command her fellows. However, the knights recognize that this arrangement isn't always practical, so certain informal arrangements have evolved.

By tradition, one knight remains at or near the Keep of the Moon at all times.

The knight assigned to this post, known as the castellan, holds the keys to the keep for one year.

At that point, she hands off the task to the successor she has selected.

If a dire need arises, the castellan can call for any knight she deems ready and able to meet the challenge of the task at hand.

Very few knights disregard a summons of this sort.

The second tradition of leadership within the order is an informal council consisting of two or three of the most experienced knights.

Whenever the order as a whole cannot reach consensus about a particular issue, and the castellan cannot or will not exercise her authority to require action, these senior knights debate the issue and then present a recommendation to their fellows.

Since the appearance of unanimity is part of the knightly tradition, few Crescent Moon knights argue with decisions made in this manner.

The current castellan is Sayyara na Rethel (see Encounters, below).

She is frequently in attendance at the Sultan's court, and she also serves as a captain of the city watch, a bodyguard for royalty, and a keen-eyed watcher of politics and magical events in and around the city of Daristin.

Though Sayyara is a relatively junior knight, her fellows regard her as level-headed and resolute.

Differences of opinion with her free-minded compatriots have been few and far between—at least so far.

NPC REACTIONS

Nobles of neutral or good alignment are friendly toward known incandescent champions, since they recognize the orders sponsoring them as bastions of faithful service and compassionate courage.

By the same token, nobles and other powerful individuals of evil alignment resent the incandescent champions' meddling, and fear discovery or chastisement by the order. Such individuals are unfriendly toward known incandescent champions, though they might feign indifference to avoid raising suspicions.

Paladins and good-aligned clerics devoted to specific deities view incandescent champions as "loose cannons".

Because faithful servitors of established religions tend to distrust a tradition of service that places no importance on an individual's standing with the gods, they are indifferent to known incandescent champions.

However, good clerics who do not venerate specific deities (in other words, clerics who choose domains but not patron deities) hold incandescent champions in higher regard and are friendly toward them.

Incandescent champions have the same kinds of enemies paladins do—namely demons, devils, evil monsters, undead, and individuals of all races who serve evil causes. Such servants of darkness find incandescent champions who started their careers as paladins doubly offensive.

INCANDESCENT CHAMPION LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (nobility and royalty) skill can research the incandescent champions to learn more about them and their orders.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below her Knowledge (nobility and royalty) check result.

DC 10: Some champions of good have souls so strong and pure that evil creatures can neither look them in the eye nor abide their touch.

DC 15: These enlightened warriors are known as incandescent champions because they glow with a holy aura or radiance when they use their magical powers. Most of them belong to special knightly orders or fellowships, such as the Knights of the Crescent Moon. The members of these orders are devoted to serving the common good, and they believe that all folk are of great worth.

DC 20: Incandescent champions can strike their enemies with rays of light, heal themselves and their allies, and even turn into radiant ghosts.

The most powerful among them are like angels in human form.

DC 30: Lady Illeera Suntower is the secret patroness of the Knights of the Crescent Moon.

She gives each new knight a magic cloak clasp as a gift, and the knights undertake missions at her behest.

In any given land, experienced paladins, nobles, and clerics know of at least one prominent incandescent champion, although they might not think of her as such.

In most cases, they regard her as a member of a small but valiant knightly order.

INCANDESCENT CHAMPIONS IN THE GAME

A chapter of incandescent champions makes a fine knightly society for a campaign, and its members can serve as allies or patrons for bands of player characters.

In fact, incandescent champions go out of their way to cultivate relationships with companies of good-aligned adventurers, providing them with useful information and contacts in exchange for their help in checking evil threats. If a character in your campaign has chosen the path of the incandescent champion, make sure you give her the opportunity to resolve some problems through faith, trust, and goodwill.

After all, if every foe whose life she spares repays her efforts by murdering townsfolk a few days later, you merely demonstrate to her that compassion and redemption have no place in your game.

Similarly, if she calls on foes to surrender but begins every fight flat-footed because the enemy shoots instead of talks, she's likely to wonder why she bothered with the prestige class.

An incandescent champion is ultimately a warrior, so make sure you give her plenty of opponents that she can defeat with courage and swordplay, but don't punish her for attempting to show mercy and be compassionate.

ADAPTATION

Although the incandescent champion is designed to make use of essentia, you could strip out the incarnum aspects of the class and simply make the special abilities supernatural or spell-like.

To do so, you must create a method for determining the caster level of each ability's effect.

For example, you might decide that the incandescent ray deals damage based on the character's incandescent champion level instead of on the amount of essentia she invests.

You can easily adapt the Knights of the Crescent Moon to your campaign just by changing a few names.

The group could also be a special meritorious order, in which a character can gain full membership only by completing some great service to monarch or country. Or the order could be a masked fellowship of good-aligned nobles and knights who secretly oppose an evil tyrant.

CRESCENT MOON CLASP

Upon acceptance into the Knights of the Crescent Moon, each new member receives a crescent moon clasp as a gift from Lady Illeera Suntower, the noble patron of the order. This clasp is a silver brooch in the shape of a crescent moon partially obscured by clouds.

While wearing it, a character with an essentia pool gains a +1 sacred bonus on attack rolls against evil creatures.

The clasp uses the amulet, medallion, or brooch item slot. Faint evocation; CL 6th; Craft Wondrous Item, prayer, creator must be good; Price 6,000 gp.

INCARNUM BLADE

"The spirits of a thousand heroes guide my sword."

—Baron Viktoran Malin, incarnum blade and leader of the Warriors Eternal

Using a secret passed down through the generations, the incarnum blade shapes soul energy drawn from the greatest warriors of the past into a special soulmeld that is incorporated into his melee weapon of choice. By itself, this blademeld grants him amazing combat prowess.

When bound to his chakras, it also enhances his personal combat abilities, infusing them with the power of incarnum.

When he dies, the incarnum blade merges with the soul energy that powers his weapon, becoming part of the soul legacy upon which future heroes can draw.

BECOMING AN INCARNUM BLADE

Because the incarnum blade is a warrior at heart, the simplest and most obvious path into the prestige class is from a fighting class, such as fighter or paladin, that meets the base attack bonus requirement early.

A member of a combat-oriented class that has Concentration as a class skill (such as soulborn, paladin, or ranger) has a slight edge over the fighter in qualifying, though such characters must give up their own spellcasting or meldshaping progressions to pursue this path.

However, the abilities granted by this prestige class suit any character who focuses primarily on melee combat.

Thus, the occasional rogue, monk, or scout (see Complete Adventurer) might also be found wielding a blademeld for the Warriors Eternal.

Because incarnum blade is only a five-level prestige class, it allows a character to gain a new and unique ability while not venturing too far from a more career-defining base or prestige class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any except neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Concentration 2 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Swim

CLASS FEATURES

The primary benefits of this prestige class are the blademeld and the abilities granted by its chakra binds.

As you attain higher levels of incarnum blade, you unlock additional powers for your blademeld.

Eventually, you gain the ability to shift your chakra bind on the fly and even bind your blademeld to two chakras simultaneously.

All of the following are class features of the incarnum blade prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Shape Blademeld (Su): At 1st level, you gain the ability to create a special soulmeld called a blademeld by wrapping incarnum into a melee weapon of your choice.

Doing so ties the chosen weapon more closely to your mind and soul and grants it special powers.

A weapon with a blademeld shaped on it appears to have a blue glow and is treated as a magic weapon for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Its hardness improves by 5, and its hit points increase by 5 per level you possess in incarnum blade.

The weapon also gains a bonus on saving throws equal to your incarnum blade level.

Shaping the blademeld requires 8 hours of rest followed by 1 hour of meditation, just like shaping any other soulmeld does.

The blademeld remains shaped until you unshape it, though it unshapes automatically if the weapon to which it is attached is sundered or otherwise destroyed.

Simply losing possession of the weapon does not unshape the blademeld, and it still retains its enhanced hardness, hit points, and save bonuses even if you are not holding it. The wielder benefits granted by the blademeld do not apply to anyone else who might pick it up.

Blademeld Chakra Bind (Su): When you shape your blademeld, you can bind it to one of your body's chakras.

Doing so grants you a special ability that lasts as long as the blademeld is shaped and the weapon is held.

Unlike most soulmelds, the blademeld's appearance does not change while it is bound to a chakra, and the affected chakra is not apparent in any way to an onlooker.

Furthermore, the weapon to which the blademeld is attached is still wielded normally, even if it is bound to a chakra other than your hands.

You can be disarmed normally, and it can still be sundered in the usual way.

If you lose or put down the weapon while it is bound, it remains bound and retains the special characteristics it gains from the blademeld; you also retain the special ability gained from the bind.

No one else can benefit from the weapon's incarnum-based powers.

Unlike a typical chakra bind, this one does not close the corresponding body slot.

For example, a blademeld bound to your hands chakra does not prevent you from wearing a pair of magic gloves.

Blademeld chakra bind does not grant you the ability to bind soulmelds or other magic items to your chakras.

At 1st level, you can bind your blademeld to any of your least chakras (crown, feet, or hands); at 2nd level, you can bind it to any least or lesser chakra; and at 3rd level, you can bind it to any least, lesser, or greater chakra.

At 4th level, you can bind your blademeld to your heart chakra, and at 5th level, you can bind it to your soul chakra.

Binding your blademeld to a chakra grants you a special ability according to the chakra chosen, as detailed below.

Crown Chakra: As long as this chakra bind is in effect, you have uncanny battlefield insight.

Opponents that flank you do not gain the normal +2 bonus on attack rolls against you, though they still gain any other benefits they normally would, such as the ability to deliver a sneak attack.

You also gain a +4 insight bonus on opposed attack rolls made to avoid being disarmed of the weapon with the blademeld or to avoid having it sundered.

In addition, you gain a +4 insight bonus on Sense Motive checks made when someone attempts a feint against you in combat (see the Bluff skill description, page 68 of the Player's Handbook).

Feet Chakra: You react more quickly than usual to danger, gaining a +2 insight bonus on initiative checks while this chakra bind is in effect.

In addition, you can make attacks of opportunity with the blademeld weapon even while flat-footed.

Hands Chakra: You can deal precise blows in combat.

While the blademeld is bound to this chakra, you gain a +1 insight bonus on damage rolls made with the blademeld weapon.

Arms Chakra: You can deal devastating strikes in combat. While it is in effect, this chakra bind grants you a +4 insight bonus on attack rolls made to confirm a critical threat with the blademeld weapon.

Brow Chakra: You can more effectively battle foes that you can't see clearly while this chakra bind is in effect.

Every time you miss an attack with the blademeld weapon because of the opponent's concealment, you can reroll your miss chance percentile roll once to see if you actually hit. This ability functions much like the Blind-Fight feat.

If you already have Blind-Fight, you gain no additional benefit—that is, you are still entitled to only one reroll.

Shoulders Chakra: You gain the ability to avoid certain particularly deadly strikes.

Any time a melee attack would deal you a critical hit, you have a 25% chance to negate the extra damage from it.

This ability is active as long as this chakra bind is in effect. You need not be aware of the attack for the ability to function, but it grants no benefit if you are unconscious or otherwise helpless.

This chakra bind has no effect against sneak attacks, and its benefit does not stack with that of the fortification armor or shield special quality.

Throat Chakra: At will, you can brandish the weapon bearing the blademeld and utter a hearty battle shout that demoralizes foes.

Each enemy within 60 feet who can hear you must save or become shaken for 1 round (Will DC 10 + incarnum blade level + Con modifier).

You can use this ability at will as a standard action as long as the chakra bind is in effect.

Waist Chakra: As long as this chakra bind is in effect, you are incredibly stable and well balanced when wielding your blademeld weapon.

You gain a +10 insight bonus on checks made to avoid being bull rushed, grappled, tripped, or overrun.

You also retain your Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even while flat-footed.

Heart Chakra: The weapon bearing the blademeld grants you improved health and well-being in combat as long as this chakra bind is in effect.

You gain bonus hit points equal to twice your character level (maximum +40).

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are; if you change the chakra bind of your blademeld, you lose them immediately.

Soul Chakra: Your blademeld weapon gains an alignment for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

When you activate the chakra bind, you can choose any single alignment component (chaos, evil, good, or law) that matches one of your own.

Thereafter, the choice cannot be changed until a new blademeld is shaped.

Against creatures with an alignment subtype (not just an alignment) opposed to the selected component, your weapon deals an extra 1d6 points of damage.

If the blademeld weapon would ordinarily deal extra damage to the opponent because of the bane special quality or any of the alignment weapon qualities, the extra damage dice stack.

For example, a lawful good incarnum blade who chooses this chakra bind could grant either the lawful or the good alignment to his blademeld weapon.

If he chose good, his weapon would deal an extra 1d6 points of damage to all creatures with the evil subtype (such as demons and devils), but not to an evil necromancer who does not have the evil subtype.

Rebind Blademeld (Su): At 3rd level, you gain the ability to change the chakra to which your blademeld is bound.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + your Constitution bonus (minimum 1/day).

Rebinding your blademeld is a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

At 5th level, you can change one or both of your blademeld's two chakra binds simultaneously as a standard action.

Dual Chakra Binding: Upon attaining 5th level, you can bind your blademeld to two of your chakras simultaneously.

The second chakra bind must be one that was gained at a lower incarnum blade level than the first.

For example, if the first chakra bind is throat, the second cannot be waist; it must be lesser or least.

You gain the special abilities from both chakra binds as though you were using each independently.

PLAYING AN INCARNUM BLADE

You are the next in a long line of heroes, and you feel the presence of those who came before you each time you swing your weapon.

You do battle not for riches, but for the glory of your victories.

Each time you defeat a foe, you enhance your own legacy, thereby increasing the power that your eventual death will add to the soul energy that fuels the weapons of incarnum blades everywhere.

Because you know that you must live up to the ideals of the hundreds of departed heroes whose spirits power your weapon, you never enter battle needlessly and you are not a ruthless killer on the battlefield.

You choose fights that pit you against worthy opponents, and you are honorable enough to give quarter if your opponent pleads for it.

Like all your fellow incarnum blades, you are a member of the Warriors Eternal—the mercenary company that holds the secrets of manipulating blademelds and maintains the Eternal Host—the source of power for all blademelds.

The Eternal Host is a mass of soul energy created from the spirits of great heroes who have perished in battle.

Whenever a member of the company falls in battle, the Warriors Eternal do their best to recover both the body and the focus weapon of the slain member.

By sacrificing these to the host of warrior spirits in a special ritual, they add the fallen soul to the Eternal Host, thereby increasing its power.

Most of the time, the leaders of the Warriors Eternal are content to let you gain glory through your own adventures, but you might be called to serve the organization at any time.

You might be asked to deliver military documents to a local ruler, or to serve a tour of duty along a war-torn front, or even to retrieve the corpses and weapons of fallen Warriors Eternal from the battlefields where they died.

The key ability that you gain from this prestige class is the ability to shape a blademeld.

As you attain higher levels, your blademeld becomes ever more versatile.

Eventually, you gain the ability to shift its power to whichever combat ability needs enhancement at the time. As your combat prowess increases, you garner favor with the Warriors Eternal, whose members might see fit to grant you support and assistance upon request.

COMBAT

The key aspect of your abilities is the versatility you gain from your blademeld.

Because this soulmeld can be applied to any melee weapon, you are not tied to one specific weapon throughout your adventuring career.

As soon as you become an incarnum blade, you can gain any one of three different combat benefits, depending upon which chakra bind you select.

Choosing which ability to manifest is an important daily decision that has a profound effect on your fighting style.

Your blademeld can also work in concert with any magical properties the selected weapon might have.

For instance, binding a blademeld keen falchion to your arms chakra lets you make the most of the weapon's high threat range.

In like manner, a holy weapon with a soul-bound blademeld would deal an extra 3d6 points of damage to creatures with the evil subtype.

At higher levels, your combat versatility increases, allowing you to react to any situation by shifting your chakra binds to gain the most useful abilities for the situation at hand.

Moving a chakra bind to your heart chakra can be as effective as a moderate-level healing spell, while dual-binding to your soul and hands chakra is an excellent way to maximize the damage you deal.

With the wide variety of abilities available, you can be prepared for just about any situation.

ADVANCEMENT

The leaders of the Warriors Eternal select only those who have already demonstrated heroic potential to join their company.

Perhaps they deem you a good candidate because you have already performed some quest at the company's behest, or perhaps it was because your deeds exemplify the company's ideals.

Whatever the reason, they make contact with you when they feel you are ready.

At that time, they discuss the concept of the Eternal Host with you, explaining how the souls of the greatest warriors of the past can help the heroes of today.

If you agree to allow the energy of your soul to join the Eternal Host upon your eventual death, you are accepted into their ranks and taught the secrets of the blademeld.

After your indoctrination, your life changes little.

As a member of the Warriors Eternal, you are encouraged to seek your own destiny in your own way just as you did before you joined the company, though you must report back periodically.

Now and then the leaders ask you to perform some specific task, but for the most part, you can choose your own path to glory.

Adventurers of all sorts are your natural companions, though you sometimes feel drawn to military service when the need is great.

As you attain higher levels, you might want to take additional feats that increase your essentia or improve your fighting ability.

Cobalt Charge and Cobalt Critical are especially useful for augmenting your combat prowess.

RESOURCES

Because the members of the Warriors Eternal pride themselves on being among the best-equipped fighting professionals around, its leaders make every effort to ensure that you have weapons and armor befitting your station. They routinely provide masterwork armor or weapons, and they can help broker deals for magic arms and armor on request.

If you fall in battle, rest assured that the other members of the company will make every effort to retrieve your corpse and, in most cases, have it restored to life.

Though raise dead and similar spells certainly delay a soul's absorption into the Eternal Host, the leaders of the Warriors Eternal know that heroes brought back from the dead are likely to perform even greater heroics in the future, thereby enriching the Eternal Host that much more when they meet their final ends.

Falling a second time to the same foe, however, is clear evidence that your destiny has been met, and it is time for your soul to enrich the Eternal Host.

INCARNUM BLADES IN THE WORLD

"Dependable and virtuous—I'll count on the Warriors Eternal any day to watch my back."

—Duke Ferlandir, Major General of the Allied Army of the Five Nations

The incarnum blade provides an excellent means of introducing the concept of incarnum into a campaign. An NPC incarnum blade makes an interesting opponent, and fighting or traveling with one can help to interest PCs in this and other incarnum-wielding prestige classes. Once PCs become aware of the Warriors Eternal, that organization can serve as a source for adventures and provide a structured method for PCs to gain access to incarnum.

The exact nature of the ritual used to absorb a fallen member of the Warriors Eternal into the Eternal Host is left for you as DM to create if needed.

The only requirement is that some part of the slain warrior's mortal remains be present, along with the last weapon on which he shaped a blademeld.

DAILY LIFE

Incarnum blades are encouraged to undertake the same sorts of missions and quests that they did prior to gaining their blademelds, and they can choose their own companions as they always have.

However, all incarnum blades must frequently report back to the Warriors Eternal or be labeled as rogues and hunted down.

NOTABLES

Baron Viktoran Malin currently leads the Warriors Eternal, and he alone holds the power to decide who is invited to join the elite cadre.

Although individual members are encouraged to adventure and make names for themselves in battle, Viktoran envisions a time in the not-to-distant future when he will marshal all his troops under his banner at once.

In these visions of glory—or as some claim, delusions of grandeur—he leads the mightiest army of living heroes ever assembled into battle, accompanied by the spirits of heroes from every age.

Viktoran believes that the power of the Eternal Host grows ever stronger as more spirits are added, and that he alone knows the secret to pulling forth all of its power. Thus, though he despises needless death, he sends members of the company on errands that are fraught with peril.

In his mind, the company cannot lose—either the member grows stronger by defeating the challenges before him, or the Eternal Host gains power from absorption of a new soul.

As much as the Warriors Eternal try to guard the secrets of the incarnum blade, a few members of the prestige class operate outside the company.

Occasionally, a member who has learned the power of the incarnum blade "goes rogue", disappearing and going into hiding because he has decided not to make the ultimate soul sacrifice after all.

A few such rogues still draw upon the Eternal Host to power their weapons, but doing so reveals their presence to the leader of the company, and Viktoran wastes no time in tracking them down.

The only rogue member the baron has not pursued is a former Warrior Eternal known as Belgir Thraan, whom Viktoran raised from a young age.

Though Belgir has committed the ultimate act of heresy by going rogue, Viktoran still views the youth as a lost son and cannot bring himself to order his destruction.

ORGANIZATION

The Warriors Eternal is a loose mercenary force with two primary goals—to gain prestige in battle, and to maintain the Eternal Host, the pool of soul energy that fuels blademelds.

In return for the secrets of the blademeld, these mighty warriors have sworn that someday their own souls will join those who have gone before and help to power the weapons of tomorrow's heroes.

Not all members of the Warriors Eternal wield the power of the incarnum blade—the lower ranks consist primarily of hopeful fighters and paladins petitioning for the privilege of joining the blademeld wielders.

The Warriors Eternal utilizes the services of initiates in a variety of ways.

As an elite mercenary company, the organization deploys its forces alongside the armies of various nations, providing them with needed reinforcements while garnering new recruits.

The leaders of the company might send new members out as couriers to deliver military agreements or offers.

Occasionally (and more frequently than members care to admit), an initiate might be dispatched to recover the body and weapon of a fallen comrade and bring them back for the ritual that will make the slain warrior part of the Eternal Host.

Because the Warriors Eternal is a mercenary company, its members have military ranks.

They are so independent, however, that such titles garner little more than cordial respect from other members.

Reporting to the baron are five captains, who have gained his favor through valorous deeds.

When a platoon or company of Warriors Eternal is marshaled for war, one of these captains leads the detachment, appointing lieutenants of his own choosing. Because the officers of the Warriors Eternal look favorably upon deeds of honor and valor, performance is the key to advancing within the ranks and obtaining the best assignments.

NPC REACTIONS

Veterans of wars gone by remember the heroism of previous Warriors Eternal, so they are likely to be friendly toward incarnum blades.

Soldiers and knights currently serving in armies also respect the prowess that the mercenary company represents.

Common folk, however, know little of such deeds beyond legends and rumors, so they tend not to associate those past heroics with present-day incarnum blades.

A rare few are privy to certain secrets of the Warriors Eternal through rumor or happenstance.

Perhaps they know that the body of a friend or family member who fell in service to the Warriors Eternal was spirited away for some ritual.

Perhaps a paladin or cleric in a particular town has been approached for membership and refused it because he believes that souls should be laid to rest properly, not reused in some macabre ritual.

Such individuals tend to be unfriendly to incarnum blades, believing the Warriors Eternal to be little more than a glorified death cult.

INCARNUM BLADE LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (history) might know of some past heroes who were incarnum blades, or something about the company known as the Warriors Eternal.

Such characters can also conduct research to learn more about incarnum blades and their organization.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below his bardic knowledge or Knowledge (history) check result.

DC 10: While many great warriors have borne mighty magic weapons, only a few have wielded weapons that seemed to be laced with otherworldly energy.

DC 15: The warriors known as incarnum blades can wrap their weapons in a strange soul energy that grants them power beyond that of most magic weapons.

Such people are members of the Warriors Eternal, an elite mercenary band.

DC 20: The incarnum blades have sworn to forfeit their very souls upon death to power the next generation of Warriors Eternal.

DC 30: The leader of the Warriors Eternal, Baron Malin, seeks to gather the souls of the noblest and bravest heroes of the land.

His purpose sounds just, but those heroes must die to sacrifice their souls.

A DC 20 Gather Information check made near a settlement or fortification where a contingent of the Warriors Eternal operates is sufficient to find a contact within the mercenary company if a character seeks employment or admission.

INCARNUM BLADES IN THE GAME

Incarnum blades and their organization can be easily added to an ongoing campaign.

The Warriors Eternal could suddenly become interested in the realm where the PCs are adventuring, or a local ruler might ask them to provide military support for defense or war.

This prestige class gives players a way to dabble in the incarnum magic system without worrying about the complexities of essentia and meld capacity.

Since the prestige class has only five levels, a warrior can advance in incarnum blade without deviating too far from a classic fighter progression, and he can still adopt a more career-defining prestige class later in his career.

ADAPTATION

Although the incarnum blade is designed with the incarnum magic system in mind, the prestige class can also fit neatly into any standard campaign.

Much of its flavor can remain the same even if incarnum does not exist, but against such a backdrop, the Eternal Host might be better played as a darker, more malevolent force.

Perhaps it grants the Warriors Eternal temporary power in this life in exchange for their souls, which it consumes when they die.

Or perhaps the company collects the corpses of heroes to feed the Eternal Host without the consent of the fallen.

NEW FEATS: INCARNUM FEATS

Incarnum feats are a great way for players of incarnum blades to make further use of the incarnum rules.

Feats such as Cobalt Critical, Cobalt Power, and Midnight Dodge would certainly appeal to a fighter or other combat-oriented character looking for a way to use incarnum to his advantage.

IRONSOU FORGEMASTER

"In my axe dwell the souls of my fathers."

—Bazut Stonehewer, ironsoul forgemaster

Skilled smiths can produce weapons of steel, and some can create weapons incorporating both steel and magic, but only the ironsoul forgemaster can craft a weapon that combines these arts with the shaping of soul essence.

An ironsoul forgemaster can produce a weapon that is physical, magical, and soulmelded all at the same time, and in his hands it becomes a potent armament indeed.

All ironsoul forgemasters are dwarven mastersmiths who possess skill at crafting arms and armor, but they are also great champions of the dwarven people.

Resolute and determined, they serve as preservers of ancient lore, guardians of sacred places, teachers of craft and skill, and holy servants of the dwarf deities.

Because they can forge and wield weapons of terrible power, they embody the dwarven belief that skill coupled with courage can defeat any foe.

BECOMING AN IRONSOU FORGEMASTER

Only a dwarf who is an accomplished armorsmith or weaponsmith can become an ironsoul forgemaster.

A character with skill points to spare (for example, a ranger or a rogue) can accumulate the necessary ranks in Craft without sacrificing other useful skills, but ultimately the forgemaster is not a skill-user.

A cleric, fighter, or other low-skill character with a good Intelligence score can also meet this requirement easily and is a much more appropriate candidate for the prestige class.

The second major requirement for entry is the ability to shape soulmelds.

Since one of the greatest benefits of this class is continuous improvement of the character's meldshaping abilities, taking a level of incarnate is a more effective way to meet this prerequisite than taking a feat that grants the ability to shape a soulmeld, or even taking a couple of levels in soulborn.

The ironsoul forgemaster is generally a better melee combatant than the typical incarnate, so the best candidate is one who combines fighter and incarnate levels, thereby gaining some fighting prowess as well as the ability to shape soulmelds that are useful in melee.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Dwarf.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Craft (armorsmithing or weaponsmithing) 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks.

Meldshaping: Ability to shape soulmelds.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft

CLASS FEATURES

As an ironsoul forgemaster, you create special bonds with the items that you craft.

As long as you were the original creator of the armor, shield, or weapon in question, it doesn't matter if someone else grants it an enhancement bonus or other special quality later—the item is still considered to be crafted by you.

All of the following are class features of the ironsoul forgemaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: At each ironsoul forgemaster level after 1st, you increase your meldshaper level, the number of soulmelds you can shape, the number of chakra binds you can create, and your essentia pool as if you had gained a level in the meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the ironsoul forgemaster level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as new tiers of chakra binds.

If you had more than one meldshaping class before becoming an ironsoul forgemaster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining your essentia pool, meldshaper level, and the number of soulmelds and chakra binds available.

Shield Bond (Su): At 1st level, you create a special bond with any shield that you craft.

This bond allows you to invest essentia in the shield as if it were a soulmeld.

Doing so grants you resistance 5 per point of invested essentia against acid, cold, electricity, fire, and sonic damage.

You gain this ability only while using the shield for defense, not while carrying it on your back or in a container.

If you stop using the shield, you lose the ability until you use it again, though you can reinvest the essentia in another soulmeld or ability on your next turn, as normal.

Secrets of the Forge (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain Craft Magic Arms and Armor (see page 81 of the Player's Handbook) as a bonus feat, even if you do not meet the prerequisites.

Your effective caster level for the purpose of crafting magic arms and armor is three times your ironsoul forgemaster level.

For example, a 5th-level incarnate/2nd-level ironsoul forgemaster is treated as a 6th-level caster for the purpose of creating magic arms and armor.

These effective levels also stack with any other caster levels that might apply.

You must still meet any other prerequisites for creating the desired item, such as other feats or the casting of specific spells.

This stipulation might mean that you need the assistance of other characters to create a particular item.

Forge Lore (Ex): When you attain 3rd level, the soul energy flowing through your mind and body establishes a connection to the souls of your people's ancestral forgemasters.

This soul-to-soul communion grants you an insight bonus equal to your ironsoul forgemaster level on all Craft (armorsmithing) and Craft (weaponsmithing) checks.

Chakra Binds: Beginning at 4th level, you can bind your soulmelds or magic items to your arms chakra, in addition to any other chakras you have available.

When you attain 6th level, your waist chakra becomes available for chakra binds.

At 8th level, you can bind soulmelds or magic items to your shoulders chakra, and at 10th level, you can bind them to your heart chakra.

Armor Bond (Su): At 5th level, you create a special bond with any suit of armor that you craft.

This bond allows you to invest essentia in the armor as if it were a soulmeld.

Doing so grants you damage reduction $n/-$, where n equals the points of essentia invested.

This damage reduction stacks with any damage reduction of the same kind granted by the armor.

For example, if you invest 1 point of essentia into your self-crafted adamantine full plate armor, you would have DR $4/-$ (3 from the armor +1 from essentia).

You gain this ability only while wearing the armor in the usual way.

If you stop wearing it or if it is destroyed, you lose the ability until you put it on again, though you can reinvest the essentia in another soulmeld or ability on your next turn as normal.

Weapon Bond (Su): At 9th level, you create a special bond with any weapon that you craft.

This bond allows you to invest essentia in the weapon as if it were a soulmeld.

Doing so grants you an insight bonus equal to twice the number of points of invested essentia on your damage rolls. If you have at least 1 point of essentia invested in the weapon, it also dazes any living opponent you strike with it for 1 round (Fortitude negates, DC 10 + invested essentia + Con modifier).

You gain this ability only while wielding the weapon in the usual way.

If you stop wielding it, you lose the ability until you pick it up again, though you can reinvest the essentia in another soulmeld or ability on your next turn as normal.

PLAYING AN IRNSOUL FORGEMASTER

You are a stalwart champion of the dwarven people.

Though you are valiant in battle and rarely shy away from a fight, you know that your skill with hammer and meld is far and away your best weapon.

Like the other irnsoul forgemasters who came before you, your true power lies not in the strength of your arm, but in the depth of your skill and lore.

You understand better than most that although ferocity in battle certainly has its place, only a fool goes to war unprepared.

Every time a dwarf fails to provide himself with the best tools for the job at hand, he invites failure.

Your hard-earned skill at making arms and armor has made you deliberate, patient, and relentless in pursuit of whatever project you undertake—including making war on the enemies of the dwarven race.

Before undertaking any task, you carefully size up the job, decide which tools, tactics, or weapons will help you succeed, and then apply your solution in a methodical and efficient manner.

You regard a battle as nothing more or less than a job that must be undertaken correctly, with the right weapon and the right approach.

You rarely lose sight of why you're fighting or what you're trying to accomplish in a given battle.

Like your fellow irnsoul forgemasters, you belong to the Ironsoul Guild (known as the bolzral alurdar in Dwarven).

This hidden fellowship crosses clan lines and even kingdoms to unite dwarves who possess the skill to combine metalcraft with magic and soul force.

Upon joining the guild, you swore never to reveal the secret lore of your craft to outsiders, to aid fellow guild members in need, and to be a faithful servant of Moradin in your travels, your battles, and your work.

COMBAT

Your irnsoul forgemaster class abilities naturally lend themselves to carrying a shield, wearing armor, and wielding a melee weapon, leading you to act as a melee combatant first and a meldshaper second.

Much like a melee-oriented cleric, your baseline combat effectiveness is significantly lower than that of a fighter or barbarian of equivalent experience.

However, the use of soulmelds lets you approach the fighter's ability to deal out damage and also grants you some versatility and flexibility that he doesn't have.

Your chakra binds are a key part of your combat effectiveness, so make sure you are shaping soulmelds that play to your strengths and minimize your weaknesses.

If your meldshaping ability stems from previous levels of incarnate, the bluesteel bracers meld is an excellent choice.

A vitality belt becomes quite useful when you gain the ability to bind soulmelds to your waist chakra, and adamant pauldrons or mantle of flame makes good use of your shoulders chakra if you expect to be in melee combat.

You can also gain significant combat benefits from certain soulmelds even if they aren't chakra-bound.

For example, airstep sandals or cerulean sandals can help you overcome your natural lack of speed and reach opponents who might otherwise be safe from your melee attacks.

When you attain 9th level, you gain access to your weapon bond—perhaps the most powerful ability an irnsoul forgemaster has.

Though it doesn't let you deal an inordinate amount of damage, the ability to daze any living creature you strike is very potent, since few opponents can afford to be rendered inactive for a full round in the middle of a fight.

ADVANCEMENT

Since irnsoul forgemasters are few in number, they naturally keep their eyes open for other dwarves who demonstrate the rare combination of talents necessary to learn the deepest secrets of the forge.

If you are a skilled weaponsmith or armorsmith who can shape melds, the forgemasters of your home stronghold or native clan are likely to approach you at some point and invite you to join their ranks.

In communities where no irnsoul forgemasters are currently practicing, the clerics of Moradin keep watch for potential students of the forge and send word to the nearest forgemaster when a likely candidate appears.

Once accepted into the Ironsoul Guild, you study alongside an experienced forgemaster off and on for several months. Between adventures, you make your way back to the clanhold and work beside your mentor, learning the details of his art.

Such hands-on apprenticeship is not strictly necessary to learn the craft; irnsoul forgemasters can divine the secrets of the fellowship independently through their own mastery of incarnum and smithcraft.

However, experienced members of the guild place a great deal of importance on your "genealogy" of apprenticeship. For example, if you worked with Telzar, who worked with Adrulzul, who was the favored apprentice of the legendary master Idrilzgar, the other members of the guild automatically recognize you as a smith of some skill.

Because earning the trust, confidence, and respect of your fellows is difficult without the apprenticeship process, irnsoul forgemasters are loath to forego that tradition.

You have comparatively few choices to make as you advance your career, since meldshapers don't have to pick and choose which spells to learn.

You might, however, consider taking the occasional level in fighter, ranger, or rogue to reinforce your fighting ability and skill array.

A level or two in either cleric or wizard might also be helpful, granting you access to specific spells that you can incorporate in the weapons and armor you craft.

RESOURCES

As an irnsoul forgemaster, you are as skilled at crafting weapons as a spellcaster who takes the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat.

Thus, your best resource is your ability to custom-design the arms and armor you want to use.

Because you can make such items for yourself, you have to pay only the cost to create rather than the market price of the desired item.

For example, the market price for a +3 longsword is 18,315 gp, but you can make one in nine days for only 9,315 gp, plus some experience points.

Make liberal use of this benefit by manufacturing the best weapons and armor you can and using them with pride.

Don't be afraid to sell your weapon-making skill to your adventuring companions either.

If you make items for your friends, you can give them a 20% or 30% break on the market price and still keep a comfortable profit for yourself.

You rarely want for money or equipment, since you can make the items you need and support yourself through your craft.

Largely for that reason, the guild doesn't supply cash or items to its members at all.

However, the clerics of Moradin hold your skills in the highest regard, so you can expect a 25% discount on spellcasting services or cleric-crafted magic items in the Soul Forger's temples.

In exchange, you are expected to lend your considerable skill to crafting weapons and armor for Moradin's servants from time to time.

IRNSOUL FORGEMASTERS IN THE WORLD

"What higher praise can we render the Soul Forger than to use the skills he has taught us to make items of beauty and strength? And who is better fitted to render that honor than the bolzral alurdar?"

The masters of the Iron Soul speak for all of us with each ringing blow of their hammers."

—Fredu Goldbeard, High Cleric of Moradin

The ironsoul forgemaster is an outstanding example of the dwarves' legendary skill at fashioning weapons and arms of power.

Though dwarf clerics and wizards who select the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat create magic items, the most distinctive and powerful dwarven weapons are the handiwork of battlesmiths (see Races of Stone) or ironsoul forgemasters.

More so than most characters, the ironsoul forgemaster stands for the traditional dwarven ideals: valor, skill in battle, and the deep lore of creation.

Over the course of time, an ironsoul forgemaster might create dozens of magic items that can influence the course of the campaign.

Not only can he bestow the priceless gift of a handmade weapon on a protégé, ally, or cohort, but his skill can form the basis for adventures.

For example, imagine the ironsoul forgemaster's wrath when the dwarflord for whom he forged a unique sword is murdered and the weapon is stolen.

DAILY LIFE

Although an ironsoul forgemaster spends most of his time at his work, his adventuring career does not have to end when he takes up the smith's hammer and tongs.

Since ironsoul forgemasters are highly regarded advisors to clerics of Moradin and clanlords alike, they are asked to serve as envoys or ambassadors to other races and peoples. Such characters are also keenly aware of the great works of the past, and therefore eager to investigate any rumors or hints of long-lost dwarf-realms, dwarven treasures now in the hands of evil monsters, and secret lore hidden in puzzles or riddles.

Finally, the ironsoul forgemaster's combat prowess makes him a natural champion of the dwarven people.

Therefore, he can be called to defend dwarvenkind against threats ranging from orcs to dragons to giants.

Many adventurers take up their perilous calling because they have no other way to make money, but an ironsoul forgemaster's skill allows him to live comfortably in a community of almost any size.

Typically, he establishes a foundry, smithy, or ironworks in a clanhold or dwarven district and retires there to create when he is not engaged in the service of Moradin or the dwarven people.

As his fame grows, other metalworkers and smiths might come to work at his side and learn from him, expanding his business and his fame.

When the ironsoul forgemaster is away, these apprentices and journeymen continue to turn out fine work on their own, and his smithy prospers.

NOTABLES

Adrulzul Fireheart is perhaps the most famous ironsoul forgemaster alive today.

Almost one hundred fifty years ago, he traveled to the Elemental Plane of Fire to study the secret lore of the azer smiths.

In the decades since his return, he has personally tutored dozens of the most skillful and talented dwarf smiths alive today.

He has also forged a number of powerful weapons and magic suits of armor, which are now in the hands of various heroes and nobles all across the land.

Adrulzul is said to be exceptionally selective in taking on apprentices and in deciding for whom to make his matchless weapons, and he requires oaths of service and secrecy from all he chooses to aid.

ORGANIZATION

The Ironsoul Guild is led by a conclave of grand masters who meet once every seven years to exchange new insights into the secret lore of metalworking and weaponsmithing. This staunchly conservative group is highly suspicious of other races, and its members look down upon dwarves—even younger members of their own guild—who associate too closely with nondwarves.

The grand masters encourage junior ironsoul forgemasters to support Moradin's clergy instead of spreading their works to other races, and to be voices of caution and watchfulness in their own communities.

Longevity of membership carries tremendous weight in the hierarchical fellowship of the bolzral alurdar.

Every seven years, the Grand Masters Conclave bestows the title of high master on ironsoul forgemasters who have been with the guild more than one hundred years and, in the joint opinion of the conclave, earned access to that exalted title through skill and deed.

In like manner, they elevate any high master who has shown outstanding skill, service, and devotion to the dwarven people to the level of grand master.

However, the grand masters have a habit of delaying the elevation of younger ironsoul forgemasters who seem a little too adventurous or friendly with other races.

Since ironsoul forgemasters are widely dispersed throughout the scattered dwarven realms and strongholds, most spend the bulk of their time advancing the organization's agenda on their own.

They do not normally report to superiors in the organization or undertake missions at the behest of higher-ranking members.

However, when two ironsoul forgemasters happen to meet, they confer at length, relating news of their own activities as well as those of other guild members with whom they are acquainted.

Since ironsoul forgemasters occasionally travel from realm to realm, this word-of-mouth system keeps all but the most isolated members reasonably well informed about the doings of their guild-brothers.

NPC REACTIONS

Dwarves hold the ironsoul forgemaster in very high regard indeed.

As the personification of the dwarven ideals about courage, skill, and wisdom, he is regarded in much the same way as a high-ranking cleric of Moradin would be.

Dwarves therefore begin with a friendly attitude toward a known ironsoul forgemaster, though the duergar are a notable exception.

Quick to resent the successes of others, the gray dwarves claim that the bolzral alurdar stole the secrets of the forge from the clergy of Laduguer long ago.

For this reason, an ironsoul forgemaster who falls into the hands of the duergar can expect only a long, slow death. Battlesmiths and ironsoul forgemasters enjoy a friendly rivalry.

When such characters meet, they loudly and aggressively debate the virtues of each method for working metal over many tankards of ale.

Clerics of Moradin, because of their traditional cooperation with the ironsoul forgemasters, almost always begin with a friendly or helpful attitude toward such a character.

The vast majority of nondwarves have no idea that an ironsoul forgemaster is more than a highly skilled dwarf crafter, so they hold no preconceptions about members of the class.

Therefore, creatures inclined to be friendly to dwarves tend to be friendly to an ironsoul forgemaster, and those inclined to be hostile to dwarves are hostile to him.

IRONSOU FORGEMASTER LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (local) skill can research the ironsoul forgemasters to learn more about them and their guild.

DC 10: Some dwarven master smiths bestow the blessings of their ancestors' souls on the arms and armor they craft.

DC 15: Such master smiths are known as ironsoul forgemasters.

They are skilled at shaping soulmelds and have a special affinity for bestowing magical powers on the weapons or armor they craft with their own hands.

You can't find a more talented arms or armor crafter than an ironsoul forgemaster.

DC 20: In Dwarven, the ironsoul forgemasters are known as the bolzral alurdar.

Members of their guild dwell in dwarven citadels and serve as the keepers of dwarf craft-secrets.

Members of the bolzral alurdar are especially dedicated to the worship of Moradin, and they associate with the Soul Forger's clerics and champions.

DC 30: Bazut Stonehewer of the Gianthammer Hold is an ironsoul forgemaster.

He's looking for a long-lost magic warhammer called Trollbane that was made by the famous smith Adrulzul Fireheart.

A dwarf character can find an ironsoul forgemaster without too much trouble by asking around any good-sized dwarven community.

A nondwarf must succeed on a DC 20 Gather Information check in a dwarven community or temple of Moradin to get any clues leading to an ironsoul forgemaster.

IRONSOU FORGEMASTERS IN THE GAME

Any time your players decide to commission a specific magic weapon or suit of magic armor, you have an excellent opportunity to introduce an ironsoul forgemaster into the campaign—especially if the PCs insist on obtaining the best work they can find.

Ironsoul forgemasters are also likely to appear wherever dwarven interests are at stake.

For example, an ironsoul forgemaster NPC might try to check the efforts of heroes who are seeking a long-lost dwarven stronghold so that the secrets of the dwarves stay buried.

Or he could ally himself with the heroes to combat an evil that threatens both a dwarven realm and a nearby human one.

An ironsoul forgemaster is a "dwarf's dwarf"—a physical embodiment of much that is admirable in the race. Such a character is not a good spellcaster, but he is good enough at combat to take the place of a fighter, barbarian, ranger, or paladin.

If you have an ironsoul forgemaster in your party, be sure you pace your campaign so that he has plenty of time available to craft masterwork weapons and create magic items.

If you never allow your player characters a few weeks of "down time" between adventures, you deny the ironsoul forgemaster one of his key abilities—namely, crafting signature weapons and armor.

ADAPTATION

In the FORGOTTEN REALMS campaign setting, ironsoul forgemasters dwell among the master armorers of Citadel Adbar and work in the vast foundries of the Great Rift.

In the EBERRON campaign setting, the halls of Clan Mroranon are home to a bolzral alurdar brotherhood.

The key benefits of this prestige class are the ability to shape soulmelds and the connection the character has to the weapons and armor that he crafts.

While the ironsoul forgemaster is a natural fit for a dwarf character, you could change (or drop) the racial and alignment requirements to make the prestige class available to a variety of other characters.

For example, you could make the ironsoul forgemaster neutral or evil in alignment and redesign the bolzral alurdar as a secretive clan of duergar smiths who provide magic weapons to a variety of evil creatures.

You could make the prestige class specific to elves and use it to create a high order of elf smiths.

Or you could reduce the reliance on personally crafted items and fit the prestige class to any incarnate who wants to improve his skills at melee combat.

TROLLBANE

One of the more famous works of the legendary ironsoul forgemaster Adrulzul Fireheart, Trollbane is a +3 adamantine flaming burst giantbane warhammer.

Three times per day, a wielder who has either an essentia pool or the ability to bind a soulmeld to his hands chakra can use haste as the spell (CL 9th; self only).

When this ability is activated, the weapon begins to smoke with a weird, blue, flickering flame whenever a troll comes within 100 feet of it.

This flame is harmless to the wielder or anyone else handling the weapon.

Strong evocation; CL 9th; Craft Magic Arms and Armor, essentia pool, summon monster I, haste, plus flame blade, flame strike, or fireball; Price 86,000 gp; Cost 43,156 gp; Weight 5 lb.

NECROCARNATE

"Death is but the first of the agonies that I will visit upon your soul."

—Igalla Pallasi, necrocarnate

Dealers in death and torturers of souls, necrocarnates number among the most evil creatures in any world. Skilled in the arts of meldcraft, these twisted beings once drew upon the soul energy of incarnum. Their unbridled lust for power at any price has led them into dark rituals that corrupt soul energy into necrocarnum.

Necrocarnum is a dark reflection of incarnum, whose use gives even the most evil incarnates and totemists pause. An evil incarnate might draw upon the soul energies of evil creatures and planes, but a user of necrocarnum gains her power from the torture of good souls.

Indeed, the necrocarnate subjects pure souls to agony and torment far beyond the limits possible in mortal life, draining them of their very essence in pursuit of her hideous power.

BECOMING A NECROCARNATE

Almost all necrocarnates begin their careers as evil incarnates, but set their sights on the path of the necrocarnate early.

To more quickly master the power of necrocarnum, a candidate for this prestige class should take the Necrocarnum Acolyte feat as early as possible and seek out the Union of Darkened Souls at the first opportunity. Only a few meldshapers of other alignments dare to venture into the shadowy world of necrocarnum.

They might seek out its power after some great personal tragedy, or after a fiend has led them down a path of darkness and depravity, or after exposure to some other life-altering force or event.

Such individuals fall so far into depravity and evil that they lose any connections with good that they once had and take up the mantle of the necrocarnate.

Whether they come to the prestige class by choice or by fate, however, these fallen meldshapers are just as destructive and cruel as any necrocarnate who was evil from the start.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any evil.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 5 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feat: Necrocarnum Acolyte.

Meldshaping: Ability to shape soulmelds, ability to bind soulmelds to the crown, feet, and hands chakras.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft

CLASS FEATURES

As a necrocarnate, you improve as a meldshaper and gain special benefits when using soulmelds with the necrocarnum descriptor, which are known as necrocarnum melds.

You gain no essentia for attaining higher levels, but you do gain several special abilities that allow you to trap the soul energy of dying creatures and turn it to your own ends. All of the following are class features of the necrocarnate prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Harvest Soul (Su): Unlike a traditional meldshaper who relies entirely on his own pool of soul energy to power his soulmelds, you tap the soul energy of others for your power.

Beginning at 1st level, you can perform a short ritual to capture the soul energy of a newly dead corpse.

This ritual requires 1 minute of uninterrupted concentration plus the corpse of a living creature that has been dead for no longer than 1 hour per necrocarnate level you possess.

At the end of the ritual, you gain a number of essentia points equal to one-half your necrocarnate level (rounded up).

This benefit lasts for 24 hours.

No corpse can be used for this purpose more than once.

At 10th level, you can perform this ritual as a full-round action that provokes attacks of opportunity.

Improved Meldshaper Level: Each time you gain a level of necrocarnate, you also increase your meldshaper level as if you had gained a level in the meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the necrocarnate level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as additional melds, extra chakra binds, increased essentia, or new tiers of chakra binds.

Necrocarnum Soulshield (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can use the tortured souls that form necrocarnum soulmelds to help you avoid danger.

By tapping into this soul energy, you gain a profane bonus on all saving throws.

The value of this bonus equals the number of necrocarnum soulmelds that you currently have shaped.

This ability is usable a number of times per day equal to one-half your necrocarne level.

Chakra Binds: As you attain higher levels, you can bind your soulmelds and magic items to additional chakras, gaining new powers based on the combination chosen.

At 3rd level, you can bind your soulmelds or magic items to your lesser chakras (arms, brow, and shoulders), in addition to any other chakras you have available.

When you attain 8th level, your greater chakras (throat and waist) become available for chakra binds.

At 11th level, you can bind soulmelds or magic items to your heart chakra, and at 13th level, you can bind them to your soul chakra.

Extra Chakra Bind: Upon attaining 4th level, you gain one additional chakra bind.

At 8th level and again at 12th level, you gain one more extra chakra bind.

Extra Soulmelds: When you attain 4th level, the number of soulmelds that you can have shaped increases by one.

You gain this benefit again at 7th, 10th, and 13th level.

Essentia Trap (Su): Starting at 5th level, you can capture some of the soul energy from a creature that has just died and use it to give yourself a short-term increase in power. To activate this ability, you must be within 100 feet of the creature, have line of sight to it, and take an immediate action no more than 1 round after its death.

The essentia trap grants you a number of essentia points equal to one-half the creature's character level, which you can invest as part of the same action used to activate the ability.

This ability is usable once per round, and the extra essentia lasts until the end of your next turn.

Necrocarnum Zombie Master (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, you take only half the normal damage (1/2 the zombie's HD, minimum 1) when using the necrocarnum circlet crown chakra bind (see page 78) to create a necrocarnum zombie.

At 13th level, you can have up to two necrocarnum zombies animated simultaneously; the maximum HD of each zombie equals your necrocarne level.

Furthermore, each zombie's essentia pool increases by an amount equal to the points of essentia invested in your necrocarnum circlet.

Expanded Necrocarnum Meld Capacity (Ex): When you attain 9th level, the essentia capacity of each necrocarnum meld you shape increases by 1.

This increase stacks with the increase provided by the incarnate's expanded soulmeld capacity.

PLAYING A NECROCARNATE

As a necrocarne, you value personal power beyond all else.

You are willing to torture the souls of other creatures to harvest such power.

Because necrocarnum is formed from the agony of innocent souls, its use is an evil act.

That fact matters little to you, since you long ago renounced the pursuit of truth and light.

While many necrocarneates belong to a shadowy organization known as the Union of Darkened Souls, others prefer to follow their own agendas.

Thus, you are free to choose whether to go your own way or join with others who share your warped power.

COMBAT

You approach combat in much the same way other meldshapers do, using soulmelds to adjust your offensive and defensive capabilities according to the opposition you face.

Unlike other meldshapers, you also take every opportunity to turn your foes' soul energy into fuel for your own dark powers.

By the same token, you are perfectly willing to sacrifice the lives of your servants and allies to better your own combat prowess, especially if you control a necrocarnum zombie.

You also take a certain delight in horrifying your opponents into surrendering by using your necrocarnum zombie to demonstrate the fate that awaits them should they lose.

You employ a two-part approach to defeating a particular group of foes.

During the first encounter, you concentrate on destroying at least one of the opponents while observing the tactics and capabilities of the others.

You have no compunctions about fleeing the encounter and abandoning your necrocarnum zombie should the opposition appear too difficult to defeat.

When next you meet the same group, however, you secure a different zombie and choose soulmelds with an eye toward exploiting any weaknesses that your foes displayed in the first encounter.

At higher levels, you can refine this tactic even more.

By gathering information about your foes before meeting them in combat, you can prepare appropriate soulmelds for the first conflict.

ADVANCEMENT

You might have been drawn down the path of the soul-tormentor because you were already in service to a powerful necrocarne, or your descent into depravity might have been the result of some personal tragedy.

However you first came to wield necrocarnum, you have hungered for more of its power ever since.

If you have a mentor, the relationship is fraught with distrust.

Though you need his instruction to increase your own personal power and he needs a willing and able servant, you both know that the arrangement cannot last.

At some point, one of you will try to slay the other, or you will strike out on your own.

Because of the hatred with which the rest of the world views necrocarneates, you must protect yourself from a wide variety of foes.

The more power you gain, the more likely it becomes that adventurers or members of some good organization will seek to stop you from harvesting souls and using necrocarnum soulmelds.

Regardless of your foes' combat prowess and dedication, your great versatility lets you adjust your abilities to meet almost any challenge.

By acquiring a necrocarnum zombie with particularly potent abilities, shaping soulmelds that exploit the weaknesses of a particular group of foes, and acquiring magic items with the right mix of abilities, you can emerge from the most trying of encounters with not only victory, but also the souls of your opponents.

RESOURCES

Reaching out to your fellow necrocarneates for aid would only make it clear that you were weak, and therefore easy prey for any who wanted more power.

For that reason, you seldom ask other necrocarnates for aid, nor do they make many requests of you.

For much the same reasons, you would not even think of contacting the Union of Darkened Souls for aid except as a last resort, since you would be far more likely to end up as someone else's necrocarum zombie than to receive the support you wanted.

NECROCARNATES IN THE WORLD

"No act is more evil, and no action less justified, than the torture of a soul.

Those foul creatures who deal with necrocarum are beyond redemption, beyond remorse.

I remain forever their most implacable foe."

—Meredythe Gorvabyn, Pentifex Monolith

Necrocarnates face suspicion and persecution anytime they encounter someone who understands the evil force behind their powers and abilities.

If members of this prestige class espouse any common purpose at all, it is the pursuit of individual power.

Because they put this single goal above all else in life, necrocarnates have little interest in fitting into society or working with others.

Since the use of necrocarum is an evil act, necrocarnates are best used as villains—or at best hostile NPCs.

A member of this prestige class makes a worthy foe for player characters, and encountering one can provide a strong impetus for PCs to learn about incarnum.

Furthermore, the fact that necrocarnates do not have to belong to an organization gives you as DM the freedom to include an NPC necrocarnate in almost any setting.

DAILY LIFE

A necrocarnate conducts her business by stealth and subterfuge; she is suspicious of everyone, including any temporary allies she might have.

If her use of necrocarum is discovered, she is likely to face opposition from adventurers or other stalwarts bent on driving her away from normal communities.

NOTABLES

Necrocarnates recognize Akker Zemd (NE male human incarnate 7/necrocarnate 8) as the foremost member of the Union of Darkened Souls.

The organization has little in the way of rules or official structure, but its members follow the will of Akker.

From his secret lair beneath the sewers of a great human city, Akker continuously seeks to increase his own power and that of the union.

No other necrocarnates share this dwelling, but rumor holds that he has hordes of necrocarum zombies as guardians and servants.

Unlike other necrocarnates, who see only the opportunity for a moment of extra power in a fellow necrocarnate's weakness, Akker is willing to offer protection and aid to lesser necrocarnates—provided that they bind themselves fully to his cause.

ORGANIZATION

Because necrocarnates are by nature a suspicious and treacherous lot, working together does not come easily to them.

Some, however, have chosen to band together into a loose society known as the Union of Darkened Souls.

Necrocarnates might choose to join this organization for many reasons, not the least of which is protection against those good creatures who understand the nature of necrocarum and have sworn to hunt down its users.

The origins of this organization are as shadowy and sinister as necrocarum itself.

Few know of its early days, but those who do whisper of an ancient and powerful creature that taught the first necrocarnates their craft and drew them together.

Necrocarnates believe that this being still exists and serves to this day as the driving force behind the union, guiding the hand of Akker Zemd.

On the rare occasions that they speak freely, these sages of necrocarum lore claim that the shadowy master behind the union desires nothing less than the destruction or corruption of every mortal soul.

Some claim that it is a powerful lich—the last survivor of some long-dead empire who has been driven insane by millennia of undeath.

Others insist that the union is just another facet of a plot designed by the devious mindflayers, and still others hint that some powerful demon lord or evil deity is behind the organization.

But whatever its origin, the union is clearly a force for utter evil built on a mutual lust for power.

NPC REACTIONS

Only evil creatures ever have friendly attitudes toward necrocarnates.

In normal society, they are shunned and even hunted by those who understand the evil that they represent.

Even people who do not understand necrocarum or the evil nature of its use are repulsed by the twisting, haunted visages that swim visibly beneath the surface of every necrocarum meld.

Necrocarnates wishing to enjoy the comforts and resources of ordinary civilized cities must conceal their activities, refrain from shaping necrocarum melds, and deal only with closely trusted associates or servants too cowed by their power to oppose them.

For this reason, necrocarnates looking for even a modicum of stability seek out communities and nations of evil creatures.

The risks inherent in living deep within a mind flayer enclave or among the dark towers of a drow city are great, but necrocarnates prefer to operate in the open among those who understand their ways than to endure the pressures of constant concealment.

Necrocarnates face a world full of enemies.

The most significant and organized of these is the Pentifex Order, an organization of incarnates, soulborn, totemists, and members of other classes who have dedicated their lives to preventing the misuse of incarnum.

To them, the use of necrocarum—the very antithesis of all that they strive to protect and preserve—is the greatest evil imaginable.

The Pentifex Order is described fully beginning on page 209.

Other enemies can arise from nearly every conceivable corner of the campaign world.

Adventurers might seek out a necrocarnate in his lair with the express purpose of putting an end to his evil.

A necrocarnate discovered living in normal society might become the target of military forces ranging from a town militia to an organized unit of the kingdom's regular army.

The most subtle and dangerous opposition, however, comes not from the ranks of good creatures, but from other necrocarnates scheming and plotting to gain ever more personal power, even at the expense of their own allies.

Necrocarnates sometimes join armies of evil creatures because nearby combat provides an opportunity for them to increase their own power.

Both the actual battles in which such an army engages and the infighting that invariably occurs within the ranks keep the necrocarnate supplied with fresh corpses from which to draw soul energy as well as a never-ending supply of potential necrocarnum zombies.

NECROCARNATE LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (arcana) skill can research necrocarnates, necrocarnum, or the Union of Darkened Souls to learn more about them.

DC 10: Necrocarnum is a dark and twisted form of incarnum.

Though it is a source of great power, its use is corrupt and evil.

DC 15: Those who use necrocarnum are called necrocarnates.

These evil men and women have great meldshaping ability, but they are dangerous and reclusive.

Some, though not all, belong to an organization known as the Union of Darkened Souls.

DC 20: Skilled necrocarnates can shape necrocarnum into many different melds, including one that allows them to flood a corpse with raw necrocarnum.

Such corpses rise as necrocarnum zombies—horrid undead that are capable of using soul energy on their own.

DC 30: The use of necrocarnum is evil because it involves the torment of souls.

Shaping or using a necrocarnum meld causes great pain to the pure souls tapped for energy.

NECROCARNATES IN THE GAME

Necrocarnates make excellent recurring villains.

With their diverse and sinister soulmelds, they offer dozens of intriguing combat options for use against PCs.

In addition, the fact that each PC's death means more power for the necrocarnate increases the threat posed by the encounter and ensures that the villain is a memorable one.

The horrific visuals of necrocarnum soulmelds also add atmosphere to any combat involving these dark wielders of stolen soul energy.

Necrocarnates know that they face opposition from good creatures who understand the nature of their powers, so they work hard to prepare escape routes in advance and magic that allows them to flee quickly when needed.

Indeed, necrocarnates regard the ability to choose when and where a conflict takes place as an essential component of their personal power rather than a mark of cowardice.

ADAPTATION

Since necrocarnates are irrevocably evil, they are not suitable as player characters in most campaigns.

By stripping away the visual effects from necrocarnum soulmelds and renaming a few key abilities, however, you could create a parallel prestige class dedicated to the preservation and protection of pure souls.

This mirror-image class might use a substance called vivicarnum—a pure and holy version of necrocarnum channeled from the purest of unborn souls.

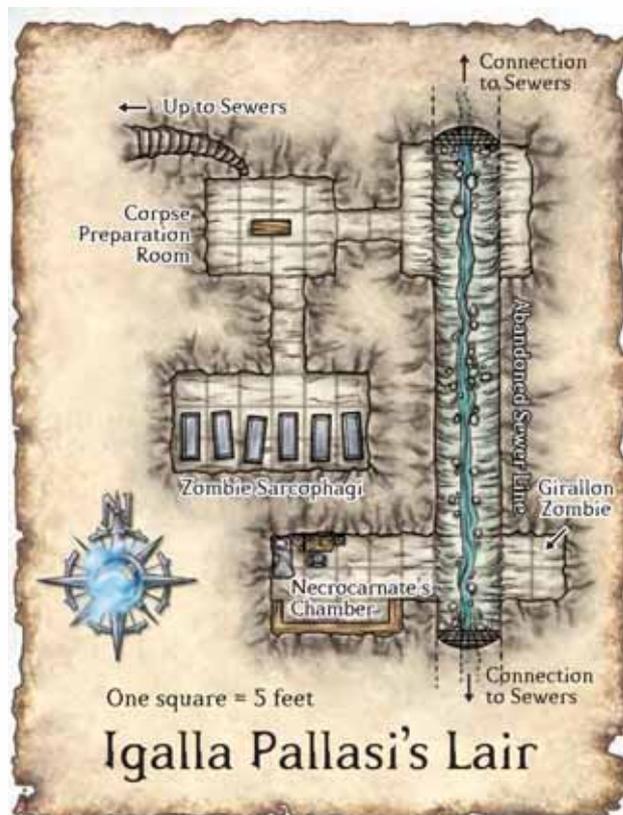

The actual mechanics of the class could remain the same, and even necrocarnum zombies could still be used.

Simply rename them (call them “reborn”, for example) and recast them as holy vessels given a second brief chance at life by the miracle of vivicarnum.

SAPPHIRE HIERARCH

“All is One—this single, unavoidable law governs the whole of the cosmos.

The myriad forms of flesh, the countless wonders of magic, the universal soul, matter and energy—all these concepts are merely derivations of this single, universal principle.

By suppressing the empty resistance of chaos, we hasten the day when all returns to the One, and by banishing the taint of chaos from our flesh and embracing the law that unites body, mind, and soul, we perfect the universe.”

—Raezid, Supreme Hierarchy of the Sapphire Eidolon

In the monster-haunted wasteland of the Sulhaut Mountains, an ancient temple of weathered gray stone crowns the barren, black rock of an icy mountaintop. Within this structure stands an incredible sphere of blue, crystallized incarnum that measures a full 30 feet in diameter.

Illumined from depths that no being has ever plumbed, it has a life of its own and an intelligence almost alien in its purity.

This sphere is the Sapphire Eidolon, an emblem of perfect universal law that is said to be older than the cosmos.

No being manifested this sphere—in fact, no being could manifest it—and yet it exists.

According to legend, it fell to the ground from the stars and took up its position on the mountaintop under its own power.

The ancient temple that houses the Sapphire Eidolon is also home to an order of fervent priests of law whose ranks include clerics, incarnates, monks, and fighters.

Known as sapphire hierarchs, the elite members of this order defend the temple, contemplate the mysteries of the Sapphire Eidolon, and seek to fulfill its single command by perfecting themselves and bringing order out of chaos wherever they find it.

They are zealous crusaders against supernatural chaos who battle with single-minded determination against such creatures as demons, slaadi, and the servants of chaotic deities.

BECOMING A SAPPHIRE HIERARCH

In pursuit of the truth that is pure order, sapphire hierarchs combine the use of divine spells with the shaping of incarnum.

The easiest way to become a sapphire hierarch is to take levels in both cleric and incarnate.

A character can also gain access to this prestige class by taking levels in soulborn rather than incarnate, or by taking feats that enable her to meet the meldshaping and essentia pool requirements, but these options are less than optimal. Since the chief strength of the sapphire hierarch is the combination of a full divine spellcasting progression with a full meldshaping progression, a character who takes at least the minimum levels necessary in both cleric and incarnate can make the best use of what this class offers.

A sapphire hierarch's cleric abilities are more dependent on her ability scores than her meldshaper abilities are.

A high Wisdom score is a prime consideration, though high Constitution is also valuable, as is high Charisma (for turning undead).

While any cleric enjoys having a good Strength score, it isn't strictly necessary for a sapphire hierarch, since she's likely to cast spells in preference to making melee attacks.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Lawful.

Meldshaping: Ability to shape three soulmelds.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

Essentia Pool: 3.

Special: Access to the Law domain.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft

CLASS FEATURES

As a sapphire hierarch, you have two missions: to battle chaos and to hasten the day when law reigns supreme. Your abilities focus on controlling your own body and dealing extra damage to chaotic foes.

All of the following are class features of the sapphire hierarch prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: At each sapphire hierarch level, you increase your meldshaper level, the number of soulmelds you can shape, the number of chakra binds you can create, and your essentia pool as if you had gained a level in a meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the sapphire hierarch level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as new tiers of chakra binds.

If you had more than one meldshaping class before becoming a sapphire hierarch, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining your essentia pool, meldshaper level, and the number of soulmelds and chakra binds available.

Spellcasting: At each sapphire hierarch level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a sapphire hierarch, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Consultation: Beginning at 1st level, you can consult with the Sapphire Eidolon to gain advice about almost any subject.

This consultation functions like a commune spell, except that you need not be able to cast the spell to use it.

(In effect, you can use commune as a spell-like ability, but only while in the presence of the Sapphire Eidolon).

Contact with the creature's enormous intellect is draining, however, so you must pay the spell's XP cost as normal.

You can consult with the Sapphire Eidolon only three times at each sapphire hierarch level from 1st to 9th.

Any unused consultations for a given level are lost as soon as you attain a new one.

Upon reaching 10th level, you can consult the Sapphire Eidolon once per month for the rest of your career.

Smite Chaos (Su): Beginning at 1st level, you can smite chaos once per day.

This ability is identical to the paladin's smite evil class feature on page 44 of the Player's Handbook, except that the bonuses apply against chaotic creatures rather than evil ones.

At 4th level, and at every three levels thereafter, you can smite chaos one additional time per day, as indicated on Table 6–5: The Sapphire Hierarch.

Smite chaos attempts/day attained from multiple sources stack.

Favored of the Eidolon (Ex): By 2nd level, you have learned to arrest the actions of chaos and change within your own body.

You gain a +4 sacred bonus on saving throws against chaotic and transmutation effects.

Damage Reduction (Ex): When you attain 3rd level, your body begins to toughen, granting you damage reduction 1/adamantine.

Your damage reduction improves to 2/adamantine at 6th level, and to 3/adamantine at 9th level.

Sapphire Body (Ex): When you attain 5th level, the truth of the Sapphire Eidolon is graven into your flesh.

Any critical hit or sneak attack scored against you has a 25% chance to be negated, so that damage is rolled normally.

When you attain 10th level, this chance increases to 50%.

Timeless Body (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, you no longer age.

See the druid class feature of the same name on page 37 of the Player's Handbook.

PLAYING A SAPPHIRE HIERARCH

In the beginning, all was one.

Sea and mountain, soul and body, deity and mortal—all these and more existed together in harmony.

But in the unfolding of the universe from that one perfect moment, some of this divine unity was lost.

Because the cosmos began as one entity, natural law clearly demands a constant progression from a disordered state to a more orderly and perfect existence.

Chaos, however, actively resists this great and inexorable reunification, and this interference does great harm to the universe.

Your task as a sapphire hierarch, therefore, is to prevent the baleful influence of chaos from obstructing the natural progress of the universe.

Because chaos blights the face of the universe in countless forms, you are not likely to see the end of your work during your lifetime.

Still, you must valiantly labor to unify peoples and kingdoms, to find and restore knowledge that has been lost or forgotten, to undo the artificial corruption of natural laws through magic, and—most important—to battle creatures of supernatural chaos and destroy their works.

Beings of primal chaos such as demons and slaadi have no place in the cosmos to come, and they are not to be considered part of the Cosmic All.

They are simply manifestations of disorder whose only purpose is to perpetuate their own existence.

As such, their power will wane to nothing as the cosmos approaches universal harmony once again.

If you are inclined toward good, you believe that harmony, peace, and tranquility are the universal goals of all people.

If you are inclined toward evil, you believe that conformity and obedience are of paramount importance.

But whatever your view on moral issues, you are methodical, deliberate, patient, and devoted to knitting together a world torn asunder.

You dislike those who kill or harm others without reason, and you especially loathe those who use magic to pervert natural laws—for example, spellcasters who prolong their lives through undeath, wizards who use spells to defy gravity or unbalance the weather, and deities who instruct their servants to promote agendas of chaos and disorder.

You are a faithful servant to the forces of law, and you seek to emulate their supernatural champions (such as inevitables and lawful deities) to the best of your ability.

The sapphire hierarchs are rigidly regimented and adhere to a strict chain of command that has clearly defined responsibilities at each level.

You know the identity of your own superior, and his superior, and so on, all the way up to the supreme hierarch himself.

You follow orders from those above you without hesitation because you know that your assigned tasks further the reunification of the universe.

However, the sapphire hierarchs recognize that their numbers are few and chaos is everywhere, so your superiors direct you to wage war against chaos in your own way.

After all, each sapphire hierarch is a seed of order whose influence grows wherever it is planted.

By spreading such seeds far and wide, the sapphire hierarchs hope to bring about the Great Reunification all the more swiftly.

COMBAT

Your chief strength lies in your command of an extraordinarily versatile range of magic in the forms of cleric spells and meldshaping.

Since these two paths to power complement each other very well, your most effective tactic is to use soulmelds for personal defense or augmentation and cleric spells as your offensive arsenal.

After all, spells such as hold person, summon monster, searing light, and order's wrath are comparable to the offensive spells available to the sorcerer or wizard.

To your way of thinking, effective teamwork is the highest goal to which any small company of heroes can aspire.

Therefore, you strongly favor spells or tactics that help all members of the group fight together as one.

For example, you normally consider a prayer spell that aids all your allies a better spell choice than a magic vestment that wards only you.

But though you have a great capacity for strengthening your team as a whole, you must not be afraid to strike with your own hand when necessary.

Your damage reduction and fortification abilities make you difficult to injure, and your soulmelds and smite chaos ability can help you deliver deadly blows in melee.

As a high-level sapphire hierarch, you should concentrate on casting cleric spells.

Upon attaining the top levels of this prestige class, you should have access to spells such as flame strike, insect plague, blade barrier, harm, destruction, dictum, and hold monster (from the Law domain).

These spells are your best weapons, so don't be afraid to use them freely.

ADVANCEMENT

The first qualifications for a prospective recruit are divine spellcasting ability and access to the Law domain.

In practice, the sapphire hierarchs are interested in clerics who choose to venerate the principle of law rather than a specific deity, since they have found that their teachings are incongruous with devotion to particular gods or powers. Thus, the order keeps an eye on clerics who choose the Law domain to see if they might eventually measure up to full membership.

In many cases, the sapphire hierarchs actively support and encourage such clerics early in their careers, hoping to guide their growth and development in a manner harmonious with the order's teachings. Eventually, a sapphire hierarch approaches any cleric who shows promise, counsels her about taking up the practice of meldcraft, and explains the order's purpose.

Once you join the order, you are known as an aspirant until you meet the class's qualifications and are fully initiated.

As a low-ranking sapphire hierarch, you might be dispatched on a variety of missions designed to promote the well-being and safety of lawful folk or to halt the depredations of chaos.

For example, you might be directed to travel to a distant land and recruit a company of skilled adventurers to destroy a demonic cult, or you might be ordered to bolster the defenses of a frontier kingdom victimized by monstrous attacks and promote order by aiding its people.

You might even be dispatched to seek out and secure powerful magic items and artifacts, since such devices in the wrong hands can promote disharmony in the extreme. As you advance in level, you actually have very few decisions to make.

Cleric spells and soulmelds, which make up the majority of your power, require no long-term decisions—you can prepare different spells or soulmelds each day, but you need not embark on any exclusive paths, such as choosing a critical feat tree.

Choose feats that make it easier for you to employ your magic and your soulmelds, such as Combat Casting, Spell Penetration, Spell Focus, and the various incarnum feats.

You might also consider taking the Bonus Essentia feat, since you probably won't be able to fill all your soulmelds to capacity as your meldshaping level improves.

RESOURCES

The sapphire hierarchs are very attentive to the needs of their agents, so they gladly provide you with any resources they have available when you request assistance.

However, the order faces one serious obstacle in providing such support—namely, geography.

Because the temple is so remote, receiving aid from the order during your missions is impractical.

At the temple, you can obtain spellcasting services for yourself and your companions at only 10% of the normal cost; in a real emergency, you can expect lifesaving healing or restoration free of charge.

In addition, the temple possesses deep vaults filled with potent magic items.

If you can convince your superiors that you need a particular item for the mission you have been assigned, you can borrow it for up to three months, provided that its value does not exceed 3,000 gp times your sapphire hierarch level.

Because others in the order might also need the item in question, you are expected to return it the moment you finish the mission, or within the three-month time limit, whichever is shorter.

If the item is expended, lost, or damaged, you must make full restitution for it—preferably within three months of the time you borrowed it, though the order does make allowances for extenuating circumstances.

SAPPHIRE HIERARCHS IN THE WORLD

"Respect the words of the blue-robed priests, my son, for they have traveled far and acquired great wisdom."

—Hetman Tergri Gnollkiller, chief of the Wind Dancer tribe

Depending on the nature of your player characters, sapphire hierarchs can fill any of several roles in your campaign.

You might, for example, choose to present the Sapphire Eidolon as a distant oracle that can provide vital information for the characters' latest quest.

A group of lawful heroes might even find patrons and allies within the order.

After all, sapphire hierarchs dealing with trouble far away from the temple must make do with whatever local resources are available, and reliable companies of adventurers can be valuable tools.

On the other hand, the order could provide dozens of resolute and capable enemies willing to take any actions needed to frustrate and impede a group of chaotic heroes. If you choose to incorporate the sapphire hierarchs in this manner, try to give the order a moral slant that places it clearly in opposition to the heroes.

For example, you could easily play the sapphire hierarchs as strongly lawful evil so that they could more readily oppose a party of chaotic good heroes.

DAILY LIFE

Sapphire hierarchs are permitted a fair amount of time to travel where they will and act as they see fit, within a properly managed framework of oversight and reporting. They can choose their own companions for the missions they undertake, though they are expected to ensure that the group functions in a manner that coincides with the order's ideals.

Even while members are away from the temple, however, the order keeps track of their activities.

When a sapphire hierarch is needed for a particular mission, she is expected to accept her orders and carry out the assignment with all possible speed.

NOTABLES

The most notable being in the temple is the Sapphire Eidolon itself—a sentient, telepathic creature with a vast repository of memories, an enlightened intelligence, and a predictably rigid and inflexible attitude.

However, people consult this being as an oracle because it is uncannily adept at predicting future events when provided with a set of facts or speculations.

ORGANIZATION

Sapphire hierarchs live at the Temple of the Sapphire Eidolon and belong to the order of acolytes, priests, and guards who call it home.

The lowest-ranking members of the order are called acolytes.

Not all those at this rank are clerics; in fact, most are monks, lawful fighters, or lawful wizards who have chosen to swear allegiance to the Sapphire Eidolon and obey its dictates.

The acolytes, who number in excess of one hundred, defend the temple and serve as guards and assistants to sapphire hierarchs engaged in particularly important or dangerous missions elsewhere.

Above the acolytes rank about thirty individuals known as initiates.

Clerics, favored souls, incarnates, and soulborn are accepted into the order as initiates rather than acolytes in recognition of their ability to channel or shape the divine power of law through divine spellcasting or meldshaping. Initiates ensure that the temple continues to function as a place of worship and learning, and many also devote their efforts to creating various magic items for the temple's stores.

Above the initiates are up to twenty-four hierarchs, whose mastery of both divine spellcasting and meldshaping has earned them high rank in the order.

Upon taking her first level in the sapphire hierarch prestige class, a character is automatically awarded the rank of hierarch in the Temple of the Sapphire Eidolon.

She begins at the bottom of a carefully delineated pecking order based on seniority, merit, and accomplishment.

Even as a brand-new hierarch, the character can issue orders to initiates and acolytes, but the temple's chain of command clearly spells out to which hierarch any particular initiate (and her acolytes) reports.

Issuing orders to another hierarch's followers is considered disorderly and quickly earns the character censure from her own superiors.

Since hierarchs serve as agents, emissaries, crusaders, and troubleshooters for the temple, they travel more widely than other members of the order.

The hierarchs report to four lord hierarchs—specifically the lord hierarchs of the east, south, north, and west.

These older, highly experienced hierarchs coordinate the activities of the servants of law under their command.

They also advise the supreme hierarch and control access to the Sapphire Eidolon.

They carefully evaluate the problems that petitioners bring to the temple and determine whether each individual's questions are worthy of response.

The current supreme hierarch is a githzerai named Raezid (LN male githzerai cleric 7/incarnate 3/sapphire hierarch 10), who has held his position for almost forty years.

He harbors a special hatred for slaadi and looks favorably on any temple servant who defeats a powerful slaad or blocks its efforts to unleash chaos and disorder on the world.

Raezid wishes to retire, but he faces an unpleasant problem. The most senior of the lord hierarchs—the lord hierarch of the south—is a heartless human named Gethsered (LN male human cleric 5/incarnate 5/sapphire hierarch 7), who believes that order must be imposed on those who might choose otherwise.

Raezid believes that the Sapphire Eidolon does not embrace tyranny as the path to universal harmony, but to deny Gethsered his promotion would be unthinkable.

So Raezid has remained in his position for some years now for no other reason than to delay the day that Gethsered assumes control of the temple.

NPC REACTIONS

A sapphire hierarch's closest allies are other servants of law—specifically, clerics and other servants of lawful deities, plus monks, paladins, and even extraplanar creatures such as inevitables or rheids.

Though few people have heard of the order or the Sapphire Eidolon, each sapphire hierarch's demeanor and conduct speaks volumes about her loyalties; she can always expect a friendly reaction from others who fight for law.

On the other hand, beings of chaos have no use for sapphire hierarchs at all.

Slaadi, githyanki, demons, and servants of chaotic deities (especially those who directly oppose a particular sapphire hierarch's alignment) are hostile toward her.

Even less fantastic creatures that value individuality over conformity—for example, barbarians, elves, gnomes, and even orcs—also don't respond well to the sapphire hierarch's message and are unfriendly toward her.

Many sapphire hierarchs are lawful neutral and therefore indifferent to distinctions of good or evil in chaotic beings or societies.

However, the leaders of the order realize that chaotic evil creatures (such as orcs or demons) are far more likely to be destructive and create disharmony than chaotic good creatures (such as elves or eladrins).

The organization therefore devotes more of its efforts to combating the depredations of chaotic evil creatures than it does trying to force conformity on chaotic good creatures.

SAPPHIRE HIERARCH LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (religion) skill can research the sapphire hierarchs or the Sapphire Eidolon to learn more about them.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below her Knowledge (religion) check result.

DC 10: Legends speak of a hidden temple in the distant wastelands where a cult of law-priests worships an idol of blue metal.

DC 15: The idol is known as the Sapphire Eidolon, and it represents perfection.

The priests who attend it are known as sapphire hierarchs. Most of them are clerics of law, but in addition to their clerical abilities, they wield strange powers and can create soulmelds.

Every now and then, these blue-robed priests leave their hidden temple to undertake missions in the world.

DC 20: The sapphire hierarchs believe that all is one, and that every creature, object, and idea is derived from a single, perfect, cosmic principle.

They begin their quest to purge chaos from the cosmos by eliminating disorder from their own minds and bodies.

As a result, each sapphire hierarch becomes less and less human as she advances in her studies.

The Sapphire Eidolon—the center of their worship—is a great sphere of pure, crystallized incarnum whose infinite blue depths contain the answers to all questions.

DC 30: The master of the order is Supreme Hierarch Raezid, who harbors a special hatred for the slaadi and all their works.

A hero in search of the temple can garner clues to its whereabouts with a successful DC 20 Gather Information check.

The best places to ask are monasteries and the temples of lawful deities.

SAPPHIRE HIERARCHS IN THE GAME

The Order of the Sapphire Eidolon is a good model for a remote, somewhat odd cult.

If your campaign features ancient doorways that must be kept sealed to prevent the end of the world, the sapphire hierarchs are likely guardians.

If the heroes must undertake an arduous journey in search of long-hidden knowledge, the Temple of the Sapphire Eidolon is a good destination.

Just because the ultimate purpose of the sapphire hierarchs is more than a little quixotic doesn't mean that they can't be useful allies for heroes whose paths happen to cross their own.

If you have a sapphire hierarch PC in your campaign, supply her with plenty of opportunities to battle chaos and help lawful folk prosper.

To ensure that the other characters are willing to fight alongside her in such encounters, choose chaotic creatures that aren't likely to win any sympathy from the party as opponents.

PCs can usually agree to fight orcs or demons, but if you cast a good elf kingdom and its sylvan allies as the sapphire hierarch's enemies, she might end up fighting all by herself.

Be careful about putting the sapphire hierarch in situations that force her to choose between her society's mission and her loyalty to her adventuring comrades.

Many D&D characters are free spirits, and a sapphire hierarch might sometimes be embarrassed or stymied by the actions of other characters who care little for the prospect of a lawful and harmonious cosmos.

If you think your group of players might make the sapphire hierarch's life miserable, try using her as a conduit for major missions.

While the sapphire hierarch might not approve of the group's disorderly tactics and behavior, she might be able to overlook the excesses of her comrades if she feels like she's doing a good job of directing the group's strategic efforts.

She might even feel that she is serving her order by turning chaos against chaos.

ADAPTATION

The key concept behind the sapphire hierarch is the existence of an order of cleric/meldshapers devoted to the worship of law as a principle.

Details about the location of their temple—or even the Sapphire Eidolon itself—aren't as important and can be altered to suit your own campaign.

If you're willing to do some additional work, you could drop the class's focus on law and build a general cleric/meldshaper prestige class from its basic abilities. Since these two core classes work well together, you could also base the sapphire hierarch on another alignment—or even no alignment at all.

In the FORGOTTEN REALMS campaign setting, the Temple of the Sapphire Eidolon lies in the remote Uthangol Mountains, overlooking the dusty plains of the Shaar.

In the EBERRON setting, it stands in the Endworld Mountains, beyond the Blade Desert.

SOULCASTER

“Powered by energies you couldn’t possibly fathom, my spells will shake your very soul.”

—Edarril Larhastavil, elf soulcaster

From the arcane experiments of the wizards of the Last Watch arose the soulcasters, a cadre of arcane spellcasters who excel at incorporating soul energy into their magic. Those soulcasters still affiliated with the Last Watch dwell in crystal palaces on the Positive Energy Plane, where they work tirelessly to counter the machinations of the evil demon princes.

Other members of this prestige class, however, have brought the knowledge of how to combine incarnum with arcane magic into the world and put it to more practical uses.

BECOMING A SOULCASTER

Wizards or sorcerers who have also learned the secrets of incarnum are the most common candidates for the soulcaster prestige class.

Most choose the path of incarnate to acquire the necessary meldshaping ability, but occasionally a high-level soulborn with levels in wizard or sorcerer also elects to pursue this path.

Since a soulcaster is primarily an arcane spellcaster, a high Intelligence score is of paramount importance.

A high Constitution score maximizes the number of soulmelds that can be shaped, and a high Wisdom score ensures high save DCs against the offensive effects of those melds.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Feats: Incarnum Spellshaping.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Meldshaping: Ability to shape three soulmelds; ability to bind a soulmeld to a chakra.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (religion), Knowledge (the planes), Profession, Spellcraft

CLASS FEATURES

Both your spellcasting and your meldshaping abilities continue to grow as you attain higher levels in the soulcaster prestige class.

Your magic also becomes stronger because you gain more essentia to invest in your spells and in incarnum feats that affect your spells.

Eventually, you learn to transform your arcane power into temporary essentia boosts, thereby maximizing the utility of your soulmelds.

All of the following are class features of the soulcaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: At each soulcaster level, you increase your meldshaper level, the number of soulmelds you can shape, the number of chakra binds you can create, and your essentia pool as if you had gained a level in a meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the soulcaster level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as new tiers of chakra binds.

If you had more than one meldshaping class before becoming a soulcaster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining your essentia pool, meldshaper level, and the number of soulmelds and chakra binds available.

Spellcasting: At each soulcaster level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a soulcaster, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Arcane Investment (Su): Beginning at 1st level, you can invest essentia in your arcane spells to make them more powerful.

At the same time that you shape your soulmelds, you can choose to invest 1 point of essentia in any single spell that you know (and have prepared, if you prepare spells).

At any time in the next 24 hours, you can choose to use that invested essentia when you cast the chosen spell.

Doing so requires no action, but both the caster level of the spell and its save DC increase by 1.

Once so used, the essentia returns to your essentia pool and can be invested into soulmelds or other effects.

As you attain higher levels, the number of spells you can invest with essentia in this manner increases.

You can affect a number of spells equal to your soulcaster level, and you cannot invest essentia in the same spell more than once—that is, you can't invest essentia in two lightning bolt spells, even if you can prepare or cast that spell more than once per day.

This process is not the same as investing essentia in a spell as part of its casting (see page 52).

If you use your arcane investment ability to affect a given spell, you can also invest essentia in it as part of its casting if the spell allows it, but the two essentia investments are separate.

At 7th level, you can invest up to 2 points of essentia in each spell rather than only 1.

A 2-point investment boosts the spell's caster level and save DC by 2 each for a single casting.

Chakra Binds: As you attain higher levels, you can bind your soulmelds and magic items to your chakras, gaining new powers based on the combination chosen.

At 3rd level, you can bind your soulmelds or magic items to your least chakras (crown, feet, and hands), in addition to any other chakras you have available.

When you attain 8th level, your lesser chakras (arms, brow, and shoulders) become available for chakra binds.

Magical Distillation (Su): At 10th level, you can use the magical energy of your spells to augment your essentia pool.

By sacrificing one arcane spell slot (or one prepared arcane spell, if you prepare spells) of the highest level you can currently cast, you gain points of essentia equal to that spell's level for 1 round.

This essentia can be invested or otherwise used as normal, but it disappears at the start of your next turn.

This ability is usable once per round as a free action.

PLAYING A SOULCASTER

As a soulcaster, you retain the same convictions that you had when you first began to wield incarnum.

You are an evangelist for your cause, and you enjoy demonstrating the power of incarnum as manifested through your spells.

However, you also seek a balance between the power of your spellcasting and that of your meldshaping.

You know that the first soulcasters were born through the efforts of the Last Watch, an organization devoted to fighting the demon lords of the Abyss, and that the art of infusing soul energy into arcane magic has since spread well beyond that group.

Even if you are not directly involved in the continuing efforts of the Last Watch, you are aware of its clandestine fight against the demon princes and the danger allowing that war to spill out into the open represents.

Your philosophical viewpoint dictates your position on the war.

If you are inclined toward good, you favor working against the demon lords at all costs; if you are inclined toward evil, you prefer to curry the favor of the evil princes in hopes of gaining a reward in this life or the next.

If law is your cause, you strive to prevent the chaotic demons from gaining a foothold in the bastions of soul energy; if you lean toward chaos, you oppose the mindless destruction that the demons represent while remaining sympathetic to the cause of chaos.

As your power and influence grow and you become more aware of the demonic threat, you can more actively counter (or take part in) the schemes of the demon princes.

If you wish, you can try to contact the Last Watch and offer to work with its members to battle the demon lords; they will direct your power to where it is most needed.

If you are inclined to join the battle on the other side, the demon princes will be more than happy to accept your aid as well.

COMBAT

Your best combat tactic is to use your incarnum-infused spells first.

When you do so, the invested essentia is freed for other uses, and you can channel it into your shaped soulmelds. Thus, your tactics change throughout an encounter to reflect the shift of power from your spells to your soulmelds.

Your ability to bind your soulmelds to your chakras significantly increases your versatility.

Some soulmelds might become constant companions for you.

In such cases, you must strike a balance between your favorite soulmelds and your spells with respect to essentia investment, and that balance might change throughout the day.

As a high-level soulcaster, you need never lack for essentia since you can sacrifice your spell slots to power your soulmelds on a temporary basis.

Though the levels of the spells you can cast might be slightly lower than those of a straight spellcaster, your arcane investment ability ensures that the saving throw DCs remain competitive.

ADVANCEMENT

While dabbling with combining incarnum and arcane magic, you inevitably stumble upon others who are doing likewise; through them, you learn of the soulcasters.

If you seek them out and prove yourself worthy, a soulcaster might adopt you as an apprentice.

During your apprenticeship, your soulcaster mentor teaches you how each spell becomes more powerful when infused with the soul energy of great spellcasters from other ages.

While instructing you in how the magic of your spells and the power of incarnum can interact, he tells you how the first soulcasters evolved from the wizards of the Last Watch.

As you learn more about the ways of the soulcaster, you begin to understand that the Last Watch is not just some ancient organization lost to history.

It still exists and is constantly looking for brave heroes who are capable of fighting the demon lords.

You might even receive an invitation to join the Last Watch on a crusade against the fiends, or be asked to fulfill some minor quest that helps to interrupt their schemes.

As long as you have no official ties to the Last Watch, however, you are free to undertake whatever adventures suit your fancy.

As your power increases, consider taking feats that further enhance your spellcasting through the investment of essentia.

Midnight Metamagic, for instance, lets you apply your metamagic feats to even your highest-level spells by investing essentia instead of increasing the spell's level.

Soulouched Spellcasting helps you overcome the fact that your caster level is lower than that of a straight spellcaster by granting you a bonus on dispel checks and caster level checks made to overcome spell resistance.

Improved Essentia Capacity increases the versatility of your incarnum feats by allowing you to invest more essentia in each one.

RESOURCES

Initially, your best resource is your soulcaster mentor, who provides you with plenty of sage advice when you need it. If you accept a mission from the Last Watch, its members do what they can to outfit you for taking the fight to the demon lords.

They can provide survival gear to help you withstand the rigors of any plane to which you might be sent, or weapons and other equipment that are particularly suited to doing battle with fiends.

SOULCASTERS IN THE WORLD

"The purity of their spell power is intriguing.

If the demons don't kill them first, I shall have to perform an inquiry into these soulcasters."

—Cornered unnamed wizard

The soulcaster prestige class provides players with an opportunity to use the incarnum magic system in conjunction with the more familiar spell system.

The soulcasters' organization, the Last Watch, fits easily into almost any campaign because of its extraplanar headquarters, and it can become the starting point for numerous demon-slaying adventures.

DAILY LIFE

Unless she joins the Last Watch on the Positive Energy Plane, a soulcaster's life is much like that of any other arcane spellcaster.

She is free to adventure at will and choose her own companions, or to seclude herself for extended research.

Soulcasters maintain lifelong relationships with their mentors, keeping in contact and trading news on a regular basis.

In addition, soulcasters who maintain working relationships with the Last Watch frequently accept missions relating to the organization's ongoing battle with demonkind.

NOTABLES

Unlike most arcane societies, the Last Watch has no organized leadership, and none of its members rank above the others.

Its members prefer to work as a cooperative, each contributing his or her particular expertise to ensure the success of every enterprise.

However, a few independent soulcasters operating on the Material Plane have managed to make names for themselves.

Chief among these is Rorghas the Dark, an evil soulcaster who works to further the designs of the demon lord Graz'zt.

ORGANIZATION

A significant contingent of soulcasters still resides within the crystal palaces of the Last Watch on the Positive Energy Plane, though these arcane spellcasters make up only a small segment of the organization.

The Last Watch is dedicated to defeating the demon lords, and its membership includes paladins, warriors, clerics, and various other characters who stand against evil and chaos in the cosmos.

Since the crystal fortresses give ready access to the founts of pure soul energy on the Positive Energy Plane, soulcasters with a penchant for experimentation choose to perform their research there.

In fact, it was the wizards of the Last Watch who first discovered the secrets of combining incarnum with arcane magic.

While pursuing some minions of the demon prince Demogorgon, they discovered a fount of soul energy deep within the Positive Energy Plane that had beneficial effects upon their spellcasting.

After defeating the fiends and dealing a critical blow to Demogorgon's plans, a few of the wizards stayed behind to document their findings and conduct further research into the energy of incarnum.

These intrepid experimenters learned to weave incarnum into their spells, thereby becoming the first soulcasters.

Though these first soulcasters remained allied with the Last Watch, their students carried the knowledge into the world.

Now, although many soulcasters still choose to take up the fight against the demon lords, others have moved on to safer environs.

The soulcasters who operate independently on the Material Plane are loosely organized through a network of couriers and contacts that they personally maintain.

Through this linkage, they trade news, information, and techniques on a regular basis.

New soulcasters are no longer expected to stand against the demons, but each character who takes up the prestige class is informed of the ongoing struggle and given the option of assisting the Last Watch.

Some choose to do so, while others are content to keep abreast of the news while staying out of the fiends' path.

Periodically, however, when times are particularly dire, the Last Watch sends out a call for aid that reaches the ears of every soulcaster not of evil bent.

Not all soulcasters are inclined to work against the demons, and a few have actually fallen in with the evil horde.

Although the Last Watch does not have the resources to destroy all the evil soulcasters across the planes, they consider each one a threat and do what they can to prevent them from spreading the secrets of soulcasting to other, less noble spellcasters.

NPC REACTIONS

Ordinary people assume that a soulcaster is just another sort of wizard.

After all, arcane magic is strange and mystical anyway, and few understand that soulcasting is any different.

Thus, soulcasters are treated in the same way as wizards are in any given location.

Clerics, wizards, and other spellcasters recognize that an otherworldly force enhances a soulcaster's magic, so they are either cordially inquisitive or jealous of the new type of power, according to their individual natures and goals.

Membership in the Last Watch means little outside that organization, since its operatives do their best to keep their activities secret.

Whether or not a nonevil soulcaster belongs to the Last Watch, her most important enemies are the demon lords and their minions.

The princes of evil have long memories, and they associate the practice of soulcasting with the wizards of the Last Watch who handed them their defeat so many years ago.

Though the lesser demons would not recognize the difference between soulcasting and regular spellcasting, greater demons are much more informed.

Balors and mariliths, for example, can identify the nuances of soulcasting, and they mark casters who utilize those techniques as targets.

Evil soulcasters who do not actively work with the demon lords are likewise targeted as their enemies.

Those who accept alliances with the princes of evil, however, can expect to be treated with respect by demonkind.

SOULCASTER LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in the Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (the planes) skill can research the soulcasters to learn more about them and their organization.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below his bardic knowledge, Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (the planes) check result.

DC 10: Some wizards and sorcerers can enhance their spells with a strange, extraplanar energy known as incarnum.

Their spell effects appear blue-tinged or have wispy tendrils of magical energy trailing from them.

DC 15: Those who augment their spells with incarnum are called soulcasters, and some of them belong to an organization known as the Last Watch.

DC 20: Soulcasters augment their spells by weaving pure soul energy together with arcane magic.

They learn the technique from mentors, who tell them of the Last Watch, an organization of heroes that stands quietly against evil.

DC 30: The first soulcasters were wizards of the Last Watch who discovered a font of soul energy on the Positive Energy Plane.

The Last Watch is an organization dedicated to battling the demon lords, and it maintains several crystalline fortresses on the Positive Energy Plane.

Characters wishing to contact a soulcaster or the Last Watch can find an appropriate person with a DC 25 Gather Information check.

SOULCASTERS IN THE GAME

Introducing soulcasters into your campaign is a relatively easy task.

NPC soulcasters can serve as mentors to characters who wish to pursue both meldshaping and spellcasting, and the Last Watch can actively assist the PCs when they encounter demonic forces.

A soulcaster can also be an effective member of an adventuring party.

Even though her overall spellcasting ability is not as good as that of a single-classed spellcaster, she can augment a few of her spells to great effect.

Furthermore, once she's out of spells, she can fall back on her not-insignificant array of soulmelds and continue to hold her own in encounters.

A party soulcaster need not be aligned with the Last Watch, but she can easily fit into that organization if desired.

As a hybrid character, a soulcaster is not as good at any given task as a single-classed meldshaper or spellcaster of equivalent character level, and that weakness becomes evident in encounters with creatures that have particularly high saving throw modifiers or spell resistance.

Although the rest of the party might be capable of handling such foes, make sure you also include encounters with lower-level creatures that are more likely to succumb to the soulcaster's powers.

ADAPTATION

If a focus on war with the demon lords does not fit your campaign, the Last Watch could easily be adapted to oppose some other evil (or even good) organization or foe.

Instead of tapping fonts of soul energy on the Positive Energy Plane, soulcasters could perform their magic by focusing the energies of past spellcasters' souls.

The research for that kind of soulcasting might involve macabre practices, such as locating and retrieving the bodies of archwizards from their trap- and horror-laden tombs.

PEARL OF INCARNUM POWER

Certain relics particularly suited for a soulcaster's skills have been passed down from mentors to novitiates for centuries.

Among these are pearls of incarnum power, which look like typical pearls except for a slightly cloudy sheen on their surfaces.

Like a pearl of power, a pearl of incarnum power enables the possessor to recall any one spell that he has already prepared and then cast.

In addition, however, he can restore any essentia that was previously invested in that spell as part of the same action used to recall it.

The spell is then prepared again, with its invested essentia, just as if it had not been cast.

Each pearl of incarnum power functions once per day, and only for spells of a particular level.

Strong transmutation; CL 17th; Craft Wondrous Item, creator must be able to cast spells of the spell level to be recalled, creator must have an essentia pool; Price 1,500 gp (1st), 6,000 gp (2nd), 13,500 gp (3rd), 24,000 gp (4th), 37,500 gp (5th), 54,000 gp (6th), 73,500 gp (7th), 96,000 gp (8th), 121,500 gp (9th).

SPINEMELD WARRIOR

“Perfection of form requires proof.

What better proof than a foe bleeding at your feet?”

—Morgalle Tark, spine fighter

Even without proper training, a skarn can strike wicked blows with the pointed spines along his forearms.

Most, however, have a proclivity for martial discipline and an appreciation for spare and functional beauty.

The resultant culture has produced a combat style that is both lethally effective and aesthetically pleasing.

When a spinemeld warrior trains, he is participating in a tradition that has long been venerated in skarn society.

Public ritualized combats between spinemeld warriors draw large crowds and are the high points of holy days and feasts.

All spinemeld warriors are members of an organization known as the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, which manages their participation in public ritual combat and provides training in combat and forms.

BECOMING A SPINEMELD WARRIOR

Most spinemeld warriors begin their careers as incarnates, then take levels in fighter or even paladin.

Skarn soulborn can easily meet the entry requirements for the prestige class as well.

Since meldshaping is not required for entry, however, a paladin, ranger, or fighter can choose to qualify for the class by taking a feat that grants him access to his essentia pool.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Skarn.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Essentia Pool: 1.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (nobility and royalty), Profession, Ride, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance in the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, your training emphasizes the doctrine of mental and physical perfection at every stage.

The abilities you gain from this class advance that agenda in various ways.

All of the following are class features of the spinemeld warrior prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: You have the ability to shape a small number of soulmelds.

At 3rd level, you can shape one meld at the beginning of each day, and at 7th level, you can shape up to two per day.

The maximum number of soulmelds that you can have shaped simultaneously equals your Constitution score minus 10.

You select your soulmelds from the soulborn class list.

Your meldshaper level for these soulmelds equals your spinemeld warrior level, and the save DC (if applicable) is 10 + invested essentia + your Con modifier.

This ability otherwise follows the normal rules for meldshaping.

Twin Spine Fighting (Ex): At 1st level, you can attack with the spines on both of your arms as if you were fighting with two light weapons.

You cannot combine this ability with attacks using any other weapons.

Two-Weapon Fighting: You gain Two-Weapon Fighting (see page 102 of the Player's Handbook) as a bonus feat, even if you do not meet the prerequisites.

If you already have Two-Weapon Fighting, you can select any feat for which you qualify, as long as Two-Weapon Fighting is a prerequisite for your choice.

For example, you could choose Improved Two-Weapon Fighting or Two-Weapon Defense as your bonus feat.

Noble Familiarity: Because the oldest noble houses in skarn society support the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, you have at least a passing familiarity with issues relating to the aristocracy.

Beginning at 2nd level, you gain a competence bonus equal to one-half your spinemeld warrior level on Knowledge (nobility and royalty) checks.

In addition, your contacts among the nobility can put you in contact with someone selling almost any piece of equipment or magic item you seek.

To learn the name of a seller for a particular item, you must succeed on a Gather Information check (DC 15 + caster level for the item).

You gain a competence bonus equal to your spinemeld warrior level on this check.

Spine Enhancement (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, you can use your essentia to boost the power of your spines in combat.

As a swift action, you can invest essentia in your spines as if they were a soulmeld.

Doing so grants you an enhancement bonus equal to the points of essentia invested on attack rolls and damage rolls with your spines.

Unlike your soulmelds or other incarnum-fueled abilities, your spines have a special essentia capacity (and thus a maximum enhancement bonus) equal to one-half your spinemeld warrior level.

Spine Rend (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, you can deliver a rend attack with your spines.

Whenever you hit a single opponent with a spine attack from each arm in the same round, you tear the opponent's flesh and deal an additional 2d6 points of damage plus one and one-half times your Strength bonus.

Chakra Bind (Arms): Starting at 7th level, you can bind one of your shaped soulmelds to your arms chakra.

Adamantine Spines (Ex): By the time you attain 9th level, the constant flow of incarnum through your spines has rendered them incredibly tough and durable.

When used as weapons, they overcome damage reduction and hardness as if crafted from adamantine.

PLAYING A SPINEMELD WARRIOR

You are a member of an ancient order with an even more ancient quest.

Your progenitors, the mishtai, searched in vain for "perfection of form", and the members of your race see themselves as the rightful heirs to that quest.

You and all the other spinemeld warriors are members of your race's oldest and most venerated fighting order, and as such you are devoted to achieving perfection—both mental and physical.

As a spinemeld warrior, you understand that the word "form" in the phrase "perfection of form" means not just body shape, but also the combat styles of martial discipline, the patterns of thought necessary for a proper life, and the proscribed, stylized motions and stances used in ceremonial fighting tournaments.

Many skarns choose not to become spinemeld warriors because with that honor comes numerous responsibilities. For example, you might be asked to serve with an honor guard marching in the entourage of a noble during a feast day parade, or you might have to act as a bodyguard for an important individual.

In addition, you must participate in at least two of the formalized but still dangerous tournaments held annually as entertainment in skarn cities.

Nevertheless, your rewards for choosing this path are great.

Like your fellow spinemeld warriors, you enjoy celebrity status and are considered among your city's most eligible single individuals.

As such, you draw the suits of countless starstruck young nobles, many of whom are quite spoiled and prone to take umbrage at the slightest hint of rejection.

How you deal with the paradoxical combination of worshipful adulation from suitors and unforgiving scrutiny from society determines what kind of place you make for yourself in a skarn city.

COMBAT

Your spine attacks are your best weapons, so be sure to use them to best advantage in combat.

Against a foe with a high Armor Class, you might wish to forego fighting with two weapons (or both sets of spines) to avoid the associated attack penalties.

In such cases, either wield a single weapon exclusively, or attack one-handed with your spines.

At higher levels, attacking with your spines can be an effective tactic if they are more suited to penetrating your enemy's damage reduction than your main weapon is.

ADVANCEMENT

Your advancement in the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors depends solely on your combat potency.

If you perform well in regular combat and in the public spectacles, you can count on gaining influence within the order rapidly.

If you fail to perform as required or sustain numerous losses in ritual combats, your status drops accordingly. Because you gain far fewer feats than a fighter or even a soulborn does, you must choose them wisely, so pay attention to both your own strengths and the kinds of combat scenarios you typically face.

Weapon Focus is a fine feat, but if you have a high Dexterity score, you can benefit much more from Weapon Finesse, since your spines are treated as light weapons.

If you are faced with large groups of opponents, Whirlwind Attack can enable you to deliver a dizzying number of spine attacks, though the prerequisites for that feat are onerous.

Improved Natural Attack (from the Monster Manual) is also a good choice, though Weapon Specialization (if you qualify for it) provides a bit more punch.

RESOURCES

The Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors resembles an athletic league steeped in ancient ritual.

In some ways, membership itself is the greatest resource that the organization offers, because with it come fame, social prestige, and gold.

But the price is high—not only must you perform in the public ceremonial combat events, but offers for private matches are also common.

These arranged private matches are bloodier than the ceremonial public contests, and rumors of deaths resulting from such matches are true, unsavory though they might be.

In addition, the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors provides an excellent network through which to seek particular magic items.

Your contacts among the aristocracy can probably supply you with the name of a merchant or private citizen selling almost any kind of combat-related equipment.

SPINEMELD WARRIORS IN THE WORLD

"The spine fighters and their ceremonies are a living link to the age of the mishtai, when we were closer to perfection."

—Thrakkil Mav, noble spinemeld warrior enthusiast and front-row attendee at all major tournaments
Nearly all spinemeld warriors are celebrities in skarn popular culture.

Within skarn society, only the ruling aristocrats are more closely watched, emulated, and gossiped about.

Thus, spinemeld warriors represent a good way to introduce the concept of incarnum into a campaign that includes skarn PCs or an adventure in a skarn-controlled area.

If you have a PC spinemeld warrior in your campaign and need a means to motivate him, play on his social status or enroll him in a public combat at one of the annual festivals. Be sure to offer plenty of encounters that encourage the use of his spines over other weapons, since spine attacks are among the best benefits the prestige class offers.

If you need a powerful, combative organization that actively promotes the use of incarnum in your campaign, the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors is a perfect choice. Its leaders can serve as a source of adventures as well as provide access to skarn nobility.

DAILY LIFE

The life of a typical spinemeld warrior is regulated to the point of regimentation.

Training is both a daily requirement and a privilege, since mastering the ancient art of spine-fighting is considered among the greatest honors a skarn can earn.

The Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors might grant a member a particular mission, for which he can choose his own companions.

However, he is expected to select compatriots who will not impugn the honor of the hierarchy or the noble name of the spinemeld warrior in their midst.

More independent spinemeld warriors might eventually strike out on their own, and some of these are even excused from occasional public combats due to prolonged absences.

NOTABLES

Few spinemeld warriors are known outside the skarn culture.

Within the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, perfect of the south wind Vellok Dane has become notorious as a source of scandal because his wife, Torrana, has a roving eye.

Thus, he is constantly forced to seek satisfaction of his honor from other males.

ORGANIZATION

The Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors is dedicated to preserving the legacy of the mishtai and continuing their quest for perfection of form.

The members of this order believe that both perfection and form are broad terms that encompass the physical, mental, and spiritual realms.

The organization's leaders encourage members to develop the physical might necessary for combat, the mental acuity needed to shape soulmelds, and the spiritual strength to fuse the two together.

At the top of the order's internal hierarchy are the august perfects of roses.

These accomplished spinemeld warriors oversee the daily operations of the order, determine who should fight whom in which ceremonies, and maintain the organization's all-important relationships with the aristocracy.

Their direct assistants are the perfects of the north and south winds.

As might be expected, the hierarchy is quite strict and autocratic, with higher-ranked members commanding the complete respect and deference of those in the lower ranks. Private matches might be arranged between any two members, but challenging a higher-ranking member is considered the height of impudence.

Over the history of the organization, outrageous scandals have erupted in such a way, with younger spinemeld warriors challenging more established fighters—usually at the behest of infatuated admirers.

At least one such match has resulted in the upstart's death, and several have resulted in the defeated skarn leaving the community to strike out on his own.

Typically, each skarn city has one august perfect of roses, one perfect of the north wind, and one perfect of the south wind.

Larger cities have more ranking members, and smaller cities might do without one, two, or even all three officers. An up-and-coming spinemeld warrior with political ambitions might ascend to one of these positions only by defeating the skarn who currently holds that title in his region.

NPC REACTIONS

Within skarn society, spinemeld warriors almost universally receive impassioned approbation.

Groups of nobles with excess money and leisure time travel from city to city to watch their favored fighters in combat ceremonies throughout the year.

A spinemeld warrior who takes to adventuring in search of treasure or, more honorably, lost mishtai artifacts, is ushered out of the city gates with a flourish of horns and a shower of rose bouquets hurled from the parapets.

Outside of skarn society, spinemeld warriors receive the same sort of reception as soulborns, paladins, and rangers. Members of other races consider spinemeld warriors slightly more sophisticated and intellectual than fighters and much more civilized than barbarians.

However, like most skarns, members of this prestige class are typically thought to be supercilious perfectionists, whether their actions warrant such judgment or not.

The fact that they practice combat forms on a daily basis, regardless of their surroundings and anyone else's social agenda, tends to reinforce that prejudice.

SPINEMELD WARRIOR LORE

Characters with the ranks in Knowledge (arcana) skill can research the spinemeld warriors and their hierarchy to learn more about them.

Ranks in the Knowledge (local) skill can also yield the same information if a skarn city exists in the surrounding territory.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below his Knowledge (nobility and royalty) or Knowledge (local) check result.

DC 10: While most skarns can slice you up a bit with their spines, a spinemeld warrior can deal much more damage. Comparing the two is like comparing a knife to a magic sword.

DC 15: The skarns known as spinemeld warriors take the dream of the mishtai seriously.

They want to be perfect in body, mind, and spirit.

DC 20: The Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors is an ancient organization whose members are said to have secret knowledge of the mishtai.

The skarn nobles and high priests have great respect for this organization and its leaders, who are known as august perfects of roses.

DC 30: The skarn nobles act as patrons for the spinemeld warriors, providing them with financial support.

Rumor also holds that illicit liaisons between nobles and warriors are common.

The local perfect of the north wind is outraged, and blood might well flow at this year's Mishtai Vespers combat.

SPINEMELD WARRIORS IN THE GAME

The Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors can provide an evening of active roleplaying interspersed with combat. Perhaps the august perfect of roses is looking for fighters of other races to challenge the best of his spinemeld warriors at an upcoming ceremony.

Characters who can not only survive the combat but also display the proper forms and rituals can expect a significant payout for their trouble.

A spinemeld warrior on a quest for a mishtai artifact might arrive in your campaign world and introduce incarnum to your PCs.

Alternatively, a haughty spinemeld warrior could belittle skarn PCs who are not spinemeld warriors and constantly challenge them to ceremonial combat.

If you keep in mind both the hard-hitting combat style of the spinemeld warriors and their roleplaying aspects—including their relationships with the nobility, their quest for knowledge of the mishtai, the politics of their order, and the scandals and infighting to which they are prone—these characters can fit into almost kind of campaign.

ADAPTATION

Spinemeld warriors can be employed in most campaigns with minimal changes.

In a campaign with no major cities, however, they lose some of their prestige because large audiences are not as readily available.

Whatever setting you use, the spinemeld warriors take on the dominant characteristics of the aristocracy.

If you play in a dark-and-doomed, abandon-all-hope world in which the PCs are good-aligned outlaws fighting against an overwhelming tide of evil, then the spinemeld warriors are part of the evil establishment.

Similarly, if your characters live in an enlightened kingdom that is a bastion of good, then the spinemeld warriors' order is largely benevolent.

LOCATION: THE MISHTORAN IN NOR

The Mishtoran amphitheater in Nor has hosted the elaborately staged combats of the spinemeld warriors for the past two centuries.

The cyclopean, horseshoe-shaped arena boasts eighteen thousand brass-fitted wooden seats for spectators.

Even from outside the stadium, passers-by can easily tell when a ceremony is in progress—the crowd inside roars, and the massive torches placed around the upper perimeter emit purple smoke.

Of all the ceremonies recognized by the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, the Ceremony of Flaws is the holiest. Held once per year at the autumnal equinox, this combat ritual marks the failure of the mishtai to achieve perfection of form, and another year of failure in that same enterprise for the skarns.

Simultaneously, however, the ceremony refreshes and reinforces the spinemeld warriors' dedication to their millennia-old quest.

On average, one spinemeld warrior per year dies in the Ceremony of Flaws.

Some of these fallen warriors are restored to life through raise dead spells, but many consider it an honor to die in the Mishtoran.

Another notable ceremony is the Ritual of Sundering, which marks the split of the rilkan and skarn races and features a ritual in which rilkans are burned in effigy.

The Green Spine Tournament welcomes new spinemeld warriors into the Hierarchy of Spinemeld Warriors, and the Ceremony of Renewal allows old and frail skarn to choose an honorable death in ritualized combat over an ignominious descent into decrepitude.

Finally, the Ceremony of Proof invites all sorts of fighters to test their mettle against the best of the spinemeld warriors.

PC spinemeld warriors are required to compete in the Green Spine Tournament upon attaining 1st level in the prestige class, and characters of other combat-oriented classes might be invited to compete in the Ceremony of Proof.

The Mishtoran amphitheater features extensive training rooms, sparring facilities, and purifying salt baths located underneath the stands.

Around the periphery, various vendors sell icons, perfumes, ceremonial silks, and votive candles at individual stalls.

The perfects always worry that some outside source might corrupt the ceremonies by trying to "fix" the fights, so they might assign a PC to listen in the training rooms or outdoor areas and relay any conversations involving potential corruption back to them.

The current august perfect of roses in this area is Aqrom Orit (LN incarnate 2/fighter 4/spinemeld warrior 10), lord of the Mishtoran.

He is attended by three male skarn spines of snow (LG and LE soulborn 5/spinemeld warrior 5), two female skarn spines of rain (LG and LE soulborn 6/spinemeld warrior 4), and one female skarn flaw seeker (LN fighter 1/wizard 8/spinemeld warrior 3).

A cleric of Wee Jas (cleric 9) oversees the shops selling paraphernalia and tends to the fallen.

TOTEM RAGER

"I am the wrath of all beasts bound into one terrible form."

—Sikudhani, the Bringer of War

The totem rager embodies the wrath of nature in its most bestial form.

Like the barbarian, she can stir herself into a fierce rage to cleave her enemies, and like the totemist, she can shape the forces of nature into soulmelds that grant her the power of magical beasts.

But only in the totem rager do these abilities feed upon each other like the beasts of the wild, growing stronger from one another's essence.

She can use her rage to make her soulmelds better, and use her soulmelds to make her virtually unstoppable in combat.

BECOMING A TOTEM RAGER

Since a totem rager needs both the ability to rage and the ability to bind soulmelds to her totem chakra, the best path into this prestige class is to combine the barbarian and totemist classes.

At least two levels of totemist and one of barbarian are required, but since the base attack bonus prerequisite mandates a character level higher than 3rd, most candidates take additional levels in those two classes.

A few levels in druid or ranger might also prove useful, but few candidates stray from the wilderness-oriented classes.

Since a totem rager is primarily a fighting character, she needs a high Strength score.

A high Constitution score is also vital, both for the additional hit points it provides and because it controls her meldshaping ability.

Finally, a high Charisma score can improve her wild empathy ability.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 5 ranks, Survival 9 ranks.

Feat: Cobalt Rage.

Special: Ability to bind soulmelds to totem chakra, rage class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Craft, Handle Animal, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nature), Listen, Profession, Ride, Spot, Survival, Swim

CLASS FEATURES

As a totem rager, you depend heavily on your rage ability and your soulmelds, and the new abilities you gain allow those key features to work together more effectively.

Using your rage ability makes your totemist soulmelds better by giving you extra essentia to invest.

If you then invest that essentia in your rage ability, you can extend its duration and increase both your damage and your Will save modifier.

All of the following are class features of the totem rager prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: At each totem rager level except 1st and 6th, you increase your meldshaper level, the number of soulmelds you can shape, the number of chakra binds you can create, and your essentia pool as if you had gained a level in the meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the totem rager level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as new tiers of chakra binds.

If you had more than one meldshaping class before becoming a totem rager, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining your essentia pool, meldshaper level, and the number of soulmelds and chakra binds available.

Totem Rage (Su): You can enhance the power of your rage by tapping into the furious spirits of the beasts within you. The essentia capacity of your Cobalt Rage feat increases by 1.

Furthermore, as long as a soulmeld occupies your totem chakra, you gain a number of extra essentia points equal to one-half your totem rager level (minimum 1) while you rage.

At your option, you can invest some or all of this extra essentia into your Cobalt Rage feat as a free action. (This option is an exception to the normal rule that essentia can be invested in an incarnum feat only once every 24 hours).

You must make this decision when you begin your rage, and you cannot shift any essentia away from Cobalt Rage while you are raging.

You can invest any remaining extra essentia in other feats, soulmelds, or class abilities as normal.

When your rage ends, you lose this extra essentia, and all your essentia investments return to what they were initially.

For example, a totemist 2/barbarian 4/totem rager 6 has an essentia capacity of 4 for her Cobalt Rage feat (3 for her character level, +1 for totem rage) and has chosen to invest 2 points of essentia in Cobalt Rage.

When she enters a rage, she gains 3 extra points of essentia. She can immediately invest up to 2 points of this essentia in her Cobalt Rage feat for a total investment of 4 (the maximum capacity for the feat).

She can invest the remaining point elsewhere as normal.

When her rage ends, the extra essentia gained from totem rage is lost.

Her essentia investment in Cobalt Rage returns to 2, and any other investment she made with the extra essentia returns to what it was before she raged.

Had her initial investment in Cobalt Rage been 1 or 0 points of essentia instead of 2, she could have invested all 3 extra essentia points in that feat.

Wild Empathy (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, you can improve the attitude of an animal.

See the druid class feature, page 35 of the Player's Handbook.

Your totem rager level stacks with levels of any other classes that grant the wild empathy ability for the purpose of determining the bonus.

Extra Rage: At 2nd level and again at 8th level, you gain one extra use per day of your rage ability.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you gain the ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

See the barbarian class feature, page 26 of the Player's Handbook.

If you already have damage reduction against damage of all types from another source, the amounts stack.

For example, a totemist 2/barbarian 7/totem rager 3 has DR 1/- from her barbarian levels and DR 1/- from her totem rager levels.

Thus, her total DR from these sources is 2/-.

This damage reduction does not stack with damage reduction specific to any one type of damage.

At 7th level, your damage reduction increases to 2/-.

This value stacks with other damage reduction abilities you might have as above.

Chakra Binds: Beginning at 4th level, you can bind your soulmelds or magic items to your crown, feet, or hands chakra.

When you attain 9th level, your arms, brow, and shoulder chakras become available for chakra binds.

Extended Rage (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, the duration of your rage increases by a number of rounds equal to the points of essentia you invest in your Cobalt Rage feat. This benefit does not stack with that of the Extend Rage feat (see Complete Warrior and the EBERRON campaign setting).

Totem Chakra Bind: When you attain 10th level, the essentia capacity for any soulmeld bound to your totem chakra increases by an additional point, adding to the expanded capacity from your totemist levels for a total of +2.

PLAYING A TOTEM RAGER

People talk about the wrath of a hurricane or the fury of a tsunami, but they are speaking in metaphors and have no inkling of the truth.

You know the real rage of nature—the fury that burns in the creatures of the wild when they fight to defend their lives, their lairs, and the lands they call home.

You might find the source of your own rage in any of these motivations—you could be a staunch defender of the wilderness against the encroachment of civilization, or you might fight like a fury for simple self-preservation.

Whatever your reason, you leap into battle as if you were a beast, raking with all four claws and sinking your teeth into your prey.

That visceral rage is the true form of nature's wrath, and you have made it your own.

COMBAT

Combat is your element, and you are most at home in the forefront of it.

You probably don't have a very high Armor Class, but you can soak up and deal out plenty of damage.

Rage as often as you can, and use your soulmelds to enhance your abilities in melee combat.

The best soulmelds for you are the ones that let you make natural attacks or increase the damage you deal, since those options fit naturally with your favorite tactics—namely, wading into combat and cutting down your opponents like wheat.

Even so, it's a good idea to shape at least one soulmeld that gives you an alternative to melee.

A meld that provides you with a distance weapon (such as basilisk mask or frost helm) gives you an attack that you can use at range and also lets you hurt opponents that can resist your melee attacks.

Progression as a totem ranger means you get better at what you do best.

You don't gain any unique special abilities, although the ability to bind soulmelds to your chakras makes your soulmelds both more versatile and more powerful.

You do gain additional uses per day of your rage ability, damage reduction to help you resist enemy attacks, better meldshaping, and the ability to extend your rage.

Be sure to take advantage of your increased damage-dealing ability by putting as much essentia into your Cobalt Rage feat as you can spare, especially against monsters that are difficult to take down.

ADVANCEMENT

If you started your career as a totemist, you discovered along the way that channeling incarnum derived from beast souls also opened a channel for an enhanced sort of rage.

A digression into the barbarian class was the next logical step.

If you started your career as a barbarian, the path of the totemist soon began calling to the beast within you.

In either case, you now know that you can infuse your rage with incarnum and use that heightened wrath to empower your soulmelds.

As you attain higher totem rager levels, you continue to hone the abilities you gained from your previous classes.

You need neither formal training nor membership in any organization to enhance your combat prowess by following the totem rager's path—you simply draw from your personal essence to improve your meldshaping and increase the power of your rage.

Some totem ragers describe this process as "becoming one with the beast", and prefer to seek out their primal natures through long retreats in wilderness areas between adventures.

But such sabbaticals are not strictly necessary; the way that you mark your progress as a totem rager is up to you.

To maximize your effectiveness, choose feats that enhance your best abilities.

Feats that expand the essentia capacity of your Cobalt Rage and your soulmelds can dramatically improve your combat prowess.

More basic combat feats, such as those in the Power Attack tree, also complement your strengths.

As far as skills go, try to continue improving both Intimidate and Survival throughout your career.

You are a frightening figure who is at home in the wild, and these skills help to reinforce that image.

RESOURCES

Like a barbarian, you can benefit greatly from a magic weapon, magic armor, and items that enhance your Strength and Constitution.

Magic boots or other items that increase your already high speed or grant you different forms of movement can help you build on your strengths in a different way.

Magic items that help to cover your weaknesses are useful as well—particularly those that compensate for the low Armor Class you probably have thanks to your lack of armor proficiencies and the AC penalty you take for raging.

TOTEM RAGERS IN THE WORLD

"Sikudhani, you come with me.

I like your magic."

—Krusk, half-orc barbarian

Totem ragers can function as tribal war leaders, wilderness hunters, trailblazers, or violent mystics.

But even a totem rager whose role among her native people is narrowly defined can find different uses for her talents in the world beyond her homeland.

DAILY LIFE

Though totem ragers typically begin their careers as totemists, they are more likely to serve as war leaders for their tribes than as spiritual guides.

In times of peace, they become loners and outcasts, wandering the wilderness alone to commune with the magical beasts they revere.

When war threatens again, though, they return to their people and lead the warriors into battle, inspiring the troops with their ferocity and courage.

Totem ragers who venture into civilized lands find work as caravan guards, guides, explorers, or hunters.

NOTABLES

The totem rager Hapuna-tantha was a great leader of the Mountain People in the far north.

He gained fame in the outside world for leading the entire tribe's warriors in defense of their homeland against an invading army of dwarves who sought new lands to mine.

In the Amedio Jungle, Kuntabwa the Red was a brutal totem rager who united thirteen Olman clans in a campaign of conquest.

Years later, she finally met her doom somewhere in the Hellfurnaces.

ORGANIZATION

Totem ragers have no more need of a unifying organization than totemists or barbarians do.

In foreign lands, however, a member of this prestige class might find comfort in the company of others from her homeland.

Since she comes from the wilderness, such individuals could be difficult to find, though any business or guild that caters to barbarians is a likely place to seek pleasant companionship.

NPC REACTIONS

The reaction of NPCs to a totem rager depends on their attitude toward her people.

Members of the totem rager's own tribe or a tribe friendly to hers treat her with respect bordering on reverence and begin encounters with a friendly attitude.

Members of enemy tribes greet her with hostile or at least unfriendly reactions, though fear prevents any overt hostility.

The reactions of people in civilized lands vary widely, but hover around the unfriendly side of indifferent, based on a general prejudice toward barbaric people.

TOTEM RAGER LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (nature) or Knowledge (the planes) skill can research totem ragers to learn more about them.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below her Knowledge (nature) or Knowledge (the planes) check result.

DC 10: Totem ragers combine the totemists' worship of magical beasts with the raging fury of barbarians.

DC 15: Totem ragers can shape incarnum into soulmelds the way totemists do, but they also use soul energy to empower their barbarian rage and extend its duration.

They serve as war leaders for their people.

DC 20: Totem ragers draw on the soul energy of the beasts within, shaping soulmelds that mimic the special abilities of magical beasts.

Characters can also use the Knowledge (geography) skill to learn about the peoples and cultures that typically produce totem ragers in a given campaign world.

TOTEM RAGERS IN THE GAME

The totem rager prestige class explores the natural multiclass combination of barbarian and totemist—two classes that blend well both conceptually and mechanically.

The presence of totem ragers is a logical way to introduce the use of incarnum into any culture that includes barbarians.

The totem rager could appear as the new tribal war leader of a barbarian clan, or as a mysterious figure who comes to the aid of the tribes whenever danger threatens.

Either way, the totem rager can function as either a villain or a neutral or friendly NPC.

The totem rager is also a very player-friendly prestige class option.

Players who enjoy smashing enemies in combat are likely to enjoy the extra combat options that this prestige class presents.

At the same time, players who like to explore the inner world of a character's thoughts and emotions can have a field day with the totem rager.

Roleplaying the "fish out of water" aspect of a barbarian-type in the civilized world is a natural place to begin, but the spiritual connection between the totem rager and the magical beasts of the natural world is also excellent roleplaying fodder.

If you have a totem rager PC in your game, be sure to provide her with plenty of targets for her rage.

Cerebral encounters that must be solved by thinking or talking are likely to frustrate her, so be sure to include a few straight-up combats against foes frothing with bestial fury.

ADAPTATION

The totem rager need not be pigeonholed into a role as the barbaric outsider in the civilized world.

A civilized society in your campaign world might spawn a "back to nature" movement that encourages people to rediscover their primal connections with the forces of nature and unlock their inner rage.

The totem rager could add an extra dimension to the well-trained barbarian/fighter character model.

Such a character could function as a specialized soldier who has learned to trigger a primitive rage as a combat tactic.

On the other hand, giving a player the opportunity to bring a character into the main campaign area from a place far outside it can add depth and realism to a campaign world.

The player could help to develop the culture and history of her character's homeland, sharing the work of world-building so that you don't need to do it all.

UMBRAL DISCIPLE

"Shadows can be found anywhere—even in the soul. Let me show you why you should be afraid of the dark."

—Javarral Lyssselvedar of the Shadow Lion Sept

The umbral disciple is a student of shadow in both a literal and a metaphysical sense.

By infusing shadows with essentia, he can harness both the darkness of the world and the darkness of his own soul to meet whatever goals he has in mind.

Others might shrink from dark places and dread the creatures that stir when the light fades, but the umbral disciple stares into the heart of the night without flinching. Much like the monk, the umbral disciple seeks to explore his own nature and perfectly master the dark power he finds within himself.

The rare combination of stealth, mobility, and combat prowess that he cultivates makes him an excellent spy, burglar, magic-wielder, or assassin.

Some umbral disciples become freelance monster hunters or vigilantes dedicated to seeking out evildoers and teaching them to fear the dark.

Others become heartless killers who use their powers to prey on the weak and the defenseless.

But regardless of how their skills manifest, all umbral disciples are drawn to the shadows, where they can clearly see the potential of their own souls.

BECOMING AN UMBRAL DISCIPLE

First and foremost, an umbral disciple needs the ability to hide well, and he must be able to rely on his hearing when sight fails.

In addition, he must develop strong mental discipline and study at least a small amount of arcane lore.

Monks, rogues, or rangers can meet these requirements easily, though a few umbral disciples begin their careers as ninjas (described in Complete Adventurer).

An umbral disciple also needs a store of soul energy with which to shape the shadows.

Azurins and duskings meet this requirement automatically because of the racial trait that grants them essentia.

However, a candidate can also meet this prerequisite by taking an incarnum feat such as Indigo Strike or Sapphire Smite, or by taking a level in the incarnate or totemist meldshaping classes.

The key abilities for an umbral disciple include Dexterity (for stealth and agility in combat) and Constitution (for soulmelds).

Depending on the character's other classes and specific focus, a high Strength or Wisdom score can also prove useful.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Hide 8 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks, Listen 8 ranks.

Essentia Pool: 1.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Hide, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Sense Motive, Spot, Tumble

CLASS FEATURES

As an umbral disciple, you are most comfortable in the shadows.

Thus, the abilities you gain focus on stealth, concealment, and the ability to strike by surprise.

Furthermore, you can improve the potency of umbral disciple class features by investing essentia in them, as noted in the individual ability descriptions below.

Your essentia capacity for these abilities depends on your character level, as given on Table 2–1: Essentia Capacity on page 19.

All of the following are class features of the umbral disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Essentia Pool: Your essentia pool increases in size as you progress in the umbral disciple prestige class, as given on Table 6–9: The Umbral Disciple.

This essentia can be invested into your class features to increase their power, or in incarnum feats and soulmelds, as normal.

Sept Knowledge: If you belong to a sept, you can draw upon its collected knowledge.

You gain a +2 bonus on any Knowledge or Gather Information checks made within 24 hours of speaking to another member of the same sept, or a +5 bonus if you visit the sept's citadel or stronghold.

Step of the Bodiless (Su): You can rely on the souls that grant you power to lighten your step and bear you up as you move.

Beginning at 1st level, you gain a +2 enhancement bonus on Balance, Climb, Jump, and Tumble checks for every point of essentia you invest in this class feature.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you deal extra damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook.

Embrace of Shadow (Su): Starting at 3rd level, you can weave incarnum into an obscuring shadow that clings to you, providing you with a limited amount of concealment. While you are thus cloaked in shadow, each attack made against you has a 10% miss chance per point of essentia invested in this ability.

This miss chance does not stack with miss chances provided by any other ability or effect.

If the miss chance granted by this ability is 20% or higher, you also gain the ability to hide in plain sight—that is, you can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

See the ranger class feature, page 48 of the Player's Handbook.

Embrace of shadow is usable at will.

Sight of the Eyeless (Su): At 7th level, you can tap into the piercing vision of pure, bodiless souls to perceive what would otherwise be hidden.

Investing essentia in this ability grants you the blindsight ability (range 10 feet per point of essentia invested).

Sight of the eyeless is usable at will.

Soulchilling Strike (Su): At 9th level, you can imbue your melee attacks with a soulchilling essence.

For every point of essentia you invest in this ability, your attack deals 1 point of Strength damage to the target (Fortitude negates, DC 10 + invested essentia + your Con modifier) in addition to its normal damage.

Only one attack per round conveys this soulchilling effect. If you are making a full attack, the effect is delivered by your first successful attack of the round, and the rest of your attacks are resolved normally.

This effect applies to all types of melee attacks made while essentia is invested, regardless of whether natural or manufactured weapons are used.

Kiss of the Shadows (Su): At 10th level, you learn to wield the shadows themselves as your weapons.

Tangible, incarnum-laced shadows of your weapons or fists follow your every strike, mirroring your attacks at range. Your reach increases by 5 feet for every point of essentia invested in this class feature, but only on your turn.

While this ability is active, you are treated as if you were standing in the square adjacent to the target that is closest to your actual location for the purpose of flanking, attacking from higher ground, or similar situations.

At the end of your turn, your reach (and thus the area you threaten) returns to normal.

Multiclass Note: Monks who take levels in umbral disciple can continue to advance as monks.

PLAYING AN UMBRAL DISCIPLE

By peering into the darkness of your soul, you gain perfect understanding of the self and achieve a level of power to which few others can aspire.

Like the soundless and patient shadows, you are silent and watchful.

Through long meditation and endless practice, you have mastered the secrets of action without thought, of striking without hesitation, and of purpose unclouded by mortal longings and empty desires.

You are content to let others talk and plan, but when it is time to act, you strike first.

The shadows are your friends, and you use them as extensions of yourself to defeat your enemies.

Fearless and deliberate in battle, you do not fear death, but neither do you court it.

The best fight is one in which your enemy never knows you have been there and has no chance to defend himself.

Like most umbral disciples, you probably started your training in the art of shadow manipulation as a member of an elite order or society known as a sept.

Your particular sept might be an introspective fellowship of ascetics, a thieves' guild, or even a cabal of deadly assassins, depending upon your personal goals and focus.

On finishing your initial training, you might choose to leave the sept behind and pursue your own interests, or you might swear unswerving loyalty and devotion to your sept master and serve at his discretion.

COMBAT

As a scout and spy of uncanny ability, you can best serve your adventuring companions by providing information. By detecting obstacles and threats without alerting the enemy to the presence of intruders, you can greatly improve your comrades' chances to defeat upcoming dangers.

Your natural stealth combined with your sneak attack ability means that you can begin a fight by attacking from concealment, then fade back into the shadows before your enemy can strike back.

In an open battle, look for opportunities to flank foes, and don't be afraid to draw back and hide so that you can attack from ambush later in the fight.

Your soulchilling strike ability is an excellent tool for weakening tough enemies so that your allies can defeat them more easily.

When faced with a group of foes, deal out all the Strength damage you can to enemy fighters or strong monsters early in the fight.

Look for ways to start a battle by using your soulchilling strike on multiple foes to weaken them all before your comrades have to face them in a stand-up fight.

Perhaps your best high-level ability, however, is kiss of the shadows, which allows you to engage large and dangerous foes without coming within their reach.

Combining that ability with Spring Attack or a high Tumble check result lets you strike and then fade away without ever coming within sword's-reach of your enemy.

ADVANCEMENT

Septs do not actively recruit new members, so you must seek one out on your own if you want to gain the skill and knowledge needed to become a master of the shadows. Rumors of a reclusive order of monks, a secret brotherhood of shadow-shaping thieves, or a cult of dark assassins could guide you to a sept, but be sure you are ready to walk the path of the umbral disciple when you arrive.

If you seek out a sept without the skills necessary to join, you hazard your life, since the members of many septs simply kill the unready without a second thought.

While you are a low-level umbral disciple, your activities might vary widely, depending on the exact nature of your sept.

If you belong to the Shadow Lion Sept (see page 160), you are expected to play the role of a wandering sellsword or ascetic—a traveler in search of a cause to serve.

As you travel about the land, you quietly observe matters of interest and report on them to your superiors.

For example, you might be asked to track the changing fortunes of nobles, high officials, and powerful merchants who are likely to seek the services (or the knowledge) of the Shadow Lion order.

From time to time, the leaders of your sept might ask you to spy on particular people, steal certain items, or even kill specific individuals.

(Though the umbral disciples of the Shadow Lion Sept are not assassins by trade, they are not above killing the enemies of their employers).

As you attain higher levels, you should try to increase your essentia pool at every opportunity.

Consider taking the Bonus Essentia feat, or any other feat that gives you an extra point of essentia.

To maximize your stealth potential, keep your embrace of the shadow and step of the bodiless class features invested with maximum essentia as much of the time as you can.

You might also want to seek out magic items that increase your Hide bonus, such as a cloak of elvenkind.

Keep your Hide skill maximized at all times too, because you need to hide quite a bit during your missions.

If you are not troubled by moral qualms about killing, you can easily graduate from umbral disciple to assassin.

If you choose that path, you'll find that the combination of great stealth and a death attack makes you a fearsome foe indeed.

RESOURCES

As a member of an umbral disciple sept, you are expected to exemplify a creed of self-reliance and initiative.

Septs provide few resources to members, even when a dangerous and important mission looms.

The best aid that a disciple can commonly expect from his fellows is information.

Umbral disciples spend a great deal of time observing and reporting to their sept leaders, and you can gain access to their store of knowledge simply by asking.

This benefit is reflected in the sept knowledge ability.

In addition to information, you can expect lodging and board in your sept's home stronghold for as long as you wish.

Conditions are austere, but because the stronghold is difficult to find, it is a safe retreat from external dangers.

On the other hand, spending a lot of time in the sept's stronghold makes you all the more accessible to the sept master if any important missions or errands should arise.

UMBRAL DISCIPLES IN THE WORLD

"The thief escaped over the rooftops.

It looked like he ran across the shadows themselves!"

—Doreth, a guard of House Arcandos

A sept of umbral disciples is an excellent variation on the standard thieves' guild or evil monastery in the campaign world.

Umbral disciples can serve as spies, assassins, or wandering troubleshooters, depending upon the nature of their septs.

An evil sept might secretly amass influence, eventually becoming the power behind the throne in a strife-riven kingdom.

A neutral sept might simply serve as a conduit for information about the adventurers' evil nemesis, or its members might accept payment from that same nemesis to punish intrusive heroes.

DAILY LIFE

Since umbral disciples are wanderers at heart, they place little importance on material wealth and creature comforts. Because an umbral disciple travels lightly and often, it's a rare day when he awakens in the same town as he did the previous day.

Occasionally, however, he might be ordered by his sept master to serve a particular person or cause, sometimes for months or years at a time.

Septs accept commissions for various kinds of activities and provide personnel to carry them out.

For example, a sept might be retained by a powerful noble house to provide a guard for one of its important members, to supply a suitable spymaster to advise the leaders of the house, or to hide an important person or item in the safety of its hidden fortress.

When not actively working on an assignment, the members of a sept are expected to contribute to the organization's storehouse of information.

All members are exhorted to take a keen interest in the affairs of the people around them and report their discoveries to their superiors, who add that knowledge to the sept's wealth of hoarded information.

After all, who knows to what use a bit of information could be put someday?

ORGANIZATION

Different septs of umbral disciples have different motives and might use different methods.

For example, the Shadow Lion Sept is a fellowship of information brokers, spies, sellswords, and killers-for-hire who use their powers over shadow to aid the causes of their patrons and embarrass or harm their patrons' enemies.

Any noble house that can afford the fee can hire the Shadow Lions, and they do not necessarily turn away commissions that might represent conflicts of interest. The leader of the Shadow Lion Sept is the fierce old Grand Master Therim (LE male human ninja 7/umbral disciple 9). He is far more aggressive than his predecessors were in advancing the sept's influence over the patrons who seek its services.

More than one prospective employer has found himself deeply indebted to the grand master, and Therim is not one to forget or forgive such debts.

In fact, he dreams of the day when the Shadow Lions will rise as the secret masters over the entire kingdom, taking power in a silent coup backed by his many unwilling debtors.

Below the grand master are four high masters, each of whom has specific responsibilities within the sept.

The high master of the hold is in charge of the sept's stronghold and its defenses.

The high master of the tome, the sept's chief spymaster, collates the reports of wandering sept members from all over the land and gleans hidden truths from this sea of rumors.

The high master of the hand supervises the training of less experienced sept brothers and directs the Shadow Lions in assassinations, abductions, raids, and other such criminal activities.

The high master of the wind keeps track of sept brothers who are currently wandering abroad.

The current high master of the hold and high master of the wind actively oppose the grand master and his aggressive ways, arguing that he is endangering the sept with his reckless tampering in the affairs of the realm.

At this point, however, they lack the strength to do more than urge him toward caution.

Each high master oversees a small number of masters, disciples, and initiates.

Characters with one or two levels in the umbral disciple prestige class are considered initiates, characters with three to five levels are considered disciples, and characters with six or more levels are known as masters.

Rigorous tests of physical fortitude, cunning, and skill are required to win the belt of the next higher rank.

When a high master position becomes vacant (usually only through the death of the previous office holder), a competition is held to choose a new one from all the current masters.

The total strength of the Shadow Lion sept is about thirty umbral disciples, but no more than a dozen are ever in the hold at any one time.

NPC REACTIONS

Umbral disciples tend to be sinister characters who arouse suspicion in others.

Few good-hearted folk enfold themselves in shadow or seek to master the powers of darkness, and even the best-intentioned disciple cuts an intimidating figure—especially when he makes use of his class abilities. Taken together, all these factors make common folk and authority figures unfriendly toward umbral disciples who do not conceal what they are.

However, an umbral disciple who manifests no shadow-wielding powers can pass for a simple monk, ranger, or rogue, at least for a short time.

An umbral disciple who hasn't openly displayed his powers is treated with indifference by most people he meets.

The clerics of deities who battle against shadowy foes harbor a special dislike for umbral disciples.

Clerics of Pelor believe that anyone who turns away from the light must be a devotee of evil, and clerics of Saint Cuthbert resent the mercenary nature of umbral disciples. Furthermore, the practice of murder and skullduggery for pay contradicts the dogma of both those deities.

UMBRAL DISCIPLE LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (local) skill can research the umbral disciples to learn more about them.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below his Knowledge (local) check result.

DC 10: "Some martial artists and criminals are born to the shadows and can appear and disappear in the blink of an eye.

They're at home in darkness, and the shadows protect them from harm.

In perfect darkness, they can find you by the beating of your heart and kill you with a single strike".

DC 15: "The Shadow Lion Sept is a hidden brotherhood of shadow-warriors.

These assassins, man-hunters, and vengeance-takers sell their services to whichever lords or noble houses can afford them.

The Shadow Lions silence anyone who figures out too much about them.

Their calling card is a lion's-claw mark of black ink, drawn on the faces of their victims".

DC 20: "These shadow-warriors call themselves umbral disciples, and they're organized into numerous brotherhoods or orders called septs.

Some umbral disciples are black-hearted assassins, while others are spies and stalkers.

They can vanish into the shadows even when they have no real place to hide, and they are extremely good at attacking from concealment.

In fact, they can wield the shadows themselves as weapons".

Characters wishing to make contact with a sept of umbral disciples such as the Shadow Lions can reach the right contact by asking around in the sorts of places where criminals and killers-for-hire spend their time.

Though few sept members frequent such dismal places, they cultivate contacts who do.

A DC 20 Gather Information check made in such a place is sufficient to arrange a meeting with a representative of the Shadow Lions.

Characters can also approach the sept's chapterhouse openly—assuming they can find one.

Septs occupy remote monasteries or hidden strongholds in the wilderness, but a DC 20 Knowledge (geography) check can steer the seeker toward a likely spot.

The few travelers who come upon such places by accident typically assume that they've encountered an order of sinister monks, but they are allowed to continue on their way without harm—provided they haven't been too nosy.

UMBRAL DISCIPLES IN THE GAME

You can easily introduce umbral disciples into a campaign as spies assigned to follow the heroes' movements, or as thieves or assassins sent to strike back at them for their success in thwarting an evil noble's plans, or even as elite guards who stand at an evil lord's side.

While umbral disciples make good rivals or opponents for PCs, they also work well as members of an adventuring party.

An umbral disciple player character does not drive events in any particular direction in most games, especially if his sept is more interested in gathering information than in manipulating events.

Most PC parties wander extensively anyway, and if the umbral disciple is keeping his eyes open for rumors of interest and items that seem out of place, he can serve as a ready-made conduit for feeding adventure hooks to the heroes.

Look for opportunities to create encounters in which the umbral disciple can show off his ability to sneak ahead of the party.

Make sure that he has at least an occasional opportunity to make a mission easier by taking out a sentry or creating a distraction that the other heroes can exploit.

And finally, an umbral disciple lives for the chance to get into a place where he isn't supposed to be and solve a problem on his own, so let him do so at least once in a while.

ADAPTATION

If your campaign does not support a shadowy, semicriminal sort of organization, you could easily convert a sept into a courageous band of freedom fighters whose members use stealth and steely resolve to evade the agents of a tyrannical overlord.

You could also create a large, powerful, and wealthy sept at the heart of an army of evil martial artists and rogues.

This option works especially well if one or more of the players at your table is running a good-aligned monk to oppose such an organization.

The army's warriors would be low-level monks or fighters in such an arrangement, and the umbral disciples would be the elite commanders.

An umbral disciple sept would also work well as a monastic order affiliated with an evil temple, such as the church of Shar in the FORGOTTEN REALMS campaign setting.

WITCHBORN BINDER

"Sorcery is deceitful and duplicitous.

I serve truth.

Which do you think will prove the stronger?"

—Arienne Thorngage, Witchborn Binder of the Vigilant Servants

Few creatures pose as much threat to human society as arcane spellcasters do.

A single wizard can easily destroy an entire town, subvert a kingdom, or twist the very laws of nature with a few well-placed spells.

Against this obvious threat stands a fellowship of royal agents known as the Vigilant Servants, whose members make it their business to frustrate the plans of the witchborn—namely sorcerers, wizards, and other users of arcane magic.

The organization's elite agents are the witchborn binders—incarnum-wielding mage-hunters who can use the power of soul energy to create shields, traps, and shackles that can smother the magical powers of the witchborn and render them helpless.

In most lands, witchborn binders are stern agents of good charged with hunting down those who employ arcane magic for evil purposes.

Though they are often grim and determined, these witchborn binders do not go out of their way to persecute arcane spellcasters who use their magic for the benefit of others.

In other nations, however, witchborn binders are solitary bounty hunters who hunt spellcasters for money with little thought as to whether their quarry might serve good or evil.

A rare few witchborn binders act as agents of oppressive regimes whose leaders wish to prevent any use of magic outside the purview of the land's tyrannical overlords.

BECOMING A WITCHBORN BINDER

The most direct path into the witchborn binder prestige class is to take six levels in incarnate or totemist and buy the appropriate feats and skills.

However, a character who does not have a good Intelligence score might have trouble purchasing enough skill ranks to qualify.

A low-level ranger with levels in incarnate, however, can meet the prerequisites much more easily.

Constitution is a key ability for shaping soulmelds, and it also provides extra resistance to many deadly spells.

Similarly, good Dexterity and Wisdom scores help the witchborn binder withstand magical attacks and get close to her quarry.

Because of the high meldshaping level required for the prestige class, a witchborn binder tends to lack combat prowess, so a good Strength score can help her to hold her own in battle.

CLASS FEATURES

As a witchborn binder, you concern yourself with capturing and, when necessary, destroying arcane spellcasters.

Thus, the abilities of the prestige class focus on countering and defending against arcane magic, as well as physically restraining its users.

You can improve the potency of witchborn binder class features by investing essentia in them, as noted in the individual ability descriptions below.

Your essentia capacity for these abilities depends on your character level, as given on Table 2–1: Essentia Capacity on page 19.

All of the following are class features of the witchborn binder prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no new proficiencies with weapons, armor, or shields.

Meldshaping: At each witchborn binder level indicated on Table 6–10, you increase your meldshaper level, the number of soulmelds you can shape, the number of chakra binds you can create, and your essentia pool as if you had gained a level in the meldshaping class to which you belonged prior to gaining the witchborn binder level.

You do not, however, gain any other abilities of that class, such as new tiers of chakra binds.

If you had more than one meldshaping class before becoming a witchborn binder, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining your essentia pool, meldshaper level, and the number of soulmelds and chakra binds available.

Detect Magic (Sp): Beginning at 1st level, you can use detect magic at will.

See the spell, page 219 of the Player's Handbook.

Meldshield: Beginning at 1st level, you can use your essentia to protect yourself against magical attacks.

You gain an insight bonus equal to the essentia invested in this ability on all saving throws against spells and spell-like abilities.

Royal Purse: To finance your missions, you can draw out a sum of money equal to your witchborn binder level times 500 in gold pieces from the royal treasury (see Resources, page 165).

You can also withdraw or promise larger sums, but you must be prepared to explain your liberty with the ruler's gold if you do so, and you might be required to make restitution to the treasury if your explanation is found wanting.

You can withdraw these funds from any place where royal money is held—a government vault, a garrison's paychest, or the like—and you can issue IOUs in the monarch's name.

You can utilize this privilege only once at each witchborn binder level from 1st to 9th.

Any unused draws for a given level are lost as soon as you attain a new one.

Upon reaching 10th level, you can use this ability once per year for the rest of your career.

Dispelling Orb (Su): At 2nd level, you learn to shape a small orb of incarnum and hurl it at any target within 30 feet as a standard action.

If you succeed on a ranged touch attack, the dispelling orb functions as a targeted dispel magic spell (caster level equals your meldshaper level).

For every point of essentia you invest in the orb, you gain a +1 insight bonus on any dispel checks you make with it.

After the attack is resolved, the invested essentia returns to your essentia pool and can be reinvested as normal.

Essentia: At 2nd level and again at 6th level, you gain 1 extra point of essentia.

Mage Shackles (Su): Beginning at 4th level, as a standard action you can shape a set of shackles from incarnum. With a successful melee touch attack, you can use these shackles to bind a creature capable of arcane spellcasting or using spell-like abilities, as long as it is within one size category of you.

You must overcome any spell resistance the target creature might have with a successful caster level check, using your meldshaper level as your caster level, or the attack fails.

Once so bound, the target creature is considered entangled by the mage shackles and is also effectively barred from planar movement, as if affected by a dimensional anchor spell.

In addition, the affected creature must succeed on a caster level check (DC 10 + your meldshaper level + essentia invested in the mage shackles) to cast an arcane spell or use any spell-like ability.

The mage shackles cannot be damaged or broken except by an effect that unshapes a soulmeld, but a bound creature can escape from them as if they were masterwork manacles (Escape Artist DC 35).

A creature incapable of casting arcane spells or using spell-like abilities is unaffected by the mage shackles.

You can use this ability as often as you desire, though you can have only one set of mage shackles shaped at any time, since shaping a second set causes the first to disappear.

After 24 hours, your mage shackles automatically unshape unless you remain within 1 mile of the shackled creature.

Otherwise, they remain shaped until you choose to unshape them (a free action).

No one except you can use the mage shackles you shape—they simply refuse to function at anyone else's command.

Word of Abrogation (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, you can use your command of incarnum to counterspell your enemies.

To do so, you must first ready an action.

If any creature within 60 feet of you casts a spell or uses a spell-like ability, you can attempt to negate the effect as an immediate action with a caster level check (DC 11 + the enemy creature's caster level), using your meldshaper level as your caster level.

You gain a +1 bonus on the check for every point of essentia you invest in this ability.

You can abrogate only one spell or spell-like effect with each use of this ability, so if you are facing multiple spellcasters, you must decide which one to target with your word of abrogation and wait until your chosen target takes its turn.

Spiritflay (Su): Beginning at 8th level, you can catch a tiny bit of an arcane spellcaster's soulstuff between your hands and mangle it.

You can use this attack against any arcane spellcaster or creature with spell-like abilities that is within 60 feet of you.

The target creature must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 10 + your witchborn binder level + your Con modifier) or take 1d8 points of damage per point of essentia you invest in the ability, and also be nauseated for 1 round. A successful Fortitude save halves the damage and negates the nausea.

A creature that has no arcane spells prepared, no arcane spell slots unused, and no spell-like abilities available is immune to this attack.

Grim Integument (Su): At 10th level, you can shape a coffinlike shroud of incarnum around a foe up to 30 feet away as a full-round action that provokes attacks of opportunity.

Your foe can attempt a Reflex save (DC 10 + invested essentia + your Con modifier) to escape the grim integument before it forms around him.

If the target creature has spell resistance, you must make a caster level check to overcome it, using your meldshaper level as your caster level.

A successful saving throw renders the target immune to your grim integument for 24 hours.

Once the grim integument forms, the subject is rooted to the spot and unable to move, with its arms bound to its sides.

It can still speak and use spell-like abilities, psionics, or spells requiring only verbal components, but each time it attempts to use an arcane spell or spell-like ability, it takes 1d6 points of damage per point of essentia invested in the grim integument.

A successful Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + invested essentia + Con modifier) halves this damage.

Any damage the creature takes from this effect has the normal chance to disrupt its spell or spell-like ability.

Because the grim integument is opaque, it provides total cover and total concealment for the creature inside, but also prevents any one from seeing in or out.

The grim integument provides an unlimited supply of breathable air to its victim.

Unlike most creations of incarnum, the grim integument can be physically damaged.

The creature inside can burst it open with a successful Strength check (DC 20 + invested essentia), or it can be destroyed by damage in the same way as any object.

For every point of essentia invested in this ability, the grim integument has hardness 10 and 20 hit points.

Furthermore, any effect that unshapes a soulmeld destroys a grim integument.

If it is destroyed or unshaped by another, any essentia invested in it is lost for 24 hours, and you become fatigued. Otherwise, the grim integument persists for as long as you remain within 30 feet of the subject.

You can voluntarily unshape the grim integument as a full-round action.

If you do so, or if the creature inside escapes without destroying the grim integument, the incarnum shroud fades away into nothingness, but you suffer no loss of essentia or fatigue.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + your Constitution modifier (minimum once per day).

PLAYING A WITCHBORN BINDER

You know all too well the dangers posed by sorcerers and wizards who practice their craft irresponsibly.

The world has been scarred by countless magical catastrophes because mortals with no sense of respect and moderation are allowed to wield arcane power unchecked. While you grudgingly accept the idea that arcane magic can be wielded for good purposes, you are secretly convinced that the chance to achieve ultimate power eventually corrupts any arcanist.

Consequently, you keep half an eye on any sorcerer or wizard you meet—even those who claim to practice magic for the good of others—because you never know when they might turn to evil.

Though you are primarily concerned with protecting your countrymen from practitioners of evil magic, you are also a servant of the ruler and an enforcer of his laws.

You do not stand for injustice or wanton criminality in any form, and you are not above browbeating other agents of the government into performing their own duties.

However, you know that leading squads of soldiers into thieves' dens and the contraband-filled warehouses of crooked merchants is a poor use of your time.

After all, you are the realm's best defense against those who would seek to enslave or destroy others with arcane magic.

COMBAT

You are a specialist of sorts in combat.

If your opponents include a magic-wielding character or monster, you can do much to frustrate or contain that foe's efforts.

Against enemies who do not wield magic, however, you are no better a fighter than any incarnate or soulborn of equivalent experience.

If you became a witchborn binder by taking levels in incarnate, you must rely on your soulmelds to make you an effective combatant.

If you were a soulborn before becoming a witchborn binder, you remain a skillful fighter, but you command lesser meld shaping abilities.

Your dispelling orb is a powerful tool against enemies who rely on spells to improve their combat abilities.

Though useful against sorcerers and wizards, it truly shines when used against a spellcasters' allies, who benefit from spells such as bull's strength or haste.

Furthermore, you can use your dispelling orb repeatedly, but chances are good that the enemy spellcaster cannot restore her spell effects as easily.

When you gain access to your mage shackles ability, you'll find it a potent weapon against any kind of spell-using character or creature.

Ideally, you should try to begin every fight against such an opponent by binding her in your mage shackles.

Not only does it cripple her abilities, but it also leaves her entangled and subject to a dimensional anchor effect.

Your spiritflay ability is an excellent addition to your arsenal at higher levels.

While it does not deal a tremendous amount of damage, the chance to nauseate an opposing spellcaster represents a chance to win the battle in a single round.

Grim integument is even better, since it effectively shuts down all but the most determined spellcasters.

Furthermore, it can be used against any creature, whether it's a spellcaster or not.

For example, it can keep an outsider with spell-like abilities out of a battle while your companions fight its cohorts.

ADVANCEMENT

The leaders of the Vigilant Servants recruit watch-captains, army officers, temple servants, and others who demonstrate unusual loyalty and initiative in the service of authority. However, few recruits have what it takes to be a witchborn binder—namely, the ability to create soulmelds.

Consequently, the Vigilant Servants follow up on any rumors of incarnum-using heroes.

If they find any likely candidates, they lose no time in approaching them about joining the organization as one of its elite agents.

In fact, incarnum-users are so prized that such a recruit can negotiate very generous terms that allow her to pursue personal interests, such as adventuring.

Similarly, the Vigilant Servants are sometimes willing to overlook a lack of loyalty or reliability in an incarnum-wielding recruit, as long as they're confident that the prospective new witchborn binder is not an out-and-out murderer, traitor, or spy.

Once a new witchborn binder joins the Vigilant Servants (or is promoted from the organization's less-talented ranks), she becomes a roving center of royal authority.

She can arrest and interrogate suspects, commandeer local soldiers or watch officers, and investigate any sort of wrongdoing that catches her eye, whether it directly involves arcane magic or not.

She is expected to keep her superiors reasonably well informed as to her whereabouts, and she is obligated to drop any other business at hand to undertake whatever missions they assign her.

But beyond those restrictions, the organization's leaders believe that a witchborn binder does her best work when she is free to follow her own conscience and code.

Witchborn binders choose to progress through the class as directly as possible.

However, you might find it useful to intersperse your levels in witchborn binder with levels in a class that improves your fighting ability or skill use.

The combat abilities conferred by your meld shaping require you to be competent with physical attacks, so look for ways to improve your base attack bonus and learn new combat-oriented feats.

Consider taking the Bonus Essentia feat so that you can pour more essentia into your class abilities.

RESOURCES

Don't expect much help from other witchborn binders—each is a roving troubleshooter who represents the Vigilant Servants wherever she goes.

You do, however, receive a lot of support and assistance from the order itself, as well as the institutions of royal authority and lawkeeping in the realm—including the Church of Saint Cuthbert, which zealously supports the activities of the organization.

This assistance comes in three major forms: the power of arrest, the power of immunity, and the power of the royal purse.

Power of Arrest: You can arrest any person you suspect of wielding evil magic, of consorting with evil forces, or of plotting against monarch or realm.

Local watches or Royal Army garrisons hold persons you arrest for up to seven days without charges.

If you want someone to remain jailed longer, you must explain your suspicions and provide proof of wrongdoing to a royal magistrate, who then decides the merits of the case.

If you develop a habit of making false arrests, you might be censured by your superiors or even thrown out of the order.

Power of Immunity: The crown recognizes that you might have to bend a few lesser laws to meet the greater goal of securing the land against evil sorcery.

To that end, neither the city watch nor the royal guard will hinder or restrain you unless someone with a rank of at least captain orders it.

In practice, you might be arrested if you are caught committing a violent crime, but you will likely be set free as soon as your credentials are proven.

You abuse this power at your own risk—the monarch can revoke it at any time and make you answerable for any crimes you have committed.

Power of the Royal Purse: You can draw from the realm's treasury to finance your missions (as per the royal purse ability).

However, you are expected to be diligent and conservative in the use of the realm's money.

Requisitioning funds to retain the services of an adventuring band to help you capture a notorious evil sorcerer is perfectly acceptable, but showering your friends with gifts of the ruler's gold is another matter altogether.

WITCHBORN BINDERS IN THE WORLD

"Cursed hound!

Will you never leave me in peace?"

—Ilphigor the Black, evil necromancer

The witchborn binder prestige class is an interesting choice for a witch-hunting hero.

Armed with incarnum powers to defend herself against magic, she makes a dangerous and dogged adversary for any character who uses arcane magic.

Realms that suffer from the depredations of reckless or evil spellcasters are the perfect setting for the Vigilant Servants and their relentless agents.

A witchborn binder also makes a good enemy for player characters who use spells—especially if they tend to be scofflaws who think their powerful magic makes them answerable to no one.

DAILY LIFE

Whatever other interests a witchborn binder pursues, she is expected to keep a sharp eye out for signs of evil magic or monstrous incursions and put a stop to them without delay. When trouble isn't obviously forthcoming, she should make a point of keeping her superior well informed about any happenings of note in her district.

Thus, she regularly visits local temples of good-aligned gods, checks in on garrisons and government offices, and spends the occasional evening lurking in the shadows of the local inn, listening and watching.

The witchborn binder is expected to deal with trouble whenever it arises, using whatever resources are handy.

Agents of the Vigilant Servants keep mercenary bands of adventurers on retainer and use their services to solve problems.

Others build up a network of comrades and old "war buddies" on whose services they can draw at need.

The best witchborn binders serve not only as the quick and sure hand of the crown, but also as a court of last resort for common folk who can't get a problem addressed in any other way.

More than once, a witchborn binder has arrested and imprisoned a crooked judge or a noble scofflaw because of a commoner's complaint, letting the chips fall where they may.

NOTABLES

Arienne Thorngage, a halfling witchborn binder, has achieved a level of notoriety in her district for arresting several nobles who were later proven to have dabbled in necromancy.

Some doubted her evidence, but when a demon showed up at one noble's trial to serve in disguise as his counsel, she unmasked and captured him.

ORGANIZATION

The witchborn binders form the striking arm of a larger organization known as the Vigilant Servants that serves as a sort of secret service answering directly to the crown.

While the organization was ostensibly created to monitor the use of arcane magic, its broad reach and sweeping powers ensure that its members are involved in intelligence-gathering, spying, and clandestine missions that have nothing to do with protecting the realm against evil magic.

Despite the fact that the organization is an arm of the government, it is not at all bureaucratic in nature. Its members are primed for action, not paperwork.

Low-ranking Vigilant Servants (those who are not witchborn binders) serve as spies and informants embedded in army garrisons, noble retinues, temples, or mercantile guilds.

These agents gather information and pass it along to the higher levels of the organization, revealing their presence only when they must take action to protect the realm or its interests.

Witchborn binders aren't employed in mundane spying missions such as these, but they check up on and watch over junior members of the organization.

The current leader of the organization is high vigilant Tomas Erst, a former witchborn binder.

Beneath him are six vigilant eyes, each of whom oversees the Vigilant Servants' activities in a different district or region of the realm.

Each vigilant eye supervises a handful of witchborn binders and numerous junior members of the organization.

Though High Vigilant Erst is loyal to the king, he is unapologetic about his efforts to garner more power for the Vigilant Servants and to suppress the wealthy nobles and merchants who resent his organization's reach and influence.

A rank-and-file Vigilant Servant might hold one of three ranks: apt, sergeant, or captain.

The witchborn binders exist outside the normal rank structure, answering directly to the vigilant eyes, but are considered equal to captains in rank and authority. Since only the best and most talented members can become witchborn binders, High Vigilant Erst and the other leaders of the organization are strongly inclined to trust their judgment and back them up on all but the most wrongheaded efforts.

NPC REACTIONS

As an elite agent of the crown, a witchborn binder can expect a friendly or helpful reaction from other servants of law and order in the realm, including government officials and officers of the watch or the army.

But because witchborn binders are sometimes perceived as high-handed and arrogant, the common townsfolk and citizens tend to be less enthusiastic about their activities.

Thus, unless the people in a particular town have been suffering the effects of evil magic, they greet the witchborn binder with indifference tinged with more than a little fear and concern.

Members of the noble class have an unfriendly attitude toward witchborn binders, since they represent the unfettered power of the crown and are free to do as they wish to anyone they wish.

Arcane spellcasters—even those who shouldn't have anything to fear from the witchborn binders—are extremely suspicious of them, because more than a few neutral- or good-aligned sorcerers and wizards have fallen under a witchborn binder's suspicions over the years. The clergy of Saint Cuthbert supports witch born binders in their work, so clerics of that deity are friendly toward them.

WITCHBORN BINDER LORE

Characters with ranks in the Knowledge (nobility and royalty) skill can research the witchborn binders to learn more about them.

A character gains the information corresponding to all DCs equal to or below her Knowledge (nobility and royalty) check result.

DC 10: "The Vigilant Servants are agents of the crown charged with watching out for the illicit use of arcane magic.

The order's elite mage-hunters, known as witchborn binders, work to ferret out and capture the witchborn—that is, people who use magic for evil ends".

DC 15: "Witchborn binders are incarnum-wielders who can sniff out magic, and they're relentless trackers.

They have the ability to shape soulmelds, which they use against the spellcasters they hunt".

DC 20: "Witchborn binders can create magic shackles with which to bind evil spellcasters, and they can dispel or counter magic even though they're not spellcasters.

The toughest witchborn binders can even attack a spellcaster's soul, or imprison him in a casket of magic metal from which he cannot escape".

DC 30: "The leader of the Vigilant Servants is High Vigilant Tomas Erst.

Some say that too many of his political enemies have been exposed as evil wizards and dealt with appropriately.

So people who ask lots of awkward questions about the order and its activities should be careful".

The Vigilant Servants do not maintain any offices or garrisons within the kingdom, so contacting them can be a bit difficult.

Officers in the royal army, high government officials, or high-ranking clerics of the Church of Saint Cuthbert can send for a witchborn binder at need, but it might take her several days to reach a town or settlement that's a long way from the capital.

A character must succeed on a DC 15 Gather Information check to find an officer or official who knows how to contact the Vigilant Servants.

WITCHBORN BINDERS IN THE GAME

You can easily introduce a witchborn binder into your campaign by setting her up as a nemesis of the PCs—a bloodhound who dogs their every step.

A witchborn binder can also serve as a good patron for a PC party, retaining the group to take care of problems she has identified.

The Vigilant Servants as an organization can also fill either of these roles, even if you don't create a particular NPC witchborn binder for the heroes to interact with.

A witchborn binder PC has chosen a difficult path—she doesn't really fight well, she doesn't cast powerful spells, and she's not even a very good meldshaper.

She excels only in the performance of her sworn mission: taking on evil magic-wielders.

If you have a witchborn binder in your party, make sure that you include plenty of sinister sorcerers, wizards, and spell-using monsters in your adventures, so that she is regularly rewarded (or at least, not punished) for choosing to specialize as she did.

After all, the player of a witchborn binder who never gets a chance to clap an evil enchanter in mage shackles is likely to feel unsatisfied with her character.

ADAPTATION

Witchborn binders can be run as written only if your campaign includes a well-organized realm or kingdom in which arcane spellcasters are regarded with some suspicion.

However, you can easily adapt the organization and the witchborn binder prestige class to realms of a different sort. First of all, you can shift the focus of the witchborn binder from arcane spellcasters to evil divine spellcasters—maybe the prestige class exists to root out dark cults.

Witchborn binders could even be portrayed as demon-hunters, since their class abilities are reasonably useful against outsiders with powerful spell-like abilities.

Secondly, the Vigilant Servants don't need to be agents of a well-organized monarchy; they could just as well serve a council of oligarchs, a parliamentary assembly, or a theocratic government.

For that matter, the organization might have no association with governing authority at all—it could be a secret order of vigilantes who act when others are paralyzed with fear.

If you choose this arrangement, simply downplay the organization's resources and use of royal authority.

Finally, the Vigilant Servants can easily become a nemesis for your heroes.

Imagine the witchborn binders as the cruel agents of a tyrannical, lawful evil theocracy, charged with rooting out and destroying good spellcasters who resist the high priests' rule.

MANUAL OF THE PLANES (3.0)

DIVINE AGENT

God's Strong Right Hand.

The Goddess's Voice.

Servant of the Greater Powers.

The divine agent is a specially selected agent of her deity, and she acts in the service of that power or deity.

Divine agents are unrestricted by dogma or hierarchy, other than their accountability to their immediate (and highest) superior.

Clerics and paladins make excellent divine agents, but the class is not limited to them.

The deities have need for a variety of abilities and a variety of viewpoints.

A divine agent is often sent across the planes by her deity to attend to a crucial or delicate matter.

On such occasions, she is usually welcome to bring comrades along.

A low-level divine agent is often found on her native plane or the plane of her deity.

As divine agents progress in level, they are more common on other planes, where they perform missions at the behest of their deity.

Hit Dice: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a divine agent, the character must fulfill the following criteria:

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 7 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: The divine agent must have made peaceful contact with her deity or its direct agents (sometimes other divine agents acting on the deity's behalf).

Furthermore, a potential divine agent must have completed a specific task assigned by her deity in order to become a divine agent.

Once the task is completed, the character can become a divine agent at any point thereafter.

After a character has embarked on this path (as a 1st-level divine agent), a divine agent cannot become the divine agent of another deity.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine agent's class skills (and the key ability for each) are: Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Use Magic Device (Cha). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the divine agent prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine agents are proficient with all simple weapons, and with all types of armor.

Furthermore, a divine agent gains proficiency with her deity's favored weapon, if she does not already have it.

Granted Domain: A divine agent gains access to one domain chosen from among those her deity offers, and with it the granted power of that domain.

Divine agents who were once clerics essentially gain a third domain this way and can prepare their domain spells at each level from the new domain's list if they wish.

No matter what their prior class was, divine agents gain the granted power of the domain they choose.

In cases where the granted ability relies on cleric levels or allows turning or rebuking, use the sum of a character's cleric and divine agent levels to determine the ability's effect.

Contact (Su): A divine agent of 2nd level or higher may be contacted mentally by her deity or its agents, usually to impart particular knowledge and orders to the divine agent. This contact only functions one way; the divine agent cannot initiate the contact, question the orders, or ask for clarifications.

The nature of the contact depends on the deity: Dreams, ghostly visions, and illuminations from above are all possibilities.

Contact from the deity rarely interrupts the divine agent's normal actions.

Spells per Day: A divine agent continues training in magic as well as gaining power from her deity.

At 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th level, the divine agent gains new spells per day as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

This essentially means that she adds the level of divine agent to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly. If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a divine agent, she must decide to which class she adds each level of divine agent for the purposes of determining spells per day when she adds the new level.

Menacing Aura (Ex): At 3rd level, a divine agent gains the ability to generate an intangible, invisible aura of menace that weakens hostile creatures within a 20-foot radius.

Anyone about to attack the divine agent must attempt a Will save (DC = the divine agent's character level).

Those who fail the saving throw suffer a -2 morale penalty on attacks, checks, and saves for one full day or until they successfully damage the divine agent generating the aura.

A creature that made its initial save or damaged the divine agent is immune to that divine agent's aura for one day.

Godly Gift: At 3rd, 6th, and 9th levels, the deity bestows on the divine agent a gift.

Each deity's gift varies, but it is usually the ability to use a spell from one of the divine agent's domains as a spell-like ability.

The deity offers a spell of the divine agent's level or lower. In other words, a 3rd-level divine agent would gain one of her 1st-level, 2nd-level, or 3rd-level domain spells as a spell-like ability.

The divine agent may use this ability once per day.

The spell-like ability functions as a spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the divine agent's character level.

Altered Appearance (Ex): At 4th level, a divine agent begins to show prominent physical modification to match the desires of her deity.

For good-aligned deities, this often takes the form of golden skin, hair, or eyes.

Divine agents of evil-aligned deities might gain horns, antlers, or a pointed tail.

Neutral deities may provide a copper or silver tone to the skin, while nature deities may cause a greenish pallor and barklike hair.

Elemental powers may alter their divine agents' appearance by giving a texture to the skin reflecting the element involved.

All such alterations are permanent, though disguise or spells may hide them.

Commune (Sp): A divine agent of 5th level or higher can activate this spell-like ability (as the spell of the same name) once per week.

This spell-like ability functions as a spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the divine agent's character level.

Plane Shift to Deity's Plane (Sp): A divine agent of 5th level or higher may plane shift to her deity's home plane once per day, and from that plane to the divine agent's native plane. This spell-like ability functions as the spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the divine agent's character level.

Plane Shift to Any Plane (Sp): Upon reaching 7th level, a divine agent may plane shift to any plane of existence, as per the spell, once per day.

This spell-like ability functions as the spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the divine agent's character level.

Audience (Sp): Up to twice per year a divine agent of 8th level or higher may request an audience with her deity, which functions as a double-duration commune spell allowing a number of questions equal to double the divine agent's character level.

Alignment Shift: If a divine agent is not the same alignment as her deity, then her alignment shifts to match it as soon as the divine agent reaches 8th level.

Mystic Union: At 9th level, a divine agent becomes a magical creature.

She is treated as an outsider of the deity's home plane rather than as a humanoid.

For instance, charm person does not affect her.

Additionally, the divine agent gains damage reduction 20/+1.

This damage reduction does not stack with other forms of damage reduction.

Despite this outsider status, a divine agent may still be brought back from the dead if slain.

Gate (Sp): A 10th-level divine agent can activate this spell-like ability (as the spell of the same name, except it only reaches the home plane of the divine agent's deity) once per day.

This spell-like ability functions as the spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the divine agent's character level.

FALLEN DIVINE AGENTS

Not all who follow a deity achieve that deity's goals.

It is possible to be cast out from (or to walk out on) service to one's deity.

The effects of being a fallen divine agent are as follows:

- The character loses all commune, gate, and audience abilities.

- The former divine agent retains her mystic union properties, altered appearance, and any godly gifts.
- Depending on the circumstances of the departure, the divine agent may or may not be hunted by agents of the deity in question.
- The divine agent class is forbidden to the character. Another deity will not sponsor a former divine agent.
- The divine agent may be reinstated by the deity only upon completing some great quest determined by the DM. Often the deity makes the entire process more difficult, just to test the devotion of the fallen divine agent.

GATECRASHER

Gatecrashers see themselves as cosmic free agents, independent forces who can influence the natives of the planes and even the dynamic forces of magic itself. They are the tricksters of the multiverse, often testing the valiant, derailing the grasping, and deflating the egotistical. Their instinctive understanding of the nature of the universe allows them to perform actions that would otherwise be beyond them.

Gatecrashers see what they do as an art, not a science. The ability to choose the right moment to strike, the correct word to utter, the right rock to move, is more intuition than conscious thought.

Gatecrashers can come from any class, although many learned the mischievous attitude of a gatecrasher when they were rogues or bards.

Gatecrashers can be found among other planar travelers, usually picking at the fabric of the universe and seeing what unravels.

Hit Dice: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a gatecrasher, the character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks, Use Magic Device 8 ranks.

Special: To qualify for the gatecrasher class, the character must have visited two planes of existence other than his native plane.

CLASS SKILLS

The gatecrasher's class skills (and the key ability for each) are: Alchemy (Int), Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Perform (Cha), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Read Lips (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (None), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 8 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the gatecrasher prestige class.

Armor and Weapon Proficiency: Gatecrashers are proficient with all simple weapons and with light armor (but not shields).

Analyze Portal (Sp): A gatecrasher gains the ability to use analyze portal as a spell-like ability.

He may do this once per gatecrasher level per day.

This ability otherwise functions as the spell cast by a sorcerer of the gatecrasher's character level.

Bonus Language: A gatecrasher gains a free language commonly spoken on other planes.

Such languages include Abyssal, Aquan, Auran, Celestial, Ignan, Infernal, and Terran.

The DM may expand this list to fit the cosmology of the campaign.

Additional bonus languages are gained at 4th, 7th, and 10th levels.

Comprehension: Upon reaching 2nd level, a gatecrasher understands the basic conflicts of forces and energies and can use this instinctive understanding to assist certain skills.

The gatecrasher gains a +2 insight bonus on Decipher Script and Use Magic Device checks.

The gatecrasher also gains a +2 insight bonus when searching for or disabling magic traps.

Open Portal (Su): At 3rd level, a gatecrasher's understanding of planar forces extends to the workings of magic portals, such that he may force them open without the correct device, spell, or key.

The gatecrasher makes an Open Lock check using his Intelligence modifier instead of his Dexterity modifier.

Portals typically have the following DCs:

Portal	DC
Typical keyed portal	30
Portal sealed by seal portal spell	20 + caster's level
Portal created by deity	50

Opening a portal takes 1 round of work and a successful check.

It is a full-round action.

The portal remains open for 1d4+1 rounds afterward.

Summon Spell Dampening (Su): Gatecrashers often aggravate demons and devils by inhibiting their ability to summon reinforcements.

Three times per day, a gatecrasher of 4th level or higher can create a dampening field that extends 100 feet in every direction.

Summoning and calling spells and spell-like abilities are suppressed within this radius, though creatures summoned outside the dampening field can enter it normally.

The dampening field lasts 10 rounds.

Creatures summoned or called before the gatecrasher creates the dampening field are unaffected.

Silver Tongue (Ex): A gatecrasher of 5th level or higher can deal with a variety of creatures and characters, gaining a +2 insight bonus on Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Intimidate, and Sense Motive checks.

Planar Survival (Ex): At 6th level, a gatecrasher becomes attuned to the nature of the planes he visits and personally immune to their natural planar effects.

Any effect that would be negated by the avoid planar effects spell is negated by the planar survival ability as well.

The gatecrasher is immune to the "normal" fires of the Elemental Plane of Fire, but fire-based attack forms and unusually fiery areas there still affect him.

Because this extraordinary ability is the result of attuning himself to a particular plane, the gatecrasher remains vulnerable to the same sort of damage in other planes where that attack form is not part of the natural order.

Fires on other planes, including the Material Plane, affect him normally.

Damage Reduction: A gatecrasher of 7th level or higher has damage reduction 5/+1.

This means that the character ignores (instantly regenerates) the first 5 points of damage from any attack unless the damage is dealt by a weapon with a +1 or higher enhancement bonus, by a spell, or by a form of energy (fire, cold, and so on).

This ability does not stack with other damage reduction abilities.

Scramble Portal (Sp): At 8th level, a gatecrasher gains the ability to scramble a portal (as the scramble portal spell cast by a sorcerer of the gatecrasher's level).

This ability is usable three times a day.

Plane Shift (Sp): At 9th level, a gatecrasher may move from plane to plane once per day as a spell-like ability.

This functions as the plane shift spell cast by a 15th-level sorcerer.

Planar Dampening (Sp): A 10th-level gatecrasher can emit a field that suppresses spells and spell-like abilities within a 30-foot radius that access other planes.

Existing spells and spell-like abilities are unaffected; a gatecrasher can't end a foe's astral projection just by moving nearby.

But spells cast after the gatecrasher emits the planar dampening field are affected: An opponent within 30 feet couldn't escape the gatecrasher with a dimension door spell or get reinforcements with a summon monster spell, for example.

The gatecrasher can activate planar dampening three times per day.

It lasts for 10 rounds.

The gatecrasher's planar dampening ability affects the following spells and spell-like abilities: astral projection, banishment, blink, commune, contact other plane, dimension door, dismissal, ethereal jaunt, etherealness, gate, interplanar message, Leomund's secret chest, make manifest, mass manifest, maze, Mordenkainen's magnificent mansion, plane shift, reality maelstrom, rope trick, teleport, teleportation circle, teleport without error, and vanish.

Furthermore, summoning and calling spells can only reach creatures from the same plane, and spells from the shadow subschool only work on the Plane of Shadow.

The banishment effects of blasphemy, dictum, holy word, and word of chaos are suppressed, although the spells otherwise function normally.

PLANAR CHAMPION

Warrior of a hundred worlds.

Mercenary captain of the Blood Wars.

Sword of celestial vengeance.

The planar champion moves between the planes, always driven to battle.

She may be driven by a quest for justice or a thirst for blood, but she is feared throughout the known universes for her prowess.

All planar champions were renowned for their martial prowess before they entered the prestige class, so those classes skilled with weapons gravitate to this class.

They specialize in fighting the natives of particular planes, learning as much as they can about their foes in order to defeat them.

Nonplayer character (NPC) planar champions are battling, recovering from a battle, or preparing for the next one.

They often travel from plane to plane on missions that further their larger crusade.

Hit Dice: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a planar champion, the character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks.

Feats: Weapon Specialization.

Special Requirements: The planar champion must have visited at least two planes other than her native plane before taking this prestige class.

The champion does not need to have been the instigator of these travels.

CLASS SKILLS

The planar champion's class skills (and the key ability for each) are: Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Speak Language (None), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the planar champion prestige class.

Weapons and Armor Proficiency: Planar champions are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Favored Plane: The planar champion has studied the natives of a particular plane extensively.

She gains a +1 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks when using these skills against a native of that plane.

Likewise, the planar champion gets the same bonus on weapon damage rolls against creatures native to the favored plane.

The planar champion only gets the damage bonus with ranged weapons if the target is within 30 feet.

The damage bonus does not apply to creatures immune to critical hits.

The champion chooses only one favored plane, and even identical creatures from other planes are not affected.

For example if a planar champion chooses the Nine Hells as her favored plane, she would gain the bonus against devils native to that plane, but not devils from the adjacent plane of Acheron.

The planar champion's studies help in noncombat settings as well.

The planar champion gets a +1 bonus on Diplomacy and Gather Information checks when interacting with natives of the favored plane.

Intuit Direction checks get a +1 bonus when performed on the favored plane.

The planar champion gains a second favored plane when reaching 5th level and a third favored plane when reaching 10th level.

When gaining a new favored plane, the bonuses for previous favored planes increase by +1.

For example, a 5th-level planar champion could choose Acheron as a new favored plane, earning a +1 bonus against its natives, and her bonus against natives of the Nine Hells would increase to +2.

The planar champion may not choose her native plane as a favored plane.

The bonuses from this ability stack with the ranger's favored enemy ability.

A ranger/planar champion with a favored enemy of devils and a favored plane of the Nine Hells adds both bonuses together when fighting a devil native to the Nine Hells.

See Invisibility (Su): Upon reaching 2nd level, a planar champion has the ability to see invisibility at will, as per the spell cast by a 5th-level sorcerer.

This ability allows her to see (but not affect) ethereal creatures.

Attack Ethereal (Su): A planar champion of 3rd level or higher can transform her weapon into a material force effect at will, enabling her to attack creatures on the Ethereal Plane.

The planar champion begins and ends this ability as a free action, but must use it on a melee weapon she has Weapon Specialization in.

If the planar champion is wielding a magic weapon, this ability also eliminates the 50% miss chance when attacking an incorporeal foe.

Planar Survival (Ex): At 4th level, a planar champion becomes attuned to the nature of the planes she visits and personally immune to their natural planar effects.

Any effect that would be negated by the avoid planar effects spell is negated by the planar survival ability as well.

The planar champion is immune to the "normal" fires of the Elemental Plane of Fire, but fire-based attack forms and unusually fiery areas there still affect her.

Because this extraordinary ability is the result of attuning herself to a particular plane, the planar champion remains vulnerable to the same sort of damage in other planes where that attack form is not part of the natural order.

Fires on other planes, including the Material Plane, affect her normally.

Ethereal Jaunt (Sp): A planar champion of 6th level or higher may step onto the Ethereal Plane three times per day.

This functions as the ethereal jaunt spell cast by a 13th-level sorcerer.

Rip Portal (Sp): Once per day, a planar champion of 7th level or higher can rip a portal through the Astral Plane to another plane of existence.

By tearing a hole in the fabric of the plane she's on, the champion may open a portal onto the Astral Plane or any plane that the Astral Plane touches that the champion has visited before.

As per the plane shift spell, the planar champion has no control over the precise destination on whatever plane she rips a portal to.

The portal appears as a ragged hole in space adjacent to the planar champion and lasts for 1d4+1 rounds before healing over.

Sunder Portal (Sp): Once per day, a planar champion of 8th level or higher has the ability to seal a dimensional gate or portal by severing the connection to the destination.

She may do with a successful level check (DC 5 + the caster level of the gate or portal).

The gate spell is destroyed as if dispelled, while portals are suppressed for 1d6 days.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 9th level, a planar champion gains damage reduction 20/+1.

This means that the character ignores (instantly regenerates) the first 20 points of damage from any attack unless the damage is dealt by a weapon with a +1 or higher enhancement bonus, by a spell, or by a form of energy (fire, cold, and so on).

This ability does not stack with other damage reduction abilities.

PLANESHIFTER

The planeshifter is a magical scholar and expert in planar travel, and through arcane research develops not only the ability to sense planar portals, but also the ability to create his own demiplane.

(Being around long enough to use it is another matter).

Wizards and sorcerers, steeped in their arcane knowledge, make the best planeshifters, and some degree of arcane spellcasting ability is required to join their numbers.

They form loose organizations with titles such as the Eternal Book or the Study Group of Planar Entities.

These organizations are more like fraternal organizations than guilds or power groups, and they seem to appear (and disappear) with great frequency.

NPC planeshifters are rarely in the same place for long.

They're always going to see some new planar sight or phenomenon.

They sometimes hire adventurers as bodyguards, assistants, or troubleshooters.

Hit Dice: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a planeshifter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 10 ranks, Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Craft Wondrous Item.

Spells: Able to cast 5th-level arcane spells.

Special: Must have visited an Inner or Outer Plane before taking this prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The planeshifter's class skills (and the key ability for each) are: Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (all skills taken individually) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Scry (Int), Search (Int), Speak Language (none), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the planeshifter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Planeshifters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Plane Shift (Sp): A planeshifter has the ability to plane shift (as the spell cast by a sorcerer of his character level) once per day.

At 8th level, the planeshifter can use this ability at will.

Spells per Day: A planeshifter continues training in magic as well as gaining power in the planes.

Thus, when a new level is gained (except for 1st, 5th, and 9th), the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

This essentially means that he adds the level of planeshifter to the level of whatever other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became a planeshifter, he must decide to which class he adds each level of planeshifter for the purposes of determining spells per day when he adds the new level.

Analyze Portal (Sp): At 2nd level, a planeshifter gains the ability to use analyze portal as a spell-like ability.

He may do this once per planeshifter level per day.

This ability otherwise functions as the spell cast by a sorcerer of a level equal to the planeshifter's highest caster level.

Planar Survival (Ex): A planeshifter of 3rd level or higher becomes attuned to the nature of the planes he visits and personally immune to their natural planar effects.

Any effect that would be negated by the avoid planar effects spell is negated by the planar survival ability as well.

The planeshifter is immune to the “normal” fires of the Elemental Plane of Fire, but fire-based attack forms and unusually fiery areas there still affect him.

Because this extraordinary ability is the result of attuning himself to a particular plane, the planeshifter remains vulnerable to the same sort of damage in other planes where that attack form is not part of the natural order. Fires on other planes, including the Material Plane, affect him normally.

Morphic Stability (Ex): At 4th level, a planeshifter gains the ability to impose his will on his surroundings to a limited extent.

On planes with the highly morphic trait (such as Limbo in the D&D cosmology) or the magically morphic trait (such as the Plane of Shadow), the terrain stabilizes around the planeshifter.

The planeshifter automatically calms the terrain within a radius of 30 feet per planeshifter level.

This area moves with the planeshifter and is centered on him.

Permanent structures within the plane are unaffected, and the terrain can still be changed through normal activity.

Grant Planar Survival (Su): A planeshifter of 5th level or higher can extend the planar survival ability by touch to a number of others equal to his planeshifter level.

Once granted, the survival ability lasts for 24 hours.

Should the planeshifter’s companions wind up on a different plane than the planeshifter, their protection fades immediately.

Control Planar Flux (Su): At 6th level, a planeshifter gains an intuitive understanding of how creatures interact with the planes they’re on, and he can exploit small changes in the barriers between planes.

The planeshifter’s caster level is considered four levels higher when casting dimensional anchor and dismissal spells.

Telepathy (Su): A planeshifter of 7th level or higher can communicate telepathically with any creature within 100 feet that can speak a language.

Planar Area Swap (Sp): At 9th level, a planeshifter gains the ability to move sections of the landscape from one plane to another.

A spherical area of up to a 100-foot radius per planeshifter level, centered on the planeshifter, may be so moved.

Any unwilling individuals within the sphere can make a Will saving throw (DC 20) to negate the swap completely.

As with the plane shift spell, fine control of the destination is impossible.

When the fragment is brought onto the new plane, the traits of the new plane apply themselves within 1d4 rounds. A part of the Elemental Plane of Fire brought onto the Material Plane burns briefly (1d4 rounds), for example, then dissipates.

Because it’s a swap, an equal area of the destination plane appears in the plane of origination.

The plane of origination applies its planar traits to the new area in 1d4 rounds.

The swapped areas switch back in a number of days equal to 10 + planeshifter level.

Demiplane Seed: The demiplane seed is a small pocket dimension grown by a planeshifter who has reached 10th level.

This pocket dimension is often used as a base of operation. A planeshifter can own only one demiplane at a time, and cannot construct a new one unless all portals to the old one are destroyed.

The planeshifter must have a single flawless gemstone of at least 1,000 gp value and work on the demiplane for 100 consecutive days, for 8 hours per day.

Upon completion of the work, the seed opens into a minuscule spherical demiplane, 1 foot in radius.

It grows quickly, gaining 1 foot in radius per day up to a maximum radius of 10 feet × the planeshifter’s highest caster level.

After reaching that size, the demiplane continues to grow slowly, gaining 2 feet of radius per year.

If its creator perishes, the demiplane stops growing.

The planeshifter’s demiplane has the following planar traits: normal time, alterable, and normal magic.

At creation, the planeshifter can set whatever gravity trait, elemental traits, and alignment traits he likes, and can choose whether the plane is finite or self-contained.

While the demiplane isn’t morphic, the planeshifter has total control over the landscape at the moment of creation, so he can decide whether it will be a foreboding, mountainous wasteland or a bucolic forest.

The terrain set at creation extends itself as the demiplane grows.

While it’s not possible to fit jagged peaks into a 1-foot sphere, cliffs and summits appears as the demiplane grows.

The demiplane grown from the seed is unfurnished, so the planeshifter must provide what construction is necessary.

It has a single portal entry, which the planeshifter may control for access.

Demiplanes are often used as hiding places, research labs, and prisons for particular beasts.

MASTERS OF THE WILD (3.0)

Special Prestige Classes

Three of the prestige classes presented here—the animal lord, the foe hunter, and the king/queen of the wild—have a special rule. They each require a specialization that defines the character's focus. For example, a character who becomes a foe hunter must select a hated enemy. This choice defines her class—a hater of goblins becomes a goblin hunter, for example. Similarly, an animal lord with a bond to cats is a catlord. A queen of the wild who has focused on deserts is a queen of the desert.

ANIMAL LORD

For the animal lord, a humanoid form is simply an accident of birth.

In spirit, she belongs with the wild pack of wolves, the running herd of horses, or the dancing school of fish.

Her nearly hairless, two-legged form is just a hindrance to being one with her true kind, but it is a hindrance she can overcome.

Each animal lord forms a bond with one group of animals. Apelords, bearlords, birdlords, catlords, equinelords, marinelords, snakelords, and wolflords all exist.

Animals in her selected group accept the animal lord as a sister and a leader.

They offer her their support, and she in turn watches over them.

Individual animal lords may approach their calling in very different ways.

Some are simple defenders of their kind, content to live as part of the natural cycle of predator and prey. Others, believing that nature's creatures are meant to guard and ultimately improve this world, use their gifts to do good.

Still others lead their animal brothers and sisters down the path of selfishness or vengeance.

Because they are so close to nature, elves and half-elves are the most likely races to lay aside the burdens of the humanoid form.

Halflings and gnomes rarely become animal lords because of their strong community ties, and half-orcs are even less likely to do so because of their typically rapacious attitudes. Though rangers, druids, and barbarians are the most likely characters to adopt this class, some arcane spellcasters (especially bards) choose to become animal lords late in their adventuring careers.

A character can choose this prestige class more than once but must select a different group of associated animals and start at 1st level each time.

Levels of different animal lord classes do not stack when determining level-based class features.

Eight animal lords are presented here (the DM is free to create others).

The various kinds of animals from the Monster Manual they are associated with are as follows.

Apelord: ape, baboon, monkey.

Bearlord: black bear, brown bear, polar bear.

Birdlord: eagle, hawk, owl, raven.

Catlord: cat, cheetah, leopard, lion, tiger.

Equinelord: donkey, heavy horse, heavy warhorse.

light horse, light warhorse, mule, pony, warpony.

Marinelord: crocodile, giant crocodile, octopus, giant octopus, porpoise, shark (all), squid, giant squid, whale (all).

Snakelord: constrictor, giant constrictor, viper (all).

Wolflord: dog, riding dog, wolf.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become an animal lord, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Neutral good, lawful neutral, neutral, chaotic neutral, or neutral evil.

Skills: Animal Empathy 6 ranks, Wilderness Lore 8 ranks, plus 2 ranks in the appropriate skill from the following list:

Apelord—Climb; Bearlord—Intimidate; Birdlord—Intuit

Direction; Catlord—Move Silently; Equinelord—Jump;

Marinelord,—Swim; Snakelord—Escape Artist;

Wolflord—Hide.

Feats: Animal Control and the appropriate feat from the following list: Apelord, Skill Focus (Climb); Bearlord,

Power Attack; Birdlord, Improved Flight; Catlord.

Weapon Finesse (any); Equinelord, Run; Marinelord.

Skill Focus (Swim); Snakelord, Resist Poison; Wolflord.

Expertise.

CLASS SKILLS

The animal lord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the animal lord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Animal lords gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells: An animal lord can cast a small number of divine spells.

Her spells are based on Wisdom, so casting any given spell requires a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

The DC for saving throws against these spells is 10 + spell level + the animal lord's Wisdom modifier.

When the table indicates that the animal lord is entitled to 0 spells of a given level (such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level), she gets only those bonus spells that her Wisdom score allows.

An animal lord prepares and casts spells just like a druid does, but she must choose them from the spell list below.

Animal Bond: Beginning at 1st level, the animal lord develops a bond with animals of her selected group (see above).

For instance, the bearlord bonds with brown bears, black bears, and polar bears, and the apelord with monkeys, baboons, and apes.

The marinelord's bond extends to porpoises, whales, and other aquatic mammals as well as fish.

Because of this bond, all animals of the appropriate kinds automatically have a friendly attitude toward the animal lord.

Animal bond also allows the animal lord to have one or more animal companions chosen from among her selected group.

This aspect of animal bond is a spell-like ability that functions like the druid's animal friendship spell, except that the animal lord can acquire companions only from among her selected group, and her maximum Hit Dice of animal companions (whether or not she adventures) equals twice her animal lord level.

The character can train these animal companions just as the druid does (see Chapter 4 for details).

Animal Sense (Su): At 1st level, an animal lord can sense any animals of her selected group within a radius of miles equal to her animal lord level squared.

For example, a 6th-level bearlord can sense brown bears, black bears, and polar bears within thirty-six miles.

This ability does not allow the character to communicate with the animals she senses.

Animal Speech (Ex): At 2nd level, an animal lord can converse at will with any animals of her selected group as though a Speak with Animals spell were in effect.

The creatures' responses, of course, are limited by their intelligence and perceptions.

First Totem: At 2nd level, the animal lord gains a benefit related to her selected group from the list below.

Lesser Wild Shape (Sp): At 3rd level, an animal lord can use wild shape to take the form of any kind of natural animal in her selected group.

This ability otherwise functions like the druid's wild shape, except that the animal lord can use it as often as desired.

At 7th level, an animal lord can use this ability to adopt the dire form of an animal in her selected group, and at 10th level, she can use it to adopt the legendary form of an animal in her selected group.

Animal Farspeech (Sp): At 4th level, an animal lord can use her animal speech ability to converse telepathically with any animal of her selected group that she can sense (see animal sense, above).

Summon Animal (Sp): Also at 4th level, an animal lord can summon 1d3 animals of her selected group once per day. This ability functions like the appropriate Summon Nature's Ally spell, except that the duration is 1 round per animal lord level.

At 6th level, the animal lord can use this ability twice per day, and at 8th level, she can use it to summon 1d3 dire animals of her selected group.

Share Lesser Form (Sp): Beginning at 5th level, an animal lord can share whichever animal form she is currently using with a number of willing individuals equal to her animal lord level.

This effect is identical to that of the Polymorph Other spell, except that its duration is 1 hour per animal lord level.

Second Totem: At 5th level, an animal lord gains a benefit related to her selected group from the list below.

Animal Perception (Sp): At 6th level, an animal lord can share the sensory input of any animal of her selected group that is within range of her animal sense.

Third Totem: At 8th level, an animal lord gains a benefit related to her selected group from the list below.

Share Greater Form (Sp): At 9th level, an animal lord can share her dire form with her allies.

This ability is otherwise identical to Share Lesser Form, above.

ANIMAL LORD SPELL LIST

Animal lords choose their spells from the following list.

1st level—alarm, *animal trick, calm animals, *camouflage, cure light wounds, detect animals or plants, pass without trace, purify food and drink, Speak with Animals.

2nd level—*adrenaline surge, *animal reduction, cure moderate wounds, animal trance, endure elements, hold animal, invisibility to animals, *natures favor.

3rd level—cure serious wounds, *embrace the wild, lesser restoration, neutralize poison, protection from elements, remove disease.

4th level—awaken (animals in selected group only), animal growth (animals in selected group only), commune with nature, cure critical wounds, freedom of movement.

* New spell described in Chapter 6 of this book.

TOTEMS

Each animal lord gains special abilities according to her selected animal type as she rises in level.

APELORD

First Totem: The apelord gains Brachiation as a bonus feat.

Second Totem: The apelord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Intelligence.

Third Totem: The apelord gains the spell-like ability to scare by howling, hooting, and beating her chest.

The Will save DC against this ability is 10 + the apelord's class level + her Charisma modifier.

In all other ways, this effect is identical to the scare spell.

BEARLORD

First Totem: The bearlord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Strength.

Second Totem: The bearlord gains Great Fortitude as a bonus feat.

Third Totem: The bearlord gains damage reduction 2/-. If she already has damage reduction, this does not stack with it.

BIRDLORD

First Totem: The birdlord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Dexterity.

Second Totem: The birdlord gains a +8 conditional bonus on Spot checks made in daylight.

Third Totem: The birdlord gains Improved Critical (claw) as a bonus feat.

CATLORD

First Totem: The catlord gains Skill Focus (Move Silently) as a bonus feat.

Second Totem: Once per hour, the catlord can use the sprint extraordinary ability to move at ten times her normal speed as a charge action.

Third Totem: The catlord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Dexterity.

EQUINELORD

First Totem: The equinelord gains a bonus to her speed of +10 feet.

Second Totem: The equinelord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Constitution.

Third Totem: The equinelord gains Trample as a bonus feat.

MARINELORD

First Totem: The marinelord gains the extraordinary ability to breathe water in her normal form.

(She cannot, however, breathe air while in a form that can breathe only water).

Second Totem: The marinelord gains Improved Swimming (see Chapter 2) as a bonus feat.

Third Totem: The marinelord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Wisdom.

SNAKELORD

First Totem: The snakelord gains Resist Poison (see Chapter 2) as a bonus feat.

Second Totem: The snakelord gains the extraordinary ability to produce poison once per day (Fortitude save DC 10 + class level; initial and secondary damage 2d6 temporary Constitution).

She can produce only one dose of poison per day.

The snakelord is skilled in the use of poison and never risks accidentally poisoning herself when applying poison to a blade.

Third Totem: The snakelord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Charisma.

WOLFLORD

First Totem: The wolflord gains Scent (see Chapter 2) as a bonus feat.

Second Totem: The wolflord gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Wilderness Lore checks made for tracking.

This bonus stacks with any modifier provided by Scent.

Third Totem: The wolflord gains a +2 inherent bonus to Constitution.

BANE OF INFIDELS

The bane of infidels is the leader of a xenophobic tribe. He wants nothing to do with the outside world because the way his people do things is the way they have always done them, and the way they always will.

Alone among his compatriots, the bane of infidels sees the possibilities of the outside world, but he considers progress dangerous.

Allowing his people to advance would surely endanger them and imperil his leadership.

Since visitors bring danger of change, they must die—and what better way than as sacrifices in the name of his tribe's religion?

The act of sacrifice empowers and rewards the bane of infidels and his tribe.

Usually visitors and conquered foes serve as sacrifices, though in a pinch a criminal will do (or even an innocent, though this a risky move).

Though he is often ruthless, the bane of infidels is nonetheless respected by the members of his tribe, to whom he provides healing, guardianship, and unwavering direction in return for absolute loyalty.

Druids are the most likely characters to embrace this lifestyle, though clerics, high-level rangers, and adepts can also adopt this prestige class.

The tribe of a bane of infidels often includes fighters, rangers, barbarians, bards, and sorcerers, but other classes may not be as welcome.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a bane of infidels, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks; Knowledge (religion) 6 ranks or Knowledge (nature) 6 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Leadership.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The bane of infidels's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (any) (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the bane of infidels prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A bane of infidels gains no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each bane of infidels level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like), if the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a bane of infidels, the player must decide to which class to add each level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Energumen (Sp): Beginning at 1st level, the character may bestow a low-powered form of barbarian rage in any follower (as defined in Chapter 2 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide) who is an adherent of the same religion. The follower gains a +2 bonus to both Strength and Constitution, as well as a +1 morale bonus on Will saves.

In all other respects, this effect is like barbarian rage.

Energumen is usable once per day per bane of infidels level.

Pyre (Sp): At 1st level, the bane of infidels may cause a 5-foot-square area to burst into flame.

Anyone in that area must succeed at a Reflex save (DC 10 + bane of infidels level + Wisdom bonus of bane of infidels) or suffer 1d4 points of damage per bane of infidels level.

This ability is usable once per day.

Hearth Protection (Sp): At 2nd level, the bane of infidels may perform an 8-hour ritual to designate an area with a radius of up to 5 feet per bane of infidels level as a hearth.

This area then functions as a permanent zone of truth, though the bane of infidels is immune to that effect.

The character may have only one hearth at a time.

Sacrifice (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, the bane of infidels may sacrifice any humanoid by killing it with a coup de grace in his hearth.

This ritual increases his effective caster level for all spells by +2 for 1 hour.

If the bane of infidels sacrifices a follower, he must make a Diplomacy check (DC 20).

Failure indicates that all his remaining followers desert; success means he retains their loyalty.

This effect does not stack with the bonuses gained from major sacrifice or mass sacrifice (see below).

Sacrifice is usable once per day.

Secrets of Stone (Sp): At 3rd level, the bane of infidels gains the ability to discern the affected spell and necessary sacrifice of any standing stone (see Chapter 3) within 100 feet of him as a free action.

Detect Loyalty (Sp): At 4th level, the bane of infidels may examine a follower for faithfulness.

If that individual has grossly violated the code of conduct that the bane of infidels has established or otherwise acted in a manner opposed to the latter's purposes and directions in the last 24 hours, the bane of infidels discovers it (no save, but spell resistance applies) and gains a +5 circumstance bonus on his Diplomacy check when sacrificing that follower.

Using detect loyalty does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Major Sacrifice (Su): This ability, gained at 5th level, is like sacrifice, except that the bane of infidels can increase his effective caster level for all spells by +4 for 1 hour by sacrificing a sentient creature with 5 or more Hit Dice. This effect does not stack with that of sacrifice or mass sacrifice.

Wicker Man (Sp): At 6th level, the bane of infidels learns to create a sacrificial totem trap.

This ability produces the same effect as the wall of thorns spell, except as follows.

The thorny briars form a humanoid shape 10 feet square, with a height equal to 10 feet per bane of infidels level.

Anyone in that area when the wicker man appears gets a Reflex save (DC 10 + bane of infidels level + Wisdom bonus of bane of infidels) to avoid being caught in its body at a point halfway up its height.

The pyre and bonfire abilities of the bane of infidels count as magical fire for purposes of igniting the wicker man and do their normal damage to everyone trapped inside each round until the wicker man burns away (per the wall of thorns spell) or they escape.

This ability is usable once per day.

Bonfire (Sp): This ability, gained at 7th level, functions like pyre, except that it affects a 10-foot-square area.

Antipathy field (Sp): At 8th level, the bane of infidels may protect his hearth with an antipathy field once per day.

This functions like an antipathy spell, except that the target is the entire area of the hearth and the duration is 24 hours.

Mass Energumen (Sp): This ability (gained at 9th level) functions like energumen (above), except that it affects up to ten followers at once.

Mass Sacrifice (Su): At 10th level, the bane of infidels can increase his effective caster level by +2 (up to a maximum of +10) for each humanoid sacrificed within 10 rounds.

This ability is otherwise like sacrifice.

Its effect does not stack with that of sacrifice or major sacrifice.

BLIGHTER

When a druid turns away from the land, the land turns away from her.

Some ex-druids make peace with this change; others seek to restore the bond.

A few, however, actually embrace their disconnection from nature and become forces of destruction.

These few, called blighters, leave their mark wherever they tread.

A blighter gains her spellcasting ability by stripping the earth of life.

A swath of deforested land always marks her path through the wilderness.

The vast majority of blighters are nomadic loners constantly in search of green lands to destroy.

Some are grim; others laugh at the destruction they wreak. Almost all, however, are friendless and mad.

What puts them over the edge is the knowledge that nature gets the last laugh: To gain their spells, they must seek out the richest Forests of the land, even if it's only to destroy them.

Thus, even though they've turned away from nature, they must constantly return to it.

Only human ex-druids seem attracted in any number to the blighter's path.

Legends say that a few elven druids have also turned to destruction over the millennia—a terrifying prospect given how much land they could destroy in their long lifetimes.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a blighter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Special: The character must be an ex-druid previously capable of casting 3rd-level druid spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The blighter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Profession (herbalist) (Wis), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the blighter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Blighters gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: At each blighter level, the character gains spells per day according to Table 5-3.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit that a druid of that level would have gained.

She must choose her spells from the blighter spell list, below.

The blighter's caster level is equal to her blighter level plus her druid level.

The blighter gains access to her daily spells through deforestation (see below), if she goes more than 24 hours without deforesting a wooded area, she cannot cast spells until she does so.

The default divine focus for any spell cast by a blighter is a desiccated sprig of holly or mistletoe.

Any material component for a blighter's spell must have been dead for at least a day before use.

Deforestation (Sp): Beginning at 1st level, the blighter can kill all nonsentient plant life within a radius of 50 feet per blighter level as a full-round action once per day.

If a potentially affected plant is under the control of another (such as a druid's liveoak or a dryad's home tree), the controller can make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + blighter level + blighter's Wisdom bonus) to keep it alive.

Affected plants immediately cease photosynthesis, root tapping, and all other methods of sustenance.

Like picked flowers, they appear vibrant for several hours, but within a day, they turn brown and wither.

Except for plants saved by a controller, nothing can grow in a deforested area until it has a hallow spell cast upon it and it is reseeded.

Deforestation enables the blighter to cast her daily allotment of spells.

This ability works in any terrain, but de-Foresting a sandy desert, ice floe, or other environment with only sparse vegetation does not empower the character to cast spells.

Burning Hands (Su): This ability, gained at 2nd level, functions like the burning hands spell, except that the blighter can use it as often as desired, turning it on or off as a move-equivalent action, and it does 1d4 points of fire damage per round.

Sustenance (Ex): At 2nd level, the blighter no longer needs food or water to survive.

Undead Wild Shape (Sp): At 3rd level, the blighter regains a version of the wild shape ability.

Undead wild shape functions like wild shape, except that the forms available are those of undead creatures (specifically skeletons) formerly of the animal type.

A skeletal animal has the statistics of a skeleton of the appropriate animal's size category (see the skeleton entry in the Monster Manual).

The blighter gains one extra use per day of this ability for every two additional blighter levels she acquires.

In addition, she gains the ability to take the shape of a Large skeletal animal at 5th level, an incorporeal skeletal animal (see Incorporeality in Chapter 3 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide) at 7th level, and a Huge skeletal animal at 9th level.

Speak with Dead Animal (Sp): At 4th level, the blighter can converse with dead animals.

This ability functions like a Speak with Dead spell cast by a cleric of a level equal to the total of the character's druid and blighter levels, except that it affects only corpses of animal creatures.

It is usable once per day.

Contagious Touch (Su): At 5th level, the blighter can produce an effect like that of a contagious touch spell once per day.

She gains 1 extra use per day of this ability for every two additional blighter levels she acquires.

Animate Dead Animal (Sp): This ability, gained at 6th level, functions like an animate dead spell, except that it affects only corpses of animal creatures and requires no material component.

It is usable once per day.

Unbond (Sp): At 8th level, the blighter can temporarily separate a bonded animal or magical beast (such as an animal companion, familiar, or mount) from its master once per day.

The target creature must be within 40 feet of both its master and the blighter.

If the master fails a Will save (DC 10 + blighter level + blighter's Wisdom modifier), the bond terminates as if the servitor had died, though this does not cause experience loss in the case of a familiar.

Normally hostile creatures attack their masters but are otherwise unaffected.

The bond returns after 5 rounds per blighter level, restoring all benefits.

Alternatively, the master can regain the servitor through the normal methods of acquisition.

Plague (Su): At 10th level, the blighter can spread disease over a large area.

This ability functions like the contagious touch ability, except that no attack roll is required and it affects all targets the blighter designates within a 20-foot radius.

Plague is usable once per day and costs one daily use of the contagious touch ability.

BLIGHTER SPELL LIST

Blighters choose their spells from the following list.

0 level—*darkseed, detect magic, detect poison, flare, ghost sound, inflict minor wounds, read magic.

1st level—bane, burning hands, curse water, *decomposition, detect undead, doom, endure elements, inflict light wounds, invisibility to animals, ray of enfeeblement.

2nd level—chill metal, chill touch, darkness, death knell, fire trap, flaming sphere, heat metal, inflict moderate wounds, *miasma, produce flame, resist elements, warp wood.

BLOODHOUND

A bandit king is raiding caravans on the road. An ogre is pillaging the farms to the north.

A sorcerer has kidnapped the mayor's son and hidden him somewhere in the marsh.

And the soldiers of the king cannot seem to stem the tide. The terrified citizens have only one choice, and it isn't cheap.

They call in a bloodhound. The bloodhound tracks down wrongdoers and brings them to whatever justice awaits them. Low-level bloodhounds depend on their keen senses and careful training to hunt their targets. As they gain experience, their obsessive determination gives them supernatural abilities that make them nearly unstoppable. Most bloodhounds work for money (usually a lot of it), but some accept jobs for justice, revenge, or enjoyment. When a bloodhound accepts a job, he designates his target as a mark. Thereafter, he does not abandon the case until it is finished, which occurs when the mark is apprehended or when either the mark or the bloodhound dies. Though some bloodhounds leave calling cards or even brands on their marks, most don't kill their targets if they can help it. They prefer instead to subdue their marks and bring them in. For those of good alignment, this practice satisfies some deeply held belief in the cause of justice. For neutral and evil bloodhounds, it ensures a steady stream of income from catching the same marks over and over when they break out of jail. Rangers and barbarians make the best bloodhounds, but rogues, bards, druids, and fighters can also excel in this role. Occasionally a paladin shoulders the mantle, but never for money. Most bloodhounds are human, though elves and half-elves sometimes find this lifestyle satisfying. Some of the best bloodhounds are humanoids such as gnolls, hobgoblins, and bugbears. Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a bloodhound, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Gather Information 4 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks, Wilderness Lore 4 ranks.

Feats: Run, Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The bloodhound's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the bloodhound prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bloodhounds are proficient with light armor, shields, and both simple and martial weapons.

Determination (Ex): At 1st level, the character gains an insight bonus equal to his bloodhound level on Gather Information, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks made to determine the whereabouts of a mark (see below).

Mark (Ex): At 1st level, the character can target, or mark, an individual humanoid foe.

To do so, the bloodhound must focus on a foe who is present and visible, or on the depiction or description of one who is not, for 10 minutes.

Any interruption ruins the attempt and forces the bloodhound to start the process again.

Once this study is complete, that target is called a mark, and the bloodhound receives a variety of advantages against him or her (see below).

A bloodhound may have up to one mark per two bloodhound levels (rounded up) at once, but only if all of them are within 30 feet of one another for the duration of the marking process.

For example, a 6th-level bloodhound could mark three bugbears in such a group, but not a bugbear on one side of the kingdom and a troll on the other.

If a bloodhound chooses a new mark before apprehending an existing one, the latter is unmarked, and the bloodhound loses XP equal to the amount he would have gotten for defeating that creature.

The bloodhound can mark an individual once a week.

No Subdual Penalty (Ex): Also at 1st level, the bloodhound can use a melee weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage instead without suffering the usual -4 penalty on his attack roll.

Dead or Alive (Ex): At 2nd level, the bloodhound learns to strike for subdual at just the right moment to avoid killing a mark.

Immediately after striking a blow that would reduce a mark from positive to negative hit points, the bloodhound may convert the normal damage dealt by that blow to subdual damage before it takes effect.

The bloodhound cannot use this ability while raging or after 1 round has passed.

Fast Tracking: At 2nd level, the bloodhound no longer suffers a -5 penalty on Wilderness Lore checks for tracking while moving at normal speed.

Ready and Waiting (Ex): Also at 2nd level, the bloodhound may, as a free action, designate a particular move-equivalent, standard, or full-round action that a mark who is flat-footed might perform, if the mark actually performs this action within 10 minutes thereafter, the bloodhound can make an attack of opportunity against him or her with a drawn weapon, either melee or ranged.

This counts against the bloodhound's attacks of opportunity for that round.

Facekeeping (Ex): At 3rd level, a bloodhound tracking a mark can raise his own speed by up to +5 feet per bloodhound level, to a maximum value equal to the mark's speed.

Restlessness (Ex): When the bloodhound reaches 3rd level, he gains damage reduction 5/- against subdual damage from a forced march while in pursuit of a mark.

Improved Subdual (Ex): At 4th level, the bloodhound uses his Intelligence bonus on the damage roll for any attack that deals only subdual damage.

Move Like the Wind (Su): At 4th level, the bloodhound ignores armor check penalties on his Move Silently and Hide checks.

In addition, he no longer suffers the -5 penalty on those checks when moving at speeds between half and full.

Traceless Track (Su): At 5th level, the bloodhound can track a creature moving under the influence of pass without trace or a similar effect, though he suffers a -10 circumstance penalty on his Wilderness Lore checks.

Shatter (Su): At 5th level, the bloodhound can destroy an object that stands between himself and his mark when the latter is within 100 feet.

This ability functions like a shatter spell cast by a sorcerer of the character's bloodhound level.

Ignore Scrying (Ex): At 6th level, the bloodhound gains spell resistance equal to 10 + his bloodhound level against divination spells.

This stacks with any other spell resistance he has that includes spells of that school.

Locate Creature (Sp): Once per day, the bloodhound can produce an effect identical to that of a locate creature spell cast by a sorcerer of the bloodhound's character level.

Fracture (Su): At 7th level, the character can use his shatter ability to destroy weight-equivalent portions of larger objects, such as doors and walls, regardless of their construction.

See Invisibility (Su): This ability, gained at 7th level, functions like a see invisibility spell, except that it is constantly in effect and it reveals only marks.

Subdual Resistance: At 8th level, the bloodhound gains damage reduction 20/+3 against subdual damage.

Ignore Magical Barriers (Ex): At 9th level, the bloodhound gains spell resistance equal to 15 + his bloodhound level against magical barriers (wall of force, entangle, prismatic wall, and so forth).

Find the Path (Sp): At 10th level, the bloodhound can produce an effect like a find the path spell cast by a druid of the bloodhound's character level.

It is usable three times per day.

ORGANIZATION: THE BLOODHOUNDS

"Eyes...I saw his eyes before he pounced.

That was all.

He had no body until he was upon me.

if he had meant to kill me, I would have been as helpless as a babe."

—Tordek, on meeting a Bloodhound

The organization known as the Bloodhounds is dedicated to finding people and bringing them to justice (or whatever fate awaits them).

Some Bloodhounds limit themselves to tracking down criminals; others are willing to hunt anyone for a client who can pay the price.

The group's leaders don't concern themselves with such issues, only with maintaining the organization's reputation as the place to go to find someone.

Membership in the Bloodhounds is by invitation only. Members report on capable trackers they encounter in their travels, and from these reports the organization's leaders select candidates for membership.

A member of the organization tracks each candidate surreptitiously for a while.

If the Bloodhound reports that the candidate had the necessary fervor and talents, the leaders offer him or her a chance to try out for membership.

A candidate who actually noticed the Bloodhound following is almost guaranteed an offer.

To be accepted for membership, the candidate must track a Bloodhound considerably more experienced than himself.

The Bloodhound makes the job difficult by leaving false trails, telling locals deceitful stories, and even hiring brigands to ambush the candidate along the way.

The Bloodhound must not assist the candidate in this task; otherwise the test is void.

A candidate who succeeds in finding the target passes the test and may join the organization.

Bloodhounds can take any assignments they choose. Some jobs come directly from clients who contact individual Bloodhounds.

Others come through the grapevine, since members pass word to each other.

Individual bloodhounds are fiercely competitive, and should one succeed where another has failed, the winner gloats over the victory.

In fact, Bloodhounds often tell each other about the assignments they've taken, in effect challenging their compatriots to beat them to the quarry.

Members may work together, but most work alone or with nonmembers so that word spreads of their personal fame.

Thus, whenever several Bloodhounds form a posse to catch a particularly elusive foe, word spreads far and wide.

Despite this rivalry, when a mark is too important to go free, a Bloodhound can spread the word of a "free" bounty among the membership.

This means that any member who brings in the mark can claim the prize.

Members who spread free bounties lose no face in the organization for doing so.

Bloodhounds resent the concept of giving their earnings to anyone.

Thus, the organization does not demand a piece of its members' earnings.

No Bloodhounds guildhalls or strongholds exist because no self-respecting Bloodhound would limit himself to one base of operations.

Since so many of the Bloodhounds' marks are human, ranger Bloodhounds who have taken humans as favored enemies have an advantage in assignments.

Thus, a large percentage of the membership is nonhuman, and differing alignments are rarely an impediment to teaming up.

In fact, rumor has it that a good elven Bloodhound and an evil gnomish Bloodhound regularly work together, since between them they can function in any society.

The gulf between their alignments is simply not as wide as the bridge of their common goals.

DEEPWOOD SNIPER

An arrow flies from a high mountain aerie, unerringly striking a paladin's mount.

Expecting only a flesh wound, the paladin is stunned to watch his companion of many adventures crumple to the earth.

This unfortunate knight has trespassed into the domain of the deepwood sniper, and he may not make it out alive.

A deepwood sniper is patient, careful, quiet, and deadly accurate.

She is a stealthy, long-range terminator whose arrows sail accurately from much longer ranges than those of other archers.

In addition, she has magical abilities to help her shafts fly true.

Because of their alertness, dexterity, patience, and affinity for the bow, elves of almost any character class make excellent deepwood snipers.

For a long time, elves would train only those of their own race in these techniques, but more recently some half-elves, halflings, and humans have joined the ranks of the deepwood sniper.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a deepwood sniper, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks, Spot 4 ranks.

Feats: Far Shot, Point Blank Shot, Weapon Focus (any bow or crossbow).

CLASS SKILLS

The deepwood sniper's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (bowmaking) (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the deepwood sniper prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Deepwood snipers gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

All weapon-related abilities of this prestige class apply only to projectile ranged weapons with which the character is proficient.

Keen Arrows (Ex): At 1st level, all projectiles the deepwood sniper fires behave as if they were keen weapons in addition to any other properties they might possess. Thus, a normal arrow fired by a deepwood sniper has a threat range of 19–20 instead of 20.

This effect does not stack with any other keen effect.

Range Increment Bonus (Ex): With each level the deepwood sniper gains, the range increments of her projectile weapons increase by +10 feet (added after all multipliers).

Thus, a 10th-level deepwood sniper who has the Far Shot feat would have a 280-foot range increment with a heavy crossbow (120 feet \times 1.5 + 100 feet).

Concealment Reduction (Ex): When the deepwood sniper reaches 2nd level, her miss chance against opponents with concealment drops by 10%.

Thus, she has a miss chance of 10% rather than 20% against an opponent with one-half concealment.

Her miss chance drops by an additional 10% per four deepwood sniper levels she gains thereafter, but this ability never reduces her miss chance against any opponent below 0%.

Magic Weapon (Sp): At 2nd level, the character can produce an effect identical to that of a magic weapon spell cast by a cleric of her deepwood sniper level.

This ability is usable once per day on projectile weapons only.

Projectile Improved Critical (Ex): When the deepwood sniper reaches 2nd level, the critical damage multipliers of all her projectile weapons increase by +1.

Thus, an arrow that normally deals damage $\times 3$ on a critical hit instead does damage $\times 4$ in her hands.

When she reaches 7th level, these critical multipliers increase by an additional +1.

Safe Poison Use (Ex): At 3rd level, a deepwood sniper can use poison without any chance of poisoning herself (see Perils of Using Poison in Chapter 3 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide).

Take Aim (Ex): A 4th-level deepwood sniper can gain a +2 bonus on her attack rolls against a stationary target by aiming carefully.

Taking aim is a full-round action, and if the target moves more than 5 feet during that period, the bonus is lost. No additional benefit exists for spending more than 1 round aiming.

This bonus increases to +4 at 8th level.

Consistent Aim (Su): Once per day, a 5th-level deepwood sniper can reroll one attack roll that she has just made with a projectile weapon.

She must keep that result, even if it is worse than the original roll.
 She can use this ability twice per day at 7th level and three times per day at 10th level, though each use must relate to a different attack roll.

True Strike (Sp): At 10th level, the deepwood sniper can produce an effect identical to that of a true strike spell cast by a cleric of her deepwood sniper level.
 This ability is usable once per day on projectile weapons only.

EXOTIC WEAPON MASTER

Swords and axes do not a warrior make. Such might be the unvoiced motto of the exotic weapon master—a student of her world’s most unusual and bizarre weapons.

For the exotic weapon master, the intricacies of the shuriken, the siangham, the dire flail, and the hand crossbow pose no difficulty at all.

These unusual weapons are her trade, and in her hands, they become instruments of destruction.

Characters of any race or background can become exotic weapon masters; the only real requirement is commitment and perseverance.

Nevertheless, most are human, because members of that race have the most exposure to new cultures and thus the most opportunities to take up exotic weapons.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become an exotic weapon master, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (any three).

Special: Ability to rage.

CLASS SKILLS

The exotic weapon master’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Craft (any) (Int) and Profession (any) (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the exotic weapon master prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Exotic weapon masters gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Partial Exotic Proficiency: At 1st level, the exotic weapon master can use any exotic weapon with which she is not already proficient at a –2 penalty instead of a –4 penalty on the attack roll.

This penalty is reduced to –1 at 2nd level.

Full Exotic Proficiency: At 3rd level, the exotic weapon master becomes proficient with all exotic weapons.

Improvised Throwing Weapons: At 3rd level, the exotic weapon master can use artisan’s tools to fashion a usable throwing weapon from any object (rock, branch, melee weapon, or the like) that she can lift.

This process takes at least 1 hour, or more if conditions are poor.

The range increment for such an improvised weapon is 10 feet.

It deals 1d6 points of damage (×2 on a critical hit), and its threat range is 20.

The exotic weapon master is automatically proficient with her improvised throwing weapon; anyone else who wishes to use it must spend an Exotic Weapon Proficiency feat to avoid the –4 nonproficiency penalty.

Most objects do bludgeoning damage; sharp items do piercing damage instead.

Exotic Focus: At 4th level, the exotic weapon master gains a +1 bonus on her attack rolls when using any exotic weapon. This bonus does not stack with that provided by the Weapon Focus feat.

Improvised Melee Weapons: Also at 4th level, the exotic weapon master can use artisan’s tools to fashion a usable melee weapon from any object (rock, branch, projectile weapon, or the like) that she can lift.

This process takes at least 1 hour, or more if conditions are poor.

Such an improvised melee weapon deals 1d6 points of damage (×2 on a critical hit), and its threat range is 20.

The exotic weapon master is automatically proficient with her improvised melee weapon; anyone else who wishes to use it must spend an Exotic Weapon Proficiency feat to avoid the –4 nonproficiency penalty.

Most objects do bludgeoning damage; sharp items do piercing damage instead.

Long items (such as ladders) have reach according to their length, and items with many protrusions (such as chairs) give the exotic weapon master a +2 bonus on disarm attempts.

Exotic Specialization: At 5th level, the exotic weapon master gains a +2 bonus on damage rolls when using any exotic weapon.

(For ranged weapons, this damage bonus applies only if the target is within 30 feet).

This modifier does not stack with that provided by the Weapon Specialization feat.

EYE OF GRUUMSH

Most people think they've seen the worst that orcs can breed when an orc barbarian comes raging over a hilltop—at least until they see a one-eyed orc barbarian come raging over a hilltop.

This creature may well be an eye of Gruumsh, an orc so devoted to his evil deity that he has disfigured himself in Gruumsh's name.

In an epic battle at the dawn of time, the elven deity Corellon Larethian stabbed out Gruumsh's left eye. Filled with rage and hatred, the orc deity called for followers loyal enough to serve in his image.

Those who heed this call are known as the eyes of Gruumsh.

They sacrifice their right eyes instead of their left ones so that their impaired vision balances that of their deity.

Thus, symbolically at least, they can see what he cannot. These living martyrs to Gruumsh are some of the toughest orcs and half-orcs in the world.

The eye of Gruumsh is a true prestige class in the sense that all orcs respect those who achieve it.

If a candidate proves capable with the brutal orc double axe and has no moral code to stand in the way of his service, only the test remains—to put out his own right eye in a special ceremony.

This is a bloody and painful ritual, the details of which are best left undescribed.

If the candidate makes a sound during the process, he fails the test.

No consequences for failure exist, except that he can never become an eye of Gruumsh—and he's lost one eye.

Barbarians gain the most value from this prestige class, since it encourages raging as a fighting style.

Fighters, clerics, rangers, and even rogues also heed this calling.

orcs and half-orcs are the obvious candidates for the class, and some orc tribes whisper of barbarians from other races who have adopted this mantle.

Of course, these may just be legends meant to inspire young orcs to jealous rage.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as an eye of Gruumsh, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race: orc or half-orc.

Greater Improvised Weapons: At 5th level, the exotic weapon master can make an improvised throwing or melee weapon that deals 2d6 points of damage.

This ability otherwise functions like the improvised throwing weapons or improvised melee weapons ability, depending on the kind of weapon desired.

(A character of another race who grows up among orcs may also adopt this prestige class if the DM permits).

Alignment: Chaotic evil, chaotic neutral, or neutral evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (orc double axe), Weapon Focus (orc double axe).

Special: The character must be a worshiper of Gruumsh and must put out his own right eye in a special ritual.

None of the eye of Gruumsh's special abilities function if he regains sight in both eyes.

CLASS SKILLS

The eye of Gruumsh's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the eye of Gruumsh prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Eyes of Gruumsh are proficient with light and medium armor, shields, and all simple and martial weapons.

Blind-Fight: At 1st level, the eye of Gruumsh gains Blind-Fight as a bonus feat.

Follow Orders Blindly: At 1st level, the eye of Gruumsh may grant a +2 morale bonus on Will saves to any nongood orcs or half-orcs with HD lower than his character level within 30 feet of him.

Any recipient who willingly goes against the eye of Gruumsh's directions loses this bonus immediately.

Using this ability is a standard action, and the effect lasts for 1 hour per eye of Gruumsh level.

Rage: Also at 1st level, the eye of Gruumsh gains the ability to rage as a barbarian of a level equal to the total of his barbarian and eye of Gruumsh levels.

Thus, a Bbn14/eye of Gruumsh2 can use rage 5 times per day.

Ritual Scarring: Through frequent disfiguration of his own skin, the eye of Gruumsh gains a +1 natural armor bonus at 3rd level.

This bonus increases by +1 for every three eye of Gruumsh levels gained thereafter.

Swing Blindly (Ex): At 2nd level, the eye of Gruumsh gains an additional +2 bonus to his Strength score while raging.

While this ability is in effect, the character provokes attacks of opportunity as though he were casting a spell whenever he takes any kind of attack action.

Blinding Spittle (Ex): The eye of Gruumsh can launch blinding spittle at any opponent within 20 feet. Using a ranged touch attack (at a –4 penalty), he spits his stomach acid into the target's eyes.

An opponent who fails a Reflex save (DC 10 + eye of Gruumsh level + eye of Gruumsh's Constitution bonus) is blinded until he or she can rinse away the spittle. This attack has no effect on creatures that don't have eyes or don't depend on vision.

Blinding spittle is usable once per hour at 4th level and twice per hour at 7th level.

Blindsight (Ex): At 5th level, the eye of Gruumsh gains blindsight in a 5-foot radius.

This ability is otherwise identical to the hearing-based version described in the introduction of the Monster Manual.

Its range increases to 10 feet at 8th level.

Sight of Gruumsh: At 10th level, the eye of Gruumsh sees the moment of his own death through his missing eye.

This foreknowledge gives him a +2 morale bonus on all saving throws from then on.

(Whether or not the vision is accurate is irrelevant—the character believes it to be true).

ORGANIZATION: THE EYES OF GRUUMSH

"The cycle of my father's people is a simple one.

You kill, you get better at killing, and you kill again.

Break the cycle, and you die."

—Krusk

Though orcs revere eyes of Gruumsh for their unique clarity of vision, the average eye of Gruumsh isn't particularly well qualified to think for an entire tribe—even though he often assumes leadership of a tribe early in his career.

Thus, he relies on a cleric of Gruumsh for wise counsel. To discourage any unhealthy confusion among their followers about who is in charge, both the eye of Gruumsh and the cleric encourage war against other races at every opportunity.

Since eyes of Gruumsh seek to avenge Corellon Larethian's insult to their deity, most are so obsessed with the destruction of elves that they attack any elven community on sight.

Inspired by their leaders' rage, other orcs often throw themselves heedlessly at elven hordes.

Multiple eyes of Gruumsh usually don't work well together because they commonly have competing ideas about which course of action serves their deity best.

Every few decades or so, however, several eyes of Gruumsh get the same idea in their heads—a crusade!

(After all, a holy crusade involving hundreds of tribes under the command of dozens of eyes of Gruumsh is just the thing to inspire the younger generation to the deity's service).

When this occurs, the eyes of Gruumsh meet and declare truces between competing tribes by closing their functional left eyes all at once—thus blinding them to their own bickering.

Then they go out and try to eradicate some other species.

FOE HUNTER

The foe hunter has but one purpose in life: to kill creatures of the type she hates.

She is willing to pay any price or risk any danger to prevail against this hated foe.

Her blade is anathema to such creatures, and her body is more often than not proof against their attacks.

Though her hatred of this enemy is boundless and unending, it is not unthinking or rash.

She lives to put an end to her hated foe, but she does not throw away her own life needlessly.

The foe hunter's path is open to any creature, good or evil.

Some hunt humans or even celestials; others hunt the foulest spawn of the underworld.

NPC foe hunters can be fierce allies against formidable enemies or implacable opponents dedicated to killing those the heroes love.

A character can choose this prestige class more than once but must select a different hated enemy and start again at 1st level each time.

Levels of different foe hunter classes do not stack when determining levelbased class features.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a foe hunter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Track, Weapon Focus (any).

Language: The language (if any) of the intended hated enemy.

Special: The character must have a favored enemy.

CLASS SKILLS

The foe hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the foe hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Foe hunters gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Hated Enemy: At 1st level, the foe hunter chooses one creature type that she has already selected as a favored enemy to be the target of her hatred.

This choice determines what kind of foe hunter she becomes—orc hunter, giant hunter, or the like.

The choice of hated enemy is irreversible.

Rancor (Su): The foe hunter can deliver a powerful blow to her hated enemy.

Once per round, on her action, she can designate one of her attacks against a hated enemy as a rancor attack before the attack roll is made.

A successful rancor attack by a 1st-level foe hunter deals +1d6 points of extra damage.

This amount increases by +1d6 points for every two additional foe hunter levels the attacker acquires.

Should the foe hunter score a critical hit with a rancor attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

The extra damage from a rancor attack applies even if that hated enemy is immune to critical hits.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, the foe hunter can deal subdual damage instead of normal damage with a rancor attack.

She cannot, however, do subdual damage with a weapon that deals normal damage in a rancor attack, even when taking the usual -4 penalty.

Hated Enemy Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the foe hunter can shrug off 3 points of damage from each successful attack by her hated enemy.

This damage reduction increases by 2 points for every two additional foe hunter levels she has.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0, but not below that.

Hated enemy damage reduction does not stack with any other damage reduction the character has.

Hated Enemy Spell Resistance (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, the foe hunter can avoid the effects of spells and spell-like abilities that would directly affect her, as long as they originate from her hated enemy.

Against such effects, the foe hunter has spell resistance equal to 15 + her foe hunter class level.

This stacks with any other applicable spell resistance the character may have.

Death Attack (Ex): At 10th level, the foe hunter can make a death attack against a hated enemy that is denied its Dexterity bonus to AC (whether or not it actually has one).

This ability functions like the assassin's death attack (see Assassin in Chapter 2 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide), except that the foe hunter need only make a melee attack that successfully does damage, not a sneak attack.

FORSAKER

Magic is evil.

Magic tempts.

Magic perverts.

Magic corrupts.

Anyone who cannot embrace these truths has no business considering the path of the forsaker.

The forsaker rebels against the magic of the fantastic world around him.

It's not that he doesn't believe in it; he knows full well that magic is real.

He has felt its all too tangible power burn over his skin or wrest control of his mind from him.

While others may ignore the dangers of magic and succumb to its siren call of power, the forsaker knows better.

To him, sorcery is nothing but a crutch that coddles and weakens its users.

By depending upon his own resources alone, the forsaker becomes stronger, tougher, smarter, and more nimble than any of his companions.

To that end, he treads a lonely path, deliberately depriving himself of magic's benefits and destroying any magic items he finds.

Forsakers can take up any standard or philosophy, though they tend more toward chaos than law.

Evil forsakers hunt down and kill the most powerful users of magic that they can find, as if to demonstrate the ultimate weakness of the wizard and the sorcerer.

Good forsakers commit themselves to expunging evil sorcery from their world, but they too see themselves as examples of how mundane strength can conquer foul enchantments.

Though forsakers do their best to resist all spells—even beneficial ones—cast upon them, some eventually learn to tolerate their companions' magic.

A few claim that they are leading by example; others rationalize that only by consorting with lesser villains can they defeat greater ones.

Whatever justification they use, the alliance between forsaker and spellcaster, no matter how temporary or how necessary, is seldom a peaceful one.

Few characters other than dwarven fighters and human or half-orc barbarians can appreciate the lifestyle of the forsaker.

Elves, half-elves, and gnomes are surrounded by the benefits of magic from birth, so they are unlikely to choose this path.

Dwarves, on the other hand, are naturally suspicious of sorcery, and many rural humans are just as distrustful. Certainly, no spellcaster should consider this career choice, since it means the virtual end of advantages gained from a former class.

Even paladins and rangers must think hard before leaving behind their spells and spell-like abilities.

Fighters and rogues occasionally take up this prestige class, but most forsakers are barbarians.

Some say that only such a primitive, focused mind could ever manage to forsake magic for good.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a forsaker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Feats: Great Fortitude, Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes.

Special: The character must once have been the victim of a magical attack that seriously wounded him or threatened his life.

He must also sell or give away all his magic items (including magic weapons, armor, and potions) and renounce the use of any spellcasting and spell-like abilities he previously used.

CLASS SKILLS

The forsaker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Handle Animal (Wis), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the forsaker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Forsakers gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Ability Bonus (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, the character gains a +1 inherent bonus to any desired ability score for each forsaker level.

Fast Healing (Ex): Forsakers regain hit points at an exceptionally fast rate.

At 1st level, the character regains 1 hit point per round, to a maximum of 10 hit points per day.

The number of hit points regained per round increases by +1 for every four forsaker levels, and the maximum restorable per day increases by 10 for every two forsaker levels.

Except as noted above, this ability works like the fast healing ability described in the introduction of the Monster Manual.

Forsake Magic: In addition to avoiding all use of spellcasting, spell-like abilities, and magic items, the forsaker must also refuse any benefits from others' magic—including magical healing.

Thus, he must attempt a saving throw against any spell that allows one.

For most beneficial spells, such as displacement or neutralize poison, a successful save negates the spell's effects; for a cure spell, it halves the benefit.

Any forsaker who unwittingly uses a magic item or casts a spell (while under the influence of a charm person or dominate person spell, for example) loses all the special abilities of the prestige class for one week.

Spell Resistance (Ex): At 1st level, the forsaker gains spell resistance 11.

This value increases by +1 with each forsaker level gained and stacks with any other applicable spell resistance he has.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 2nd level, the forsaker gains damage reduction 3/+1.

This damage resistance rises by 2/+1 for every two forsaker levels he gains thereafter.

This ability remains in effect only as long as the forsaker destroys the required value of magic items every 24 hours (see Magic Destruction, below).

This does not stack with any other damage reduction he already has.

Magic Destruction: The forsaker gains access to his damage reduction ability (see above) through the destruction of magic items, if he goes more than 24 hours without destroying magic items whose market prices total at least 100 gp per point of damage reduction, he loses that ability until he does so.

Tough Defense (Ex): At 3rd level, a forsaker gains a natural armor bonus equal to his Constitution bonus (if any).

Natural Weapons (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the forsaker can fight as though he and his weapon were one.

Any weapon he uses functions as if it were a natural weapon for overcoming damage reduction (see Damage Reduction in the introduction of the Monster Manual).

That is, if the forsaker has damage reduction 3/+1, any weapon he uses functions as if it were a +1 weapon for overcoming a foe's damage reduction.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 6th level, the forsaker can wriggle free from magical effects that would otherwise control or compel him.

if he fails his saving throw against an enchantment effect, he can attempt his saving throw again 1 round later.

He gets only one extra chance to succeed at his saving throw.

EX-FORSAKERS

Forsakers can multiclass normally, as long as they continue to abide by the strictures of the prestige class.

Any forsaker who willingly violates those strictures by using magic items or casting spells loses all special abilities of the prestige class and can progress no further as a forsaker.

If he thereafter remains pure (uses no magic) for a period of a year and a day, his abilities are reinstated at their previous levels and he may once again progress in the prestige class.

FRENZIED BERSERKER

The random madness of the thunderstorm and the unpredictability of the slaadi come together in the soul of the frenzied berserker.

Unlike most other characters, she does not fight to achieve some heroic goal or defeat a loathsome villain.

Those are mere excuses—it is the thrill of combat that draws her.

For the frenzied barbarian, the insanity of battle is much like an addictive drug—she must constantly seek out more conflict to feed her craving for battle.

Along the wild borderlands and in the evil kingdoms of the world, frenzied berserkers often lead warbands that include a variety of character types—and even other frenzied berserkers.

Some such groups turn to banditry and brigandage; others serve as specialized mercenaries.

Whatever their origin, such warbands naturally gravitate toward situations of instability and conflict, because wars and civil strife are their bread and butter.

Indeed, the coming of a frenzied berserker is the most obvious herald of troubled times.

The frenzied berserker's path is unsuited for most adventurers—a fact for which the peace-lovers of the world can be thankful.

Because of their traditional love for battle, orc and half-orc barbarians are the ones who most frequently adopt this prestige class, though human and dwarven barbarians also find it appealing.

It might seem that elves would be good candidates because of their chaotic nature, but the elven aesthetic and love of grace are at odds with the frenzied berserker's devaluation of the self.

Spellcasting characters and monks almost never become frenzied berserkers.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a frenzied berserker, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Feats: Cleave, Destructive Rage, Intimidating Rage, Power Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The frenzied berserker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the frenzied berserker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Frenzied berserkers gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Frenzy (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, the frenzied berserker can enter a frenzy during combat.

While frenzied, she gains a +6 bonus to Strength and a single extra attack each round at her highest bonus. (This latter effect is not cumulative with haste).

However, she also suffers a -4 penalty to AC and takes 2 points of subdual damage per round.

A frenzy lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the frenzied berserker's Constitution modifier.

To end the frenzy before its duration expires, the character may attempt a Will save (DC 20) once per round as a free action.

Success ends the frenzy immediately; failure means it continues.

The effects of frenzy stack with those from rage.

At 1st level, the character can enter a frenzy once per day.

Thereafter, she gains one additional use per day of this ability for every two frenzied berserker levels she acquires.

The character can enter a frenzy as a free action.

Even though this takes no time, she can do it only during her action, not in response to another's action.

In addition, if she suffers damage from an attack, spell, trap, or any other source, she automatically enters a frenzy at the start of her next action, as long as she still has at least one daily usage of the ability left.

To avoid entering a frenzy in response to damage, the character must make a successful Will save (DC 10 + points of damage suffered since her last action) at the start of her next action.

While frenzied, the character cannot use skills or abilities that require patience or concentration (such as Move Silently), nor can she cast spells, drink potions, activate magic items, or read scrolls. She can use any feat she has except Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus in a skill that requires patience or concentration. She can, however, use her special ability to inspire frenzy (see below) normally. During a frenzy, the frenzied berserker must attack those she perceives as foes to the best of her ability. Should she run out of enemies before her frenzy expires, her rampage continues. She must then attack the nearest creature (determine randomly if several potential toes are equidistant) and fight that opponent without regard to friendship, innocence, or health (the target's or her own). When a frenzy ends, the frenzied berserker is fatigued (–2 penalty to Strength and Dexterity, unable to charge or run) for the duration of the encounter, or until she enters another frenzy, whichever comes first. At 10th level, she is no longer fatigued after a frenzy, though she still suffers the subdual damage for each round it lasts. Starting at 8th level, the character's frenzy bonus to Strength becomes +10 instead of +6. Remain Conscious: The frenzied berserker gains Remain Conscious as a bonus feat. Supreme Cleave: At 2nd level, the frenzied berserker can take a 5-foot step between attacks when using the Cleave or Great Cleave feat. She is still limited to one such adjustment per round, so she cannot use this ability during a round in which she has already taken a 5-foot step. Deathless Frenzy (Ex): At 4th level, the frenzied berserker can scorn death and unconsciousness while in a frenzy.

Should her hit points to fall to 0 or below because of hit point loss, she continues to fight normally until her frenzy ends. At that point, the effects of her wounds apply normally. This ability does not prevent death from spell effects such as slay living or disintegrate. Improved Power Attack: Beginning at 5th level, the frenzied berserker gains a +3 bonus on her melee damage rolls for every –2 penalty she takes on her melee attack rolls when using the Power Attack feat. Inspire Frenzy (Su): Beginning at 6th level, the frenzied berserker can inspire frenzy in her allies while she herself is frenzied. When she uses this ability, all allies within 10 feet of her gain the benefits and the disadvantages of frenzy as if they had that ability themselves. Those who do not wish to be affected can make a Will save (DC 10 + frenzied berserker level + frenzied berserker's Charisma modifier) to resist the effect. The frenzy of affected allies lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the frenzied berserker's Constitution modifier, regardless of whether they remain within 10 feet of her. The frenzied berserker gains one additional use of this ability per day for every two additional frenzied berserker levels she acquires, though the ability is still usable only once per encounter. Supreme Power Attack: At 10th level, the frenzied berserker gains a +2 bonus on her melee damage rolls for every –1 penalty she takes on her melee attack rolls when using the Power Attack feat. This effect does not Stack with that of Improved Power Attack.

GEOMANCER

The cleric reaches out to a higher power. The wizard trusts only in eldritch tomes. The druid looks to nature for her spells. To the geomancer, however, all magic is the same. Geomancy is the art of channeling magical energy from many sources through the land itself. A geomancer may research like a wizard, pray like a cleric, or sing like a bard, but he casts spells as only a geomancer can.

In the area he calls home (be it high on a mountain, deep in 3 Forest, or even beneath an ocean) he weaves ley lines—powerful connections to the land itself. The spells he casts through these connections with the earth are reflections of his own strength of will. As the geomancer progresses, however, the effort of gathering magic through the earth takes a physical toll on him, making him more and more like the land and its creatures. Only characters with more than one spellcasting class can become geomancers. The most popular combinations are druid sorcerer and druid wizard.

Clerics with arcane spellcasting ability can also qualify, those with access to the Plant or Animal domain are the most likely to consider this path.

A bard or a ranger who picks up a second, more focused spellcasting class can also adopt this lifestyle.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a geomancer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 6 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells and 2nd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The geomancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Animal Empathy (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nature), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the geomancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Geomancers gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each geomancer level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

Since the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a geomancer, the player must decide to which class to add each geomancer level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Spell Versatility: At 1st level, the geomancer learns to blend divine and arcane magic.

He still acquires and prepares his spells in the normal manner for his individual spellcasting classes.

When he casts them, however, he can mix or match spellcasting parameters from any of his classes to gain the maximum possible advantage for any spell with a spell level equal to or less than his spell versatility score.

Thus, as a 4th-level geomancer, he can cast any of his 3rd-level or lower sorcerer/wizard spells with no chance of arcane spell failure from armor.

(The druidic prohibition against metal armor still applies to druid/geomancers, however, since this stricture stems from a spiritual oath rather than a practical limitation).

The geomancer may use his Wisdom bonus to set the save DC for arcane spells, or his Charisma or Intelligence bonus (whichever he would normally use for arcane spells; to set the save DC for divine spells).

If a spell requires either an arcane material component or a divine focus, he may use either.

A cleric/geomancer who also has levels of wizard, sorcerer, or bard can spontaneously convert any prepared arcane or divine spell (except a domain spell) of an appropriate level into a cure or inflict spell of equal or lower level, though he must be capable of casting the latter as a cleric.

Drift: The character slowly becomes closer to nature.

At each geomancer level, choose a drift from the appropriate stage (see Drift, below).

Ley Lines: At 2nd level, the geomancer learns to create magical connections with a specific type of terrain.

Choose one of the following terrain types: aquatic, desert, Forest, hills, marsh, mountains, or plains.

In that terrain, the geomancer's effective caster level for all spells increases by +1.

At 6th level and again at 10th level, the character may either choose a new terrain in which to receive the benefit (at +1), or increase his effective caster level in a previously chosen terrain by an additional +1.

DRIFT

Drift is a gradual devolution into some other natural form. Those who experience this phenomenon gain attributes of animals and plants as time goes by.

Geomancers experience drift at every level.

As a variant rule, high-level druids who spend all their lives away from civilization may also experience drift at the Dungeon Master's discretion—perhaps once every ten years.

Drift is divided into stages.

You must choose one drift from stage 1 the first time you experience the phenomenon.

Your second drift must also be from stage 1.

Thereafter, you may choose from a higher stage only after you have acquired at least two drifts from the previous stage.

For example, a stage 4 drift may be chosen only after you have at least two stage 1 drifts, two stage 2 drifts, and two stage 3 drifts.

You may, however, choose drifts from stages below your maximum whenever you wish.

For example, you if you have two stage 1 drifts, you may choose a third stage 1 rather than a stage 2, if desired.

Stage 1 drifts have no game effect.

Each drift of stage 2 and beyond grants a permanent extraordinary ability.

Natural attacks allow for Strength bonuses on damage rolls, except in the case of poison and acid.

STAGE 1

1. Leopard spots appear on your body.
2. You grow a cat's tail.
3. You sprout feathers (but not wings).
4. Your eyebrows become green and bushy.
5. Your hair becomes a tangle of short vines.
6. Light, downy fur covers your skin.
7. Your skin turns green and scaly.
8. Your touch causes flowers to wilt.
9. Your voice sounds like a dog's, though it is still intelligible.
10. Zebra stripes appear on your body.

STAGE 2

1. A small camel's hump grows on your back. (You can go without water for up to five days).
2. You grow a coat of white fur like a polar bear's. (You gain a +8 bonus on Hide checks in snowy areas).
3. The pads of your feet become sticky, like those of a lizard. (You gain a +4 bonus on Climb checks).
4. You become as swift as an elk. (Your land speed increases by +5 feet).
5. You become as comely as a dryad. (You gain a +4 bonus on Diplomacy checks).
6. You become as graceful as a cat.

(You gain a +4 bonus on Balance checks).

7. You sprout leaves and become photosynthetic. (You can subsist on 1 hour/day of sunlight in lieu of food, though you still require the same amount of water as before).

8. Your blood flows as slowly as tree sap. The speed at which progressive damage, such as that from wounding or decomposition (see Chapter 6), affects you is halved.

9. Your eyes become as sharp as a rat's. (You gain low-light vision).

10. Your skin adapts like that of an octopus. (You can change color to blend with your surroundings, gaining a +4 bonus on Hide checks).

STAGE 3

1. Deer antlers grow from your forehead. (You gain a gore attack for 1d6 points of damage).

2. Thorns grow on your body. (Your unarmed attacks do piercing damage, and those striking you with natural weapons suffer 1d3 points of piercing damage per successful hit).

3. You can constrict like a snake. (You deal 1d3 points of damage with a successful grapple check against a creature of your size category or smaller).

4. You can spin a web like a spider. (You can use your web to snare prey as described in the monstrous spider entry in the Monster Manual, but you cannot attack with it).

5. You sprout fish gills. (You can breathe both water and air).

6. Your eyes become as sharp as an eagle's. (You gain a +4 bonus on Spot checks in daylight).

7. Your eyes become as sharp as an owl's. (You gain a +4 bonus on Spot checks in dusk and darkness).

8. Your fingers grow hawklike talons. (You gain Weapon Finesse [claw] and can make two claw attacks per round for 1d3 points of damage each).

9. Your mouth extends like a crocodile's. (You gain a bite attack for 1d6 points of damage).

10. Your toes grow lionlike claws. (You can make two rake attacks for 1d4 points of damage each if you gain a hold on your target).

STAGE 4

1. You grow an acid stinger like that of a giant ant. (You can sting for 1d4 points of piercing damage + 1d4 points of acid damage).

2. You can trip like a wolf. (If you hit with a natural attack, you can attempt to trip your target as a free action; see the wolf entry in the Monster Manual).

3. You can rage like a wolverine. (If you take damage, you rage as a 1st-level barbarian—see Barbarian in the Player's Handbook—or gain +1 effective level of any class you have that grants rage as a class feature, but only for determining the benefits of rage).

4. You gain a boar's ferocity.

(You continue to fight without penalty even while disabled or dying).

5. You can grab like a bear. (You gain the improved grab ability as described in the introduction of the Monster Manual).

6. You can pounce like a leopard. (If you leap on a foe in the first round of combat, you can make a full attack action even if you have already taken a move action).

7. Your hands become as strong as a gorilla's. (You gain a +2 bonus on Strength checks to break objects).

8. Your jaw becomes as powerful as a weasel's. (You can attach to an opponent with a successful bite and inflict 1d3 points of damage per round until unattached. However, you lose your Dexterity bonus to AC while attached).

9. You can fire an ink cloud as does a squid. (In water, you can emit a cloud of jet-black ink 10 feet on a side once per minute as a free action; this provides total concealment and those within the cloud suffer the effects of total darkness).

10. Your nose becomes as sensitive as a hound's. (You gain the Scent feat; see Chapter 2).

STAGE 5

1. You grow a unicorn horn. (You gain a +4 bonus on Fortitude saves against poison and a gore attack for 1d8 points of damage).

2. Feathered or batlike wings grow from your back. (You gain a fly speed of 60 feet).

3. You can curl into a spiny ball like a hedgehog. (When curled, you gain a +4 natural armor bonus to AC, but you may not move or attack. Curling or uncurling is a standard action).

4. You are as graceful as a pixie. (You gain a +2 bonus on Reflex saves).

5. You gain the tremorsense of an earthworm. (You can sense anything in contact with the ground within 30 feet of you).

6. Your canine teeth exude poison. (If you hit with a bite attack, your target must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Constitution modifier) against poison. Initial damage is 1d2 points of temporary Dexterity damage; secondary damage is 1d4 points of temporary Dexterity damage).

7. Your senses become as sharp as a bat's. (You gain the Blindsight feat; see Chapter 2).

8. Your feet extend to elephantine width. (You gain the trample ability as described in the introduction of the Monster Manual).

Your trample attack does 2d4 points of bludgeoning damage, and the Reflex save DC is 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Strength modifier).

9. You can move like a cheetah. (Once per hour, you can take a charge action to move ten times your normal speed).

10. Your skin becomes tree bark. (You gain a +1 natural armor bonus to AC).

HEXER

“Do not meet the gaze of the shaman with the evil eye”, warn townfolk who have crossed paths with a hexer. Unfortunately, the typical intrepid adventurer rarely hears such advice in time.

The hexer profits by this ignorance, surprising his victims with the power of his gaze.

Many hexers inflict curses that follow their victims like a plague.

The more powerful practitioners can engender fear, cause magical slumber, or enthrall their victims as slaves with a mere glance.

Hexers are unknown among civilized peoples; they are found only among tribes of goblins, ogres, and orcs.

Prior to pursuing the path of the hexer, most of them were adepts who served as witch doctors for their tribes.

Hexers often assume leadership of their tribes as well—who would dare to gainsay them, after all?

Most hexers are villainous, evil cretins lacking any code of morality, and the vast majority of them hate humans, elves, dwarves, and other civilized races.

Neutral hexers are no less dangerous, especially when something threatens the welfare of their tribes.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a hexer, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Race/Type: Monstrous humanoid, giant, goblinoid, or other primitive humanoid, such as orc or gnoll.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks, Wilderness Lore 10 ranks.

Spellcasting: Able to cast lightning bolt as a divine spell.

CLASS SKILLS

The hexer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (any) (Int), Profession (any) (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill) Spellcraft (Int), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the hexer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hexers gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each hexer level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like), if the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a hexer, the player must decide to which class to add each hexer level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Hex (Sp): At 1st level, the hexer gains a gaze attack.

He can use this ability once per day at 1st level and twice per day at 2nd level.

Thereafter, he gains one additional use per day of this ability for every two hexer levels he acquires.

Activating this power is a standard action, and it lasts for a number of rounds equal to the character's hexer level.

Each round, the hexer's gaze attack automatically works against one creature within 30 feet that is looking at (attacking or interacting with) him.

Targets who avert their eyes have a 50% chance of avoiding the gaze, but the hexer gains one-half concealment (20% miss chance) relative to those who successfully avoid the gaze.

Targets can also close their eyes or turn away entirely; doing so prevents the hex from affecting them but grants the gazer total concealment (50% miss chance) relative to them.

An affected target must make a Will save (DC 10 + hexer level + hexer's Wisdom modifier) or suffer a –4 enhancement penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, ability checks, and skill checks.

These effects are permanent until removed with a break enchantment, limited wish, miracle, remove curse, or wish spell.

This is an enchantment effect and cannot be dispelled.

A hex does not affect undead creatures or extend beyond the plane that the hexer occupies.

The hexer is subject to the effects of his own reflected gaze and is allowed a saving throw against them.

Bonus Spell: At 2nd level, the hexer adds a new spell of his choice to his spell list.

This spell must come from the wizard/sorcerer spell list and must be of a spell level that the hexer can cast.

He can prepare this new spell at the same spell level as it appeared on the wizard/sorcerer list.

He gains one additional bonus spell for every two hexer levels he has.

Sicken Hex (Sp): At 3rd level, the hexer can use his gaze attack to inflict a debilitating illness.

This ability functions like the hex ability (above), except that the target must make a Fortitude save instead of a Will save to resist, and the effect is as described below.

A sicken hex requires one daily use of the character's hex ability.

A target who fails the save is overcome with pain and fever, which causes him or her to move at one-half normal speed, lose any Dexterity bonus to Armor Class, and suffer a -2 circumstance penalty on attack rolls.

These effects are permanent until removed with a break enchantment, limited wish, miracle, remove curse, or wish spell. A sicken hex is a necromancy effect that cannot be dispelled.

Fear Hex (Sp): At 5th level, the hexer can use his gaze attack to engender fear.

This ability functions like the hex ability (above), except that target is affected as if by a fear spell.

A fear hex is a mind-influencing, compulsion, enchantment effect, and it requires one daily use of the character's hex ability.

Sleep Hex (Sp): At 7th level, the hexer can use his gaze to generate a sleep effect.

This ability functions like the hex ability (above), except that duration is 10 minutes × the character's hexer level and the target is affected as if by a sleep spell.

A sleep hex is a mind-influencing, compulsion, enchantment effect, and it requires one daily use of the character's hex ability.

Charm Hex (Sp): At 9th level, the hexer can use his gaze attack to generate a charm monster effect.

This ability functions like the hex ability (above), except that duration is 1 day per hexer level and the target is affected as if by a charm monster spell.

(Should the hexer fall victim to his own reflected gaze attack, he is affected as if by a hold monster spell).

A charm hex is a mind-influencing, charm, enchantment effect, and it requires one daily use of the character's hex ability.

KING/QUEEN OF THE WILD

Few are brave enough to climb the highest mountains and tread the deepest deserts.

But where nature's fury is at its height, there you'll find the kings and queens of the wild, undaunted by the challenges before them—that is, if you're strong enough to look for them there.

When choosing this prestige class, you must specify one of the following eight terrain types: desert, forest, hills, marsh, mountain, plains, sea, skies, or underground. Other terrain types are not harsh enough to engender this kind of survivalism.

Anyone with a tie to nature and sufficient hardiness can become a king or queen of the wild.

Rangers, barbarians, and druids tend to be the most comfortable with this lifestyle.

However, many adventurers have clashed with snow wizards and desert sorcerers who have augmented their powers by adopting this prestige class.

A character can choose this prestige class more than once but must select a different terrain type and start again at 1st level each time.

Levels of different king/queen of the wild classes do not stack for determining level-based class features.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a king or queen of the wild, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Fortitude Save Bonus: +4.

Skills: Hide 4 ranks, Intuit Direction 4 ranks, Wilderness Lore 8 ranks, terrain-dependent prerequisite skill (see below) 4 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Track.

Special: The character must choose a terrain type (see below) and live in or near such an area.

CLASS SKILLS

The king/queen of the wild's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the king/queen of the wild prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Kings and queens of the wild gain proficiency with simple weapons and light armor.

Terrain Skill Bonuses: At 1st level, a king or queen of the wild gains a +2 insight bonus on both Wilderness Lore checks and checks made with his or her terrain-dependent prerequisite skill while in the chosen terrain.

Endure Elements (Ex): The king or queen of the wild can ignore some damage from the element associated with the chosen terrain type (see Terrain-Dependent Features, below) as though under a permanent endure elements effect. At 2nd level, the character ignores the first 5 points of damage from that element.

(The terrain elements correspond to the five energy types: acid, cold, electricity, fire, and sonic).

This amount increases by an additional +5 at 5th, 8th, and 10th level.

Terrain Movement (Ex): At 2nd level, if the chosen terrain is land-based, the king or queen of the wild can move overland through it as if it were plains.

A king of the sea or a queen of the marsh swims along the surface of water at one-half his or her land speed.

Attack Native Creatures (Ex): The king or queen of the wild gains a competence bonus on attack rolls against any creature that has the character's chosen terrain listed in the Climate/Terrain section of its statistics.

(In the case of a king or queen of the skies, this means any naturally flying creature who lives outdoors).

A creature with a listing of "Any land" does not trigger these bonuses.

This bonus is +1 at 3rd level, and it increases by +1 for every two king/queen of the wild levels the character gains thereafter.

Terrain Camouflage (Ex): At 3rd level, kings and queens of the wild may use the raw materials of their chosen terrains to conceal their presence from others.

This full-round action grants a character a +10 competence bonus on Hide checks in the chosen terrain.

Bonus Feat: At 4th and 8th level, a king or queen of the wild may choose a bonus feat from the list for his or her terrain type (see below).

This is in addition to the feats that a character of any class normally gets every three levels.

The character must still meet any prerequisites for these bonus feats.

Detect Animals and Plants (Sp): At 6th level, the character can use detect animals or plants within the chosen terrain as a druid of his or her king/queen of the wild level.

This ability is usable three times a day.

Adaptation (Su): At 7th level, the character can function as if wearing a necklace of adaptation for a total of up to 30 minutes per day.

Freedom of Movement (Su): At 10th level, the king/queen of the wild can function as if under the influence of a freedom of movement spell for up to 30 minutes.

This ability is usable once per day.

TERRAIN-DEPENDENT FEATURES

Each of the nine prestige classes derived from king/queen of the wild has different features depending on the terrain type chosen.

KING/QUEEN OF THE DESERT

Terrain Type: Desert.

Prerequisite Skill: Spot.

Terrain Element: Fire.

Bonus Feats: Great Fortitude, Mounted Combat, Run, Skill Focus (Spot), Toughness.

KING/QUEEN OF THE FOREST

Terrain Type: Forest.

Prerequisite Skill: Climb.

Terrain Element: Fire.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Brachiation, Point Blank Shot, Run, Skill Focus (Climb).

KING/QUEEN OF THE HILLS

Terrain Type: Hills.

Prerequisite Skill: Climb.

Terrain Element: Cold.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Far Shot, Run, Skill Focus (Climb), Toughness.

KING/QUEEN OF THE MARSH

Terrain Type: Marsh.

Prerequisite Skill: Swim.

Terrain Element: Acid.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Great Fortitude, Skill Focus (Swim), Toughness.

KING/QUEEN OF THE MOUNTAIN

Terrain Type: Mountains.

Prerequisite Skill: Climb.

Terrain Element: Cold.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Great Fortitude, Jump, Skill Focus (Climb), Toughness.

KING/QUEEN OF THE PLAINS

Terrain Type: Plains.

Prerequisite Skill: Move Silently.

Terrain Element: Electricity.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Far Shot, Point-Blank Shot, Run, Skill Focus (Move Silently).

KING/QUEEN OF THE SEA

Terrain Type: Aquatic.

Prerequisite Skill: Swim.

Terrain Element: Cold.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (net), Silent Spell, Skill Focus (Swim).

KING/QUEEN OF THE SKIES

Terrain Type: Air.

Prerequisite Skill: Balance.

Terrain Element: Electricity.

Bonus Feats: Flyby Attack, Hover, Skill Focus (Balance), Snatch, Wingover.

KING/QUEEN OF THE UNDERGROUND

Terrain Type: Underground.

Prerequisite Skill: Escape Artist.

Terrain Element: Sonic.

Bonus Feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Extra Turning, Great Fortitude, Toughness.

OOZEMASTER

Seeping out of every crack and crevice in the dungeon is some foul, monochromatic substance that adventurers wish wasn't there.

Just when they get around the yellow mold, green slime drips from the ceiling.

Quite often, such abominations well up naturally, but occasionally they are placed by a more deliberate hand—that of the oozemaster.

The oozemaster is not a class for stable individuals. It involves relating one-on-one with things that relate to nothing at all.

Unlike the animal lord's kindred creatures, the oozemaster's charges have nothing to say.

No one has yet developed a Speak with ooze spell—or if, someone has, the oozes haven't responded.

Given that oozemasters exude everything but confidence, most of them have few sentient friends and even fewer guests.

Thus, they tend to gibber and talk to themselves a lot. Characters of any spellcasting class can become oozemasters, though the class tends to be most appealing to druids, wizards, and—oddly—bards (who usually end up taking another direction before this one gets too creepy). Assassins, already masters of poison, find the benefits of this prestige class highly compatible with their line of work.

Clerics, however, had better think about what their followers might say before taking this path.

A cleric of Vecna's followers might think him clever for becoming an oozemaster, while followers of a cleric of Pelor might seek a new spiritual leader.

Racially, half-orcs and gnomes are more suited to this class than elves and half-elves, most of whom consider themselves too refined for this basest of prestige classes. The drow, of course, are exceptions, since it was they who created this class in the first place.

Certainly, the first oozemaster was a dark elf, though how this magic got out of the subterranean depths is a mystery best left unprobed.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as an oozemaster, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Alchemy 4 ranks, Swim 4 ranks.

Feats: Great Fortitude.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The oozemasters class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Disguise (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Profession (any) (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str) and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the oozemaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Oozemasters gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At 2nd level and every other oozemaster level thereafter, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an oozemaster, the player must decide to which class to add each oozemaster level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Minor Oozy Touch (Su): At 1st level, the oozemaster's hands can secrete a specific kind of ooze.

Choose one kind of oozy touch from the table below.

The character may, as a full attack action, make a melee touch attack that has the effect listed for that kind of ooze on the table below.

Minor Oozy Touch Options

Kind	Damage/Effect
Brown mold	1d6 + oozemaster level points of cold subdual damage to flesh
Cray ooze	1d6 + oozemaster level points of acid damage to flesh, metal, or wood
Ochre jelly	1d4 points of stunning damage and 1d4 + oozemaster level points of acid damage to flesh only
Phosphorescent fungus	Touched area emits a soft violet glow as a light spell until the fungus is wiped off

The oozemaster can use this ability as often as desired.

At 3rd level, he may choose one additional oozy minor oozy touch.

In addition, the oozemaster is immune to the effects of that particular kind of ooze, even in the form of oozy touch attacks from another oozemaster.

Thus, an oozemaster with brown mold oozy touch is immune to the effects of all brown mold.

This ability confers no special resistance to similar effects that do not stem from the character's selected kind of ooze, so the aforementioned oozemaster is still subject to cold subdual damage from other sources—such as cold weather.

Oozy Glob (Sp): The oozemaster can throw a glob of the same material as any oozy touch gained at a previous level, with a range increment of 10 feet.

This is treated as a grenadelike weapon.

He can throw one oozy glob per round.

(A character attacks with a grenadelike weapon as a ranged touch attack.

Direct hits deal direct hit damage as noted on the table above.

All creatures within 5 feet suffer 1 point of the appropriate splash damage.

See Grenadelike Weapon Attacks in Chapter 8 of the Player's Handbook for more details).

This ability is usable once per day at 2nd level.

Thereafter, the oozemaster gains one additional use per day of this ability for every two oozemaster levels he acquires.

Slithery Face (Su): At 2nd level, the oozemaster learns to manipulate his facial features, gaining a competence bonus equal to his oozemaster level on Disguise checks.

Malleability (Su): At 4th level, the oozemaster can compress his body enough to squeeze through an inch-wide crack.

He cannot expand inside a space that offers any resistance, such as an occupied suit of armor.

Major Oozy Touch (Su): At 5th, 7th, and 9th level, the oozemaster chooses a kind of major oozy touch from the table below, or from the choices in the Minor Oozy Touch Options table above.

Major Oozy Touch Options

Kind	Damage/Effect
Black pudding	2d6 + oozemaster level points of acid damage to flesh, metal, wood, or stone
Gelatinous cube	Fort save (DC 15) or paralyzed for a number of rounds equal to 1d6 + oozemaster level
Green slime	1d6 temporary Constitution damage to flesh and 1d6 + oozemaster level points of acid damage to metal or wood
Yellow mold	2d4 points of temporary Constitution damage to flesh (DC 15 Fort save for half)

This ability is otherwise identical to minor oozy touch (above).

Indiscernible Anatomy (Su): At 6th level, the oozemaster's anatomy becomes difficult to discern.

Treat all critical hits and sneak attacks against him as though he were wearing armor with the light fortification power.

Slime Wave (Sp): At 8th level, the oozemaster may use slime wave (see Chapter 6) once per day as the spell cast by a 13th-level druid.

One with the Ooze: At 10th level, the oozemaster is as slimy as the creatures he favors.

His type changes to ooze for determining what effects and items can affect him.

He gains the Blindsight feat (hearing-based version, see Chapter 2) and becomes immune to flanking, poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and all mind-influencing effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, patterns, and morale effects).

In addition, he is immune to polymorph other, but he retains any shapechanging ability he previously possessed.

SHIFTER

The shifter has no form that she calls her own. Instead, she clothes herself in whatever shape is most expedient at the time.

While others base their identities largely on their external forms, the shifter actually comes closer to her true self through all her transformations.

Of necessity, her sense of self is based not on her outward form, but on her soul, which is truly the only constant about her.

It is the inner strength of that soul that enables her to take on any shape and remain herself within.

At first, the shifter can risk only humanoid forms and familiar animal shapes.

As she grows more comfortable with her own true shapelessness, however, she can assume more outlandish forms.

Eventually, she knows herself so well that she feels just as comfortable in the shape of a completely different creature type as she does in her own.

At that point, her past—even her race—becomes irrelevant, since external form no longer matters to her.

The shifter's path is ideal for a spellcaster of any race who has experienced shapeshifting and yearns for more of it.

Such a character can be a great force for either good or ill in the world; an evil shifter in particular poses a terrible threat, for she can appear anywhere, in any form.

The same opponents may face her again and again, in one shape after another, never realizing that they actually face a single, formless enemy.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a shifter, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Feats: Alertness, Endurance.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level spells.

Special: Alternate Form—must either know polymorph self or have a natural alternate form, alter self, polymorph self, shapechange, or wild shape ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The shifter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the shifter prestige class. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shifters gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Greater Wild Shape (Sp): Beginning at 1st level, the shifter can take the form of another creature.

Greater wild shape works like wild shape, with the following exceptions.

As she rises in level, the shifter gains the ability to assume the forms of creatures with types other than animal (see Table 5–15 for details), though she cannot choose a form that normally has more Hit Dice than she herself does.

She can designate at the time of the change which pieces of her equipment meld into her new form and which do not.

Nonmelded equipment alters its size to match that of her new form, but retains its functionality.

The shifter cannot, however, use any equipment unless she has either an appropriate appendage or a magical means of compensating for the lack of one.

Any piece of equipment that is separated from her reverts to its original form.

At 1st level, the shifter is limited to humanoid forms of Small and Medium-size.

Thereafter, she can use greater wild shape two more times per day for every two shifter levels she gains, and her range of available creature sizes and types increases as shown on Table 5–15.

When she gains the ability to adopt an undead shape at 5th level, she may become incorporeal if she chooses the form of a creature with that subtype.

If the shifter already has the wild shape ability from another class, she may convert her uses per day of wild shape to uses per day of greater wild shape on a one-for-one basis.

She may also mix and match the benefits of the two abilities as desired to gain the maximum advantage for any daily use.

Thus, a Drd8/shifter1 has up to four uses per day of greater wild shape, and she could use the ability to become a Large humanoid (because an 8th-level druid can become a Large creature and a 1st-level shifter can adopt the form of a humanoid).

In the same manner, a Drd8/Shift2 could become a Large monstrous humanoid if she wished.

Supernatural Ease: At 6th level, the character's greater wild shape ability becomes supernatural rather than spell-like.

It still requires a standard action and can be suppressed in an antimagic field, but its use no longer provokes attacks of opportunity and never requires a Concentration check.

Evershifting Form: At 10th level, the shifter has reached the pinnacle of her shapechanging abilities.

From this point on, she can use greater wild shape once per round, as a move-equivalent action, as many times per day as she wishes.

Her type changes to shapechanger for determining what effects and items can affect her, and she gains darkvision (60 feet), which remains in effect regardless of her form.

In addition, the shifter no longer suffers ability penalties for aging and is not subject to magical aging, though any aging penalties she may already have suffered remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue, and the shifter still dies of old age when her time is up.

TABLE 5–15: THE SHIFTER

TAMER OF BEASTS

The ability to bond with animals opens up a new way of life for some druids and rangers.

By exploring and strengthening their bonds with their animal companions, they can improve not only the creatures' lives, but their own as well.

Though a character who follows this path is called a tamer of beasts, this is perhaps a misnomer, since he does not truly master, tame, or domesticate his companions.

Rather, through his magic and his overwhelming concern for his charges, he can make them tougher and more intelligent.

Ultimately, he can even converse with them as equals.

This class appeals primarily to rangers and druids.

A member of another class may feel some longing for the path of the tamer, but without first developing a deep relationship with an animal, it is impossible to embrace this prestige class.

Tamers of beasts have been known among all races.

Elves, half-elves, and gnomes are the most likely to take up this path because of their affinity for nature, and dwarves are the least likely.

The philosophy of a tamer of beasts is compatible with any alignment.

Unlike most druids, tamers of beasts usually reside close to civilization.

Some NPC tamers of beasts conceal their special relationships with animals and beasts by finding employment in a common circus or zoo.

More typically, however, tamers of beasts adopt creatures that are threatened by growing populations of humanoids, protecting and shielding them from harm.

If these creatures have suffered greatly at the hands of humanoids, tamers of beasts may also try to exact retribution.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a tamer of beasts, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Skills: Animal Empathy 10 ranks.

Feats: Skill Focus (Animal Empathy).

Spells: Able to cast animal friendship.

CLASS SKILLS

The tamer of beasts's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the tamer of beasts prestige class.

All modifications and bonuses granted to the tamers animal companions are immediately negated upon their release or the death of the tamer.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tamers of beasts gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At 3rd, 6th, and 9th level, the tamer of beasts gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a tamer of beasts, the player must decide to which class to add each tamer of beasts level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Animal Mastery: Beginning at 1st level, the tamer of beasts can have animal companions whose Hit Dice total no more than the sum of twice his tamer of beasts level plus twice his caster level for animal friendship.

For example, a Drd7/tamer of beasts3 can have up to 20 Hit Dice of animal companions.

No individual animal companion can have more Hit Dice than the tamer of beasts does.

Intelligence: Through constant exposure to the tamer of beasts, his animal companions become more intelligent than the average for their species.

When the tamer of beasts is 1st level, the Intelligence score of each of his companions rises to 4, and the creature's type changes to magical beast.

This minimum Intelligence score rises by 2 points for every two tamer of beasts levels the character gains thereafter.

This improved Intelligence may allow the companion to follow more complex instructions than it could before.

Also, the tamer of beasts can teach each companion three tricks per point of Intelligence it has (see the Animal Companions sidebar in Chapter 2 of the DUNGEON MASTER'S Guide and Chapter 2 of this book for more information on training animals).

Empathic Link (Su): At 2nd level, the tamer of beasts gains an empathic link that allows him to communicate telepathically with his companions to a maximum distance of one mile.

The tamer of beasts and the companion can understand one another as if a speak with animals effect were in force.

Of course, intelligence is still a factor in the content of such conversations, and misunderstandings on that basis are still possible.

Blood Bond: At 3rd level, each of the tamer of beast's companions gains a +2 bonus on all attack rolls, checks, and saves after witnessing any threat or harm to the tamer.

This bonus lasts as long as the threat is immediate and apparent.

Natural Armor: Also when the tamer of beasts reaches 3rd level, each of his companions gains a +2 enhancement bonus to its natural armor.

This bonus rises to +4 at 6th level and +6 at 9th level.

Animal Senses (Su): At 4th level, the tamer of beasts can hear through any designated companion's ears or smell through its nose.

At 7th level, he can see through a companion's eyes.

The tamer can activate his animal senses as a standard action, and he does not lose the ability to sense events around him by doing so.

Speak with Master (Ex): Also at 4th level, the tamer of beasts gains the ability to communicate verbally with his companions in a language of his own.

Creatures other than his companions cannot understand this communication without magical aid.

Beast Mastery (Sp): At 5th level, the tamer of beasts can use the animal friendship spell to affect beasts in addition to animals, regardless of the target's Intelligence score.

Beast companions count against the tamer's total allowed Hit Dice of companions just as animals do.

Share Saving Throws: When the tamer of beasts reaches 6th level, his companions can use either his base saves or their own, mixing and matching to gain the highest value for each.

Share Spells: At 7th level, the tamer of beasts may have any spell he casts on himself also affect one companion of his choice within 5 feet of him.

A spell with a duration other than instantaneous stops affecting the companion if it moves farther than 5 feet away, and the effect is not reinstated even if that companion again comes within 5 feet of the character before the spell's duration expires.

Additionally, the tamer may cast a spell with a target of "You" on a companion (as if the spell had a range of touch) instead of on himself.

The tamer of beasts and the companion can share even spells that do not normally affect creatures of the companion's type.

Command Creatures of Kind (Sp): When the tamer of beasts reaches 8th level, his companions can use command as a spell-like ability at will against other creatures of their kind.

This ability affects only creatures with fewer Hit Dice than that particular companion has.

Each companion can use this ability once per day per two levels of the tamer, and the ability functions just like the spell command (for purposes of this spell, the companion can make itself understood).

Magical Beast Mastery (Sp): At 9th level, the tamer of beasts can use the animal friendship spell to affect magical beasts in addition to beasts and animals, regardless of the target's Intelligence.

Magical beast companions count as double their own Hit Dice against the tamer's total allowed Hit Dice of companions.

For example, a cockatrice with 5 Hit Dice accounts for 10 Hit Dice of companions.

Inspire Greatness (Su): At 10th level, the tamer of beasts can grant extra fighting ability to all his companions within 30 feet.

An inspired companion gains +2 Hit Dice (d10s that grant temporary hit points), a +2 competence bonus on attacks, and a +1 competence bonus on Fortitude saves.

Apply the companion's Constitution modifier, if any, to each bonus Hit Die.

These extra Hit Dice count as regular Hit Dice for determining the effects of spells such as sleep.

The tamer of beasts can inspire his companions once per day, and the effects last for 5 rounds.

This is a supernatural, mind-affecting, enchantment ability.

TEMPEST

The tempest is the point of calm within a whirling barrier of deadly blades.

Poets use colorful terms such as dancer to describe the movement of a tempest and her two blades, but mastery of this fighting style is not about dancing.

Nor is it about impressing anyone—least of all poets.

The tempest focuses on learning the ultimate secrets of two-weapon fighting for a single purpose—the destruction of her enemies.

Typically hardy individualists, tempests rarely learn their skills through any sort of formal training.

Instead, they master their art through constant application of its disciplines and experimentation on their foes.

Similarly, no matter how famous tempests become, it's rare for them to take on students.

Their art, they say, is one that can be learned but never taught.

This prestige class is open to all classes and races.

Though tempests are rare, every humanoid race has boasted at least a few.

Elves make for nimble, clever tempests whose dexterity works to their advantage.

Dwarves, perhaps because they favor heavy armor and heavy weapons, are the least likely characters to become tempests.

Even members of the smaller races can find the tempest's path appealing.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a tempest, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +9.

Feats: Ambidexterity, Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

Two-Weapon Fighting, and Weapon Finesse (any) or Weapon Focus (any).

CLASS SKILLS

The tempest's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the tempest prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tempests gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Improved Two-Weapon Fighting: Beginning at 1st level, a tempest can fight with two weapons as if she had the Improved Two-Weapon Fighting feat when she is wearing light armor or no armor.

She loses this ability when fighting in medium or heavy armor, or when using a double weapon (such as a two-bladed sword).

Off-Hand Parry: At 2nd level, the tempest gains Off-Hand Parry as a bonus feat.

As she gains tempest levels, her AC bonus from this feat increases, rising to +4 at 4th level and to +6 at 6th level.

Greater Two-Weapon Fighting: At 5th level, a tempest can fight with two weapons as if she had the Greater Two-Weapon Fighting feat when she is wearing light armor or no armor.

She loses this ability when fighting in medium or heavy armor, or when using a double weapon (such as a two-bladed sword).

Absolute Ambidexterity: Beginning at 8th level, the tempest's attack penalties for fighting with two weapons lessen by 2 when she is wearing light armor or no armor. Thus, if she fights with a light weapon in her off hand, she suffers no penalties on her attack rolls for fighting with two weapons.

(If the off-hand weapon is not light, she suffers a -2 penalty on attack rolls with both her primary hand and her off-hand).

Supreme Two-Weapon Fighting: At 10th level, a tempest gains an additional attack with her off-hand weapon when she is wearing light armor or no armor.

In addition to the three attacks she already has each round with her off-hand weapon (for Improved Two-Weapon Fighting and Greater Two-Weapon Fighting) at penalties of 0, -5, and -10, respectively, she is also entitled to a fourth attack with her off-hand weapon at a -15 penalty (see Table 8-2: Two-Weapon Fighting Penalties in the Player's Handbook).

She loses this special ability when fighting in medium or heavy armor, or when using a double weapon (such as a two-bladed sword).

VERDANT LORD

Saying the verdant lord has a green thumb is like calling a red dragon a creature with a slight affinity for fire.

The verdant lord is the final defender of the Forest.

He has left behind the druid's search for global understanding of nature's secrets to focus all his energies on the world's plant life.

Elven and half-elven druids are the most likely characters to embrace the role of the verdant lord.

Druids of other races, rangers, and the occasional priest of Obad-Hai or Ehlonna have also been known to adopt this prestige class.

It's almost impossible for characters without such ties to become verdant lords because they have neither the interest in nor the required understanding of seeds, saplings, and trees.

Since most verdant lords have little use for civilization, they tend to be loners, watching the years pass by from their groves.

Adventuring verdant lords are rare, but those who do exist are marvelous to behold.

They tend to take their gardens with them, often bringing several plant creatures, such as animated trees and treants, along on adventures.

Verdant lords tend to be soft-spoken, easygoing individuals—right up until someone lights a torch and threatens living plants.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a verdant lord, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Profession (herbalist) 8 ranks, Wilderness Lore 8 ranks.

Feats: Plant Control, Plant Defiance.

Spells: Able to cast control plants.

CLASS SKILLS

The verdant lord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Scry (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the verdant lord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Verdant lords gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each verdant lord level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (additional wild shape options, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a verdant lord, the player must decide to which class to add each verdant lord level for determining spells per day and spells known.

Create Infusion: At 1st level, the verdant lord gains Create Infusion as a bonus feat.

Expert Infusion: At 2nd level, the character can automatically identify the spell contained in an infusion and the caster level of that spell (see Infusions in Chapter 3).

He also gains a bonus equal to his verdant lord level on both Profession (herbalist) checks and Wilderness Lore checks related to plants, including the use of this skill to forage for herbs.

Sun Sustenance (Ex): Also at 2nd level, the verdant lord gains the ability to draw energy from the sun.

As long as he spends at least 4 hours of the day outdoors, he can draw sustenance from the sun itself, and thus he requires no food that day.

He still thirsts, however, and needs the standard amount of water to survive.

Spontaneity: Beginning at 3rd level, the verdant lord can channel stored spell energy into certain healing spells that he hasn't prepared ahead of time.

This works like the cleric's spontaneous casting ability, with the following exceptions.

He can "lose" a prepared spell to cast any regenerate spell of the same level or lower (a regenerate spell is any one with "regenerate" in its name; these spells are presented in Chapter 6).

For example, a verdant lord who has prepared faerie fire (a 1st-level spell) may lose that spell to cast regenerate light wounds (also a 1st-level spell) instead.

Domain spells, if the character has access to them, cannot be converted into regenerate spells.

Plant Facility: At 4th level, the verdant lord can rebuke or command plants with Plant Control as if he were three levels higher than the actual caster level he uses to determine the benefits of that feat.

This means that he can also command 3 additional HD of plant creatures.

Fast Healing: At 5th level, the verdant lord gains Fast Healing as a bonus feat.

Treant Wild Shape (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, the verdant lord can use wild shape to take the form of a treant and back again once per day.

This ability otherwise works like wild shape.

Since a treant has a voice and manipulative appendages, the verdant lord can cast spells normally while in treant wild shape.

Animate Tree (Sp): At 8th level, a verdant lord can animate a tree within 180 feet of him once per day.

It takes a full round for a tree to uproot itself; thereafter it has a speed of 30 feet and fights as a treant with respect to attacks and damage.

The animated tree gains a number of bonus Hit Dice equal to the number of verdant lord levels the character possesses.

Though its Intelligence score is only 2 while animated, the tree automatically understands the verdant lord's commands.

The character can return the animated tree to its normal state at will, and it automatically returns to its normal state if it dies or if the verdant lord who animated it is incapacitated or moves out of range.

Once the tree returns to its normal state by any means, the verdant lord cannot animate another tree for 24 hours.

Gaea's Embrace: At 10th level, the verdant lord permanently becomes a plant creature, though all forms of wild shape that the character could previously use remain available to him.

His type changes to plant, and as a result he gains low-light vision, is immune to poison, sleep, paralysis, stunning, and polymorphing, and is not subject to critical hits or mind-influencing effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, patterns, or morale effects).

He no longer suffers penalties for aging and cannot be magically aged.

Any aging penalties he may already have suffered, however, remain in place.

Bonuses still accrue, and the verdant lord still dies of old age when his time is up.

ORGANIZED DRUIDS: THE ORDER OF THE VERDANT GROVE

"You cannot decide to be pure, novice."

—An elder of the Order, to a young Vadania

The Order of the Verdant Grove is a loose organization of about one hundred seventy druids and verdant lords who share certain interests and are committed to gaining and disseminating information about nature.

The organization doesn't have much of a hierarchy, and the typical member also owes allegiance to some other druid circle in his or her local area.

Many druids have heard of the Order of the Verdant Grove, but they often assume it is the name of some regional druid circle.

An applicant for membership must be invited and sponsored by a current member, and all available members periodically vote on whether to admit the current applicants.

Once accepted, the new member (called an initiate) undergoes a rite of acceptance during which he or she receives a hoop earring bearing a green orb.

Not only does this allow members to identify one another, but it is also a pearl of power (1st-level).

The initiate is expected to make a donation that covers the cost of creating this talisman.

What makes the order different from other organizations is that its members intentionally spread themselves out over the world.

A few are just as tied to a single sacred grove or woodland as any other druid or verdant lord would be, but most are travelers.

They may be active adventurers out to address wrongs in the world or scholars in search of information that they can share with fellow members.

In this sense, the Order of the Verdant Grove is the closest thing druids have to a ring of spies.

Of course, most of the information that its members acquire and disseminate within the organization would bore a typical spy to tears.

They share information about their explorations of distant lands, discoveries of new creatures (animals and beasts), and of previously unknown wonders of the natural world. They also share knowledge of new spells and magic items that have come into use.

Members of the Order of the Verdant Grove are encouraged to share whatever information they discover, but they are required to report on new druid communities, standing stones, or druid circles that they find.

The Order of the Verdant Grove must occasionally act as a messenger service between independent druid circles in times of regional or greater crisis, so it's important for its members to know where the druids of the world can be found.

The origins of the order harken back to a day when a druid circle broke apart following a war against a wizard cabal and its demonic servants.

Many members of the original group became verdant lords—perhaps from a desire to form a deeper and more personal bond with nature after being dragged into a fight against outsiders.

Thus, they tended to be somewhat reclusive.

Now verdant lords have become rare, and they are found only among the older members of the organization.

The druids and the verdant lords in the order do not compete—they share too much to become embroiled in petty rivalries.

WATCH DETECTIVE

When thieves and murderers strike in the night, citizens always wonder whether anyone can track down the perpetrators and set things straight.

When the watch detective is on the case, they can rest easy.

The watch detective specializes in solving mysteries.

Using a battery of clue-ferreting skills and abilities, he evaluates and discards possibilities until only one remains—the truth.

The Rule of Evidence to which he ascribes (see sidebar) restrains him from using his gifts to gain the truth through unfair means, demanding that he focus only on tangible facts as proof.

Of course, once the watch detective solves the mystery, it's likely that the guilty party won't want to be brought to justice.

Thus, it's also important for the watch detective to know the techniques of combat.

Fighters and warriors make up the bulk of any city watch force, but watch detectives often begin their careers as rangers or rogues.

The vast majority of the rangers who opt for this prestige class are urban rangers (see Chapter 1).

Wizards, sorcerers, clerics, and bards make especially good watch detectives when they can qualify for the class, though they may find that the Rule of Evidence hampers their ability to get at the truth.

Elves find this lifestyle especially gratifying because it celebrates the mind in a not-too-subtle show of intellectual superiority.

Gnomes and halflings have the inquisitive streak necessary for this career, and they have established many an effective city watch force in lands where their size would otherwise be a detriment.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a watch detective, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Gather Information 4 ranks, Knowledge (any) 4 ranks, Search 8 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Special: The watch detective must honor the Rule of Evidence (see sidebar).

If he abandons this code, he loses all special abilities of the prestige class until he retrains for six months under a local authority.

CLASS SKILLS

The watch detective's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Dex), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the watch detective prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Watch detectives are proficient with light armor and simple weapons.

City Watch Training: At 1st level, the watch detective gains a +2 insight bonus on all Listen, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks.

Expertise: At 2nd level, the character gains the Expertise feat, regardless of his Intelligence score.

Obsessive Specialty: When the watch detective reaches 2nd level, he obsessively seeks knowledge about a particular topic.

Choose one Knowledge skill for his specialty.

The character thereafter gains a bonus equal to his watch detective level on all Knowledge checks of this sort.

Profile (Ex): Also at 2nd level, the watch detective may compose an image of someone accused of a crime.

By making a successful Gather Information check (DC 15) when talking with a witness to a crime, the watch detective can gain a roughly accurate mental picture of the perpetrator, even if the witness did not see him or her.

The character may, if desired, try to commit this image to paper using the Craft (painting) skill.

Either a verbal or a visual depiction grants a +2 insight bonus on any further Gather Information checks made when dealing with witnesses to that crime or persons acquainted with the perpetrator.

Cooperative Interrogation: At 3rd level, when the watch detective succeeds in a Bluff check against someone, he automatically grants any one other person a +4 circumstance bonus on one Intimidate check against that same target for 1 round.

When the watch detective succeeds in an Intimidate check, he can give a similar +4 circumstance bonus on someone else's Bluff check.

(Two watch inspectors can support each other with this maneuver for many rounds).

Superior Disarming: At 3rd level, the watch detective is always considered armed when making a disarm attempt, and he gains a +4 bonus on any attack roll made to disarm an opponent.

Deductive Augury (Sp): The watch detective may ask for a hint to a mystery, puzzle, or trap.

As a standard action, the player makes an assertion that can be true or untrue (such as "The half-orc did it" or "If I pull the red lever, the door will open").

The DM makes a secret percentile roll (chance of success = 70% + 1% per watch inspector level), if the roll is successful, the Dungeon Master gives the player a correct "true" or "untrue" answer to the assertion, though no reason need be given for why the response is correct.

If the roll fails, the DM provides no information.

The Dungeon Master is always free to determine that the watch detective doesn't have enough information to make an educated guess, but in this case the attempt doesn't count against the allowed uses per day of the ability. The watch detective can use this ability once per day at 4th level.

Thereafter, he gains one extra use per day for every three additional watch detective levels gained.

Skill Synergy: At 4th level, the watch detective may choose one of the following skill combinations: Bluff-Gather Information, Bluff-Diplomacy, Climb-Move Silently, Diplomacy-Gather Information, Disguise-Gather Information, Gather Information-Sense Motive, Hide-Move Silently, Listen-Read Lips, Listen-Spot, Sense Motive-Spot, Spot-Disable Device, Spot-Open Lock, or Spot-Search. If he has at least 5 ranks in both of the selected skills, he gains a +2 synergy bonus on checks involving both.

No Subdual Penalty (Ex): At 5th level, the watch detective can deal subdual damage with a weapon that deals normal damage without suffering a -4 penalty on the attack.

Sense Secret Doors (Ex): A 5th-level or higher watch detective who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he were actively looking for it.

An elven watch detective gains a +2 insight bonus on any Search check made to find a secret or concealed door.

Locate Object (Sp): At 6th level, the watch detective can produce an effect identical to that of a locate object spell cast by a sorcerer of his watch detective level.

Improved Subdual (Ex): At 7th level, the watch detective adds his Intelligence bonus on the subdual damage he deals whenever he makes an attack that can cause subdual damage only.

Forensics (Su): With a successful Search check (DC 20), an 8th-level or higher watch detective can discern the cause of death of any corpse he examines.

Given time, he may take 20 on this roll.

Success indicates that he knows what killed the person, the size and approximate strength of any attacker responsible, and any other key information the DM wishes to impart.

Discern Lies (Sp): At 9th level, the watch detective can produce an effect identical to that of a discern lies spell cast by a sorcerer of his watch detective level.

This ability is usable once per day.

Locate Creature (Sp): At 9th level, the watch detective can produce an effect identical to that of a locate creature spell cast by a sorcerer of his watch detective level.

This ability is usable once per day.

Instant Knowledge (Su): Once per day, a 10th-level watch detective may make an Intelligence check (DC 20).

He may not take 10 or take 20 on this check.

If successful, he gains a +10 insight bonus on one Knowledge check of any category.

If he has no ranks in that particular Knowledge skill, he may make the check untrained.

The Rule of Evidence

Proof, not suspicion, is the only evidence that matters. A suspect may not be charged with a crime until unimpeachable evidence of his or her involvement has been uncovered, or a confession has been obtained.

Unnecessary violence in the apprehension of a suspected criminal is not permitted. A suspect should be brought to justice rather than killed whenever possible.

Seizure of a suspect's goods is not permitted, unless such constitute evidence to be used in prosecuting that suspect or another.

Evidence gained by detection magic, psionic powers, or other magical or supernatural means must be backed up with either physical proof or uncoerced confession. Only concrete forms of evidence satisfy all members of a community.

Interrogation of a suspect is not permitted unless he or she consents or is charged with a crime.

Detention of a person suspected of a crime is not permitted unless a specific charge has been made.

Protection of the innocent takes precedence over apprehension of a suspected criminal.

A watch detective may not knowingly commit crimes.

Violation of these codes may result in the release of a suspect and/or the dismissal of the watch detective.

WINDRIDER

The windrider is a specialist in mounted combat, but hers is no ordinary mount.

The creature she rides is at least unusual and often rare—sometimes even bizarre.

Although an experienced windrider can ride anything that runs, swims, or flies, the typical member of this prestige class settles on one particular kind of mount as a personal favorite.

Some windriders are no more than swaggering, arrogant adventurers looking for a good fight.

Perhaps their pride is justified, considering the creatures they've turned into mounts.

Many, however, are just as happy to sit back and tell stories of how they got their mounts and the adventures they've had since, no matter who buys the ale.

The typical windrider cheerfully shares her knowledge about her various mounts with those who seek to ride similar creatures.

Since the skills they develop vary as widely as the abilities and natures of their mounts, windriders are a very independent bunch.

Thus, they rarely form or belong to close-knit groups. Even a paladin windrider tends to be something of a knight-errant.

All races have produced windriders, though the class is particularly popular with humans and giants.

Rangers, paladins, fighters, and barbarians all make excellent windriders because they can easily accumulate the prerequisites.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To become a windrider, a character must fulfill the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Handle Animal 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 6 ranks, Ride 8 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat.

Special: Must have a mount.

CLASS SKILLS

The windrider's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature), Profession (any) (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the windrider prestige class.

For the abilities described below, a mount is a creature that fits the criteria in the What's a Mount? section below.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Windriders are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields.

Spells per Day: A windrider can cast a small number of divine spells.

Her spells are based on Wisdom, so casting any given spell requires a Wisdom score of at least 10 + the spell's level.

The DC for saving throws against these spells is 10 + spell level + the windrider's Wisdom modifier.

When the table indicates that the windrider is entitled to 0 spells of a given level (such as 0 1st-level spells at 1st level), she gets only those bonus spells that her Wisdom score allows.

A windrider prepares and casts spells just like a druid does, but she must choose them from the spell list, below.

Appraise Mount (Ex): At 1st level, a windrider can compare two mounts of the same kind and tell at a glance which one is superior (stronger, faster, more intelligent, better stamina, and so on).

If desired, the windrider can also conduct a point-by-point comparison of two mounts.

By spending 1 round examining both, she can determine which has the higher score in any single ability of her choice.

After a second round of study, a windrider familiar with that kind of creature can also determine whether each mount's score in that ability is average, above average, or below average for the species.

After a third round of study, the windrider can tell how extreme that ability score is—that is, whether the modifier it generates is more than 4 points higher or lower than the average for that species.

The appraise mount ability never produces a numerical rating; DMs must describe the windrider's findings.

Chosen Mount: The windrider may designate any one mount she has previously ridden as her chosen mount.

This creature may not be a bonded companion (such as a familiar, paladin's mount, or animal companion) to anyone else at the time, and if its Intelligence score is 3 or higher, it must also agree to this relationship.

The windrider can use any means desired to obtain this agreement—the Diplomacy skill, bribery, or even magical persuasion—but the creature must be willing.

The windrider must spend a minimum of three days training her chosen mount before any benefits accrue.

Thereafter, the creature gains the advantages listed on Table 5–21 based on the windrider's level.

TABLE 5–21: THE WINDRIDER'S MOUNT

Windrider Level	Bonus Hit Dice	Natural Armor Bonus	Strength Adjustment
1–3	+2	+4	+2
4–6	+4	+6	+2
7–9	+6	+8	+4
10	+8	+10	+4

Windrider Level: The character's windrider levels only. If the mount suffers a level drain, treat the creature as the mount of a lower-level windrider.

Bonus Hit Dice: These are extra eight-sided (d8) Hit Dice, each of which provides a Constitution modifier, as normal. Remember that extra Hit Dice also improve the mount's base attack and base save bonuses.

Natural Armor: The amount by which the creature's natural armor bonus is increased.

Strength Adjustment: Add this figure to the mount's Strength

The creature retains its own type and gains no abilities other than those listed, though it is considered a bonded companion for the unbond ability (see the blighter prestige class earlier in this chapter).

Windrider Level: The character's windrider levels only.

If the mount suffers a level drain, treat the creature as the mount of a lower-level windrider.

Bonus Hit Dice: These are extra eight-sided (d8) Hit Dice, each of which provides a Constitution modifier, as normal. Remember that extra Hit Dice also improve the mount's base attack and base save bonuses.

Natural Armor: The amount by which the creature's natural armor bonus is increased.

Strength Adjustment: Add this figure to the mount's Strength.

The windrider may have only one chosen mount at a time, and either party may sever this relationship at any time without penalty.

Once it ends, the mount loses the benefits it gained according to Table 5–21.

If the chosen mount is a paladin's warhorse, the rules in the Paladin's Mount sidebar in the Player's Handbook supersede those given here.

Empathic Link (Su): The windrider has an empathic link with her chosen mount.

This ability works like the empathic link that a paladin has with her mount (see Paladin in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook).

Mount Proficiency: At 1st level, the windrider gains a +2 competence bonus on any check to avoid being unseated while riding her chosen mount.

In addition, she can ride any mount with 4 Hit Dice or less at the full benefit of her Ride skill, suffering neither the –2 penalty for riding similar mounts nor the –5 penalty for riding dissimilar mounts.

The Hit Dice of the mounts to which this latter benefit applies increase with windrider level: 8 Hit Dice at 4th level, 12 Hit Dice at 6th level, 16 Hit Dice at 8th level, and any mount at 10th level.

Mount Assistance (Ex): At 2nd level, the windrider can assist any mount she is riding in one of two ways per use of the ability.

First, she can use the cooperation and aid another rules (Chapter 4 and Chapter 8 respectively of the Player's Handbook) to provide a +4 bonus (double the usual amount) to her mount's Armor Class or on any single attack roll or any skill or ability check the mount attempts.

Alternatively, she can provide her mount a +10 competence bonus to speed for 1 full round.

Mount assistance is usable once per round and requires a standard action.

Mount Feat: At 2nd level, a windrider can grant her chosen mount one bonus feat from the Mount Feats list, below.

This feat does not count against the creature's normal feat capacity, though it must still meet all prerequisites for it, as noted in the appropriate feat description in this book or Chapter 5 of the Player's Handbook.

To grant a bonus feat, the windrider must spend one month training the mount.

The windrider can bestow a second bonus feat on the same mount at 5th level, and a third at 9th level.

These additional bonus feats require the same training time as the first.

The windrider can train only one mount at a time.

Other Mount Feats

The DM might decide to make additional feats available to mounts. The feats given in the windrider class description are from the core books and this book. You might consider the following as well:

From Sword and Fist: Blind-sight 5-foot Radius, Close Quarters Fighting, Dirty Fighting, Dual Strike, Improved Overrun, Power Lunge.

From Defenders of the Faith: Extra Smiting.

From Song and Silence: Dash, Fleet of Foot.

Bonus Feat: At 3rd and again at 7th level, a windrider may take a bonus feat from the windrider bonus feats list below. This feat does not count against the windrider's normal feat capacity, though she must still meet all prerequisites for it, as noted in the appropriate feat description in this book or Chapter 5 of the Player's Handbook.

Mount Healing (Ex): At 3rd level, A windrider gains a +4 competence bonus on any Heal checks she makes on a creature of the same species as her current mount and a +2 bonus on any Heal checks made on other creatures capable of serving her as mounts (see sidebar).

Mount Friendship: At 5th level, the windrider gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Animal Empathy and Diplomacy checks when dealing with creatures of the same species as her current mount and a +2 bonus when dealing with any other creatures capable of serving her as mounts (see sidebar).

Mount Link (Su): At 7th level, the windrider can establish an empathic link (see above) with any mount that she rides for at least 1 hour, as long as its Intelligence score is at least 1.

She can maintain only one such link at a time with a mount other than her chosen one.

Mount Luck (Su): At 9th level, the windrider can, as a free action, confer a luck bonus equivalent to her Charisma bonus on the saving throw of any mount within 60 feet with which she has an empathic link.

WINDRIDER BONUS FEATS LIST

The following bonus feats are available to mounts and windriders.

Mount feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Dragon's Toughness, Dwarf's ToughnessSM, Endurance, Flyby Attack, Giant's Toughness, Great Fortitude, Hover*, Improved Critical*, Improved Flight, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes, Multiattack, Power Attack, Run, Snatch, Toughness, Weapon Finesse*, Weapon Focus*, Wingover.

Windrider Feats: Ambidexterity, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Exotic Weapon Proficiency, Expertise, Improved Critical*, Improved Initiative, Improved Unarmed Strike, Mounted Combat, Point Blank Shot, Power Attack, Quick Draw, Weapon Finesse*, Weapon Focus*.

* This feat may be taken more than once, but for a different kind of weapon each time.

 Described in Chapter 2 of this book.

WINDRIDER SPELL LIST

Windriders choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level—alarm, animal trick†, calm animals, detect poison, endure elements, know direction, remove fear, resistance, speak with animals, 2nd Level—bottle of smoke†, delay poison, endurance, resist elements, magic fang, mage armor, nature's favor†, protection from arrows, shield other.

3rd Level—heal mount, neutralize poison, pass without trace, phantom steed, protection from elements.

4th Level—freedom of movement, greater magic fang, greater magic weapon, repel vermin.

EX-WINDRIDERS

A windrider who intentionally mistreats any mount she has ridden loses all windrider prestige class abilities, and her chosen mount immediately terminates that relationship. Until she atones (see the atonement spell description in the Player's Handbook), creatures of the same species as her last chosen mount treat her with enmity, which manifests as a –4 racial penalty on interactions with creatures of the same species as that mount and a –2 racial penalty on interactions with any other creature capable of serving her as a mount.

WHAT'S A MOUNT?

You can't just hop on and ride any creature, even if you have the Ride skill for that creature type.

A mount must have all the following characteristics.

- Be able and willing to carry its rider in a typical fashion. (A camel trained with the Handle Animal skill to bear a rider is able and willing.

A tiger might be able but not willing.

A giant might be willing but not truly able.

An intelligent creature whose alignment differs significantly from yours is unlikely to be willing).

- Be at least one size category larger than you.

Also, a flying mount can carry no more than its maximum light load aloft.

(This is a change from the Monster Manual, which says that a flying creature's carrying capacity is equal to its medium load limit).

- Have a CR no higher than your character level –3.

If the mount can fly, its CR can be no higher than your character level –4.

Any animal or beast can be trained to bear a rider with the Handle Animal skill, as described in the appropriate skill description in the Player's Handbook.

In addition, the windrider can use this skill to train a creature of any other type that has an Intelligence score of 2 or below to bear a rider.

The category of the task and its Handle Animal DC are as given on Table 5–22.

Any creature not of the animal type counts as a beast for this check, regardless of its actual type.

Any of these forms of training requires two months, as noted in the skill description.

Any creature with an Intelligence score of 3 or higher needs no Handle Animal check to learn how to bear a rider. If it is willing to serve as a mount, it can determine for itself how it must move to manage the additional weight, how to interpret its rider's directional commands, and so forth. It does, however, require at least one week of training with a rider before it can perform as a mount.

MINIATURES HANDBOOK (3.5)

BONDED SUMMONER

He who learns to leash the furies of the Elemental Planes is known as a bonded summoner.

The mightiest manifestation of those planes, in their various potencies, is the elemental.

And the bonded summoner knows elementals.

He has studied their ways, means, origins, and formation.

He instinctively knows an elemental's strengths and develops an unbreakable bond with a powerful elemental companion.

As this bond deepens over time, the bonded summoner's kinship with the elemental forces he controls deepens, blurring the line between summoner and summoned. Eventually, this journey of discovery leads to his own ability to take on the form of that which he could formerly only summon.

The knowledge required to learn the secrets of the Outer Planes is arcane in nature, and thus this prestige class is filled mostly with sorcerers and wizards—though anyone else who meets the requirements may choose to take the journey of a bonded summoner.

NPC bonded summoners are usually loners, though they may organize with specialists or fellow bonded summoners of their element if threatened.

Other NPC bonded summoners are content to join their abilities with companies of adventurers to explore all the avenues of elementals.

Because a bonded summoner brings with him a powerful ally, most groups are happy to form such an alliance.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bonded summoner, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 8 ranks, Speak Language (Aquan, Auran, Ignan, or Terran).

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

Special: Must have a familiar.

CLASS SKILLS

The bonded summoner's class skills are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bonded summoner prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bonded summoners gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.
Spells per Day: At every even-numbered level gained in the bonded summoner class, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class. He does not, however, gain all the benefits a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.
 If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a bonded summoner, he must decide to

BONDED SUMMONER'S ELEMENTAL COMPANION

A bonded summoner has an elemental companion that starts at Medium size and grows larger as the bonded summoner's level increases.

Arcane Level	Special
Up to 8th	Deliver touch spells, devotion, empathic link, improved evasion, share spells
9th–11th	Spell resistance
12th or higher	Improved speed

Elemental Companion Basics: Use the statistics for an elemental of the appropriate size as found in the Monster Manual, but make the following changes:

Arcane Level: The bonded summoner's total of levels in the bonded summoner class and other arcane spellcasting classes.

Deliver Touch Spells (Su): A companion can deliver touch spells for the bonded summoner. If the bonded summoner and the companion are in contact at the time the bonded summoner casts a touch spell, he can designate his companion as the "toucher." The companion can then deliver the touch spell just as the bonded summoner could. As usual, if the bonded summoner casts another touch spell before the touch is delivered, the touch spell dissipates.

Devotion (Ex): An elemental companion's devotion to the bonded summoner is so complete that it gains a +4 morale bonus on Will saves against enchantment spells and effects.

Empathic Link (Su): The bonded summoner has an empathic link with his elemental companion out to a distance of 1 mile. The bonded

At 3rd level, his elemental companion grows to Large.

At 5th level, it grows to Huge.

At 7th level, the companion becomes a greater elemental, and at 9th level it becomes an elder elemental.

If the elemental companion dies, the bonded summoner takes damage equal to the elemental's Hit Dice.

The bonded summoner also takes 1d4 points of damage to each ability score.

A new elemental of the same kind as the old one may be summoned 24 hours later.

A bonded summoner may dismiss his elemental at any time without taking this damage, but he must still wait 24 hours before summoning another elemental.

Resistance to Energy (Ex): A bonded summoner gains resistance 5 against the energy type associated with his element of study.

At 3rd level, this resistance improves to 10.

At 5th level, it improves to 15.

At 7th level, it improves to 20.

At 9th level, the character gains immunity to the energy type in question.

which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Elemental Companion (Ex): At 1st level, a bonded summoner picks his element of study: air, earth, fire, or water.

This choice cannot be changed.

The bonded summoner calls a Medium elemental of the type chosen, which replaces his familiar.

The elemental gets abilities according to the information in the accompanying sidebar.

summoner cannot see through the companion's eyes, but they can communicate empathically. Note that even intelligent elementals see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Because of this empathic link, the bonded summoner has the same connection to an item or place that his companion does, just as a master and his familiar (see the Familiars sidebar, page 52 of the Player's Handbook).

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex save for half damage, an elemental companion takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Share Spells: At the bonded summoner's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts on himself also affect his elemental companion. The companion must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the companion if the creature moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the companion again even if it returns to the bonded summoner before the duration expires. Additionally, the bonded summoner may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his companion (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself. A bonded summoner and his companion can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect elementals.

Spell Resistance (Ex): If the bonded summoner's arcane spellcaster level is 9th or higher, an elemental companion gains spell resistance equal to the bonded summoner's arcane spellcaster level + 5.

Improved Speed (Ex): All of the elemental companion's speed figures increase by 10 feet.

Element	Energy
Air	Electricity
Earth	Acid
Fire	Fire
Water	Cold

Immunities (Ex): Over time, a bonded summoner slowly turns into an elemental, gaining an elemental's immunities along the way.

At 3rd level, he becomes immune to sleep effects.

At 5th level, he becomes immune to poison.

At 7th level, he becomes immune to paralysis and stunning.

At 10th level, he is no longer subject to critical hits.

Cannot Be Flanked (Ex): At 9th level, a bonded summoner has become so much like an elemental that he loses the normal human orientation toward "front" and "back".

Like an elemental, he can't be flanked.

Elemental Form (Su): At 10th level, a bonded summoner gains the ability to turn himself into an elemental and back again once per day.

This elemental is an elder elemental of the bonded summoner's element of study.

This ability functions like the polymorph spell, except as noted here.

The effect lasts for 10 hours, or until the bonded summoner changes back.

Changing form (to elemental or back) is a standard action that does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Elemental Type: At 10th level, a bonded summoner's type changes to elemental, and he gains the subtype of the appropriate element.

He loses any other elemental subtypes he may have.

DRAGON SAMURAI

Dragon samurai are dedicated warriors, members of a special, self-selected class who revere dragonkind and emulate dragons' ferocious martial abilities to the point of taking on some draconic traits.

Unlike noble samurai, who are born to their role and into a system of allegiance, dragon samurai are made, not born. Sometimes, orthodox samurai fall out of the system and find their way into a dragon clan (see below), but more often, those previously unfettered with allegiance swear fealty to a chosen dragon clan.

It is then that they begin their training in the arts of draconic warfare and discipline.

Each dragon samurai is bound to a single dragon clan, of which there are ten.

Five good dragon clans are each devoted to a kind of metallic dragon, and five evil dragon clans are each devoted to a kind of chromatic dragon.

Dragon samurai adhere to their own unique bushido (a samurai's code of honor).

However, they swear loyalty and obedience to a clan, not to a lord.

If a dragon samurai remains true to her bushido, in time the fires of the dragon awaken within her.

Martial classes of all types can apply for membership in dragon clans.

Basically, anyone with an abiding interest in or reverence for dragons may eventually qualify for clan membership.

If the dragon's roar is as a song to one's ears, she should consider becoming a dragon samurai.

NPC dragon samurai are solid, stalwart warriors of their clans.

They advance the clan's secret agendas, which can be as simple as a quick commission or as grand as an all-consuming crusade.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dragon samurai, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Depends on the color of the dragon samurai's clan, as follows.

Black, Red, or White: Chaotic neutral, neutral evil, or chaotic evil.

Blue or Green: Lawful neutral, lawful evil, or neutral evil.

Brass or Copper: Neutral good, chaotic good, or chaotic neutral.

Bronze, Gold, or Silver: Lawful good, neutral good, or lawful neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 2 ranks.

Special: The character must have no experience as a dragon samurai of a different clan.

CLASS SKILLS

A dragon samurai's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dragon samurai prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dragon samurai gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Dragon Breath (Su): A dragon samurai can use a breath weapon once per day as a standard action.

The type of breath weapon depends on the color of the dragon samurai's clan, as noted below.

The breath weapon deals 1d8 points of damage per class level.

The Reflex save DC for the breath weapon is 10 + the dragon samurai's class level + the dragon samurai's Con modifier.

If a dragon samurai already has a breath weapon of the same type, the damage stacks.

For example, if a half-dragon character has a breath weapon dealing 6d8 points of damage once per day, and gains a breath weapon of the same type that deals 2d8 points of damage for being a 2nd-level dragon samurai, her damage increases to 8d8.

She still gets to use her breath weapon only once per day.

Resistance to Energy (Su): A dragon samurai gains resistance 5 against attacks involving the same energy type as the character's breath weapon (for example, acid for a green dragon samurai).

At 5th level, the resistance improves to 10.

At 7th level it improves to 15, and at 10th level it becomes 20.

Dragon Friend (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a dragon samurai gets a +4 circumstance bonus on all Charisma-based checks when dealing with dragons of his clan's color.

Immune to Dragon Fear (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a dragon samurai is immune to fear effects from a dragon of her clan's color.

Elemental Weapon (Su): Starting at 4th level, a dragon samurai can endow a melee weapon with elemental energy while she wields it in battle.

This energy is of the same type as her breath weapon.

Causing a weapon or weapons to gain this feature is a free action.

At 4th level, the melee weapon deals an extra 1d6 points of energy damage, and this extra damage increases to 2d6 at 9th level.

This extra damage does stack with any energy damage the weapon may already deal.

Dragon Ride (Ex): Starting at 6th level, a dragon samurai gets a +4 bonus on all Ride checks while riding a dragon.

Blind-Fight: At 8th level, a dragon samurai gains Blind-Fight as a bonus feat.

If the character already has the feat, she can choose a different one.

HAVOC MAGE

Combat magic is usually reserved for spellcasters in the second rank who are content to lob spells as if artillery from behind the cover of front-rank combatants.

Not so the havoc mage, who shares as much in common with a fighter as with a wizard.

The havoc mage has learned to toss off spells with such reckless abandon that he can fight head-to-head with both sword and spell without incurring the bitter consequences other spellcasters must contend with.

A havoc mage is interested in maximum carnage in the shortest amount of time, by dint of a quick spell cast where an enemy least expects it.

A havoc mage must first learn the ways of arcane magic, so those most likely to take up the sword (to complement the wand) are sorcerers and wizards.

These normally sedate characters are drawn to the frenzy of battle, during which a flashing sword can be just as effective in their own hands as a well-timed spell.

NPC havoc mages are more likely than other spellcasters to be lone adventurers, since they are adept both at arms and magic.

However, the most successful havoc mages are those who join their talents with those of a balanced group of combatants and spellcasters.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a havoc mage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 5 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The havoc mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Ride (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the havoc mage.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Havoc mages gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day: At 2nd, 4th, and 5th level, a havoc mage gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain all the benefits a character of that class would have gained (metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a havoc mage, he must decide to which class he adds the new level for purposes of determining spells per day.

Battlecast (Ex): A havoc mage gains the ability to cast spells of a certain level or lower while making a weapon attack. He may take a full-round action to attack and cast a spell.

The spell must be an arcane spell he knows of 2nd level or lower with a casting time of 1 standard action or less.

When using his battlecast ability, a havoc mage may cast spells requiring somatic components even if he has no free hands.

Using battlecast does not provoke attacks of opportunity. At 3rd level and higher, a havoc mage can battlecast a spell of 4th level or lower.

At 5th level, a havoc mage can battlecast a spell of 8th level or lower.

The battlecast ability does not grant a havoc mage any relief from the arcane spell failure chance imparted by armor.

SKULLCLAN HUNTER

The skullclan hunter is the acclaimed foe of unlife. He champions life by tracking and eradicating all creatures that mock it with evil intent.

His devotion to his task is such that he spends moonless nights and weary days tracking undead to their lairs, or when possible, joining a military band that is likely to come against a legion of the dead.

A skullclan hunter is most often a rogue who has had a terrible encounter with a creature of unlife.

Because of that encounter, he comes to realize that using his own skills against living creatures only serves to create more fodder for unlife to take root, so he dedicates himself to the eradication of undead.

Following through on this decision, he takes up the cleric class to gain the ability to turn undead (and perhaps to acquire the needed knowledge of religion more quickly). Multiclass rogue/cleric are the characters best suited for this class.

NPC skullclan hunters fill out special positions in companies that know they will soon be threatened by undead.

While a skullclan hunter's abilities are still useful in situations other than the immediate threat of undead action, the character really shines only when putting the fear of disincorporation into sentient undead.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a skullclan hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Special: Able to turn undead; sneak attack +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

The skullclan hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the skullclan hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Skullclan hunters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Track Undead (Ex): A skullclan hunter gains the ability to track undead (only) as if using the Track feat.

A skullclan hunter uses his Knowledge (religion) skill modifier instead of his Survival modifier for the skill checks associated with this feat.

Divine Strike (Ex): Due to his specialized skill, training, and connection with the forces of light, a skullclan hunter of 2nd level or higher can make a special attack that is infused with positive energy.

Effectively, this ability allows him to deal extra damage to undead as though making a sneak attack.

Divine strike damage applies to any sneak attack dice the skullclan hunter already has, as well as those gained through advancement in this class.

Immunities (Ex): As he grows in power, a skullclan hunter develops immunities to special attacks that are common among undead creatures.

At 3rd level, he gains immunity to all fear-based effects and spells from undead.

At 4th level, he gains immunity to disease (regardless of the source).

At 7th level, he gains immunity to paralysis.

At 8th level, he gains immunity to ability drain or damage.

At 10th level, he gains immunity to energy drain.

Sneak Attack: At 3rd level, a skullclan hunter's sneak attack damage increases by 1d6.

This extra damage stacks with the sneak attack damage he already deals.

At 6th level, his sneak attack damage increases to 2d6.

At 9th level, it increases to 3d6.

Protection from Evil (Su): Starting at 4th level, a skullclan hunter benefits from a permanent protection from evil effect upon himself.

Sword of Light (Su): Any weapon (melee or ranged, manufactured or natural) wielded by a skullclan hunter of 5th level or higher overcomes the damage reduction of any undead creature.

Sword of Darkness (Su): Any weapon (melee or ranged, manufactured or natural) wielded by a skullclan hunter of 9th level or higher counts as a ghost touch weapon, allowing it to hit incorporeal creatures without the usual 50% miss chance for such attacks.

TACTICAL SOLDIER

The tactical soldier is the master of teamwork in melee. She has trained in cooperative battle tactics and knows how to take advantage of position and timing to make herself and her teammates a deadly, unified force in battle.

No other force compares to a group of melee-worthy combatants along with a tactical soldier in the wings, ready to multiply the total deadly effectiveness of the group by far more than their number alone would indicate.

It takes a special kind of person to give up the limelight in favor of teamwork.

Those with the necessary ability to think about the objective first and their own glory second make ideal tactical soldiers.

Fighters, paladins, and rangers are the most common tactical soldiers, knowing just how to multiply the strengths and eradicate the weaknesses of battle-hardened combatants.

NPC tactical soldiers make ideal cohorts or hirelings. What fighter wouldn't want a tactical soldier backing him up, ready to step in and fight when the melee begins? Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tactical soldier, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Sense Motive 2 ranks.

Feats: Cleave, Combat Reflexes.

CLASS SKILLS

The tactical soldier's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the tactical soldier prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tactical soldiers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor (heavy, medium, and light), and with shields (except tower shields).

Flanker (Ex): A tactical soldier can flank enemies from seemingly impossible angles.

She can designate any adjacent square as the square from which flanking against an ally is determined (including the square where she stands, as normal).

She may designate the square at the beginning of her turn or at any time during her turn.

The designated square remains her effective square for flanking until she is no longer adjacent to it or until she chooses a different square (at the start of one of her turns). The character can even choose a square that is impassable or occupied.

Sidestep (Ex): At 2nd level, a tactical soldier gains Sidestep (described later in this chapter) as a bonus feat.

If she already has the feat, she can choose a different one.

Interpose (Ex): A tactical soldier gains this ability, usable three times per day, at 3rd level.

When an enemy threatens her in melee and makes a successful attack against an adjacent ally of hers, the tactical soldier may take the damage (and other effects) of the blow as if she had been hit instead.

Defensive Shield (Ex): Starting at 4th level, whenever a tactical soldier fights defensively, she provides up to two adjacent allies with a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class, though their attack rolls do not take the normal –4 penalty (but her attack rolls still do).

Offensive Strike (Ex): Starting at 5th level, in times of urgency a tactical soldier can lower all her defenses to make a very aggressive attack.

When making an offensive strike, the tactical soldier gains a +4 bonus on melee attack rolls and damage rolls for 1 round.

Until her next turn, however, she is wide open to physical and magical attacks.

All successful attack rolls made against the tactical soldier are automatic threats, and all saving throws the tactical soldier makes against spells automatically fail.

Delayed Cleave (Ex): Starting at 7th level, if the last creature a tactical soldier hit in melee is dropped by someone other than her, and the tactical soldier still threatens that creature's square, she may make a cleave attack as an attack of opportunity.

All normal restrictions on cleave attempts and attacks of opportunity apply.

Unbalancing Blow (Ex): Starting at 8th level, a tactical soldier can use a full-round action to make a strategic melee attack against an enemy.

If the attack succeeds, in addition to dealing regular damage, the blow unbalances the target so much that it provokes attacks of opportunity from creatures threatening its square.

This ability works only on creatures up to one size category larger than the tactical soldier.

Reciprocal Strike (Ex): A 10th-level tactical soldier can make an attack of opportunity (subject to normal restrictions) against a foe that successfully attacks an ally of the soldier and deals damage.

She can use this ability three times per day.

WAR HULK

Against the marshaled forces of the enemy army, the war hulk stands tall, confident in his power against lesser soldiers.

And why not?

He is a creature of great size and talent who is specifically trained to shock and awe opposing massed troops.

A hulk indeed, he knows how to spread his mighty blows across a wide area, creating carnage on the battlefield.

While a single opponent might evade this massive attack, a massed unit of terrified soldiers are meat on the pounding block.

Drawn most often from more intelligent individuals among the various giant kinds, war hulks are trained to fight by similarly large tutors.

Other than being big, a war hulk must come to the training already knowing how to fight.

Thus, the martial classes, such as fighter, ranger, paladin, and barbarian, are most often promoted into this prestige class—although many giants meet the requirements with no class levels at all.

When an NPC war hulk is spied at the head of an army, the event is too significant to call it merely an omen.

Instead, it is a clear sign of deadly peril.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a war hulk, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Cleave.

Special: Must be Large or larger.

CLASS SKILLS

The war hulk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), and Jump (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the war hulk.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: War hulks gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Ability Boost (Ex): As a war hulk gains levels in this prestige class, his Strength score increases as noted in Table 1-12: The War Hulk.

These increases stack.

No Time to Think (Ex): A character with levels in the war hulk prestige class is considered to have 0 ranks in all

Intelligence-, Wisdom-, and Charisma-based skills (whether or not he has bought ranks in them previously). The only exception is the Intimidate skill, which works normally.

Great Swing (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, a war hulk is able to make a great, sweeping swing with a melee weapon.

As a full-round action, the war hulk can choose three squares adjacent to one another (he must threaten all of them).

His attack applies to all creatures in those squares.

Make one attack roll and apply that roll as an attack against each defender.

If the war hulk uses a special attack (such as disarm, trip, or sunder), this special attack affects only the first target; the other creatures are attacked normally.

Walls and similar obstacles can block a great swing.

Start with one square that the war hulk threatens.

Each successive square chosen must be adjacent to the previous square and have line of effect from that square.

Two squares separated by a wall, for instance, can't be chosen as adjacent squares for a great swing.

The war hulk may skip creatures, attacking only those he wants to.

For example, if there are three creatures in a row—an enemy, an ally, and another enemy—the war hulk can choose those three squares for the great swing but strike only the two enemies.

If a war hulk drops one of his foes with a great swing, he may make a cleave attack normally.

However, he may do so only once for every time he swings, even if he drops more than one foe.

Mighty Rock Throwing (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, a war hulk gains a powerful rock throwing ability.

The character can throw rocks that deal 2d8 points of damage with a range increment of 50 feet.

(Like all thrown weapons, they have a maximum range of five range increments).

The war hulk uses his Strength modifier instead of his Dexterity modifier on the attack roll.

The rock must weigh approximately 50 pounds.

Mighty Swing (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a war hulk can make a mighty swing.

A mighty swing is like a great swing, except that it is a standard action rather than a full-round action.

Thus, the character can move and make a mighty swing or (if he can make multiple attacks) make multiple mighty swings in a single round.

Sweeping Boulder (Ex): Starting at 6th level, a war hulk is able to throw his rocks with such force that they affect two adjacent squares.

(The second square must be farther away from the war hulk than the first—they cannot be equidistant from him).

Make one attack roll and apply the result to each target.

As with great swing, the war hulk must have line of effect from one square to the next.

Toughness: At 8th, 9th, and 10th level, a war hulk gains Toughness as a bonus feat.

Massive Sweeping Boulder (Ex): Starting at 8th level, a war hulk is able to throw his rocks with such force that they affect four squares in a line.

(Each successive square chosen must be farther away from the character).

Only the first creature can be subject to damage from a critical hit or a sneak attack.

As with great swing, the war hulk must have line of effect from one square to the next.

Massive Swing (Ex): A 10th-level war hulk can lash out all around himself with a single attack.

Massive swing works like mighty swing, except that its effect is not limited to three squares.

The war hulk's swing affects all squares he threatens.

WARCHIEF

A warchief leads a primitive, aggressive tribe of humanoids, especially when they turn to marauding.

The warchief calls on his indomitable presence and terrible visage to spur his followers to feats of great courage and sacrifice for the tribe.

The tribe member who hangs back learns firsthand that the warchief's displeasure is a terror eclipsing even the hardships of war—better to die in glory on the battlefield than under the warchief's torturous punishments.

Inspired into a killing frenzy, the warchief and his band sweep the enemies of the tribe before their onslaught.

Warchiefs are self-made leaders, more often than not reaching their elevated status by deposing the previous warchief in a bloody coup.

A warchief doesn't become the sole authority by worrying about the needs of others, and thus good-aligned leaders are rarely members of this class.

The martial classes—especially fighter, ranger, and warrior—are most likely to become warchiefs.

NPC warchiefs might be found throughout the savage lands, leading tribes of brutal humanoids to bloody ends.

Luckily for those in civilized lands, warchiefs most often array their followers against other warring bands of savages.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warchief, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Special: Must have led a tribe in battle.

CLASS SKILLS

The warchief's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the warchief.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Warchiefs gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Tribal Frenzy (Ex): A warchief is able to inspire his followers to acts of extreme battle frenzy.

The warchief may activate this frenzy as a standard action. He may then maintain it as a free action.

It ends at the conclusion of any turn in which the warchief does not maintain it.

The frenzy affects any creature that is a member of the warchief's race and tribe, that starts its turn within 30 feet of the warchief, and that is able to hear the warchief.

The frenzy grants a +2 enhancement bonus to the Strength score of each affected ally (not including the warchief himself).

At the start of each of their turns, everyone affected by the Strength boost takes 1 point of damage for each Hit Die they have.

Thus, an orc warchief can grant +2 Strength to each member of the pack of 1st-level orc warriors he commands, but they each take 1 point of damage per round as long as the Strength boost remains in effect.

Every two levels (3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th), the bonus to Strength increases by +2.

Ability Boost (Ex): As a warchief gains levels in this prestige class, his Charisma score increases as noted on Table 1-13: The Warchief.

These increases stack.

Devoted Bodyguards (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, once per round, whenever a warchief is hit by an attack, he may make a DC 15 Reflex save to have that attack affect an adjacent tribe member instead.

The attack is treated as though it had hit the chosen bodyguard instead of the leader, regardless of the bodyguard's Armor Class or any other defensive effects.

A tribe member may not serve as a bodyguard if it is dazed, stunned, paralyzed, or otherwise unable to act.

ORIENTAL ADVENTURES (3.0)

MULTIPLE PRESTIGE CLASSES

It is extremely uncommon for a samurai to train in more than one school—or, for that matter, for a samurai to train in another clan's school. No hard rules prevent this, but the Dungeon Master should discourage or even prohibit characters from switching from one prestige class to another. One possible exception is the tattooed monk prestige class, which may be available to a character from another school who has allies among the Dragon clan.

When a character reaches the pinnacle of a prestige class, he typically follows one of two possible routes: returning to his original class in order to pick up extra feats or special abilities, or adopting the monk class as a sort of retirement.

THE WITCH HUNTERS

Since the days of the infamous maho-tsukai Iuchiban, a very small branch of the Kuni have taken a more forceful role in the battle against the Shadowlands. They feel that evil must not be allowed to spread into the empire, and have dedicated themselves to wiping out all traces of evil in Rokugan proper. These rare Kuni are known as tsukai-sugasu, or witch hunters. They are still required to learn the mystic secrets of their family, but they also study the warrior arts with their Hida kin. When they are ready, they set out in the world, using their knowledge and weaponry to destroy the Shadowlands Taint wherever it may

AKODO CHAMPION

The Akodo form the massive army of the Lion clan, disciplined, tightly structured, and unmatched in battle prowess.

The Akodo put less weight on individual glory than other clans do, recognizing the strength of samurai fighting side by side.

They learn coordinated efforts and tight maneuvers, training under the Akodo motto: "Duty, Honor, Leadership".

They are perhaps not as furious in battle as the Matsus, but their unison battle cries and coordinated charges decimate their foes on the battlefield.

The Akodo champions are the leaders of this mighty army, an inspiration to the soldiers they lead.

Akodo champions are almost exclusively drawn from the samurai character class.

NPC Akodo champions serve as officers in the Lion army, masters of strategy and tactics and guardians of the empire.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an Akodo champion, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Lion).

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (history) 4 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Ki Shout, Weapon Focus (katana).

CLASS SKILLS

The Akodo champion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (nobility and appear. These characters adopt the witch hunter prestige class described in Chapter 3: Prestige Classes.

During the Spirit Wars, a single Kuni witch hunter rose to a position of prominence in the empire. Kuni Utagu won the position of Jade Champion—the foremost shugenja in the empire—and used that position to launch a tireless crusade to hunt down and exterminate maho-tsukai in Rokugan. The Phoenix masters frowned on Utagu's crusade, since they see themselves as the true guardians of magic. Other, quiet voices questioned Utagu's methods, though never his motives, for he was exceedingly harsh in his investigations, interrogating entire villages of heimins in order to find a single dabbler in the dark arts of maho, and even extracting confessions under torture. His unbounded energy, some say, would have been put to better use investigating bigger fish.

And now Kuni Utagu lies dead in the Imperial Court, in the wake of a loud and visible quarrel with Toturi Sezarū, the late Emperor's third child. The witch hunter's hands and wrists are slit, suggesting that his blood was used to power a maho spell, and further evidence implicates Sezarū. Sezarū protests his innocence, and no one is yet willing to make a formal accusation.

The loose network of Kuni witch hunters is now dead set on revenge. Convinced that a powerful maho-tsukai is located within the Imperial Court, many witch hunters are focusing their efforts on uncovering this presumed evil mastermind behind Utagu's death.

royalty) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Akodo champion.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Akodo champions do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, the Akodo champion can use detect evil.

Ancestral Favor (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, an Akodo champion applies his Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

Leadership Feat: At 2nd level, an Akodo champion gains the Leadership feat for free.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, an Akodo champion of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite evil with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per level.

If the champion accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day. Aura of Courage: Beginning at 3rd level, an Akodo champion is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Allies within 10 feet of the champion gain a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects.

Granting the morale bonus to allies is a supernatural ability.

Great Leader: At 4th level, an Akodo champion's Leadership score is increased by 1.

This bonus increases by 1 every three levels thereafter (to 2 at 7th level and 3 at 10th level).

This bonus stacks with other bonuses to Leadership, including the Great Diplomat (Asako ancestor) feat.

Inspire Greatness (Su): An Akodo champion of 5th level or higher can inspire greatness in another creature, granting extra fighting capability.

For every two levels the champion attains beyond 5th, he can inspire greatness in one additional creature.

To inspire greatness, the Akodo champion must meet his ally's gaze, and the ally must be within 30 feet.

A creature inspired with greatness gains temporary Hit Dice, attack bonuses, and saving throw bonuses as long as the Akodo champion continues participating in the same battle.

The target gains the following boosts:

- +2 Hit Dice (d10s that grant temporary hit points).
- +2 competence bonus on attacks.
- +1 competence bonus on Fortitude saves.

Apply the target's Constitution modifier, if any, to each bonus Hit Die.

These extra Hit Dice count as regular Hit Dice for determining effects such as the sleep spell.

Inspire greatness is a mind-affecting ability.

BUSHIDO

Bushido is the code of the samurai, the moral and ethical path every true samurai tries to follow. All the clans recognize Akodo's writings on bushido as a legitimate tool for teaching samurai their proper place in the Celestial Order. In the schools of the Lion, however, a copy of Akodo's text sits beside a copy of the Tao of Shinsei—but only Akodo's is ever opened.

According to the code of bushido, a samurai must possess seven virtues:

Gi (honesty and justice): A samurai deals openly and honestly with others and cleaves to the ideals of justice. Moral decisions do not come in shades of gray, only right and wrong.

Yu (heroic courage): A samurai never fears to act, but lives life fully and wonderfully. Fear is replaced with respect and caution.

Jin (compassion): A samurai takes every opportunity to aid others, and creates opportunities when none arise. As a powerful individual, a samurai has a responsibility to use that power to help others.

Rei (polite courtesy): A samurai has no reason to be cruel, and no need to prove his strength. Courtesy distinguishes a samurai from an animal, and reveals one's true strength.

Meyo (honor): A samurai's conscience is the judge of her honor. The decisions she makes and how she carries them out are a reflection of her true nature.

Makoto (complete sincerity): When a samurai has said that he shall perform an action, it is as good as done. He need not make promises; speaking and doing are as if the same.

Chugo (duty and loyalty): A samurai feels responsible for her actions and their consequences, and loyal to the people in her care. A samurai's loyalty to her lord is unquestionable and unquestioning.

BATTLE MAIDEN

Battle maidens are the stuff of wonder and legend, an order of mounted female samurai whose swift, fearless attacks are renowned throughout the world.

They have a supernatural bond with their mounts, an intense spiritual connection similar to the bond between a paladin and her mount.

Battle maidens maintain a tradition of martial prowess tempered by spiritual purity.

Their spirits burn with pure devotion; they are unquestionably loyal, eternally dedicated, and above worldly desires.

Battle maidens are almost exclusively female members of the samurai character class.

In Rokugan, they are drawn solely from the Unicorn clan, where they are trained in the Utau school.

NPC battle maidens form the elite cavalry units of an army. Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a battle maiden, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Gender: Female.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Handle Animal 10 ranks, Ride 10 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-by Attack, Spirited Charge.

CLASS SKILLS

The battle maiden's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Ride (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the battle maiden.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Battle maidens are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

Special Mount: A battle maiden's mount is no ordinary animal.

In fact, it is not an animal at all, but a magical beast.

This heavy warhorse shares the basic statistics of its kind, as described in the Monster Manual, but also shares many qualities in common with a paladin's mount.

It is superior to a normal mount of its kind and has special powers, as shown below.

Battle Maiden Level	HD	Natural		Attack Bonuses			Special
		Armor	Str	Int	Hoof	Bite
1st–3rd	6d8+18	4	19	6	+7	+2	Improved evasion, empathic link, share saving throws
4th–6th	8d8+32	6	20	7	+10	+5	Speed 60 ft.
7th–9th	10d8+30	8	21	8	+11	+6	Command equines
10th	12d8+36	10	22	9	+14	+9	Speed 70 ft., SR 20

Battle Maiden Level: The class level of the battle maiden. If the mount suffers a level drain, treat the mount as though it belonged to a battle maiden of one level lower. For example, if the mount of a 7th-level battle maiden is drained of one level, it effectively becomes the mount of a 6th-level battle maiden (reduced HD, armor, etc., and no longer able to use command equines) until the level drain is negated.

If the mount of a 1st-level battle maiden is drained of one level, it becomes a normal heavy warhorse (no longer a magical beast).

HD: The warhorse's Hit Dice.

Natural Armor: A battle maiden's mount begins with the normal thick hide of its kind, but that natural armor value increases as the battle maiden goes up in level.

A heavy warhorse's AC is 10, –1 for its size, +1 for its Dexterity, + the number listed in this column.

Str: The mount's Strength score.

Int: The mount's Intelligence score.

Attack Bonuses: These melee attack numbers reflect the horse's Hit Dice, Strength score, and size (Large).

A warhorse gets two hoof attacks at the listed bonus and a bite attack at the listed bonus.

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the mount is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Empathic Link (Su): The battle maiden has an empathic link with the mount out to a distance of up to one mile.

The battle maiden cannot see through the horse's eyes, but they can communicate telepathically.

Even intelligent mounts see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Because of the empathic link between the mount and the battle maiden, the battle maiden has the same connection to an item or place that the mount does.

Share Saving Throws: The mount uses its own base save bonuses or the battle maiden's, whichever are higher.

Speed: The mount's base speed increases as the battle maiden acquires more levels.

A normal warhorse's speed is 50 feet.

Command Equines (Sp): The mount can use this ability at will against other equines (including horses, donkeys, mules, and ponies) with fewer Hit Dice than it has itself. The mount can use this ability once per day per level of the battle maiden, and the ability functions just like the spell command (for purposes of this spell, the mount can make itself be understood by any normal equine).

Since this is a spell-like ability, the mount must make a Concentration check (DC 21) if it's being ridden at the time (as in combat).

If the check fails, the ability does not work that time, but it still counts against the mount's daily uses.

Spell Resistance (Ex): To affect the mount with a spell, a spellcaster must make a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) at least equal to the mount's spell resistance of 20.

Ride Bonus (Ex): A battle maiden gets a +2 competence bonus on her Ride checks at 1st level.

This bonus increases by +2 every four levels thereafter (+4 at 5th level, +6 at 9th level).

She can always take 10 on a Ride check, even if stress and distractions would normally prevent her from doing so.

In addition, as the battle maiden increases in levels, she can apply this bonus to other checks.

At 3rd level and above, she applies her Ride bonus on her initiative checks while fighting from horseback.

At 5th level and above, she applies her Ride bonus to her Armor Class while she is mounted.

At 7th level and above, she applies her Ride bonus on melee or ranged attacks she makes from horseback.

Burst of Speed (Ex): At 2nd level, the battle maiden can urge her mount to greater than normal speeds.

This ability doubles the distance of the mount's normal charge movement.

This ability can be used once per day without penalty to the mount.

Each additional use of the ability in a single day requires the mount to make a Will save (DC 20) immediately after the conclusion of the additional charge; failure results in the mount taking 2d6 points of damage.

Defensive Riding (Ex): Once per day, when a mounted battle maiden would be reduced to 0 hit points or less by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow, not a spell or special ability), she can attempt to reduce the damage in the same way as she can negate damage to her mount with the Mounted Combat feat.

She makes a Ride check (DC = damage dealt) and, if she's successful, she takes only half damage from the blow.

She must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to perform her defensive riding—if she is denied her Dexterity bonus to AC, she can't avoid the damage.

Heal Mount (Sp): Once per day, a battle maiden of 8th level or higher can use heal mount as a spell-like ability.

BAYUSHI DECEIVER

Most samurai schools teach bushido, the code of honor that defines the samurai.

If that is so, then perhaps it is wrong to call the Bayushi school a school for samurai.

Like all Scorpions, the Bayushi value loyalty far more highly than any ideal of honor.

The Bayushi school teaches the skills of warfare, naturally, but the code of behavior it teaches places loyalty—to the clan, to the school, to the sensei—above all else.

The Bayushi are charged with the dirtiest work in the empire.

What matters is their willingness to do it, out of loyalty to clan and empire, despite any compunctions of honor they may cling to.

Most Bayushi deceivers begin play with the rogue character class, though some are multiclass fighter/rogues or even samurai/rogues.

Few Bayushi samurai can maintain the high standards of honor demanded by the samurai class, however.

NPC Bayushi deceivers serve in the fairly small Scorpion army, as courtiers in the daimyo's court, and as spies for the clan.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Bayushi deceiver, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Scorpion).

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Diplomacy 8 ranks.

Feats: Improved Initiative.

Sneak Attack Damage: +2d6.

CLASS SKILLS

The Bayushi deceiver's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nobility and royalty) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Read Lips (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Bayushi deceiver.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bayushi deceivers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

Sneak Attack: If a Bayushi deceiver can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, any time the deceiver's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the deceiver flanks the target, the Bayushi deceiver's attack deals extra damage. The extra damage is +1d6 at 1st level and an additional 1d6 every two levels thereafter.

Should the deceiver score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

The Bayushi deceiver can't strike with deadly accuracy from beyond that range.

With a sap or an unarmed strike, the Bayushi deceiver can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage.

He cannot use a weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty, because he must make optimal use of his weapon in order to execute the sneak attack.

A Bayushi deceiver can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Additionally, any creature immune to critical hits is similarly immune to sneak attacks.

Also, the Bayushi deceiver must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot.

The deceiver cannot sneak attack while striking at a creature with concealment or by striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a Bayushi deceiver gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses to damage stack.

Poison Use: Bayushi deceivers are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Strike First, Strike Last (Ex): A Bayushi deceiver of at least 2nd level adds his Intelligence modifier to his initiative checks.

Scorpion Feint (Ex): When a Bayushi deceiver of 4th level or higher uses the Bluff skill to feint in combat against a humanoid opponent, he receives a +2 competency bonus on his Bluff check and a +2 circumstance bonus on his next attack roll if the feint is successful.

He gains no bonus against nonhumanoid opponents.

Improved Disarm Feat: At 6th level, a Bayushi deceiver gains the Improved Disarm feat.

He need not have taken the Expertise feat, normally a prerequisite, before this.

Opportunist (Ex): Once per round, a Bayushi deceiver of 8th level or higher can make an attack of opportunity against an opponent who has just been struck for damage in melee by another character.

This attack counts as the deceiver's attack of opportunity for that round.

Even a deceiver with the Combat Reflexes feat can't use the opportunist ability more than once per round.

Improved Critical Feat: At 10th level, a Bayushi deceiver gains the Improved Critical feat with a weapon of his choice.

BEAR WARRIOR

Certain people in the lands of Oriental Adventures revere bears as symbols of the warrior's strength and battle prowess.

By adopting the bear as a totem animal, warriors of these people hope to tap some of the bear's strength.

Bear warriors, through a special relationship with bear spirits, literally adopt a bear's strength in the rage of battle, actually transforming into bears while they fight.

Only characters who can already tap into a spiritual power of rage or frenzy can heighten that power to become bear warriors.

Most bear warriors are barbarians, and sohei sometimes become bear warriors.

Characters with another prestige class that grants a rage ability (such as the singh rager) occasionally adopt this class.

Bear warriors are not found in Rokugan.

NPC bear warriors are usually the champions of barbarian tribes, rustic villages, or warlike temples.

They lead other warriors, not through discipline and order, but by the inspiring example they present.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bear warrior, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Power Attack.

Special: Rage, fury, or ki frenzy ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The bear warrior's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the bear warrior.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Bear warriors are proficient with all simple and martial weapons.

They do not gain any additional proficiency with armor or shields.

Bear Form (Sp): A bear warrior can transform into a bear while in a rage, fury, or ki frenzy.

At 1st level, a bear warrior can assume the form of a black bear for the entire duration of one of his rages each day.

This ability is similar to polymorph self, except that the bear warrior becomes an exceptional bear.

His Strength score increases by +8, his Dexterity score by +2, and his Constitution score by +4 (these bonuses replace the normal raging bonuses).

He gains temporary hit points from his new Constitution score as if raging and a +2 natural AC bonus.

He still gains a +2 bonus on Will saves and suffers a -2 penalty to AC while raging.

He can make two claw attacks at his full normal base attack bonus, each dealing 1d4 points of damage plus his (new) Strength bonus, and one bite attack at his base attack bonus -5, dealing 1d6 points of damage plus one-half his (new) Strength bonus.

As with polymorph self, his weapons, armor, and other equipment merge into his bear form, becoming nonfunctional for the duration of the change (except for items specifically designed to supercede this limitation).

At 4th level, the bear warrior can assume bear form twice each day (while in a rage, fury, or ki frenzy) and can choose between black and brown bear forms.

In brown bear form, the bear warrior's Strength increases by +16, his Dexterity by +2, and his Constitution by +8.

He gains a +5 natural AC bonus, and becomes size Large (suffering a -1 penalty to AC and attacks).

His claw attacks deal 1d8 points of damage plus his Strength bonus, and his bite attack deals 2d8 points of damage plus one-half his Strength bonus.

He gains the improved grab exceptional ability, which he can use when he hits with a claw attack.

His face becomes 5 feet by 10 feet.

At 8th level, the bear warrior can assume bear form three times each day (while in a rage, fury, or ki frenzy) and can choose between black, brown, and dire bear forms.

In dire bear form, the bear warrior's Strength increases by +20, his Dexterity by +2, and his Constitution by +8. He gains a +7 natural AC bonus, and becomes size Large. His claw attacks deal 2d4 points of damage plus his Strength bonus, and his bite attack deals 2d8 points of damage plus one-half his Strength bonus. He gains the improved grab exceptional ability, which he can use when he hits with a claw attack. His face becomes 10 feet by 20 feet, and his reach is 10 feet. Scent (Ex): At 3rd level, a bear warrior gains the scent special ability. This allows the character to detect opponents by sense of smell as a free action, generally within 30 feet. If the opponent is upwind, the range is 60 feet. If it is downwind, the range is 15 feet. The bear warrior can detect strong scents, such as smoke or rotting garbage, at twice these ranges. The bear warrior can detect overpowering scents, such as skunk musk or troglodyte stench, at three times these ranges. The bear warrior detects another creature's presence but not its specific location. Noting the direction of the scent is a move-equivalent action. If he moves within 5 feet of the scent's source, the bear warrior can pinpoint that source.

BLADE DANCER

To blade dancers, the sword is more than a weapon—it is an ally, a friend, a spirit companion. Viewing combat as art, a deadly dance, blade dancers are prone to singing in battle. Blade dancers tap powerful magical energy through a combination of martial prowess and magical study, gaining phenomenal acrobatic ability and the ability to enchant their blades in combat. Most blade dancers are multiclass characters, fighters or monks and wu jen or (occasionally) shamans. Multiclass rogue spellcasters can also meet the steep skill requirements. Blade dancers are not found in Rokugan. NPC blade dancers often dedicate themselves to hunting evil spirits and undead. They tend to be eccentric loners, prone to late-night bouts of singing, dancing, and tumbling (usually enhanced with strong drink). Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

The bear warrior can follow tracks by smell, making a Wisdom check to find or follow a track. The typical DC for a fresh trail is 10. The DC increases or decreases depending on how strong the quarry's odor is, the number of creatures, and the age of the trail. For each hour that the trail is cold, the DC increases by 2. The ability otherwise follows the rules for the Track feat. Bear warriors tracking by scent ignore the effects of surface conditions and poor visibility. Bear warriors can identify familiar odors just as normal humans do familiar sights. Water, particularly running water, ruins a trail. False, powerful odors can easily mask other scents. The presence of such an odor completely spoils the ability to properly detect or identify creatures, and the base Wilderness Lore DC to track becomes 20 rather than 10. Extra Raging: At 5th level, and again at 10th level, the number of times per day that a bear warrior can enter a state of rage, fury, or ki frenzy increases by one. For example, a 7th-level barbarian/5th-level bear warrior can rage three times per day, while a 7th-level barbarian/10th-level bear warrior can rage four times per day. If that same character were to advance one barbarian level, he could rage five times per day.

To qualify to become a blade dancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.
 Base Attack Bonus: +7.
 Skills: Jump 12 ranks, Tumble 12 ranks.
 Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.
 Spells: Able to cast arcane or divine spells.
 Special: Proficiency with any sword.

CLASS SKILLS

The blade dancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the blade dancer. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Blade dancers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and with light armor. A blade dancer who wears medium or heavy armor, or carries a medium or heavy load, cannot use any of his special abilities except for enchanted blade.

Acrobatics (Su): A 1st-level blade dancer gains a +10 competence bonus on Balance, Jump, and Tumble checks. At 5th level, this bonus increases to +20, and at 10th level it is +30.

In addition, a blade dancer can always choose to take 10 on a Balance, Jump, or Tumble check, even when circumstances would normally prevent him from doing so.

Leap of the Clouds (Su): A blade dancer's jumping distance (vertical or horizontal) is not limited according to his height.

Fast Movement (Su): A blade dancer moves faster than normal.

A Small blade dancer moves more slowly than a Medium-size blade dancer, while a ratling moves faster, as shown on the table below.

Blade Dancer Level	Base Speed
	20 ft.	30 ft.	40 ft.
1st–3rd	40 ft.	60 ft.	80 ft.
4th–6th	45 ft.	70 ft.	95 ft.
7th–9th	55 ft.	80 ft.	105 ft.
10th	60 ft.	90 ft.	120 ft.

Enchanted Blade I (Su): At 2nd level, a blade dancer can temporarily enchant his blade to achieve a specific effect. The effect lasts for 1 minute/level, and the blade dancer can create the effect once per day.

The blade dancer can choose from the following special abilities to bestow on his blade: defending, flaming, frost, shock, or ghost touch.

A blade dancer can use this ability even if he is wearing medium or heavy armor.

Ride the Wind (Sp): A blade dancer of 4th level or higher can use air walk as a spell-like ability once per day.

Acrobatic Attack (Ex): At 5th level, if the blade dancer attacks by jumping at least 5 feet toward his opponent, jumping down at least 5 feet onto his opponent or swinging on a rope or similar object into his opponent, he gains a +2 bonus on attack and damage rolls.

The blade dancer must make a Jump check; if the result is less than 5 feet, he cannot use this ability on that attack. If the result is greater than the distance between the blade dancer and the opponent, the blade dancer can limit the distance to that between himself and the opponent as a free action.

Enchanted Blade II (Su): At 6th level, a blade dancer can choose from the following abilities to bestow on his blade: bane (choose type of creature), disruption, flaming burst, icy burst, shocking burst, thundering, wounding.

Alternatively, he can add two enchanted blade I abilities to his blade, either simultaneously or separately.

Enchanted Blade III (Su): At 10th level, a blade dancer can choose from the following abilities to bestow on his blade: dancing, flying*, passage*, or speed.

Alternatively, he can add three enchanted blade I abilities to his blade, either simultaneously or separately.

(* See Chapter 8: Magic Items for these new weapon special abilities).

DAIDOJI BODYGUARD

The Daidoji are among Rokugan's craftiest fighters, concentrating on defensive maneuvers and a style of fighting that induces their opponents to defeat themselves. They make excellent bodyguards, although these abilities can also be turned toward shadier pursuits, and many Daidoji work as smugglers and spies.

The Daidoji aren't ashamed of their illicit activities, although they don't go to any extremes to shout them to the world.

Similar to underground spies, the Daidoji are the shadows in the court, gathering information and protecting the Doji diplomats.

If something is needed, the Daidoji can find it.

If there's a shipment that must get through, there's a Daidoji willing to take it there.

Let the Doji use their skills to hide any dishonor; the Daidoji are willing to do what must be done, for the sake of the clan.

While most characters in the Daidoji bodyguard school are samurai, a few rogues also train in the school and adopt the bodyguard prestige class.

Daidoji bodyguards, as the name suggests, are most commonly found serving as yojimbo (bodyguards) to Doji courtiers and other important Cranes.

Others are found involved in criminal operations—or at least borderline activities.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Daidoji bodyguard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Crane).

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Improved Initiative, Dodge, Toughness.

CLASS SKILLS

The Daidoji bodyguard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int, exclusive skill), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Read Lips (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4: Skills and Feats in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Daidoji bodyguard.
Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Daidoji bodyguards do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Defensive Refocus (Ex): A Daidoji bodyguard can refocus while using the total defense action.

While on total defense, the bodyguard gets the usual +4 dodge bonus to his AC, though he cannot move as well. On the following rounds of combat, the character moves up in the initiative count and is positioned as though he had rolled a 20 on his initiative check.

Defensive Awareness (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, the Daidoji bodyguard gains the extraordinary ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

At 2nd level and higher, he retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(He still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

At 5th level, the Daidoji bodyguard can no longer be flanked, since he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the Daidoji bodyguard.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least 4 levels higher than the bodyguard can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

At 10th level, the Daidoji bodyguard gains an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps.

Defensive awareness is cumulative with uncanny dodge.

If the Daidoji bodyguard has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant these two abilities and determine the character's defensive awareness ability by looking up the level total on the rogue table in the Player's Handbook.

Evasion (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a Daidoji bodyguard can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility.

If the bodyguard makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, he instead takes no damage.

The Daidoji bodyguard can only use evasion if he is wearing light armor or no armor.

Moving the Shadow (Ex): At 4th level, a Daidoji bodyguard learns the techniques of taking advantage of an opponent's armor.

The Daidoji bodyguard gains a dodge bonus to his AC equal to the armor check penalty (if any) of the opponent striking him.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 6th level, the Daidoji bodyguard gains the extraordinary ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 3 from the damage the Daidoji bodyguard takes each time he is dealt damage.

At 9th level, this damage reduction rises to 6.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0. (That is, the bodyguard cannot actually gain hit points in this manner).

Defensive Roll (Ex): At 8th level, the Daidoji bodyguard learns to roll with a potentially lethal blow to take less damage from it.

Once per day, when a Daidoji bodyguard would be reduced to 0 hit points or less by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow, not a spell or special ability), the bodyguard can attempt to roll with the damage.

He makes a Reflex saving throw (DC = damage dealt) and, if successful, takes only half damage from the blow.

He must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to execute his defensive roll—if he is denied his Dexterity bonus to AC, he can't roll.

Since this effect would not normally allow a character to make a Reflex save for half damage, the bodyguard's evasion ability does not apply to the defensive roll.

EUNUCH WARLOCK

In some lands of Oriental Adventures, eunuchs are the power behind the throne of a decadent, corrupt emperor.

Eunuchs serve as spies, couriers, and informants, while eunuch warlocks are the elite leaders of this group of the emperor's most loyal minions.

In some cases, provincial governors even report directly to one or more eunuchs, not to the emperor himself.

Eunuch warlocks must be arcane spellcasters of significant ability, and they are often sorcerers rather than wu jen.

Many eunuch warlocks are multiclass rogue/sorcerers or fighter/sorcerers, though they generally have no more than a few levels of a nonspellcasting class.

Eunuch warlocks are not found in Rokugan.

NPC eunuch warlocks are feared and respected, commanding significant power in the emperor's court. The highest-ranking members issue commands with the voice and authority of the emperor himself.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a eunuch warlock, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Gender: Male.

Alignment: Any evil.

Feats: Spell Focus.

Spells: Able to cast 5th-level arcane spells.

Special: The character must be a eunuch member in the emperor's service.

While this service is often inflicted as a punishment, many volunteer for the procedure because of the power eunuchs hold in some societies.

CLASS SKILLS

The eunuch warlock's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (arcana), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the eunuch warlock.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Eunuch warlocks are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor or shields.

Armor of any type interferes with a eunuch warlock's arcane gestures, which can cause his spells to fail (if those spells have somatic components).

Bonus Spells: Similar to bonus spells for high ability scores, for each level of eunuch warlock that a spellcasting character attains, he gains bonus spells to the number of arcane spells per day he normally casts.

These bonus spells can be added to whatever levels of spells the eunuch warlock can currently cast, but no more than one can be added to the character's highest current spell level.

Example: Wieh Wan is a 9th-level wu jen who takes one level in eunuch warlock.

He can give himself one bonus 5th-level spell (his highest as a 9th-level wu jen), and one bonus spell in one other level, 0 through 4th.

If a eunuch warlock has two arcane spellcasting classes already, he must choose which previous spellcasting class gains the bonus.

For example, Tuangi is a 10th-level sorcerer/9th-level wu jen, with one level of eunuch warlock.

Conceivably, Tuangi could have a bonus 5th-level wu jen spell and a bonus 5th-level sorcerer spell, or he could put both bonus spells in either sorcerer or wu jen, but then only one of them could be 5th level.

Bonus spells cannot be added to a divine spellcasting class.

Once a eunuch warlock has chosen how to apply his bonus spells, they cannot be shifted.

Greater Spell Focus (Ex): A eunuch warlock adds +4 to the DC for saving throws against spells in all schools for which he has the Spell Focus feat, instead of the normal +2 bonus granted by that feat.

In addition, the eunuch warlock gains a +2 bonus on caster level checks to beat a creature's spell resistance with spells from those schools.

This additional bonus stacks with the Spell Penetration feat.

This benefit applies even to schools for which the character gains the Spell Focus feat after becoming a eunuch warlock. For example, if Wieh Wan has Spell Focus (Evocation) when he becomes a eunuch warlock, the save DC for his evocation spells increases by +4 instead of by +2.

If he learns Spell Focus (Illusion) when he reaches 12th level, the save DC for his illusion spells also increases by +4.

Mighty Spells (Ex): At 2nd level, and at every even level thereafter, a eunuch warlock can designate one spell he knows that becomes modified as though affected by the Empower Spell feat.

The spell's level does not change, and once the spell is chosen it cannot be changed.

At 8th level, when he chooses his fourth mighty spell, the eunuch warlock can also designate one previously chosen mighty spell that becomes permanently affected by the Maximize Spell feat.

This replaces the Empower Spell effect, rather than stacking with it.

At 10th level, in addition to choosing his fifth mighty spell, the eunuch warlock can choose a second maximized spell. Thus, a 10th-level eunuch warlock knows three spells that are permanently empowered, and two that are permanently maximized.

Leadership: At 3rd level, a eunuch warlock gains the Leadership feat for free.

Eunuch warlocks typically have units of soldiers at their command.

If the eunuch warlock already has the Leadership feat, he gain a permanent +2 bonus on his Leadership score for purposes of determining followers, but not cohorts. (Typically, this bonus only negates the -2 penalty the character suffers for a reputation of cruelty).

New Spell Level: When a eunuch warlock reaches 5th level, and again when he reaches 10th level, he gains the ability to cast spells of one level higher than he was previously able to cast.

Initially, he can cast 0 spells of this level, but bonus spells (from a high ability score or his eunuch warlock bonus spells) can increase this number.

Example: Wieh Wan is a 9th-level wu jen/4th-level eunuch warlock.

When he reaches 5th level as a eunuch warlock, he gains the ability to cast 6th-level wu jen spells.

He must allocate one of his bonus spells to 6th level in order to cast any 6th-level spells, unless his Intelligence is high enough (22 or higher) to give him a bonus 6th-level spell.

TABLE 3-5: THE EUNUCH WARLOCK

HENSHIN MYSTIC

Henshin mystics are members of a monastic order that teaches what they consider a great mystery of the universe: that humanity is capable of a transformation (henshin) into divinity.

Their training and discipline is aimed toward the ultimate perfection not only of themselves, but of all humanity. They believe this perfection is the future of the world and of humanity, and this belief fills them with a hopeful peace. Most henshin mystics train as monks.

Some begin their careers as shugenjas or other spellcasters, but they abandon this course once beginning the path of the mystic.

In Rokugan, they are drawn exclusively from the Phoenix clan, where they are trained in the Asako school. Many NPC henshin mystics wander the Empire, serving as guides and helpers along humanity's path.

They are expected to show people how to act, how to treat each other, and how to believe, in hope that they may achieve reincarnation in a more enlightened form that will allow them to attain divinity.

They never reveal their true intentions to the world, however, instead moving among the masses of humanity, offering what help and advice they can.

These wandering henshin mystics are called michizure ("traveling companions").

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a henshin mystic, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 6 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 13 ranks.

Special: Purity of body class ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The henshin mystic's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the henshin mystic.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Henshin mystics gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

They suffer the same penalties for wearing armor that monks do.

Monk Abilities: A henshin mystic has the unarmed damage, AC bonus, and speed of a monk with as many levels as his mystic levels plus his monk levels (if any).

Add the henshin mystic's base attack bonus derived from monk levels to that derived from henshin mystic levels and consult Table 3-1: Multiple Unarmed Attacks.

Riddle of Awareness (Sp): A 1st-level henshin mystic can use scrying as a spell-like ability once per day, with a caster level equal to his henshin mystic level.

The character must enter a meditative trance for the entire casting time and duration of the spell, but requires no material component or focus item.

In addition, the henshin mystic gains a +4 insight bonus on all Listen, Scry, Search, and Spot checks.

Blind-Fight: A 2nd-level henshin mystic gains the Blind-Fight feat.

Diamond Body (Su): At 2nd level, a henshin mystic is in such control of his own metabolism that he gains immunity to poison of all kinds.

Happo Zanshin (Ex): A 3rd-level henshin mystic has a preternatural awareness of danger and can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies a rogue the ability to use a flank attack to sneak attack the mystic.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the mystic can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

This ability does not stack with any other uncanny dodge ability, such as that gained from the barbarian or rogue classes.

Root the Mountain (Su): Once per day, a henshin mystic of 4th level or higher can make himself unmovable.

He automatically wins an opposed Strength check when an opponent attempts to bull rush him.

A creature with the improved grab ability must move into the mystic's space to grapple him, since it cannot pull the mystic into its space.

No spell or other effect can force the mystic to move.

If he becomes frightened or panicked, he suffers the full effect of the fear but does not run away.

He cannot move, even to make a 5-foot step, while this ability is in effect.

Root the mountain lasts for 1 round per level, but the mystic can end it at any time.

Riddle of Interaction (Sp): A 4th-level henshin mystic can use charm monster as a spell-like ability three times per day, with a caster level equal to his henshin mystic level and a saving throw DC equal to 14 + his Charisma modifier.

In addition, the henshin mystic gains a +4 insight bonus on all Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Intimidate, and Sense Motive checks.

Ki Strike (Su): At 4th level, a henshin mystic's unarmed attack is empowered with ki.

The unarmed strike damage from such an attack can deal damage to a creature with damage reduction as if the blow were made with a weapon with a +1 enhancement bonus.

At 8th level, a mystic's unarmed strike can deal damage against creatures with damage reduction as if it were made with a weapon with a +2 enhancement bonus.

This ability stacks with a monk's ki strike ability, so a 10th-level monk/8th-level mystic has ki strike (+3).

Touch of Fire (Sp): A henshin mystic of 5th level or higher can use heat metal as a spell-like ability three times per day, with a caster level equal to his henshin mystic level.

Blindsight (Ex): At 6th level, a henshin mystic gains the ability to perfectly sense his surroundings without relying on sight.

This ability makes invisibility and darkness (even magical darkness) irrelevant to the mystic (though he still can't detect ethereal creatures).

This ability operates out to a range of 30 feet.

The mystic cannot distinguish color or visual contrast with blindsight, and thus cannot read.

When using blindsight (and not regular vision), the mystic is unaffected by gaze attacks and is not hampered by blindness.

Deafness or silence does not hamper the mystic's blindsight, since it relies on extraordinary senses, not on sound.

Hitsu-Do (Su): A 6th-level mystic gains the ability to cause his hands, eyes, and weapons to light up with flame once per day, for a duration of 2 rounds per mystic level.

Each of the mystic's melee attacks deals an extra 1d6 points of damage per attack.

The mystic can extinguish the flames before the expiration of the effect's duration, but cannot then use the power again that day.

Riddle of Flame (Sp): A henshin mystic of 7th level or higher can use fire shield as a spell-like ability once per day, with a caster level equal to his henshin mystic level.

In addition to the defensive benefits of the spell, the mystic's unarmed attacks deal additional cold damage (if the fire shield protects against fire-based attacks) or fire damage (if the fire shield protects against cold-based attacks) equal to 1d6 points +1 point per level of the mystic.

This extra damage does not stack with the hitsu-do ability.

Timeless Body (Ex): After attaining 8th level, a henshin mystic no longer suffers ability penalties for aging and cannot be magically aged.

(Any penalties he may already have suffered remain in place).

Bonuses still accrue, and the mystic still dies of old age when his time is up.

Walk through the Mountains (Su): At 9th level or higher, a henshin mystic can assume an ethereal state for 2 rounds per level per day, as per the spell ethereality.

The mystic may go ethereal on a number of different occasions during any single day as long as the total number of rounds spent ethereal does not exceed twice his level.

Riddle of Invulnerability (Su): A 10th-level henshin mystic gains damage reduction of 20/+1.

This means that the mystic ignores (instantly regenerates) the first 20 points of damage from any attack unless the damage is dealt by a weapon with a +1 enhancement bonus (or better), by a spell, or by a form of energy (acid, cold, electricity, fire, sonic).

HIDA DEFENDER

The Hida samurai school is well known as the most relentlessly brutal training grounds in the empire. Students undergo a grueling regime of swordplay drills, mock combat, and military philosophy, designed to sharpen the mind and toughen the body.

Hida defenders train in great armor, a unique characteristic that fits well with the Crab philosophy of strength and endurance.

Unlike the Hirumas, who emphasize speed and tact, the Hidas need their students to be strong, and they push them to the limits of their endurance.

As a result, Hida defenders have the stamina to fight for hours without tiring, and can hold a formation against any aggressor.

Their training gives them the power they need to defend Rokugan against the Shadowlands and forms the backbone of the Crab military machine.

Hida defenders are almost exclusively drawn from the samurai and fighter character classes.

NPC Hida defenders are found atop the Kaiu Wall, in unceasing vigilance against any incursion from the Shadowlands into the empire's territory.

The defense of the empire is their primary concern, taking precedence over politics, artistic pursuits, and the false sincerity of courtly manners.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Hida defender, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Crab).

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Power Attack, Weapon Focus (battleaxe, warhammer, or greatclub).

CLASS SKILLS

The Hida defender's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Handle Animal (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Shadowlands) (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills and Feats in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Hida defenders have little time or patience for what they consider frivolous pursuits, like crafts and artistic endeavors.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Hida defender.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hida defenders do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Smite (Su): Once per day, a Hida defender can make a single melee attack with a +4 attack bonus and a damage bonus equal to his defender level (if he hits).

The defender must declare the smite before making the attack.

Critical Focus (Ex): When using a weapon for which he has the Weapon Focus feat, a Hida defender increases the critical multiplier of the weapon by 1.

If he has Weapon Focus with more than one weapon, he must choose a single weapon for his critical focus, and he must choose the battleaxe, warhammer, or greatclub.

Thus, the critical multiplier for the battleaxe or warhammer increases to $\times 4$, while the greatclub increases to $\times 3$.

The threat range for the weapon does not change, though the defender can still choose the Improved Critical feat with the same weapon if he meets the prerequisites.

Rage (Ex): When he needs to, a Hida defender can fly into a screaming blood frenzy.

In a rage, a defender gains phenomenal strength and durability but becomes reckless and less able to defend himself.

He temporarily gains +4 to Strength, +4 to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but suffers a -2 penalty to AC.

The increase in Constitution increases the defender's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the rage when the Constitution score drops back to normal.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While raging, a Hida defender cannot use skills or abilities that require patience and concentration, such as moving silently or casting spells.

(The only class skills he can't use while raging are Craft, Iaijutsu Focus, and Sense Motive).

He can use any feat he might have except for Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus (if it's tied to a skill that requires patience or concentration).

A fit of rage lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + plus the character's (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

The defender may prematurely end the rage voluntarily.

At the end of the rage, the defender is fatigued (-2 Strength, -2 Dexterity, can't charge or run) for the duration of that encounter.

The defender can only fly into a rage once per encounter, and only a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Entering a rage takes no time itself, but the defender can only do it during his action, not in response to somebody else's action.

A defender can't, for example, fly into a rage when struck down by an arrow in order to get the extra hit points from the increased Constitution, although the extra hit points would be of benefit if he had gone into a rage earlier in the round, before the arrow struck.

If a Hida defender has a rage ability from another class (such as barbarian), he gains the ability to rage more often. Each daily use he gains from his Hida defender levels adds to the daily uses he has from his barbarian levels.

Thus, a 6th-level barbarian/4th-level Hida defender can rage four times per day—twice from his barbarian levels and twice from his Hida defender levels.

Damage Reduction (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, the Hida defender gains the extraordinary ability to shrug off some amount of injury from each blow or attack.

Subtract 1 from the damage the defender suffers each time he is dealt damage.

At 5th level, this damage reduction rises to 2.

At 7th, it rises to 3.

At 9th, it rises to 4.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0.

IAIJUTSU MASTER

Iaijutsu is the martial art of drawing a weapon (almost always a katana) and attacking with it in the same fluid motion.

It is the foundation of some forms of dueling in Oriental Adventures (see Iaijutsu Duels in Chapter 6: Combat), and its masters are feared and respected throughout Rokugan and other lands where iaijutsu is practiced.

Iaijutsu masters harness their ki energy to strike with blinding speed and devastating power.

Iaijutsu masters are almost always members of the samurai character class.

In Rokugan, they are drawn exclusively from the Crane clan, where they are trained in the Kakita school.

NPC iaijutsu masters serve as sensei to the finest samurai in the Empire.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an iaijutsu master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Iaijutsu Focus 9 ranks.

Feats: Improved Initiative, Quick Draw, Weapon Focus (katana).

CLASS SKILLS

The iaijutsu master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the iaijutsu master.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Iaijutsu masters are proficient with all simple and martial weapons.

Iaijutsu masters do not gain any proficiency with armor or shields, though most have such proficiency from the samurai class.

Weapon Finesse (Ex): At 1st level, an iaijutsu master may use her Dexterity modifier instead of her Strength modifier on attack rolls with her katana.

This works like the Weapon Finesse feat, except that it applies to the katana, a weapon to which the feat cannot normally be applied.

Canny Defense (Ex): When not wearing armor, iaijutsu masters add their Intelligence bonus to their Dexterity bonus to modify Armor Class while wielding a katana. As with normal Dexterity AC modifications, positive modifiers are lost when the iaijutsu master is caught flat-footed.

Lightning Blade (Ex): An iaijutsu master of 2nd level or higher adds her Charisma modifier to her initiative checks, as well as her Dexterity modifier.

Bonus Feats: At 4th level, then again at 9th level, the iaijutsu master gets a bonus feat in addition to her normal feat progression.

These bonus feats must be drawn from the following list: Dodge (Mobility, Spring Attack), Expertise (Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Whirlwind Attack), Skill Focus (Iaijutsu Focus), Toughness.

Strike from the Void (Ex): An iaijutsu master of 5th level or higher adds her Charisma modifier to each extra damage die gained from using the Iaijutsu Focus skill.

One Strike, Two Cuts (Ex): At 8th level and above, an iaijutsu master can make two attacks with a katana as a standard action.

This means she can strike twice and move in the same round, or attack twice in the strike phase of an iaijutsu duel.

Strike with No Thought (Ex): If an iaijutsu master of 10th level begins combat (not an iaijutsu duel) within melee range of an opponent, she gains a free surprise round, even though her opponents are aware of her presence.

The only action the iaijutsu master can take in this surprise round is an attack action using a katana.

For example, if the iaijutsu master Kakita Timoshiko and Bayushi Koro are standing on the street hurling insults at each other and the situation erupts into combat, Timoshiko can attack with his katana before Koro even rolls initiative, catching his opponent flat-footed.

This ability reflects the iaijutsu master's ability to apply the principles of the iaijutsu duel in normal melee combat.

It does not give the iaijutsu master any additional benefit within an iaijutsu duel.

TABLE 3-7: THE IAIJUTSU MASTER

KISHI CHARGER

Kishi chargers are cavalry soldiers trained to make the greatest possible use of a horse's speed and a rider's agility. Kishi chargers share a special bond with their mounts—though not to the extent that battle maidens do—and are capable of truly devastating attacks when charging. Kishi chargers tend to come from the samurai and barbarian character classes.

In Rokugan, they are drawn exclusively from the Unicorn clan, where they are trained in the Shinjo school. NPC kishi chargers like to seek out new places and experiences, and their penchant for exploration makes them especially suited for scouting and hunting. They do not like to be contained and would rather sleep under the stars than in a tent or a castle.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a kishi charger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Ride 9 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Ride-by Attack, Spirited Charge.

Weapon Proficiency: Lance (uma-yari).

CLASS SKILLS

The kishi charger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the kishi charger.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Kishi chargers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

Ride Bonus (Ex): A kishi charger gains a competence bonus on all Ride checks.

The bonus is +2 at 1st level and increases by +2 every three levels thereafter (+4 at 4th level, +6 at 7th level, and +8 at 10th level).

Expertise: At 1st level, a kishi charger learns the "Shinjo parry", giving him the Expertise feat for free, even if he doesn't have the prerequisite Intelligence score.

Deadly Charge (Ex): When mounted and using the charge action, a kishi charger of 2nd level or higher deals triple damage with a melee weapon (or quadruple damage with a lance), up to the number of times per day indicated. This ability supersedes the Spirited Charge feat.

Burst of Speed (Ex): At 3rd level, the kishi charger can urge his mount to greater than normal speeds.

This ability doubles the distance of the mount's normal charge movement.

This ability can be used once per day without penalty to the mount.

Each additional use of the ability in a single day requires the mount to make a Will save (DC 20) immediately after the conclusion of the additional charge; failure results in the mount taking 2d6 points of damage.

One Spirit (Su): A kishi charger of 5th level or higher has a spiritual bond with his mount.

Once per day, while mounted, the kishi charger can make any one attack roll, saving throw, or skill check using his Ride skill modifier in place of all other modifiers.

For example, he could roll a melee attack roll using only his Ride skill modifier instead of his total attack bonus (including Strength modifier, weapon enhancement bonus, Weapon Focus bonus, and all other bonuses to the attack roll).

Full Mounted Attack (Ex): At 6th level, a kishi charger gains the ability to make a full attack from horseback, even if his mount has moved more than 5 feet in the round.

Dancing with the Fortunes (Su): A kishi charger of 9th level or higher can, once per day, reroll one roll he has just made.

He must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

MAHO-BUJIN

When a character's Taint exceeds the capacity of his body and soul to contain it, he is possessed by the evil power of the Shadowlands and transformed into a creature of Taint. Such characters feel an irresistible urge to travel into the Shadowlands, often walking until their feet bleed, slaughtering anyone in their way.

The lucky ones are killed by Crab patrols or marauding Shadowlands creatures.

The unlucky ones find their way to the Festering Pit of Fu Leng and are transformed into living servants of evil.

Most maho-bujin were Crab fighters, samurai, or rangers before their Taint overcame them, although a member of any race (except nezumi), clan, or character class can adopt this prestige class.

Shugenjas and other spellcasters are usually seduced into the maho-tsukai class before becoming maho-bujin.

NPC maho-bujin are found throughout the Shadowlands, often serving as commanders for small groups of Shadowlands creatures.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a maho-bujin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Shadowlands Taint: The character's Taint score must be 10 or more.

Special: The character must enter the Shadowlands and travel to the Festering Pit of Fu Leng.

CLASS SKILLS

The maho-bujin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the maho-bujin.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Maho-bujin do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiencies beyond what they possessed before their transformation.

Taint Suppression: By definition, a maho-bujin is overwhelmed with Taint, but this Taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

After he becomes a maho-bujin, a character's Taint manifests in mental effects—insanity, rage, nightmares—and internal physical effects.

If a maho-bujin is split open, the internal corruption is obvious: His body is full of bloody pus and strange growths, even internal limbs.

Barring this condition, it is impossible to detect a maho-bujin based on appearance.

A maho-bujin no longer applies his Taint score as a penalty to his Constitution, but still applies half of his Taint score as a penalty to his Wisdom.

Crimson Road (Ex): Maho-bujins make additional melee attacks in a round like a monk's unarmed attacks: Each additional attack is made at a base attack bonus 3 points lower than the previous.

Thus, a maho-bujin with a base attack bonus of +8 gets three attacks per round at +8, +5, and +2, instead of two attacks at +8 and +3.

Shadowlands Subtype: Like all creatures of the Shadowlands, maho-bujins are vulnerable to certain forms of attack.

Even if they have damage reduction, they are harmed by jade and obsidian weapons, and cannot regenerate or naturally heal wounds dealt by such weapons. They are also affected by crystal weapons, as described in Chapter 8.

Death Knell (Su): When a maho-bujin of at least 4th level strikes the killing blow to dispatch any creature, he gains 1d8 temporary hit points and +2 to Strength.

If he is a spellcaster who uses maho, his effective caster level also increases by +1.

This effect lasts for 10 minutes per HD of the slain creature.

Unbounded Corruption: A maho-bujin of 7th level or higher adds half his Taint score to all attack rolls.

Damage Reduction (Ex): A 10th-level maho-bujin gains damage reduction.

He ignores 10 points of damage from each normal attack, unless the damage is inflicted by a +1 or better magic weapon, or a jade, obsidian, or crystal weapon.

MAHO-TSUKAI

Maho, or blood magic, is perhaps the most seductive and effective tool of evil in Rokugan.

Maho wielders, or maho-tsukai, have served the will of the Shadowlands for centuries, both within the empire and without.

While the Kuni witch hunters, Phoenix inquisitors, and Snake clan magistrates have dedicated themselves to purging maho from the empire, it is often those most dedicated to its eradication who are most likely to find themselves seduced by its power.

And it is power, most often, that seduces, for maho is an easy path to tremendous magical power.

Young shugenjas frustrated at the slow pace of their studies, old scholars chafing at the limitations of their elemental magic, peasant folk-magic practitioners—for all these spellcasters, maho offers a way to overcome obstacles that the sanctioned magic of Rokugan cannot provide.

At the mere cost of one's soul... Maho-tsukai come from a variety of backgrounds.

Many are shugenjas—some inexperienced, some quite advanced—who stumble across or seek out the forbidden secrets of maho in their school's libraries.

Others are adepts from the peasant classes who learn maho from an older practitioner.

Many Bloodspeakers fall into this category, passing the secrets of maho down from generation to generation.

Characters who learn maho without prior magical training usually begin as sorcerers, advancing into the maho-tsukai class as soon as they meet the prerequisites.

NPC maho-tsukai are everywhere, though they are usually extremely well-hidden.

Despite the recent crusade conducted by Kuni Utagu and other witch hunters, maho-tsukai remain within every clan of the empire, both lurking in peasant villages and, especially, hidden away in the shugenja schools, where Utagu was less likely to turn his attention.

Maho-tsukai also operate within the Shadowlands—most notably, Iuchi Shahai, whose power has earned her the title of Dark Daughter of Fu Leng.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a maho-tsukai, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Will Save: +4.

Shadowlands Taint: The character's Taint score must be 4 or higher.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Knowledge (Shadowlands) 4 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast divine or arcane spells.

Special: Must either read maho writings to learn the practice, study under another maho-tsukai, or summon a Shadowlands spirit.

CLASS SKILLS

The maho-tsukai's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (Shadowlands) (Int), Scry (Int), and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the maho-tsukai.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Maho-tsukai are proficient with all simple weapons.

They are not proficient with any type of armor, nor with shields.

Armor of any type interferes with a maho-tsukai's arcane gestures, which can cause her spells to fail (if those spells have somatic components).

Taint Suppression: While a maho-tsukai is likely to accumulate a high Taint score over the course of her life, this Taint is not immediately obvious to onlookers.

A maho-tsukai's Taint manifests in mental effects—insanity, rage, nightmares—and internal physical effects.

If a maho-tsukai is split open, the internal corruption is obvious: Her body is full of bloody pus and strange growths, even internal limbs.

If a maho-tsukai enters the Shadowlands, her corruption immediately manifests externally as well.

Barring these two conditions, it is impossible to detect a maho-tsukai based on appearance.

A maho-tsukai no longer applies her Taint score as a penalty to her Constitution, but still applies half of her Taint score as a penalty to her Wisdom.

A maho-tsukai accumulates Taint for casting maho spells, just like a shugenja or sorcerer does.

See Maho and the Taint, in this chapter.

All spells a maho-tsukai casts are maho spells.

Spells: A maho-tsukai casts arcane spells, much like a sorcerer.

Rather than using a key ability score for spellcasting, maho-tsukai use their Taint scores.

To cast a spell, a maho-tsukai must have a Taint score at least equal to the spell's level.

Maho-tsukai bonus spells are based on a number equal to the character's Taint score + 10, and saving throws against maho spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the maho-tsukai's Taint score.

The maho-tsukai's spell list appears below.

A maho-tsukai is limited to casting a limited number of spells of each level per day, but she need not prepare her spells in advance.

The number of spells she can cast per day is improved by her bonus spells, based on her Taint score.

The number of spells a maho-tsukai knows is not affected by her Taint score.

Blood Component: A maho-tsukai must substitute a drop of blood for a spell's material component or focus, if any. She has two options: use her own blood or use someone else's.

If she uses her own, the minor knife cut to draw the requisite blood is a free action that becomes a normal part of casting the spell.

The maho-tsukai does not need to make a Concentration check to complete the spell, despite the wound.

Using this ability deals the maho-tsukai 1 point of damage. Substituting blood for a costly material component requires drawing a greater amount of blood.

The maho-tsukai deals more damage to herself when doing so, according to the table below.

Component Cost (gp)	Damage Dealt
1–50	5
51–300	11
301–750	17
750+	23

When using blood to replace a costly component, the maho-tsukai must make a Concentration check (DC 10 + damage taken + spell level) to successfully cast the spell.

USING OTHER PEOPLE'S BLOOD

Using another person's blood to serve as the material component or focus of a spell adds a full round to the casting time for the spell. The victim must be helpless or willing, and the cost is double (in hit points or temporary Con damage) what it would be if it were the caster's blood.

Spell Conversion: A maho-tsukai can “trade in” levels in another spellcasting class for additional levels of maho-tsukai spellcasting ability.

Each level of prior spellcasting ability counts as one additional level as a maho-tsukai for purposes of determining spells known and spells per day only.

Spells previously learned as a shugenja or sorcerer count against the character's total spells known, but the maho-tsukai casts them now as arcane maho spells, spilling blood during the casting as a blood component.

Maho-tsukai do not learn more cantrips or gain more 0-level spells per day as they advance.

When a maho-tsukai advances a level, she can learn her new spells from either her old spell list or the maho-tsukai spell list, but casts all her spells as maho spells regardless. For example, a 5th-level sorcerer becomes a maho-tsukai when she reaches 6th level.

As a sorcerer, she knew six 0-level spells, four 1st-level spells, and two 2nd-level spells.

As a maho-tsukai, she converts her sorcerer levels to maho-tsukai spellcasting ability, and can now cast spells as a 6th-level maho-tsukai.

She learns one new 1st-level spell (a total of five), one new 2nd-level spell (a total of three), and two 3rd-level spells as well.

She casts all her spells—whether she knew them before her “conversion” or not—as maho spells, using blood components.

She still knows her six cantrips, and can cast six 0-level spells per day for the rest of her career.

Maho Metamagic: A maho-tsukai who learns metamagic feats can apply them by paying an additional cost in blood.

By draining blood, the maho-tsukai can enhance her spells without using a higher-level spell slot.

The cost is a number of points of temporary Constitution damage equal to the level of the metamagic spell.

Thus, to cast a vampiric touch spell with the Empower Spell feat applied costs the maho-tsukai 5 points of temporary Constitution damage (3rd-level spell + two levels for Empower Spell).

The maho-tsukai cannot enhance a spell to a level higher than he can cast by this means.

For example, a maho-tsukai must be at least 9th level to cast an Empowered vampiric touch, even though the spell uses only a 3rd-level slot.

Level Advancement: The power of maho is seductive. Once a character has tasted its attractions, it is hard to resist.

If a maho-tsukai wishes to advance in level in another class, she must make a successful Will saving throw with a DC equal to 10 + her Taint score.

If she fails the saving throw, she must advance her maho-tsukai level.

If she succeeds at this saving throw, she can advance the level in another class, though she must still attempt the saving throw the next time she gains a level.

If she succeeds at this saving throw, she can advance the level in another class, though she must still attempt the saving throw the next time she gains a level.

*No character can actually reach a level above 15th as a maho-tsukai, but through spell conversion a character may have the spell-casting ability of a higher-level maho-tsukai.

MANTIS MERCENARY

The warriors of the Mantis clan are largely mercenaries, warriors who sell their services with little concern for whether their mission is right or honorable.

They have a unique fighting style among the warriors of Rokugan, one that makes use of peasant weapons and a rolling motion like the rocking of the ocean.

In fact, as Rokugan's best sailors, Mantis warriors are accustomed to fighting aboard ships, and their school makes use of this technique as well.

Mantis mercenaries are usually fighters before adopting this class, though many are fighter/rogues.

NPC Mantis mercenaries are sometimes found aboard Mantis merchant ships, but more often appear in other clans' battles.

Yoritomo Aramasu has promised military aid to the Crabs in their war against the Cranes, but does not carry enough clout in his own clan to muster that aid.

Still, some Mantis mercenaries fight in the Crab army.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Mantis mercenary, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Mantis).

Alignment: Any neutral.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Feats: Dodge, Weapon Focus (one of the following weapons: chain, chijiriki, jitte, kama, kusari-gama, nunchaku, sai, shikomi-zue, siangham, or tonfa).

CLASS SKILLS

The Mantis mercenary's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Mantis mercenary.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mantis mercenaries are proficient with the following peasant and exotic weapons: chain, chijiriki, jitte, kama, kusari-gama, nunchaku, sai, shikomi-zue, siangham, and tonfa.

They do not gain any additional armor proficiency.

Riding the Waves (Ex): Mantis mercenaries gain a +5 competence bonus on Balance checks made to keep their footing on an unsure surface, such as an uneven floor, ice, or a ship's deck in a storm.

Two-Weapon Fighting: When wearing light armor or no armor, a Mantis mercenary can fight with two weapons as if he had the feats Ambidexterity and Two-Weapon Fighting. He loses this special bonus when fighting in medium or heavy armor, but not when using a double weapon (such as a kusari-gama).

Voice of the Storm (Su): A Mantis mercenary of at least 3rd level can summon the power of Osano-Wo, the Fortune of Storms, and channel it through his body for a moment.

Once per day, a Mantis mercenary can add his class level as an enhancement bonus to his Strength.

Activating this power is a free action, and the power lasts 1 round.

Yoritomo's Rolling Wave (Ex): At 5th level, a Mantis mercenary learns the unique bobbing motion invented by Yoritomo.

When using the Dodge feat, a Mantis mercenary adds his Intelligence or Wisdom bonus (whichever is higher) to the dodge bonus to AC granted by the feat.

MIRUMOTO NITEN MASTER

While Togashi listened to Shinsei expounding his philosophy to the first Hantei, he grew frustrated and stormed out of the court.

Taking up a seat of meditation, he refused to move, or even to eat, until he understood this philosophy that Shinsei had brought.

After he had fasted for nine days, Shinsei himself came to sit with the troubled Togashi.

Togashi repeated his ultimatum—"I will not move until I understand"—and Shinsei responded with but three words: "Neither will I".

After a moment, Togashi laughed and bit into a plum. Samurai of the Dragon clan train in a simple dojo with Shinsei's three words painted on the wall.

To the Mirumoto family, these words are a reminder that a samurai's duty is to his lord.

While he was starving himself, Togashi was also starving those he promised to protect, and Shinsei's words reminded Togashi that he was being selfish in putting his own search for enlightenment over his responsibility to others.

The Mirumoto school teaches a unique style of swordplay, rooted in this sense of duty.

Mirumoto wrote, "Some people say I am a coward.

A samurai's duty is to protect his lord.

Are they so simple-minded that they cannot see that two swords serve their lord better than one?" Unlike the Two-Weapon Fighting feat described in the Player's Handbook, the Mirumoto niten ("two-sword") style typically employs the wakizashi for defense rather than offense.

Mirumoto niten masters are almost exclusively drawn from the samurai character class.

NPC Mirumoto niten masters are the military leaders of the Dragon clan.

The Mirumoto family shoulders the responsibility of protecting the clan from attack and from assassination attempts.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Mirumoto niten master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Dragon).

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 3 ranks.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (katana), Expertise, Two-Weapon Fighting.

CLASS SKILLS

The Mirumoto niten master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Mirumoto niten master.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Mirumoto niten masters do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Niten Technique (Ex): Unique among the samurai of Rokugan, the Mirumoto niten masters learn to fight with the katana in one hand and the wakizashi in the other.

Unlike the style of the Two-Weapon Fighting feat, however, this technique does not teach the use of the off-hand weapon to attack.

Instead, the wakizashi serves as a shield, adding a +2 armor bonus to the niten master's AC while he is wielding both weapons.

This bonus stacks with other armor bonuses except for the bonus from a shield.

The bonus rises to +3 at 4th level, to +4 at 7th level, and to +5 at 10th level.

The niten master does not suffer a penalty to her primary attack while wielding the wakizashi in this way.

If the niten master uses the wakizashi to attack, she loses this AC bonus until her next action.

A magic wakizashi does not add its enhancement bonus to the niten master's AC unless it is a defending weapon or has been otherwise specially enhanced for defense.

Aid Shugenja (Su): At 3rd level, a Mirumoto niten master can use her own personal energy to empower a shugenja's spell when she is the target of that spell.

The spell is treated as if the shugenja had used the Empower Spell metamagic feat, including the longer casting time.

The niten master can use this ability once per day at 3rd level, twice per day at 5th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 9th level.

At 9th level and above, the niten master can apply the Maximize Spell feat to spells cast on her instead.

She must decide before any applicable dice are rolled whether she wishes to maximize or empower the spell.

A niten master cannot empower an already empowered spell, or maximize an already maximized one.
Diamond Soul (Ex): At 8th level, the Mirumoto niten master gains spell resistance equal to 20 + her Charisma modifier.

DRAGONS

The dragons of Rokugan are not the lung dragons described in Chapter 9: Monsters—though they resemble them—nor are they anything like the dragons found in the Monster Manual. The dragons are beings of pure elemental forces, powerful and wise beyond the ability of the human mind to comprehend. They are deities, on a par with Heironeous and Vecna, and no less mysterious.

Dragons are shapeshifters, able to assume any form they wish. Often they are seen as physical embodiments of the elements or forces of nature. They occasionally take human form, usually to teach a lesson in humility to a vain or vulgar mortal. They can seem pleasant and beautiful, or terrible and ferocious, depending on their intent. They command the elements like the mightiest shugenjas, but need no complex rituals or focus items.

Seven dragons have been seen in Rokugan. Five of them are commonly referred to as the "elemental dragons," the dragons of air, earth, fire, water, and Void. The earth dragon has the most consistent and identifiable form: It always appears as a long, coiled and scaled serpent that appears to be made of stone and mud. The fire dragon typically appears as endless coils of endless flame.

MOTO AVENGER

Though the Moto who rode in the Shadowlands were exterminated during the Battle of Oblivion's Gate, the remaining members of the Moto family are no less dedicated to their war against the Shadowlands and its evils.

If anything, they are more impassioned, making more frequent raids into those dark lands and fighting more fiercely against Shadowlands creatures they encounter. Moto avengers are often samurai, but they also come from the barbarian class.

NPC Moto avengers are rarely seen in Rokugan, for they still feel the shame of their family inheritance. Driven to avenge that dishonor, they ride into the Shadowlands on their grim mission.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Moto avenger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Unicorn).

Alignment: Any good.

In order to affect the niten master with a spell, a spellcaster must roll the niten master's spell resistance or higher on 1d20 + the spellcaster's level.

The water dragon never keeps the same form for long, but typically chooses a form that features coils, talons, and fins. The air dragon is said to be invisible, while the Void dragon has only appeared in the dreams of heroes, and they can never recall its form.

During violent storms, some people claim to have seen a "thunder dragon" soaring through the sky. The thunder dragon is a manifestation of Osano-Wo, the Fortune of Fire and Thunder.

The seventh dragon was the kami Togashi, who founded the Dragon clan and was its champion until the death of Fu Leng. He assumed different identities in different eras of history, pretending to succeed himself as clan champion, maintaining the illusion of his humanity until the day of his death. On that day, the Second Day of Thunder, he revealed the twelfth Black Scroll of Fu Leng, which he had hidden within his heart. Mirumoto Hitomi removed it and opened it, killing Togashi but making Fu Leng both fully manifest and fully mortal, allowing the Thunders to destroy him at last. Togashi's son, Togashi Hoshi (the "dragon-man") now rules the Dragon clan in his father's stead, a semidivine figure in his own right, but not as mighty as the real dragons of Rokugan.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Ride 8 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Spirited Charge, Trample.

CLASS SKILLS

The Moto avenger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Moto avenger.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Moto avengers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

Detect Taint (Sp): At will, a Moto avenger can detect Taint.

Fury of Vengeance (Ex): When fighting creatures with the Shadowlands type modifier or a Taint score, a Moto avenger can enter a state of rage, gaining phenomenal strength and durability but becoming reckless and less able to defend himself.

He temporarily gains +4 to Strength, +4 to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but suffers a -2 penalty to AC.

The increase in Constitution increases the avenger's hit points by 2 per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the rage when the Constitution score drops back to normal.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While raging, a Moto avenger cannot use skills or abilities that require patience and concentration, such as moving silently or casting spells.

(The only class skills he can't use while raging are Craft and Sense Motive).

He can use any feat he might have except for Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus (if it's tied to a skill that requires patience or concentration).

A fit of rage lasts for 3 rounds, plus the character's (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

The avenger may prematurely end the rage voluntarily.

At the end of the rage, the Moto avenger is fatigued (-2 Strength, -2 Dexterity, can't charge or run) for the duration of that encounter.

The avenger can only fly into a rage once per encounter, and only a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Entering a rage takes no time itself, but the avenger can only do it during his action, not in response to somebody else's action.

An avenger can't, for example, fly into a rage when struck down by an arrow in order to get the extra hit points from the increased Constitution, although the extra hit points would be of benefit if he had gone into a rage earlier in the round, before the arrow struck.

A Moto avenger can enter a rage three times per day at 1st level, four times at 4th level, five times at 7th level, and six times at 10th level.

Starting at 8th level, the Moto avenger's fury bonuses become +6 to Strength, +6 to Constitution, and a +3 morale bonus on Will saves.

(The AC penalty remains at -2).

If a Moto avenger has a rage ability from another class (such as barbarian), the two abilities do not stack.

The character can use a rage ability as many times per day as either class allows him (whichever is higher).

He can use the ability against any foe, but when fighting Shadowlands creatures his Strength and Constitution bonuses are improved by +2 and his Will save bonus is improved by +1.

Thus, an 8th-level barbarian/4th-level Moto avenger can rage four times per day, even if he never faces a Shadowlands foe.

When he does rage in combat against a Shadowlands foe, he gains +6 to Strength, +6 to Constitution, and +3 to Will saves.

An 8th-level barbarian/8th-level Moto avenger can rage five times per day, and against Shadowlands foes he gains +8 to Strength, +8 to Constitution, and +4 on Will saves.

Mettle (Ex): At 2nd level, the Moto avenger's special blessing allows him to shrug off magical effects that would otherwise damage or harm him.

If an avenger makes a successful Will or Fortitude saving throw that would normally reduce the spell's effect, he suffers no effect from the spell at all.

Only those spells with a Saving Throw entry of "Will partial", "Fortitude half", or similar entries can be negated through this ability.

Smite Shadowlands (Su): Once per day, a Moto avenger of 3rd level or higher may attempt to smite a Shadowlands opponent with one normal melee attack.

He adds a +4 bonus to his attack roll and deals 2 extra points of damage per class level.

A Shadowlands opponent is a monster with the Shadowlands descriptor or a character infected with the Shadowlands Taint.

If the avenger accidentally smites a creature that is not Tainted, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Bloodied but Unbowed (Su): If a Moto avenger of 10th level dies, he can will his spirit to ravage his body, tearing and shredding it to prevent it from being animated.

If he exercises this option, his corpse will not spontaneously animate in the Shadowlands.

A spellcaster can still use animate dead on the corpse, but can only create a skeleton, not a zombie.

Raise dead or other spells that restore an intact body to life will not function, but true resurrection of course will.

NINJA SPY

Ninja spies are perhaps the most enigmatic and mysterious class of Oriental Adventures.

While some ninja are little more than assassins (and may adopt the assassin prestige class from the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide), true ninja spies are masters of exotic weapons, tools of stealth, and strange ki powers.

Ninja spies are members of a secretive ninja clan, the head of which holds absolute authority over the ninja's life and death.

They are sworn to secrecy to protect the identities of their clan members and must never reveal that they are ninja. Despite their inclination to evil, ninjas believe strongly in a code of honor, and risk offending their family (and earning a death sentence) if they break that code of honor.

Most ninja spies are rogues, and the skill requirements of the class practically demand that any would-be ninjas have at least a few levels in the rogue class.

Some ninjas have a magical background.

In Rokugan, ninjas are the stuff of legends.

Some refuse to believe they exist.

Ninjas train in the Shosuro school of the Scorpion clan, though other, mysterious ninjas may operate in the Empire as well.

NPC ninjas are often a mysterious force acting in opposition to the plans and goals of player characters.

The objectives of a ninja clan are often inscrutable, but they rarely coincide with those of a group of heroes.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a ninja spy, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Alignment: Any nonchaotic, nongood.

Skills: Bluff 10 ranks, Disguise 7 ranks, Hide 7 ranks,

Tumble 7 ranks.

Feats: Dodge.

Special: Evasion class ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The ninja spy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dec), Open Locks (Dex), Pick Pockets (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See the Player's Handbook, Chapter 4, for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at each level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the ninja spy.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ninja spies gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

However, they gain proficiency in certain exotic weapons as they advance in level.

A ninja spy who wears medium or heavy armor cannot use the following special class features: slow fall, evasion, acrobatics, water walk, and abundant step.

Exotic Weapon: At 1st level, and again at 3rd level, 6th level, and 9th level, a ninja spy gains a free Exotic Weapon Proficiency.

This proficiency must be chosen with one of the following weapons: blowgun, chain, chijiriki, fukimi-bari, hand crossbow, kusari-gama, nekode, ninja-to, shikomi-zue, shuriken, spiked chain, or war fan.

Ki Breath (Ex): A ninja spy learns to focus his ki to increase his ability to hold his breath.

A ninja adds his ninja level to his Constitution check roll to continue holding his breath (see The Drowning Rule in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide).

Poison Use: Ninja spies are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Slow Fall (Ex): At 2nd level, a ninja spy within arm's reach of a wall can use the wall to slow his descent.

The ninja takes damage as if the fall were 20 feet shorter than it actually is.

His ability to slow his fall (that is, to reduce the effective height of the fall when next to a wall) improves with his level until, at 6th level, the ninja can use a nearby wall to slow his descent and fall up to 50 feet without harm.

Improved Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level and above, a ninja spy can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility.

If the ninja makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, he instead takes no damage.

Even if he fails his saving throw, he takes only half damage from the attack.

The ninja can only use improved evasion if he is wearing light armor or no armor.

Sneak Attack (Ex): If a ninja spy can catch an opponent when she is unable to defend herself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Any time the ninja's target would be denied her Dexterity bonus to AC (whether she actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the ninja flanks the target, the ninja's attack deals extra damage.

The extra damage is +1d6 at 2nd level and an additional 1d6 every three levels thereafter.

This extra damage stacks with any extra sneak attack damage the character already deals.

Thus, a 7th-level rogue/5th-level ninja deals +6d6 damage with a sneak attack: +4d6 from his rogue levels and +2d6 from his ninja levels.

Should the ninja score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

With a sap (blackjack) or unarmed strike, the ninja can make a sneak attack that deals subdual damage instead of normal damage.

He cannot use a weapon that deals normal damage to deal subdual damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty, because he must make optimal use of his weapon in order to execute a sneak attack.

A ninja spy can only sneak attack living creatures with discernible anatomies—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Additionally, any creature that is immune to critical hits is also not vulnerable to sneak attacks.

Also, the ninja must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach a vital spot. The ninja cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

Acrobatics (Su): A 3rd-level ninja spy gains a +10 competence bonus on Balance, Climb, Jump, and Tumble checks.

At 7th level, this bonus increases to +20.

In addition, a ninja can always choose to take 10 on a Balance, Climb, Jump, or Tumble check, even when circumstances would normally prevent him from doing so.

Leap of the Clouds (Su): A 3rd-level ninja spy's jumping distance (vertical or horizontal) is not limited according to his height.

Hide in Plain Sight (Su): A 4th-level ninja spy can use the Hide skill even while being observed.

As long as he is within 10 feet of some sort of shadow, a ninja spy can hide himself from view in the open without anything to actually hide behind.

A ninja spy cannot, however, hide in his own shadow.

Water Walk (Su): A ninja spy of 5th level or higher can use water walk to walk on any liquid as if it were firm ground.

The ninja must concentrate (as a standard action) to perform this ability, and thus can only take a single move or move-equivalent action each round while water walking. The effect lasts for 1 round per ninja level.

Thousand Faces (Su): At 7th level, a ninja spy gains the ability to change his appearance at will, as if using the spell alter self.

Poison Immunity (Su): A ninja spy of 8th level or higher is immune to all poisons.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 9th level, a ninja spy gains the ability to wriggle free from magical effects that would otherwise control or compel him.

If a ninja with slippery mind is affected by a spell and fails his saving throw, he can attempt his saving throw again in the next round.

He only gets this one extra chance to succeed at his saving throw.

Abundant Step (Sp): A ninja spy of 10th level can slip magically between spaces, as per the spell dimension door, once per day.

The ninja's effective caster level is 5th.

SHADOW SCOUT

The camouflage of a tiger, the stamina of a horse, the eyes of an eagle: these are the ingredients of the shadow scouts, elite spies, trackers, and runners.

Shadow scouts are trained to blend into their surroundings, to observe and remember the smallest details about an opposing force, and to run like the wind to bring a report back alive.

While some shadow scouts come from the samurai character class, many begin their careers as rangers.

In Rokugan, they are drawn exclusively from the Crab clan, where they are trained in the Hiruma school and sent to scout the Shadowlands.

NPC shadow scouts are often attached to large armies or in the service of powerful warlords or emperors.

They are usually found near dangerous lands—demon-infested mountains, haunted forests, or enemy lines.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadow scout, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Hide 9 ranks, Move Silently 9 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Feats: Run, Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadow scout's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (Shadowlands) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Knowledge (Shadowlands) skill is only appropriate in Rokugan.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the shadow scout.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadow scouts are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with light armor.

Favored Enemy: At 1st level, a shadow scout may select a type of creature (such as giants, goblinoids, undead, oni) as a favored enemy.

A shadow scout may select another human clan as his favored enemy.

Due to his extensive study of his foes and training in the proper techniques for combating them, the scout gains a +1 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks when using these skills against this type of creature.

Likewise, he gets the same bonus on weapon damage rolls against creatures of this type.

The shadow scout also gets the damage bonus with ranged weapons, but only against targets within 30 feet.

The bonus doesn't apply to damage against creatures that are immune to critical hits.

At 4th level and at every three levels thereafter (4th, 7th, and 10th level), the bonus goes up by +1.

Table 4-14 in the Player's Handbook lists possible categories for a favored enemy.

If a shadow scout already has a favored enemy, he may select a new favored enemy, and the bonus associated with every previously selected favored enemy goes up by +1.

The bonus for previously selected enemies increases every time the new bonus goes up.

For example, a 6th-level ranger/5th-level shadow scout will have three favored enemies, with bonuses of +4, +3, and +2. Fast Movement: The shadow scout has a speed faster than the norm for his race by +10 feet when wearing no armor, light armor, or medium armor (and not carrying a heavy load).

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level and above, a shadow scout can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If the scout makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, he instead takes no damage.

The shadow scout can only use evasion if he is wearing light armor or no armor.

Detect Enemy (Sp): At 3rd level, a shadow scout gains the ability to detect the presence of his favored enemy.

The ability is similar to the detect evil spell in range, area, and duration.

In the first round of concentration, the shadow scout can ascertain the presence or absence of his favored enemy within the area.

In the second round, the shadow scout can determine the number of creatures in the area and the power of the strongest one (as per the detect evil spell).

In the third round, the shadow scout can determine the strength and location of each creature.

If the shadow scout has more than one favored enemy, he can detect any of them, and on the second round he can determine what kind of creature is in the area.

Memory: At 6th level, a shadow scout's memory is greatly enhanced.

He can hold in his mind an image he has seen or up to 1 minute of speech, and can describe the details or repeat the words (even if he does not speak the language) as if he were still present.

The shadow scout can only hold one image or sound in his mind at a time.

Freeze (Su): By keeping completely still while using the Hide skill, a shadow scout of 8th level or higher can vanish into his surroundings.

He gains a +15 bonus on his Hide check.

The shadow scout can use this ability three times per day.

Smite Enemy (Su): A 9th-level shadow scout gains the ability to smite his favored enemy once per day.

He adds his Intelligence modifier (if positive) to his attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per level.

This damage bonus stacks with his favored enemy bonus.

If the shadow scout has more than one favored enemy, he can smite any of them, but can still use the ability only once per day.

SHAPESHIFTER

The lands of Oriental Adventures are full of shapechangers: animals who take the shape of humans (hengeyokai), fiends and spirits in human guise, and sorcerers who take animal form.

Shapeshifters are masters of these transforming powers, whose natural forms eventually become as fluid as water. Shapeshifters must already have some means of changing their form before learning to master that change.

Some shapeshifters are spellcasters (wu jen, sorcerers, or shamans) who first learn polymorph self and then move on to greater mastery.

Others are hengeyokai, lycanthropes, rakshasas, ogre mages, or other creatures with natural shapechanging ability.

A very few high-level ninja (with their thousand faces supernatural ability) manage to acquire at least a few levels of shapeshifter.

Shapeshifters are not found in Rokugan.

NPC shapeshifters are often loners, haunting the wilderness in animal form.

Others live in the midst of civilized society, using their abilities to become spies, thieves, or even assassins.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shapeshifter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Concentration 10 ranks.

Special: Alternate Form—Must either know polymorph self or have a natural alternate form, alter self, polymorph self, or shapechange ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The shapeshifter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Animal Empathy (Cha, exclusive skill), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Handle Animal (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the shapeshifter.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shapeshifters are proficient with all simple weapons.

They do not gain any additional proficiency with armor or shields.

Wild Shape (Sp): At 1st level, a shapeshifter gains the ability to change form into a Small or Medium-size animal (but not a dire animal) and back again three times per day. This ability works exactly like the druid's wild shape ability. The shapeshifter can use wild shape more times per day at 4th and 8th level, as noted on Table 3–11: The Shapeshifter. In addition, the shapeshifter gains the ability to take the shape of a Large animal at 3rd level, a Tiny animal at 5th level, and a Huge animal at 9th level.

At 7th level or higher, she can take the form of a dire animal.

At 10th level, the shapeshifter may use wild shape to change into a Small, Medium-size, or Large air, earth, fire, or water elemental once per day.

She gains all the elemental's special abilities when she does so.

Extra Shifting (Ex): A shapeshifter with a natural ability to change shape (such as a hengeyokai's alternate form ability) adds her shapeshifter level to the number of times per day that she can normally change form.

Thus, a hengeyokai 7th-level wu jen/3rd-level shapeshifter could change form fourteen times per day, instead of the eleven transformations normally allowed a 10th-level hengeyokai character.

Spells per Day: A shapeshifter continues her magical training while mastering the powers of wild shape.

At 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 10th level, the character gains new spells per day and spells known as if she had also gained one level in a spellcasting class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit of the spellcasting class.

This essentially means that she adds half her shapeshifter levels to her other class levels, then determines spells per day and spells known accordingly.

For example, if Jengu Tori, a 7th-level wu jen/1st-level shapeshifter, gains a level in shapeshifter, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 8th level in wu jen, but uses the other shapeshifter aspects of level progression such as attack bonus and save bonus.

If she next gains a level of wu jen, making her an 8th-level wu jen/2nd-level shapeshifter, she gains spells as if she had risen to 9th level in wu jen.

If a character adopts the shapeshifter prestige class without having a spellcasting class, he does not gain any spell ability as he increases his shapeshifter levels.

Thousand Faces (Su): At 6th level, a shapeshifter gains the ability to change her appearance at will, as if using the spell alter self.

Natural Shapechanger: At 10th level, a shapeshifter changes form so naturally that her type changes to shapechanger rather than humanoid.

(Hengeyokai are already shapechangers; their type is not affected).

She becomes immune to spells and effects that specifically target humanoids, such as charm person.

SHIBA PROTECTOR

The warriors of the Shiba family are sworn to protect the Isawa family, just as the first Shiba swore to protect the Isawa family while its leader ventured into the Shadowlands with Shinsei.

For a thousand years the descendants of Shiba have pursued this duty, giving them a clear sense of purpose that defines their family character.

They pursue this duty with the aid of rigorous military training, combined with a spiritual discipline that grants them a keen awareness of magic's ebb and flow, allowing them to heighten its effects on themselves, resist it more strongly, or even shrug it off entirely.

Shiba protectors are almost exclusively drawn from the samurai character class.

Young Shiba protectors serve a period in the Home Guard, patrolling Phoenix lands and defending them from any threat.

As they advance, some choose to become yojimbo (bodyguards), assigned to protect an individual courtier or dignitary.

It is in this capacity that the Shibas truly excel, and where their vow to defend their fellow Phoenix shines most clearly.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Shiba protector, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Human (Phoenix).

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Expertise, Iron Will.

CLASS SKILLS

The Shiba protector's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Shiba protector.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shiba protectors do not gain any additional weapon or armor proficiency.

No Thought (Ex): Shiba protectors add their Wisdom modifier, if positive, to their attack and damage rolls.

Aid Shugenja (Su): At 2nd level, a Shiba protector can use her own personal energy to empower a shugenja's spell when she is the target of that spell.

The spell is treated as if the shugenja had used the Empower Spell metamagic feat, including the longer casting time.

The Shiba protector can use this ability once per day at 2nd level, twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 6th level, and four times per day at 8th level.

He must make a successful Spellcraft check (DC 10) to enhance the spell.

A failed check does not count as a use of the ability.

At 8th level and above, the protector can apply the Maximize Spell feat to spells cast on her instead.

The Spellcraft DC is 15.

She must decide before any applicable dice are rolled whether she wishes to maximize or empower the spell.

A Shiba protector cannot empower an already empowered spell, or maximize an already maximized one.

Dancing with the Elements (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a Shiba protector gains a bonus on all saving throws against spells and spell-like effects.

This bonus is +2 at 3rd level, +4 at 5th level, and +6 at 7th level.

One with Nothing (Su): Three times per day, a Shiba protector of 6th level or higher can fall into a trance that allows her to perform actions quickly but with perfect clarity.

For a single round, the samurai can act as if under the effect of a haste spell.

Diamond Soul (Ex): At 9th level, a Shiba protector gains spell resistance equal to 20 + her Wisdom modifier.

In order to affect the Shiba protector with a spell, a spellcaster must roll the protector's spell resistance or higher on 1d20 + the spellcaster's level.

One with All and Nothing (Sp): A Shiba protector of 10th level has recognized the deep truth that all her ability scores spring from the same essence.

In a moment of perfect clarity, she can use her highest ability score modifier when making a skill check, attack roll, damage roll, or saving throw, in place of the ability score modifier she would normally use.

Thus, she could add her Wisdom modifier to a damage roll instead of her Strength modifier, her Charisma modifier to her Reflex saving throw instead of her Dexterity modifier, or her Intelligence modifier to her Spot check instead of her Wisdom modifier.

The Shiba protector can use this ability a number of times per day equal to her highest ability score modifier.

SHINTAO MONK

Shinsei is a figure in the history of Rokugan whose nature and true identity are shrouded in mystery and legend.

He spoke for many days with the first emperor Hantei, and his words are recorded in the Tao of Shinsei, a text that guides emperors and samurai as well as humble monks.

Shinsei also led the Seven Thunders—the greatest heroes of the seven Great Clans—into the Shadowlands to combat the evil of Fu Leng, creating the Twelve Black Scrolls that bound the Evil One's power for a thousand years.

Shintao monks are dedicated to following his teachings, both to further their own quest for enlightenment and to continue his crusade against the evil of the Shadowlands. Shintao monks must advance at least a few levels in the monk class before learning the unique skills and supernatural abilities of the Shintao monk.

Monks of Shinsei come from a wide variety of backgrounds, however—many are retired samurai who become multiclass samurai/monks and then adopt the Shintao monk prestige class.

Virtually all Shintao monks are human, and they come from all seven Great Clans as well as the common caste. NPC Shintao monks serve as teachers and guides on the path of enlightenment.

Many are advisors to daimyos or lesser nobles, but most live fairly reclusive lives in their monasteries and temples.

A very few take Shinsei's crusade to the very borders of the Shadowlands, risking death and Taint to combat the evil that infests that foul place.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Shintao monk, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Will Save Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Special: Still mind class ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The Shintao monk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Heal (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Spellcraft (Int), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Shintao monk.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shintao monks gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

They suffer the same penalties for wearing armor that monks do.

Monk Abilities: A Shintao monk has the unarmed damage, AC bonus, and speed of a monk with as many levels as her Shintao monk levels plus her monk levels.

Add the Shintao monk's base attack bonus derived from monk levels to that derived from Shintao monk levels and consult Table 3-1: Multiple Unarmed Attacks.

Touch the Void Dragon (Su): Once per day, a Shintao monk can raise one ability score by 1d4+1 points for a duration of 1 hour per level.

This ability is similar to the spells bull's strength, cat's grace, and endurance, and to the effects of a potion of Intelligence, a potion of Wisdom, or a potion of Charisma.

Bonus Feat: At 1st level, and every two levels thereafter, a Shintao monk receives a bonus feat.

This feat must be selected from the following list:

Defensive Throw, Deflect Arrows (Grappling Block), Eagle Claw Attack, Expertise (Karmic Strike, Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Defensive Strike, Superior Expertise, Whirlwind Attack), Fists of Iron, Great Throw, Improved Grapple (Choke Hold, Earth's Embrace), Stunning Fist (Falling Star Strike, Freezing the Lifeblood, Unbalancing Strike, Pain Touch).

Detect Taint (Sp): A Shintao monk of 2nd level or higher can use detect taint as a spell-like ability, at will.

Outside the featured campaign setting of Rokugan, the Shintao monk can use detect evil instead.

Smite Taint (Su): Once per day, a Shintao monk of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite a Shadowlands opponent with one unarmed attack.

She adds a +4 bonus on her attack roll and deals +1 point of damage per class level.

A Shadowlands opponent is a monster with the Shadowlands descriptor or a character with a Taint score.

If the monk accidentally smites a creature that is not Tainted, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Outside the featured campaign setting of Rokugan, this ability applies to evil in general: The Shintao monk can smite any evil opponent.

Speak to the Soul (Sp): Once per day, a Shintao monk of at least 2nd level can use detect magic as if cast by a sorcerer of the Shintao monk's level.

Grasp the Earth Dragon (Ex): A Shintao monk of a least 3rd level is immune to stunning, sleep spells and effects, and slow spells and effects.

Purity of Shinsei (Sp): At 4th level, a Shintao monk can cause her entire body to become suffused with a heatless fire that sheds light as a light spell, as if cast by a sorcerer of the monk's level.

The monk can use this ability once per level per day.

Channel the Fire Dragon (Sp): Once per day, a Shintao monk of 5th level or higher can use protection from elements (fire or cold only) as a sorcerer of the monk's character level.

Great Silence (Su): At 6th level, a Shintao monk gains a gaze attack.

The Shintao monk can use this ability once per day, targeting one creature within 30 feet.

When the monk's chosen target meets his gaze, the target must attempt a Will saving throw (DC 10 + monk's class level + monk's Charisma modifier).

If the target fails this save, he is struck mute for 1 minute per level of the monk.

A mute character cannot speak or cast spells with a verbal component.

Steal the Air Dragon (Sp): Once per day, a Shintao monk of at least 7th level can use improved invisibility as a sorcerer of the monk's character level.

Ancestral Guidance (Sp): At 8th level, a Shintao monk can use commune with greater spirit once per week, as a cleric of the monk's character level.

She need not pay the XP component cost for the spell.

Ride the Water Dragon (Ex): At 9th level, a Shintao monk's wounds heal extraordinarily quickly.

She recovers 1 hit point per level per hour, without needing to rest for the healing to take place.

Kukan-Do (Su): At 10th level, a Shintao monk gains a second gaze attack.

The monk can use this ability once per day, targeting one creature within 30 feet.

When the monk's chosen target meets her gaze, the target must attempt a Will saving throw (DC 10 + monk's class level + monk's Charisma modifier).

If the target fails this save, he and the monk are locked in a kind of elemental stasis, preventing both of them from mustering their spiritual energies.

Neither the target nor the monk can use any spells, spell-like abilities, or supernatural abilities.

Either character can attack or use skills and exceptional abilities, including the monk's unarmed attacks and stunning attack.

Code of Conduct: Shintao monks must follow certain rules of life in order to maintain the purity of their souls and continue their advancement toward enlightenment.

They are forbidden to eat meat (though they may eat fish), commit murder or theft, or marry.

Shintao monks are expected to avoid causing violence, though circumstances can make that impossible.

Gluttony and drunkenness are vices to be avoided, and holy places must be treated with respect.

Shintao monks cannot accumulate wealth or become involved in politics.

A Shintao monk who violates this code of conduct or strays from a lawful good alignment cannot gain new levels as a Shintao monk but retains all monk class abilities.

Assuming he remains lawful, he can continue to advance in the monk class.

SINGH RAGER

While bear warriors claim the wild ferocity of the bear in their uncontrolled rages, singh ragers draw their furious strength from the noble lion (called a singh or singha in some societies).

The singh ragers' fury never robs them of their discipline and control, which to many minds makes them only more terrifying.

They are paragons of warrior virtue whose speed, strength, and courage are unrivaled.

Fighters and samurai make the best singh ragers, though rangers can easily qualify.

Monks and sohei can't qualify before 12th level unless they have some levels in fighter-related classes, but some have been known to persevere to that point.

In Rokugan, singh ragers come from the Lion clan, where they are trained in the Matsu school (and called Matsu ragers).

NPC singh ragers are often the favorite champion of a prince or emperor.

Their lawful alignment makes them excellent retainers.
Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a singh rager, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Iron Will, Ki Shout.

CLASS SKILLS

The singh rager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (history) (Int), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the singh rager.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Singh ragers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with all armor.

Lion's Roar: The singh rager's fury in battle sends fear into her opponents' hearts.

A singh rager can use a Ki Shout or Great Ki Shout a number of times per day equal to four plus her Charisma modifier, and the Difficulty Class of the fear effect is increased by 4.

Great Ki Shout: A singh rager gains this feat for free at 1st level.

Lion's Fury (Ex): At 2nd level, a singh rager can enter a state of rage, gaining phenomenal strength and durability but becoming reckless and less able to defend herself.

She temporarily gains +4 to Strength, +4 to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but suffers a –2 penalty to AC.

The increase in Constitution increases the singh rager's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the rage when the Constitution score drops back to normal.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While raging, a singh rager cannot use skills or abilities that require patience and concentration, such as moving silently or casting spells.

(The only class skills she can't use while raging are Craft, Iaijutsu Focus, and Sense Motive).

She can use any feat she has except for Expertise, item creation feats, metamagic feats, and Skill Focus (if it's tied to a skill that requires patience or concentration).

A fit of rage lasts for 3 rounds, plus the character's (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

The singh rager may prematurely end the rage voluntarily.

At the end of the rage, the singh rager is fatigued (–2 Strength, –2 Dexterity, can't charge or run) for the duration of that encounter.

The singh rager can only fly into a rage once per encounter, and only a certain number of times per day (determined by level).

Entering a rage takes no time itself, but the singh rager can only do it during her action, not in response to somebody else's action.

A singh rager can't, for example, fly into a rage when struck down by an arrow in order to get the extra hit points from the increased Constitution, although the extra hit points would be of benefit if she had gone into a rage earlier in the round, before the arrow struck.

A singh rager can enter a rage three times per day at 3rd level, four times at 6th level, and five times at 10th level. Starting at 8th level, the singh rager's fury bonuses become +6 to Strength, +6 to Constitution, and a +3 morale bonus on Will saves.

(The AC penalty remains at –2).

Lion's Courage (Ex): A singh rager of 3rd level or higher is immune to fear (magical or otherwise) and gains a +4 bonus on Will saves against other mind-influencing spells and effects.

Remain Conscious: A singh rager gains this feat for free at 3rd level.

Lion's Pounce (Ex): At 4th level, a singh rager can make a full attack at the end of a charge.

Roaring Strike (Ex): A singh rager of 5th level or higher can make a Ki Shout as a free action if she combines it with a full attack action.

TABLE 3-13: THE SINGH RAGER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+2	Lion's roar, Great Ki Shout

TATTOOED MONK

Certain monastic orders in the lands of Oriental Adventures bestow supernatural or spell-like powers on their members by inscribing magic tattoos on their skin.

These tattooed monks shave their heads, speak in cryptic riddles and maxims, and—in many cases—travel the countryside furthering their quest for enlightenment by facing and conquering temptation.

The great majority of tattooed monks begin their careers as monks.

A small number of samurai, shamans, and shugenjas adopt the tattooed monk prestige class.

In Rokugan, they are drawn almost exclusively from the Dragon clan, though members of other clans who gain the favor of the order are sometimes allowed to join.

Tattooed monks in Rokugan are trained in two competing schools: the Togashi school (whose monks are called ise zumi) and the Hitomi school (whose monks are kikage zumi).

The ranks of the tattooed monks are divided between worldly monks—those who believe that temptation can only be overcome if it is squarely faced—and ascetic monks, who rarely leave their mountaintop retreats.

Player character tattooed monks are assumed to fall into the former category, but NPCs can be found in both roles.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a tattooed monk, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Feats: Improved Grapple, Improved Unarmed Strike (or monk class ability).

Special: Must be accepted by the tattooed monk order.

CLASS SKILLS

The tattooed monk's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

Swiftiness of the Lioness (Ex): When she reaches 7th level, a singh rager can act as if under the effects of a haste spell for a total of 1 round per class level per day. These rounds need not be consecutive.

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the tattooed monk.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Tattooed monks gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

They suffer the same penalties for wearing armor that monks do.

Monk Abilities: A tattooed monk has the unarmed damage, AC bonus, and speed of a monk with as many levels as his tattooed monk levels plus his monk levels (if any).

Add the tattooed monk's base attack bonus derived from monk levels to that derived from tattooed monk levels and consult Table 3-1: Multiple Unarmed Attacks.

Tattoo (Su): Tattooed monks gain their powers from the magic tattoos that eventually grow to cover their bodies.

A 1st-level tattooed monk has one tattoo and gains another tattoo every two levels, to a maximum of five.

The tattooed monk can choose his tattoos from the following list.

Note that some tattoos have minimum level requirements. All tattoos are magical, and the abilities they bestow are supernatural.

A tattooed monk in an antimagic field loses all benefits of his tattoos.

Unless the effect of a tattoo is continuous, activating a tattoo is a move-equivalent action that can be combined with a regular move and does not provoke an attack of opportunity.

Arrowroot: The tattooed monk can heal wounds in another character by touch.

Each day he can cure a total number of hit points equal to his Wisdom bonus times his level.

The tattooed monk cannot heal himself, but he may divide the curing among multiple recipients, and he doesn't have to use it all at once.

Bamboo: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Constitution score.

This ability lasts for 1 round per level.

Bat: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Dexterity score.

This ability lasts for 1 round per level.

Bellflower: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can add his Charisma modifier as an enhancement bonus to any of his ability scores (including Charisma). This lasts for 1 round per level.

Butterfly: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can add the number of tattoos he possesses as an enhancement bonus to his Wisdom score. This ability lasts for 1 round per level.

Centipede: Once per week, the tattooed monk can shadow walk.

This ability allows the tattooed monk to cross great distances, but he must end his journey on the Material Plane (in Rokugan, this means he cannot enter the Shadowlands).

Minimum Level: 5th.

Chameleon: The tattooed monk can use alter self once per day per tattoo he possesses to take on the appearance of any other human he has encountered.

The duration of this ability is one hour per level.

Cloud: Once per day, the tattooed monk can commune with greater spirit as the spell (described in Chapter 7).

With each use of the ability, the tattooed monk can ask no more than one question per level.

Minimum Level: 5th.

Crab: The tattooed monk gains damage reduction equal to 2 per tattoo he possesses.

This damage reduction is negated by a weapon with a magical enhancement bonus equal to or better than the tattooed monk's Constitution bonus (if any), by magical attacks, or by energy attacks.

Damage reduction can reduce damage to 0 but not below 0. (That is, the tattooed monk cannot actually gain hit points in this manner).

Crane: The tattooed monk gains a gradual immunity to bodily decay.

When the tattooed monk first gains this tattoo, he gains immunity to nonmagical diseases.

When he gains his next tattoo (whatever it may be), he acquires immunity to poison as well.

When he gains his next tattoo, he no longer suffers ability penalties for aging, and cannot be magically aged. (Any aging penalties he may already have suffered remain in place).

Bonuses still accrue, and the tattooed monk still dies of old age when his time is up.

Minimum Level: 5th.

Crow: When the tattooed monk calls on the power of this tattoo, he becomes immune to the Shadowlands Taint for one day per tattoo he possesses, and gains a +1 resistance bonus on all Will saving throws for the same duration.

After using this ability, the tattooed monk cannot activate the crow tattoo for five more days.

Tattooed monks in campaigns other than Rokugan do not use the crow tattoo.

Chrysanthemum: Every hour that the tattooed monk with this tattoo is in sunlight, he heals a number of hit points equal to his level.

A daylight spell does not provoke this fast healing; the character must be exposed to the real sun.

Minimum Level: 7th.

Dragon: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can use fire breath as the spell (described in Chapter 7).

The tattooed monk's caster level is his class level.

Minimum Level: 5th.

Dragonfly: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk gains a dodge bonus to his AC equal to the number of tattoos he possesses.

This extraordinary ability lasts for 1 round per level.

Falcon: The tattooed monk is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Allies within 10 feet of the tattooed monk gain a morale bonus on their saving throws against fear effects.

The bonus equals the tattooed monk's Charisma bonus (if any) plus the number of tattoos he possesses.

Lion: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can smite a foe, gaining a +4 attack bonus and a damage bonus equal to his level on a single melee attack.

The tattooed monk must declare the smite before making the attack.

Monkey: The tattooed monk gains a +1 competence bonus per tattoo he possesses on all Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Open Lock, Pick Pocket, and Tumble checks.

Moon, Crescent: In Rokugan, only kikage zumi (monks of the Hitomi school) can choose this tattoo.

Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can use ethereal jaunt as a spell-like ability.

Minimum Level: 7th.

Moon, Full: In Rokugan, only kikage zumi (monks of the Hitomi school) can choose this tattoo.

Once per night per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can gain a +2 luck bonus on a single attack roll, skill check, or ability check, as he calls on the full power of Hitomi, the moon.

This ability cannot be used during daylight hours.

Mountain: The tattooed monk can take on the immovability of the mountain, gaining phenomenal durability though he cannot move from the spot where he stands.

He gains a +4 bonus to his Constitution and Wisdom scores.

The increase in Constitution increases the tattooed monk's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away when the power's duration expires.

These extra hit points are not lost first the way temporary hit points are.

While using this ability, the tattooed monk cannot use any skills based on Dexterity, including Balance and Tumble.

He is immune to bull rush and trip attacks.

This immovable state lasts 1 round per level.

The tattooed monk may use this ability once per day per tattoo he possesses.

Nightingale: The tattooed monk can cure his own wounds.

He can cure up to twice his level in hit points each day, and he can spread this healing out among several uses.

Ocean: The tattooed monk with an ocean tattoo never needs to eat, sleep, or drink.

Minimum Level: 9th.

Phoenix: The tattooed monk gains spell resistance equal to his class level + 15.

In order to affect the tattooed monk with a spell, a spellcaster must roll the tattooed monk's spell resistance or higher on 1d20 + the spellcaster's level.

Minimum Level: 7th.

Pine: The tattooed monk gains the benefits of the Endurance and Remain Conscious feats.

Scorpion: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can force an opponent attacking him to use her lowest ability score modifier instead of her Strength or Dexterity score modifier when making her attack roll.

Spider: The tattooed monk's touch (or unarmed attack) delivers a contact poison.

The poison's save DC is equal to 10 + the tattooed monk's class level + his Constitution modifier.

The poison's initial and secondary damage is 1 point of temporary Constitution damage.

The tattooed monk can suppress this poison for 1 hour by concentrating for a full round and making a successful Will save (DC 20).

Minimum Level: 3rd.

Sun: In Rokugan, only ise zumi (monks of the Togashi school) can choose this tattoo.

Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can gain a +2 luck bonus on a single attack roll, skill check, or ability check, as he calls on the full power of the sun.

This ability can only be used during daylight hours.

Tiger: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can fight unarmed with a +1 bonus on all attack rolls and dealing an additional +1d6 points of damage with a successful attack.

This burst of martial arts ferocity lasts for 1 round per level.

Tortoise: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can use his level as the number of ranks in a skill he does not possess for the purposes of one skill check, even an exclusive skill for another class.

For example, Togashi Mitsu, a 4th-level tattooed monk with two tattoos, can make up to two Use Magic Device checks as if he had 4 ranks in that skill.

He adds his Charisma modifier to the skill check as usual.

Unicorn: The tattooed monk gains the power of good fortune, which is usable once per day per tattoo he possesses.

This ability allows the tattooed monk to reroll one roll that he has just made.

The character must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

Wasp: Once per day per tattoo he possesses, the tattooed monk can use haste on himself.

The haste effect lasts 1 round per level.

Minimum Level: 3rd.

White Mask: The tattooed monk is immune to detect thoughts, detect lies, and any attempt to magically discern his alignment.

He gains a +10 bonus on all Bluff checks.

Minimum Level: 3rd.

VOID DISCIPLE

Of all the elemental forces that make up the universe, the most powerful and the most difficult to control is the one that lies between and joins the others: Void.

Most shugenjas can call upon and direct only the individual forces of specific elements, while wu jen use them all.

But Void disciples understand that everything in the world contains all the basic elements, held together by the least tangible essence.

Void is like the silence between notes of music, giving rhythm and shape to the whole.

To those who understand the relationship of Void to all other things, and who have the innate ability to personally perceive that relationship, distance and form become inconsequential.

Void disciples begin their training as spellcasters—usually shugenjas, but occasionally shamans or wu jen—and continue to gain spellcasting ability as they rise in level.

In Rokugan, they are always shugenjas of the Phoenix clan, trained in the Isawa school.

Like other spellcasters, NPC Void disciples play the role of wise elders, keepers of religious teachings and legends. Those who have mastered the path of Void are called ishiken, and are charged with the task of listening across the world's underlying stream of Void for the births of those who have an innate affinity for Void, and supervising the training of these individuals as they mature.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Void disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any neutral.

Skills: Scry 10 ranks.

Feats: Heighten Spell, Spell Penetration.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The Void disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the Void disciple.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Void disciples gain no weapon or armor proficiencies.

Spells per Day: A Void disciple continues her magical training while mastering the powers of Void.

At 2nd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th, 10th, 11th, and 12th level, the character gains new spells per day and spells known as if she had also gained one level in a previous spellcasting class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit of the other spellcasting class.

For example, if Isawa Todari, a 7th-level shugenja/1st-level Void disciple, gains a level in Void disciple, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 8th level in shugenja, but uses the other Void disciple aspects of level progression such as attack bonus and save bonus.

If she next gains a level of shugenja, making her an 8th-level shugenja/2nd-level Void disciple, she gains spells as if she had risen to 9th level in shugenja.

Sense Void (Su): The first technique taught to the Void disciple is the ability to reach out with the mind and sense the world around, exploring the unseen layer of reality most people rarely experience.

The Void disciple's consciousness actually departs her body and extends into the world, allowing her to use her normal senses (sight, hearing, touch, taste, smell) to perceive whatever area, person, or thing she directs her attention to. The Void disciple must make a Scry check, with the DC determined by distance, not familiarity.

Distance	DC
Line of sight	5
Up to 1 mile (same village)	10
Up to 10 miles (same province)	15
Up to 100 miles (same clan's territory)	20
Up to 1,000 miles (another clan's territory)	25

The Void disciple cannot sense across planar boundaries. Thus, a Void disciple standing on the Kaiu Wall could not extend her senses into the Shadowlands, even within her line of sight.

With every four levels the Void disciple attains beyond 1st, she gains the ability to perceive deeper levels of reality.

At 5th level, the Void disciple can detect magic and detect Taint at will while using this ability.

At 9th level, she can discern lies and read emotional states, gaining a +10 bonus on Sense Motive checks while using this ability.

At 13th level, she can detect thoughts at will while using this ability.

A Void disciple can use this ability once per day at 1st level. With every two levels she attains beyond 1st, she can use the ability an additional time per day (twice at 3rd level, three times at 5th, and so on).

Moment of Clarity (Su): At 4th level, a Void disciple can grant an ally the temporary ability to perform any skill or feat (with the exception of ancestor feats).

The Void disciple must use a standard action to touch the target.

The target gains either one feat or a number of ranks in one skill equal to his relevant ability modifier for that skill.

For example, a character with a 14 Dexterity could gain 2 ranks in Ride, for a total skill modifier of +4.

The effect lasts for 1 round per level of the Void disciple.

The Void disciple can use this supernatural ability twice per day at 4th level, plus an additional use for every four additional levels she attains.

Altering the Course (Su): Once per day, a Void disciple of 7th level or higher can add a +20 bonus to any single attack roll, skill check, or ability check she makes.

She cannot transfer this bonus to another character by any means.

This supernatural ability requires no action, and lasts only the duration of the single check.

Void Release (Su): Three times per day, a Void disciple of 10th level or higher can touch an ally, allowing that character to use her highest ability score modifier in place of any one lower modifier (target's choice) for a number of rounds equal to half the Void disciple's level.

For example, a severely wounded samurai could use his high Strength modifier in place of his low Dexterity modifier for a few rounds, increasing his Armor Class, Reflex save bonus, and ranged attack bonus (as well as Dexterity-based skills).

Void Suppression (Su): Once per day, a 12th-level Void disciple can make a melee touch attack to force the target to use his lowest ability score modifier in place of any one higher modifier (Void disciple's choice) for 5 rounds.

For example, a Void disciple could force an ogre to use his low Intelligence modifier in place of his high Strength modifier, severely weakening the brute's physical blows.

Void Strike (Su): Once per day, a 13th-level Void disciple can make a melee touch attack to bestow 1d4 negative levels on the target.

The Void disciple gains 5 temporary hit points for each negative level she bestows.

If the target has at least as many negative levels as HD, he dies.

Each negative level gives a creature a -1 competence penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, ability checks, and effective level (for determining the power, duration, DC, and other details of spells or special abilities). Additionally, a spellcaster loses one spell or spell slot from his highest available level.

Negative levels stack.

Assuming the target survives, he regains lost levels after 13 hours pass.

This ability relies on the Void disciple's mastery of Void, not negative energy, so it cannot be used to benefit undead.

WEAPON MASTER (KENSEI)

Harnessing ki energy is an essential ability for many characters in Oriental Adventures.

For weapon masters (kensei), the perfection of ki is found in the mastery of a single melee weapon.

Weapon masters seek to unite this weapon of choice with the body, to make them one, and to use the weapon as naturally and without thought as any other limb.

Weapon masters are most often fighters or samurai, since the sheer number of feats required to qualify deters many other characters.

Weapon masters are not trained in the samurai schools of Rokugan, but individual fighters or samurai, under the tutelage of a more experienced master, may adopt the weapon master prestige class.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a weapon master, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 4 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Combat Reflexes, Expertise, Weapon Focus (with weapon of choice), Whirlwind Attack.

Special: Must own a masterwork weapon of choice.

CLASS SKILLS

The weapon master's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Iaijutsu Focus (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Iaijutsu Focus skill is described in Chapter 4 of this book.

Skill Points at each level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Weapon masters gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Weapon of Choice (Ex): Weapon masters dedicate their lives to the study of a single melee weapon, often the katana or another type of sword.

A weapon master must have the Weapon Focus feat with this weapon of choice.

All of a weapon master's special abilities apply only when he is wielding that type of weapon.

Once he has selected a weapon of choice, a weapon master cannot later change that weapon.

In order to qualify for the weapon master class, a character must own a masterwork weapon that is his weapon of choice.

He does not necessarily need to continue using that same weapon throughout his career, and he gains the benefits of the class even if he is using a normal (not a masterwork) weapon, as long as it is his weapon of choice.

Ki Damage (Ex): After scoring a hit with his weapon of choice, a weapon master can choose not to roll dice to determine the damage.

Instead, he figures the normal maximum damage (not a critical hit) he can inflict and deals that much damage to the target.

A weapon master wielding a katana with a 17 Strength deals 13 points of damage (10 + 3 for Strength) when he chooses this option.

Additional damage, such as from using the Power Attack feat (following all the rules for it normally), the sneak attack ability, or a weapon's special properties (such as flaming or honorable), is determined normally, not maximized.

This ability cannot be used when you roll a successful critical hit.

The weapon master can use this ability once per day per class level.

Increased Multiplier (Ex): A weapon master of 2nd level or higher can deal extra damage with a critical hit.

The damage multiplier of the weapon master's favored weapon is increased by 1.

For example, the katana has a critical multiplier of $\times 2$.

Using this ability, the weapon master can increase that multiplier to $\times 3$ once per day at 2nd level.

As a weapon master increases in level, he can use this ability more frequently.

The weapon master must declare the use of this ability before rolling any damage dice.

Superior Weapon Focus (Ex): Stacking with any existing Weapon Focus bonus, a weapon master of 3rd level or higher adds an additional +1 to all attack rolls with his weapon of choice.

Superior Combat Reflexes (Ex): A weapon master of 5th level or higher can make a number of attacks of opportunity in a round equal to his Dexterity modifier plus his Wisdom modifier.

Ki Critical: When a weapon master reaches 7th level, he gains the Improved Critical feat for free. If he already possesses this feat, he adds an additional +2 to the threat range for his weapon of choice. This +2 bonus is applied last, after any multipliers, such as those given by the Improved Critical feat or by keen weapons.

Ki Whirlwind Attack (Ex): A weapon master of 9th level or higher can make a Whirlwind Attack as a standard action rather than a full-round action. Only one whirlwind attack can be made per round.

WITCH HUNTER

Witch hunters combine magical training with combat expertise to battle the spiritual forces of evil in the world. Ghosts and other evil spirits, demons and oni, and practitioners of black magic are the witch hunters' sworn enemies, and they bring unique abilities and expertise to bear in combating these foes.

A witch hunter typically begins his training as a shaman, shugenja, or wu jen.

At some point in his career, he encounters an older witch hunter who selects him as an apprentice.

After this selection, he learns weapon proficiency, wards and bindings, ways of detecting angry spirits, and combat techniques.

By the time the witch hunter leaves his master and goes his own way, he is usually a multiclass fighter or ranger.

In Rokugan, witch hunters are exclusively shugenjas from the Crab clan, trained in the Kuni school.

NPC witch hunters wander roads and fields in search of evil creatures or sorcerers.

Rumors of hauntings or demonic sacrifices draw them like flies, which has made the witch hunters the subject of popular legend among the peasantry.

The tales elevate them to a status paralleling that of the mysterious tattooed monks, and it comes as no surprise that witch hunters and tattooed monks tend to greet each other with respect.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a witch hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (Shadowlands) 10 ranks.

Feat: Track.

Spells: Able to cast magic circle against Taint or magic circle against evil.

Special: Must have been selected by another witch hunter, and trained under that mentor before entering the prestige class.

CLASS SKILLS

The witch hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Intuit Direction (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (Shadowlands) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Scry (Int, exclusive skill), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), and Wilderness Lore (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

The Knowledge (Shadowlands) skill is only appropriate in Rokugan.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

The following are class features of the witch hunter. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Witch hunters are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and with all armor.

Spells per Day: A witch hunter continues her magical training as well as practicing the techniques of the hunter.

At 2nd, 5th, 7th, 9th, and 10th level, the character gains new spells per day and spells known as if she had also gained one level in her spellcasting class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit of the spellcasting class.

For example, if Kuni Osari, a 3rd-level shugenja/4th-level ranger/1st-level witch hunter, gains a level in witch hunter, she gains new spells as if she had risen to 4th level in shugenja, but uses the other witch hunter aspects of level progression such as attack bonus and save bonus.

If she next gains a level of shugenja, making her a 4th-level shugenja/4th-level ranger/2nd-level witch hunter, she gains spells as if she had risen to 5th level in shugenja.

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, the witch hunter can use detect evil as a spell-like ability.

In the featured campaign setting of Rokugan, witch hunters use detect Taint instead.

Kami's Grace: A witch hunter applies her Charisma modifier (if positive) as a bonus on all saving throws.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, a witch hunter of 2nd level or higher may attempt to smite an evil opponent with one normal melee attack.

She adds a +4 bonus on her attack roll and deals 2 extra points of damage per class level.

If the witch hunter accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

In the featured campaign setting of Rokugan, witch hunters smite Shadowlands opponents instead.

A Shadowlands opponent is a monster with the Shadowlands descriptor or a character with a Taint score.

Aura of Courage (Ex/Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a witch hunter is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Allies within 10 feet of the witch hunter gain a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects.

Granting the morale bonus to allies is a supernatural ability.

Bonus Feats: At 4th, 6th, and 10th level, a witch hunter gains the bonus feats Power Attack, Cleave, and Great Cleave.

If the witch hunter already has one of these feats at the time she gains it as a bonus feat, she gains no special benefit.

If the witch hunter does not have the prerequisite Strength score, she can only use the feats against evil opponents (or Shadowlands opponents, in Rokugan).

Resist Evil Magic (Ex): At 8th level, a witch hunter gains a specialized spell resistance equal to 20 + her class level.

This spell resistance applies only to evil spells or spells cast by an evil creature.

In Rokugan, this spell resistance applies only to spells cast by maho-tsukai or other characters with the Shadowlands Taint, as well as spells and spell-like abilities used by Shadowlands monsters.

YAKUZA

The yakuza are many different things, depending on who is asked.

Some call them protectors of the common folk, others think of them as thugs and extortionists, still others rely on them as an unofficial police force.

They are simultaneously despised and respected, sometimes even supported by the local authorities.

On one hand, they represent the shadowy underworld, directing and controlling local activities.

On the other hand, they provide protection for the helpless and watch over those in their care.

Of course, such care has a price, and that is how the yakuza make their living.

Most yakuza are rogues, and no character without at least some rogue levels will meet the skill requirements for the yakuza class before very high levels.

Some rogue/fighters are drawn to the yakuza's thuggish, enforcer role.

Yakuza are not found in Rokugan.

Yakuza may be tolerated, condoned, or even recognized by the government, but they are nevertheless criminals, always in danger of arrest and punishment for their crimes. As a result, yakuza families do their best to keep everything running smoothly and quietly in their territories, avoiding any unwanted attention.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify as a yakuza, a character must fulfill all the following criteria:

Alignment: Any nonchaotic, nongood.

Skills: Bluff 10 ranks, Gather Information 10 ranks, Hide 7 ranks.

Feats: Dodge.

CLASS SKILLS

The yakuza's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are: Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Innuendo (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dec), Open Locks (Dex), Pick Pockets (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at each level: 8 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Yakuza gain no additional weapon or armor proficiency.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): A yakuza has the ability to react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to even be aware of it.

From 1st level, she retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

(She still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized). At 4th level, the yakuza can no longer be flanked, since she can react to opponents on opposite sides of her as easily as she can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the opportunity to use flank attacks to sneak attack the yakuza.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the yakuza can flank her (and thus sneak attack her).

At 8th level, the yakuza gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps.

If the yakuza has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant the ability and determine the character's uncanny dodge ability on that basis.

Defensive Roll (Ex): A yakuza can roll with a potentially lethal blow to take less damage from it.

Once per day, when a yakuza would be reduced to 0 hit points or less by damage in combat (from a weapon or other blow, not a spell or special ability), the yakuza can attempt to roll with the damage.

She makes a Reflex saving throw (DC = damage dealt) and, if she's successful, she takes only half damage from the blow.

She must be aware of the attack and able to react to it in order to execute her defensive roll—if she is denied her Dexterity bonus to AC, she can't roll.

Since this effect would not normally allow a character to make a Reflex save for half damage, the yakuza's evasion ability does not apply to the defensive roll.

Improved Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level and above, a yakuza can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility.

If the yakuza makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage.

Even if she fails her saving throw, she takes only half damage.

The yakuza can use improved evasion only if she is wearing light armor or no armor.

Yakuza Knowledge (Ex): A yakuza, if she's doing her job, knows everything that goes on in her "territory", and a lot about what goes on outside it.

A yakuza may make a special yakuza knowledge check with a bonus equal to her class level + her Intelligence modifier to see whether she knows some relevant information about local people or places.

The yakuza may not take 10 or take 20 on this check; this sort of knowledge is essentially random.

The DM will determine the Difficulty Class of the check by referring to the table below.

DC	Type of Knowledge	Examples
5	Common, known by at least a substantial minority of the local population.	A local mayor's reputation for drinking; a neighborhood's reputation for criminal activity.
15	Uncommon but available, known by only a few people in the area.	A local shaman's shady past; a daimyo's family history.
20	Obscure, known by a few, hard to come by.	A samurai's family history, the location and identity of a reliable purchaser of stolen goods.
25	Extremely obscure, known by very few, possibly forgotten by most who once knew it, possibly known only by those who don't understand the significance of the knowledge.	A mighty wu jen's birth name; key figures in the local underworld.

Leadership: At 5th level, a yakuza gains the Leadership feat for free.

Yakuza belong to an adoptive family, and can call on other members of their families for assistance.

A yakuza's followers may be rogues as well as warriors, experts, or commoners.

If the yakuza already has the Leadership feat, she gains a permanent +2 bonus on her Leadership score.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 10th level, a yakuza gains the ability to wriggle free from magical effects that would otherwise control or compel her.

If a yakuza with slippery mind is affected by magic and fails her saving throw, 1 round later she can attempt her saving throw again.

She only gets this one extra chance to succeed at her saving throw.

TABLE 3-18: THE YAKUZA

PLANAR HANDBOOK (3.5)

ARDENT DILETTANTE

The breeze that caresses the face brings with it a cooling balm and scent traces that trigger memories of old.

The flavor of the fruit plucked from the tree is tart but sweet, and the sticky juice explodes in the mouth with a texture just as important as taste.

The voices of the choir are rough but earnest, and they speak of experiences hidden in the melody that only a sensate can separate from the mix and appreciate.

Anyone can become an ardent dilettante.

All it takes is a diversity of interests and a moderate level of ability in one skill.

Bards and rogues are the most common among the members, but characters of all classes can find the calling of the ardent dilettante to their liking.

However, advancing beyond 3rd level in the prestige class requires a larger suite of skills, abilities, and experiences and offers commensurately greater rewards.

Only multiclass characters can achieve the highest levels of membership.

NPC ardent dilettantes can be found in any walk of life.

Those who merely dabble in the class often focus on hedonistic pleasure.

More devoted ardent dilettantes tend to travel widely and enjoy exploring or finding new challenges.

They make ideal cohorts, allies, or employers of planar adventurers.

NPC ardent dilettantes can make equally viable villains, for a quest for new sensations can lead down a very cruel and dark path.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

The ardent dilettante prestige class has increasingly more difficult requirements as a character advances in level.

To qualify to become a 1st-level ardent dilettante, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Any skill 8 ranks, any other five skills 1 rank in each.

Special: Must recount five experiences, one for each of the different senses, at a festhall or sensorium run by the Society of Sensation.

To qualify to become a 4th-level ardent dilettante, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Perform (any single skill) 8 ranks, any other skill 5 ranks, any other five skills 1 rank in each.

Special: Proficiency with at least two martial weapons.

Spells: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane or divine spells.

To qualify to become a 7th-level ardent dilettante, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Perform (any single skill) 8 ranks, any Strength-based skill 5 ranks, any Dexterity-based skill 5 ranks, any other three skills 1 rank in each.

Special: Proficiency with at least four martial weapons and one exotic weapon.

Spells: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells and 1st-level divine spells.

Special: The character must have visited three different planes.

To qualify to become a 10th-level ardent dilettante, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Perform (any single skill) 8 ranks, any Strength-based skill 5 ranks, any Dexterity-based skill 5 ranks, any Constitution-based skill 5 ranks, any Intelligence- or Wisdom-based skill 5 ranks.

Special: Proficiency with at least four martial weapons and one exotic weapon.

Spells: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells and 1st-level divine spells.

Special: The character must have visited six different planes.

Special: The character must have died and returned to life or unlife.

CLASS SKILLS

All skills are class skills for the ardent dilettante.

This includes all skills listed in the Player's Handbook, as well as all skills described in other DUNGEONS & DRAGONS supplements.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the ardent dilettante prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Ardent dilettantes gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each ardent dilettante level after 1st, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved undead turning, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an ardent dilettante, the player must decide to which class to add each ardent dilettante level for determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Heightened Senses (Su): An ardent dilettante gains a competence bonus on Listen, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot checks equal to 1 + one-half her class level.

Lore: An ardent dilettante hears many intriguing rumors and learns odd facts while traveling.

She may make a special lore check (1d20 + her ardent dilettante level + her Int modifier) to see whether she knows some relevant information about a notable person, place, or thing.

This ability is otherwise identical to the bardic knowledge ability (see page 28 of the Player's Handbook).

If an ardent dilettante has a similar ability from another class (such as bard or loremaster), her ardent dilettante levels stack with those class levels for determining the success of the lore check.

Enthrall (Sp): Starting at 2nd level, an ardent dilettante can recount one of her many adventures or experiences, capturing the attention of an audience as with an enthrall spell.

An ardent dilettante can use this ability once per day for every two class levels she has.

Caster level equals character level; save DC 12 + Cha modifier.

Joie de Vivre (Sp): An ardent dilettante of 3rd level or higher takes such obvious pleasure in life that she can influence those around her to feel the same way, as with a good hope spell.

An ardent dilettante can use this ability once per day for every three class levels she has.

Caster level equals character level; save DC 12 + Cha modifier.

Bonus Feat: At 4th level, 7th level, and 10th level, an ardent dilettante gains a bonus feat.

She must meet the prerequisites for the feat she selects.

Sense Link (Sp): At 4th level, an ardent dilettante becomes able to establish a link with another creature within 30 feet, gaining the benefit of a clairaudience/clairvoyance spell centered on that creature's position.

Once the link is established, distance is not a factor (though it works only on the plane you and the target currently occupy).

Caster level equals ardent dilettante level; save DC 13 + Cha modifier.

Scent (Ex): At 5th level, an ardent dilettante's sense of smell becomes so acute that she gains the scent special quality (see page 314 of the Monster Manual).

Seen It Before (Su): Beginning at 6th level, an ardent dilettante can make a Will save to identify an illusion by perceiving it with any of her senses, even if the illusion provides sensory input for that sense.

The DM should make this save in secret, to avoid alerting players that the character is witnessing an illusion.

If the save fails, the ardent dilettante doesn't get another one until she interacts with the illusion.

See It Again (Su): Once per day, when targeted by or in the area of a spell effect, an ardent dilettante of 8th level or higher can use her next action (if it is made within 1 round of the casting) to duplicate the casting of the spell, with all aspects identical.

For instance, an ardent dilettante subjected to a dominate person spell cast by a 12th-level sorcerer can use an identical dominate person effect in the next round.

The duplicated effect has the same save DC, range, and duration as if the original caster had cast it.

The ardent dilettante automatically knows all relevant information about the spell in question (its name, effect, save DC, and so on).

Blindsense (Ex): At 9th level, an ardent dilettante's senses become so attuned to her surroundings that she gains blindsense out to 10 feet.

Death Holds No Mysteries (Su): When a 10th-level ardent dilettante is brought back from the dead by such magic as raise dead and resurrection, the ardent dilettante does not lose a level.

ASTRAL DANCER

The Astral Plane is a place of no gravity; moving through it is more like flying with perfect maneuverability, like walking on air.

Travelers quickly learn to change directions by mentally visualizing solid footing and pivoting on it.

To longtime inhabitants of the Astral Plane, ignoring the lack of gravity eventually becomes second nature.

But a few skilled combatants learn to take advantage of that situation.

Some fighters, barbarians, and rangers make decent astral dancers, but the best begin as monks or rogues.

Their practiced grace enables them to leap from vantage to vantage quickly, and to shift balance instinctively.

Spellcasters can eventually master the art of the astral dancer, but for them it pays off only in a certain improvement in their ability to deliver melee touch spells.

Astral dancers work quite well alone, but they are truly formidable in numbers.

The art is sometimes found among githzerai monks, and githzerai rakkma (hunting parties that seek out and kill mind flayers) occasionally include astral dancers.

The most common practitioners are githyanki and buommans (see Chapter 1), natives of the Astral Plane who learn to take every advantage that the environment provides them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an astral dancer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Balance 8 ranks, Jump 8 ranks, Tumble 8 ranks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

CLASS SKILLS

The astral dancer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the astral dancer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Astral dancers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Relative Altitude (Ex): An astral dancer is experienced at combating foes in no-gravity environments.

While on the Astral Plane (or any other plane or region without gravity), she is always considered to have "higher ground" over her opponent and thus gains a +1 bonus on melee attack rolls.

Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, an astral dancer can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save.

See the monk class feature on page 41 of the Player's Handbook.

Initially, an astral dancer's evasion ability is only effective while she is on a plane with no gravity.

At 4th level and higher, an astral dancer can use her evasion ability in all environments, regardless of gravity.

Improved Maneuverability (Ex): At 3rd level, an astral dancer begins developing more control over her "flight" in no-gravity situations.

When she makes a double move on a plane with the "no gravity" trait (such as the Astral Plane), an astral dancer's maneuverability drops to good (rather than to average).

When she moves four times her speed on the Astral Plane (running, essentially), her maneuverability drops to poor (rather than to clumsy).

At 9th level, an astral dancer retains her perfect maneuverability even when she makes a double move, and her maneuverability drops only to average when she moves at up to four times her speed.

Astral Dodge (Ex): At 5th level, an astral dancer becomes so adept at reacting to attacks that she gains a +2 dodge bonus to her Armor Class when in a no-gravity environment (or a +1 dodge bonus to her Armor Class when in an environment with gravity).

At 10th level, this bonus increases to +4 in a no-gravity environment (or +2 in an environment with gravity).

Improved Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 6th level, an astral dancer can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save and take only half damage on a failed save.

See the monk class feature on page 42 of the Player's Handbook.

Initially, an astral dancer's improved evasion ability is only effective while she is on a plane with no gravity.

At 8th level and higher, an astral dancer can use her improved evasion ability in all environments, regardless of gravity.

Astral Agility (Ex): At 7th level and higher, an astral dancer's can use her agility and athleticism to adjust her opponent's position while in a no-gravity environment. Once per round as a move action, an astral dancer can attempt to switch places with an adjacent creature.

The adjacent creature must be the same size as or smaller than the astral dancer, and it can resist the attempt by succeeding on an opposed Intelligence check against the astral dancer.

The astral dancer adds her class level to her roll (if the target creature is also an astral dancer, it adds its class level as well); if she wins, she moves into the target's space, and the target moves into her now-vacated space.

The movement caused by this ability does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

Lightning Speed (Ex): At 10th level, an astral dancer's ability to move through the Astral Plane with but a thought becomes so finely tuned that those observing her cannot react as she passes by.

The character's movement while on the Astral Plane (or a similar no-gravity environment) never provokes attacks of opportunity.

CHAOTICIAN

The multiverse is a wonder, and the only prediction one can make is that it is unpredictable.

The amazing spontaneity of reality is the foundation upon which chaoticians act.

Instead of being tiresome and translucent, the cosmos is marvelous and mysterious.

Chaoticians seek to enjoy the beauty of the unpredictable, and by seeking to emulate the philosophy of chaos in their actions, they create a fabulous journey through life in which nothing is ever a bore.

Any character who finds inspiration in disorder is a potential candidate for this prestige class, though members of spellcasting classes are less likely to become chaoticians due to their loss of increased spellcasting ability.

Sometimes, NPC chaoticians are discovered lurking in the shadows of a city street, seemingly lost in a confused veil of their own imagination.

In fact, they are gazing at the world in its undisguised state: as pure chaos.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a chaotician, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Base Fort Save Bonus: +2.

Base Reflex Save Bonus: +2.

Base Will Save Bonus: +2.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

CLASS SKILLS

The chaotician's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the chaotician prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Chaoticians are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Chaotic Contagion (Su): A chaotician can attempt to infect a target with chaotic impulses that disrupt the target's ability to defend against the chaotician.

If the chaotician makes a successful melee touch attack against the target, the target creature takes a –2 penalty to his Armor Class against attacks made by the chaotician, a –2 penalty on saves made to resist spells or abilities of the chaotician, and a –2 penalty on skill checks opposed by the chaotician.

A successful Will save (DC 10 + chaotician's class level + chaotician's Cha modifier) negates the effect and gives the target immunity to similar attacks by that chaotician for 24 hours.

This effect lasts for 1 hour per class level.

A chaotician can use this ability a number of times per day equal to his class level.

Scofflaw (Su): Divinations cast by lawful characters are difficult to perform on chaoticians.

This ability functions much like a nonetection spell, except that it is useful for shielding a chaotician only against creatures of lawful alignment.

Such creatures must succeed on a caster level check against a DC of 15 + the chaotician's class level + his Cha bonus (if any) to successfully employ a divination against a chaotician.

This ability can be suppressed or resumed as a free action.

Anarchic Grace (Su): A 2nd-level chaotician accepts that randomness underlies all reality.

Once per day, the chaotician can tap into this randomness to make his movements and posture unpredictable.

This effect results in attackers having a 50% miss chance on all their attacks.

Even true seeing and similar effects can't offset this ability.

Activating the effect is a free action, and it lasts for a number of rounds equal to the chaotician's class level.

When it ends, the chaotician becomes fatigued for 1 minute.

At 4th level and higher, a chaotician can use this ability twice per day.

Babble (Su): Once per day, chaotician of 3rd level or higher can generate a 10-foot-radius emanation that causes all sounds in the area to turn into garbled, cacophonous, and unintelligible noise.

Sounds that issue from, enter, or pass through the area are altered and made unrecognizable as a natural sound.

Within this area, verbal communication is impossible.

Even something as simple as a shout of surprise is turned into a warped and alien sound.

Spells with verbal components cannot be cast.

Scrolls and other magic items that require a verbal component to be activated do not function.

Spells and items that rely on sound do not function.

Sonic damage has no effect.

Clarity of Confusion (Su): Starting at 3rd level, a chaotician gains a +2 insight bonus on saves against illusion (pattern) spells, enchantment (compulsion) spells, and spells with the lawful descriptor.

Destiny's Arbiter (Su): A 5th-level chaotician is a friend of chaos and can summon it.

Once per day as a free action, the character can either reroll one roll he just made, or force another creature to reroll a result the chaotician does not like.

A chaotician must use this ability immediately after the result of the roll is known.

If he wants to force another creature to reroll a result, the chaotician must be able to see the other creature, and it must be within 60 feet of the chaotician.

Whether rerolling his own roll or forcing another to reroll, the results of the second roll stand.

CIPHER ADEPT

When one action follows the next seamlessly and smoothly, without hesitation and without anxiety, oneness with the multiverse is touched upon, however briefly.

When eloquence flows from the pen without effort, solutions to problems bubble up from untapped mental reservoirs without strain.

When the blade or spell passes from one enemy to the next in perfect seamless integration, the cipher adept knows bliss—no, the cipher adept is bliss.

Barbarians, sorcerers, fighters, and rogues are most likely to choose this class.

Their goal-oriented nature makes them open to the notion that there is a “best way” to perform a particular task and a “path of least resistance” for them to follow.

Wizards, druids, bards, clerics, and paladins generally do not make good cipher adepts.

They spend their lives acquiring knowledge, learning the “proper” way to perform certain acts, and believing that personal advancement comes from strictly following a particular code or system of behavior.

As NPCs, cipher adepts can be found everywhere, even in the most unlikely places.

Their belief in the power of serendipity often leads them to wander into locations that most people would consider too dangerous or unprofitable.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cipher adept, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Neutral.

Skills: Balance 5 ranks, Listen 10 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Agile, Dodge, Improved Initiative.

CLASS SKILLS

The cipher adept's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Move Silently (Dex), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the cipher adept prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cipher adepts gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Improved Unarmed Strike: A cipher adept instinctively knows how to use her body as a weapon.

At 1st level, she gains Improved Unarmed Strike as a bonus feat.

Strike the Weak Spot (Ex): As a standard action, a cipher adept can attack an unattended object at what she perceives to be its weakest point.

If she hits, she may attempt a Concentration check (DC 10 + object's hardness).

If this check succeeds, she can ignore the object's hardness when calculating damage for this attack.

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level, a cipher adept gains evasion.

If exposed to any effect that normally allows her to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage, she takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

The evasion ability can be used only if the cipher is wearing light armor or no armor.

Combat Instinct (Ex): At 3rd level, a cipher adept gains a +1 insight bonus to her Armor Class and on initiative checks.

This bonus increases to +2 at 6th level and to +3 at 9th level. Bonus Feat: At 4th level and 8th level, a cipher adept gets a bonus feat.

Each bonus feat must be selected from the following list, and the cipher adept must meet all the prerequisites of the feat to select it: Acrobatic, Alertness, Animal Affinity, Combat Reflexes, Deft Hands, Improved Critical, Improved Disarm, Improved Sunder, Lightning Reflexes, Mobility, Nimble Fingers, Precise Shot, Self-Sufficient, Spring Attack.

Combination Strike (Ex): At 5th level, a cipher adept's speed and reflexes in combat allow her to follow up a devastating attack with a secondary maneuver.

If she confirms a critical hit on a melee attack, she may immediately attempt a disarm or sunder attempt against the same opponent as a free action.

This disarm or sunder attempt provokes attacks of opportunity as normal unless the cipher adept has the appropriate feat.

Improved Evasion (Ex): At 7th level, a cipher adept gains improved evasion.

This ability works like evasion, except that while the cipher adept still takes no damage on a successful Reflex saving throw against attacks such as a dragon's breath weapon or a fireball, she henceforth takes only half damage on a failed save.

A helpless cipher adept (such as one who is unconscious or paralyzed) does not gain the benefit of improved evasion.

Move Without Barriers (Su): At 10th level, a cipher adept becomes able to step into the Ethereal Plane for short periods of time.

The character can become ethereal for a number of rounds per day equal to 1 + her Wis modifier (minimum 1).

These rounds need not be consecutive.

This ability otherwise functions as the ethereal jaunt spell.

DEFIANT

Even among the zealous Athar, a special few are regarded with awe and respect for their dedication to the cause.

These individuals, called defiants, once worshiped divine beings for power but turned from the path.

They now take the teaching of the Athar to heart in a way that grants them tremendous powers against those who claim to wield divine might.

Clerics who are not affiliated with a particular deity make good defiants, as do druids, monks, rangers, and other individuals who live their lives in passionate dedication to a set of beliefs.

Paladins and clerics who lose faith in their patron deities may become defiants, particularly if they have come to question the validity of their former benefactor's claim to the title of "god".

As NPCs, defiants work to shake the populace's belief in the gods.

They take any opportunity to prove that the deities that most people worship are actually only mortals with access to incredible powers.

They disrupt religious ceremonies, engage in activities that draw divinity into question, and harangue well-known servants of the gods.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a defiant, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Will Save Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Special: Defiants cannot worship any deity or have one as a patron.

Any character who has any connection to a god, demigod, or other divine entity must renounce that connection before taking a level in this prestige class.

A paladin or cleric of a specific god cannot become a defiant until the character renounces all belief and faith in the deity, becoming an ex-cleric or ex-paladin and losing all spells and class features except for armor and shield proficiencies and proficiency with simple weapons.

This restriction does not affect clerics who worship a cause or a nonpersonified source of divine magic.

CLASS SKILLS

The defiant's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the defiant prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Defiants gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spell Resistance (Su): A defiant gains spell resistance equal to 15 + class level against all divine mind-affecting spells.

He cannot voluntarily lower this spell resistance.

This benefit does not stack with other sources of spell resistance.

When a defiant is the target of a divine mind-affecting spell, he uses his highest spell resistance value.

Divine Resistance (Su): At 2nd level and higher, a defiant adds his Charisma modifier (if positive) to his saving throws against divine spells.

Divine Damage Immunity (Su): At 3rd level, a defiant gains immunity to damage from divine power, such as that dealt by a flame strike spell.

Divine Cancellation (Ex): At 4th level, a defiant learns how to counterspell divine spells without casting a spell.

The defiant must ready an action to counterspell (as normal), but need not identify the spell with Spellcraft.

Treat this ability as if the defiant were using dispel magic to counter the spell, at a caster level of 5 + the defiant's class level.

A defiant can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Charisma bonus (minimum 1).

Aligned Strike (Su): A defiant of 5th level or higher can, with a touch, align a weapon or natural weapon so that it is treated as of a specific alignment for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

The defiant can choose any alignment (chaotic, evil, good, or lawful), even if that alignment opposes his own.

He may not use this ability on any weapon that already has an alignment.

He can use this ability once per day at 5th level and twice per day at 10th level.

Each use lasts for a number of minutes equal to his class level.

Divine Prevention (Su): Once per day, a defiant of 6th level or higher can use a standard action to bestow temporary spell resistance (15 + class level) upon a single target.

The spell resistance affects only the next divine spell targeted at the subject, even a beneficial spell such as bless or cure light wounds.

If the target has not used the spell resistance within 24 hours, it fades.

If the target is unwilling, the defiant must make a successful touch attack as a standard action.

If the attack succeeds, the target must attempt a Will saving throw (DC 10 + defiant's class level + defiant's Cha modifier).

If the saving throw fails, the spell resistance takes effect.

Nondetection (Su): At 7th level, a defiant gains the continuous benefit of a nondetection spell as though cast by a sorcerer of a level equal to the defiant's class level.

The DC of any attempt to break through the effect is equal to 15 + the defiant's class level.

A defiant can choose to suppress this ability.

Suppressing or reestablishing it is a free action.

Divine Retribution (Su): At 8th level, a defiant expands the versatility of his divine cancellation ability.

If he successfully counters a divine spell, the defiant may cause the spell to rebound at the original caster instead of causing it to fail.

This ability can be used only against divine spells that target the defiant, not spells that affect an area or those that target another creature.

Divine Interference (Su): At 9th level, a defiant's connection to the Great Unknown becomes so strong that he generates a field that interferes with all divine spellcasting.

Any spellcaster within 30 feet of the defiant must succeed on a Concentration check (DC 15 + defiant's class level + spell level) in order to successfully cast a divine spell.

If the check fails, the spell fails and is lost.

A defiant cannot choose to suppress this ability.

Divine Disavowal (Su): At 10th level, a defiant's spell resistance extends to cover all divine spells.

He cannot voluntarily lower this spell resistance.

This benefit does not stack with other sources of spell resistance.

When a defiant is the target of a divine spell, he uses his highest spell resistance value.

FALLEN CLERICS

Clerics who have turned away from their deities make the best defiants.

They have heard the lies, and even believed them for a time, which makes them extremely effective at speaking out against their previous beliefs.

A cleric who worshiped a specific deity (as opposed to an alignment, cause, or philosophy) before taking a level in the defiant prestige class can immediately exchange up to nine of his cleric class levels in exchange for an equal number of defiant levels.

For example, a 7th-level cleric/1st-level fighter who takes a level of defiant can exchange all his cleric levels for defiant levels, becoming a 1st-level fighter/8th-level defiant.

His skill ranks remain the same (even though his class skill list changes), and future skill points gained are spent using only the character's current class skill lists.

This is likely a profitable trade for an ex-cleric, since he has given up his cleric class features in order to qualify for the defiant class.

In addition, the character gains extra benefits based on the number of cleric levels traded in.

These benefits are cumulative.

One or More Levels: The defiant can heal his own wounds as a supernatural ability.

Each day, he can heal a number of points of damage equal to his defiant class level × his Cha modifier, and he can spread this healing out among several uses.

Three or More Levels: The defiant can imbue himself with enhanced strength, health, insight, or force of personality three times per day as a supernatural ability.

He gains a +4 enhancement bonus to Strength, Constitution, Wisdom, or Charisma for a number of minutes equal to his defiant class level.

Five or More Levels: Once per day, the defiant can grant himself the supernatural ability to speak and understand the language of any intelligent creature.

This ability lasts for 1 hour and otherwise functions like the tongues spell.

Seven or More Levels: The defiant can use dismissal as a spell-like ability twice per day.

Nine or More Levels: The defiant can use plane shift as a spell-like ability three times per day.

EX-DEFIANTS

Being a defiant means believing in and practicing a strict policy of nonworship.

A true defiant will never do any of the following:

- Use the name of any deity as part of an oath or curse. (The Athar do sometimes use the term “Great Unknown” in this manner).
- Use a holy symbol or holy water for any purpose. (This includes symbols of any deity or water of any alignment).
- Read or quote from any holy books.
- Be the willing subject of a spell cast by a cleric, paladin, or other divine spellcaster who claims to draw her power from any specific deity.

Performing these actions, or other similar activities, causes the defiant to lose all special abilities granted by this prestige class.

He cannot thereafter gain levels as a defiant until he atones (see the atonement spell description, page 201 of the Player’s Handbook, bearing in mind that the atonement must be cast by an active Athar in the name of the Great Unknown).

DOOMLORD

The walls of existence are tumbling down.

Though the chinks and cracks may not be obvious to all, knowledge of their continual collapse is the impetus to the doomlord’s worldview.

Nothing can prevent this collapse—so why not join in, and exult in the eventual end of all?

A doomlord’s life holds the greatest appeal for fighters and barbarians who enjoy smashing and destroying.

Some rogues, rangers, and clerics, especially those devoted to deities with the Destruction or Death domains, join the ranks of the faction.

NPC doomlords include soldiers, blackguards, anarchists, and just about anyone who kills people or breaks objects. They make excellent villains or interesting allies because they can be of any alignment.

They act with a focus on entropy, not evil.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a doomlord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Feats: Improved Sunder, Weapon Focus (any sword).

Special: Must sunder a weapon, scatter 500 gp into a crowd, and destroy a building.

These acts must be witnessed or verified by a member of the Doomguard.

CLASS SKILLS

The doomlord’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Disable Device (Int), Jump (Str), Knowledge (architecture and engineering) (Int), Listen (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the doomlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Doomlords gain proficiency with all martial weapons.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each even-numbered doomlord level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (such as improved undead turning, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a doomlord, the player must decide to which class to add each doomlord level for determining spells per day, spells known, and caster level.

Entropic Blow (Su): As a vessel of entropy, a doomlord can channel destructive energy, dealing extra damage with a melee attack.

He adds his Charisma bonus to his attack roll and deals an extra 2 points of damage per doomlord level.

The entropic blow is especially good at unraveling that which binds nonliving matter together.

It automatically ignores hardness, as well as any damage reduction possessed by constructs or undead (regardless of the source of the damage reduction).

A doomlord may use his entropic blow once per day at 1st level, twice per day at 5th level, and three times per day at 10th level, but no more than once per round.

Use of the entropic blow must be declared before the attack is made.

If the attack misses, the blow is wasted.

Healing Resistance (Ex): As proof of his dedication to entropy, a doomlord becomes resistant to healing magic.

Conjuration (healing) spells and effects used on a doomlord heal only half the normal amount of damage.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd, 6th, and 10th level, a doomlord gains a bonus feat.

These bonus feats must be drawn from the following list: Cleave, Diehard, Endurance, Great Cleave, Improved Critical, and Toughness.

The doomlord must still meet all prerequisites for the bonus feat.

Destructive Expertise (Ex): As agents of destruction, 2nd-level doomlords learn to promote entropy by the most efficient means.

The doomlord may add half his class level as a bonus on Disable Device and Knowledge (architecture and engineering) checks when attempting to take apart or disable traps and other objects.

Negative Adaptation (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a doomlord does not lose hit points or need to make Fortitude saves due to being in a negative-dominant environment.

Body or Soul (Ex): As he gains power, a doomlord learns either to strengthen his body against the forces of decay or to empower his soul to better arm himself for battle.

At 4th level and again at 8th level, a doomlord can increase either his Constitution score or his Charisma score by 1.

He need not choose the same ability score each time.

ELEMENTAL WARRIOR

The elemental warrior sees that great strength comes from focusing on the most basic aspects of reality.

The sages say that the worlds are formed through combinations of fire, water, earth, and air, and that any problem can be overcome with the correct application of these forces.

The elemental warrior becomes attuned to one of these building blocks of reality, channeling its power to great effect.

Fighters, monks, paladins, and barbarians make the best elemental warriors.

This prestige class is focused on fighting and applying the elements in just the right way to bring down even the toughest adversary.

Bards, rogues, rangers, and druids also may find this class useful if they often find themselves involved in close combat; a few levels of elemental warrior give them access to a range of weapons and defenses that will make them much more versatile.

NPC elemental warriors are usually fighters or mercenaries of some sort.

They may be of any alignment, but they all believe that it is best to be prepared for anything and that with the elements themselves at their fingertips, they have everything they need to overcome any foe.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an elemental warrior, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Knowledge (the planes) 5 ranks.

Special: The character must have traveled to at least one of the Elemental Planes.

CLASS SKILLS

The elemental warrior's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal

Unmaking Magic (Sp): At 7th level, a doomlord gains the ability to use dispel magic three times per day.

His caster level is equal to his class level.

The doomlord may add his Charisma bonus (if any) to his dispel checks, and he gains an additional +5 bonus when attempting to dispel a permanency spell.

Disintegrate (Sp): Once per day as a full-round action, a doomlord of 9th level or higher can use disintegrate as a sorcerer of a level equal to the doomlord's character level. The save DC is 16 + his Cha modifier.

(Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the elemental warrior prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Elemental warriors gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Elemental Affinity (Ex): An elemental warrior is attuned to one of the Elemental Planes, which imbues her with certain related abilities.

At 1st level, she selects one of the four elements (air, earth, fire, or water) as the one for which she has an affinity.

She immediately gains the ability to speak (and, if she is literate, to read and write) the language associated with her chosen element (Auran, Terran, Ignan, or Aquan, respectively).

She also gains resistance 10 to a particular energy type based on her chosen element (electricity, acid, fire, or cold, respectively).

Elemental Manifestation (Su): An elemental warrior of 2nd level or higher can use a standard action to cause her body to manifest aspects of her chosen element.

The effect lasts for 1 minute and may be used a number of times per day equal to her class level.

It can be dismissed as a free action.

Air: Brisk winds whip around the elemental warrior's body. All ranged attacks against her have a 20% miss chance.

Earth: The elemental warrior's skin is partially sheathed in rocky hide.

Her natural armor bonus increases by 3.

Fire: A sheath of flame envelops the elemental warrior.

Any opponent who lands a successful melee attack against her takes 1d6 points of fire damage.

Creatures wielding reach weapons, such as longswords, do not take this damage.

Water: The elemental warrior becomes coated in water. She gains damage reduction 3/piercing.

Elemental Weapon (Su): At 3rd level and higher, an elemental warrior can, as a move action, imbue any melee weapon she wields with the energy of her chosen element. The imbued weapon deals an extra 2d6 points of energy damage on each hit.

The effect lasts for 1 minute and may be dismissed as a free action.

She can use this ability a number of times per day equal to her class level.

If the weapon already has a magical effect that allows it to deal energy damage, that effect is suppressed for the duration of the elemental weapon effect.

When an elemental warrior reaches 5th level, this ability improves.

The extra damage remains the same, but on a successful critical hit, the weapon releases a burst of energy that deals even more energy damage of the same type (for a total of 6d6).

The additional damage is 4d6 points for weapons with a $\times 2$ critical multiplier, 6d6 points for weapons with a $\times 3$ critical multiplier, or 8d6 for weapons with a $\times 4$ critical multiplier.

Elemental Movement (Su): At 4th level, an elemental warrior gains a special movement property based on her chosen element.

Air: The elemental warrior can fly at a speed of 20 feet (perfect maneuverability).

If the character wears medium or heavy armor or carries a medium or heavy load, she can't use this ability.

Earth: The elemental warrior gains a burrow speed of 30 feet (or equal to her base land speed, whichever is lower).

Fire: The elemental warrior's base land speed increases by 10 feet.

This benefit stacks with all other speed increases.

If the elemental warrior wears heavy armor or carries a heavy load, she loses this benefit.

Water: The elemental warrior gains a swim speed of 30 feet (or equal to her base land speed, whichever is lower). She also gains the ability to breathe water.

At 4th level, elemental warriors of all kinds also gain the ability to use plane shift once per day to reach their chosen Elemental Plane (or from that Elemental Plane to the Material Plane).

Elemental Strike (Su): Once per day, a 5th-level elemental warrior can channel her chosen element to deal a devastating melee touch attack.

The attack requires a standard action to deliver; if it hits, it affects its target as noted below.

No save is allowed against the damage dealt by the attack, but a successful Fortitude save negates the secondary effect. The save DC for these effects is 15 + the elemental warrior's Con modifier.

Air: Target takes 10d6 points of bludgeoning damage from a sudden gust of wind and is knocked prone (Fort save negates knockdown).

Earth: Target takes 10d6 points of bludgeoning damage from the crushing touch attack and is pushed back 10 feet as if bull rushed (Fort save negates push).

Fire: Target takes 10d6 points of fire damage and catches on fire for 1d4 rounds (Fort save negates catching on fire).

Water: Target takes 10d6 points of damage as moisture is drawn from its body and becomes nauseated for 1 round (Fort save negates nausea).

BARBARIAN As described in the Player's Handbook, barbarians are outsiders—and this is no less true in the lands of Oriental Adventures.

Barbarian characters in Rokugan might include certain Unicorn clan warriors, Yabanjin from the cold northern steppes, Ujik-hai from the lands of the Burning Sands, or nezumi "bushi".

In other campaign settings, steppe nomads, jungle-dwelling tribes, and wild korobokurus are all barbarians. Whatever their origins, barbarians are likely to use strange weapons, wear outlandish clothing and armor, speak foreign languages, and fumble through the rigid and ritualized formalities of "civilized" culture.

Adventures: As described in the Player's Handbook, adventuring is the best way for a barbarian character—whatever his origin—to find a place in civilized society. Though few barbarians will ever earn the recognition of a daimyo or any kind of social status, with an adventuring party a barbarian can feel like an equal among samurai and shugenjas.

For some barbarians, that is enough; others quest after the impossible, hoping by the greatness of their deeds to win a place among the nobility.

Background: Barbarians, by definition, come from cultures outside the centers of civilization.

Barbarian adventurers often find their way to the kingdoms and empires because of hard times in their home lands, such as famine or invasion.

In Rokugan, Unicorn clan barbarians may wander the Empire simply because they love to travel, and find themselves drawn into adventure after adventure along the way.

Races: In Rokugan, humans of the Unicorn clan, humans from foreign lands, and nezumi are the most likely races to adopt the barbarian class.

In addition to these barbarian peoples, goblins and ogres of the Shadowlands may be barbarians.

In other campaign settings, korobokurus are often barbarians, while most other barbarians are human.

Other Classes: In Rokugan, Unicorn clan barbarians consider themselves to be samurai, and view themselves with the same haughty pride that the samurai do, regarding only shugenjas as near-equals.

Other barbarians, and all barbarians in other campaign settings, either look up to the noble samurai and shugenjas, or regard them as weaklings softened by the comforts of civilization.

Barbarians are most comfortable with rangers, who often share their rough edges, or rogues.

Though most barbarian societies include sorcerers, shamans, or adepts, barbarians generally mistrust shugenjas and other spellcasters until they've proven themselves worthy of trust.

Game Rule Information: As described in the Player's Handbook.

In Rokugan, barbarians often wear armor and use weapons and other equipment that is not native to the civilized Empire.

Use the normal equipment tables in the Player's Handbook for such gear.

FIGHTER Fighters in Oriental Adventures are experienced soldiers, bandit leaders, battle-hardened mercenaries, grasping warlords—any trained warrior who, for reasons of personal honor or lowly birth, does not live up to the high standards of the samurai.

The code of bushido does not apply to ordinary fighters. Ronin are fighters, as are many professional soldiers.

In Rokugan, even some clan samurai—particularly Scorpions who have no use for bushido—are fighters as well.

Adventures: Most fighters adventure for the sake of acquiring power and wealth.

A few hope to follow the example of the famous Rokugani ronin Ginawa (now Akodo Ginawa), who saved Emperor Toturi during the Battle at Oblivion's Gate and was rewarded with an honored place among the clans.

Background: Ronins fall into two categories: "Clan ronins" are members of the great clans who have fallen out of favor with their lord.

The most common reason for this is somehow allowing the lord to die—either in battle or under an assassin's blade.

Clan ronins cling to the hope of regaining their lost honor. "True ronins" have never belonged to one of the clans, usually coming from a ronin family.

Other fighters in Rokugan include some Scorpion bushi, who usually do not meet the alignment restriction of the samurai class, and mercenaries, including many members of the Yoritomo family.

Fighters in other campaign settings generally follow the guidelines in the Player's Handbook.

Races: In Rokugan, humans are the most common fighters, but nezumi and Shadowlands creatures can become fighters as well.

A ratling fighter is unusually well trained for his species, and may have studied with a Crab samurai, for example. In other campaign settings, members of all races may be fighters.

Most hengeyokai fighters are crabs, dogs, foxes, raccoon dogs, or rats in their animal form, and they tend to be tough, with a wild fighting style.

Korobokuru fighters represent the elite of their military (most korobokurus are barbarians).

Spirit folk fighters come from a variety of backgrounds, like humans.

Vanara fighters usually rely on speed over brute strength, but they show tremendous bravery and loyalty in battle.

Other Classes: While honorable samurai in Rokugan might look down upon ordinary fighters, fighters may share that disdain.

Bushido is a crutch, some fighters believe, and they put little faith in those whose lives are dictated by its constraints.

Fighters associate more often with rogues and sorcerers than with samurai and shugenjas.

In other campaign settings, fighters recognize the need for support in the realms of magic and stealth, and work well with shamans, wu jen, rogues, and monks.

Game Rule Information: As described in the Player's Handbook, with the following addition.

Bonus Feats: Prone Attack and Superior Expertise (both described in Chapter 4 of this book) are added to the list of fighter bonus feats.

MONK Monasteries where monk characters are trained in the spiritual and martial arts are far more common in Oriental Adventures than in the world described in the Player's Handbook.

Adventures: Monk adventurers are common, since their beliefs and lifestyle lend themselves to activity in the world.

While some monks devote their time and energy to training samurai in clan dojos, teaching the scriptures in secluded monasteries, or striving to perfect themselves in isolation, many others take their lessons and practice on the road, finding promising students among the ranks of adventurers and even ronin.

After all, who has more need of the teachings of enlightenment than those who are on the front line of the battle against darkness?

And what good is the perfection of discipline if it does not hold up when tested in the real world?

Background: As described in the Player's Handbook, monks usually receive their training either in a monastery or under the mentorship of an individual sensei.

People from all walks of life may find training in monasteries—foundlings or orphans who are raised by the monks, heimin or hinin peasants, samurai nobles, retired generals, spirit folk and hengeyokai, and even the rare ratling, korobokuru, or vanara all may dedicate their lives to enlightenment and learn the spiritual and physical disciplines of a monk.

Whatever their social or racial origin, monks devote their whole loyalty to the path of enlightenment, claiming kinship only with other monks, not with clan or family.

In the Celestial Order of Rokugan's society, monks are equal to the farmer heimin, whatever their birth.

The monks of Rokugan are vigilant champions of enlightenment, opponents of the darkness—whether that darkness is manifested in the Shadowlands or in simple ignorance.

Since the Battle of Oblivion's Gate, the monks of Rokugan have come to realize that their philosophy of withdrawal from the world was not sufficient to protect the world from darkness, and they have adopted a more aggressive strategy of teaching the clans the truths of the Tao.

As a result, the ranks of the monks are swelling, and many samurai and shugenjas are learning at least the basic teachings of Shinsei.

Races: In Rokugan, most monks are human, and a large number are drawn from the Dragon clan.

Nonhuman monks are extremely rare exceptions to the general rule that monasteries are a human establishment.

In other campaign settings, the near-human races (hengeyokai and spirit folk) are much more likely to adopt the monk class than the more wild-natured korobokurus, nezumi, or vanaras.

The nonhuman races do not have monasteries of their own, but train and study in human communities or with a human sensei.

Other Classes: In Rokugan, although monks tend to have different goals and values than members of other classes, they believe that they have an obligation to teach and work among the broader population of the Empire.

They may sometimes approach the task with condescension, but in general they recognize the importance of nonmonks in defending Rokugan from the evil that has nearly destroyed it in the past.

They teach them so that all the people of Rokugan might become enlightened, the better to resist the darkness.

In other campaign settings, monks recognize their interdependence on other characters and tend to cooperate well with members of all other classes.

Game Rule Information: Except as noted below, monks in Oriental Adventures conform to the rules given in the Player's Handbook.

Class Skills: Knowledge (religion) is a class skill for monks.

Weapon Proficiency: Monks are proficient with the following weapons: butterfly sword, club, crossbow (light or heavy), dagger, javelin, jitte, kama, nunchaku, quarterstaff, sai, shuriken, and tonfa.

Monks can use any of the following weapons with their unarmed base attack bonus: butterfly sword, club, jitte, kama, lajatang, nekode, nunchaku, quarterstaff, sai, three-section staff, and tonfa.

Bonus Feats: At 1st, 2nd, and 6th level, a monk can sacrifice a class ability (stunning attack at 1st, Deflect Arrows at 2nd, or Improved Trip at 6th) in order to gain a different bonus martial arts feat.

The monk can choose any feat listed on Table 6-1: Martial Arts Feats, but she must meet all the prerequisites for the feat she selects.

This bonus feat can help a monk qualify for mastery of a martial arts style.

Multiclass Monks: Monks in Oriental Adventures can multiclass and freely return to the monk class.

RANGER Often called scouts or trackers, rangers in Oriental Adventures are warriors with an uncanny connection to the earth and an equally uncanny dedication to warfare against a chosen enemy.

The archetypal ranger in Rokugan is the Hiruma scout: a Crab samurai who knows the Shadowlands like the back of his hand and fights its evil denizens with unmatched skill and ferocity.

Adventures: Rangers may be among the most "adventurous" characters in Oriental Adventures, at least as adventuring is generally understood in DUNGEONS & DRAGONS.

Rangers are more likely than any other character to venture into the wilderness for the express purpose of killing monsters.

Also, they work with armies of samurai and warriors, leading them through dangerous terrain and scouting out enemy positions.

Background: Among the Crab clan of Rokugan, the skills of rangers are taught in a formal school, which prides itself on being an integral part of the Empire's defense against the Shadowlands.

Other rangers undergo more informal training, often under the guidance of a mentor or parent.

Races: In Rokugan, rangers are most commonly found among the Crab (particularly the Hiruma family and its scout school), the Unicorn, and the nezumi.

In other campaign settings, nonhumans often make excellent rangers, due to their close connection with the natural and spirit worlds.

Hengeyokai rangers are often cats, cranes, foxes, hares, monkeys, raccoon dogs, rats, or sparrows in their animal form, and they use the concealment and natural abilities of that form to their advantage in scouting and spying.

Korobokuru rangers are excellent trackers, and they feel a close kinship with the nature spirits around their homes.

Spirit folk rangers are at home in natural surroundings and bring a variety of special abilities to bear to increase their effectiveness.

Vanara rangers use great stealth and agility to make themselves effective scouts and deadly foes of their favored enemies.

Other Classes: In Rokugan, most human rangers view themselves as samurai, regarding other samurai as equals, shugenjas nearly that well, and other classes as somewhere far below their station.

All rangers tend to be pragmatic enough, however, to value the contributions of any member of an adventuring party, no matter their station, and cooperate as equals in an adventuring party, even if social equality is out of the question.

Game Rule Information: As described in the Player's Handbook.

Although rangers can fight with two weapons, few rangers in Rokugan do so.

ROGUE From lower-class street thieves and highway bandits to scheming courtiers and nobles, rogues are common but often nearly invisible in Oriental Adventures. Some appear in far less roguish guises: as officials, diplomats, and envoys (most such characters, however, have the expert or aristocrat NPC classes).

Rogues in Oriental Adventures are no easier to categorize than their standard counterparts, for they are at least as varied in their skills, roles, and backgrounds.

Adventures: Rogues adventure for a wide variety of reasons, but underlying them all is a common thread: Rogues adventure because it serves their personal goals.

Whether those goals are as base as self-advancement and power or as complex as a Scorpion's web of loyalties, rogues' own desires usually spur them into adventure.

Background: Most rogues are self-taught or learn their skills under a shady mentor in a life on the street.

The schools of the Scorpion clan of Rokugan, however—including the Bayushi samurai school and particularly the secretive Shosuro school—specifically train their students in rogue abilities, skills, and techniques.

Scorpion clan rogues, naturally, maintain a high degree of loyalty to each other, while other rogues typically do not trust other rogues any more than absolutely necessary.

Races: Scrounging nezumi are perhaps the quintessential rogues of Rokugan.

Among humans, Scorpions and lower-class peasants and outcasts are the most common rogues.

Rogues are common among the races of the Shadowlands as well.

In other campaign settings, hengeyokai rogues range from stealthy cat and rat burglars to brutish raccoon dog bandits. Spirit folk rogues are typically those who feel alienated from human society because of their spirit ancestry.

Vanara rogues are not usually criminally inclined, but their limitless curiosity often gets them into trouble.

Other Classes: Rogues prefer to be in control of any given situation.

At one extreme, this manifests as a desire to make their own decisions and not be accountable to a leader figure. Rogues with this philosophy work well with anyone who does not try to boss them around.

At the other extreme are rogues who seek to manipulate others to their own advantage.

Given that preference, these rogues are happy to work with members of other classes—as long as those others can be tricked or coerced into doing what the rogue wants them to do.

Fanatical devotees of bushido, like most samurai, can be a problem if they are too smart or strong-willed, and monks with their rigid ways of thinking are difficult to manipulate as well.

In general, rogues enjoy working with rangers, ronins, and even barbarians.

Game Rule Information: As described in the Player's Handbook, except as noted below.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Rogues are proficient with the blowgun, crossbow (hand or light), dagger, punching dagger, dart, kama, light mace, ninja-to, nunchaku, composite shortbow, shortsword, tonfa, and wakizashi.

Medium-size rogues are also proficient with the club, heavy crossbow, heavy mace, morningstar, and quarterstaff.

FATEMAKER

Life is what you make of it.

Your life can be grand, exciting, filled with glory, and long remembered once past—if you choose to make your own fate.

Those who hope luck and happenstance will propel them into a magnificent fortune or endow them with lasting fame are rarely satisfied.

Each morning as they rise, ready to face a new day, fatemakers repeat to themselves the following credo:

“There are two paths to take; one is easy, and that is its only reward”.

Player characters in general are attracted to the fatemaker philosophy, since making your own fate is a primary motivation for adventuring.

Fighters and barbarians tend to play the bully, while the other classes may take a more subtle approach.

NPC fatemakers can be found at the heads of successful ventures or scrambling to reach the head.

Others find success in maintaining collections, doing deeds of good (or bad), or as important functionaries in government.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a fatemaker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Bluff, Diplomacy, or Intimidate 8 ranks; 5 ranks each in the other two skills.

Feats: Skill Focus (Bluff), Skill Focus (Diplomacy), or Skill Focus (Intimidate).

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

CLASS SKILLS

The fatemaker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump

(Str), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (n/a), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Magic Device (Cha). Skill Points at Each Additional Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the fatemaker.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Fatemakers are proficient with all simple weapons, plus the longsword, rapier, sap, short sword, shortbow, and whip.

Fatemakers are proficient with light armor and shields (except tower shields).

Because the somatic components required for fatemaker spells are relatively simple, a fatemaker can cast fatemaker spells while wearing light armor without incurring the normal arcane spell failure chance.

However, like any other arcane spellcaster, a fatemaker wearing medium or heavy armor or using a shield incurs a chance of arcane spell failure if the spell in question has a somatic component (as most do).

A fatemaker still incurs the normal arcane spell failure chance for arcane spells received from other classes.

Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a fatemaker gains the ability to cast a number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, a fatemaker must have a Charisma score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a fatemaker with a Charisma of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Fatemaker bonus spells are based on Charisma, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the fatemaker's Cha modifier.

When Table 3–3 indicates that a fatemaker gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level fatemaker), she gains only the bonus spells she would be entitled to based on her Charisma score for that spell level.

The fatemaker's spell list appears below.

A fatemaker casts spells just as a sorcerer does.

Upon reaching 6th level, and at every even-numbered level after that (8th and 10th), a fatemaker can choose to learn a new spell in place of one she already knows.

The new spell's level must be the same as that of the spell being exchanged, and it must be at least two levels lower than the highest-level fatemaker spell the character can cast.

A fatemaker can swap only a single spell at any given level, and must choose whether or not to swap the spell at the same time that she gains new spells known for that level.

¹ Provided the fatemaker has a high enough Charisma score to have a bonus spell of this level.

Take-Charge Appeal (Ex): A fatemaker is a naturally confident leader. She adds 1 point to her Charisma score at 1st, 5th, and 10th level.

Confidence of the Fated (Su): Once per day, a fatemaker of 2nd level or higher can add her class level as a morale bonus on any single attack roll, weapon damage roll, saving throw, or skill check.

At 7th level and higher, she can do this twice per day, but only once in any given round.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, a fatemaker deals an extra 1d6 points of damage on any successful melee attack against a flat-footed or flanked target, or against a target that has been denied its Dexterity bonus for any reason.

This damage also applies to ranged attacks against targets up to 30 feet away.

Creatures with concealment, creatures without discernible anatomies, and creatures immune to extra damage from critical hits are all immune to sneak attacks.

A fatemaker can choose to deliver nonlethal damage with her sneak attack, but only when using a weapon designed for that purpose, such as a sap (blackjack).

At 6th level, the extra damage dealt by a fatemaker's sneak attack increases to 2d6 points, and at 9th level it increases to 3d6 points.

Aura of Confidence (Su): A fatemaker's confidence tends to rub off on her allies.

Beginning at 4th level, a fatemaker grants a +1 morale bonus on attack rolls, saves, and skill checks to all adjacent allies (but not to herself).

This ability functions only while the fatemaker is conscious.

At 8th level, the bonus increases to +2.

Ego Manifestation (Sp): At 10th level, a fatemaker's internal confidence and ego can be made physically manifest, increasing her size and power.

This effect is the equivalent of the righteous might spell (caster level equals class level), except that the fatemaker doesn't gain damage reduction, but instead gains a +4 bonus on Intimidate checks.

She can use this ability once per day.

FATEMAKER SPELL LIST

Fatemakers choose their spells from the following list.

1st Level: charm person, disguise self, expeditious retreat, jump, sanctuary, true strike.

2nd Level: bear's endurance, bull's strength, cat's grace, darkvision, daze monster, eagle's splendor, fox's cunning, invisibility, owl's wisdom, resist energy, spider climb.

3rd Level: haste, protection from energy, nondetection, suggestion, tongues.

4th Level: charm monster, neutralize poison, remove curse, restoration, stoneskin.

VISIONARY SEEKER

Everyone's potential is like an infinite, mist-shrouded plain—empty at first, but pregnant with possibility.

All beings have within them the possibility for building knowledge upon that plain, or for piercing the mists that obscure it to find what treasures of mind and spirit reside there.

A visionary seeker knows how to navigate the mental plain stretching out ahead, finding landfall and truly discovering what it means to know.

Anyone imbued with a strong sense of self and a questing spirit may become a visionary seeker.

However, spellcasters give up much of their spell progression.

Having some spellcasting ability enhances the visionary seeker's path of enlightenment, creating a few more bright sparks.

Multiclassed wizards, especially diviners, find the life of a visionary seeker attractive.

Sorcerers with their innate spellcasting powers often hearken to the self-centered focus of the group that detractors sometimes call “the Mind's I”.

Occasionally, a multiclassed cleric or druid will choose to quest for personal fulfillment and become a member of the prestige class.

Occasional NPC visionary seekers can be found anywhere in the multiverse.

Usually, they strive to the utmost to pursue personal goals, often without much concern for others.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a visionary seeker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (any single skill) 8 ranks or Survival 8 ranks.

Special: Must be inducted by a member of the Mind's Eye.

CLASS SKILLS

The visionary seeker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession

(any) (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the visionary seeker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Visionary seekers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each odd-numbered visionary seeker level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved undead turning, metamagic or item creation feats, or the like).

If the character had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a visionary seeker, the player must decide to which class to add each visionary seeker level for determining spells per day, spells known, and overall caster level.

Divination Expertise (Ex): A visionary seeker may add his class level to his caster level when casting divination spells. This bonus stacks with the bonus gained for additional spellcasting levels at every odd-numbered class level.

For example, a 10th-level wizard/4th-level visionary seeker would cast divinations as a 16th-level caster (10 for wizard levels, 4 for visionary seeker levels, and 2 for the added spellcasting levels gained from visionary seeker class levels).

Spell Mimic (Sp): Once per day, a visionary seeker of 2nd level or higher can mimic any spell (arcane or divine) of a level no greater than his class level.

He must have seen the spell cast within the previous 24 hours, and he must supply any material components or focus that the spell requires.

The spell's casting time is as normal for the spell.

The visionary seeker cannot apply metamagic effects to the spell, even if the original spell included such effects.

Treat his caster level for the spell as equal to his highest caster level in any class.

At 6th level, a visionary seeker can use this ability twice per day, and at 10th level, he can use it three times per day.

Intuition (Ex): A 3rd-level visionary seeker gains a +2 insight bonus on initiative checks and Will saves against illusions.

These bonuses increase to +4 at 7th level.

Bend Fate (Su): At 4th level, a visionary seeker gains the ability to manipulate fate in his favor.

Once per day, he can add 1d6 to any d20 roll he makes. He must declare the use of this ability before rolling the d20.

Trick Fate (Su): Once per day, a visionary seeker of 8th level can reroll one roll that he has just made before the DM declares whether the roll results in success or failure.

He must take the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original roll.

Moment of Prescience (Sp): Once per day, a 10th-level visionary seeker can use moment of prescience as a spell-like ability.

Treat his caster level as equal to his highest caster level in any class.

PLAYER'S GUIDE TO FAERÛN (3.5)

ARCANE DEVOTE

Although clerics and druids make up the majority of spellcasters within the hierarchies of Faerûn's churches, they by no means hold a monopoly.

Many pious sorcerers and wizards, and even a few bards, choose to devote themselves to a deity as thoroughly as the most devout of clerics.

These arcane spellcasters gain an insight into divine magic that often baffles their less religious peers.

Arcane devotees are most common among the worshipers of Azuth and Mystra, with the former attracting more wizards and the latter more sorcerers.

Bards sometimes become arcane devotees of Lliira or other musically inclined deities, and rumors persist of assassins serving as arcane devotees of Bane.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an arcane devotee, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feat: Enlarge Spell.

Spells: Able to cast 4th-level arcane spells.

Patron Deity: An arcane devotee must have a patron deity, and it must be the one he serves as an arcane devotee.

CLASS SKILLS

The arcane devotee's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the arcane devotee prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Arcane devotees gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new arcane devotee level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 4th-level arcane spells before he added the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of arcane devotee to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 4th-level arcane spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class that granted access to 4th-level spells before he became an arcane devotee, he must decide to which class he adds each level of arcane devotee for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Reach of the Holy (Ex): At 1st level, the arcane devotee may apply the effects of the Enlarge Spell feat to any spell he casts.

He does not need to prepare it as an enlarged spell in advance, and the use of this ability does not increase the casting time or use a higher-level spell slot.

The arcane devotee may use this ability a number of times per day equal to 1 + his Cha modifier (minimum once per day).

Sacred Defense (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the arcane devotee gains a +1 bonus on saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

When he reaches 4th level, the bonus increases to +2.

Divine Synergy (Ex): At 3rd level, the arcane devotee learns to harmonize his magic with that of his deity's worshipers.

Any time he is the target of a harmless spell cast by a divine spellcaster of his patron deity, the spell functions as if affected by the Empower Spell feat, if applicable.

The spell must be cast by another character—even if the arcane devotee has levels in a divine spellcasting class, he does not gain this benefit for divine spells he casts on himself.

A spell that cannot be affected by the Empower Spell feat gains no further benefit from this ability.

Divine Shroud (Sp): Once per day, a 5th-level arcane devotee may surround himself with a shroud of glowing divine power that protects him against hostile spells.

This ability functions like the spell resistance spell (caster level equals arcane devotee level), except that the divine shroud is of a color appropriate to the arcane devotee's patron.

An arcane devotee of Tyr, for example, is surrounded by a steady, rose-purple glow, while an arcane devotee of Cyric is wrapped in a pulsating cloud of purple and black.

BLACK BLOOD HUNTER

The People of the Black Blood, as described in the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting, are lycanthropes united only by their reverence for Malar, the Beastlord.

The basic credo of Malar's church—survival of the fittest and winnowing of the weak—is evil in a dispassionate way, but the god grants exceptional power to those who supplement that bestial level of evil with torture, rape, and other truly vile acts.

Black blood hunters come from all classes, and both afflicted and natural lycanthropes are eligible for the prestige class.

Rangers, druids, and barbarians are common among the hunters, but only because they are common among the People of the Black Blood.

Clerics of Malar often choose this path as well because they enjoy having the ability to cast spells in animal form.

Black blood hunters have no organizational structure.

Some bands of People of the Black Blood include hunters; others do not.

Some of the hunters have risen to leadership of their packs, while others wish only to participate in the hunt.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a black blood hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Any lycanthrope.

Skills: Control Shape 8 ranks (afflicted lycanthrope only), Jump 6 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 4 ranks, Survival 6 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack, Vile Natural Attack (Book of Vile Darkness).

Patron Deity: Malar.

CLASS SKILLS

The black blood hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the black blood hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Black blood hunters gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Greater Curse of Lycanthropy (Su): The DC of the Fortitude save required to avoid contracting lycanthropy from the character's bite attack increases by an amount equal to his black blood hunter level.

Lycanthropic Spell (Ex): A black blood hunter with spellcasting ability can cast spells normally in his animal or hybrid form, as though he were a druid in wild shape using the Natural Spell feat.

Wild Items (Ex): A black blood hunter can use armor with the wild special ability, a wilding clasp, or any similar item designed for a druid to use while in wild shape.

For the purpose of using such items, all the black blood hunter's lycanthropic forms count as wild shapes.

Animal Aspect (Su): Starting at 2nd level, a black blood hunter gains the ability to take on limited characteristics of his animal form while remaining in his humanoid form.

Once per day, he can gain the Strength, Dexterity, or Constitution of his animal form without actually adopting that shape.

In addition, his natural armor bonus increases by +2.

All these changes last for 1 minute per black blood hunter level.

The black blood hunter can use this ability twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 6th level, four times per day at 8th level, and five times per day at 10th level.

Wild Empathy (Ex): A black blood hunter of 2nd level or higher can use body language, vocalizations, and demeanor to improve the attitude of an animal.

This ability functions like the druid class feature of the same name, except that the character adds his black blood hunter level to his 1d20 roll instead of his druid level.

Furthermore, he gains a +8 racial bonus (rather than the normal +4) when using this ability with normal or dire animals of the same kind as his animal form.

If the black blood hunter also has the wild empathy ability from another class (such as druid or ranger), levels of that class stack with his black blood hunter levels for the purpose of determining the bonus on the wild empathy check.

Improved Hybrid Form (Ex): At 3rd level, a black blood hunter gains the ability to use his animal form's special attacks while in hybrid form.

Improved Vile Natural Attack (Su): At 4th level, a black blood hunter deals an additional 1d4 points of vile damage with each successful natural attack, rather than the 1 point that the Vile Natural Attack feat allows.

Vile damage can be healed only by magic cast within the area of a consecrate or hallow spell.

When he reaches 8th level, the vile damage he deals with a natural attack increases to 1d6 points.

Improved Damage Reduction (Su): When the black blood hunter reaches 5th level, his lycanthropic damage reduction improves by 5 points—to 10/silver if he is an afflicted lycanthrope, or to 15/silver if he is a natural lycanthrope.

When he reaches 10th level, his damage reduction can be bypassed only by magic silver weapons.

Faster Change (Ex): A black blood hunter of at least 6th level can change to or from animal or hybrid form as a move action rather than a standard action.

Quick Change (Ex): A 9th-level or higher black blood hunter can change to or from animal or hybrid form as a free action.

TABLE A-2: THE BLACK BLOOD HUNTER

CELEBRANT OF SHARESS

Sharess is a paradoxical deity.

Originally, she was a war goddess of the Mulhorandi pantheon—a champion in the war against Set and his forces of evil.

Now, however, she is a goddess of passion and sex who is more often referred to as the Feshall Madam than as the Foe of Set.

Most of her priests forget her glorious past and spend their time running brothels and celebrating the Endless Revel of Life, a nearly constant parade of festivals in their goddess's honor.

But the celebrants of Sharess are different.

They do not neglect Sharess in her present aspect as the goddess of pleasure and lust, but neither do they forget the ancient Foe of Set, who was Anhur's lieutenant.

Celebrants of Sharess are seducers and warriors, hedonists and pious champions of good.

While many of the goddess's followers are chaotic neutral and some even lean toward evil, the celebrants are an ever-present reminder that evil is the enemy, and that pleasure is to be enjoyed and shared with all as an act of good.

Though celebrants of Sharess are not clerics, in many ways they represent a truer embodiment of their deity's nature than many of her clerics do.

Most celebrants were previously bards.

Clerics who adopt this prestige class forsake their advancement in divine spellcasting, so it is not an attractive path for them.

Sometimes barbarian/bards find themselves drawn to the celebrants, and rogues are common among their ranks as well.

Celebrant NPCs are rare, and they find little welcome in the decadent church of Sharess.

The celebrants have initiated a reform movement within the church, challenging the establishment to change its interpretation of Sharess's dogma and remember the good aspect of her alignment as well as the freewheeling chaotic one.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a celebrant of Sharess, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Chaotic good.

Skills: Diplomacy 7 ranks, Perform (any) 7 ranks.

Feats: Sacred Vow (Book of Exalted Deeds), Vow of Purity (Book of Exalted Deeds).

CLASS SKILLS

The celebrant of Sharess's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spellcraft (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the celebrant of Sharess prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Celebrants of Sharess gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks. Spells: Beginning at 1st level, a celebrant of Sharess gains the ability to cast a number of arcane spells.

To cast a spell, a celebrant must have a Charisma score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so a celebrant with a Charisma of 10 or lower cannot cast these spells.

Celebrant of Sharess bonus spells are based on Charisma, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + the celebrant's Charisma bonus (if any).

When the celebrant gets 0 spells per day of a given spell level (for instance, 1st-level spells for a 1st-level celebrant), she gains only the bonus spells she would be entitled to based on her Charisma score for that spell level.

The celebrant's spell list appears below.

A celebrant of Sharess casts spells just as a bard does.

Upon reaching 6th level, and at every even-numbered level after that (8th and 10th), a celebrant of Sharess can choose to learn a new spell in place of one she already knows.

The new spell's level must be the same as that of the spell being exchanged, and it must be at least two levels lower than the highest-level celebrant of Sharess spell the character can cast.

For instance, upon reaching 6th level, a celebrant of Sharess could trade in a single 1st-level spell (two spell levels below the highest-level celebrant spell she can cast, which is 3rd) for a different 1st-level spell.

At 8th and 10th levels, she could trade in a single 1st-level or 2nd-level spell (since she now can cast 4th-level celebrant spells) for a different spell of the same level.

A celebrant of Sharess may swap only a single spell at any given level, and she must choose whether or not to swap the spell at the same time that she gains new spells known for that level.

TABLE A-4: CELEBRANT OF SHARESS

9th	4	4	4	3
10th	4	4	4	4

*Provided the celebrant of Sharess has sufficient Charisma to have a bonus spell of this level.

Fascinate (Sp): A celebrant of Sharess can use her flirtation ability (see below) to cause one or more creatures to become fascinated with her.

Each creature to be fascinated must be within 90 feet of the celebrant and be able to see, hear, and pay attention to her. The celebrant must also be able to see the creature. The distraction of a nearby combat or other danger prevents the ability from working.

For every three levels a celebrant attains beyond 1st, she can target one additional creature with a single use of this ability (two at 4th level, three at 7th level, and four at 10th level).

To use this ability, the celebrant makes a Perform check. Her check result is the DC for each affected creature's Will save against the effect.

If a creature's saving throw succeeds, the celebrant cannot attempt to fascinate that creature again for 24 hours.

If its saving throw fails, the creature sits quietly and gazes at the celebrant, taking no other actions, for as long as she continues her performance and concentration (up to a maximum of 1 round per celebrant of Sharess level).

While fascinated, a target takes a -4 penalty on skill checks made as reactions, such as Listen and Spot checks.

Any potential threat (such as an ally of the celebrant approaching the fascinated creature) requires the celebrant to make a new Perform check and allows the creature a new saving throw against a DC equal to the new Perform check result.

An obvious threat (such as someone drawing a weapon, casting a spell, or aiming a ranged weapon at the target) automatically breaks the effect.

Fascinate is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Feline Familiar (Ex): A celebrant of Sharess can obtain a cat as a familiar.

Doing so takes 24 hours but costs nothing (unlike the summon familiar ability of a sorcerer or wizard).

The cat serves as a companion and servant.

As the celebrant advances in level, her familiar also increases in power.

This cat familiar follows all the rules for a sorcerer's or wizard's familiar, except that the celebrant's effective class level for the purpose of determining familiar benefits is twice her celebrant of Sharess level.

Thus, a 3rd-level celebrant's familiar can speak with its master, as if the celebrant were a 6th-level sorcerer or wizard.

A celebrant cannot have more than one familiar, and her celebrant levels do not stack with levels of any other class for the purpose of determining her familiar's abilities.

If she has levels in another class that can summon a familiar, use either her level in that class or twice her celebrant of Sharess level, whichever is higher, to determine familiar benefits.

Flirtation (Su): Once per day per celebrant of Sharess level, the character can combine her Perform skill with her talents at flirtation and seduction to produce magical effects similar to those of the bardic music ability on those around her.

Starting a flirtation effect is a standard action.

Some flirtation effects require concentration, which means the celebrant must use a standard action each round to maintain the effect.

Even while using a flirtation ability that doesn't require concentration, a celebrant cannot cast spells or activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls) or command word (such as wands).

Fury of the Tigress (Ex): At 2nd level, a celebrant of Sharess can enter a state of rage, gaining phenomenal strength and durability but becoming reckless and less able to defend herself.

She temporarily gains a +4 bonus to Strength, a +4 bonus to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but she takes a -2 penalty to Armor Class.

This ability functions exactly like a barbarian's rage.

A celebrant of Sharess can enter this state once per day at 2nd level, twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

Suggestion (Sp): A 4th-level or higher celebrant of Sharess can make a suggestion (as the spell) to a creature that she has already fascinated (see above).

Using this ability does not break the celebrant's concentration on the fascinate effect or count against her daily limit on flirtation effects.

A Will saving throw (DC 10 + celebrant of Sharess level + celebrant of Sharess's Cha modifier) negates the effect.

This ability affects only a single creature.

Suggestion is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting, language-dependent ability.

Pounce of the Tigress (Ex): At 5th level, a celebrant of Sharess can make a full attack at the end of a charge.

Sanctuary (Sp): A celebrant of Sharess who is at least 7th level can prevent creatures from attacking her or her allies in a manner similar to the effect of the sanctuary spell.

To use this ability, the celebrant makes a Perform check.

Her check result is the DC for each affected creature's Will save against the effect.

Any opponent attempting to strike or otherwise directly attack the celebrant or any of her allies, even with a targeted spell, must attempt a Will save.

Success means the opponent can attack normally and is unaffected by that use of the flirtation ability.

If the save fails, the opponent can't follow through with the attack, that part of its action is lost, and it can't directly affect the celebrant or her allies for the duration of the effect.

Creatures not attempting to attack remain unaffected.

This effect does not prevent opponents from using area or effect spells that would harm the celebrant or her allies.

If the celebrant attacks another creature, or her allies do so, the sanctuary effect is broken.

Swiftiness of the Tigress (Ex): When she reaches 8th level, a celebrant of Sharess can function as though affected by a haste spell.

This benefit lasts for a number of rounds per day equal to her celebrant of Sharess level.

This duration need not be consecutive—the celebrant of Sharess may break it up into increments as small as 1 round if she so desires.

Ending the effect is a free action.

Inspire Desire (Su): At 10th level, a celebrant of Sharess can use her flirtation ability to inspire love or desire in a creature she has already fascinated.

Using this ability does not break the celebrant's concentration on the fascinate effect, but it does count against her daily limit on flirtation effects.

A Will saving throw (DC 10 + celebrant of Sharess level + celebrant of Sharess's Cha modifier) negates the effect.

This ability affects only a single creature.

The love effect of this ability causes the target to fall in love with a specified creature, which must either be within sight of the target creature at the time the effect is used, or else be specified only as "the next creature you see".

The subject takes any opportunity to be near the object of its affection and makes every effort to win that creature's love.

The desire effect is similar to the love effect, except that the target seeks any opportunity to become physically intimate with the specified creature, short of causing it physical harm.

Inspire desire is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

CELEBRANT OF SHARESS SPELL LIST

Celebrants of Sharess choose their spells from the following list:

1st Level: *cause fear, charm person, lesser confusion, daze, disguise self, hypnotism, lullaby, ray of hope, read magic, remove fear, sleep, Tasha's hideous laughter.

2nd Level: alter self, calm emotions, cat's grace, daze monster, detect thoughts, eagle's splendor, ease pain, elation, enthral, Faerinaal's hymn*, heroism, hold person, hypnotic pattern, rage, scare, suggestion, tongues, yoke of mercy*.

3rd Level: charm monster, confusion, crushing despair, deep slumber, fear, glibness, good hope, lesser geas, refreshment, slow, warcry.

4th Level: *blinding beauty, break enchantment, dominate person, hold monster, mass suggestion, modify memory, rainbow pattern.

* Described in Book of Exalted Deeds.

COGNITION THIEF

These psionic agents of espionage specialize in delving deeply into the minds of their targets to steal their very thoughts—and sometimes the ability to reason as well. They appear unassuming, using neither powerful weapons nor flashy spells to achieve their goals.

But a cognition thief's subtle ability to worm her way into a target's very consciousness makes her the ultimate secret agent.

Cognition thieves almost always come from the ranks of psions or wilders, although sometimes a monster with the psilike ability to emit a psionic blast becomes a cognition thief.

Psions with the telepath discipline are particularly prevalent.

Cognition thieves have all received training in Skullport's Hall of Mental Splendor (see above).

Most still work for that group of mercenary spies-for-hire, but some have since retired or severed ties with the Hall.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cognition thief, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: 5 ranks each in any two of the following skills: Bluff, Disguise, Gather Information, Open Lock.

Feat: Inquisitor (Psionics Handbook).

Psionics: Able to manifest the psionic blast power (Psionics Handbook).

CLASS SKILLS

The cognition thief's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Autohypnosis (Wis), Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (psionics) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Psicraft (Int), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Stabilize Self (Con).

See Chapter 4: Skills in the Player's Handbook and Chapter 2: Skills in the Psionics Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the cognition thief prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cognition thieves are proficient with all simple weapons and light armor.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Power Points per Day/Powers Discovered: At 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th, 8th, and 9th level, the character gains new power points per day (and powers discovered, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a psionic class she belonged to before she added the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic feats or item creation feats, hit points beyond those she receives from the prestige class, and so on).

She does gain the following benefits: an increased effective manifester level, additional power points, and effective additional levels for psicrystal powers (if a psicrystal is owned).

This essentially means that she adds the level of cognition thief to the level of some other psionic class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers discovered, and manifest level accordingly.

If a character had more than one psionic class that before she became a cognition thief, she must decide to which class she adds each level of cognition thief for the purpose of determining power points per day and powers discovered.

Bonus Powers Known: At 1st, 4th, 7th, and 10th level, the cognition thief learns two new powers chosen from the telepath discipline.

She can choose any power from the list that she would be able to manifest.

Even cognition thieves who manifest their powers as wilders can choose from the telepath discipline list, which is otherwise forbidden to them.

These powers are acquired through personal meditation, just as the new powers learned at each level in a base psionic class are.

Thus, they take no time and cost no XP to learn.

Read Thoughts (Sp): At 1st level, the cognition thief can use read thoughts (as the psionic power of the same name) once per day.

The save DC for this power is $10 + 1/2$ cognition thief's character level + cognition thief's Int or Cha modifier, whichever is higher.

She can use this power twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 7th level, and at will at 10th level.

Confusion (Sp): At 4th level, the cognition thief can use confusion (as the spell of the same name) once per day.

The save DC for this ability is $10 + 1/2$ cognition thief's character level + cognition thief's Int or Cha modifier, whichever is higher.

She can use this power twice per day at 7th level and three times per day at 10th level.

Mind Probe (Sp): At 7th level, the cognition thief can use mind probe (as the psionic power of the same name) once per day.

The save DC for this power is $10 + 1/2$ cognition thief's character level + cognition thief's Int or Cha modifier, whichever is higher.

She can use this power twice per day at 10th level.

Insanity (Sp): At 10th level, the cognition thief can use insanity (as the spell of the same name) once per day.

The save DC for this ability is $10 + 1/2$ cognition thief's character level + cognition thief's Int or Cha modifier, whichever is higher.

DIVINE CHAMPION

A divine champion is the strong right arm of her deity. She serves as a guardian of holy sites, a protector of pilgrims, and a leader of crusades.

Though paladins fill these roles in many good-aligned churches, a divine champion can take up the banner of any deity, regardless of alignment or ethos.

Rivalries between divine champions of opposing faiths have been the stuff of legends told by bards for centuries. These holy warriors are loved by their patron's worshippers and hated by the church's enemies in equal measure. Most divine champions come from a combat or military background.

Barbarians, fighters, paladins, and rangers are the most common candidates, though monks, clerics, and the more militant druids frequently pursue this path as well. Many divine champions of evil gods are also blackguards, and divine champions of all alignments often have levels in prestige classes unique to their churches.

Bards, rogues, sorcerers, and wizards rarely become divine champions unless they are unusually militant.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine champion, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skill: Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks.

Feat: Weapon Focus (deity's favored weapon).

Patron Deity: A divine champion must have a patron deity, and it must be the one he serves as a divine champion.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine champion's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the divine champion prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine champions are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with any armor or shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Lay on Hands (Su): Beginning at 1st level, a divine champion may heal wounds (her own or those of others with the same patron deity) by touch.

This ability otherwise functions like the paladin's lay on hands ability.

If the divine champion has the lay on hands ability from another source (such as paladin levels), her daily uses of the ability from that source are not limited by the strictures of this version.

Only the daily uses derived from divine champion levels are restricted to characters with the same patron deity.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, the divine champion may select a bonus feat from the following list: Blind-Fight, Combat Expertise, Combat Reflexes, Exotic Weapon Proficiency, Improved Critical, Improved Initiative, Improved Turning, Quick Draw, Weapon Focus. He must meet any prerequisites for a feat in order to select it.

Sacred Defense (Ex): At 2nd level, the divine champion gains a +1 bonus on saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders. When she reaches 4th level, the bonus increases to +2.

Smite Infidel (Su): Once per day, a divine champion of at least 3rd level may attempt to smite a creature that has a different patron deity (or no patron deity at all) with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Charisma bonus (if any) to the attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per divine champion level.

For example, a 4th-level divine champion armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+4 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses from high strength or magical effects that would normally apply.

If a divine champion accidentally smites a creature that is not of an opposing alignment or deity, the smite has no effect but is still used up for that day.

If the divine champion has a smite ability from another source (such as cleric or paladin levels), she may instead use that ability one extra time per day.

Divine Wrath (Su): Once per day, a 5th-level divine champion can channel a portion of her patron deity's power to greatly enhance her own battle prowess.

She gains damage reduction 5/- and a +3 bonus on attack rolls, damage, and saving throws for a number of rounds equal to her Charisma modifier (minimum 1 round).

These modifiers are sacred bonuses if the divine champion's patron is of good alignment, or profane bonuses if her deity is of evil alignment.

If the patron deity is neutral, the divine champion's alignment determines whether the bonuses are sacred or profane.

If both the divine champion and her patron are neutral, the character chooses whether the bonuses are sacred or profane when she first gains the ability.

deific grudge matches

Although the opposed alignment system works just fine for determining a divine champion's enemies, there are many deities in Toril that, while not diametrically opposed in alignment, hate each other with a passion. The following table lists the most commonly worshiped gods of Faerûn and several of their enemies. Each divine champion should choose one foe of her patron deity to oppose. For deities not noted on this table, the DM can either choose an appropriate opposed deity or consult Faiths and Pantheons.

DIVINE DISCIPLE

Among the disciples of any religion are a rare few individuals whose devotion to their deity goes far above and beyond the norm.

A divine disciple is the living embodiment of her patron deity on Toril, and at the height of her power, she actually ascends to something more than mortal.

At that point, whether she continues to serve her deity in Faerûn or departs the mortal coil to bask in the actual presence of her god, a divine disciple is the epitome of an intelligent creature's personal relationship with its deity. All divine disciples come from the ranks of divine spellcasters.

Clerics and druids are the most common candidates, but especially pious paladins and rangers sometimes pursue this path.

In the dark churches of evil gods, blackguards sometimes rise to become divine disciples.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine disciple, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Diplomacy 5 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 4th-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: A divine disciple must have a patron deity, and it must be the one she serves as a divine disciple.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine disciple's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the divine disciple prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine disciples gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new divine disciple level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class granted her access to 4th-level divine spells before she added the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of divine disciple to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class granted her access to 4th-level divine spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class that granted access to 4th-level spells before she became a divine disciple, she must decide to which class she adds each level of divine disciple for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Divine Emissary (Ex): At 1st level, a divine disciple can communicate telepathically with any outsider within 60 feet that has the same alignment as she does or serves her deity.

The telepathy function of this class feature is a supernatural ability.

The character also gains a bonus equal to her divine disciple level on any Charisma-based skill or ability checks she makes when dealing with outsiders that share her alignment or patron.

Sacred Defense (Ex): At 2nd level, the divine disciple gains a +1 bonus on saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

At 4th level, this bonus increases to +2.

Imbue With Spell Ability (Sp): A 3rd-level divine disciple can use imbue with spell ability (caster level equals divine disciple's caster level).

Since it is a spell-like ability, the divine disciple does not need to devote a 4th-level spell slot to its use, though the imbued spells themselves take up her lower-level spell slots, as usual.

This ability is usable once per day.

Domain: At 4th level, the divine disciple may choose a domain from those that her deity grants access to.

If she already has two domains as a cleric, she gains a third in addition to those.

Regardless of her original divine spellcasting class, she gains the granted power of the new domain, adding her divine disciple level to her cleric level (if any) to determine level-based effects.

If the divine disciple has cleric levels, she also gains a third spell choice with which to fill her domain spell slot at each level.

Druids, paladins, and rangers gain no extra spell slots for domain spells, but they can prepare the domain's spells in their normal spell slots.

Transcendence (Su): At 5th level, thanks to her frequent contact with outsiders and her deity's direct intervention, the divine disciple sheds her mortal form and becomes an outsider with the native subtype.

This apotheosis grants her immunity to any spell or effect that does not affect outsiders (for example, charm person cannot affect her) as well as darkvision out to 60 feet, if she does not already have it.

Because of her native subtype, however, the divine disciple must still eat, breathe, and sleep, and she can be reincarnated, raised, or resurrected normally.

She also gains any alignment subtypes that match alignment components she has in common with her deity.

Thus, a chaotic neutral divine disciple of a chaotic evil deity gains the chaotic subtype, and a divine disciple of a neutral deity gains no additional subtypes.

TABLE 2-4: THE DIVINE DISCIPLE

DIVINE SEEKER

Even the gods have need of secrecy from time to time. When stealth and discretion are more suitable for a given task than combat prowess or holy spells, the divine seeker steps in to perform missions for her deity.

Depending upon the church to which she belongs, a divine seeker might be called upon to retrieve a holy relic from lands controlled by enemies of the church, covertly spy upon the priests of a rival faith, or even assassinate heretics who speak out against her deity.

Subtlety is the divine seeker's stock in trade, and she can often accomplish her task without the slightest evidence of her church's involvement.

Divine seekers can come from any character class, but monks, rangers, and rogues are the most common candidates.

Barbarians and bards sometimes have enough skills to become divine seekers, but they tend to lack the subtlety necessary for success.

Sorcerers and wizards sometimes become divine seekers, but they often have difficulty accumulating the requisite skills.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine seeker, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 3 ranks, Move Silently 10 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Feat: Stealthy.

Patron: A divine seeker must have a patron deity, and it must be the one she serves as a divine seeker.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine seeker's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are features of the divine seeker prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A divine seeker is proficient with all simple weapons and with light armor, but not with shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Sacred Stealth (Su): At 1st level, the divine seeker can call upon her deity's power to shield her from prying eyes and ears.

As a standard action, she can grant herself a +10 sacred bonus (or profane bonus, if her patron deity is evil) on Hide and Move Silently checks.

This benefit lasts for a number of minutes per day equal to her Charisma modifier (minimum 1 minute per day).

This duration need not be consecutive—the divine seeker may break it up into increments as small as 1 round if she so desires.

Ending the effect is a free action.

Thwart Magic Trap (Ex): At 1st level, the divine seeker gains a +3 bonus on all Disable Device and Search checks made to locate, disable, or bypass magic traps.

Sacred Defense (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, the divine seeker gains a +1 bonus on saving throws against divine spells, as well as the spell-like and supernatural abilities of outsiders.

At 4th level, the bonus increases to +2.

Sneak Attack (Ex): This ability functions like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by +1d6 at 2nd level, and again at 5th level.

If a divine seeker gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels) the bonuses on damage stack. Furthermore, divine seeker levels stack with any other appropriate class levels (such as rogue or assassin) for the purpose of overcoming improved uncanny dodge.

Locate Creature (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, the divine seeker may use locate creature (caster level equals divine seeker level + divine seeker's Cha modifier) once per day.

Locate Object (Sp): At 3rd level, the divine seeker may use locate object (caster level equals divine seeker level + divine seeker's Cha modifier) once per day.

Divine Perseverance (Su): If a 4th-level or higher divine seeker is brought to -1 hit points or lower, she automatically heals a number of hit points equal to 3d6 + her Charisma bonus (if any).

This ability is usable once per day.

Find the Path (Sp): At 5th level, the divine seeker may use find the path (caster level equals divine seeker level + divine seeker's Cha modifier) once per day.

EVERESKAN TOMB GUARDIAN

Few things are more sacred to the elves of Evereska than the bodies of their dead.

Countless great leaders, heroes, and scholars of the Fortress Home are buried in tombs scattered throughout the region, and the elves consider these sites inviolable.

Unfortunately, the tombs also contain priceless magic treasures crafted by the elves of old, and the thought of such booty leads many looters to test the elves' defenses.

The Evereskan tomb guardians are on hand to ensure that these defenses are very good indeed.

Each tomb guardian swears a solemn oath to track grave robbers to the ends of Faerûn and beyond, and never to rest until the defilers have been slain.

Rogue/sorcerers and ranger/sorcerers are far and away the most common candidates for tomb guardians, though monks, sorcerers, and wizards sometimes find themselves drawn to this path as well.

Fighters, clerics, and paladins tend to have trouble meeting the spellcasting requirement, and barbarians are too violent.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an Evereskan tomb guardian, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf.

Region: Evereska.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Listen 2 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Spot 2 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Track.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The Evereskan tomb guardian's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Knowledge (Western Heartlands local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Evereskan tomb guardian prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Evereskan tomb guardians gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new Evereskan tomb guardian level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 2nd-level arcane spells before he added the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of Evereskan tomb guardian to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 2nd-level arcane spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class that granted access to 2nd-level spells before he became a tomb guardian, he must decide to which class he adds each level of tomb guardian for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Sacred Duty (Su): The Evereskan tomb guardian gains a +2 sacred bonus on Gather Information, Hide, Move Silently, and Survival checks made inside the region of Evereska.

While inside an Evereskan tomb, he also gains a +2 sacred bonus on attack rolls and a sacred bonus equal to his tomb guardian level on damage rolls.

Devoted Pursuit (Ex): While pursuing the robber of an Evereskan tomb, a 2nd-level or higher tomb guardian retains his bonuses on Gather Information, Hide, Move Silently, and Survival checks from the sacred duty ability even while outside of Evereska.

He also retains the bonuses he gained from that ability on attack and damage rolls, but these apply only to attacks made against the tomb robber.

Dodge Bonus (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, an Evereskan tomb guardian receives a +1 dodge bonus to AC while wearing light or no armor.

This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level.

Swift Tracking (Ex): At 3rd level, the tomb guardian no longer takes a –5 penalty on Survival checks for tracking at his normal speed.

Furthermore, he takes only a –10 penalty (instead of the normal –20) when moving at up to twice normal speed while tracking.

Silent Guardian (Ex): At 5th level, the tomb guardian can attune himself to the look and sounds of his surroundings. After concentrating for 10 minutes to familiarize himself with the area, he gains a +4 bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks as long as he remains within 100 feet of the spot where he first attuned himself.

EYE OF HORUS-RE

Following the Time of Troubles, the chief deity of the Mulhorandi pantheon began to take a greater interest in combating the agents of Set beyond the political realm of Mulhorand.

Horus-Re began to inspire paladins to serve this cause, and numerous clerics have also joined the crusade.

Perfect channels for the holy radiance of their deity, these clerics are known as the eyes of Horus-Re.

They are champions of good, sworn enemies of Set, and bane to undead.

All eyes of Horus-Re are clerics of that deity, though some have paladin levels as well.

Cleric/fighters are also fairly common, and some cleric/wizards use their limited arcane spells to supplement their divine magic in Horus-Re's service.

In stark contrast to most of the clergy of Horus-Re, the eyes choose to ignore strictly political matters in Mulhorand.

Rather than reporting to the pharaoh of that land, they maintain their own hierarchical structure.

NPC eyes of Horus-Re can be found wherever the minions of Set or undead creatures walk the land, and some are showing increasing interest in the activities of the yuan-ti in Hlondeth.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an eye of Horus-Re, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Region: Mulhorand.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 9 ranks, Spot 4 ranks.

Feats: Alertness, Extra Turning.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Domain: Sun.

CLASS SKILLS

The eye of Horus-Re's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the eye of Horus-Re prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Eyes of Horus-Re gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, when a new eye of Horus-Re level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in cleric.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of eye of Horus-Re to the level of cleric, and then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

Greater Turning (Su): In addition to his normal turning ability, an eye of Horus-Re can use greater turning (the granted power of the Sun domain) a number of times per day equal to three plus his Charisma modifier.

Radiance (Su): When an eye of Horus-Re casts any spell with the light descriptor, the resulting light is brighter than normal.

The radius of illumination is doubled, and the spell is treated as if it were one level higher than it actually is for all purposes, including determining whether it can counter or dispel a darkness spell.

Thus, a daylight spell cast by an eye of Horus-Re sheds light in a 120-foot radius and is treated as a 4th-level spell.

It can counter or dispel any darkness spell of 4th level or lower.

Turn Undead (Ex): The character adds his eye of Horus-Re levels to his cleric levels for all purposes related to turning undead.

Everlight (Ex): At 2nd level, an eye of Horus-Re gains darkvision out to 60 feet and low-light vision, allowing him to see in most conditions.

Touch of the Sun (Su): When the eye of Horus-Re reaches 3rd level, his attacks with any weapon or an unarmed strike are treated as good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Domain: At 5th level, an eye of Horus-Re gains access to one additional domain of his choice from among those offered by Horus-Re.

He gains the granted power of the domain and can choose from its spell list as well as those of his other domains when selecting his domain spells for the day.

He can still cast only one domain spell at each level (1st through 9th) per day, but now he has three choices instead of two at each spell level.

Piercing Sight (Su): At 6th level, an eye of Horus-Re gains greater visual acuity.

He ignores the miss chance created by darkness spells or effects and gains Blind-Fight as a bonus feat.

In addition, he gains a +5 sacred bonus on Spot checks.

Positive Energy Burst (Su): In lieu of two daily uses of his turning ability, an eye of Horus-Re who is at least 8th level can create a positive energy burst that affects all undead creatures within 100 feet of him.

This effect deals 1d6 points of damage per eye of Horus-Re level to every undead within range.

Each affected undead may attempt a Reflex save (DC 20 + the eye of Horus-Re's Cha modifier) to halve the damage.

True Seeing (Su): A 10th-level eye of Horus-Re sees all things as they truly are, as though he were continually under the effect of a true seeing spell.

HAMMER OF MORADIN

Within the halls of Citadel Adbar in the icy North, an elite order of warrior-priests stands ready to defend the dwarven people against the onslaught of fell giants, dark elves, and goblinoids.

Called the hammers of Moradin, they serve as Citadel Adbar's rallying point against the incursion of dark creatures that haunt the North.

The regular army, known as the Iron Guard, defends the city capably, but the hammers actively strike out against the monsters farther afield, bringing the righteous fury of the Soul Forger to their enemies' very doorsteps.

Fighter/clerics and paladins make up the bulk of the members of this prestige class, though cleric/monks are not unheard of.

While rangers and cleric/rogues are quite capable of qualifying for the hammer of Moradin prestige class, most gravitate instead to the Deepscouts, another branch of Citadel Adbar's army.

Members of other classes very rarely become hammers of Moradin.

Paladins of Moradin can freely multiclass as hammers of Moradin.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hammer of Moradin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Region: The Spine of the World.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Craft (weaponsmithing) 10 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, Weapon Focus (warhammer).

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Moradin.

Special: The candidate must be a member of the hammers of Moradin.

CLASS SKILLS

The hammer of Moradin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Knowledge (Silver Marches local) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hammer of Moradin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hammers of Moradin are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, with all types of armor, and with shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Aura of Courage (Su): Beginning at 1st level, the hammer of Moradin gains an aura of courage that functions like the paladin ability of the same name.

Hammer Throw (Ex): A hammer of Moradin may use his warhammer as a thrown weapon with a range increment of 20 feet.

He takes no additional penalties for using the weapon in this fashion.

Goblinkiller (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, the hammer of Moradin may imbue any warhammer with the goblinoid bane property as a move action.

This ability may be used once per day, and the effect lasts a number of rounds equal to the hammer of Moradin's Charisma modifier.

Hammer Return (Su): When the hammer of Moradin reaches 2nd level, any warhammer he throws gains the returning special ability.

A returning warhammer flies through the air back to the hammer of Moradin, returning just before his next turn, so that it is ready to use again in that turn.

Catching the warhammer when it comes back is a free action.

If the hammer of Moradin can't catch it, or if he has moved since throwing it, the warhammer drops to the ground in the square from which it was thrown.

Damage Reduction (Ex): At 3rd level, the hammer of Moradin gains damage reduction 2/-.

His damage reduction increases to 4/- at 6th level, and to 6/- at 9th level.

Powerful Grip (Ex): At 3rd level, the hammer of Moradin gains a bonus equal to one-half his Strength bonus (rounded down) on damage rolls when wielding a warhammer in melee.

Thus, his bonus on damage rolls with this weapon equals 1-1/2 times his Strength bonus when he wields it in one hand and twice his Strength bonus when he wields it in two hands.

Far Shot (Ex): At 4th level, the hammer of Moradin gains the benefit of the Far Shot feat when throwing his warhammer.

This benefit increases the range increment for his thrown hammer to 30 feet.

Quake (Su): By striking his warhammer violently against the ground (a standard action), a 4th-level or higher hammer of Moradin creates a shock wave that violently shakes the earth in front of him.

Each creature touching the ground in a 60-foot cone from the point of impact must make a successful Reflex save (DC 10 + hammer of Moradin level + hammer of Moradin's Str modifier) or be knocked prone.

Drowbasher (Su): When a 5th-level or higher hammer of Moradin uses the goblinkiller ability to imbue his warhammer with the goblinoid bane property, it also gains the drow bane property.

This ability does not confer any additional uses per day of the goblinkiller ability and it does not extend the duration of the effect; it merely makes each use more versatile.

Power Strike (Su): At 5th level, the hammer of Moradin can strike his foe so hard that his blow leaves the opponent dazed.

To use this ability, the hammer of Moradin makes a normal attack roll.

(The player must declare that he is using this power before making the attack roll; thus, a miss ruins the attempt).

The attack deals normal damage if successful.

In addition, any foe damaged by this attack must make a successful Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + hammer of Moradin level + hammer of Moradin's Str modifier) or be dazed for 1 round.

Constructs, oozes, plants, undead, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to critical hits cannot be dazed.

This ability is usable twice per day at 5th level and four times per day at 10th level.

Chaos Crusher (Su): At 7th level, the hammer of Moradin may imbue any warhammer with the axiomatic special ability as a move action.

This ability may be used once per day, and the effect lasts a number of rounds equal to the hammer of Moradin's Charisma modifier.

Stalwart (Su): Hammers of Moradin are renowned for their ability to stand strong in the face of a hail of arrows, or wade into a throng of shrieking goblins and emerge untouched.

At 7th level, the hammer of Moradin may add his base Will save modifier to his AC once per day as a free action.

This benefit lasts for 1 round per hammer of Moradin level.

Giantslayer (Su): When an 8th-level or higher hammer of Moradin uses his goblinkiller ability, his warhammer gains the giant bane property in addition to the goblinoid bane and drow bane properties.

This ability does not confer any additional uses per day of the goblinkiller ability and it does not extend the duration of the effect; it merely makes each use more versatile.

Thunder Strike (Ex): When the hammer of Moradin reaches 8th level, his blows are so mighty that armor not only offers little protection from them, but it also acts as a conduit for the force of the blow, causing his opponent even more pain.

When wielding his warhammer, the hammer of Moradin gains a bonus on melee damage rolls equal to his foe's armor bonus (not including shield bonus or enhancement bonus).

Thus, a hammer of Moradin striking a creature wearing a breastplate gains a +5 bonus on his damage roll.

Power Throw (Su): At 9th level, the hammer of Moradin can hurl his warhammer with such force that it plows on past creatures struck by it.

When throwing his hammer, the hammer of Moradin makes a single ranged attack roll and checks the result against the AC of all creatures in a 60-foot straight line from his position.

He then rolls damage against each creature that the weapon hits.

Bones of the Earth (Sp): When the hammer of Moradin reaches 10th level, he gains a powerful blessing from Moradin himself.

This benefit functions like the shadow walk spell (caster level equals hammer of Moradin's divine caster level), except that rather than traveling along the edge of the Shadow Plane, the character travels along the edge of the Elemental Plane of Earth.

Both the origin and destination points must be within 5 feet of solid, natural stone.

This ability is usable once per day.

EX-HAMMERS OF MORADIN

A hammer of Moradin who violates his alignment or betrays either Citadel Adbar or the Hammers of Moradin as a whole loses all spell-like and supernatural abilities gained from this prestige class.

He regains his abilities and advancement potential if he atones for his actions (see the atonement spell on page 201 of the Player's Handbook).

HARPER AGENT

The semisecret organization known as the Harpers has members scattered all across Faerûn.

These individuals are dedicated to battling evil, discovering and preserving forgotten lore, and maintaining the balance between nature and civilization.

Harper agents are the “field agents” of the Harper organization, acting directly to gather intelligence and eliminate threats to the greater good.

Equally adept at operating alone or in small groups, Harper agents display a versatility that few others can match.

Bards are the most common candidates for the Harper agent prestige class, but they are by no means the only qualified characters.

Rangers, rogues, sorcerers, and wizards all possess the diversity of skill and ability necessary to become Harper agents.

Clerics, especially of Deneir, Lliira, and Tymora, are occasionally found in the ranks of this prestige class, as are druids and monks.

Barbarians, fighters, and paladins rarely become Harper agents because they lack the subtlety for the work.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Harper agent, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks, Knowledge ([any one region] local) 4 ranks, Sense Motive 2 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feat: Negotiator.

Special: The candidate must be sponsored by a member in good standing of the Harpers and win approval from the High Harpers.

CLASS SKILLS

The Harper agent's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (none), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Harper agent prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Harper agents are proficient with all simple weapons and with light armor.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, when a new Harper agent level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of Harper agent to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a Harper agent, he must decide to which class he adds each level of Harper agent for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Harper Knowledge (Ex): At 1st level, the Harper agent can access knowledge in the same manner as a bard can.

This ability functions like the bardic knowledge ability, except that the bonus for the check equals the character's Harper agent level + her Int modifier.

If the Harper agent has another such lore ability from another source (such as bard or loremaster levels), his Harper agent levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant such an ability for the purpose of Harper knowledge checks.

Deneir's Eye (Su): At 2nd level, the Harper agent gains a +3 sacred bonus on saving throws against glyphs, runes, and symbols.

Lliira's Heart (Su): At 2nd level, the Harper agent gains a +2 sacred bonus on saving throws against compulsion and fear effects.

Tymora's Smile (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a Harper agent gains a +2 luck bonus on any single saving throw of his choice once per day.

This bonus can be added after the die is rolled and the success or failure of the save has been determined.

Lurue's Voice (Sp): At 4th level, the Harper agent may use speak with animals (caster level equals Harper agent level) three times per day.

Mystra's Boon (Su): At 5th level, the Harper agent gains a +2 sacred bonus on all saving throws against spells.

EX-HARPER AGENTS

Any Harper agent who violates the code of the Harpers, endangers other Harpers through negligence or deliberate action, or intentionally turns away from the Harpers quickly gains a reputation in the organization.

Such an individual can no longer progress in the Harper agent prestige class.

Furthermore, he can no longer use the Deneir's eye, Lliira's heart, Lurue's voice, Mystra's boon, or Tymora's smile abilities.

A petition to the High Harpers, fulfillment of a suitable quest set by that group, and an atonement spell from a deity chosen by the High Harpers brings the former Harper agent back into good standing.

Thereafter, he regains the use of all class abilities and may once again gain levels in the prestige class.

TABLE 2-9: THE HARPER AGENT

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spells per Day/Spells Known
1st	+0	+0	+0	+2	Harper knowledge	—
2nd	+1	+0	+0	+3	Deneir's eye; Lliira's heart	+1 level of existing spellcasting class
3rd	+2	+1	+1	+3	Tymora's smile	+1 level of existing spellcasting class
4th	+3	+1	+1	+4	Lurue's voice	+1 level of existing spellcasting class
5th	+3	+1	+1	+4	Mystra's boon	+1 level of existing spellcasting class

HARPER PARAGON

Though all the Harpers are more or less devoted to fighting evil—particularly combating evil churches and organizations that try to spread their influence across Faerûn—it does not necessarily follow that the Harpers are good.

A Harper paragon, however, is as dedicated to the cause of good as she is to opposing evil.

She actively promotes the welfare of other creatures while preventing evil forces from preying on innocents.

Most Harper paragons have training as rangers or Harper agents, and many have also been bards.

Clerics and paladins dedicated to Deneir, Tymora, or Lliira also frequently pursue the path of the Harper paragon.

Harper paragons are most common among the Harpers working under Lady Cylyria in Berdusk.

Only a few can be found in the ranks of the politically manipulative "Moonstars", who operate under the leadership of Khelben Arunsun, or the independent adventurers working out of Shadowdale.

Harper paragons rarely experience any conflicts of interest in the Berdusk branch of the organization, but their consciences may be pricked regularly in other branches of the organization.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Harper paragon, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks, Perform 5 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks, Survival 2 ranks.

Feats: Sacred Vow (Book of Exalted Deeds), Vow of Obedience (Book of Exalted Deeds).

Special: Favored Enemy: The character must have one of the following monstrous kinds or evil organizations as a favored enemy: humanoid (goblinoid), humanoid (gnoll), humanoid (orc), humanoid (reptilian), outsider (evil), undead, the Church of Bane, the Cult of the Dragon, the Iron Throne, the malaugryms, the Red Wizards, or the Zhentarim.

CLASS SKILLS

The Harper paragon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (all) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Pick Pockets (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (Int), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Harper paragon prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Harper paragons gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new Harper paragon level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of Harper paragon to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before she became a Harper agent, she must decide to which class she adds each level of Harper paragon for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Aura of Good (Ex): The power of the character's aura of good is equal to her Harper paragon level.

If she has the aura of good ability from another class, levels of that class stack with her Harper paragon levels for the purpose of this ability.

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, a Harper paragon can use detect evil, as the spell.

Harper Knowledge (Ex): At 1st level, the Harper paragon can access knowledge in the same manner that a bard can. This ability functions like the bardic knowledge ability, except that the bonus for the check equals the character's Harper paragon level + her Int modifier.

If the Harper paragon has another such lore ability from another source (such as bard, loremaster, or Harper agent levels), her Harper paragon levels stack with levels of all other classes that grant such an ability for the purpose of Harper knowledge checks.

Favored Enemy (Evil) (Ex): At 2nd level, a Harper paragon gains evil creatures of all kinds as a favored enemy.

She gains a +1 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against evil creatures.

She also gains a +1 bonus on weapon damage rolls against evil creatures.

If the Harper paragon has the favored enemy ability from another class (such as ranger) and a particular evil creature also qualifies as a favored enemy for that class, the bonuses stack.

Celestial Spells (Ex): Upon reaching 3rd level, a Harper paragon can cast spells as if she were a celestial.

Specifically, she can learn and cast any spell from Book of Exalted Deeds that has a celestial component, as long as she would otherwise qualify to cast the spell.

(That is, the spell must appear on her spell list and be of a spell level that she can cast, and the ability score that controls her spellcasting must be high enough to allow her to cast spells of that level.)

The Harper paragon can also cast spells that have the specific kind of celestial component that matches her alignment—archon if she is lawful good, guardinal if she is neutral good, or eladrin if she is chaotic good.

Exalted Companion (Ex): At 4th level, a Harper paragon gains Exalted Companion (see Book of Exalted Deeds) as a bonus feat if she does not already have it.

If she does not already have an animal companion, she gains one now, as though she were a druid of a level equal to her Harper paragon level.

If she has the ability to summon an animal companion from another class (such as druid or ranger), her Harper paragon levels stack with levels of any classes that grant this benefit for the purpose of determining the kind of exalted companion she qualifies for and its abilities.

Favored Enemy (Ex): At 5th level and again at 10th level, the Harper paragon may select one additional favored enemy from the following list: the Church of Bane, the Cult of the Dragon, the Iron Throne, the malaugryms, the Red Wizards, or the Zhentarim.

The Harper paragon gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against creatures of its type.

Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

In addition, the bonus against any one favored enemy of her choice (regardless of the class in which she chose it) increases by 2.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, a Harper paragon of at least 6th level may attempt to smite an evil creature with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Charisma bonus (if any) to the attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per Harper paragon level.

For example, a 6th-level Harper paragon armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+6 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses from high strength or magical effects that would normally apply.

If a Harper paragon accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect but is still used up for that day.

The Harper paragon can use this ability twice per day at 8th level and three times per day at 10th level.

HATHRAN

In the distant and exotic land of Rashemen, a sisterhood of powerful spellcasters, both arcane and divine, battles to protect its people from the depredations of Thay and to guide their spiritual lives.

These hathrans, or Witches of Rashemen, as they are more commonly known, are the power behind the throne in their homeland far to the east, and their mystical prowess there is extremely potent.

Hathrans traveling outside Rashemen always wear masks to conceal their faces from the outside world.

Most hathrans are drawn from members of the sorcerer or cleric classes.

Bards, wizards, and druids are rare but not unheard of among hathrans, but paladins and rangers are practically nonexistent within the sisterhood.

Regardless of their original classes, hathrans consider rivalry between spellcasters to be utterly foolish, and they hold no grudge against any of their sisters for the origin of their spells.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a hathran, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good, lawful neutral, or neutral good.

Gender: Female.

Region: Rashemen.

Skills: Knowledge (Rashemen local) 4 ranks.

Feats: Ethran, Leadership.

Spells: Able to cast 4th-level arcane or divine spells.

Patron Deity: Chauntea, Mielikki, or Mystra.

Special: The candidate must be a member in good standing of the Witches of Rashemen, and she may not possess any item creation feats other than Scribe Scroll.

CLASS SKILLS

The hathran's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Swim (Str), Speak Language (none), Spellcraft (Int), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the hathran prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Hathrans gain proficiency with the whip, but not with any other weapons, nor with any armor or shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new hathran level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class granted her access to 4th-level spells before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of hathran to the level of whatever other spellcasting class granted her access to 4th-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class that granted access to 4th-level spells before she became a hathran, she must decide to which class she adds each level of hathran for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Additionally, a small number of spells are added to the hathran's class list for any spellcasting classes in which she can cast 4th-level spells.

Leadership Bonus (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, the hathran gains a +2 bonus to her Leadership score for the purpose of recruiting a cohort, with the following restriction: The cohort must be Rashemi and must either be a female with the Ethran feat or a male with at least one level in barbarian.

Rashemi Spirit Magic (Ex): A hathran's training in the unique magic of her homeland gives her uncanny versatility.

Beginning at 1st level, a hathran who prepares spells may choose to spontaneously cast any spell she knows in place of any spell of the same level that she has prepared, even if it is not on the same spell list as the substituted one.

If the hathran normally does not prepare spells, she may instead utilize metamagic feats without the additional casting time normally required, though a spell so altered still uses up a higher-level spell slot, as normal.

The hathran must be within the boundaries of Rashemen to use this ability, and there is no limit to the number of times she may do so.

Taboo: In Rashemi society, the crafting of magic items is left strictly to male spellcasters.

With the exception of the Scribe Scroll feat, no hathran may select item creation feats.

Spirit Speech (Su): At 2nd level, the hathran gains the ability to speak to and understand any creature with the spirit subtype.

This ability functions regardless of the language that the hathran and the spirit actually use to converse.

The hathran also gains a +2 bonus on any Charisma-based skill or ability checks made when dealing with spirits.

Awe of the Wychlaran (Ex): At 3rd level, the hathran radiates such power and authority that her fellow Rashemi find it difficult to act against her.

Any character from the Rashemen region whose character level is lower than or equal to that of the hathran takes a -2 penalty on attack rolls and opposed skill checks made against her.

This penalty increases to -4 at 7th level and to -6 at 10th level.

Universal Spirit Magic (Ex): At 3rd level, the hathran's affinity for spirit magic is such that she can commune with spirits outside of Rashemen.

Once per day, she may use her Rashemi spirit magic ability outside of Rashemen.

The hathran can use this ability twice per day at 6th level and three times per day at 9th level.

Spirit Concordat (Ex): At 4th level, the hathran casts all spells in the planar ally spell chain at +1 caster level.

Circle Leader (Ex): At 5th level, the hathran can become a circle leader and act as the focus for Rashemi circle magic. See page 59 of the FORGOTTEN REALMS Campaign Setting for details on circle magic.

Spirit Dominion: At 8th level, the hathran casts all spells in the planar binding spell chain at +1 caster level.

Great Circle Leader (Ex): By the time the hathran reaches 10th level, she has mastered the art of circle magic and can lead a great circle.

A great circle can have a total of nine assistants instead of five.

Hathran Spell List The following spells are added to the hathran's class spell list for any arcane or divine spellcasting class that allows her access to 4th-level spells.

0 Level: Naturewatch.

1st Level: Low-light vision, scatterspray.

EX-HATHRANS

A hathran who violates her alignment, commits an act of treason against Rashemen or the wychlaran, or takes any item creation feat except Scribe Scroll can no longer advance in the hathran prestige class.

Furthermore, she loses the benefits of her Leadership bonus, Rashemi spirit magic, and other abilities of the prestige class that relate to Rashemi.

An atonement spell cast by a cleric of an appropriate deity is sufficient to restore her class abilities and advancement potential.

If the violation involved an item creation feat, the hathran must swear a solemn oath never to use the feat.

INCANTATRIX

Incantatrixes are the definitive practitioners of metamagic in Faerûn, devoting themselves to the study of spells and techniques that affect other spells.

They deal with magic in its raw form, shaping it according to their own desires rather than any external laws of magic. They can apply their deep understanding of metamagic to alter spells their allies cast, spells they cast from wands or staves, and even spells that have already been cast.

Most incantatrixes were previously skilled wizards or sorcerers, although a few bards also study this type of magic.

Divine spellcasters rarely adopt this class—perhaps, as the incantatrixes say, because their magic is tinged with divine influence and therefore less “pure” than arcane magic.

Most incantatrixes are female; the rare males who take up this class are known as incantatars.

Incantatrix NPCs usually act independently, but sometimes they join together to solve a common problem.

Since they dislike extraplanar intrusions on the Material Plane, they see the destruction of active portals to other planes as their responsibility.

Thus, an incantatrix is usually a knowledgeable source of information on functional portals in the area.

Because incantatrixes have little offensive combat magic that is effective against normal creatures, they prefer to avoid combat or travel with companions who balance their shortcomings.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an incantatrix, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will, any one metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane spells.

Special: The candidate cannot have abjuration as a prohibited school.

CLASS SKILLS

The incantatrix's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the incantatrix prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Incantatrixes gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new incantatrix level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class granted her access to 3rd-level spells before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of incantatrix to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class granted her access to 3rd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class that granted access to 3rd-level spells before she became an incantatrix, she must decide to which class she adds each level of incantatrix for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bonus Metamagic Feat: At 1st level, and again at 4th, 7th, and 10th level, the incantatrix may select any metamagic feat as a bonus feat.

She must meet any prerequisites for a feat in order to select it.

Focused Studies (Ex): At 1st level, the incantatrix gives up a school of magic so as to focus more on the remaining schools.

She must choose a school of magic other than abjuration or divination as a prohibited school.

This prohibited school is in addition to any others already chosen due to school specialization.

Thus, a specialized wizard taking this prestige class has three prohibited schools instead of two.

Cooperative Metamagic (Su): At 2nd level, an incantatrix gains the ability to apply any metamagic feat she possesses (except Silent Spell, Still Spell, or Quicken Spell) to a spell being cast by a willing allied spellcaster.

The caster need not prepare the spell in metamagic form or in a higher-level spell slot; the incantatrix simply modifies the spell during the casting.

Using this ability is a standard action that provokes an attack of opportunity, just like casting a spell, though the incantatrix can use the Concentration skill with this ability as though she were casting defensively.

The incantatrix must ready an action to use cooperative metamagic when her ally begins casting and must be adjacent to the caster.

The incantatrix must make a Spellcraft check (DC 18 + [3 ??modified spell level]) to succeed.

“Modified spell level” is the level of the spell slot that the spell would occupy if it were prepared with the metamagic feat applied.

Any spell level increases from metamagic feats that the caster applied also count toward the modified spell level.

For example, if an incantatrix applies the Maximize Spell feat to an ally's chain lightning spell, the modified spell level is 9th (6th for the spell, +1 for the Maximize Spell feat), and the DC is 18 + (3 ??9) = 45.

If she applies the same feat to an ally's silent chain lightning spell, the modified spell level is 10th and the Spellcraft DC is 48.

An incantatrix can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + her Int modifier.

Metamagic Effect (Su): At 3rd level, an incantatrix can attempt to apply a metamagic feat she possesses to a persistent spell effect that is already in place.

For example, she could use Extend Spell to extend the duration of a wall of force or Maximize Spell to maximize the damage dealt by a cloudkill.

To use this ability, the incantatrix must be adjacent to or within the spell effect and make a successful Spellcraft check (DC 18 + [3 ??modified spell level]).

“Modified spell level” is the level of the spell slot that the spell would occupy if it were prepared with the metamagic feat applied.

Spell slot increases for metamagic feats that were applied to affect the spell's casting (such as Still Spell, Silent Spell, or Quicken Spell) do not count toward the modified spell level, but adjustments for metamagic that change the spell's effect (such as Empower Spell, Enlarge Spell, or Widen Spell) do count.

For example, applying the Extend Spell feat to a wall of fire gives it a modified spell level of 5th (4th for the spell +1 for the Extend Spell feat), so the DC would be $18 + (3 \times 5) = 33$. If the wall of fire had been cast with the Silent Spell feat applied, the DC is still 33, since that feat applies to the spell's casting, not its effect.

On the other hand, extending an empowered wall of fire would give it a modified spell level of 7th and a Spellcraft DC of 39.

An incantatrix can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + her Int modifier.

Using this ability is a full-round action that provokes attacks of opportunity.

Metamagic Spell Trigger (Su): At 5th level, an incantatrix gains the ability to apply a metamagic feat she possesses to the effect of a spell trigger item (generally a wand).

To use this ability, she must have the appropriate item creation feat to make the spell trigger item she is using.

Using metamagic spell trigger expends a number of additional charges from the item equal to the number of effective spell levels the metamagic feat would add to a spell.

For example, an incantatrix can use Quicken Spell to modify a spell cast from a wand by spending 5 charges (1 + 4 additional charges for the spell slot increase).

Alternatively, she can apply Empower Spell to the effect by spending 3 charges, or trigger it silently by spending 2 charges.

The Still Spell feat confers no benefit when applied to a spell trigger item.

An incantatrix cannot use this ability when using a spell trigger item that does not have charges, such as a strand of prayer beads.

Seize Concentration (Su): At 6th level, an incantatrix gains the ability to wrest control of a spell that requires concentration (such as implosion, major image, or summon swarm) from another spellcaster within 30 feet.

If the target spellcaster is willing, this transfer of concentration occurs automatically.

Otherwise, the incantatrix and the target spellcaster make an opposed caster level check.

A divine spellcaster receives a +2 bonus on this check.

If the incantatrix wins, she gains control of the spell for as long as she maintains concentration or until the original spell duration expires.

The spell functions as though the incantatrix were the caster (even if it is a spell she cannot cast), except that any variables determined when the spell was cast (including its caster level) remain as determined by the original caster.

The original spellcaster can be affected by his own spell, though he receives a +2 circumstance bonus on any saving throw allowed against it.

If the incantatrix allows her concentration to lapse before the spell duration expires, the original caster may reassert control over his spell by making a successful caster level check (DC 15 + spell level).

If he fails to do so, no one controls the spell.

Instant Metamagic (Su): Once per day, a 7th-level or higher incantatrix can apply a single metamagic feat she possesses to a spell without preparing it that way beforehand (if she prepares spells) or increasing its casting time (if she does not prepare spells).

Thus, a wizard's prepared spell works as if she had prepared it with the metamagic feat, but it does not use a higher-level spell slot.

A sorcerer or bard's spell is cast without adjusting its casting time, but it works as if he had cast it with the metamagic feat.

A 9th-level incantatrix can use this power twice per day.

Snatch Spell (Su): At 8th level, an incantatrix can attempt to seize control over a persistent effect created by another spellcaster.

The effect must be one that does not depend on concentration but still relies on or responds to the caster's control (such as a summon monster spell or spiritual weapon, but not a wall of fire or acid fog).

Furthermore, the effect (but not necessarily the spellcaster) must be within 30 feet of the incantatrix.

The target spellcaster and the incantatrix make an opposed caster level check.

A divine spellcaster receives a +2 bonus on this check.

If the incantatrix wins, she gains control of the spell until its original duration expires.

The spell functions as though the incantatrix had cast it, except that any variables determined when the spell was cast (including its caster level) remain as determined by the caster.

The original caster can be affected by his own spell, though he receives a +2 circumstance bonus on any saving throw allowed against it.

If the spell is dismissible and the incantatrix wishes to dismiss it, she must make a second successful opposed caster level check to do so.

If she fails, the spell remains in effect and control reverts to the original caster.

Improved Metamagic (Su): At 10th level, an incantatrix has mastered metamagic to such an extent that whenever she uses a metamagic feat, the required increase in spell level (if any) is reduced by one (minimum +1 spell level).

For example, a wizard incantatrix could prepare a quickened fireball as a 6th-level spell instead of a 7th-level spell.

This benefit also applies to the incantatrix's other class abilities.

Thus, the DC for using her metamagic effect or cooperative metamagic ability is reduced appropriately for the metamagic feats involved, and she spends fewer charges when using metamagic spell trigger.

JUSTICIAR OF TYR

As servants of the god of justice, priests of Tyr are expected to be paragons of law and order who embody the principles espoused by the Maimed God at all times.

Justiciars are the very elite of Tyr's mortal servants, and they act as living embodiments of their god's portfolio. They battle lawlessness and injustice with the same fervor that paladins battle evil, neither asking nor giving quarter in their quest to bring perfect, utopian order to Faerûn. Some individual justiciars are permanently stationed in large cities with a strong Tyrran presence to serve as judges or magistrates.

Others are assigned to travel frontier regions such as the North and establish law and civil order in the small towns that dot the wildlands of Faerûn.

High-level justiciars sometimes travel to the planes of Chaos to strike directly against outsiders such as slaadi or demons.

Clerics and paladins make up the vast majority of justiciars, but a fair number come from the ranks of multiclass fighter/clerics, and a few were rangers before taking up the prestige class.

Rogue/cleric justiciars are very rare, but not completely unknown.

Multiclass monks, sorcerers, and wizards, however, are all but unheard of among the ranks of the justiciars.

Because of alignment restrictions, barbarians, bards, and druids are never justiciars of Tyr.

Paladins of Tyr may freely multiclass as justiciars of Tyr. Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a justiciar of Tyr, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Diplomacy 7 ranks, Knowledge ([any one region] local) 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 6 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Patron Deity: Tyr.

CLASS SKILLS

The justiciar of Tyr's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (local) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the justiciar of Tyr prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Justiciars of Tyr are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, but not with any armor or shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new justiciar of Tyr level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class granted her access to 2nd-level spells before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of justiciar to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class granted her access to 2nd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class that granted access to 2nd-level spells before she became a justiciar of Tyr, she must decide to which class she adds each level of justiciar for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Detect Chaos (Sp): At 1st level, the justiciar of Tyr may use detect chaos at will (caster level equals justiciar of Tyr's divine caster level).

Smite Anarchy (Su): Once per day, a 1st-level justiciar of Tyr may attempt to smite a chaotic opponent with one normal melee attack.

She adds her Charisma bonus (if any) to the attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per justiciar of Tyr level.

For example, a 4th-level justiciar of Tyr armed with a longsword would deal 1d8+4 points of damage, plus any additional bonuses from high strength or magical effects that normally apply.

If a justiciar of Tyr accidentally smites a creature that is not chaotic, the smite has no effect but is still used up for that day.

The justiciar can use this ability twice per day at 5th level and three times per day at 10th level.

Bureaucratic Knowledge (Ex): Although battling the forces of chaos is one of the primary functions of the justiciar, she is also expected to have a thorough grasp of legal processes in civilizations all across Faerûn.

Beginning at 2nd level, the character gains a bonus equal to her justiciar of Tyr level on all Knowledge and Gather Information checks related to laws or legal proceedings (such as recalling whether carrying weapons is illegal in a certain city or researching proper courtroom etiquette).

She also gains the same bonus on Charisma-based skill or ability checks made to argue legal matters.

Axiomatic Spellcasting (Ex): When the justiciar of Tyr reaches 3rd level, her devotion to the cause of law infuses and empowers her spells.

The save DC (if any) for any spell with the lawful descriptor that she casts increases by +1.

This increase rises to +2 at 9th level.

Detect Lie (Sp): Beginning at 4th level, the justiciar of Tyr may use detect lie (caster level equals justiciar of Tyr's divine caster level) once per day.

Maimed God's Boon (Su): Tyr's hand shelters his most faithful servants, protecting them from the ravages of disorder and anarchy.

At 5th level, the justiciar of Tyr gains a bonus equal to her Charisma bonus (if any) on all saving throws against spells with the chaotic descriptor and against the spell-like and supernatural abilities of chaotic outsiders.

This bonus stacks with that provided by the paladin's divine grace ability.

(Thus, a paladin/justiciar adds her Charisma bonus twice to saving throws against chaotic effects).

Order's Calm (Su): Once per day with her touch, a justiciar of at least 7th level may negate any of the following effects: heroism, rage, symbol of insanity, any fear effect, or a barbarian's rage ability.

To use this ability on an unwilling target, the justiciar must make a successful melee touch attack, and the target receives a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 justiciar of Tyr level + justiciar of Tyr's Cha modifier) to avoid the effect.

Blade of Justice (Su): At 8th level, the justiciar of Tyr may imbue her melee weapon with the raw power of justice. Once per day per point of Charisma bonus (minimum once per day), the justiciar may cause any melee weapon she is currently wielding to behave as an axiomatic weapon (dealing an extra 2d6 points of damage against chaotic foes). If the justiciar's weapon already has this enhancement, it gains no further benefit.

Each usage of this ability is a free action, and the effect lasts for 1 round.

Aura of Absolute Law (Su): Upon attaining 10th level, the justiciar of Tyr has proven herself such a shining beacon of order and justice that chaos cannot stand against her. She is surrounded by a constant dispel chaos effect at all times.

Driving a chaotic outsider back to its home plane or dispelling a chaotic enchantment spell temporarily discharges and ends this effect, but the justiciar may reactivate it as a free action on her next turn.

EX-JUSTICIARS OF TYR

A justiciar of Tyr who slips into a nonlawful alignment or willingly commits an unjust act (such as robbing, assaulting, or murdering an innocent) loses access to her spellcasting abilities and all justiciar class features except weapon and armor proficiencies and bureaucratic knowledge.

She regains her lost abilities and advancement potential if she atones for her actions (see the atonement spell on page 201 of the Player's Handbook).

MAIDEN OF PAIN

The goddess Loviatar is the divine embodiment of many of the evil acts and fetishes described in Book of Vile Darkness.

The ultimate sadist and the patron of both sadists and masochists, the Willing Whip is dedicated to pain and punishment.

Loviatar's most dedicated servants, the maidens of pain, are depraved women who literally make pain their meat and drink.

They supplement their addiction to dealing pain with an addiction to agony—the drug also known as liquid pain. Maidens of pain are drawn from the elite ranks of Loviatar's fundamentally twisted clergy, and they are the most warped of her clerics.

A few have levels in other classes besides cleric, most commonly rogue or assassin.

Maiden of pain NPCs work outside Loviatar's mainstream church, moving from place to place to ensure that the goddess's will is carried out.

They serve as envoys, secret agents, and inquisitors of the church.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a maiden of pain, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Gender: Female.

Skill: Intimidate 4 ranks.

Feat: Violate Spell (Book of Vile Darkness).

Spells: Able to cast masochism and sadism as divine spells (Book of Vile Darkness).

Patron Deity: Loviatar.

Special: The candidate must have used the drug agony (liquid pain) (Book of Vile Darkness).

CLASS SKILLS

The maiden of pain's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the maiden of pain prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Maidens of pain gain proficiency with the whip, but not with any armor or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: Beginning at 2nd level, when a new maiden of pain level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in cleric.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of maiden of pain to the level of cleric, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

Agony Addiction (Ex): A maiden of pain gains a permanent addiction to the drug agony, also known as liquid pain. However, her addiction to the drug is mild and cannot grow worse.

Each day that she goes without a dose of agony, she takes 1d3 points of Dexterity damage.

In addition, the negative effects of the drug are blunted by her intimate familiarity with pain.

The initial effect of a dose of agony is to stun her for 1d4–1 rounds and force her to take only a single action each round for 1d4 minutes after that.

Extra Domain: A 1st-level maiden of pain gains access to the Pain domain if she does not already have it, or another domain offered by Loviatar if she does.

She gains the granted power of this third domain and can choose from its spell list as well as those of her other domains when selecting her domain spells for the day. She can still cast only one domain spell at each level (1st through 9th) per day, but now she has three choices instead of two at each spell level.

Lasher (Su): A maiden of pain can use a whip to deliver touch attacks.

This ability effectively gives her 15-foot reach with a touch spell or with her pain touch ability.

If she desires, she can make a normal attack with the whip when delivering a touch effect, but in this case she must make a successful melee attack rather than a touch attack.

A maiden of pain can deliver a touch spell through her whip even against creatures that are normally unaffected by whip attacks.

Pain Touch (Su): Once per day, a 1st-level maiden of pain can use a melee touch attack to deliver wracking pain to a single opponent.

If she succeeds on the touch attack, the opponent must make a Fortitude saving throw (DC 10 + maiden of pain level + maiden of pain's Wis modifier).

A creature that fails this saving throw is stunned for 1 round, until just before the maiden of pain's next action.

Constructs, oozes, plants, undead, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to critical hits can't be stunned.

The maiden of pain can use this ability twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 10th level.

Improved Trip (Ex): At 3rd level, a maiden of pain gains the benefits of the Improved Trip feat when she is using a whip to make the trip attempt.

She need not meet the prerequisites for the feat, but she can use it only when wielding a whip.

Improved Disarm (Ex): A 6th-level maiden of pain gains the benefits of the Improved Disarm feat when she is using a whip to make the disarm attempt.

She need not meet the prerequisites of the feat, but she can use it only when wielding a whip.

MARTYRED CHAMPION OF ILMATER

The church of Ilmater is well known both for the number of martyrs it generates and for the high degree of reverence it pays them.

It is the only church that has a saint called “the Twice-Martyred”, and many of Ilmater’s followers hope to follow the example of St. Sollars.

A martyred champion of Ilmater is halfway there. Having already offered his life in heroic sacrifice once, he perseveres in Ilmater’s faith, ready and willing to be martyred again should the circumstances demand it.

Martyred champions of Ilmater come from all character classes, since the path to martyrdom is universal.

The class offers a mixture of unique benefits and advancement in a character’s previous career.

Martyred champions stand outside of Ilmater’s church hierarchy, since they are practically objects of veneration already.

They are free agents, utterly devoted to their deity’s cause, and powerful champions in the fight against evil and suffering.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a martyred champion of Ilmater, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Lawful good.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 4 ranks, any one skill 9 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Nimbus of Light (Book of Exalted Deeds).

Patron Deity: Ilmater.

Special: Must have died in heroic sacrifice and been returned to life.

CLASS SKILLS

The martyred champion of Ilmater’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Int), Ride (Dex), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the martyred champion of Ilmater prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Martyred champions of Ilmater gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When the character attains an even-numbered martyred champion level, he has a choice of benefit.

He can gain new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class, or he can gain a bonus feat of his choice.

He must meet any prerequisites for a feat in order to select it.

If he chooses the spellcasting level, he does not gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of martyred champion to the level of some other spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one spellcasting class before he became a martyred champion of Ilmater, he must decide to which class he adds each level of martyred champion for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

A martyred champion of Ilmater is free to choose the bonus feat at one opportunity and the spellcasting level the next time the decision arises, or vice versa.

A character who is not a spellcaster must choose the bonus feat.

Diehard (Ex): At 1st level, a martyred champion of Ilmater gains Diehard as a bonus feat if he does not already have it.

Unarmed Strike (Ex): A martyred champion of Ilmater fights as his deity does—unarmed.

At 1st level, he gains Improved Unarmed Strike as a bonus feat if he does not already have it.

Like a monk, a martyred champion can attack with either fist interchangeably, or with elbows, knees, or feet.

This ability allows him to make unarmed strikes with his hands full and never as an off-hand attack. Usually a martyred champion's unarmed strikes deal lethal damage, but he can choose to deal nonlethal damage instead with no penalty on his attack roll.

He has the same choice to deal lethal or nonlethal damage while grappling.

A martyred champion's unarmed strike is treated both as a manufactured weapon and as a natural weapon for the purpose of spells and effects that enhance or improve either type (such as the magic fang and magic weapon spells).

At 1st level, a martyred champion's unarmed strike deals 1d6 points of damage if he is Medium, 1d4 if he is Small, or 1d8 if he is Large.

At 4th level, this damage increases to 1d8 if he is Medium, 1d6 if he is Small, or 1d10 if he is Large.

At 8th level, his unarmed damage increases again to 1d10 if he is Medium, 1d8 if he is Small, or 2d8 if he is Large.

Fear Immunity (Ex): A 2nd-level martyred champion of Ilmater is immune to fear (magical or otherwise).

Greater Endurance (Ex): At 3rd level, a martyred champion gains a +4 sacred bonus on all the checks and saves improved by the Endurance feat.

Because this is a sacred bonus, it stacks with the benefit of the Endurance feat.

Divine Grace (Su): At 4th level, a martyred champion of Ilmater gains a bonus equal to his Charisma bonus (if any) on all saving throws.

Holy Suffering (Su): Beginning at 5th level, whenever a martyred champion of Ilmater takes at least 50 points of damage in a single round and survives, he is surrounded by a radiant glow signaling Ilmater's favor.

He gains a sacred bonus on attack rolls, saving throws, and skill checks equal to +1 for every 10 points of damage he took in the previous round.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to his martyred champion level.

Although this effect is similar to that of the masochism spell, this ability is not evil.

Damage Reduction (Su): At 7th level, the martyred champion gains damage reduction 10/evil.

At 10th level, his damage reduction improves to 15/evil.

Communion (Su): Starting at 9th level, a martyred champion of Ilmater is so intimate with his deity that he can ask a single question each day as if casting a commune spell.

Using this ability costs 10 XP.

Sustenance (Ex): A 9th-level martyred champion of Ilmater no longer needs to eat, drink, or breathe.

He still suffers hunger pangs and burning lungs if he does not eat or breathe, but such sensations are to be expected and—like most pain—do not indicate a real need.

He takes no nonlethal damage and suffers no other ill effects from hunger, thirst, suffocation, or drowning.

MONK OF THE LONG DEATH

Scattered across Faerûn, the monks of the long death are members of a macabre, secretive order of scholars seeking to understand the true nature of death.

They do not care about the soul or the afterlife—only about the actual process of death, specifically its effects on living tissue.

Their organization is strongest in Thay, but outposts are scattered throughout Faerûn, even in the Silver Marches. Monks make up the majority of the candidates for this prestige class, but clerics of the dark gods of death (such as Velsharoon, Kiaransalee, and even the dead god Myrkul) are fairly common as well.

Necromancers, assassins, and other characters who are fascinated with death round out the order's numbers.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a monk of the long death, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Craft (alchemy) 5 ranks, Craft (poisonmaking) 7 ranks, Heal 3 ranks, Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Base Will Save Bonus: +5.

Special: The candidate must be inducted into the monks of the long death via a secret ceremony consisting of various morbid and hideous acts designed to test his resolve.

CLASS SKILLS

The monk of the long death's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Disguise (Cha), Forgery (Int), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), Speak Language (none), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the monk of the long death prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Monks of the long death gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Deathguard (Ex): At 1st level, the monk of the long death gains a +1 bonus on saving throws against death effects. This bonus increases by 1 at every odd-numbered level (to +2 at 3rd level, +3 at 5th level, +4 at 7th level, and +5 at 9th level).

Monk Abilities (Ex): A monk of the long death has the unarmed damage, AC bonus, and unarmored speed bonus of a monk whose level is equal to his monk of the long death level (see Table 3–10: The Monk on page 40 of the Player's Handbook).

If he also has monk levels, his levels in the two classes stack for the purpose of determining these abilities.

Poison Use: Monks of the long death are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Macabre Shroud (Ex): Monks of the long death are disturbing and even frightening to most people, so those who see them tend to forget them as quickly as possible. When a monk of the long death reaches 2nd level, the DC of any Gather Information, bardic knowledge, or similar check made to learn about him increases by an amount equal to his monk of the long death level.

Death Knell (Sp): At 3rd level, a monk of the long death may use death knell once per day (caster level equals monk of the long death level).

Death Attack (Ex): At 6th level, the monk of the long death gains the ability to make a death attack.

This ability functions like the assassin ability of the same name, except that the save DC is 10 + monk of the long death level + the monk of the long death's Int modifier (see page 180 of the Dungeon Master's Guide for more information).

If the monk of the long death also has the death attack ability from another class (such as assassin), levels of that class stack with his monk of the long death levels for the purpose of determining the save DC.

Death Touch (Su): Once per day, a 10th-level monk of the long death may make a death touch attack.

This ability functions like the Death domain's granted power, except that the required die roll is 1d6 per monk of the long death level.

If the monk of the long death also has the death touch ability from another class (such as cleric), levels of that class stack with his monk of the long death levels for the purpose of determining the save DC.

EX-MONKS OF THE LONG DEATH

Any monk of the long death who betrays the secrets of the order, or even attempts to leave the organization, immediately becomes the target of assassins.

These assassins begin with a EL equal to the monk of the long death's character level (whether a single assassin of the same level, or several of lower levels), but each failed assassination attempt increases the EL of the next group sent out by 1.

If the former monk of the long death survives an assassination attempt by a group with an EL 5 higher than his character level, the monks of the long death stop wasting their resources on him.

MORNINGLORD OF LATHANDER

The Church of Lathander is well known and highly respected across Faerûn.

A large part of that respect comes from Lathander's elite priests, who are known as the morninglords.

Morninglords are, in many ways, the epitome of the classical cleric archetype—they are kindly healers and advisors, stalwart protectors, and implacable foes of the undead.

Because morninglords believe it is their duty to bring Lathander's light to all the dark places of the world, they often travel the breadth of Faerûn, preaching the glories of their god to any who will listen and smiting his foes wherever they appear.

Clerics comprise the majority of morninglord candidates, but paladins of Lathander frequently hear the calling as well.

Multiclass fighters, and more rarely rangers, sometimes join the ranks of the morninglords as well, but other classes are very rare.

Paladins of Lathander can freely multiclass as morninglords of Lathander.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a morninglord of Lathander, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any good.

Skills: Craft (any) 4 ranks, Diplomacy 7 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks, Perform (any) 2 ranks.

Feat: Improved Turning.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells, one of which must be daylight.

Patron Deity: Lathander.

CLASS SKILLS

The morninglord of Lathander's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Knowledge (history) (Int), Knowledge (the planes) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the morninglord of Lathander prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Morninglords of Lathander gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new morninglord of Lathander level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class granted her access to 3rd-level spells before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that she adds the level of morninglord of Lathander to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class granted her access to 3rd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class that granted access to 3rd-level spells before she became a morninglord of Lathander, she must decide to which class she adds each level of morninglord for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bane of the Restless (Ex): The character's morninglord of Lathander levels stack with her levels in any other class that grants the ability to turn undead for the purpose of turning attempts.

Lathander's Light (Su): Whenever a morninglord casts a spell with the light descriptor, its area is doubled.

Creative Fire (Ex): Morninglords are creative, expressive people, much like their god.

At 2nd level, the character gains a bonus equal to her morninglord of Lathander level on all Craft and Perform checks.

Daylight (Sp): At 3rd level, the morninglord of Lathander may use daylight once per day (caster level equals morninglord of Lathander's divine caster level).

Searing Ray (Sp): A 4th level, a morninglord of Lathander may use searing ray once per day (caster level equals morninglord of Lathander's divine caster level).

If this ability is used against undead, the damage increases as if the Empower Spell feat had been applied.

Greater Turning (Su): Once per day, a morninglord of at least 5th level may use greater turning.

This ability functions like the granted power of the Sun domain.

At 9th level, she may use this ability twice per day.

If the morninglord of Lathander already has access to the Sun domain, she gains an extra use per day of greater turning at 5th level and at 9th level.

Blessing of Dawn (Su): The sight of the morning sun is an inspirational vision for all morninglords.

Beginning at 6th level, a morninglord of Lathander gains a +2 morale bonus on Will saves from sunrise until noon.

This ability is in effect only while she can see the sun; the effect is suppressed any time she is deprived of the sight of it during this period.

Maximize Turning (Su): Once per day, a morninglord of at least 7th level can automatically achieve the maximum possible result on a turning damage roll.

Rejuvenation of the Morn (Su): Dawn is a powerful symbol of rebirth and renewal.

Once per tenday, a morninglord of at least 8th level may spend one uninterrupted hour before dawn praying to Lathander.

As soon as the sun rises after this prayer ritual, she gains one benefit of her choice from the following list.

- Healing up to full normal hit points (self only).
- Removal of any poisons or diseases (self only).

This effect does not restore ability damage or ability drain caused by poison or disease.

- Full restoration of ability damage due to one poison or disease.

If the morninglord's prayers are interrupted for even a single round, the attempt is ruined, and she must wait a full tenday to try again.

Aura of Radiance (Su): When the morninglord of Lathander reaches 10th level, the light of Lathander shines perpetually upon her.

No matter how dark it is, the morninglord sees as though the conditions were identical to the outdoors at sunrise.

This ability functions like darkvision out to 60 feet, except that the morninglord sees in color.

The morninglord also gains a +2 sacred bonus on saving throws against spells with the darkness descriptor and a +2 sacred bonus to Armor Class against attacks from undead creatures.

PURPLE DRAGON KNIGHT

The famed Purple Dragons make up the bulk of Cormyr's standing army.

These highly trained soldiers, coupled with the fearsome War Wizards of Cormyr, have defended the Forest Kingdom from all manner of threats, from savage humanoids to the mysterious shades.

The Purple Dragon knight, one of the army's high-ranking officers, can command from ten to a hundred or more soldiers on the battlefield.

Being awarded the rank of Purple Dragon knight is a great honor for any Cormyrian.

Fighters, rangers, and paladins make up the majority of the Purple Dragon knights, but a few are bards, clerics, or rogues.

Sorcerers and wizards, while not outright forbidden from joining the Purple Dragons, almost always join the War Wizards, Cormyr's elite brigade of combat-trained spellcasters, instead.

Barbarians, druids, and monks seldom join the ranks of the Purple Dragon knights, being either too undisciplined or too uncivilized.

Having levels in this prestige class implies at least a nominal degree of military service in Cormyr, and thus the class might not be appropriate for all campaigns.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Purple Dragon knight, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil and nonchaotic.

Region: The candidate must have Cormyr as his home region or have 8 ranks in Knowledge (Cormyr local).

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Diplomacy or Intimidate 1 rank, Listen 2 ranks, Ride 2 ranks, Spot 2 ranks.

Feats: Leadership, Mounted Combat.

Special: The candidate must be a member of the Purple Dragons.

CLASS SKILLS

The Purple Dragon knight's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Diplomacy (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (Cormyr local) (Int), Knowledge (tactics) (Int), Ride (Dex), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Purple Dragon knight prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Purple Dragon knights gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Heroic Shield (Ex): Beginning at 1st level, when the Purple Dragon knight uses the aid another action (see page 154 of the Player's Handbook) to improve an ally's AC, his effort grants a +4 circumstance bonus instead of the normal +2.

Rallying Cry (Su): Three times per day, a Purple Dragon knight can utter a powerful shout (usually "For Cormyr!") that grants him a +1 morale bonus on his next attack roll and increases his land speed by 5 feet until his next turn. These same benefits also extend to each of his allies within 60 feet.

Traditionally, the rallying cry is used when a formation of soldiers is about to charge.

Rallying cry is a mind-affecting ability.

Inspire Courage (Su): Once per day at 2nd level, the Purple Dragon knight can make an inspirational speech to bolster his allies and himself against fear and improve the group's combat abilities.

This ability functions like the inspire courage function of the bardic music ability.

Each affected creature, including the knight himself, gains a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against charm or fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

To gain these benefits, an ally must hear the Purple Dragon knight speak for 1 full round.

The effect lasts as long as the ally can hear the knight speak and for 5 rounds afterward.

While speaking, the Purple Dragon knight can fight, but he cannot cast spells or activate magic items by either spell completion (such as scrolls) or command word (such as wands).

At 4th level, the Purple Dragon knight may inspire courage one additional time per day.

Fear (Sp): Once per day, a 3rd-level or higher Purple Dragon knight may evoke a fear effect that functions like the spell of the same name (caster level equals Purple Dragon knight's character level).

Oath of Wrath (Su): At 4th level, the Purple Dragon knight may select a single opponent within 60 feet and swear to defeat him.

For the duration of the encounter, the knight gains a +2 morale bonus on melee attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saving throws, and skill checks made against the challenged target.

The effect is negated immediately if the Purple Dragon knight attacks or targets a spell against any hostile creature other than the challenged target.

Attacks of opportunity and spells cast on allies do not count, nor do spells such as fireball that may catch other creatures in their areas.

The Purple Dragon knight can use oath of wrath once per day.

Final Stand (Su): Once per day, a Purple Dragon knight of at least 5th level can inspire his troops to a heroic effort.

When he uses this ability, the knight gains 2d10 temporary hit points, and so does each ally within 10 feet of him.

This ability can affect a maximum number of creatures equal to the character's Purple Dragon knight level + the Purple Dragon knight's Cha modifier, and the effect lasts for an equal number of rounds.

RUNECASTER

Though originally developed by the dwarves and giants, the ability to create runes of power has spread far beyond the hills and mountains.

Those who choose to master this ability, known as runecasters, can create incredibly potent symbols that last for multiple uses and can be triggered without so much as a touch.

An established runecaster's belongings are usually adorned with many runes, which make them not only impressive-looking items, but also true threats to thieves.

Since a majority of those who practice this technique are dwarves and giants, it is not surprising that most runecasters come from the cleric or adept class.

Some rangers and paladins have also chosen to become runecasters, particularly since the Thunder Blessing has resulted in many young dwarves leaving home to explore the wilderness.

A few rare druids have chosen the path of the runecaster as well, although generally only in places where druids are so scarce that they have to rely on runes to protect a large area.

Runecasting clerics and paladins use their abilities to protect their temples and holy items, while ranger runecasters use them to guard trails, protect lairs of threatened animals, and defend natural refuges.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a runecaster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Spellcraft 8 ranks, Craft (calligraphy, gemcutting, metalworking, stonemasonry, or woodcarving) 8 ranks.

Feat: Inscribe Rune.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The runecaster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (arcana), (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the runecaster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Runecasters gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new runecaster level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever divine spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of runecaster to the level of whatever other divine spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one divine spellcasting class that granted access to 3rd-level spells before he became a runecaster, he must decide to which class he adds each level of runecaster for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Rune Craft (Ex): At 1st level, the runecaster gains a +1 bonus on Craft checks made to inscribe runes.

This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level and to +3 at 7th level.

Improved Runecasting (Su): As a runecaster rises in level, he gains the ability to create runes that function more than once and have different kinds of triggers.

These extra features increase the cost of the rune, as shown on the table.

Number of Uses or Trigger Method	Base Price	Runecaster Level ¹
One	Spell level ¹ × caster level × 50 gp	—
Charges ²	Spell level ¹ × caster level × charges × 50 gp	3rd
Charges per day ³	Spell level ¹ × caster level × charges × 400 gp	8th
Permanent	(until Spell level ¹ × caster level × 2,000 gp dispelled) ⁴	8th
Works when touched	Base cost	—
Works when read	Base cost × 2 or passed	3rd

1 A 0-level spell counts as 1/2 level.

2 The minimum runecaster level to inscribe a rune of this type. “—” indicates the default ability granted by the Inscribe Rune feat.

3 If the spell has a component or XP cost, add that cost times the number of charges to the base price of the rune.

4 If the spell has a component or XP cost, add 100 times that cost to the base price of the rune.

Works When Read or Passed: Any attempt to study, identify, or fathom a rune’s meaning counts as “reading” the rune. Passing through any portal that bears a rune counts as “passing” it.

To affect a target, a rune must have an unbroken line of effect to it and be within 30 feet of it.

A rune that is triggered when passed can be set for almost any special condition the runecaster specifies.

Runes can be set to trigger according to physical characteristics (such as height or weight) or creature type, subtype, or race (such as drow or aberration). They can also trigger based on good, evil, law, or chaos, or a creature’s patron deity.

They cannot, however, be set to trigger by class, Hit Dice, or level.

Runes respond to invisible creatures normally but are not triggered by creatures that travel past them ethereally.

When placing a rune with a “pass” trigger, a runecaster can specify a password or phrase that prevents the rune from triggering.

Rune Power (Ex): When the runecaster reaches 2nd level, his runes become more potent.

The DC for all attempts to erase, dispel, or disable his runes, and for caster level checks to overcome the spell resistance of their targets, increases by 1.

This increase does not apply to the DC of the saving throw (if any) to resist a rune’s effect.

This increase rises to 2 at 5th level and to 3 at 9th level.

Maximize Rune (Ex): At 6th level, the runecaster can create runes whose effects are maximized, as if by the Maximize Spell feat, without altering the level of the spell used to create the rune.

Maximizing a rune adds 5 to the DC of the Craft check required to inscribe it.

Rune Chant (Ex): A 10th-level runecaster may cast any divine spell to which he has access at +1 caster level by tracing a rune in the air as an extra somatic component.

For spells with a casting time of 1 action, using this ability increases the casting time to 1 full round.

The casting time for all other spells increases by 1 round when rune chant is used.

This ability cannot be used on stilled spells, and it does not function with the maximize rune ability.

SHAARYAN HUNTER

Though they almost never leave their homeland, Shaaryans have a reputation as wily bandits, masterful horsemen, and uncanny hunters.

While allegations of banditry are not universally true, nearly every able-bodied Shaaryan is a capable rider, and a goodly number of them are indeed trackers and hunters of no small skill.

On the backs of their swift horses, Shaaryan hunters can run down even the fastest prey and either spear it with a lance or pelt it with arrows from horseback.

Most Shaaryan hunters stay within their homeland, providing food and materials for their tribes, but a rare few venture out into Faerûn to seek adventure.

Such nomads usually become wilderness guides or bounty hunters.

Rangers and barbarians make up the majority of Shaaryan hunter candidates, but rogues are reasonably common as well.

Druids very rarely take up the life of the hunter, and members of the other classes almost never have the wilderness survival skills necessary for the prestige class. Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Shaaryan hunter, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Region: The Shaar.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Handle Animal 4 ranks, Ride 6 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Animal Affinity, Mounted Archery, Mounted Combat, Track.

CLASS SKILLS

The Shaaryan hunter's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (Shaar local) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Shaaryan hunter prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shaaryan hunters gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Ride Bonus (Ex): At 1st level, the Shaaryan hunter gains a +2 competence bonus on Ride checks.

This bonus increases to +4 at 4th level, to +6 at 7th level, and to +8 at 10th level.

Mounted Tracking (Ex): Shaaryan hunters are skilled at following tracks from horseback.

Beginning at 2nd level, a Shaaryan hunter may move at one-half her mount's base speed without taking penalties on Survival checks made to track.

At 6th level, she may move at her mount's full speed while tracking with no penalty on checks made to track.

Burst of Speed (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, the Shaaryan hunter can urge her mount to move at double its normal speed for 1 round.

During this round, the mount charges at double the new speed and runs at quadruple the new speed.

This ability is usable once per day without danger to the mount.

If the Shaaryan hunter attempts to use the ability a second time in the same day, her mount must make a successful Fortitude save (DC 20) or take 1d6 points of damage.

Each additional time she uses the ability in the same day, her mount must make a new Fortitude save at the same DC, and the damage increases by 1d6 points over that for the previous attempt.

Thus, the third use of this ability in one day deals 2d6 points of damage, the fourth use deals 3d6 points of damage, and so on.

Mounted Accuracy (Ex): Shaaryan hunters are almost as skilled as the legendary Tuigan Horde when firing a bow from horseback.

Beginning at 4th level, the Shaaryan hunter gains a +2 competence bonus on ranged attack rolls made from horseback.

When she reaches 9th level, this bonus increases to +4. Spirited Charge (Ex): At 5th level, the Shaaryan hunter receives Spirited Charge as a bonus feat if she does not already have it.

She need not meet the prerequisites for this feat.

Long Riding (Ex): At 7th level, the Shaaryan hunter has learned how to coax extra endurance from her mount so that she can ride longer and at a higher average speed. When traveling overland, her mount moves at 150% of its normal overland speed.

This ability does not increase the creature's speed in combat.

Born in the Saddle (Ex): When the Shaaryan hunter reaches 8th level, her mastery of horsemanship enables her to perform unbelievable stunts.

Once per day while mounted, she may elect to make a Ride check in place of any one attack roll, saving throw, or skill check.

She uses her total Ride modifier but gains no modifiers from other sources (such as a weapon's enhancement bonus or a feat that increases her saving throw bonus).

SHADOW ADEPT

Some spellcasters who discover the existence of the Shadow Weave are cautious about using it, altering their magic slowly to take advantage of its effects.

Others are more reckless, hurling themselves into the abyss of the Shadow Weave immediately to acquire all the gifts available to the casual student and discover secrets unavailable to all but the most dedicated.

These latter spellcasters are the shadow adepts, who make great sacrifices with respect to some aspects of the Art in order to reap greater benefits elsewhere.

Most shadow adepts were previously sorcerers or wizards, and these are the ones who stand to gain the greatest power from adopting this path.

Any spellcaster can tap the Shadow Weave, however, and a few bards, druids, and rangers have also been known to make this choice.

Among clerics, only the followers of Shar are common in the ranks of the shadow adepts.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadow adept, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Spellcraft 8 ranks.

Feats: Shadow Weave Magic, any one metamagic feat.

Spells: Able to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadow adept's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the shadow adept prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadow adepts gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new shadow adept level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, improved chance of turning or rebuking undead, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of shadow adept to the level of whatever other spellcasting class granted him access to 3rd-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly. If a character had more than one spellcasting class that granted access to 3rd-level spells before he became a shadow adept, he must decide to which class he adds each level of shadow adept for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Shadow Feats: At 1st level, a shadow adept gains Insidious Magic, Pernicious Magic, and Tenacious Magic as bonus feats if he doesn't already have them.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): At 2nd level, a shadow adept gains low-light vision if he doesn't already have it.

Shadow Defense (Ex): At 3rd level, a shadow adept gains resistance to the kinds of spells that are favored by the Shadow Weave.

He gains a +1 profane bonus on saving throws against spells from the schools of enchantment, illusion, and necromancy, as well as spells with the darkness descriptor. This bonus increases to +2 at 6th level and to +3 at 9th level. Shield of Shadows (Su): A shadow adept of at least 4th level can surround himself with a globe of purple-black force as a standard action.

This shield of shadows functions like a shield spell, granting him a +4 shield bonus to AC and absorbing magic missiles cast at him.

In addition, the shield of shadows provides concealment (20% miss chance) against melee and ranged attacks.

The shadow adept can see and reach through the shield, so it does not provide cover or concealment to opponents.

The shadow adept may use a shield of shadows for up to 1 round per caster level per day.

This duration need not be consecutive—the shadow adept may break it up into increments as small as 1 round if he so desires.

Creating or dismissing the shield of shadows is a standard action.

When the shadow adept reaches 8th level, the shield also grants him spell resistance equal to 12 + his shadow adept level, as if he were under the effect of a spell resistance spell.

Darkvision (Su): At 7th level, a shadow adept can see in the dark as though he were permanently affected by a darkvision spell.

Shadow Walk (Sp): A shadow adept of at least 7th level can use shadow walk once per day (caster level equals shadow adept level).

Shadow Double (Su): Once per day, a 10th-level shadow adept can use a standard action to create a double of himself woven from shadowstuff.

The double has the ability scores, base AC, hit points, saves, and attack bonuses of its creator, but no equipment.

(Any apparent clothing or equipment is nonfunctional).

Since it can use anything its creator can, the double can attack the creator's enemies if given a weapon or item with which to do so.

Alternatively, it can function as the target of a project image spell, duplicating the creator's actions and functioning as the origin of the creator's spells when it is within his direct line of sight.

Mentally commanding the double is a free action.

Using it as the originator of a spell counts as an action of the sort needed to cast the spell for both the creator and the double.

Causing either the creator or the double to leave the plane they share dismisses the double.

The double lasts 1 round per caster level.

The death of the double does not affect the shadow adept or vice versa.

If its creator dies, the shadow double still lasts until its duration expires.

SHADOW THIEF OF AMN

The organization known as the Shadow Thieves is the largest and most prosperous thieves' guild in all of Faerûn. Its success is derived from its system of interlocking guilds, each dedicated to the twin goals of profit and power.

From the organization's stronghold in Amn, this series of guilds controls the lion's share of all criminal operations along the Sword Coast, and it also reaches beyond that area into many other parts of Faerûn.

As a member of a Shadow Thieves' guild, a shadow thief of Amn knows only her own minions, her coworkers, and her superior.

This web of secrecy preserves the organization, because any members who are captured can sell out only a few others.

Most shadow thieves of Amn were previously rogues, although specialists in some criminal fields are more likely to have backgrounds as fighters or rangers.

Clerics of evil deities (particularly Mask and Shar) take up this path to fill certain roles in the field, and sorcerers and wizards also have important roles.

Shadow thieves excel at working with others, intimidating common folk, administering punitive beatings, and acquiring important contacts.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadow thief of Amn, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Bluff 3 ranks, Gather Information 3 ranks, Hide 8 ranks, Intimidate 3 ranks, Move Silently 3 ranks.

Feat: Persuasive.

Special: The candidate must be a member of a Shadow Thieves' guild.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadow thief of Amn's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Dex), Forgery (Int), Innuendo (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (local), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Pick Pocket (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the shadow thief of Amn prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadow thieves of Amn gain proficiency with all simple weapons and with light armor.

Doublespeak (Ex): A shadow thief of Amn is adept at talking her way out of tight places.

At 1st level, she gains a +2 bonus on all Bluff and Diplomacy checks.

Sneak Attack (Ex): This ability functions like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by 1d6 points at 1st level, by another 1d6 points at 3rd level, and another 1d6 points at 5th level.

If a shadow thief of Amn gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels) the bonuses on damage stack.

Furthermore, shadow thief of Amn levels stack with any other appropriate class levels (such as rogue or assassin) for the purpose of overcoming improved uncanny dodge.

Bonus Feat: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, a shadow thief of Amn gains a bonus feat of her choice from the following list: Acrobatic, Agile, Alertness, Blind-Fight, Combat Expertise, Deceitful, Deft Hands, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (hand crossbow or shuriken), Improved Feint, Leadership, Lightning Reflexes, Negotiator, Nimble Fingers, Persuasive, Track, Skill Focus (any guild thief class skill), Silent Spell, Stealthy, Still Spell, Weapon Finesse, Weapon Focus (any).

She must meet any prerequisites for a feat in order to select it.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 2nd level, a shadow thief of Amn gains the ability to react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to even be aware of it.

She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. (She still loses any Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized).

If a shadow thief of Amn already has the uncanny dodge ability from another class, she gains improved uncanny dodge (see the rogue class description in the Player's Handbook) instead.

Reputation (Ex): By the time she reaches 3rd level, a shadow thief's infamy grants her a +1 bonus to her Leadership score (see the Leadership feat description on page 106 of the Dungeon Master's Guide). This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level and to +3 at 5th level. Usually, a shadow thief of Amn who has an interest in collecting followers maintains a permanent base of operations within a city, which gives her an additional +2 bonus to her Leadership score.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 5th level, a shadow thief of Amn can no longer be flanked, since she can react to opponents on opposite sides of her as easily as she can react to a single attacker. This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack the shadow thief of Amn. The exception to this defense is that a rogue at least four levels higher than the shadow thief can flank her (and thus sneak attack her). If the shadow thief of Amn already has improved uncanny dodge, the levels from any other classes granting uncanny dodge stack for the purpose of determining the minimum rogue level required to flank her.

SLIME LORD

Though Ghaunadar is a member of the drow pantheon, he is not a drow god at all. The Lord of Slime is a primordial deity of slimes and oozes, revered by aboleths and ropers as well as outcast and rebellious drow. Slime lords, the most favored of Ghaunadar's servants, are not clerics; they are spies and infiltrators who can change their shapes in order to move unnoticed among members of any race. Though most begin their careers as humanoids, over time they become increasingly similar to the aberration servitors of Ghaunadar, which are known as ghaunadans. Slime lords come from all backgrounds, but most were once rogues or rogue/fighters. Clerics of Ghaunadar sometimes give up their spell progressions to become slime lords, and some merely dabble in the slime lord class to supplement their divine magic. Most slime lords are drow, though they can come from any race.

As servants of the god of outcasts, they are outcasts in any society—drow, surface elf, or other. In the Underdark, they lead small cults of Ghaunadar's followers, usually rebels against the rule of Lolth's clergy in drow cities.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a slime lord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skill: Disguise 6 ranks.

Feat: Willing Deformity (Book of Vile Darkness).

Patron Deity: Ghaunadar.

CLASS SKILLS

The slime lord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the slime lord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Slime lords gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks. Paralytic Slime (Ex): A slime lord's pseudopods are coated with slime that can paralyze a foe.

Any creature struck by a slime lord's natural attack must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 10 + slime lord level + slime lord's Con modifier) or be paralyzed for 1d4+1 rounds.

Pseudopods (Ex): The physical form of a slime lord is more mutable than that of a normal creature of his type.

As a move action, a slime lord can transform his hands into pseudopods or back into normal hands.

He can make two natural attacks with his pseudopods as a full attack action, or one attack as a standard action.

Each successful attack deals 1d6 points of damage.

The transformation lasts for up to 1 round per slime lord level, though the character can change his pseudopods back into hands before the expiration of the effect as a move action.

The slime lord can use this ability once per day at 1st level. Thereafter, he gains one additional use per day for every two slime lord levels.

Thus, he can use the ability twice per day at 3rd level, three times per day at 5th level, four times per day at 7th level, and five times per day at 9th level.

Charming Gaze (Su): A slime lord of at least 3rd level can activate a charming gaze for 1 round.

Any creature that meets the slime lord's gaze must make a Will save (DC 10 + slime lord level + slime lord's Cha modifier) or be affected as if by a charm monster spell (caster level equals slime lord's character level).

This ability is usable once per day per slime lord level.

Sleep Immunity (Ex): A slime lord of 4th level or higher is immune to sleep effects.

Alter Self (Su): A 5th-level or higher slime lord can change his form as though he were under the influence of the alter self spell.

He can use this ability at will, and any change to his form lasts until he uses the ability again or chooses to revert to his natural form.

Damage Reduction (Ex): When the slime lord reaches 7th level, his body is so mutable that he gains damage reduction 5/slashing or piercing.

Polymorph Immunity (Ex): An 8th-level or higher slime lord is immune to polymorphing.

Blindsight (Ex): When the slime lord reaches 9th level, his whole body acts as a sensory organ, granting him blindsight out to 60 feet.

No Discernible Anatomy (Ex): A 10th-level slime lord's form is so amorphous that he is no longer subject to critical hits or sneak attacks.

Furthermore, he gains immunity to poison, paralysis, and stunning.

SPELLGUARD OF SILVERMOON

As the bastion of civilization in the savage North, the city of Silvermoon attracts a great deal of attention from the fell creatures that inhabit the snow-shrouded forests.

Evil giants, trolls, dark elves, and creatures of an even fouler bent scheme to make the Gem of the North fall.

Fortunately for the Silvaeren, the city is well defended against such threats.

The Spellguard, Silvermoon's elite cadre of battle-trained arcane spellcasters, protects the city against the threat of hostile magic and aids the Knights in Silver against more mundane threats.

Sorcerers and wizards are the most likely characters to become spellguards.

At present, there are no bards in the Spellguard, but there is no reason why such a character might not join the organization.

Multiclass characters are rare in the Spellguard, but fighters and rogues with levels in arcane spellcasting classes are sought after for their versatility in the field.

Having levels in this prestige class implies at least a nominal degree of military service in Silvermoon.

Thus, the class might not be appropriate for all campaigns. Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spellguard of Silvermoon, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Region: Silvermoon or Silver Marches.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Spellcraft 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, any one metamagic feat.

Spells: Able to cast 4th-level arcane spells.

Special: The candidate must be accepted into the Spellguard.

CLASS SKILLS

The spellguard of Silvermoon's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the spellguard of Silvermoon prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Spellguards of Silvermoon gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks. Spells per Day/Spells Known: When a new spellguard of Silvermoon level is gained, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 4th-level spells before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, bard or assassin abilities, and so on), except for an increased effective level of spellcasting.

This essentially means that he adds the level of spellguard of Silvermoon to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class granted him access to 4th-level spells, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class that granted access to 4th-level spells before he became a spellguard of Silvermoon, he must decide to which class he adds each level of spellguard for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Obligation: The Spellguard is a military unit, not just a loose fraternity of mages.

As such, each spellguard of Silvermoon must spend at least two days out of every tenday on active duty, usually either guarding the walls of Silvermoon itself or patrolling the surrounding area with a detachment of the Knights in Silver.

Token: As a member of the Spellguard, a 1st-level spellguard of Silvermoon receives an adrath token—a small metal disk that allows him to cast spells that are normally forbidden by the mythal.

As long as he has this token in his possession, he may cast conjuration (summoning) spells, evocation [fire] spells, and spells with the teleportation descriptor within the wards of Silvermoon.

He may also freely use magic items that produce those effects.

This token does not magically appear in the spellguard's possession; he must return to Silvermoon to receive it from his superior.

Ward Attunement: Each 1st-level spellguard of Silvermoon is inducted formally into the order through an elaborate ceremony held in the High Palace of Silvermoon.

This ceremony attunes the spellguard to the mythal that surrounds Silvermoon without the 2,500 XP cost normally required.

See the sidebar for information on ward attunement.

Metamagic Feat: At 2nd level and again at 4th level, the spellguard may select any metamagic feat he does not already have as a bonus feat.

He must meet any prerequisites for a feat in order to select it.

Selective Spell (Su): Spellguards are specifically trained to minimize collateral damage when casting their combat spells.

Once per day per point of Intelligence bonus (minimum once per day), a spellguard of at least 3rd level may designate a single type (and subtype, if desired) of creature when casting a spell.

When a single creature type has multiple subtypes, the spellguard may choose to count only one of the subtypes or all of them, at his discretion.

At the spellguard's option, that type of creature is either the only type affected by the spell or the only type unaffected by it.

Inorganic material, objects, and anything else that does not have a creature type is affected normally.

Casting a selective spell requires a full-round action.

For example, suppose a spellguard is patrolling the forest around Silvermoon with a party of Knights in Silver made up of two humans, an elf, and a dwarf.

Suddenly, the group is rushed by goblins.

The spellguard uses his selective spell ability to cast a fireball, designating humanoid (goblinoid) as the only creature type affected.

The fireball detonates in the midst of the melee, and although the spellguard's companions are within the area of the spell, they are spared any ill effects.

At 5th level, the spellguard may designate multiple creature types and subtypes for a selective spell.

Each type or subtype so designated, however, uses up one additional use per day of his selective spell ability.

Spellguard (Su): The Spellguard was originally formed to protect High Lady Alustriel from personal attacks.

Though that purpose has largely become secondary to defending the city, spellguards still receive some training in serving as bodyguards.

At 4th level, the spellguard of Silvermoon may cast any personal-range defensive arcane spell on another character with a touch.

For this purpose, a defensive spell is one that improves AC, increases a saving throw modifier, or grants additional hit points (either by healing wounds or by bestowing temporary hit points).

Spell Power (Ex): At 5th level, the spellguard's effective caster level increases by 1 for the purpose of determining level-dependent variables and making caster level checks.

EX-SPELLGUARDS

A spellguard of Silvermoon who is derelict in his duty, betrays Silvermoon or the Silver Marches, or otherwise acts in a manner inappropriate for a military officer of his stature is cast out of the Spellguard.

His ward token is deactivated, and his attunement to the mythal is nullified.

He retains all the other class abilities of a spellguard of Silvermoon, but he can no longer advance in the prestige class.

He regains his abilities and advancement potential if he atones for his actions (see the atonement spell on page 201 of the Player's Handbook).

A character may at any time choose to retire from the Spellguard.

A retiree is expected to hand in his adrath token, but he retains all other class abilities except his obligation to serve.

A retired spellguard may no longer gain levels in this prestige class.

Under exceptional circumstances, however, a retired spellguard may reenlist and regain the ability to advance as a spellguard of Silvermoon.

YATHRINSHEE

Because she is a goddess of undeath, Kiaransalee favors servants who combine their clerical mastery of the undead with arcane research into negative energy and necromancy. Yathrinshees, the elite ranks of Kiaransalee's priests, are powerful masters of necromantic magic, both arcane and divine.

In order to become a yathrinshee, a priestess must have access to both divine and arcane magic.

Virtually all yathrinshees were clerics and wizards before adopting the prestige class, though a very few were sorcerers rather than wizards.

Most are specialist necromancers rather than generalist wizards.

The strict spellcasting requirements tend to keep members of other classes out of the yathrinshee class.

Yathrinshees are the leaders of Kiaransalee's secretive church wherever it is found.

They lead Kiaransalee's followers in worship and also in pursuing the church's goals—plotting revenge against the enemies of their goddess, killing her foes, and animating them as undead.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a yathrinshee, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Drow.

Gender: Female.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 7 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 7 ranks, Perform (sing) 3 ranks.

Feats: Lichloved (Book of Vile Darkness), Spell Focus (necromancy).

Spells: Able to cast animate dead as a divine spell and spectral hand as an arcane spell.

Patron Deity: Kiaransalee.

CLASS SKILLS

The yathrinshee's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Knowledge (all skills, taken individually) (Int), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the yathrinshee prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Yathrinshees gain no proficiency with any weapon, armor, or shield.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th, 8th, and 9th level, the character gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in an arcane and a divine spellcasting class that she belonged to before she added the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus metamagic or item creation feats, and so on), except for an increased effective caster level.

This essentially means that she adds the level of yathrinshee to the level of some other arcane and divine class the character has, then determines spells per day, spells known, and caster level accordingly.

For example, a 5th-level cleric/3rd-level wizard who takes three levels in yathrinshee has the same access to spells as a 7th-level cleric and a 5th-level wizard.

However, her wizard familiar doesn't gain any new abilities. If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class or more than one divine spellcasting class before she became a yathrinshee, she must decide to which class she adds each level of yathrinshee for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Rebuke Undead (Su): The character's yathrinshee levels stack with her cleric levels for the purpose of rebuking or commanding undead.

For example, a 5th-level cleric/3rd-level wizard/2nd-level yathrinshee rebukes undead as a 7th-level cleric.

Necromancer (Ex): The yathrinshee has unsurpassed power over death.

When she casts spells from the school of necromancy, all her spellcaster levels stack for the purpose of determining her effective caster level.

She does not gain higher-level spells any faster than normal or gain any additional spells per day, but the spells she casts are much more effective.

For example, a 5th-level cleric/3rd-level wizard/3rd-level yathrinshee has gained two effective level increases in both her cleric class and her wizard class, giving her the spellcasting ability of a 7th-level cleric and a 5th-level wizard.

Thus, when she casts any necromancy spell, whether it is arcane or divine, her effective caster level is 12th (cleric 7th + wizard 5th).

Threnody (Su): Once per day, a yathrinshee of 2nd level or higher can sing a song of lament that can unnerve opponents who are engaged in combat with an undead creature.

In effect, any undead within 30 feet of the yathrinshee gains a gaze attack identical to the unnerving gaze of a chain devil.

Any creature that meets the yathrinshee's eyes must make a Will save (DC 10 + yathrinshee level + yathrinshee's Cha modifier) or take a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 1d3 rounds because it sees the faces of departed loved ones or bitter enemies.

If an undead creature actually is the animated corpse of a friend or companion of the yathrinshee's opponent, the save DC increases by 2 and the penalty is doubled (to -4).

Death Ward (Su): A yathrinshee of 4th level or higher is immune to death effects and negative energy as though protected by a death ward spell.

An undead yathrinshee instead gains turn resistance +4. This benefit stacks with any existing turn resistance.

Curse of the Revenancer (Su): Any creature slain by a yathrinshee of 5th level or higher rises immediately as a zombie under her control.

Zone of Desecration (Su): At 7th level, the yathrinshee is continuously surrounded by a 20-foot-radius aura of negative energy.

The effect is otherwise identical to that of the desecrate spell.

Keening (Su): At 10th level, the yathrinshee can keen once per day. This ability works like the wail of the banshee spell, except that it affects any number of creatures within a 30-foot-radius spread centered on the yathrinshee.

city of the spider queen and book of vile darkness

The cult of Kiaransalee is on the rise among the drow of Faerûn (as described, in part, in the City of the Spider Queen adventure). As a deity of undeath and revenge, Kiaransalee has much in common with the demon prince Orcus, whom she once murdered and who remains, now that he has risen, her most implacable foe. Followers of Kiaransalee make frequent use of any option in Book of Vile Darkness that relates to undead, including the Lichloved feat, the lifedrinker prestige class, the new necromancy spells, and the new undead creatures.

The yathrinshee prestige class is a new vile option for clerics of Kiaransalee. If you are running the City of the Spider Queen adventure, you could recreate both Irae T'sarran and Cabrath Nelinderra as yathrinshees instead of single-class clerics. Be sure to equip them with plenty of vile spells and feats as well if you decide to do so.

ZHENTARIM SPY

The Zhentarim is among the most famed and feared “secret” organizations in Faerûn.

Its members have their hands in nearly every illicit business imaginable, from assassination to drug trafficking to slavery.

Though there are many diverse character types within its ranks, the Zhentarim spy is probably the one Faerûnians encounter most often—even if they never realize it. Most Zhentarim spies were previously rogues or bards, but a small number of monks, sorcerers, and wizards also find the job to their liking.

Fighters, barbarians, and rangers are usually too unsubtle for the tasks of a spy, while the types of clerics and druids the Zhentarim attract tend to have religious habits that make it difficult for them to blend in with others.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Zhentarim spy, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any evil.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Bluff 5 ranks, Disguise 5 ranks, Forgery 5 ranks,

Gather Information 5 ranks.

Feat: Deceitful.

CLASS SKILLS

The Zhentarim spy's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disable Device (Int), Disguise (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), Speak Language (None), Spot (Wis), Tumble (Dex), Use Magic Device (Cha), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the Zhentarim spy prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Zhentarim spies are proficient with all simple weapons, with light and medium armor, and with shields.

Armor check penalties for armor heavier than leather apply to the skills Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, Sleight of Hand, and Tumble, and double the normal armor check penalty applies to Swim checks.

Cover Identity (Ex): A Zhentarim spy is rigorously trained to establish nearly flawless cover identities.

For every distinct Craft or Profession skill in which she has at least 2 ranks, she may have one cover identity.

Each cover identity must be a specific person (such as “Jolan Turnbuckle, bread-baker for the town of Shadowdale”), not a generic description (such as “baker”). She may at any time end an existing cover identity and establish a new one in its place.

While operating under any of her cover identities, she gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks and a +2 bonus on Bluff and Gather Information checks.

For each additional 2 ranks (beyond the minimum 2) that the Zhentarim spy possesses in a cover identity's associated Craft or Profession skill, each of these bonuses increases by 1.

At the DM's discretion, these bonuses may be reduced or eliminated in regions where the cover identity would seem out of place (bakers from Shadowdale, for example, would attract suspicion in the ruins of Myth Drannor).

Establishing a new cover identity or replacing an old one means the Zhentarim spy must acquire documentation and personal effects, establish a place of business, and otherwise set up a believable second life.

This process takes 1d4 tendays, during which she may do nothing else, and costs 6d10 gp.

The Zhentarim spy does not need to set up a cover identity immediately for every Craft or Profession skill in which she has 2 ranks; she may wait until a good opportunity presents itself if desired.

For example, she might wish to hold a cover identity option in reserve to take advantage of the unlikely cover class ability (see below).

The cover identity ability does not provide any additional skills that might be necessary to make a cover identity believable, such as knowledge of the proper homeland, the ability to speak a foreign language, spellcasting ability, or the like.

Thus, Zhentarim spies generally pick cover identities that complement their existing skills.

Sneak Attack (Ex): This ability functions like the rogue ability of the same name.

The extra damage dealt increases by 1d6 points at 2nd level, and by another 1d6 points at 4th level.

If a Zhentarim spy gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack. Furthermore, Zhentarim spy levels stack with any other appropriate class levels (such as rogue or assassin) for the purpose of overcoming improved uncanny dodge.

Undetectable Alignment (Ex): At 2nd level, the Zhentarim spy's rigorous mental training enables her to cloud even divination spells.

This ability functions like the undetectable alignment spell, except that it is always active and, as an extraordinary ability, is subject to neither dispelling nor suppression by dead magic zones and the like.

Poison Use (Ex): At 3rd level, a Zhentarim spy receives training in the use of poison and never risks accidentally poisoning herself when applying poison to a blade.

Unlikely Cover (Ex): At 3rd level, the Zhentarim spy may designate a number of cover identities equal to her Charisma bonus (minimum one) as "unlikely covers".

In such a cover identity, she is disguised as someone drastically different from herself—a member of the opposite sex or a different race, or someone with a very different body shape.

She may need to spend the time to establish new cover identities if she does not have any appropriate identities available.

While she operates in an unlikely cover, her normal bonuses on Disguise, Bluff, and Gather Information checks for a cover identity are doubled (to +8 on Disguise checks, +4 on Bluff and Gather Information checks, and +2 per 2 extra ranks on checks made with the cover identity's Craft or Profession skill).

Furthermore, the DC for Spot checks made to penetrate her disguise increases by 4.

Slippery Mind (Ex): At 4th level, the Zhentarim spy gains the slippery mind special ability (see the rogue class description on page 50 of the Player's Handbook) if she did not already have it.

Deep Cover (Ex): At 5th level, the Zhentarim spy may choose a number of new cover identities equal to her Intelligence bonus (minimum one).

These may be the same cover identities selected for the unlikely cover ability, or they may be different ones, or they may be a mixture of both.

Unlike her unlikely cover identities, however, the identities she selects for deep cover need not be new. When the Zhentarim spy is operating within one of her deep cover identities, her mind is so thoroughly trained and conditioned to think like the person she pretends to be that any magical scrying or mind reading at a power level short of deific reveals nothing about her true nature. Only the thoughts, alignment, and emotions of the fictitious persona can be detected.

POWER OF FAERÛN (3.5)

COURT HERALD

The court herald prestige class presented here is a modified version of the loremaster prestige class, which is described on page 191 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

BECOMING A COURT HERALD

After a character decides to become a court herald, the individual is visited (without warning) by two experienced heralds, who furnish the new herald with basic books of blazonry and lore, tomes about herb-lore and poisons and their antidotes, blank ledgers, and writing materials.

The two will try to answer any questions the novice herald puts to them, and will provide a few names, locations, and means of contacting local heralds, sages, and Harpers.

They will later return to observe the new herald (so as to be able to report the new herald's deeds and demeanor to senior heralds), but might not always reveal their presence to the new herald when doing so.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Feats: Skill Focus (Knowledge [any single knowledge skill]).

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks.

Diplomacy 6 ranks.

Gather Information 8 ranks.

Knowledge (history) 10 ranks, Knowledge (nobility and royalty) 10 ranks.

Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Special: Must speak at least three languages.

CLASS FEATURES

The class features of the court herald, by and large, are all about gaining and retaining knowledge.

If information is power, then a highly experienced court herald is a formidable individual indeed.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: A court herald is proficient with all simple and martial weapons, and with light armor.

Spells: A court herald casts arcane spells from the court herald spell list.

She casts these spells without needing to prepare them beforehand or keep a spellbook.

Court heralds receive bonus spells for high Charisma.

To cast a spell, a court herald must have a Charisma score of 10 + the level of the spell.

The Difficulty Class for a saving throw against a court herald's spell is 10 + the spell's level + the court herald's Charisma modifier.

A court herald's effective casting level is equal to her court herald class level.

TABLE 6-2: COURT HERALD SPELLS KNOWN

Class Spell Level
Level	0	1st	2nd	3rd	4th	5th	6th
1st	3	1*	—	—	—	—	—
2nd	4	2	—	—	—	—	—
3rd	4	2	1*	—	—	—	—
4th	4	3	2	—	—	—	—

9th	6	4	4	3	2	1*	—
10th	6	5	4	3	3	2	—
11th	6	5	4	4	3	2	1*

* Provided the herald has sufficient Charisma to have a bonus spell of this level.

Secret: In their studies, court heralds come across many secrets and snippets of relevant practical knowledge. Upon attaining a level at which a secret is gained, you choose a secret from Table 6-3.

TABLE 6-3: COURT HERALD SECRETS

Level + Int Modifier	Secret	Effect
1	Instant mastery	4 ranks of a skill in which the character has no ranks
2	Secret health	+3 hit points
3	Secrets of inner strength	+2 bonus on Will saves
4	The lore of true stamina	+2 bonus on Fortitude saves
5	Secret knowledge of avoidance	+2 bonus on Reflex saves
6	Deeper understanding	6 ranks in any single Knowledge skill
7	Dodge trick	+1 bonus to AC
8	Applicable knowledge	Any one feat
9	Newfound arcana	1 bonus 1st-level spell*
10	Deeper arcana	1 bonus spell of any level*

* As if gained through having a high ability score.

The same secret can't be chosen twice.

A court herald's class level plus Intelligence modifier determines the total number of secrets she can choose.

Lore: In their studies, court heralds acquire knowledge and learn to retain and recall it.

At 2nd level, you gain the ability to know legends or information pertaining to various topics.

This knowledge is categorized as per bardic knowledge (see page 28 of the Player's Handbook).

A court herald adds her class level and her Intelligence modifier to the lore check.

Mindsee: At 2nd level, you gain the ability to remember a single scene perfectly, in exhaustive detail, not forgetting it until she desires to.

This is a "frozen moment", chosen by silent act of will, of something you see.

It retains the focus, field of view, and lighting conditions of your viewing.

For every additional court herald level attained, you gain the ability to memorize an additional scene (without relinquishing the first one).

These scenes can be retained for years, vanishing only upon your death, the physical loss of your brain, or as the result of certain spell attacks.

Court heralds typically use this power to remember a blazon perfectly for later copying or comparison, but can also use it to keep a perfect likeness of a being in mind, remember who was present at a particular meeting, or the presence and precise descriptions of particular items.

Bonus Language: As your studies progress, you acquire new language skills as you decipher older heraldic records from afar.

Because many of the most prized heraldic tomes (typically brought to a local herald by a Pursuivant and carried away again after some exhausting days of study) are dispelled to utter spoken tongue fragments as their written counterparts are touched, court heralds can learn entire new languages (written and spoken forms).

Upon attaining a level at which a language is gained, you can select any known Faerúnian language (including dead ones).

Greater Lore (Ex): At 7th level, you gain the ability to understand unfamiliar magic items, as if employing an identify spell.

Bonus Feat: At 9th level, you can select a bonus feat from among those for which you meet the prerequisites.

Skill Mastery: At 10th level, you select a number of skills equal to 3 + your Int modifier.

When making a check using one of these skills, you can take 10 even if stress and distractions would normally prevent you from doing so.

You become so certain in those skills that you can use them reliably even under adverse conditions.

True Lore (Ex): At 11th level, you can use your knowledge to gain the effect of a legend lore spell or an analyze dweomer spell once per day.

Spell Resistance: At 12th level, you gain spell resistance equal to your character level.

COURT HERALD SPELL LIST

0 Level—arcane mark, dancing, lights, detect magic, detect poison, light, mage hand, mending, message, open/close, read magic.

1st Level—alarm, comprehend languages, erase, feather fall, identify, mage armor, silence, silent image, unseen servant.

4th Level—arcane eye, bestow curse, confusion, detect scrying, dimension door, dimensional anchor, illusory wall, locate creature, minor creation, neutralize poison, rainbow pattern, remove curse, scrying.

5th Level—break enchantment, dominate person, dream, fabricate, false vision, feeblemind, major creation, nightmare, permanency, persistent image, prying eyes, seeming, symbol of pain, symbol of sleep, sending, telekinesis.

6th Level—analyze dweomer, antimagic field, contingency, guards and wards, legend lore, mass eagle's splendor, mass suggestion, mislead, permanent image, programmed image, symbol of fear, symbol of persuasion, true seeing.

PLAYING A COURT HERALD

If you're a herald adventuring in a band, you're very likely a court herald undertaking particularly dangerous missions for your ruler (during which your fellow adventurers serve as bodyguards, vigilants, and "cover" to conceal your real activities), or a court herald in disgrace or whose successes brought unwanted public prominence, now lying low for a time in wilderland areas and keeping busy by undertaking dangerous missions for the crown (such as "explore those old ruins or caves we keep hearing about—all these reports of strange monsters or spells going off").

Playing the Tabard herald Gauntlet, tracking down adventuring bands everywhere, would also make for a fascinating campaign.

Local court heralds sometimes join adventuring bands temporarily or repeatedly, if this is the only way to survive "going in and getting out" of dangerous territory to carry out their duties.

If a brigand has given himself a title and unlawful blazon, how else to reach him and correct things alive?

(And what better way for a ruler to send along a few secret messages or instructions to be conveyed to others in the area during the journey?).

Information gathering (spying) is almost always the chief duty of any adventuring court herald, who won't be in this situation in the first place if they don't work for a fairly trusting, tolerant ruler who expects them to "make a little oil the side" through adventuring, to support themselves, and doesn't mind if the adventuring band they're part of "stirs things up" wherever they're adventuring.

Rulers tend to regard adventuring bands as the best way to promote their influence in areas too remote, dangerous, or sparsely settled to be worth maintaining a garrison in—and having one of "their" heralds as part of the band is the best means available (short of scrying and mind-controlling spells and a wizard they can trust—a rarity in itself—to use them to control the adventurers precisely as the ruler desires) to keep such bands under control.

Rulers can make use of the lawless tendencies of adventuring bands, because they can do things uniformed troops shouldn't (break laws or run roughshod over nobles' rights).

Heralds sometimes ask Harpers in the area to track and watch over court heralds who've "gone adventuring", both to keep them safe and to check on their continued loyalty, but see such activities as both useful information-gathering and a personal "let off steam" need for some court heralds; folk of action can find the life of a herald frustrating, boring, and requiring iron self-control and diplomacy, and chances to "cut loose" as occasionally necessary.

Nor is the lore gathered by adventuring heralds just a convenient excuse.

Old tombs, cellars, and dwarf-delves are vital sources for establishing ancient heraldry in an area, and therefore what is right or traditional locally.

COURT HERALDS IN THE GAME

Being a court herald or local herald in a frontier or restive area can be a bit like being a marshal or police force, but with far more freedom to interpret matters, undertake ploys and "side business", and have real adventures.

Using various heraldry-related duties as cover, the herald must often rush here and there to deliver messages or pick up information from informants or race to uncover as much as possible about possible uprisings or planned rebel attacks or brigand-gang murders and thefts.

Sooner or later folk will realize what you're doing or just see you as an easy "part of the hated government" target, so capable adventuring companions are a must.

Heralds of all sorts can be even more interesting in an urban campaign, mixing in daily business intrigues or at the revels of nobles and would-be nobles to learn who's loyal to whom and who's plotting what.

In Waterdeep, over a dozen heralds at once are active full-time in such work; in Athkatla, Calimport, and the Sembian ports, three times as many keep busy gathering information for the Herald, the Harpers, and local rulers (carefully editing what they share with each of those three sources).

Of course, being "in the know" gives a herald many opportunities for personal enrichment.

Only a fool would stoop to blackmail and expect to live for long, but most urban heralds employ kin or friends in small businesses that can profit from acting on secrets or advance information without spreading it.

If a ruler plans new or increased taxes or import duties on outland wine or lamp oil, and your business quietly buys up a lot of it, it can be resold for a swift and tidy profit once the taxes “come in” and the product price rises accordingly.

If you know whom a king mistrusts or is planning to punish, you can withhold investments with the disfavored one, and withdraw socially from him, to avoid being harmed when he “goes down”.

A good herald knows who might soon be marrying whom, the likes and dislikes of the families (They would love exotic Calishite dancers and musicians at the wedding feast?

Well, you just happen to be able to get some, swiftly and with no fuss, so it'll be the stunning social surprise they're hoping for), and the attitudes on any matter of trade, society, or legal policy of the ruler and all powerful courtiers or nobles.

So long as overt greed is avoided, money can be made steadily, from every twist and turn of court life.

Some heralds seduce their way to intimacy with powerful persons, while others promote reputations for giving good advice.

However, a reputation can harm as well as help its owner. Herald's who are forced to flee a realm or city are sacrificing their careers but often remaining personally recognizable to traveling merchants who can spot them (and spread word of it) halfway across Faerûn, so that escaping angry husbands, vengeful noble families, or agents of would-be traitors the herald exposed can be very difficult.

The access and special status of heralds makes them great targets for blackmailers and others who seek to use them as agents.

Even upstanding heralds have to worry about being kidnapped and slain or imprisoned by doppelgangers or other shapeshifters seeking to impersonate them (monsters such as doppelgangers don't care about any legal penalties for being an impostor, or for the consequences of the damage they could do).

MERCHANT PRINCE

A merchant prince (known as a merchant princess if female) is a member of the merchant nobility who has acquired his position and wealth either by being born into a wealthy family or by earning every last coin himself.

Merchant princes dominate economic activity across Faerûn, using their great fortunes to acquire almost anything imaginable and to defend the foundations of their mercantile empires.

BECOMING A MERCHANT PRINCE

Most merchant princes are rogues, literally and figuratively, although aristocrats, experts, clerics of Waukeen, and clerics of Shaundakul are hot uncommon. Few fighters have the skill to become merchant princes, although fighter/rogues often do.

Bards are well equipped to become merchant princes, although surprisingly few have the inclination.

Those rangers who become merchant princes usually make their fortunes as caravanners.

Wizards and sorcerers rarely seek material gain at the expense of furthering their magical talents.

Barbarians, clerics of other deities, druids, paladins, and monks rarely, if ever, become merchant princes.

Your key abilities support the primary and secondary skills of your profession.

Intelligence impacts many of your class skills and might provide additional skill points.

Charisma impacts many of your class skills as well.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Skills: Appraise 4 ranks, Bluff 4 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Profession (merchant) 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks.

Feats: Business Savvy, Favored in Guild, Skill Focus (Profession [merchant]).

Languages: Common, any two others, must be literate.

Special: You must own a business.

If you no longer own a business, you cannot advance further in this class.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Forgery, Gather Information, Handle Animal, Knowledge (any), Profession, Ride, Sense Motive, Speak Language, Spellcraft, Use Magic Device, Use Rope.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance in level, you gain abilities that reflect the blessing of the gods who oversee commerce and your innate ability to make a profit.

In addition, you learn enough magic to assist you in your daily trade.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You are proficient with all simple weapons and light armor.

Spellcasting: You have the ability to cast a small number of arcane spells.

To cast a merchant prince spell, you must have an Intelligence score of at least 10 + the spell's level, so if you have an Intelligence of 10 or lower, you cannot cast these spells.

Bonus spells are based on Intelligence, and saving throws against these spells have a DC of 10 + spell level + your Int modifier.

When you get 0 spells per day of a given level (for instance, 1st-level spells for 1st level), you gain only the bonus spells you would be entitled to based on your Intelligence score for that spell level.

Your spell list appears below.

You prepare and cast spells just as a wizard does.

You must study your spellbook each day to prepare your spells.

You cannot prepare any spell not recorded in your spellbook, except for read magic, which all merchant princes can prepare from memory.

At 1st level, you have a spellbook (often disguised as a business ledger) containing two spells from the merchant prince 1st-level spell list.

You learn two new merchant prince spells of any spell level you can cast at each merchant prince level thereafter.

There is no limit to the number of these spells you can learn from this list.

At any time, you can also add spells found in other spellbooks or scrolls to your own.

Master of Commerce (Ex): Merchant princes have mastered the art of commerce.

You receive a +2 insight bonus on your profit modifier (see page 183 of Dungeon Master's Guide II) per class level and a 10% reduction in your capital costs per class level.

Mercantile Knowledge (Ex): Like a bard, you have a knack for picking up odds and ends of knowledge.

This ability works like the bardic knowledge class feature. If you have bard levels, your merchant prince levels and bard levels stack for the purpose of using bardic knowledge. Lliira's Heart (Su): At 2nd level, you receive the favor of the Joydancer, who held Waukeen's portfolio in trust for over a decade.

Lliira grants you a +2 sacred bonus on saves against compulsion and fear effects.

Gond's Forge (Su): At 3rd level, you receive the favor of the Wonderbringer, who oversees artifice, craftwork, construction, and smithwork.

Gond grants you a +2 competence bonus on Craft checks. Shaundakul's Cloak (Su): At 4th level, you receive the favor of the Rider of the Winds, who oversees the caravan trade. Shaundakul grants you a +2 resistance bonus on saving throws against cold effects and a +1 competence bonus to Survival checks.

Waukeen's Coin (Su): At 5th level, you receive the favor of the Merchant's Friend.

Waukeen gives you a +1 insight bonus and a +1 luck bonus on all your class skill modifiers (for a total bonus of +2).

MERCHANT PRINCE SPELL LIST

1st Level—alarm, charm person, comprehend languages, create water, cure minor wounds, detect magic, erase, expeditious retreat, feather fall, know direction, mage armor, mage band, message, mount, prestidigitation, purify food and drink, read magic, shield, unseen servant.

NEW SPELL: FOOL'S GOLD

Illusion [Glamer]

Level: Bard 2, merchant prince 5, sorcerer/wizard 2

Components: V, S, M

Casting Time: 1 round

Range: Touch

Target: Metal objects of up to 10 cu. in. in volume/level

Duration: 1 hour/level

Saving Throw: Will disbelief (if interacted with)

Spell Resistance: No

This spell makes metal objects, such as a bronze statue or a handful of copper coins, appear to be made of gold.

You can affect 10 cubic inches of metal—the equivalent of about 150 coins or 3 pounds—per level.

If you want to affect multiple objects, such as a chest full of coins, you only need to touch one of the objects, providing that all of the other objects to be affected are in contact with one another.

Material Component: A powdered gem of at least 5 gp in value sprinkled over the object(s).

PLAYING A MERCHANT PRINCE

You are a master of commerce, amassing piles of wealth by controlling and manipulating the levers of production and trade.

Your efforts are the economic lifeblood of your community, giving you great influence over the common folk of Faerûn.

You look at adventuring as a means to grow your business, whether as a source of new capital or as a way to remove impediments to your business.

Most Merchant princes begin their careers by founding, inheriting, or purchasing a business.

Successful merchant princes concentrate on growing their business, vanquishing commercial rivals, and maximizing profits.

COMBAT

Your greatest weapon is your coin purse, for it gives you to the power to hire defenders and bribe potential foes.

Master your chosen profession and seek every advantage available to you to increase profits.

Then use those profits to bury your enemies under an onslaught of attacks by those in your employ without personal risk to you.

ADVANCEMENT

Qualifying for the merchant prince class requires a significant commitment of skill points and feats.

As you gain levels, you probably want to focus on the primary and secondary skills of your chosen profession and increasing your profit modifier as high as possible.

Skill Focus feats in your primary and secondary skills allow you to master your craft.

You might want to select the Leadership feat, for careful placement of your followers can give you a significant advantage over rivals.

RESOURCES

Thanks to their business income, merchant princes have access to significant piles of coin, allowing them to purchase nearly anything they desire.

Their established position in mercantile society gives them regular access to "sweetheart deals".

In a region in which you own one or more successful businesses, you can purchase any nonmagical item at 75% of the normal cost.

MERCHANT PRINCES IN THE WORLD

Merchant princes can be found across the length and breadth of Faerûn.

Most dwell in cities, but a sizable minority wanders the roads, seas, and portal networks of Faerûn, knitting the continent together through commerce.

Merchant princes tend to live in the wealthiest districts of their homeland or in isolated estates surrounded by their retainers.

Although some are frugal, most are relatively ostentatious, given to dramatic demonstrations of personal wealth.

NPC REACTIONS

Merchant princes are well known to commoners and aristocrats from across Faerûn, inspiring a mixture of envy, disdain, respect, and fawning admiration.

Most merchant princes are seen as grasping, conniving scoundrels who would rather hire another individual to do their dirty work than risk danger to themselves, particularly among those who live in other communities.

Among their fellow citizens, merchant princes are generally perceived to fall into one of two extremes—greedy profiteers or noble benefactors—with few shades of grey in between.

MERCHANT PRINCE LORE

Merchant princes are well known in the region in which they are based, but little known elsewhere. Characters who succeed on a Knowledge (local) check can learn the following information, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Any noncriminal business in which the merchant prince has a significant investment.

DC 15: Any criminal business in which the merchant prince is rumored to have a significant investment.

DC 20: Average monthly profit of any noncriminal business in which the merchant prince has a significant investment.

DC 25: Average monthly profit of any criminal business in which the merchant prince is rumored to have a significant investment.

DC 30: Important deals under way whose success or failure could make or break the merchant prince's business.

MERCHANT PRINCES IN THE GAME

Characters who establish businesses, rise to leadership positions within a guild, or emphasize lucrative skills are well suited to become merchant princes.

This prestige class appeals to players who like their characters to amass wealth through role-playing and social interaction rather than "dungeon crawling".

It works well in campaigns set in settled regions with thriving economies, where monsters are few but rivals and villains hide behind the public faces of civility.

NPC merchant princes occupy positions of great prominence in powerful trading cities and are usually members of the upper class, second only to the titled aristocracy (if such exists).

Many merchant princes were born into (or even founded) powerful merchant houses.

Others lead powerful guilds or wide-ranging trading costers.

A few occupy positions in government with a great deal of influence over economic activity, particularly in cities where one or more aspects of trade are controlled by the government.

ADAPTATION

The merchant prince works well in mercantile societies such as Amn, Sembia, and Waterdeep.

If you replace the spellcasting abilities with +1 level of existing spellcasting class" at each level, add a requirement of "any item creation feat", add a requirement of "member of Red Wizards", and reduce the base attack bonus progression to that of a wizard, this prestige class could be called "enclave master" and retargeted at members of the Red Wizards who run Thayan enclaves in cities across Faerûn.

PSIONICS HANDBOOK (3.0)

METAMIND

The metamind knows that accumulating the most power in the shortest time is the key to psionic superiority.

"Power to burn" is something all metaminds strive for—they are unconcerned with glamour or flashy ways, but single-mindedly determined to amass as much psychic power as possible.

Someone who takes one or more levels of metamind is sometimes colloquially referred to as a "head" by other psionic characters.

In game terms, a metamind is all about power points.

Any character with some psionic ability can become a metamind to beef up mental strength—at the expense of discovering higher-level powers.

Psionic warriors in particular may wish to increase their otherwise mediocre mental power so as to have adequate reserves for combat-oriented psionic feats.

Psions who need an extra edge for prolonged use of specific powers may take several levels of metamind.

NPC metaminds are often found among dedicated schools of psychic warriors who have banded together in opposition to a given threat, such as illithids.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a metamind, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Manifesting: Ability to manifest two different powers, one of which must be 2nd level or higher.

Psicraft: 6 ranks.

Knowledge (psionics): 6 ranks.

Feats: Inner Strength.

CLASS SKILLS

The metamind's class skills are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Knowledge (psionics), Psicraft (Int), and Remote View (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the metamind prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Metaminds gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Power Points: Metaminds gain power points per day as shown on Table 6-1: The Metamind.

These power points are added to the character's previous total.

Metaminds gain bonus power points based on the key ability score for their primary ability.

If the character previously could not gain bonus power points for high ability scores (as is the case for psychic warriors), he now chooses a primary discipline and can gain bonus power points based on the related ability score (see Table 1-2: Psion Bonus Power Points).

Powers Discovered: Metaminds discover powers as shown on Table 6-1: The Metamind.

Powers are chosen from the psion power list.

The powers are added to the character's previous total powers known.

Psionic attack and defense modes are discovered as though the character were a psychic warrior of the same level as the prestige class (characters do not forget previously discovered attack and defense modes).

Inner Strength: At 1st, 2nd, 4th, and 6th level, a metamind gains Inner Strength as a bonus feat.

This grants the metamind additional power points every time the feat is gained.

Power Psicrystal: At 1st level, the metamind masters the trick of storing excess power points in a psicrystal.

Characters whose previous class did not offer access to a psicrystal (such as a psychic warrior) gain the ability to create one as a psion can.

The psicrystal is now treated as a crystal capacitor capable of storing 5 power points, in addition to its psicrystal abilities. A metamind's psicrystal advances in ability according to the progression in Table 1-5: Psicrystal Special Abilities, using the total of metamind levels + psion levels (if any).

Levels in other classes, including psychic warrior, do not count toward psicrystal advancement.

Power psicrystal is a spell-like ability.

Trigger Power: Beginning at level 3, and again at levels 5, 7, and 9, the metamind gains a bonus Trigger Power feat.

Each time this feat is gained, he chooses a power of level 0 to 3 that he can attempt to manifest for free.

Psychic Vampire: At 8th level, the metamind becomes proficient at draining power from others.

He can manifest the 5th-level power psychic vampire as though using the Trigger Power feat, even though powers above 3rd level are normally not eligible (the DC to trigger this power is 21).

This is a spell-like ability.

Apotheosis: At 10th level, the metamind gains the spell-like ability to manifest his 1st-level powers as though using the Trigger Power feat instead of selecting specific powers.

PYROKINETICIST

A pyrokineticist is a character who has discovered that a little psionic power goes a long way—if you are interested only in fire.

A pyrokineticist finds both beauty and utility in the chaotic shape of flame, its spectrum of fuel-dependent colors, its warming heat, and its never-ending hunger.

Someone who takes one or more levels of pyrokineticist sometimes colloquially referred to as a “pyro”.

Those who become pyrokineticists like fire.

A lot.

Any character with some psionic ability is a possible candidate for this prestige class.

Psions consider it acceptable to give up power acquisition in other areas if they have a passion for flame.

Some psychic warriors also enjoy the pyro's powers.

NPC pyrokineticists are fairly rare, because society frowns on those whose pursuit in life is to “burn it all”.

Thus, pyros are rarely found in large communities (unless employed as secret enforcers).

Instead, they are more likely to be found on the fringes of society, as hermits in barren lands where the temptations to burn are reduced.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a pyrokineticist, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Alignment: Any chaotic.

Alchemy: 1 rank.

Base Power Points/Day: 10+ (not including bonus power points).

Knowledge (psionics): 1 rank.

Powers: Know control flames.

Special: Must have set fire to a structure of any size just to watch it burn.

CLASS SKILLS

The pyrokineticist's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (any) (Int), Knowledge (psionics) (Int), and Psicraft (Int).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the pyrokineticist prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Pyrokineticists gain no proficiency in any weapon or armor.

Power Points: Pyrokineticists gain power points per day as shown on Table 6–2: The Pyrokineticist.

These power points are added to the character's previous total.

Pyrokineticists gain bonus power points based on the key ability score for their primary ability.

If the character previously could not gain bonus power points for high ability scores (as is the case for psychic warriors), she now chooses a primary discipline and can gain bonus power points based on the related ability score (see Table 1–2: Psion Bonus Power Points).

Powers Discovered: Pyrokineticists discover powers as shown on Table 6–2: The Pyrokineticist.

Powers are chosen from the psion power list.

The powers are added to the character's previous total powers known.

Psionic attack and defense modes are discovered as though the character were a psychic warrior of the same level as the prestige class (characters do not forget previously discovered attack and defense modes).

Touch Aflame: The pyro's mere touch sets objects or foes on fire on the round following the touch, if you desire (you don't have to set things on fire).

Unless the character's unarmed attacks are treated as melee attacks, this innocent looking touch draws an attack of opportunity.

The flame deals 1d6 points of fire damage, then dies out, though flammable materials may begin to burn in their own right, at the DM's option.

It otherwise behaves like alchemist's fire (see Chapter 7 of the Player's Handbook), but there is nothing to wash off.

The pyro can use this supernatural ability at will as long as her power point reserve is 1 or more.

Fire Lash: The pyrokineticist fashions a 15-foot-long whip of fire from unstable ectoplasm as a move-equivalent action. This is a spell-like ability.

She takes no damage from a fire lash she creates, and if she releases her hold, it immediately dissipates.

The lash deals 1d4 points of fire damage to the target on a successful ranged touch attack (up to 15 feet).

The pyro may take Weapon Focus, Weapon Specialization (if of the appropriate class), or Weapon Finesse in conjunction with the fire lash, as well as feats for a standard whip.

She can use the fire lash ability at will as long as her power point reserve is 11 or more.

Fire Adaptation: At 2nd level, the pyrokineticist becomes resistant to fire, gaining a +10 bonus on all saving throws against fire and heat damage.

In addition, she takes the first 1d6 points of damage from any fire or heat attack, effect, or round's worth of environmental damage as subdual damage.

This extraordinary ability constantly protects the character as long as her power point reserve is 3 or more.

Hand Afire: At 2nd level, the pyrokineticist can activate this spell-like ability as a move-equivalent action.

One of the pyrokineticist's hands is licked by flames that do her no harm, causing her unarmed attacks to be treated as armed.

such attacks deal 1d6 points of fire damage in addition to any other special damage from the unarmed attack.

A character can use the hand afire ability at will as long as her power point reserve is 9 or more.

Bolt of Fire: At 3rd level, the pyrokineticist can launch a bolt of psionically manifested fire up to 60 feet at any target in line of sight.

This spell-like ability is treated as a ranged touch attack and deals 3d6 points of fire damage.

The pyro can use bolt of fire at will but must pay 3 power points per use.

Weapon Afire: At 4th level, the pyrokineticist can activate this spell-like ability as a move-equivalent action.

One weapon she holds (including a stone, bullet, arrow, or bolt) is licked by flames that harm neither her nor the weapon.

The weapon deals 1d6 points of fire damage, in addition to its normal damage, and stops flaming the round after the last activation.

A character can use the weapon afire ability at will as long as her power point reserve is 9 or more.

Breath of the Dragon: On reaching 5th level, the pyrokineticist discovers the breath of the dragon power.

Level-dependent effects are determined by adding pyrokineticist levels to all other class levels she possesses.

Thus, a 5th-level pyrokineticist/5th-level psion manifests breath of the dragon as a 10th-level manifester.

A pyro can manifest this power even if she would normally be too low in level to do so, but she must pay the full power point cost.

This is a spell-like ability.

Nimbus: At 6th level, the pyrokineticist can activate this spell-like ability as a move-equivalent action.

Her entire body is licked by flames that harm neither her or her equipment.

While aflame, the character's Charisma modifier (not score) increases by +2, she can make melee touch attacks as with the hand afire ability, and she gains damage reduction 10/+1.

She must pay 9 power points per minute she uses the nimbus ability.

Firewalk: Beginning at 7th level, the pyrokineticist can use this spell-like ability to literally walk on air.

She moves at her normal speed in all directions, including vertically, but cannot move more than double her speed in a round.

A firewalker leaves footprints of flame in the air that disperse in 2 rounds, but her tread does not deal damage. She must pay 1 power point per 10 feet traveled in this fashion.

Fear No Fire: At 8th level, the pyrokineticist becomes resistant to fire, gaining a +15 bonus on all saving throws against fire and heat damage.

She gains damage reduction 30/+3 specifically against attacks, effects, or environmental conditions that deal heat or fire damage.

Even if she takes fire or heat damage, the first 2d6 points are treated as subdual damage.

This supernatural ability constantly protects the character as long as her power point reserve is 19 or more.

Heat Death: A pyrokineticist who reaches 9th level can use this spell-like ability to raise the internal temperature of one living creature within 30 feet to lethal levels.

The target must succeed at a Fortitude saving throw (DC 17) or die horrifically as its blood (or other internal fluid) boils.

Even on a successful save, the target sustains 2d8 points of heat damage.

The pyrokineticist must pay 13 power points each time she uses this ability.

Fire Lord: At 10th level, the pyrokineticist gains the supernatural ability to become a fire elemental of her size once per day.

She gains the elemental's special abilities when she does so. In all other respects, this resembles the power polymorph self as manifested by a 12th-level manifester.

SLAYER

Only the naive dismiss the illithid threat.

Or so say those who have dedicated their lives to the eradication of the mind flayer “infection”.

Psonian beings know the real dangers illithids pose better than nonpsionic individuals, but even so, most are unwilling to honor the code of the slayer.

A primary slayer credo is “Do or die”, where “do” means “find and slay illithids”.

A faltering heart does not a slayer make (another of their credos—which, truth be told, number in the hundreds).

It is a poorly kept secret that while slayers are best at hunting and slaying illithids, many of their abilities make them deadly to any psionic creature.

Any character with some psionic ability can become a slayer: All it takes is hating illithids enough.

Dwarves who take this prestige class are known as caradhaker, which loosely means “mindstalker”.

In fact, it may be that the slayers first originated among the dwarves, though they say they received their lore from another, secret source.

NPC slayers sometimes travel in bands of two or three and enjoy identifying their group with a grisly name.

Such groups are often hired as mercenaries by wealthy folk who travel in illithid-infested areas.

But between commissions, they are just as likely to strike out on their own, attempting to uncover the location of another mind flayer outpost, or better yet, a sunless city.

Stories also exist of rogue slayers bands who have branched out and hunt any and all psionic creatures, not just illithids.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a slayer, a character must fulfil all following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Base Power Points/Day: 3+ (not including bonus power points).

Knowledge (illithid lore): 1 rank.

Wilderness Lore: 4 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Special: Must have killed an illithid, either individually or as part of a group comprising no more than six members.

CLASS SKILLS

The slayer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Knowledge (illithid lore) (Int), Listen (Wis), Psicraft (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and wilderness Lore (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the slayer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Slayers are proficient with all simple and martial weapons and all armor and shields.

Power Points: Slayers gain power points per day as shown on Table 6-3: The Slayer.

These power points are added to the character's previous total.

Slayers do not gain bonus power points.

Powers Discovered: Slayers discover powers as shown on Table 6-3: The Slayer.

Powers are chosen from the psion power list.

The powers are added to the character's previous total powers known.

Psonian attack and defense modes are discovered as though the character were a psychic warrior of the same level as the prestige class (characters do not forget previously discovered attack and defense modes).

Favored Enemy (Illithid): At 1st level, the slayer selects illithids (and illithidkin) as her favored enemy.

Due to her extensive study of her foes and training with the proper techniques for combating them, the slayer gains a +1 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks when using these skills against illithids.

Likewise, she gets the same bonus on weapon damage rolls against illithids, including ranged weapons against targets within 30 feet.

Illithid Sense: The slayer senses the presence of illithids within 60 feet of herself, even if hidden by darkness or walls, but not their exact location.

This supernatural ability is active as long as the slayer's power point reserve is 3 or more.

Brain Nausea: At 2nd level, the slayer gains this constant defense, a supernatural ability somewhat similar to the aversion power.

Any creature that attempts to eat the slayer's brain must succeed at a Will save (DC 17) or become disinclined to do so.

Illithids in particular are free to take any action except extracting the slayer's brain (but do not realize they are being so affected).

This ability is active as long as the slayer's power point reserve is 1 or more (even if she is unconscious, stunned, or otherwise helpless).

Bonus Feats: At 3rd, 5th, 7th, and 9th level, a slayer gains a bonus general, psionic, or metapsionic feat.

Generally, slayers favor feats that augment their ability to dispatch illithids, although they are effective against any foe—illithid or otherwise.

Lucid Buffer: At 4th level the slayer becomes especially skilled at resisting mental attacks.

She receives a +4 competence bonus on saving throws against all compulsions and mind-affecting effects.

She also receives a +2 competence bonus on saving throws against psionic attack modes, which stacks with any bonus granted by raising a psionic defense mode, if any.

This supernatural ability is active as long as the slayer's power point reserve is 9 or more.

Cerebral Blind: On reaching 6th level, a slayer can “riposte” a psionic attack.

Whenever she succeeds at a saving throw against a psionic power or attack mode, the attacker must immediately make a Will save, using the DC of the original attack.

On a failure, the attacker stands dazed for 1 round from the psionic backlash.

This spell-like ability is active as long as the slayer's power point reserve is 15 or more.

Breach Power Resistance: In the hands of a slayer who has reached 8th level, a weapon is enhanced by her psionic might and desire.

Each successful melee attack (or ranged attack within 30 feet) against a creature with power resistance temporarily reduces its power resistance by 1.

Unless the creature is slain, lost power resistance returns at a rate of 1 point per 12 hours.

This supernatural ability is active as long as the slayer's power point reserve is 17 or more.

Blast Feedback: Beware using mind blast against a slayer: At 10th level, she can turn an illithid's favored attack against itself.

When she is attacked with mind blast, the slayer can forgo attempting a psionic defense and also forgo a saving throw. She suffers the temporary Charisma damage but automatically sets up a blast feedback attack (a supernatural ability).

The attacker must simultaneously make a Will save against the original mind blast DC and can use no defense modes. On a failure, the attacker's power point reserve is instantly reduced to 0, and the attacker is stunned for 1 round.

SOULKNIFE

A soulknife recognizes his own mind as the most beautiful—and the most deadly—thing in all creation.

With this understanding and through extended practice, a soulknife learns to forge his mental strength into a shimmering blade of semisolid psychic energy.

Each soulknife's personal blade, referred to as a “mindblade”, differs in color and shape according to his personality, mental strength, and even mood.

Although no two mind-blades look alike, all share the same lethal qualities.

Because soulknives rum the power of their minds to such weaponry, they are notorious for their violence.

Any character with some psionic ability can become a soulknife.

NPC soulknives are often employed as freelance guards and, more often, assassins.

Even when completely unarmed, a soulknife is only a thought away from a deadly strike with his own mind's most violent instincts solidified.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a soulknife, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Move Silently: 3 ranks.

Base Power Points/Day: 9+ (not including bonus power points).

Knowledge (psionics): 3 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The soulknife's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (psionics) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the soulknife prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Soulknives are proficient with light armor but not with shields.

Power Points: Soulknives gain power points per day as shown on Table 6-4: The Soulknife.

These power points are added to the character's previous total.

Soulknives gain bonus power points based on the key ability score for their primary ability.

If the character previously could not gain bonus power points for high ability scores (as is the case for psychic warriors), he now chooses a primary discipline and can gain bonus power points based on the related ability score (see Table 1-2: Psion Bonus Power Points).

Powers Discovered: Soulknives discover powers as shown on Table 6-4: The Soulknife.

Powers are chosen from the psion power list.

The powers are added to the character's previous total powers known.

Psionic attack and defense modes are discovered as though the character were a psychic warrior of the same level as the prestige class (characters do not forget previously discovered attack and defense modes).

Mind-Blade: As a move-equivalent action, the soulknife creates a semisolid blade 1 foot in length composed of psychic energy (distilled from his own mind).

As long as he holds the blade, it is identical in all ways (except visually) to a short sword and deals 1d6 piercing damage.

The blade can be broken; however, the soulknife can simply create another on his next move-equivalent action. The moment he relinquishes his grip on the blade, it dissipates.

The soulknife may take Weapon Focus, Weapon Specialization (if of the appropriate class), or Weapon Finesse in conjunction with the mind-blade.

The mind-blade can be used as long as the soulknife's power point reserve is 1 or more.

When the soulknife reaches 2nd level, his mind-blade gains a +1 enhancement bonus; at 4th level, +2; at 6th level, +3; at 8th level, +4; and at 10th level, +5.

The enhancement bonus applies to each mind-blade created, including those that are thrown, upgraded, and imbedded (see below).

Even where psionics does not normally function (such as within a null psionics field), the soulknife can try to sustain the mind-blade by making a Fortitude save against the DC set by the creator of the effect.

Even on a successful save, the soulknife must roll again next round to keep the mind-blade in existence.

Creating a mind-blade is a supernatural ability.

Sneak Attack: A soulknife can make sneak attacks exactly like a rogue, but only with his mind-blade.

Any time the soulknife's target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC, the mind-blade attack deals +1d6 points of damage.

This extra damage increases by +1d6 every other level (+2d6 at 3rd level, +3d6 at 5th level, and so on).

See the rogue description in Chapter 3 of the Player's Handbook for more information on sneak attacks.

The soulknife benefits from this extraordinary ability as long as his power point reserve is 1 or more.

Imbed Power: At 2nd level, the soulknife can imbed one psionic power (but no psionic attack modes) of 3rd level or lower that he knows in his mind-blade.

This spell-like ability requires a move-equivalent action, and the soulknife must pay the cost of the power to imbed it.

The imbedded power automatically affects the next target that the soulknife successfully attacks with the mind-blade, with no saving throw allowed.

Even if the power normally affects an area or is a ray, it affects only the target.

The power is discharged and "flushes" the mind-blade, which can then hold another power.

A mind-blade can never have more than one power imbedded at a time.

Throw Mind-Blade: At 2nd level, the soulknife can throw his mind-blade as a ranged weapon with a range increment of 30 feet.

Whether or not the attack hits, a thrown mind-blade then dissipates.

The soulknife can make a sneak attack with a thrown mind-blade (within 30 feet) and can use the blade in conjunction with other special abilities (such as imbedding a power in it).

The soulknife can use this supernatural ability as long as his power point reserve is 1 or more.

Imbed Psionic Attack: At 4th level, the soulknife can imbed any one psionic attack mode that he knows in his mind-blade.

This spell-like ability requires a move-equivalent action, and the soulknife must pay the cost of the attack mode to imbed it.

The imbedded attack automatically affects the next target that the soulknife successfully attacks with the mind-blade.

The target cannot raise a psionic defense mode and must make its Will save as if flat-footed (treat nonpsionic defenders as having raised thought shield instead of their standard nonpsionic buffer).

An imbedded mind blast affects only the target.

The attack is discharged and "flushes" the mind-blade, which can then hold another attack mode.

A mind-blade can never have more than one attack mode or power imbedded at a time.

Sever Life: when a soulknife reaches 6th level, he can use imbedded psionic attacks to strike at the target's life force.

A successful attack with a mind-blade so imbedded overrides the specific ability damage normally dealt and instead deals temporary Constitution damage.

The soulknife can use this supernatural ability at will as long as his power point reserve is 11 or more.

Free Draw: At 6th level, a soulknife can materialize his mind-blade as a free action instead of a move-equivalent action.

He can use this extraordinary ability as long as his power point reserve is 13 or more.

Upgrade: On reaching 8th level, the soulknife achieves greater control over his mind's power.

His mind-blade's base characteristics are now those of a longsword, so that it deals 1d8 slashing damage.

The soulknife can use the upgraded mind-blade as long as his power point reserve is 7 or more.

Knife to the Soul: At 10th level, the soulknife becomes expert at attacking an opponent's life energy.

The knife to the soul ability resembles the sever life ability (see above) except half of the Constitution ability damage he deals is permanent.

The soulknife can use this supernatural ability at will as long as his power point reserve is 17 or more.

RACES OF DESTINY (3.5)

CHAMELEON

“Someone called for a cleric?

Oh, you needed a fighter instead?

I’m sorry—I meant to say that the cleric is on his way.

I’m the fighter.”

—Jonata Quimbel

Sometimes it’s good to be a fighter, able to wield any weapon.

Other times, you’d be better off as a rogue, with stealth and the ability to backstab foes.

And sometimes, nothing but spells will do the trick.

When these situations collide and you need one answer, you need a chameleon.

Chameleons are dilettantes in every class and masters of none.

They know enough of each class’s skills and abilities to mimic that class effectively.

You can masquerade as a fighter, a rogue, or even a wizard or a cleric.

Part of it is power, of course—you learn to harness your own natural energy, shaping it into whichever class you require that day.

But the rest is pure attitude—you are a talented performer, and when you walk into a room with a holy symbol around your neck, people believe you have true faith.

BECOMING A CHAMELEON

A member of any class can become a chameleon—because, after all, a chameleon can become anyone.

The easiest path is through the rogue class, since the rogue’s large number of skill points makes meeting the skill requirements easy.

Bards also make excellent chameleons, since they are talented performers who already know some magic.

Chameleons who were spellcasters have a clear advantage, because their spell lists are not as limited.

Chameleon clerics are rare, but extremely valuable, because they can heal and turn undead with more potency than a chameleon merely posing as a priest.

The class is also an interesting choice for monks—their discipline makes it easier to adapt the body to each new role, even if their poor social skills hamper their performances.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Human or Doppelganger.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Disguise 8 ranks, Sense Motive 4 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Feat: Able Learner†.

† New feat; see page 150.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Disguise, Profession, Sense Motive, Swim, and Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

The chameleon’s class features allow you to adopt a variety of roles, from armored warrior to spellcaster to sneaky rogue.

You can’t use any abilities gained from your aptitude focus, ability boon, or mimic class feature abilities to qualify for a feat, prestige class, or other option.

You can use your bonus feat to qualify for such options, but if you change the feat, you suffer the normal drawbacks for no longer meeting a prerequisite or requirement.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain proficiency with all simple weapons and with all forms of armor, including shields (but not tower shields).

Aptitude Focus (Ex): Once per day, you can select one of five areas upon which to focus your ever-shifting talents. After meditating for 1 hour, you gain the chosen abilities for 24 hours or until you change your aptitude focus.

An aptitude focus ability is usable once per day at 1st level, twice per day at 5th level, and three times per day at 10th level.

At 5th level, you can change your aptitude focus one time per day, and at 10th level you can change your aptitude focus two times per day.

If you change to the arcane focus or divine focus ability, you must still obey the normal rules for preparing spells (including any rest required).

Arcane Focus: You gain the ability to prepare and cast arcane spells, which may be chosen from the spell list of any arcane spellcasting class.

You prepare and cast these spells just as a wizard does, including the use of a spellbook (chameleons often use stolen or borrowed spellbooks; see page 178 of the Player's Handbook for details).

Your spells per day are noted on Table 5–2: The Chameleon. You gain bonus spells for a high Intelligence score, just as a wizard does.

When Table 5–2 indicates that you get 0 spells per day of a given spell level, you gain only the bonus spells you would be entitled to based on your Intelligence score for that spell level.

Your caster level is equal to twice your class level. You also gain a +2 competence bonus on Knowledge (arcana) checks and Spellcraft checks and a +2 bonus on Will saves; at 5th level, the bonuses improve to +4. Combat Focus: You gain proficiency with all martial weapons.

You also gain a +2 competence bonus on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls and a +2 bonus on Fortitude saves. At 5th level, the bonuses improve to +4.

Divine Focus: You gain the ability to prepare and cast divine spells, which may be chosen from the spell list of any divine spellcasting class.

You prepare and cast these spells just as a cleric does, except that you cannot spontaneously cast spells.

You can only prepare new divine spells at sunrise.

Your spells per day are noted on Table 5–2: The Chameleon. You gain bonus spells for a high Wisdom score, just as a cleric does.

When Table 5–2 indicates that you get 0 spells per day of a given spell level, you gain only the bonus spells you would be entitled to based on your Wisdom score for that spell level.

Your caster level is equal to twice your class level. You also gain a +2 competence bonus on Knowledge (religion) checks and a +2 bonus on Fortitude and Will saves; at 5th level, the bonuses improve to +4.

Stealth Focus: You gain trapfinding (see page 50 of the Player's Handbook), uncanny dodge (see page 26 of the Player's Handbook), a +2 competence bonus on Disable Device, Hide, Move Silently, Open Lock, and Search checks, and a +2 bonus on Reflex saves.

At 5th level, the bonuses improve to +4.

Wild Focus: You gain wild empathy (see page 35 of the Player's Handbook; treat your druid level as equal to your class level), woodland stride (see page 36 of the Player's Handbook), a +2 competence bonus on Climb, Handle Animal, Jump, Knowledge (nature), and Survival checks, and a +2 bonus on Fortitude saves.

At 5th level, the bonuses improve to +4.

Bonus Feat (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain a bonus feat. You must meet the prerequisites for this feat.

At the start of each day, you can choose to change your bonus feat to any other feat for which you meet the prerequisites.

Mimic Class Feature: At 3rd level, you gain the ability to mimic a certain class feature possessed by other characters. Once per day, you can use any of the class features described below.

At 6th level, you can use this ability twice per day (either to mimic the same class feature on two different occasions or two different class features at separate times).

At 9th level, you can use this ability three times per day.

Evasion (Ex): As an immediate action, you can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save.

You can activate this ability after you have rolled a successful Reflex save, but before you have taken damage. This ability lasts for 1 minute.

See the monk class feature, page 41 of the Player's Handbook.

Rage (Ex): You can fly into a screaming blood frenzy.

See the barbarian class feature, page 25 of the Player's Handbook, except that the duration of the rage is 1 round + 1 round per point of your (newly improved) Constitution modifier.

Smite (Ex): You can smite a foe with a normal melee attack. You add your Charisma bonus (if any) to the attack roll and deal 1 extra point of damage per class level.

See the paladin smite evil class feature, page 44 of the Player's Handbook.

Sneak Attack (Ex): You can deal an extra 1d6 points of damage per three class levels when flanking an opponent or any time the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus (except on ranged attacks, which must be point-blank to deliver the extra damage).

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook. Treat your rogue level as equal to your class level for the purpose of defeating improved uncanny dodge.

Turn/Rebuke Undead (Su): You can turn or rebuke undead creatures (your choice when activating the ability) by channeling the power of your faith through a holy symbol. See Turn or Rebuke Undead, page 159 of the Player's Handbook.

Treat your cleric level as equal to your class level.

Ability Boon (Ex): At 4th level, when choosing an aptitude focus, you also gain a +2 competence bonus to an ability score of your choice.

This bonus lasts until you change your aptitude focus.

At 7th level this bonus improves to +4, and at 10th level to +6.

Double Aptitude (Ex): At 7th level, you can adopt two aptitude focuses in the same amount of time it previously took for you to adopt one.

For example, you could adopt both the combat focus and the wild focus to mimic a ranger, or the divine focus and arcane focus to mimic a mystic theurge.

You can't adopt the same aptitude focus twice simultaneously.

You can still only adopt as many focuses per day as indicated by your aptitude focus ability.

Rapid Refocus (Ex): At 8th level, you gain the power to change your aptitude focus in only 10 minutes.

PLAYING A CHAMELEON

Most people spend their lives defined by a single class, a single set of abilities.

Mages curse their inability to wear armor and wield weapons.

Fighters desperately wish they had magic.

Rogues long for strength to go with their guile, and priests wonder what it must be like to be stealthy.

But not you.

You can become any of those classes, any time you want. You have no limits.

Some days you have magic, and other days you're a fierce warrior, a talented sneak, or a clever hunter.

Whatever you need to be, you can become.

Every chameleon is trained at the School of Broad Horizons, also known by its students as Mimic Mansion.

In many ways this school is a monastery, a reclusive compound where teachers break students of old habits and force them to rely on new skills and abilities.

Even after you leave, you are not free of the Mimic Mansion.

Your superiors expect you to report in regularly on your activities.

Sometimes they require you to undertake assignments for them, usually with no explanation.

But you always obey.

Really, you have no choice—you owe everything to the school, and you know it.

Besides, you never know when someone nearby might be another chameleon, watching you and reporting on your behavior.

COMBAT

How you fight depends entirely on your persona for that day.

If you're playing a fighter or a paladin, you charge into the fray, weapons drawn.

As a barbarian, you usually race around the edges, harrying opponents with your speed.

When you're a rogue, you sneak in and attack from behind.

As a spellcaster, you'll probably stand back and use your spells to their best advantage, though you may wade in with your staff or mace after that.

Given a choice (and time to switch), you'll choose whichever class your comrades most need—usually either a fighter or a spellcaster.

The worst combat situation for you is an ambush.

You have no time to prepare a fighting persona, so you have to make do with your current role, whatever that is.

Fortunately, you always have your knowledge, skills, and your ability with weapons.

Arcane spellcasters don't use heavy weapons or armor, so if you're properly equipped you can target the enemy's mages and take them down quickly.

And if you have spells that day, no one expects you to suddenly draw a sword and hack them down, which gives you the advantage of surprise.

You wear armor under your robes for just such an occasion. At higher levels, you can actually change your class in the middle of the day.

This gives you much more flexibility, knowing that you can expend all your resources in a given fight and come back fully recharged after a brief rest.

Imagine starting the day as a spellcaster, exhausting your spells, and then switching to a fighter—especially if the spells you selected have durations that extend into your second aptitude.

ADVANCEMENT

Chameleons look for people with good natural abilities, open minds, and a knack for performance.

Once a potential recruit is selected, they watch her for several days before offering an invitation to a retreat.

Chameleons only invite those with a true desire for change, and those who have the mental strength to focus their energies to tap their potential.

At the retreat, you and the other recruits meet several chameleons who demonstrate their varied skills.

Of course, meeting someone who can cast spells but also claims she is a fighter is not very convincing.

But the next morning, when that same person works up a barbarian rage or sneaks up and steals your pouch, you begin to believe.

Then the chameleons offer you a choice.

You can decline their offer and return to your normal life—the chameleons are only passing through (local chameleons never participate in the retreat), and you won't ever see them again.

Or you can embrace your destiny and travel to the School of Broad Horizons to begin your training.

Life at Mimic Mansion is not easy.

The compound has no luxuries, and you are forced to endure long days, harsh conditions, and difficult assignments.

To be a chameleon requires mastery of the physical, mental, and spiritual, and it forces you to look past frivolous desires and concentrate on your real goal: to break free of your old mind-set.

The chameleons teach that every person has the potential to become a member of every class—everyone can cast spells, everyone can walk through the woods unnoticed, everyone can unleash a raging fury in battle or sneak up on their enemies.

But society teaches that each person can only excel at one role.

The chameleons shatter this notion.

They force you to realize the only thing stopping you from doing everything, acquiring every talent, is your own lack of belief.

Once that barrier has been overcome, they teach you to master each ability.

But being a chameleon is more than discovering you can cast spells and fight, rather than one or the other.

Using each ability requires the right mind-set, for you are not merely pretending to be a fighter or wizard.

When you channel those abilities, you actually become a member of that class for the day.

Your power comes from that self-confidence, and your acceptance of a destiny greater than society would allowed. You earn full chameleon status by passing a final exam, which involves masquerading in each of your many roles. You simply need to convince someone that you are, in fact, a member of a given class.

Once you have persuaded a new person for each class, you graduate from the mansion and you are given a small tattoo of a chameleon in the space between your first and second finger.

This identifies you as a chameleon, and allows you to prove your identity to other chameleons you may meet.

After entering this class, you should always keep your Bluff skill at the highest rank possible.

This skill is paramount to chameleons, for obvious reasons. Disguise is also useful, since sometimes you need to become a new person when you change your skill set.

Several of the key skills required in pulling off a successful impersonation of another class (such as Disable Device, Open Lock, Handle Animal, and various Knowledge skills) can't be used untrained, so a few ranks in each are vital.

Spellcraft is also important—it allows you to study spellcasters and their methods, which means you can mimic them more accurately.

RESOURCES

Mimic Mansion provides its graduates with the basics for their transformations.

These include armor, weapons, thieves' tools, a holy symbol (fake), and a spellbook (written in gibberish).

When sending someone out on a mission, the school can provide additional resources if necessary.

It expects such items to be returned after the mission is complete.

Chameleons are expected to be self-sufficient whenever possible.

They are also required to maintain the secrecy of their class, and of the school, at all costs—any chameleon who is captured and interrogated is given up for dead by the school.

The best she can hope for is that another chameleon will sneak in to kill her quickly.

CHAMELEONS IN THE WORLD

Chameleons add spice and intrigue to your game.

They are unpredictable, keeping other characters guessing as to their true class, abilities, and motives.

But chameleons are also very useful to a party.

They can cast spells, sneak, fight, and even heal (to a degree), as the occasion requires.

Even so, Mimic Mansion has its own agenda, and this can cause tension within a group, or get the entire party into a sticky situation.

ORGANIZATION

Every chameleon owes her allegiance to the Mimic Mansion and its senior instructors, but most chameleons do not learn the school's true purpose until after they graduate.

Teaching people to access their full potential is only a means to an end.

The school's real goal is to create an army of untraceable assassins, people who can become anyone and use any abilities required to get the job done.

An assassin named Salazar founded the School of Broad Horizons.

Salazar was extremely effective, but he kept running up against situations that required stealth, spells, and swords. "If only I had all those abilities", he kept thinking, "there'd be no stopping me".

One day, Salazar heard about a monk who claimed that everyone had the potential to become anything they desired.

He sought out the holy man, though it took years to find him, and pretended to be a humble man embittered by his lot in life.

The monk, whose name was Seng Li, believed Salazar's lies and accepted him as a student.

After several years, Salazar finally mastered the power to switch skill sets and access all the abilities he had within himself.

He then killed the monk and returned to his home city.

But Salazar was now older, and no longer fast enough and strong enough to be a top assassin.

So he selected three young men, each displeased with his place in life, and offered to train them.

These men became the first chameleons, and Salazar accepted jobs on their behalf.

Assignments were usually assassinations, but some were robberies or information-gathering or even protection.

With the money from these jobs, Salazar built the compound and sent his protégés out to find more students. Thus the School of Broad Horizons began.

Salazar still runs the school, though most of the students know him only as Master Sallah and rarely see him.

With his senior trainers (his original students), he coordinates the activities of graduates, and his agents pass along job offers that he accepts or rejects based upon his own assessment.

When accepting a job, Salazar finds out what chameleons are in the area, and assigns one the task.

His agents then convey instructions to the selected graduate, who is expected to comply without question.

Chameleons who prove their loyalty and their lack of scruples can become agents themselves.

An agent handles a particular city or region, establishing a permanent residence to create a cover identity.

She reports back to the school every week, detailing not only her own activities but the whereabouts and actions of every chameleon in the area.

Other chameleons report in to the agent when they arrive, and then check back in before leaving.

An agent who demonstrates her worth may be offered a position as trainer at the mansion or as a recruiter.

Recruiters wander from place to place, convening to hold retreats whenever an agent finds a potential recruit.

If a recruit seems worthy, she is escorted to Mimic Mansion to begin her training.

Trainers live in the compound and spend all their time teaching new students.

Some chameleons react poorly to news of their school's real mission and refuse to handle illegal assignments.

Salazar has ways to force their compliance, but these tactics sometimes fail, and a few chameleons have gone rogue.

They are actively hunted by agents and recruiters and targeted for death on sight.

Some of these rebels wander the world, using their talents as they see fit rather than as Salazar demands.

NPC REACTIONS

If a chameleon is doing her job efficiently, NPC reactions are based on the class she is mimicking and not on her nature as a chameleon.

If word gets out of an adventurer who can carry a sword and shield one day and cast spells the next, reactions change.

Commoners, businessmen, and rogues have an attitude of friendly, eager to hear stories about the chameleon's versatility (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Fighters, barbarians, and rangers may feel the same, but also become annoyed that their own skills are so easily reproduced.

Sorcerers and wizards are indifferent or unfriendly, believing that true magic cannot be so easily acquired.

Clerics, druids, and paladins are unfriendly or hostile, actively seeking to expose chameleons as frauds; they pretend to have divine powers, which insults the gods and those who receive their genuine favor.

CHAMELEON LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) or both Gather Information and Perform can research the Chameleons to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Sometimes, people aren't what they seem.

And some of them can seem to be anyone.

Like a human chameleon, they blend in".

DC 15: "These people can masquerade as fighters, mages, thieves—anything".
 DC 20: "Somehow they learn to mimic each class's abilities, even spellcasting.
 And they all train at a school somewhere".
 DC 30: "Sometimes, these chameleons just seem to be traveling.
 But strange deaths or burglaries occur when they're around.
 And, after all, who'd make a better assassin or thief than someone who can be anyone?"

CHAMELEONS IN THE GAME

It is easy to bring a chameleon into your game, since they can mimic the special abilities of any other class. Their ability to switch class sets makes them versatile, even if they never reach the full potential of any one class. At the same time, chameleons can serve as spies, thieves, and assassins. They could join any group that is moving toward their own goal, both for company and for camouflage. Chameleons can be fun to play, because they let players dabble in all the existing classes without being tied to one. The class's darker side also makes it fun to roleplay, especially if the character has qualms about her assignments and is considering quitting the organization.

The best way to make a chameleon character happy is for them to be useful. Parties that have one member of every class may not need chameleons, but a group with no arcane spellcasters and no rogues may be desperate for their skills. Give them tasks that require changing skill sets, and make sure assignments from Mimic Mansion occasionally arrive to complicate matters.

ADAPTATION

Chameleons can be reworked as a completely nonmagical class, where they have no spells but use Sleight of Hand to make items "disappear", and potions or powders to create smoke, fog, and fire.

They could be made completely magical as well or even psionic, using spells or psionics to actually gain the abilities of other classes.

If you're using the EBERRON Campaign Setting, the chameleon prestige class should be available to changeling player characters as well as humans and doppelgangers. In this case, the Able Learner feat extends to changelings as well.

LOREDELVER

*"I think of myself as a liberator.
 It's my job to liberate the ancient lore—not to mention the vast wealth—that has been imprisoned by history."*

—Stormwind Vaora, loredelver

Loredelvers are illumian spellcasters who find and explore ruins, disable the magical protections that guard them, and sift through the ancient secrets found within.

They rarely spend time in the enclaves of the illumians, instead crisscrossing the world in search of archaic lore for their cabal's library.

BECOMING A LOREDELVER

Most characters become loredelvers after taking at least five levels of wizard and one or two levels of rogue.

A few sorcerers wind up in the class, but they need to take extra levels in the rogue class to gain the requisite skill ranks.

Bards who lean toward exploration and discovery sometimes enter this class after picking up a level of rogue, but give up significant bardic abilities to do so.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Illumian.

Skills: Decipher Script 10 ranks; Disable Device 5 ranks; Knowledge (arcana) 10 ranks; Knowledge (dungeoneering) 5 ranks.

Spells or Spell Like Abilities: Ability to cast at least one 3rd-level arcane spell from the divination school.

Special: Trapfinding class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Concentration, Decipher Script, Disable Device, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Knowledge (dungeoneering), Knowledge (history), Open Lock, Profession, Search, Speak Language, and Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a loredelver, your class features relate to your core mission of exploring tombs, ruins, and forgotten sites looking for ancient manuscripts and other lore.

Your spellcasting ability continues to advance at nearly its full rate, bolstered by a few spell-like class abilities that augment your ability to find magical auras and defeat traps. Spells per Day: At each level after 1st, you gain new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a lorekeeper, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Bardic Knowledge (Ex): Lorekeepers extensively study the reports of their fellow lorekeepers as well as historical and magical texts.

You can attempt to recall some relevant piece of information about local notable people, legendary items, or noteworthy places.

See the bard class feature, page 29 of the Player's Handbook. You use your lorekeeper level + your Intelligence modifier (plus levels in bard, if any) to make bardic knowledge checks.

Magical Insight (Ex): A lorekeeper has an uncanny insight into the workings of magic.

You gain a +5 insight bonus on Spellcraft checks made to determine the school of magic of magical auras.

Detect Magic (Sp): A lorekeeper develops a preternatural sense for the presence of magic.

At 2nd level and higher, you can use detect magic (as the spell, page 219 of the Player's Handbook) at will.

Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you have a hair-trigger sense of dangerous magic.

If you are exposed to any effect that normally allows you to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage, you take no damage with a successful saving throw.

Spontaneous Casting (Su): At 4th level, you gain the ability to spontaneously cast certain spells using your existing arcane spell slots.

You can “lose” any prepared spell or spell slot of the designated level to cast a specific spell.

You use your highest arcane caster level as the caster level for the spell.

At 4th level and higher, you can “lose” any prepared spell or spell slot of 2nd level or higher to cast knock (see page 246 of the Player's Handbook).

At 7th level and higher, you can “lose” any prepared spell or spell slot of 4th level or higher to cast arcane eye (see page 200 of the Player's Handbook).

At 10th level, you can “lose” any prepared spell or spell slot of 6th level or higher to cast greater dispel magic (see page 223 of the Player's Handbook).

Fearless (Ex): At 5th level, you have learned to steel yourself against the horrors that guard the places you're exploring.

You gain immunity to fear, magical or otherwise.

Arcane Sight (Sp): By the time you reach 6th level, you have honed your sensitivity to the magical auras that surround you.

You can use arcane sight (as the spell, page 201 of the Player's Handbook) at will.

Improved Evasion (Ex): Beginning at 8th level, you can avoid damage from certain attacks with a successful Reflex save and take only half damage on a failed save.

See the monk class feature, page 42 of the Player's Handbook.

Greater Arcane Sight (Su): At 9th level, you have reached the pinnacle of magical sensitivity.

You can use greater arcane sight (as the spell, page 201 of the Player's Handbook) at will.

PLAYING A LOREKEEPER

You have left behind your cabal—perhaps forever—for the thrill of walking where no one has stepped for thousands of years.

You relish the challenge of breaking into ancient sites that have kept their secrets for centuries.

But you aren't just a tomb robber.

Your cabal has trained you in esoteric techniques that help you overcome magical defenses.

In exchange, you deliver to them the ancient tomes you recover, as well as your own journals about your adventures.

Any treasure you recover that isn't of academic interest to the cabal is yours to keep.

COMBAT

Like other spellcasters, you rely almost entirely on your magic in a fight.

Becoming a lorekeeper doesn't slow down your spellcasting progress too much, so you should have potent offensive and defensive spells at your disposal.

But your spellcasting can't always mask your below-average hit points and unfamiliarity with weapons, so you'll often resort to the tried-and-true spellcaster defense: befriending a fighter to stand in front of you.

At higher levels, your lorekeeper class features can provide an edge in combat.

Arcane eye is a great reconnaissance tool that can make sure you gain the advantages of good terrain and preflight preparation.

Arcane sight lets you identify which enemies are benefiting from magical effects.

When you reach 10th level, your ability to spontaneously cast greater dispel magic makes you an effective counter for an enemy spellcaster or a front-line fighter overloaded with magical effects.

ADVANCEMENT

When cabals choose members to undergo lorekeeper training, they usually look for a combination of spellcasting prowess and enough physical conditioning to survive the rigors of travel and combat.

But the most important attribute is a relentless curiosity, which manifests itself in the desire to explore every lost ruin and forgotten crypt the world has to offer.

Once your cabal assigns you to lorekeeper duty, you begin looking at your surroundings in a new light.

After poring over countless diagrams of poison needle launchers, deadfall snares, and camouflaged pits, you're always scanning walls, floors, and ceilings for the kinds of traps you've read about.

You start to see flickers of magical auras, even when you don't have detect magic active.

As you advance, you'll probably develop a bigger spellbook than a typical wizard.

Like any lorekeeper worth his salt, you copy any useful spells from the treasure troves you uncover before turning over your loot to your cabal.

RESOURCES

Because your travels are ostensibly in service to your cabal, its librarians and researchers are at your disposal.

They can point you toward ancient dungeons and warn you about possible traps mentioned in historical texts.

And when you turn over the tomes you find and the journals you keep during your travels, cabal researchers might find clues in them that send you on to even more thrilling—and lucrative—adventures.

LOREKEEPERS IN THE WORLD

The loredevil prestige class is a good fit for a spellcaster who wants to use magic to perform roguelike functions in the party, such as providing reconnaissance, opening locks, and disabling dangerous traps.

It's also a class with a built-in excuse to adventure.

Illumian cabals know the locations of dungeons, ancient ruins, and other sites rich with adventuring possibilities. The loredevil does the dangerous work, and the cabal provides support and further opportunities to explore.

ORGANIZATION

Loredelvers don't have a strong organization among themselves; they work at the behest of the cabal that trained them.

The specifics of loredevil training have spread to most illumian cabals, so any cabal that wants a loredevil needs only find a worthy candidate, provide training, then send him out into the world with a map.

Many cabals have a directorate devoted to loredevil, called the acquisitions directorate.

While not every member of the directorate is a loredevil, the directorate's expedition leaders and elite agents usually include a high number of loredevils.

Quill cabals in particular are rife with loredevils, and many illumian children aspire to positions in the acquisitions directorate.

A loredevil is almost always on the road tracking down lost lore for the cabal, tarrying at the enclave only long enough to heal, train, and plan the next expedition.

Loredelvers from different cabals rarely congregate, because at least to a degree they're all rivals for the same lore.

But every loredevil keeps a journal of his travels, and those journals eventually find their way into the cabal's library.

Cabals trade or borrow books with other friendly cabals, and loredevil journals are a prized part of such exchanges. When one loredevil makes annotations in another loredevil's journal, it can mark the beginning of a lively and informative correspondence.

Two loredevils who have never met might use journal annotations to argue about the meaning of a particular rune in ancient High Draconic.

But they wouldn't necessarily recognize each other if they were imprisoned together by the same angry dragon.

Perhaps the most famous journals are those of Inkwell Carvin, a loredevil whose exploits are legendary among illumians.

Carvin single-handedly braved the ziggurat of Thelm, the Moaning Caves, and Otralak's Tower in his quest to retrieve the dispersed parts of the Library of the Sublime.

Five years ago, Carvin stopped checking in with the Inkwell cabal, and many loredevils suspect he has been killed or captured by the githyanki.

Loredelvers can rise through the ranks of their directorate like any illumian, although few reach leadership positions because they're far too often absent to play the political games needed for high-level promotion.

Political considerations aside, most acquisitions directorates function as meritocracies: The more you bring back for the library, the better your chances of promotion.

NPC REACTIONS

Loredelvers engender a mixture of adulation and envy when they visit the enclave of their cabal.

In general, cabal members have an initial attitude of friendly toward them (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

If a political struggle is under way, either in the acquisitions directorate or the cabal as a whole, then the sudden arrival of a loredevil is less welcome, but attitudes rarely drift to worse than indifferent.

Attitudes also reflect indifference if a loredevil returns to a cabal that has fallen on hard times during his absence; the cabal resents that the loredevil was off on exciting adventures while the rest of the cabal was dealing with encroaching famine and attacks by foe after foe.

Loredelvers need to tread carefully when it comes to the nonlore treasure they collect from the dungeons and ruins they explore.

Most cabals expect loredevils to turn over information, not treasure, and they assume that loredevils use their wealth to buy protective items, pay for colleagues (often nonillumian PCs), and otherwise make themselves more effective loredevils.

But a loredevil who comes back from a mission dripping with gold and jewels should be prepared for the cabal's reaction.

In general, flaunting wealth from a mission earns a loredevil a -4 circumstance penalty on interactions with most cabal members and a +4 circumstance bonus on interactions with the cabal's youth and other would-be loredevils.

LOREDEVIL LORE

Characters with Knowledge (history) can research individual loredevils to learn more about them.

(While loredevils aren't historical personages themselves, they're known among historians for the data they provide).

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Loredevil is a term the illumians use to describe their archeologists".

DC 15: "Loredelvers are illumian spellcasters who specialize in breaking into tombs and ancient places, looking for old manuscripts, spellbooks, and other items for their libraries".

DC 20: "The loredevils are trying to track down the thousands of books that the illumians lost when the githyanki sacked their library".

Additionally, loredevils appear frequently in the tales told by bards.

Bardic knowledge checks for information about loredevils reduce the DC of the check by 5.

LOREDEVILS IN THE GAME

Because they're beyond the day-to-day reach of their cabals, loredevil PCs are easy to work into an ongoing game.

Simply arrange for a loredevil to visit his cabal's enclave from time to time, perhaps to have researchers study a mysterious map or translate the inscription the PCs found in a tomb somewhere.

If you have a loredevil at your table, make sure you provide magic traps for him to find and disable.

Loredelvers love site-based adventures such as treks into ancient ruins and dungeons.

At higher levels, you can provide challenges that a loredevil can overcome with his class features, such as encounters that depend on noticing magical auras (a disguised villain or a room hidden by illusion) and lots of dangerous magic to dispel.

Loredelvers also provide a useful adventure hook even if none of the PCs are interested in the prestige class. Loredelvers may hire PCs to act as expedition guards or do a preliminary exploration of a ruin in a loredelver's absence. If the PCs find a loredelver's journal, they'll have enough clues for a dozen adventures in their hands.

ADAPTATION

While the loredelver fills an important role in illumian culture, you can adapt the class to other groups that have an interest in ancient lore.

The prestige class is a natural for any secret society with spellcasters who want to break into magically guarded places.

MENACING BRUTE

"I wouldn't draw that sword if I was you."

—Wogar, menacing brute

Life as a half-orc in a human city is never easy, and some half-orcs are driven to desperation by the struggle of living in a place where one is never truly welcome.

The menacing brute takes advantage of how most humans fear half-orcs, playing on that dread to make his living.

He combines resourcefulness and determination with a ready wit and the willingness to do jobs that others find distasteful—and do them well.

BECOMING A MENACING BRUTE

Menacing brutes typically combine levels of fighter with one or two levels of rogue.

Fighter levels are essential for bringing the brute's base attack bonus to a respectable level, while brutes enjoy adding a little sneak attack damage to their first solid hits in melee.

Rogue levels are not necessary, but they can help a half-orc who is not exceptionally intelligent meet the skill prerequisites for the class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Half-orc.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Intimidate 5 ranks, Knowledge (local) 2 ranks, Search 2 ranks.

Feats: Iron Will.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Gather Information, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Listen, Search, Sense Motive, and Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

The menacing brute's class features focus on making you an intimidating presence on the battlefield.

You can demoralize your opponents with a stare and strike terror into their hearts as you slay their companions.

Demoralizing Stare (Ex): You gain a competence bonus on Intimidate checks equal to your menacing brute level.

In addition, when you successfully use the Intimidate skill to demoralize an opponent, the target remains shaken for an additional 1 round per class level.

Resourceful Search (Ex): At 2nd level, you become extremely resourceful at finding "discarded" pieces of equipment.

Once per day, you can attempt a Search check in order to find any nonmagical item of your choice, with a maximum market price of 200 gp, without paying for it.

The gold piece value of the item determines the time it takes for you to find it, as well as the minimum size of community in which it can be found (see the table below).

GP Value	Search		Minimum Community Size
	DC	Search Time
up to 20 gp	10	1d4×10 minutes	Hamlet
21–50 gp	15	2d4×10 minutes	Small town
51–100 gp	20	1d4 hours	Small city
101–200 gp	25	2d4 hours	Metropolis

For example, if you are searching for a wagon (35 gp), you would need to look in a small town or larger community and succeed on a DC 15 Search check after spending 2d4×10 minutes searching.

If you sought a breastplate (200 gp), you could find it in a metropolis by making a DC 25 Search check and spending 2d4 hours digging through alleyways, trash bins, and the like.

You can never find a masterwork item or magic item of any value while using this ability.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you deal extra damage when flanking an opponent or any time the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus (except on ranged attacks, which must be point-blank to deliver the extra damage).

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook. Ruthless Cut (Ex): At 4th level and higher, you gain a +4 bonus on a roll to confirm a threat on a critical hit.

Making an Example (Ex): At 5th level, any time you deal enough damage with a melee attack to drop a creature (typically by dropping it to less than 0 hit points or killing it), all foes within 30 feet of the enemy must succeed on a Will save (DC 15 + your Cha modifier) or cower until the start of their next turn.

If the blow that dropped the creature was a critical hit, add +4 to the save DC.

This is a mind-affecting fear effect.

PLAYING A MENACING BRUTE

Throw your weight around, and if you can toss in some witty or at least bitterly sarcastic comments while you're doing it, so much the better.

Your class name says it all—you're accustomed to using your muscle to get your way.

You lean on the recalcitrant, squash the rebellious, and murder the opposition.

Nothing gets between you and getting a job done.

You are probably a member of some illegal (or at least shady) organization that employs you for your particular combination of skills.

This organization might be a crime gang, a casino or similar business where you help maintain order, or simply a rich patron with his fingers in a few unscrupulous operations.

In exchange for doing your employer's dirty work, you earn a degree of respect and prestige within the organization—nobody else wants to do your job.

Most people are afraid of you, so it's easy to intimidate the petty thieves and con artists in your organization.

You have some freedom to pursue other opportunities when your services aren't needed, which leaves you open to adventure—though usually you're expected to stay close to your organization's base of operations.

COMBAT

As a bully, you're happier leaning on opponents to get your way than you are actually wading into a fair fight.

You use your Intimidate skill to make sure your enemies aren't at their best when facing you.

Once combat starts in earnest, take every opportunity to flank your enemies for the extra sneak attack damage.

That said, you're just as good in straight-up melee as any other fighter, so there's no reason to hang back or slink around in the shadows.

Your style is blunt and direct, and that applies in combat as well as in conversation.

Hit your foes hard enough, and they won't hit back.

You're at your best when your side outnumbers your opponents.

Other thugs can help you flank your enemies, and if they have the sneak attack ability too, you'll put flanked enemies down quickly.

Once you reach 5th level, you can sometimes end a combat quickly by dispatching one opponent early on and making the rest cower.

Cowering creatures lose their Dexterity bonus, so they're susceptible to sneak attacks from your allies, flanking or no flanking.

Once the first one falls, the others quickly follow.

ADVANCEMENT

You probably started on the road to becoming a menacing brute early in life, figuring that being big and strong gave you an edge.

Before long, someone else recognized your strength and your ability to intimidate your foes as well as your resourcefulness and wit and offered you a job.

Many people would have balked at that job, whether it involved extortion or murder, but you grabbed the opportunity and proved your worth.

Now that you can officially call yourself a menacing brute (though you've probably been one all your adult life), you continue in the same sort of work.

Your employment advancement is not necessarily tied to your advancement in the prestige class, and you might drift from employer to employer as the need for your services changes.

You might be a full-time freelancer, taking odd jobs of a particularly violent sort as they come up, and filling gaps in your schedule with more traditional adventuring.

At all times, you continue to practice the basic tools of your trade: intimidation and brutality.

As you gain levels, you have a good number of skill points to spend (perhaps even if you have an Intelligence penalty) and some flexibility about how to spend them.

Most menacing brutes spend skill points on Intimidate at every level, making them exceptionally good at that particular skill.

Even if you don't buy Intimidate at every level, your competency doesn't suffer much, thanks to your demoralizing stare ability.

Whichever approach to Intimidate you choose, consider increasing your ability further with the Menacing Demeanor feat (see page 153).

Your skill and feat choices depend on the kinds of jobs you typically pursue.

If keeping an ear to the street is important, buy ranks in Gather Information and Knowledge (local).

If stealth is more important, consider buying ranks in Hide and Move Silently as cross-class skills.

RESOURCES

One of your defining characteristics is the ingenuity reflected in your resourceful search class ability.

You are supposed to be self-reliant and have the wherewithal to acquire what you need to do your job properly.

At the same time, you are either a member of a powerful organization or the employee of a powerful individual, and the organization or the employer has resources that can help you accomplish the tasks set before you.

To a certain extent, your resourceful search ability reflects the resources available by virtue of your position.

When you need more valuable gear than you can scrounge using that ability, you might still be able to gain some benefit from your organization or employer.

If you're willing to carry and use stolen goods that could land you in (more) trouble, you can acquire most gear (mundane or magical) for 90% of its market price.

Unless you're willing to go into full-time work as a fence, you are limited to one significant purchase of this sort per month of game time.

MENACING BRUTES IN THE WORLD

Menacing brutes fill a role common in urban crime stories: the thug who leans on people until they come around to the criminal mastermind's way of thinking.

Menacing brutes might appear in any campaign where organized crime exists, whether it takes the form of a small local thieves' guild or a larger organization dedicated to fear and intimidation for profit.

ORGANIZATION

Menacing brutes find work in a tremendous variety of organizations, ranging from the wildly illegal to the merely shady.

By their nature, menacing brutes are rarely an integral part of such organizations.

They are freelancers, called in to deal with specific troublesome situations, and they are most effective when close ties to the structures of power do not hinder them.

A menacing brute's job might involve extorting "protection" money from local businesses, breaking up fights, kicking out rowdies, standing behind his employer to look intimidating, acting as a bodyguard, destroying property, or killing competitors and enemies.

NPC REACTIONS

A menacing brute wields the power he does precisely because others fear him.

Playing on the innate fear that half-orcs inspire just happens to be the brute's stock in trade.

Most NPCs have an initial reaction of unfriendly toward a menacing brute, though the brute's Intimidate skill often makes them behave friendly (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Members of law enforcement organizations, as well as people whom a brute has previously intimidated, are usually hostile toward a menacing brute.

Other criminals are indifferent to friendly, depending on their relationship to the brute and his organization.

Few people are helpful.

MENACING BRUTE LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can research menacing brutes or the organizations they work for to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: "Some half-orcs thrive on fear and use intimidation to get their way".

DC 15: "Certain half-orcs are particularly skilled at intimidation and work as enforcers for criminal organizations".

This check result also reveals a basic sketch of the organization and the kinds of activities it is involved in.

DC 20: More details about the organization: the areas where it is strongest, specific locations where members are commonly seen, and so on.

A DC 20 Gather Information check can allow a character to arrange a meeting with an NPC menacing brute.

MENACING BRUTES IN THE GAME

Menacing brutes probably already exist in your campaign, whether they have this prestige class or not.

If the players in your campaign have any interaction with an illegal or shady organization, sending a menacing brute to lean on them can be a logical extension of that interaction.

(Since PCs are not particularly vulnerable to intimidation, a higher-level menacing brute works better as an NPC opponent than one with a single level in the prestige class). If your campaign is not strongly oriented toward the PCs as champions of good arrayed against the forces of evil, a player character could become a menacing brute.

The class works best in a campaign focused on activity in an urban center, and the player will be happiest if there is ample opportunity for interaction with NPCs (rather than monsters).

Even so, there's no reason why a menacing brute can't wander into a dungeon from time to time.

ADAPTATION

The menacing brute is a fairly generic class and should require little adaptation to use in any campaign.

You could use it without alteration in any evil or criminal organization, such as the Zhentarim in Toril or the Order of the Emerald Claw in Eberron.

(Eberron's dragonmarked mercantile houses undoubtedly make use of menacing brutes as well, though they are more likely to disavow all knowledge of their activities).

You might choose to significantly alter the class by opening it to races other than half-orcs.

The class is designed to expand a particular aspect of the half-orc mind-set: the realization that humans fear half-orcs, and a savvy half-orc can exploit that fear for personal gain.

If you open the class to other races, you might add an additional feat requirement, such as Persuasive, to reflect the idea that the character should have an innately frightening demeanor.

OUTCAST CHAMPION

"We are not half-humans, inferior to you by virtue of sharing only half your blood.

We are a race of our own, and we will not lay down our swords until we are a nation of our own, masters of our own destiny."

—Ethrindel, Crown Prince of Everyn

Outcast champions bring hope to those who have no place in society.

They lead by example, but their methods differ widely.

Some outcast champions unite under the banner of freedom and dignity, while others stir their charges with talk of rightful conquest of their oppressors.

While one outcast champion might employ stealth and subtle measures to achieve his goals, another announces his intentions with a bloody sword held aloft.

BECOMING AN OUTCAST CHAMPION

Almost any half-human character can qualify as an outcast champion by 5th level.

Paladins, fighters, bards, and rogues are the most common outcast champions, due to the class's focus on martial leadership.

Even the occasional barbarian or monk finds cause to rally his comrades and take up arms against oppressive regimes.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Half-elf, half-orc, or half-ogre.

Skills: Diplomacy 8 ranks or Intimidate 8 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Diplomacy, Disguise, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Move Silently, and Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

The outcast champion's class features focus on working with a small group of allies against overwhelming odds.

Aura of Confidence (Ex): Your presence emboldens allies within 30 feet who can see you (including yourself).

They add your class level as a morale bonus on their Will saves.

This effect is lost if you fall unconscious or die.

Avenging Strike (Ex): You are surrounded by allies who rely on you for victory, and you take this responsibility to heart.

You can attempt an avenging strike on an enemy who has dealt damage to an ally of yours within the last hour.

The avenging strike must be delivered with a melee attack. You add your Charisma modifier (if positive) to your attack roll and deal an extra 1d6 points of damage per outcast champion level.

If you accidentally strike a creature that has not dealt damage to an ally within the last hour, the avenging strike has no effect, but that use of the ability is still expended.

You may use an avenging strike once per day per point of Charisma bonus (minimum 1/day).

Desperate Fury (Ex): You are at your best when times are worst.

Beginning at 3rd level, once per day when you are reduced to fewer than one-half your full normal hit points, or when you are fatigued or exhausted, you can enter a state of desperate fury.

While in a desperate fury, you gain a +2 morale bonus to Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution.

The desperate fury lasts for 3 rounds + 1 round per point of your (newly improved) Constitution bonus.

Unlike with a barbarian's rage, you have no penalties or limitations while in a desperate fury; however, if you become frightened, panicked, or cowering, the desperate fury ends immediately.

At 5th level, you become able to share the effect of your desperate fury with allies within 30 feet who can see you. These allies gain the same benefits as you for as long as your desperate fury lasts (even if an ally becomes frightened, panicked, or cowering).

Teamwork (Ex): You are skilled at creating a strong bond of teamwork between yourself and your allies.

Starting at 4th level, whenever you or any ally within 30 feet who can see or hear you uses the aid another action, the bonus provided on attack rolls, AC, or skill checks improves by 2 (from +2 to +4).

PLAYING AN OUTCAST CHAMPION

If you have taken up the role of an outcast champion, the plight of your people is the most important factor in your world.

Their suffering goads you to action, and the prospect of their freedom makes all your troubles seem worthwhile.

To others, you might seem obsessed, and your intensity puts people off.

But their opinions don't matter to you—all that matters is the struggle to bring hope to the hopeless.

As an outcast champion, you might be the leader of an organization dedicated to the freedom of a certain group of half-elves, half-orcs, half-ogres, or some other marginalized and oppressed people.

If you are not the leader, you hold a position of authority—usually a military position, but that may depend on your background and expertise.

As the name of the class suggests, outcast champions are never minor functionaries or behind-the-scenes players. You stand as an exemplar of your race and your cause.

COMBAT

Your place in a battle is usually leading from the front.

Your class features work best when you are in melee with your allies close at hand.

Your attack bonus and hit points are as good as a fighter's, and you probably have the weapon and armor proficiencies to stand toe to toe with your enemies.

Use your avenging strike to concentrate on taking down the foes who are dealing the most damage to you or your allies.

Try to draw enemy fire—you should have enough hit points to soak up damage for a while, and when you become sorely wounded, you only become more fearsome (and receive an extra store of hit points) thanks to your desperate fury ability.

You should also take the initiative to coordinate your allies in the battle.

They look to you as a leader, and you feel a sense of responsibility for keeping them alive.

Make sure they stay within 30 feet of you, so that they benefit from the effect of your aura of confidence, teamwork, and (once you reach 5th level) desperate fury abilities.

If members of the party are having trouble hitting their opponents, instruct them to use the aid another action—a +4 bonus on a character's attack or AC is far more useful than a failed attack.

ADVANCEMENT

Maybe you chose the role of an outcast champion, but it is equally possible that it chose you—or, more specifically, that the members of the community you support have chosen you to represent them and lead their struggle for freedom and justice.

You have at least a nugget of true leadership potential, reflected in your interaction skills.

You can inspire people to do what you want them to do, either through diplomatic persuasion or through intimidating coercion.

Desperate people are always looking for leaders or saviors, and you have the ability to back up your words with actions.

Your advancement as an outcast champion is not so much about training as it is about developing your natural talents and strengthening the bond that connects you to your community.

Your early abilities involve forging your own resolve and tempering your fury into a weapon.

Your confidence inspires others, and eventually your desperate fury does the same.

By 4th level, you broaden your focus to include a real sense of leadership.

It is a good idea to expand your skills as you advance in this class.

If you met the entry requirements with ranks in Diplomacy, then put points in Intimidate, or vice versa.

Having multiple options for how you manage people can be useful.

Of course, it's never a bad idea to stick with your strengths as well, increasing your ranks in the skill that got you into the class in the first place.

The Leadership feat (if your DM allows it) can be a good way to develop your position within your community, allowing you to marshal followers to help your cause.

RESOURCES

Almost by definition, the members of your community have little in the way of material resources to assist your struggle for their liberation.

That said, you can always rely on their hospitality, such as it is: A bed of straw and a cold fireplace might be all they have to offer, but as their champion, you are always welcome to whatever they have.

Your community can provide much more than material goods.

When the law comes looking for you, you can count on a hiding place in a barn or shed.

When you need to sneak into the city to raid the baron's manor, you can hide in a barrel on the vintner's cart or among the sheep being brought to market.

Your companions can usually benefit from such favors as well, assuming they share in your struggle on behalf of the dispossessed.

OUTCAST CHAMPIONS IN THE WORLD

The outcast champion is not an isolated character—he embodies social forces in the campaign.

If dispossessed half-elves or a half-orc underclass exists in your campaign, then the outcast champion should be available to rally these oppressed communities.

ORGANIZATION

Outcast champions are not organized into a single group, but by their nature they are part of organizations or movements.

An outcast champion might never interact with another member of the same prestige class, but he is responsible to a community, the group of outcast half-humans he represents and for whose liberation he fights.

An outcast champion stands as the representative of a popular uprising or movement for change.

If he is not the leader in fact, he might be in charge of a group's military affairs or defenses.

An outcast champion has a specialized role within his organization.

He is more likely to lead a raid on the treasury where the taxes are stored than to lobby for change in the city council chamber, and would rather hunt down a ruthless sheriff who slaughtered a half-orc family than petition the baron for justice in the case.

Even if some members of the organization work for change in political or diplomatic ways, the typical outcast champion prefers a more active role.

For outcast champions, the struggle of their people is integral to their lives.

It motivates every adventure and consumes every waking thought.

The exact nature of their activities, however, depends largely on the status of the community they serve.

If the community has already risen in open revolt, then the champion's life is one long military campaign, leading strike teams against the enemy in strategic locations.

More often, however, the oppressed people continue to eke out a meager subsistence on their farms or in their ghetto, while the outcast champion does what he can to better their lot without their active participation.

He might plunder ancient ruins to bring wealth into his community, or fight his way up the feudal chain of command until he confronts some distant emperor to win freedom for his people.

Some movements that include outcast champions are rigidly organized military operations, in which every fighting member has a rank and position.

Most, however, are loosely organized, if they actually have any definite structure at all.

An outcast champion might claim some rank or title, or their community might bestow one on him ("Champion" being a common title of this nature), but that rank rarely has significance beyond the renown that the champion earns through his actions.

Some outcast champions style themselves kings or princes, but such titles are more expressions of hopeful anticipation than of political reality.

NPC REACTIONS

As might be expected, any individual who belongs to a group an outcast champion fights against has a low opinion of the character.

If an outcast champion is actively fighting against a local ruler, that ruler and the forces of law serving that ruler (soldiers, constables, and so on) have an initial attitude of hostile toward the character and any members of his movement or organization (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Most citizens of the area have an unfriendly attitude, unless they are sympathetic to the champion's cause.

Sympathetic characters have an initial reaction of friendly, while members of the movement are initially helpful.

Few greet an outcast champion with indifference, unless they are unaware of his identity and his mission.

OUTCAST CHAMPION LORE

Characters can use Knowledge (local) or Gather Information to research a particular outcast champion or his community and learn more about him.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Basic information about the outcast champion's half-human community: Some members of the community feel oppressed and marginalized, or the community is in open revolt.

No specifics about the individual.

DC 15: The existence of the outcast champion: The people of this community look to a hero they believe will throw off the oppressor's yoke or lead them to freedom.

DC 20: The name of the outcast champion and some details about his activities and abilities.

OUTCAST CHAMPIONS IN THE GAME

It's easy to introduce an outcast champion into an ongoing campaign.

If your campaign includes a group of oppressed half-humans, an outcast champion could suddenly arise within that community and galvanize it into action.

Of course, even if such a group hasn't appeared in the campaign, it's easy to postulate that the PCs might simply never have noticed it.

Alternatively, the player characters might begin hearing rumors of an uprising in a distant land where their adventures are leading them.

A PC outcast champion works best if the rest of the players are on board with the character concept. They might be of the same race, or at least associated with the champion's community somehow. Or they could simply be sympathetic to the champion's cause and methods, willing to participate in adventures related to the ultimate goal of freedom or vengeance for the champion's oppressed community. However, even if the other PCs have no interest in the outcast champion's mission, an outcast champion character can remain involved in his community's struggle, even if only by sharing some of his treasure with the leaders of the community.

ADAPTATION

The outcast champion is a fairly generic class, and should fit into any campaign with little or no customization.

TABLE 5-5: THE OUTCAST CHAMPION HIT DIE: D10

SCAR ENFORCER

"We have been abandoned by our fathers and mothers. We are treated as children and slaves despite our talents and ambitions.

If they will not give us what we want through their own conscience, then we shall take it, by guile and the blade."

—Vakra, Bane of Elves

Scar enforcers are angry, embittered half-elves who have rejected both sides of their ancestry.

They band with others of similar attitude, collectively known as the Scars, using stealth and violence to strike back at the societies that marginalize them.

BECOMING A SCAR ENFORCER

Taking levels of rogue is the easiest way to become a scar enforcer; all the entry skills are class skills for you, and your sneak attack dice from rogue levels stack with those you gain from scar enforcer levels.

Bards are the natural second choice, followed by clerics (with the Trickery domain) and sorcerers.

Dexterity (for sneaking) and Charisma (for bluffing) are key abilities for you.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Half-elf.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Hide 4 ranks, Move Silently 4 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Disable Device, Disguise, Gather Information, Hide, Knowledge (local), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spot, and Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

While not an ideal straight-up combatant, the scar enforcer is more than a match for human and elf opponents.

You work best striking from hidden positions, using your sneak attack and smite abilities to deal massive damage with a single blow.

Spells per Day: At each even-numbered level, you gain new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a scar enforcer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Favored Enemy (Ex): As a member of this class, you gain a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against humans or elves.

Likewise, you gain a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against these races.

See the ranger class feature, page 47 of the Player's Handbook.

Smite Enemy (Su): Once per day starting at 2nd level, you can deliver a powerful melee attack to a human or elf foe.

You add your Charisma bonus (if any) on your attack roll and deal an extra 1 point of damage per class level.

If you accidentally smite a creature that is neither an elf nor a human, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for the day.

At 5th level, you can use this ability twice per day.

At 8th level, you can use this ability three times per day.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you deal extra damage when flanking an opponent or any time the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus (except on ranged attacks, which must be point-blank to deliver the extra damage).

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook.

Disguise Self (Sp): Starting at 4th level, you can use disguise self three times per day, but only to assume the appearance of a human or an elf.

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): Beginning at 7th level, you can use the Hide skill in natural terrain even while being observed.

See the ranger class feature, page 48 of the Player's Handbook.

Forgo Heritage (Ex): At 10th level, you leave behind your racial heritage.

You are no longer considered an elf or a human for the purpose of beneficial or harmful effects.

(You still count as a half-elf for the purpose of qualifying for this class).

PLAYING A SCAR ENFORCER

As a scar enforcer, you have the benefit of stealth and a fearsome reputation that aids your work.

Your organization, the Scars, is rightly feared for harboring assassins, leg breakers, and extortionists—and you use that fear to your advantage.

Your methods employ guile and cunning, moving through the shadows with ease to land a blow on your hated foe.

You can rely on your fellow scar enforcers for aid, but remember that you're still dealing with cutthroat murderers who have their own agendas.

Use racial tension to your advantage by playing off stereotypical fears to sway opinions.

Always remember that humans and elves have betrayed you and your people—they are not worthy of your pity or respect.

As a relatively small group, scar enforcers occasionally work together, creating effective strike teams that blend their skills with deadly success.

More commonly, a scar enforcer operates on his own, mixing the needs of the Scars with his own goals in a way that benefits both.

The core leaders of the Scars are based in a huge metropolis called Pal Ador (see below), but they have begun creating cells in other cities.

The Scars operate numerous illegal ventures, including extortion, racketeering, and murder-for-hire.

The head of your cell assigns you dirty tasks to perform, increasing in difficulty as you gain levels.

You have the freedom to do whatever it takes to get the job done, as long as it does not jeopardize the Scars.

Unlike an outcast champion (see the previous section), as a scar enforcer you have little interest in working to right the social injustices that you perceive half-elves suffer.

You are focused on revenge, and you know that spilling blood is more effective than any diplomatic compromise.

COMBAT

Scar enforcers are both brutish thugs and crafty sneaks, and work best from the shadows.

They certainly have no concept of fighting fair.

The key is to stay hidden until you can strike with certainty and do your best to pick off enemies one at a time.

Focus your attention on your favored enemies, taking them out quickly before retreating to prepare for another assault. Use disguise and spells early on to confuse and demoralize your foes, who will often be fighting on their home territory.

Never remain standing in one place for too long, especially when fighting multiple opponents.

If you're in Pal Ador, everyone has heard of the Scars, and sometimes your reputation alone can cause lesser opponents to flee, letting you deal with your primary target unhindered.

Use the urban terrain to your advantage, fighting from staircases, rooftops, and sewers to keep the enemy guessing, as well as giving yourself cover and several possible escape routes.

Make sure you work with allies who complement your skills in an efficient manner and who don't shy away from your methods.

Flanking can be remarkably effective, especially if you and your allies share favored enemies.

Still, never forget the more subtle methods of assassination.

You probably don't have a large number of hit points or a particularly high AC, so strike hard and strike quickly before fleeing, letting your opponent quiver in fear of the Scars.

At 4th level, you can blend into human and elf societies with ease, thus allowing you easier access to your target.

If events turn against you, your hide in plain sight ability gained at 7th level means that you can practically vanish in the face of armed guards looking for intruders.

ADVANCEMENT

The Scars are very particular about who can join their ranks.

First, you must be a half-elf.

Second, you must prove your rancor and disgust for both humans and elves.

Last, you must show both remarkable skill and a complete lack of morals.

Potential recruits are watched from afar and with no interference by a high-ranking member.

If you are spied upon while performing some grandiose or clever scheme against humans or elves, you may later be approached by the sponsor, who gives you one simple command: "Join or die".

If you accept, you undergo a probationary period in which you must perform acts of cruelty against elves and humans.

If you refuse, the sponsor disappears—and your days are then numbered, as the rest of the Scars hunt you down to ensure their secrecy.

Once admitted as a Scar, you receive your mark—a wicked cut across the chest, which is then smeared with ash and special powder to create a deep, vivid pink scar.

From then on, the only way to leave the Scars is to die.

You are sent on missions of increasing difficulty, murdering and stealing from those who betrayed you.

As you gain levels in the scar enforcer class, maintain high ranks in Hide, Listen, and Move Silently.

Focus on Bluff, Diplomacy, and Sense Motive if you're more of an infiltrator, sneaking "out in the open" to worm your way closer to your foes.

Magic items that benefit rogues are extremely useful, as are items that boost your Charisma or disguise your appearance.

RESOURCES

The Scars offer their members a safe haven, information on possible targets, a cadre of lesser henchmen and informants, and a sympathetic ear when it comes to the injustices that half-elves endure.

Although a relatively small organization, the Scars have built an infamous reputation that can strike fear in nobles and peasants alike.

The Scars started out in one city, but have begun branching out, infiltrating towns that have large half-elf populations. Therefore, they may be able to provide aid outside the confines of Pal Ador.

As criminals, the Scars have access to weapons, armor, illegal substances, and forbidden magic items.

They have contacts throughout the city, in the form of sympathizers as well as officials they have bribed or blackmailed into submission.

SCAR ENFORCERS IN THE WORLD

If the PCs find themselves involved with the Scars, they will have to make up their minds about how they feel toward humans, elves, and half-elves.

Obviously, if they belong to one of these races, the decision can be straightforward.

Adventures revolving around the Scars tend to be gritty and dark, focusing on subterfuge, racial tension, betrayal and loyalty, and the more sinister aspects of city life.

You can introduce the Scars in the form of a single agent, a squad of hit men sent to handle the adventurers, a powerful thieves guild, or allies in the struggle against human and elf oppressors.

The Scars work well in campaigns in which elves and humans are at odds.

Because of this enmity, half-elves are looked down upon and treated as second-class citizens, pariahs, or worse.

However, this climate allows a player portraying a half-elf to rise to the challenge, proving his worth in the face of adversity and discrimination.

ORGANIZATION

The Scars are organized like most criminal groups, with a strong leader, a small inner circle of trusted lieutenants, and a myriad of soldiers, informants, and specialists.

Although the Scars are rightfully known as thieves and extortionists, they truly shine as assassins for hire.

Despite the fact that they despise both humans and elves, they have few qualms about taking a contract from a member of one race that results in the death of a member of the other.

They are less inclined to murder a fellow half-elf, but will do so if the price is right or they believe that the subject deserves to die.

This callous disregard for life is one of the reasons why many half-elves do not support the Scars' political rhetoric—they think a murderer is a murderer, regardless of race.

Each lieutenant has his own area of expertise and is responsible for finding individuals that suit the organization's needs.

For example, Zola, a powerful sorcerer, locates talented spellcasters who can be brought into the group, and also eliminates rivals who pose too much of a threat or don't agree to join.

At their core, however, the Scars are criminals, and everyone in the group has his own schemes and tricks to become as wealthy and powerful as possible.

The Scars' leader and lieutenants take 50% of each member's earnings.

With this money, the Scars purchase weapons, information, and safe houses, provide bribes to local authorities, and occasionally invest in legitimate businesses.

An individual scar enforcer spends his day planning for a job or "maintaining" his turf by shaking down merchants, taking bribes, and breaking legs.

Some are sent out to infiltrate the manors and palaces of wealthy humans and elves, either going in undetected or passing themselves off as part of the household.

Because their enemies are as determined to end their violent activities as the Scars are to continue them, the Scars remain constantly on the move and rotate their stronghold between several safe houses on a regular basis.

The Scars are intimately familiar with Pal Ador's extensive sewer system, which allows them to move undetected throughout most of the city.

However, the age and labyrinthine design of the sewers means that they are not very safe, and it is not uncommon for the Scars to find monsters and patrols in the murky depths.

The sewers are riddled with secret passageways, long-forgotten tunnels, and hidden strongholds of other underworld factions.

The man responsible for raising the Scars to their current level of infamy is a shadowy half-elf named Mezzriss.

Raised on the unforgiving streets of Pal Ador, he quickly took to a life of crime and joined an ordinary criminal gang who called themselves the Scars.

Mezzriss assassinated the former leader through a slow, insidious contact poison hidden in a magnificent crown that he presented the leader "as a gift of respect".

Once he took over, Mezzriss changed the scope and mission of the gang, turning it from a ragtag group of thieves to a highly efficient band of assassins and criminals, bent on revenge for the inequality and humiliation they suffered for being half-humans.

Over time, the inner cabal of the Scars was replaced solely with half-elves.

Mezzriss works to maintain the unity of his large criminal gang, all the while fighting against retaliatory strikes from humans and elves.

He is a brutal and completely remorseless individual.

Although the group presents itself as a unified front, divisions exist within the Scars.

Some factions have a softer opinion of either humans or elves, and are more likely to work with them than their peers.

A power struggle can erupt when a faction raises the idea of eliminating either humans or elves from the city, then having half-elves live alongside the survivors.

These opinions have been quashed each and every time so far, but are occurring with greater regularity.

Anyone who becomes too outspoken must deal with Mezzriss, which usually means a blade in the back.

NPC REACTIONS

The Scars are feared and reviled by most of the populace of Pal Ador, who see them as nothing more than criminals, thieves, and murderers.

Most individuals have an unfriendly or hostile attitude toward a member of the Scars (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

While there are many independent criminals in Pal Ador, the Scars are the biggest and most powerful of the lot, controlling most of the illicit activity within the city walls. For this reason, they are hated but respected.

Since they have their fingers in so many schemes, it's almost impossible not to deal with them in some way.

Half-elves regard the Scars in a much better light than the general populace does.

Although some are sickened by the Scars' violent and immoral actions, the downtrodden half-elves of Pal Ador see them as revolutionaries and liberators.

The Scars have extensive contacts among the half-elf community who can usually provide a minor bit of assistance or, at the very least, turn a blind eye to the Scars' activities.

The Scars have an impressive list of enemies, including the legitimate government of Pal Ador, many merchant groups, and rival criminal bands.

Both the human and elf factions loathe them, but they also make use of the Scars against each other.

Through the Scars, the human and elf governments wage a covert war, granting each government plausible deniability and saving face with the public.

In addition, the Scars are actively persecuted by lawful and good religions within Pal Ador (and in other cities where the group has established cells).

However, in corrupt Pal Ador, even these seemingly upstanding groups may utilize the services of the Scars in one way or another.

SCAR ENFORCER LORE

Characters with Gather Information can research the scar enforcers.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The Scars are a criminal band of half-elf murderers, thieves, and extortionists".

DC 15: "The Scars despise both humans and elves and attack them whenever they can.

They consider themselves revolutionaries in the name of half-elves everywhere".

DC 20: "The Scars hire themselves out to anyone who can afford their price, and while they hate humans and elves, they sometimes do their dirty work".

DC 30: "The Scars are thoroughly enmeshed in the city's corrupt politics.

They have swayed opinions in their favor for years and have been known to eliminate officials who cause them too much trouble".

PCs trying to establish contact with the Scars for a "job" should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the necessary intermediaries and protocols for contacting them.

If the person is either a human or an elf, the DC is increased to 30.

However, the Scars do not preclude working for or with humans and elves, but do so only to increase tensions between those two races and at a markedly increased price.

SCAR ENFORCERS IN THE GAME

As described above, the Scars are found mainly in one city. However, you can easily introduce them into a large town of your own.

As a secret criminal group, it's easy to assume that they have been there for a long time, keeping their activities well hidden from the general populace.

The prestige class appeals to players who enjoy skullduggery, murky morality, and grim plotlines.

The scar enforcer is a combination of fierce combatant, sneaky spy, and social engineer who specializes in threats and intimidation.

When you design a campaign that involves the Scars, make sure you include opportunities for them to use their skills and reputation to dazzle the locals.

Remember to play up the racial tension and simmering anger within the city (or area).

ADAPTATION

Scar enforcers were designed with the city of Pal Ador in mind—a place where humans and elves live in an unsteady truce with deep suspicions toward each other.

You could place the Scars in any city within your campaign or have them act as a roving band of mercenaries who fight for the rights of half-elves.

Alternatively, the Scars could simply be part of the local thieves guild or assassins guild, with an additional political motivation that sets them apart.

THE CITY OF PAL ADOR

Pal Ador (Metropolis): Nonstandard; NE; 3,000 gp; Assets 600,000 gp; Population 30,000 (37% human, 20% elf, 18% half-elf, 10% halfling, 7% gnome, 5% dwarf, 3% half-orc).

Pal Ador is an enormous city bisected by a large, turgid river.

It is an ancient and grand city that has fallen to decadence, declining steadily over the past centuries.

At the moment, Pal Ador is a divided city, both figuratively and literally.

Its two largest races, humans and elves, live in an unsteady accord, with the river acting as a natural border that barely keeps the peace.

Pal Ador is situated on a large open plain dotted with trees—the river on which it sits is the only notable feature. Although in its decline, Pal Ador is filled with grand, towering buildings, expansive manors, and a bustling merchant's district.

The architecture on the elf side of town is markedly different from the human side, reflecting its inhabitants' unique style.

Regardless of their location, all buildings show signs of slow decay and the place exudes a genteel rot.

Pal Ador is noted for its huge sewer system, built to last for centuries.

These sewers have become the territory of all manner of scum, criminals, and dissidents.

Pal Ador was created long ago as a settlement that bordered human and elf territories.

The two races lived in harmony, and Pal Ador quickly became a trading and cultural center.

The two nations established embassies five hundred years ago, and ideas and good will flourished.

This all came to an end two hundred years later when the political foundation on which the city was built began to crack.

Over time, divisions between the city's elves and humans grew.

The two nations that were once allies and partners came to blows, and portions of Pal Ador were sacked several times by both sides.

After almost seventy-five years of war, a truce was finally established, and Pal Ador was once again used as a neutral ground for humans and elves.

Trade started up again, and buildings were repaired, but attitudes were never again the same.

The two races pulled back on opposite sides of the river, maintaining their own governments as well as polite, if icy, relations with each other.

The war also corrupted the morals and ethics of its rulers and inhabitants—if you weren't on the take, you were a victim to be exploited.

Finally having regained its status as a trading city, Pal Ador is still a dangerous place to live, and violence in the streets is a common occurrence.

Nobles rarely leave the safety of their homes, and when they do, they travel under heavy guard.

After centuries of relative peace early in its history, Pal Ador featured a relatively large half-elf population.

In harmonious times, half-elves were accorded the same rights and respect as any citizen.

Today, however, they are viewed with suspicion and distaste—many live no better than slaves.

Indeed, although slavery is technically illegal on both sides of the river, an underground slave trade thrives (and is ignored by authorities, as long the slave owner is not enslaving his own race).

Half-elves try to better their lives, but between the corruption of the government and the prejudice of both humans and elves, they have had little success.

Humans, elves, and half-elves who visit the city must quickly decide which side they are on—neutrality is not tolerated.

Both sides of the town are ruled by councils, heavily influenced by the local merchant's guild and criminal elements.

Each faction has a sizable army relative to the population of the city, and nobles maintain a larger than average coterie of bodyguards, treating their homes as small city-states within the metropolis.

SHADOW SENTINEL

"In the darkest hour, in the darkest place, I guard the ramparts and make sure no one threatens our homeland."

—Blackpennant Thautar, illumian shadow sentinel

Shadow sentinels are elite illumian warriors who protect their people from githyanki raiders, demonic invasions, and hordes of barely imaginable monsters from the Plane of Shadow.

They have learned to imbue their weapons with shadowstuff itself, causing them to flow like quicksilver, then strike as the hardest steel.

BECOMING A SHADOW SENTINEL

The most straightforward path to sentinelhood is to attain 5th level as a fighter and then convince the sentinel leaders in Elirhondas that you have what it takes to defend illumian lands against monstrous invasion.

The entry requirements for the prestige class are broad enough that illumians from almost any class can eventually qualify.

Because illumians often multiclass anyway, it's not unheard of for spellcasters to join the ranks of the sentinels, even though the prestige class doesn't offer advanced spellcasting power.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Illumian Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Weapon Focus (any slashing weapon).

Special: Must pass combat examination from sentinel leaders.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Craft, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Ride, Spot, and Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

The shadow sentinel's class features focus almost entirely on wielding the umbral blade given to each new member.

Shadow Points (Su): Upon entering this class, you gain a reservoir of shadow essence that you can draw upon to power your class features.

This reserve increases in size as you advance in level; Table 5-7 indicates your daily limit of shadow energy.

It takes 8 hours of rest to restore your shadow points to their maximum.

Spending shadow points is a swift action.

Umbral Blade (Su): As a new member of the class, you receive an umbral blade in an elaborate ceremony conducted in the Tombs of the Brave in Elirhondas.

In the hands of anyone not trained in its use, an umbral blade is merely a weapon with a +1 enhancement bonus made of some unusually dark, oily metal.

An umbral blade may be any kind of slashing melee weapon, from a dagger to a longsword to a greataxe; each new shadow sentinel can choose the specific weapon.

You can infuse the umbral blade with the power of shadow itself, unlocking greater powers.

Your umbral blade acts as a lens, focusing your power to accomplish feats no other weapon can match.

In time, your umbral blade grows in power as you become more familiar with it.

At 4th level, your umbral blade gains a +2 enhancement bonus on attack rolls and damage rolls.

The enhancement bonus rises to +3 at 6th level, +4 at 8th level, and +5 at 10th level.

This enhancement bonus only applies when you wield it; for any other character it is only a +1 weapon.

You can't add other special properties or powers to your umbral blade.

You can have only one umbral blade at a time.

If you lose your umbral blade, you can transform any slashing melee weapon that has at least a +1 enhancement bonus into a new umbral blade (with all the appropriate powers for your class level) by meditating and infusing the blade with the power of shadow.

Doing this costs 100 XP, takes 24 hours, and uses up all your shadow points for that day.

Morphic Blade (Su): Even as a beginning shadow sentinel, you have rudimentary control over your umbral blade.

You can spend 1 shadow point to change the dimensions of your weapon, turning it into a slashing melee weapon of your choice (sized appropriately for you).

This change lasts for 24 hours or until you change the umbral blade's dimensions again, whichever comes first.

At 5th level, you can spend 3 shadow points to allow your umbral blade to mimic a special material (such as adamantite, silver, or cold iron).

This effect lasts for 1 minute per class level.

Your umbral blade retains the normal hardness and hit points for a weapon of its type.

At 9th level, you can spend 5 shadow points to allow your umbral blade to mimic a specific alignment (chaos, evil, good, or law) for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

This effect lasts for 1 minute per class level.

If the weapon has a different alignment (such as granted by your race or subtype), the new one suppresses the original alignment for the duration of the effect.

Shadowstrike (Su): You can spend 1 shadow point to momentarily turn your umbral blade into fluid shadowstuff, enabling you to pierce an opponent's defenses.

Your next attack with your umbral blade (if made before the start of your next turn) is treated as a touch attack.

The attack even ignores any AC bonus from cover (except total cover) that the target may have, since the blade's fluid nature allows it to reach around barriers.

Shadowbane (Su): At 2nd level and higher, you can spend 1 shadow point to grant your umbral blade the equivalent of the bane special ability against evil outsiders and against creatures native to the Plane of Shadow.

The effect lasts for 1 round per class level.

Shadowsharp (Su): At 3rd level and higher, you can spend 1 shadow point to double the threat range of your umbral blade.

This benefit is the equivalent of the keen special ability.

The effect lasts for 1 minute per class level.

Shadow Drain (Su): At 7th level and higher, you can spend 1 or more shadow points when striking a living creature with your umbral blade.

The attack permanently drains 1 point of Strength from the target per shadow point spent.

You can spend a maximum number of shadow points per round on this ability equal to one-half your class level.

PLAYING A SHADOW SENTINEL

As a shadow sentinel, you are among the best of the best, entrusted with the guardianship of the illumian race.

Your umbral blade marks you as a paragon of the illumian race and the sworn enemy of anyone who threatens it.

While most shadow sentinels live in a garrison in Elirhondas, ready to defend the city at a moment's notice, you might have a greater degree of freedom to travel and adventure.

Some shadow sentinels are placed on inactive reserve, free to return to their cabals or live independent lives until they receive a magical summons to aid in the defense of Elirhondas.

The Black Table that directs the affairs of Elirhondas sometimes sends shadow sentinels on long-term missions that take them far beyond the ramparts of the shadow city. Shadow sentinels can resign their commissions at any time, although few do.

Even after resigning from the organization, a sentinel retain their umbral blades and can still advance in the class because they understand how to practice and hone their mastery over shadow.

COMBAT

Shadow sentinels tend to be straightforward, efficient opponents in melee, cutting down their enemies as quickly as possible.

Against opponents who aren't familiar with your umbral blade, you can gain a significant advantage by fighting conventionally for a few rounds, then surprising your enemy with an attack that ignores his armor and shield. When you reach the higher levels of the prestige class, you'll quickly become adept at figuring out how best to bypass a monster's magical defenses, using the relevant Knowledge skill to learn more about your enemy.

Once you understand the limits of a foe's damage reduction and armor, you can use the morphic blade and shadowsharp class features to make every cut of your umbral blade count.

ADVANCEMENT

Becoming a shadow sentinel is no easy task.

You must travel to Elirhondas, first obtaining permission from your cabal to do so.

Then you must succeed in a series of duels, physical fitness tests, and grueling contests devised by the senior leaders of the shadow sentinels.

Only one in ten illumians passes the necessary exams.

You are taught meditative techniques that enable you to store shadow energy within yourself, followed by training in specific combat moves that compliment your unique weapon.

After a few months of training, you're ready to receive your umbral blade and call yourself a shadow sentinel.

Ongoing training is mostly a matter of nurturing the shadow energy within you and learning to absorb and channel more and more of it.

Shadow sentinels can accomplish much of this training on their own—it's more a matter of practice and repetition than guided instruction.

Your prowess as a shadow sentinel is tied directly to the effectiveness of your umbral blade.

Accordingly, choose feats that maximize your ability to wield that weapon effectively (such as Improved Disarm and feats with Power Attack as a prerequisite) and feats that keep you alive long enough to cut at your foes (such as Combat Expertise and feats with Dodge as a prerequisite).

RESOURCES

You are given an umbral blade when you first become a shadow sentinel, but it's your responsibility to replace it if it's lost or sundered.

Shadow sentinels provide their own armor, although in most cases their cabals back on the Material Plane made it for them.

Shadow sentinels on active duty count on illumian spellcasters to whisk them into combat, so they tend to armor themselves as heavily as possible.

If you're adventuring beyond Elirhondas, you'll want to balance the protective benefit of heavy armor and shield with the versatility of faster movement—and the extra damage from a two-handed weapon.

SHADOW SENTINELS IN THE WORLD

The shadow sentinel prestige class invests an illumian PC in the race's survival, immersing the PC in illumian battles and intrigues.

Because the class is mechanically straightforward, it's a particularly good class for a player who wants to play a mysterious race such as the illumians without the difficulty of complicated multiclassing or spellcasting.

ORGANIZATION

All shadow sentinels call the garrison at Elirhondas their home base, because illumians there developed the shadow-fighting techniques that became the organization's hallmark.

The shadow sentinels function as a directorate within the city.

Their leader, General Sheokru, takes orders only from the Black Table in Elirhondas.

In practice, the Black Table leaves the shadow sentinels to their own devices, occasionally asking for a few capable sentinels to perform missions away from the shadow city. The sentinels conduct themselves like a small army, with a corps of officers giving orders to squads, each of which has a sergeant to handle specific, moment-by-moment tactics. Advancement through the ranks can be quite rapid. The shadow sentinels fight often enough that battlefield promotions are common.

Shadow sentinels spend much of their time drilling or teaching the rudiments of melee combat to the city's less elite guards.

But at least once a month, a raiding force or rampaging monster poses a threat to Elirhondas, and the shadow sentinels mobilize in response.

The shadow sentinel garrison is home to dozens of illumians who assist the sentinels but are not sentinels themselves, including armorers, weaponsmiths, and arcane and divine spellcasters.

The founder of the shadow sentinels, Duskwatcher Vlaukea, lives in the garrison.

Although more than a century old, he still advises senior sentinel officers on matters of training—he did invent the shadow sentinel technique, after all.

NPC REACTIONS

Almost every illumian has heard of the shadow sentinels and their courage in the defense of Elirhondas and illumians everywhere, so most illumians have an initial attitude of friendly toward a shadow sentinel bearing an umbral blade (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Githyanki are likewise aware of the shadow sentinels and greet them with anger or fear.

Their initial attitude is uniformly hostile.

Few other creatures have ever heard of Elirhondas or the shadow sentinels, so the sentinels' reputation doesn't affect most NPCs' attitudes.

SHADOW SENTINEL LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) can research the shadow sentinels to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The shadow sentinels are elite illumian soldiers who wield black swords".

DC 15: "Shadow sentinels defend the illumian city of Elirhondas on the Plane of Shadow, and they've kept it safe for decades, mostly against githyanki attacks".

DC 20: "The black swords the sentinels carry are called umbral blades".

Shadow sentinels can make an umbral blade shift and grow by channeling shadow through it".

DC 30: "General Sheokru leads the shadow sentinels, and he can do whatever he wants with his troops as long as Elirhondas stays safe".

SHADOW SENTINELS IN THE GAME

Illumian characters have heard of shadow sentinels from childhood—they're famous protectors of the race.

Other characters meet shadow sentinels only if they visit Elirhondas or run afoul of powerful illumian interests.

If you have a shadow sentinel PC at your gaming table, make sure that the PC doesn't feel chained to Elirhondas and can freely leave to adventure—even if the tasks don't have anything to do with the illumian race.

An occasional reminder of the organization's importance is sufficient.

Conversely, the shadow sentinels are a useful way to start an adventure.

Because they're elite troops and close to illumian leaders, they are sent on missions of great importance.

Elirhondas itself can make a great headquarters for a group of high-level PCs.

Because it's on the Plane of Shadow, it's easy to reach from anywhere, yet mysterious and insulated from the strife of the Material Plane.

ADAPTATION

As written, the shadow sentinels are strictly designed for illumians, and they're tied tightly to that race's culture.

The mechanics of the class would be appropriate for any race or group with a connection to the Plane of Shadow, so you could use shadow sentinels even in a campaign that doesn't feature illumians.

URBAN SOUL

"The city's streets are my arteries, and its buildings my bones. Threaten my city, and you threaten me."

—Parethian, urban soul of Rel Astra

Urban souls are the chosen champions of the deity Urbanus (described in Chapter 1), charged with protecting city denizens from external dangers such as marauding monsters, and from subtler threats to the city such as crime and urban unrest.

BECOMING AN URBAN SOUL

Bards and rogues have the easiest path into this prestige class, although rogues have to buy Knowledge (architecture and engineering) as a cross-class skill.

Wizards can enter the class with relative ease, but the lack of spellcasting advancement makes it unlikely that they'll be interested.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Human.

Skills: Knowledge (local) 10 ranks, Knowledge (architecture and engineering) 5 ranks, Gather Information 5 ranks.

Special: Blessing from the temple of Urbanus.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Escape Artist, Gather Information, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Knowledge (local), Listen, Move Silently, Search, Speak Language, Spot, and Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

The urban soul's class features focus on survival in cities and large communities.

Many of your powers rely on your being within the boundary of a city.

For the purpose of your class features, the term "city" applies to any community with more than 5,000 inhabitants (that is, at least as large as a small city).

City Ramparts (Ex): Once per day, you can call upon the combined might of a community's citizens to fortify yourself in body and mind.

Doing this grants you a +4 bonus to Constitution and a +2 bonus on Will saves, and it also toughens your skin, giving you damage reduction 5/adamantine.

This effect lasts for at least 1 round per point of (adjusted) Constitution modifier (minimum 1 round).

If you are within a city, the duration increases as noted below:

Small city	(3 + Con modifier) rounds
Large city	(5 + Con modifier) rounds
Metropolis or larger	(10 + Con modifier) rounds

You can use this ability twice per day at 5th level and three times per day at 9th level.

Urban Sustenance (Ex): You rely on the presence of a city for your physical needs, and you suffer when you travel beyond such areas.

While within a city, you need not eat, drink, or sleep, and you heal at twice the normal rate.

If you cast spells, you must still rest for the normal amount of time needed to regain spells.

However, you cannot heal naturally at all outside a city, and you eventually weaken if kept away from an urban environment.

If you remain outside a city for 24 hours, you must succeed on a DC 20 Fortitude save or take 1 point of Strength damage and 1 point of Constitution damage.

Each day after the first that you remain outside a city, the save DC increases by +1.

Citybred Senses (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, you gain a +2 insight bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks made within a city.

At 6th level, your bonus improves to +4, and at 10th level, it improves to +6.

Meld Into City (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, you can meld your body and possessions into the wall of a building, into the street, or into any other stone structure that is part of a city.

This ability otherwise functions like meld into stone, usable at will, with your urban soul level as the caster level.

See the City (Sp): At 4th level and higher, you can create a magical sensor (as clairaudience/clairvoyance, except that only sight is allowed) three times per day, using your urban soul level as the caster level.

The sensor is not limited by the clairaudience/clairvoyance spell's range; you can see anywhere within the city you're in.

Urban Skill Mastery (Ex): By 6th level, you have become so familiar with moving through cities that you can do so with extraordinary ease.

While in a city, you can take 10 on any of the following skill checks even when under stress: Balance, Climb, Jump, Move Silently, and Tumble.

Hear the City (Sp): At 7th level and higher, you can speak with a building, street, or other part of a city once per day.

This ability is the equivalent of a stone tell spell (using your urban soul level as the caster level), except that it works on any part of a city.

You can use this ability twice per day at 10th level.

Mob Violence (Su): At 8th level, you become able to channel the anger of a restive populace into fury you unleash on your enemies.

You can activate the mob violence class feature for a number of rounds per day equal to your class level, split up as you like.

Activating or deactivating this ability is a free action.

While you have this class feature active, your attacks deal extra damage as noted below.

Small city	1d6 points of damage
Large city	2d6 points of damage
Metropolis or larger	3d6 points of damage

Citywalk (Sp): At 10th level, you can magically travel between cities at will.

This ability functions much like transport via plants, except that you must begin the journey within a city, and you end the journey on the outskirts of a specified city on the same plane.

You cannot specify a particular endpoint (such as the Laughing Manticore Tavern in Rel Astra or the Mayor's Reception Hall in Greyhawk).

The ability deposits you in a safe location determined by the DM (assuming one exists) just outside the destination city.

If the specified city doesn't exist, or if no safe location outside the city exists, the ability fails.

You must concentrate for a specific period of time to activate this ability.

The size of the destination city determines how long the concentration must last, as noted below.

Small city	1 hour
Large city	10 minutes
Metropolis or larger	1 minute

If your concentration is interrupted during this time, you must start again.

PLAYING AN URBAN SOUL

The city streets are your home turf, and you're tougher, more mobile, and more perceptive there.

Because your power is tied to the urban environment, you're loath to leave it without a reason—but you find the city holds a thousand adventures more thrilling than those found in any far-off dungeon.

Urban souls have the blessing of Urbanus, deity of cities, but you stand at arm's length from the deity's clergy.

You can count on assistance and advice from the temples of Urbanus, but you're not under their command, nor are they under yours.

You've been chosen by Urbanus for purposes of his own, and Urbanus doesn't always share his reasons with either urban souls or his clerics.

COMBAT

You'll face an important decision in every battle: Is this battle dangerous enough to warrant using the city ramparts class feature?

You're much better protected with your city ramparts ability active, but frequent use might leave you bereft of protection when you need it most.

You'll be able to manage your city ramparts ability more efficiently if you're able to learn about your foes beforehand.

Stealth skills and the see the city and hear the city class features help you scout your enemies and avoid unpleasant surprises in combat.

When you gain the mob violence class feature at 8th level, you'll have another time-limited advantage.

Your mob violence ability will be more effective if you manage it carefully as well.

ADVANCEMENT

New urban souls are recruited by the will of Urbanus himself.

He appears to a prospective urban soul in a dream, commanding a visit to the deity's temple the next day. The temple's high priest receives a similar prophetic dream and prepares various rites to welcome and bless the new urban soul.

As you gain levels in the prestige class, you can operate in conjunction with the clerics of Urbanus or as an independent agent.

Urban souls don't necessarily share the neutral good alignment of Urbanus, but they have an alignment conducive to the city they're in.

If your alignment varies greatly from neutral good, it might place a strain on your relationship with the church of Urbanus.

Once you're in the urban soul prestige class, let the nature of the cities you patrol guide your feat and skill choices. If your city is under siege or beset by enemies, concentrate on combat-related feats and skills such as Balance, Climb, Jump, and Tumble that improve your maneuverability in a fight.

If you're investigating hidden corruption within the city, take skills such as Gather Information and Intimidate.

RESOURCES

Urban souls can usually count on free or inexpensive healing at temples of Urbanus, subject to their available resources.

The temple is also a good source for information, especially if an urban soul is visiting a city for the first time.

Many urban souls travel from city to city, asking at each temple in turn about what threats need to be eliminated.

URBAN SOULS IN THE WORLD

The urban soul prestige class is a natural for campaigns that feature frequent forays into urban environments.

Urban souls also make good city guides or patrons.

An urban soul makes an effective antagonist if the PCs come to a city with mayhem (or a subtler plot) in mind.

ORGANIZATION

Urban souls have an organizational connection to the church of Urbanus, but they aren't part of the religious hierarchy and answer to none but the deity.

A few urban souls adopt a single city and devote themselves utterly to its welfare, while others wander from city to city, sampling their splendors.

Beyond seeing to the welfare of the city they inhabit, few urban souls have a larger agenda—but keeping tabs on the threats to an entire metropolis can be a full-time job.

Over the course of a week, a typical urban soul might contend with a war between two rival thieves guilds, a trading company smuggling dangerous poisons into the city, and an infestation of wererats in the city sewers.

When the city is safe, an urban soul can relax and enjoy the diversions that urban life offers.

Some urban souls earn a degree of fame (or at least notoriety) among the citizens of a city.

Parethian of Rel Astra is well known among the city's residents, for example, even if tales about him are as much folklore as fact.

More often, an urban soul keeps a low profile, blending in among both high society and low.

Roughly half of all urban souls are nomadic, moving city from city as the mood strikes them.

Urban souls can wander as they like until they reach 10th level.

At that point, they can remain devoted to city life in general, in which case they attain 10th level normally.

But if they choose to bond themselves with a single city, they instead take the substitution level described above.

Once an urban soul has established such a bond, it cannot be broken unless the urban soul dies or the city is razed to the ground.

Most urban souls accede to subtle pressure to conform to the city's alignment and prevalent social mores.

For example, if a city forbids halflings within its walls, an urban soul based there is more likely to be unfriendly to halflings.

If two cities are rivals, urban souls hailing from those cities are probably enemies too.

NPC REACTIONS

If a particular urban soul is well known within a city, most long-term residents have an initial attitude of friendly (see Influencing NPC Attitudes, page 72 of the Player's Handbook).

Even if an urban soul moves from city to city or keeps a low profile, he gets a +2 circumstance bonus during interactions with a city's long-term residents.

Conversely, those who threaten a city's status quo have an instinctive dislike of urban souls.

An urban soul interacting with criminals, invaders, or other enemies of the city takes a -2 circumstance penalty on interactions, except for uses of the Intimidate skill.

URBAN SOUL LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) or Gather Information (used within a city) can research urban souls to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "An urban soul is a magical guardian of a city. Every city has one".

DC 15: "Urban souls are chosen by the god of cities, Urbanus, to protect the cities in their care.

The bigger the city, the more powerful the urban soul".

This DC is also sufficient to learn basic details about a famous urban soul affiliated with a particular city.

DC 20: "Urban souls depend on the city for their power. Outside a city, they're a lot less dangerous".

DC 30: Detailed information about specific urban souls active in a particular city recently, except for urban souls who took pains to remain incognito during their visit.

URBAN SOULS IN THE GAME

The viability of an urban soul PC depends on an agreement (whether implicit or explicit) between player and DM. Because much of the urban soul's power works only within a city's boundaries, it's not fair for a DM to offer this prestige class, then set adventures in far-off dungeons, hostile wilderness, or other isolated sites.

But the player of the urban soul should expect that on occasion, the action will head beyond the city walls—the DM has a whole table of players to keep happy. D&D is a game of challenges, and the DM has every right to design occasional encounters that are particularly difficult for urban souls because they involving leaving the city.

As long as an urban soul character can use his best powers most of the time and relishes the additional challenges when they happen, this prestige class can enrich a campaign.

With an urban soul in the game, you have a built-in excuse to develop adventure sites and interesting places within the cities of your campaign world.

If the urban soul at your table wants to protect a specific city, you now have a base of operations for the rest of the party.

ADAPTATION

While this prestige class is designed with humans in mind, it's easy to imagine that Urbanus would choose nonhuman urban souls for cities dominated by other races.

The illithid city of Illkool Rrem might have a mind flayer urban soul, for example, and the dwarf city of Uruz probably has a dwarf urban soul.

But in most campaign worlds, only humans have a vast network of cities that stretch across dozens of nations and societies.

Nonhuman urban souls are tied to a smaller set of cities, so they may have a harder time adventuring.

RACES OF FAERÛN (3.0)

Dwarven battleragers, or kuldjargh (“axe idiots”), are legendary berserker warriors who can enter a battle frenzy through ritualistic singing.

They are believed to have been touched by the dwarven gods of battle, who taught them that if they die in battle, they will return to Faerûn stronger than before as a just reward.

Therefore, they have no fear of death.

They are given to drinking, rowdy and boisterous singing, and drunken dancing.

Battleragers command grudging, if fearful, respect within dwarven society, where they are known to have coined such philosophically complex dwarven maxims like “head first” and “if it moves, kill it”.

Most live short, glorious lives.

While enraged, a battlerager's face becomes distorted and twisted.

His teeth grind together as spittle flies from his mouth and dribbles down his beard.

His eyes enlarge, bulge, and become bloodshot.

Charging into battle, he bellows forth his clan or holy war song, throwing his hammers and axes all the way, before cleaving his foes with his mighty dwarven waraxe.

In short, he becomes almost unstoppable.

Battleragers are often covered from head to toe in body art, from tattoos to brands to ritual scars.

They prefer to wear spiked armor, and some of them ride specially trained boars into battle.

Battleragers are usually single classed barbarians before taking the prestige class, though multiclass barbarian/fighters are also common.

Barbarians/rangers and barbarian/clerics (known as “vindicators”) are not uncommon as well.

Other multiclass combinations are almost unheard of.

The battlerager fills a particular niche in dwarf society and culture.

He is a fearless and impulsive warrior, able to enter into an insane rampage.

Battleragers are ruthlessly used by dwarf generals for their shock power against attacking armies.

NPC battleragers often come from a familial clan made up predominantly of battleragers.

These clans often form guilds or halls within dwarven society, though these “guilds” are often more akin to a family or fraternal order.

Regardless, battlerager guilds are often located on the fringes of dwarven society, kept out of view and away from easily influenced dwarven children, who often hear of the kuldjargh's fearlessness but rarely their folly.

While heroic battle is honored in dwarven society and battleragers often excel in this, more often than not they also epitomize lives wasted in stupid rage, something most dwarves realize they cannot afford in a world filled with orcs and goblins.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a battlerager, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.
 Alignment: Any nonlawful.
 Base Attack Bonus: +5.
 Skills: Intimidate 8 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks, Perform (singing, any other) 2 ranks.
 Feats: Cleave, Endurance, Power Attack.
 Special: Ability to rage.

CLASS SKILLS

The battlerager's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Ride (Dex), Tumble (Dex), and Survival (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the battlerager prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Battleragers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Age (Ex): At 1st, 3rd, and 5th level, the battlerager gains another use of barbarian rage per day.

If the battlerager has the ability to enter a greater rage, the extra rages granted by this ability are greater rages as well.

Gruff (Ex): Battleragers are known to be rude, uncouth, and violent.

They suffer a -4 penalty on all Charisma ability checks and Charisma-based skill checks, except for Intimidate checks. Battleragers receive a +2 bonus on all Intimidate checks.

Rock Gut (Ex): A battlerager's natural resistance to poison is stronger than most dwarves.

At 1st level, his +2 racial bonus on saving throws against poisons increases to a +4 racial bonus.

Close-Quarter Fighting (Ex): At 2nd level, a battlerager gains the Close-Quarter Fighting feat.

Fearless (Ex): At 2nd level, a battlerager becomes immune to fear and similar effects.

He also gains a +2 insight bonus on saves against all mind-affecting spells and effects.

Improved Unarmed Strike (Ex): At 3rd level, a battlerager gains the Improved Unarmed Strike feat.

Great Cleave: At 4th level, a battlerager gains the Great Cleave feat.

Reckless Offensive: At 4th level, a battlerager gains the Reckless Offensive feat.

Natural Armor (Ex): By 5th level, a battlerager's flesh has become so scarred and corded with muscle that he gains +2 natural armor.

TABLE A-6: THE BATTLERAGER

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Rage 1/day, gruff, rock gut
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Close-Quarter Fighting, fearless
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Rage 2/day, Improved Unarmed Strike
4th	+4	+4	+1	+1	Great Cleave, Reckless Offensive
5th	+5	+4	+1	+1	Natural armor +2, rage 3/day

BLADESINGER

Bladesingers are elves who have blended art, swordplay, and arcane magic into a harmonious whole.

In battle, a bladesinger's lithe movements and subtle tactics seem beautiful, belying their deadly martial efficiency.

Bladesingers have a treasured place in elf society, balancing the joys of art and magic with the skill of masterful fighting, and so bladesingers are well-respected by other elves.

They usually serve as itinerant guardians and champions of the elf community at large rather than tying themselves to one particular settlement.

Multiclass fighter/wizards can become bladesingers most easily, though any elf who can wield a martial weapon and cast arcane spells can become a bladesinger.

Bladesinging ranger/wizards, rogue/wizards, and bladesinger bards are not unknown.

Most bladesingers work alone, sufficient unto themselves, but in larger communities they sometimes have the opportunity to fight together in the same combat.

Bladesingers are normally trained singly by another bladesinger, and the concept of anything as formalized as a bladesinger school is an absurd notion to them.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a bladesinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Elf, half-elf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5 Skills: Concentration 4 ranks, Perform 3 ranks (dance, sing, any other), Tumble 3 ranks.

Feats: Combat Casting, Dodge, Expertise, Still Spell, Weapon Focus (longsword) or Weapon Focus (rapier).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The bladesinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Perform (Cha), Spellcraft (Int), and Tumble (Dex).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the bladesinger. Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The bladesinger gains no weapon proficiency but does gain proficiency with light armor.

If the bladesinger wears medium or heavy armor, she loses all benefits of any of her song abilities (lesser bladesong, lesser spellsong, song of celerity, greater spellsong, and song of fury).

A bladesinger suffers the normal arcane spell failure chance when casting spells while armored (except as noted below).

Bladesong (Ex): When wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other), the bladesinger gains a dodge bonus to AC equal to her Intelligence bonus.

Bonus Feats: At 2nd, 5th, and 8th level, the bladesinger gets a bonus feat.

These feats must be drawn from the following list: any metamagic feat, Combat Reflexes, Improved Critical (longsword), Improved Disarm, Mobility, Quick Draw, Spring Attack, Whirlwind Attack.

Lesser Spell song (Ex): Starting at 3rd level, when wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other), the bladesinger can take 10 when making a Concentration check to cast defensively.

Song of Celerity (Su): Starting at 6th level, when wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other) and using the full attack action, the bladesinger can cast one bladesinger spell (or arcane spell with a casting time of 1 action or less) each round as a free action.

Greater Spell song (Ex): Starting at 7th level, the bladesinger ignores arcane spell failure when wearing light armor.

Song of Fury (Ex): At 10th level, when wielding a longsword or rapier in one hand (and nothing in the other) and using the full attack action, the bladesinger can make one extra attack in a round at her highest base attack, but this attack and each other attack made that round take a -2 penalty.

This penalty applies for 1 round, so it affects attacks of opportunity the bladesinger might make before her next action.

Spells per Day: Every level a bladesinger gains, the character gains new spells per day as shown.

When she casts bladesinger spells, the bladesinger's caster level is equal to her bladesinger level.

A bladesinger's bonus spells are based on Intelligence. The Difficulty Class for saving throws against bladesinger spells is 10 + the spell's level + the bladesinger's Intelligence modifier.

A bladesinger keeps a spellbook and must prepare spells each day as a wizard does.

She can have any number of bladesinger spells in her spellbook (see Writing a New Spell into a Spellbook, Chapter 10 in the Player's Handbook).

At levels 1st through 9th, a bladesinger gains two spells she can add to her spellbook for free.

These spells must be bladesinger spells the character can cast.

BLADESINGER SPELL LIST

Bladesingers choose their spells from the following list:

1st level—expeditious retreat, mage armor, magic weapon, shield, true strike.

2nd level—blur, bull's strength, cat's grace, mirror image, protection from arrows.

3rd level—displacement, greater magic weapon, haste, keen edge.

4th level—dimension door, fire shield, improved invisibility, stoneskin.

BREACHGNOME

A breachgnome is a mighty gnome who is skilled in fighting in cramped conditions.

A high-level breachgnome in the right position can hold off a superior force for as long as his strength holds out.

Such gnomes are trained to fight alone, and they excel at doing so.

Most breachgnomes are fighters, rangers, paladins, or barbarians—combatants who are well-suited to the demands of the position and can benefit most from the capabilities of the class.

Rogues and bards sometimes take this class, but both they and sorcerers, wizards, and druids are normally better off avoiding hand-to-hand combat, so it is rare.

NPC breachgnomes sometimes work in small units, prepared to block off a number of different passages so that their fellows can either get into a better position or even escape.

They are almost exclusively found in gnome villages or towns.

A PC breachgnome can sometimes be found wandering along, searching for fellow gnomes in need of his unique skills.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a breachgnome, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome.

Alignment: Any nonchaotic.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Listen 5 ranks, Spot 5 ranks.

Feats: Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Improved Initiative.

CLASS SKILLS

The breachgnome's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the breachgnome prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Breachgnomes are proficient with all simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and with shields.

Seal the Breach (Ex): Starting at 1st level, when a breachgnome can fight in a position where he is adjacent to a solid object of at least Medium size (such as a tree, wall, or pillar), he gains a +2 dodge bonus to his AC.

If two such objects are on opposite sides of the breachgnome (similar to two creatures in flanking positions), this bonus increases to a total of +4.

Beginning at 3rd level, the breachgnome becomes especially good at thwarting attempts to enter his area, pass his threatened area, or move him from his position.

He gains a +4 bonus on attacks of opportunity made in response to a creature entering his square (including a bull rush), a +4 bonus to resist a bull rush (as if the breachgnome were exceptionally stable), and a +4 bonus to avoid a trip attack made as part of an overrun action or to trip someone in response to a trip attempt made as part of an overrun.

Upon reaching 5th level, the breachgnome gains a +4 bonus on attacks of opportunity made against creatures moving within or through his threatened area, and Tumble checks made to pass through his square or a threatened area add +10 to their DC.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 2nd level, the breachgnome gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to even be aware of it.

He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) regardless of being caught flatfooted or struck by an invisible attacker (he still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized). Upon reaching 5th level, the breachgnome can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies rogues the ability to use flank attacks to sneak attack him.

The exception to this defense is that a rogue of at least four levels higher than the character can flank him (and thus sneak attack him).

If the breachgnome has another class that grants the uncanny dodge ability, add together all the class levels of the classes that grant the ability and determine the character's uncanny dodge ability on that basis.

Bonus Feats: At 2nd and 4th level, the breachgnome gets a bonus feat.

These bonus feats must be drawn from the following list: Ambidexterity, Blind-Fight, Expertise, Improved Critical*, Improved Disarm, Improved Trip, Improved Two Weapon Fighting, Two Weapon Fighting, Weapon Finesse*, Weapon Focus*, and Whirlwind Attack.

Some of the bonus feats available to a breachgnome cannot be acquired until the breachgnome has gained one or more prerequisite feats.

A breachgnome can select feats marked with an asterisk (*) more than once, but it must be for a different weapon each time.

A breachgnome must still meet all prerequisites for a feat, including ability score and base attack bonus minimums.

TABLE A—8: THE BREACHGNOME

Class Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special
1st	+1	+0	+2	+0	Seal the breach (AC bonus)
2nd	+2	+0	+3	+0	Bonus feat, uncanny dodge (Dex bonus to AC)

GREAT RIFT SKYGUARD

The hippogriff-mounted skyguards of the Great Rift patrol the skies, ever watchful for the enemies of the gold dwarves.

Unlike other mounted soldiers, skyguards often leave their saddles, shouting "Axes from the sky!" as they drop onto their foes.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a Great Rift skyguard, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gold dwarf.

Skills: Handle Animal 4 ranks, Jump 4 ranks, Ride 8 ranks.

Feats: Mounted Combat, Toughness.

CLASS SKILLS

The Great Rift skyguard's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), and Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the Great Rift skyguard prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The Great Rift skyguard is proficient with martial weapons, medium and light armor, and shields.

Axes from the Sky: The Great Rift skyguard is particularly adept at using a drogue wing (see the Equipment section of this appendix) to attack his foes from above.

As a standard action, the skyguard can leap from his saddle, fall straight downward, and deploy his drogue wing just before attacking.

This counts as a charge attack that deals double damage and grants an additional +1 bonus on the attack roll because the skyguard is attacking from higher ground.

The skyguard takes no damage from the fall, and after the attack is scattered randomly into a square adjacent to the creature he attacked.

Hippogriff Steed I (Su): At 2nd level, the bond between the Great Rift skyguard and his mount improves.

The hippogriff now has 5 Hit Dice, its natural armor bonus improves to +6, its Strength score improves to 19, and its Intelligence score improves to 6.

The skyguard also develops a telepathic link with the hippogriff out to a distance of one mile.

The skyguard cannot see through the mount's eyes, but they can communicate telepathically.

Because of the telepathic link, the skyguard has the same connection to an item or place that the hippogriff does, just as a master and his familiar.

The skyguard can have only one hippogriff steed at a time. If the hippogriff dies, the skyguard must train a new hippogriff for a month before he can confer the bonuses to it.

Skyhook: At 2nd level, the Great Rift skyguard and his steed have mastered a resaddling maneuver.

If the skyguard is on the ground, he can raise his shield above his head as a free action.

The hippogriff then swoops down and grabs the shield (and consequently the skyguard) in the middle of its move, as if it had the Flyby Attack feat.

Then it corkscrews as it climbs, so the skyguard winds up back in the saddle.

The skyguard doesn't provoke attacks of opportunity for this maneuver, but the hippogriff might.

Bonus Mounted Combat Feat: At 3rd and 7th level, the Great Rift skyguard gains a feat of his choice with the Mounted Combat feat as a prerequisite.

Fly-By Attack: At 4th level or higher, a Great Rift skyguard who swoops down onto his foes with a drogue wing can leap from the saddle, make a single attack, then fly up to 50 feet away (at an altitude of 5 feet above the ground) before landing.

This does not provoke an attack of opportunity from the skyguard's target.

Hippogriff Steed II (Su): At 5th level, the Great Rift skyguard's hippogriff now has 7 Hit Dice, its natural armor bonus improves to +8, its Strength score improves to 20, and its Intelligence score improves to 7.

It is considered a magical beast, and it remains Large despite its 7 HD.

Its fly speed improves to 110 feet (good).

Drogue Charge: At 6th level and higher, a Great Rift skyguard on the ground with an undeployed drogue wing can run at his foes, then deploy the wing to send him into the air briefly, up and over his target.

This functions as a normal charge attack, except that the skyguard gains the +1 attack bonus for higher ground, and he lands on the far side of his foe.

The drogue charge doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity from the target, even if the creature has reach.

Hippogriff Steed III (Su): At 8th level, the Great Rift skyguard's hippogriff now has 9 Hit Dice, its natural armor bonus improves to +10, its Strength score improves to 21, and its Intelligence score improves to 8.

It is still a Large magical beast, and it gains spell resistance 20 and damage reduction 5/+2.

Glide for Distance: At 9th level and higher, the Great Rift skyguard is attuned to even the slightest breeze, and he knows how to get maximum performance from his drogue wing.

Once he has deployed the drogue wing, a Great Rift skyguard can travel up to 15 feet horizontally for every 5 feet he falls.

He is considered to have good maneuverability while flying, although he can't climb.

He can dive as steeply as he wishes, however.

Skyguard Catapult: A dangerous stunt attempted only by the best skyguards (10th level), the skyguard catapult turns the Great Rift skyguard into a living catapult stone.

As a full-round action, hippogriff and skyguard swoop toward their target.

At the end of the hippogriff's movement, the skyguard leaps from the saddle, falling any vertical distance and traveling up to 50 feet in a straight line horizontally.

Unlike axes from the sky, the drogue wing is not deployed. Instead, the skyguard deals damage to the target as if he were a falling object (see Table 3-18: Damage from Falling Objects in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide) and takes half-damage from the fall himself.

The skyguard must succeed on a melee touch attack roll to strike his target; if he misses, he inflicts no damage on the target and falls prone in an adjacent square.

ORC WARLORD

The orc warlord is a savage general of an unruly army, the leader of one of the deadly and all too common orc hordes that rampage down from the Spine of the World to savage and brutalize the civilized lands of Faerûn.

An orc warlord is an imposing figure, often slathered with scars both ritualistic and all too real in origin.

Barbarians and fighter/barbarians are the best suited to become orc warlords, as they already excel in battle and often attract large armies on their own.

Barbarian/clerics sometimes become orc warlords to better lead their followers into religious wars.

Orc barbarian/rangers and barbarian/rogues usually operate alone, although it is not unknown for one of these to become a warlord in desperate times.

Perhaps the most potent of orc warlords, though, is the barbarian/bard; his natural abilities to handle large groups and inspire greatness stack quite well with the abilities granted by this prestige class.

An NPC orc warlord is usually encountered on the field of battle, commanding his horde of orcs.

Between attacks, an orc warlord can be found back in his lair training his troops for the next attack, be it in a month or a decade or even farther into the future.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an orc warlord, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Orc or half-orc.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Alignment: Any nongood.

Skills: Intimidate 8 ranks, Ride 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Blood of the Warlord or Might Makes Right,

Leadership.

Special: Barbarian rage ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The orc warlord's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Ride (Dex), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (5 ranks).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the orc warlord prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Orc warlords gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Gather Horde (Ex): An orc warlord can maintain a larger force of orc followers than a comparable leader could of other creatures.

When determining the number of followers allowed for a warlord, multiply the amount listed in Table 2–25:

Leadership in the DUNGEON MASTER's Guide by the listed value.

These additional forces must be orcs.

For example, a character with a leadership score of 15 could normally have up to twenty 1st-level, two 2nd-level, and one 3rd-level followers.

A 1st-level orc warlord could have thirty 1st-level, three 2nd-level, and one 3rd-level follower, as long as at least ten of the 1st-level and one of the 2nd-level followers were orcs. A 3rd-level orc warlord could have forty 1st-level, four 2nd-level, and two 3rd-level followers, so long as half of them were orcs.

Inspire Courage (Su): At 2nd level, the orc warlord gains the ability to inspire courage, which has the same effect as the bardic ability of the same name.

The warlord makes an inspirational speech, bolstering his allies against fear and improving their combat abilities.

To be affected, an ally must hear the warlord speak for a full round.

The effect lasts as long as the warlord speaks and for 5 rounds after the warlord stops speaking (or 5 rounds after the ally can no longer hear the warlord).

While speaking, the warlord can fight but cannot cast spells, activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls), or activate magic items by command word.

Affected allies receive a +2 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

A warlord in the midst of a rage can use this ability, but in those cases the warlord's speech is more of a rant of howls and curses than a true speech.

Final Rage (Ex): At 5th level, the warlord gains the ability to incite a rage in all his nearby allies for one last phenomenal attack.

Any allies within ten feet of the warlord (including the warlord himself) immediately enter a rage, even if they could not normally do so or have used all their own rage ability for the day.

If the warlord or an ally is already in a rage at the time or is capable of a greater rage, the affected creatures enter a greater rage instead (if an affected creature is already in a greater rage, this ability has no additional effect).

This rage (or increase to greater rage) lasts until the warlord's next turn, and all penalties for leaving a rage apply (for example, the creatures are fatigued, and if already fatigued they become exhausted).

Invoking the final rage is a free action.

SPELLSINGER

Spellsingers (not to be confused with speldancers, detailed in Magic of Faerûn), are rare practitioners of an ancient elven bardic tradition.

Like bards, spellsingers work magic with song and poetics, but, whereas bards draw on the Weave through singing and poetry, spellsingers are truly part of the Weave.

As such, spellsingers can work magic through music with greater effect and flexibility than other bards.

Most spellsingers are bards or wizard/bards, particularly enchanter/bards, although sorcerer/bards and cleric/bards (the latter known as circle dancers) are not unknown.

Characters of other classes almost never become spellsingers.

Likewise, most spellsingers are elves, or, more rarely, half-elves.

At least one human with a trace of elven heritage, Danilo Thann, is known to have mastered the art as well.

NPC spellsingers are usually found in traditional elven homelands where they play a role not unlike bards in other cultures.

They garner a great deal of respect among elves and half-elves raised among the Fair Folk, but their unique talents and abilities are little understood outside the ranks of the Tel-quessir.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a spellsinger, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Spellsingers must have at least some small amount of elven heritage, defined as at least one-eighth elven blood.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Perform (any hand instrument, singing, and others) 8 ranks.

Feats: Improved Counterspell, Skill Focus (Perform).

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 1st-level arcane spells without preparation.

CLASS SKILLS

The spellsinger's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Disguise (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Knowledge (any) (Int), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Speak Language (None), Spellcraft (Int), and Use Magic Device (Cha).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the spellsinger prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Spellsingers gain no proficiency in any weapons or armor.

Bardic Music: Spellsingers continue to increase their skill in creating magical effects thorough song and poetics.

A character's spellsinger levels and bard levels (or levels in another class with the same ability) stack for the purpose of using bardic music.

Compelling Song (Su): Spellsingers have an intrinsic understanding of the links between magic and music.

They add their class level to all Perform checks when using their bardic music ability.

Likewise, they add their class level to the DCs of their bardic music fascinate and suggestion abilities.

Spellsong: Spellsingers can "lose" a prepared arcane spell in order to cast any arcane enchantment spell of one or more levels lower that is on their spell list.

This works just as a cleric's spontaneous casting class feature.

Arcane spells that do not need to be prepared can also be "lost" in this fashion, although spellsong simply grants the ability to replace a spell slot with a lower-level arcane enchantment spell from the character's spell list.

All spellsongs require verbal (singing) and somatic (playing an instrument) components, regardless of whether the spell was prepared or not.

These components replace the spell's normal verbal, somatic, material, and focus components, but not any experience point costs or expensive material components.

The saving throw DC for spellsongs is equal to the caster's Cha modifier + the enchantment's level +2, regardless of whether the spell was originally prepared or not.

Improved Countersong (Su): At 3rd level and above, spellsinger are particularly adept at using their countersong ability to disrupt spells, gaining a +10 bonus on Perform checks when attempting to countersong.

Amplified Music (Su): At 5th level, spellsingers become particularly adept at producing magical effects on those around them.

They increase the range of most bardic music effects (countersong, fascinate, inspire courage, and inspire greatness) by a number of feet equal to five times their class level.

This increase is tripled for the bardic music fascinate ability.

Spells per Day: When a new spellsinger level is gained, the character gains new spells per day as if he had also gained a level in whatever arcane spellcasting class he belonged to before he added the prestige class.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

This essentially means that he adds the level of spellsinger to the level of whatever other arcane spellcasting class the character has, then determines spells per day and caster level accordingly.

If a character had more than one arcane spellcasting class before he became a spellsinger, he must decide to which class he adds each level of spellsinger for the purpose of determining spells per day.

TABLE A-12: THE SPELLSINGER

WARRIOR SKALD

Among the Northlanders dwell bardic musicians who live for two things: poetry and warfare.

Accompanying heroes of great renown, these warrior skalds fight at their sides while composing the epics that will be told for centuries to come.

Most warrior skalds were once bards, though they eventually ignore their spellcasting to improve their fighting prowess.

They focus on oratory rather than music, and their greatest creative achievement is to compose an epic poem about a military campaign or other adventure.

Warrior skalds will often recite parts of an epic in the middle of combat to spur on their allies and frighten their foes.

Many soldiers find it unnerving to battle a warrior skald who recites poetry in stentorian tones, working the events of the ongoing battle into each stanza.

NPC warrior skalds are usually found on the battlefield or in various noble courts, where they recite poems of battles both recent and ancient.

Silvermoon and Waterdeep both have guildhouses for warrior skalds, where poems and tales of adventure are enthusiastically traded.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warrior skald, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Concentration 6 ranks, Perform (poetry, any others) 9 ranks.

Feats: Power Attack, Cleave.

CLASS SKILLS

The warrior skald's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (Int), and Swim (Str).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the warrior skald prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: The warrior skald is proficient with martial weapons, armor, and shields.

Bardic Music: At 1st level, the warrior skald gains the bardic music ability if she did not already have it from a previous class.

All the bardic music effects (countersong, fascinate, inspire competence, inspire courage, inspire greatness, and suggestion) become available to her immediately, subject to their usual Perform skill requirements (see Bard in the Player's Handbook).

Additionally, all the bardic music effects, including countersong, can be produced with poetry rather than music.

Each bardic music effect except suggestion requires one daily use of the bardic music ability.

Suggestion does not require any uses, but the subject must first be fascinated.

The warrior skald combines her bard and warrior skald levels to determine how many times per day she can use her bardic music ability.

Words of Rejuvenation (Su): A 2nd-level warrior skald can inspire her allies so they shake off the effects of fatigue. Fatigued characters who hear the warrior skald speak for a minute are no longer fatigued, and exhausted characters are only fatigued.

The warrior skald can use this ability only once per hour. It is a language-dependent ability that counts as one daily use of bardic music.

Demoralize: At 3rd level, the warrior skald's poetry hurts enemy morale.

Once they've heard the warrior skald's epic oratory for a full round, opponents within 20 feet must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + warrior skald levels + Cha bonus) or be shaken (–2 morale penalty on attacks, damage, and saves) as long as the warrior skald continues to recite and for 5 rounds thereafter.

This is a mindaffecting, language-dependent ability that counts as one daily use of bardic music.

Marcher's Chant: At 5th level, the warrior skald gains the ability to encourage those engaged in dull, repetitive action, such as marching or rowing.

When traveling overland or engaged in a similar long-term physical effort, those who hear the warrior skald's exhortations find they can exert themselves for longer. Those within earshot of the warrior skald can march or exert themselves 50% longer before making Constitution checks (see Forced March in Chapter 9 of the Player's Handbook).

The warrior skald need not chant nonstop throughout the entire march but must be chanting at least half the time.

Inspire Heroism: As an additional use of bardic music, a 6th-level warrior skald with 15 or more ranks in Perform can use poetics to inspire tremendous heroism in a single willing ally within 30 feet, allowing that creature to fight bravely even against overwhelming odds.

For every three levels the warrior skald attains beyond 5th, he can inspire heroism in one additional creature.

To inspire heroism, the warrior skald must recite poetry and the creature must hear the poetry for a full round.

A creature so inspired gains a +4 morale bonus on attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, and saving throws, and a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class.

The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the warrior skald continue to recite poetry and for up to 5 rounds thereafter. This is a mind-affecting ability that counts as one daily use of bardic music.

Words of Fear (Su): A 7th-level warrior skald's oratory becomes frightful to foes who hear and understand it. Once they've heard the warrior skald for a full round, opponents within 20 feet must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + warrior skald levels + Cha bonus) or be frightened (flee if possible, or suffer a -2 morale penalty on attacks, damage, and saves) as long as the warrior skald continues to recite and for 5 rounds thereafter.

This is a mind-affecting, language-dependent ability that counts as three daily uses of bardic music.

Words of Panic (Su): A 9th-level warrior skald's oratory is so frightening that few can withstand it.

Once they've heard the warrior skald for a full round, opponents within 20 feet must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + warrior skald levels + Cha bonus) or be panicked (-2 morale penalty on saves, and creature flees or cowers, dropping items) as long as the warrior skald continues to recite and for 5 rounds thereafter.

This is a mind-affecting, language-dependent ability that counts as three daily uses of bardic music.

Words of Fury (Su): A 10th-level warrior skald with at least 19 ranks in Perform can enrage her allies.

This ability functions exactly like barbarian rage on all willing allies within 20 feet, and it lasts as long as the warrior skald continues her performance.

Words of fury requires three daily uses of performance per round maintained.

It is a supernatural, mind-affecting ability.

WARSLING SNIPER

The warsling sniper is an expert in the use of the weapon commonly associated with the halfling race.

Among the hin, these individuals are known by their proper name, and are often accorded great respect in the hin community.

To nearly everyone else, however, these sharpshooters are known as "those damned sling assassins!" or by even more colorful epithets.

While some warsling snipers do actually sell their talents to those wishing to dispose of their enemies, most are not professional assassins but rather highly skilled specialists who use their skills to help protect their communities or improve their chances of adventuring successfully.

A number of warsling snipers remain with their family for most of their lives, imparting their superlative skills to the young.

Fighters, monks, and rogues are the most common practitioners of warsling snipery.

Some barbarians and rangers, particularly those fighting for a partisan cause or engaged in the protracted defense of a homeland, find the warsling sniper's talents highly useful in their work.

The occasional druid or cleric may adopt this path of study if it seems to support or compliment her religious beliefs and practices.

Wizards seldom sacrifice the benefits of additional spells to take up the halfling warsling with such single-minded devotion, and sorcerers do so with only slightly more frequency.

The art of warsling expertise is often passed from generation to generation, particularly among the lightfoot hin.

This strong familial association is perhaps the reason that warsling snipers are found more frequently among lightfoot halflings than ghostwise or stronghearts.

Warsling snipers are not unknown among the ghostwise and strongheart hin, but generally these subraces prefer different sorts of ranged weapons.

A small gathering of warsling snipers sometimes cooperate to undertake a joint mission (such as ambushing individuals who are making life difficult for the local hin), and at least few wandering lightfoot communities boast small military units of warsling snipers.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a warsling sniper, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Halfling.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Craft (weaponsmith) 3 ranks, Hide 4 ranks, Spot 6 ranks.

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (halfling warsling), Exotic Weapon Proficiency (skiprock), Point Blank Shot, Precise Shot.

CLASS SKILLS

The warsling sniper's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All the following are class features of the warsling sniper prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Warsling snipers gain no proficiency with any weapons, armor, or shields.

Warsling Sneak Attack (Ex): Any time the warsling sniper's target would be denied his Dexterity bonus to AC (regardless of whether he actually has a Dexterity bonus), her ranged sneak attack with the warsling deals extra damage.

This extra damage is +1d6 at 1st level, and increases by an additional 1d6 every other level after that (+2d6 at 3rd level and +3d6 at 5th level).

Ranged attacks only count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 feet.

In every other way, this ability is identical to the rogue's sneak attack.

If the character has the sneak attack ability from another class, the bonuses stack.

Sniper's Vision (Ex): At 2nd level, warsling snipers gain a +2 bonus on sling attacks against targets with some degree of cover; this bonus effectively reduces the benefit of cover because the warsling sniper is adept at aiming for the exposed part of the foe.

Furthermore, if a skiprock sniper misses the target due to concealment, she can reroll the miss chance percentile roll to see if she actually hit.

Improved Critical (Ex): At 4th level, the warsling gains Improved Critical (halfling warsling) as a bonus feat.

Improved Ricochet (Ex): At 6th level, the sniper's expertise with the warsling becomes so advanced that when she bounces a skiprock off one target to hit another, the second attack roll is made without the normal -2 penalty.

This ability may be used once per round.

RACES OF STONE (3.5)

BATTLESMITH

A battlesmith is a skilled dwarf armorer and weaponsmith who uses her experience in battle, as well as her masterful weaponsmithing and armorsmithing abilities, to create deadly items for her kinsmen to wield in defense of their homes.

While typically only spellcasters can craft magic items, dwarven ingenuity has found a number of ways to make skill serve where nondwarves must rely on magic.

Aside from her incredible skill crafting items of war, a battlesmith is equally capable of raining down death and destruction in combat.

After all, no one knows her creations—or how to most effectively use them—better than the battlesmith herself, and she did not live to retire from the front lines by being anything less than the best.

Fighters and paladins are well served by becoming battlesmiths.

Spellcasters are less likely to find benefit in the profession, since they typically find little time to continue their more traditional mystical studies while working in the heat of the forge.

That said, a number of clerics of Moradin take up the mantle of the battlesmith.

NPC battlesmiths are often veterans attached to dwarf military units.

They repair damaged weapons and armor, inspire the younger dwarves in the unit, and take the fight to the enemy as well as any dwarf warrior.

Adaptation: While this prestige class obviously plays off the dwarf's love of weapon- and armorsmithing, it's suitable for nondwarves with a similar cultural connection to the smithy and the forge.

In such cases, you can replace the racial entry requirement with a similar cultural requirement.

This isn't a prestige class intended to represent a master weaponsmith.

It's intended to showcase a smith who has a mystical union with the tools of war she creates.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a battlesmith, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Craft (armorsmithing) or Craft (weaponsmithing) 10 ranks.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Endurance, Weapon Focus (warhammer).

Special: The character must have created a dwarvencraft weapon (see page 159) and used it in battle.

CLASS SKILLS

The battlesmith's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), and Knowledge (religion) (Int). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the battlesmith prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Battlesmiths gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

One with the Hammer (Ex): A battlesmith's long hours at the forge grant her a special bond with a hammer. When wielding a warhammer that she has crafted herself, a battlesmith adds her Wisdom bonus as a bonus to the damage dealt by the weapon.

Secrets of the Forge (Ex): A battlesmith learns some of the great dwarven secrets of forging weapons and armor.

A battlesmith receives Craft Magic Arms and Armor as a bonus feat, regardless of her caster level.

Multiply the battlesmith's class level by 3 to determine her effective caster level for the purpose of creating magic arms and armor (this benefit stacks with any other caster levels the battlesmith might have).

For example, a 7th-level fighter/1st-level battlesmith would be treated as a 3rd-level caster for the purpose of creating magic arms and armor.

A 7th-level cleric/1st-level battlesmith would be treated as a 10th-level caster for that purpose.

The battlesmith must still meet any other prerequisites for the item's creation.

This stipulation might mean that she needs the assistance of other characters to complete the creation of an item.

Flesh of My Flesh (Ex): No armor fits so well as that created by a battlesmith for her own use.

When wearing heavy armor that she has crafted herself, a battlesmith of 2nd level or higher gains a +1 sacred bonus to Armor Class.

This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level.

Forged in Fire (Ex): At 3rd level, a battlesmith becomes inured to the effects of fatigue and exhaustion, and can ignore their effects for a number of hours equal to her class level.

At the end of this time, if the condition remains, the battlesmith succumbs to the effects.

Tempered in Blood (Ex): Once per day, a 5th-level battlesmith can attempt to resist the damage from a single blow.

The battlesmith can attempt a Fortitude save (DC 10 + damage dealt) when struck and damaged by a melee attack with a weapon or natural attack (but not by a spell or other effect).

If the save succeeds, the battlesmith takes only half damage from the blow; if it fails, she takes normal damage.

The battlesmith must be aware of the attack and able to react to it to use this ability.

If she is denied her Dexterity bonus to AC, she can't use this ability.

BLADE BRAVO

Younger gnomes consider it fashionable to engage in rapier duels for honor and glory.

These duels are typically fought more for sport than anger, and after a few drubbings, most youths tire of the game and move on to less dangerous pursuits.

A few, however, possess a real talent for fencing and develop a love of the blade and battle.

They become addicted to the rush of combat and devote themselves to studying its many strategies.

Their obsession transforms the sport, elevating the sometimes inelegant cut and thrust of battle into an art form that can leave observers breathless and opponents bloody.

These blade bravos also specialize in techniques to battle creatures larger than they are—a necessity for any gnome interested in pursuing the arts of war.

Not surprisingly, gnome fighters and rogues of all types find themselves drawn to the life of the blade bravo.

Even spellcasters sometimes adopt the study of the rapier for a time, although few are willing to leave their spells behind entirely for a simple blade.

PCs minding their own business in a gnome community might run afoul of an NPC blade bravo looking to prove herself.

Such characters often incite duels against visitors because they get a home crowd advantage, and whether they win or lose, their foe isn't likely to stick around and cause trouble.

Adaptation: This prestige class bears some similarity to the duelist prestige class presented on page 185 of the Dungeon Master's Guide, but some of the blade bravo's class features work best for Small PCs.

A straightforward change would involve broadening the racial requirement to allow halflings and perhaps some Small or smaller fey into this prestige class.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a blade bravo, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks.

Feats: Combat Expertise, Weapon Finesse, Weapon Focus (rapier).

CLASS SKILLS

The blade bravo's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Escape Artist (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), and Tumble (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the blade bravo prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Blade bravos gain no proficiency with any weapon.

They do gain proficiency with light armor.

Flourish (Ex): A blade bravo learns to fight with style and flair.

While many might discount their swirls and poses as cheap theatrics, in truth they act as a formidable weapon.

By diverting her foe's eye with these flourishes, a blade bravo can more easily feint, preventing her opponent from fully defending himself against her next attack.

A blade bravo can add her class level to her Bluff checks when feinting in combat.

This benefit only applies when the blade bravo wears light armor or no armor.

Goad: A blade bravo gains Goad (see page 140) as a bonus feat.

If the blade bravo has at least 5 ranks in Bluff, the save DC to avoid the feat's effect increases by 2.

Mobile Fighting (Ex): If a blade bravo of 2nd level or higher moves at least 5 feet, she gains a +1 dodge bonus to AC until her next turn.

Any time a creature loses its Dexterity bonus (if any) to Armor Class, such as when it's caught flat-footed, it loses its dodge bonus, too.

This benefit only applies when the blade bravo wears light armor or no armor.

Bonus Feats: Beginning at 3rd level, a blade bravo receives a bonus dueling or combat-oriented feat, which must be selected from the list below.

She receives additional bonus feats at 6th and 9th level.

Acrobatic, Agile, Alertness, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Greater Two-Weapon Fighting, Improved Critical, Improved Disarm, Improved Feint, Improved Trip, Improved Two-Weapon Fighting, Mobility, Spring Attack, Two-Weapon Fighting, Whirlwind Attack.

Melee Sneak Attack (Ex): If a blade bravo can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage. Basically, the blade bravo's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the blade bravo flanks her target.

This extra damage is 1d6 points at 4th level, and it increases to 2d6 points at 8th level.

Should the blade bravo score a critical hit with a melee sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

(See Table 8–5: Attack Roll Modifiers and Table 8–6: Armor Class Modifiers, page 151 of the Player's Handbook, for combat situations in which the blade bravo flanks an opponent or the opponent loses his Dexterity bonus to AC).

Unlike normal sneak attacks, a blade bravo's melee sneak attack damage applies only to melee attacks.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 feet and the blade bravo has the sneak attack ability from another class.

In this case, she deals the sneak attack damage from that other class but does not add the melee sneak attack damage gained from the blade bravo class.

With a sap (blackjack) or an unarmed strike, a blade bravo can make a melee sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage.

She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty, because she must make optional use of her weapon to execute a sneak attack.

(See Nonlethal Damage, page 146 of the Player's Handbook).

A blade bravo can sneak attack only living creatures that have a discernible anatomy—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Any creature that is immune to extra damage from critical hits is not vulnerable to melee sneak attacks.

The blade bravo must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

A blade bravo cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment (see page 152 of the Player's Handbook) or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

If a blade bravo gets a sneak attack bonus from another source (such as rogue levels), the bonuses on damage stack as long as the target is in melee with the blade bravo.

Size Advantage (Ex): By 5th level, a blade bravo starts focusing on fighting larger opponents.

A blade bravo gains a +2 dodge bonus to her AC per size category of difference between her and her foe.

For instance, a blade bravo facing a hobgoblin (a Medium creature) would gain a +2 dodge bonus to AC, but when facing a cloud giant (a Huge creature) she would gain a +6 dodge bonus to AC.

The bonus applies only against attacks from that foe.

This ability only functions when the blade bravo wears light armor or no armor.

Small but Deadly (Ex): From 7th level on, a blade bravo gains a +4 bonus on rolls made to confirm critical hits with melee weapons, but only against creatures larger than she.

Lethal Riposte (Ex): A 10th-level blade bravo is a lethal combatant with few equals; she finds herself in few situations that she cannot turn to her advantage.

Any opponent who attacks and misses the blade bravo with a melee attack provokes an attack of opportunity from the blade bravo.

Furthermore, the opponent cannot apply his Dexterity bonus to AC against this attack.

The blade bravo can use this ability only once per round, regardless of the number of attacks of opportunity she is normally allowed.

This benefit only applies when the blade bravo wears light armor or no armor.

CRAGTOP ARCHER

In times of peace, the cragtop archer hunts across the deep mountain canyons, felling animals too canny for other hunters to approach.

In times of war, the cragtop archer fights from a ridgeline, raining arrows down on her foes from hundreds of yards away and winning battles from seemingly impossible distances.

Cragtop archers train their eyes and minds to find targets at great distances, and to quickly compensate for wind, movement, and other factors that affect shots of such difficulty.

Few warriors can match the cragtop archer's ability to hold higher ground against a group of enemies.

Human, goliath, and half-elf rangers comprise most of the small number of cragtop archers that patrol the northern ranges, but other races and classes occasionally join their ranks.

Fighters, especially those with a level of rogue or ranger, make excellent cragtop archers.

Rogues typically prefer to sneak close to their foes rather than train as cragtop archers, and spellcasters rarely have the martial expertise required for the class.

NPC cragtop archers are often encountered at a distance; PCs will see their arrows long before the arrows' origin becomes apparent.

While most cragtop archers are content to wander the mountains and hunt for their tribes, in times of war a cragtop archer is a useful ally.

Teams of cragtop archers often function as artillery for mountain warbands, striking foes from a great distance and holding the high ground against all comers.

Adaptation: With their racial archery prowess, elves could have a similar prestige class that isn't tied to the mountains. To create such a class, you could replace the Climb and Mountain Warrior requirements with other skill or feat requirements, and likewise replace the adept climber and strike from above class features with class features you create yourself.

Alternatively, you could remove the Mountain Warrior requirement and call the prestige class the "elven treetop archer".

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a cragtop archer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +6.

Skills: Climb 10 ranks, Spot 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feats: Far Shot, Mountain Warrior*.

* New feat described in Chapter 6.

CLASS SKILLS

The cragtop archer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Swim (Str). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the cragtop archer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Cragtop archers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Adept Climber (Ex): A cragtop archer does not lose her Dexterity bonus to Armor Class while climbing.

Farsight (Ex): A cragtop archer enjoys great visual acuity. She suffers only half the normal penalty on her Spot checks because of distance (-1 per 20 feet of distance, rather than -1 per 10 feet).

In addition, a cragtop archer takes only half the normal penalty on ranged attacks per range increment (-1 per range increment, rather than -2).

Strike From Above (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a cragtop archer gains a +2 bonus on damage rolls when making a ranged attack from higher ground than her target.

Arcing Shot (Ex): A cragtop archer of 3rd level or higher can fire a high, arcing shot to gain greater range with her projectile weapon.

Any time the cragtop archer can fire a projectile weapon in an area with at least 40 feet of clearance between her position and the ceiling (or any other overhead obstruction, such as a forest canopy), her maximum range with the projectile weapon is fifteen range increments rather than the normal ten range increments.

Horizon Shot (Su): From 4th level on, a cragtop archer can seemingly hit targets as far away as the horizon as easily as she can hit something nearby.

As a full-round action, the cragtop archer can make a single attack with a projectile weapon.

This attack is made with no penalty for range, though it still has the same maximum range as a normal attack by the cragtop archer.

This ability can be used in conjunction with any ability that extends the range of a projectile weapon, such as the Far Shot feat or the cragtop archer's arcing shot ability.

Mountain Skin (Su): Three times per day, a 5th-level cragtop archer can gather the strength of the mountains into her own body, manifesting her bond with them within herself.

While this ability is in effect, the cragtop archer gains damage reduction 5/adamantine.

Activating the mountain skin ability is a free action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

The benefit from mountain skin lasts for a number of rounds equal to 5 + the character's Con modifier.

DAWNCALLER

Dawncallers are goliath bards responsible for guarding their tribe throughout the night.

They patrol the darkness at the edge of a sleeping goliath camp, keeping the many monsters of the mountains away while the other goliaths rest.

In the morning, they awaken the rest of the tribe with stirring songs of goliath bravery.

Because dawncallers must have great musical aptitude, nearly all have at least a few levels in bard.

Many have levels in ranger, barbarian, or fighter as well, because dawncallers are often a goliath tribe's first line of defense.

Almost every tribe has at least one dawncaller, and it's not uncommon for a tribe to have as many as a half-dozen.

They are rarely found apart from their tribe, although some dawncallers leave goliath society due to injury or a falling-out with other tribe members.

Adaptation: With some revision, the dawncaller prestige class works for nongoliath bards willing to trade their spellcasting and interpersonal skills for more combat ability.

The structure of the class (bardic music at 1st level and new songs at intervals thereafter) is useful for other bard-friendly prestige classes you may create.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a dawncaller, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Goliath.

Skills: Perform (sing) 8 ranks, Spot 4 ranks, Listen 4 ranks.

Special: Bardic music ability.

CLASS SKILLS

The dawncaller's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Sense Motive (Wis), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the dawncaller prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Dawncallers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Darkvision (Ex): Constant practice peering into the darkness unlocks a goliath's latent darkvision ability.

Dawncallers can see in the dark out to 60 feet.

Darkvision is black and white only, but is otherwise like normal sight, and dawncallers can function just fine with no light at all.

Bardic Music: Dawncallers combine their dawncaller levels with levels of other classes that offer the bardic music class feature to determine number of bardic music uses per day (but not any other bardic music-related effects).

As a dawncaller attains higher levels, he gains access to new bardic music abilities.

These follow the normal rules for bardic music abilities, as detailed on page 29 of the Player's Handbook.

Inspire Courage (Su): At 2nd level and above, a dawncaller with 10 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use song to inspire courage in his allies (including himself), bolstering them against fear and improving their combat abilities. To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the dawncaller sing.

The effect lasts as long as the ally hears the dawncaller sing and for 5 rounds thereafter.

An affected ally receives a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls.

If the dawncaller has this ability from another class (such as from bard levels), add together the character's levels from all classes that grant this ability and compare the total to Table 3-4: The Bard on page 27 of the Player's Handbook to determine the total bonus granted.

For example, a 6th-level bard/2nd-level dawncaller would grant a +2 morale bonus, while a 10th-level bard/10th-level dawncaller would grant a +4 morale bonus.

Inspire Stamina (Su): From 4th level on, a dawncaller with 12 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use his music to refresh his tired allies.

While he sings and for 1 minute per class level thereafter, the dawncaller and allies within 30 feet who can hear his song can ignore all the effects of fatigue and exhaustion.

Song of Warding (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, a dawncaller with 14 or more ranks in Perform (sing) can use song to help protect an area from incursion by unwanted creatures. Dawncallers generally use this song to protect a goliath tribe's camp at night.

The dawncaller must sing the song of warding for 5 minutes; when this time has elapsed, he creates an antipathy effect that lasts for 2 hours per class level.

The Will save DC for a song of warding is 10 + class level + dawncaller's Cha modifier.

Song of warding is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Inspire Fury (Su): A dawncaller of 8th level or higher with at least 16 ranks in Perform (sing) can use music to turn his allies into furious berserkers.

Each ally within 30 feet who can hear the dawncaller sing can choose to enter a rage on her turn.

This rage functions identically to a barbarian's rage, except that it ends automatically if the dawncaller stops singing. If the ally already has the ability to rage, she can choose to apply the full effect of her own rage, but without spending one of her daily uses of the ability.

A dawncaller can't inspire fury in himself.

Inspire fury is a mind-affecting ability.

Song of the Mountain (Su): A 10th-level dawncaller with at least 18 ranks in Perform (sing) can imbue himself and his allies with great physical might and stability.

The dawncaller and any humanoid allies within 30 feet who can hear his song gain a +4 bonus to Strength and damage reduction 5/adamantine.

All creatures affected by the song of the mountain also gain a +4 bonus on checks to resist being bull rushed or tripped as long as they stand upon the ground.

The effect lasts for as long as the allies hear the dawncaller sing and for up to 5 rounds thereafter.

DEEPWARDEN

While clanwardens guard dwarf cities and clanholds as a last line of defense, deepwardens serve as a living early warning system against threats from both the environment and other creatures.

Deepwardens are typically adventurers or retired dwarf militia members who wish to explore the depths of the earth.

They travel deep underground and survive on their own, far from civilization.

There they search for new resources, threats, or other interesting findings, and send reports back to their city comrades.

Deepwardens are considered the first line of defense against invasions or other threats, and as such they must be both physically hardy and able to survive in the wilderness for an extended period.

A warden's first duty is to find out the nature of any threats to the community, then stay alive long enough to make sure his city is warned and can prepare.

If a dwarf can meet these criteria, whether through magic or might, he is welcomed among the deepwardens.

Unlike most dwarf NPCs, a deepwarden spends most of his time away from other dwarves and far from dwarf communities.

Many join with adventurers for a time as patrons or guides. Dwarfen lore is full of tales of deepwardens who saved a group of lost or imprisoned surface adventurers.

Adaptation: The deepwarden prestige class has many class features suitable for any class whose members spend a long time away from civilization yet still need to communicate with it.

Animal messenger, sending, and greater animal messenger would be appropriate class features for other prestige classes that focus on long-range reconnaissance, whether above the ground or below.

Hit Die: d12.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a deepwarden, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Climb 5 ranks, Heal 5 ranks, Jump 5 ranks,

Knowledge (dungeoneering) 5 ranks, Survival 5 ranks.

Feat: Endurance.

CLASS SKILLS

The deepwarden's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Handle Animal (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Speak Language (n/a), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the deepwarden.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Deepwardens are proficient with all types of simple and martial weapons, all types of armor, and shields (except tower shields).

Track: A deepwarden gains Track as a bonus feat.

Trap Sense (Ex): A deepwarden has an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, giving him a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps.

These bonuses increase by 1 at every three deepwarden levels thereafter (4th, 7th, and 10th).

Trap sense bonuses gained from multiple classes stack.

Stone Warden (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a deepwarden knows how to use his strengths to compensate for his weaknesses.

He adds his Constitution bonus to AC instead of his Dexterity, if the character's Constitution bonus is higher.

The deepwarden loses this bonus to his Armor Class whenever he would normally be denied his Dexterity bonus to AC.

In such a situation, the deepwarden would still be considered flat-footed.

Animal Messenger (Sp): From 3rd level on, a deepwarden can compel a Tiny animal to carry a message to his allies at a spot he designates.

This ability functions as the animal messenger spell (see page 198 of the Player's Handbook), with a caster level equal to the deepwarden's class level.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a deepwarden gains the ability to react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so.

He retains his Dexterity bonus (if any, or his Constitution bonus, if it's higher) to AC even if he is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

However, he still loses his Dexterity (or Constitution) bonus to AC if immobilized.

If a character gains uncanny dodge from a different class (a deepwarden with at least four levels of rogue, for example), he automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below) instead.

Stubborn Mind (Ex): Starting at 5th level, a deepwarden has a mental resistance to outside influences.

If a deepwarden with the stubborn mind ability is affected by an enchantment spell or effect and fails his saving throw, he can attempt it again 1 round later at the same DC. He gets only this one extra chance to succeed on his saving throw.

This ability also works against a mind flayer's mind blast attack.

Sending (Sp): Beginning at 6th level, a deepwarden can contact a particular creature with which he is familiar and send a short message of twenty-five words or less.

This ability functions as the sending spell (see page 275 of the Player's Handbook), with a caster level equal to the deepwarden's class level.

Swift Tracker (Ex): Beginning at 7th level, a deep warden can move at his normal speed while following tracks without taking the normal -5 penalty.

He takes only a -10 penalty (instead of the normal -20) when moving at up to twice normal speed while tracking.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): At 8th level and higher, a deepwarden can no longer be flanked; he can react to opponents on opposite sides of him as easily as he can react to a single attacker.

This defense denies a rogue the ability to sneak attack the deepwarden by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has deepwarden levels.

If a character already has uncanny dodge (see above) from a different class, the character automatically gains improved uncanny dodge instead, and the levels from the classes that grant uncanny dodge stack to determine the minimum level a rogue must be to flank the character.

Greater Animal Messenger (Sp): At 9th level, a deepwarden gains the greater animal messenger ability.

This functions as the animal messenger ability (see above), except the deepwarden can use an animal of up to Small size as his messenger.

DIVINE PRANKSTER

While many gnome clerics follow the teachings of Garl Glittergold, a few have such great devotion to the Prankster God that they stand apart from others among his clergy.

These individuals embrace Garl's methods of teaching through harmless object lessons and dedicate their lives to acting as his agents in the world.

While some wonder whether devotion to the Prankster God or a wicked sense of humor actually drives these self-titled "pranksters", none can deny the potent abilities they exercise in their quest for the perfect educational prank. Multiclass cleric/bards make up the majority of pranksters. Other classes sometimes follow this path, but only after serving among the clergy of Garl Glittergold's church for a time, learning how to minister to the spiritual needs of others.

NPC divine pranksters love to try their tricks on adventurers and other visitors to gnome communities. Seeing how a newcomer reacts to a prank is one of the best ways to test her mettle.

Those who react with rage or violence quickly find themselves unwelcome among the gnomes, who tend to dislike anyone who can't take a joke.

Those who appreciate the humor behind a prank—or who find a clever and humorous way to retaliate—can earn much respect from other divine pranksters and gnomes in general.

Adaptation: The divine prankster prestige class combines features of both the bard and the cleric, allowing a multiclass bard/cleric to be as effective as his single-class counterparts.

With slight changes, the class is suitable for nongnome PCs, especially clerics who worship deities of trickery or humor.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a divine prankster, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome.

Skills: Bluff 8 ranks, Perform (comedy) 8 ranks, Sleight of Hand 8 ranks.

Spells: Able to cast 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: The character must be a worshiper of Garl Glittergold.

CLASS SKILLS

The divine prankster's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Diplomacy (Cha), Escape Artist (Dex), Forgery (Int), Gather Information (Cha), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Sleight of Hand (Dex), and Spot (Wis). See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the divine prankster prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Divine pranksters gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each level, a divine prankster gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level.

He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If he had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a divine prankster, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Comedic Performance: Once per day per class level, a divine prankster can use his comedy to produce magical effects on those around him.

Each ability requires a minimum divine prankster level, and some require a minimum number of ranks in Perform (comedy) to qualify.

If a divine prankster has bard levels, he can add his bard levels to his divine prankster levels to determine the number of daily uses of his comedic performance.

Inspire Courage (Su): A divine prankster can use his comedic performance to inspire courage in his allies (including himself), bolstering them against fear and improving their combat abilities.

To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the prankster perform.

The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the prankster perform and for 5 rounds thereafter.

An affected ally receives a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

Inspire courage is a mind-affecting ability.

A divine prankster's ability to inspire courage doesn't normally improve with level.

However, if a divine prankster already has this ability from another class (such as from bard levels), add together his class levels from all classes that grant this ability and compare the total to Table 3-4: The Bard on page 27 of the Player's Handbook to determine the morale bonus granted by this ability.

For example, a 2nd-level bard/3rd-level cleric/6th-level divine prankster would grant a +2 morale bonus on the appropriate rolls.

Enrage Enemies (Su): A divine prankster of 5th level or higher with 13 or more ranks in Perform (comedy) can use his comedic talents to enrage one or more creatures.

Each creature to be enraged must be within 90 feet, able to see or hear the divine prankster, and able to pay attention to him.

The divine prankster must also be able to see the creature.

The distraction of a nearby combat or other dangers does not prevent the ability from working, but grants the creature a +4 bonus on its Will save to resist the effect.

A divine prankster can target one creature per three class levels with this ability.

To use the ability, a divine prankster makes a Perform (comedy) check.

His check result is the DC for each affected creature's Will save against the ability.

If a creature's saving throw succeeds, the divine prankster cannot attempt to enrage that creature again for 24 hours.

If its saving throw fails, the creature focuses its attention on the divine prankster, making melee attacks against him each round (or closing with the divine prankster if melee attacks are not yet possible).

If the creature can't attack or approach the divine prankster, it stands in place, screaming in futile anger.

An enraged foe gains a +2 morale bonus on its attack rolls and damage rolls against the divine prankster, but takes a -4 penalty to its AC while enraged.

The effect lasts as long as the divine prankster continues to perform and concentrate (up to a maximum of 1 round per divine prankster level).

If the creature is attacked or injured by the divine prankster or his allies, the effect ends (for that creature only).

Alternatively, an ally of the affected creature can spend a standard action to attempt to break it free of its rage; doing this grants the creature a new saving throw with a +2 bonus.

Enrage enemies is an enchantment (charm), mind-affecting ability.

Killing Joke (Su): A 10th-level divine prankster with 18 or more ranks in Perform (comedy) has learned the secret of the killing joke.

The divine prankster must concentrate and perform for 3 consecutive rounds to set up a killing joke.

He must be able to see his potential victim, and his potential victim must be able to hear and understand him for this period.

During the first round, the prankster's prattle seems only annoying and harmless.

In the second round, the target can attempt a Sense Motive check, opposed by the prankster's Perform (comedy) check, to recognize the potential danger of the act.

A target who stops up his ears or otherwise renders himself incapable of hearing the divine prankster (typically requiring a standard action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity) is immune to the effect.

After the third round of comedic performance, the victim instantly dies unless he succeeds on a Will save (DC 10 + the divine prankster's level + divine prankster's Cha modifier).

Killing joke is an enchantment (compulsion), language-dependent, mind-affecting ability.

Infuse Figment (Su): Beginning at 2nd level, a divine prankster can expend a turn or rebuke undead attempt to infuse one of his illusion (figment) spells with a boost of extra realism.

Doing this increases by 10 the Will save DC to recognize the figment as illusory.

The save DC boost remains in effect for 1 hour or until the figment's duration has elapsed, whichever comes first.

Disguise Spell (Ex): From 3rd level on, a divine prankster knows how to disguise the somatic component of his spellcasting.

He must still gesture to cast spells, but these gestures appear to have no relation to casting a spell.

This ability increases the Spellcraft check DC to identify the spell he is casting by 5, and if the Spellcraft check fails by 5 or more, the identifying character misidentifies the spell cast.

At 9th level and higher, a divine prankster also knows how to disguise the verbal component of his spellcasting.

He must still speak to cast spells, but he can work the verbal component of the spell to be cast into normal conversation or any other form of vocal communication.

This ability increases the Spellcraft check DC to identify the spell he is casting by 5, and if the Spellcraft check fails by 5 or more, the identifying character misidentifies the spell cast.

The divine prankster can use this ability in conjunction with his ability to disguise somatic components if he desires, thus increasing the Spellcraft check DC to identify one of his disguised spells by a total of 10.

Neither of these abilities makes a spell any less difficult to cast, nor do they eliminate the attacks of opportunity that spellcasting might provoke.

Zigzag (Ex): A divine prankster of 7th level or higher can deceive attackers into wasting their attacks.

Once per round, when the divine prankster takes an action that would provoke attacks of opportunity, he can attempt a Bluff check as a free action.

The divine prankster can use his Bluff check result as his AC against any attacks of opportunity incurred by his action.

EARTH DREAMER

Deep are the dreams of mountains, and the earth trembles with the power of their dreaming.

Earth dreamers move within these ancient dreams, attuning themselves to their power and mastering strange abilities over the earth.

Many other characters and creatures consider earth dreamers to be a strange lot, partly because these exotic spellcasters are liable to remain silent for years at a time, contemplating the power and beauty of the earth dream. Most earth dreamers are gnome druids or wizards, but spellcasters of every race have been known to pursue the power of the earth dream.

The dream dwarves (see page 88) number many earth dreamers among their race.

NPC earth dreamers are often the subject of a quest, with adventurers traveling to their remote shrines and lairs seeking wisdom and guidance.

When they stir from their communion with the earth, a dreamer makes a great guide to the underground world—provided you can keep up.

Adaptation: This class is earth-focused, suggesting that the earth dreamer class might have three counterparts that combine divination ability with affinity for the elements of fire, water, and air.

The prestige classes for the other three elements would replace the tremorsense and earth glide class features with other abilities related to their respective elements.

Looking at the special abilities of these elements' relevant elementals would be a good way to find such class features.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an earth dreamer, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 5 ranks, Spellcraft 10 ranks.

Feats: Earth Sense*.

Special: Able to cast 1st-level spells.

* New feat described in Chapter 6.

CLASS SKILLS

The earth dreamer's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions. Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the earth dreamer prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Earth dreamers gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each level, an earth dreamer gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If she had more than one spellcasting class before becoming an earth dreamer, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Earth Friend (Ex): An earth dreamer knows how to get along well with earth creatures.

Creatures with the earth subtype automatically react to an earth dreamer in a friendlier manner than they otherwise would; their initial attitude (see page 72 of the Player's Handbook) is improved by one step.

Earth Dream (Sp): By attuning herself to the earth dream, an earth dreamer of 2nd level or higher can pull knowledge from the mountains.

This ability works like the divination spell in many ways, allowing an earth dreamer to ask one question and receive a short, often cryptic, answer.

An earth dreamer's chance of receiving an answer is equal to 70% + 2% per class level, and the dream only reveals correct answers.

The earth dream ability can be used only to answer questions that are connected to the mountains in some way.

In general, the dreamer can get answers to questions about creatures, objects, and locations within 50 miles of a mountain, including underground or hidden locations.

As with the augury and divination spells, multiple uses of this ability regarding the same topic by the same earth dreamer use the same dice result and reveal the same answer each time.

Using this ability takes 10 minutes, and the earth dreamer can use it once per day.

Lesser Tremorsense (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, an earth dreamer is so in tune with the earth that she gains the tremorsense ability (see page 316 of the Monster Manual) with a range of 10 feet.

Her Earth Sense feat (see Chapter 6: Character Options) still functions beyond that range, but she can now sense and pinpoint foes within 10 feet without an action.

Earth Sight (Su): An earth dreamer of 4th level or higher can see through stone, dirt, or almost any other sort of earth except metal to a range of 30 feet, as easily as if the substance weren't there.

The earth dreamer can still see the stone or earth as a ghostly outline, so she can avoid walking into walls and can otherwise function normally.

This ability does not give an earth dreamer any special ability to see in darkness or into unlit areas.

Using this ability is a standard action.

Each use lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the earth dreamer's Con modifier.

Earth Glide (Su): A 5th-level earth dreamer can move through earth like an earth elemental, gliding through stone, dirt, or almost any other sort of earth except metal as easily as a fish swims through water.

This burrowing leaves behind no tunnel or hole, nor does it create any ripple or other signs of its presence.

A move earth spell cast on an area containing an earth gliding earth dreamer flings the dreamer back 30 feet, stunning her for 1 round unless she succeeds on a DC 15 Fortitude save.

Using this ability is a standard action.

Each use lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + the earth dreamer's Con modifier.

GOLIATH LIBERATOR

Giants—especially frost and hill giants—sometimes kidnap and enslave goliaths, putting them to work performing menial labor in their mines or camps.

Particularly evil giants might even capture goliaths for the cook-pot or the sacrificial altar.

When goliaths don't return to camp, the entire tribe mobilizes to find them.

If the tribe is fortunate, it has one or more goliath liberators among its members to lead the rescue.

Goliath liberators are experts at infiltrating giant dwellings, freeing the captives within, then exacting revenge on the giants while the freed goliaths escape.

Many are their tribe's best soldiers and hunters, and they have honed their combat techniques against giants through bitter experience.

Fully half of all goliath liberators have spent time in the chains of giants.

Barbarians, rangers, and rogues are the classes most likely to have the combination of stealth and fighting prowess necessary to become a goliath liberator.

A few fighters and druids take a level or two of the prestige class as well.

When a goliath liberator is on the trail of captured goliaths, she brooks no opposition or delay, but she's often willing to enlist whatever allies happen to be available.

NPC goliath liberators sometimes strike up deals with adventurers, lending their strength to an assault on a giant fortress as long as they can free any goliath prisoners in the process.

If giants ever capture the PCs, their best hope for rescue might take the mottled, musclebound form of a goliath liberator.

Adaptation: While this prestige class is specific to goliaths, it can be converted into a different giant-fighting class with little difficulty.

If you do so, balance giant-specific class features (such as favored enemy) with class features that are useful against giants but more broadly applicable (such as avoid thrown weapons).

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a goliath liberator, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Goliath.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks.

Feats: Track.

Special: The character must have participated in the successful rescue of captives held by giants, or must have been imprisoned by giants and escaped.

CLASS SKILLS

The goliath liberator's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Heal (Wis), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the goliath liberator prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Goliath liberators gain proficiency with martial weapons and with light and medium armor.

Favored Enemy (Giant) (Ex): A goliath liberator has giants as a favored enemy.

Due to her extensive study of giants and training in the proper techniques for combating such creatures, the liberator gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against giants.

Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

These bonuses stack with those gained from the favored enemy (giants) class feature of other classes (such as ranger), but this ability does not increase those classes' other favored enemy bonuses.

For instance, if a 5th-level ranger/1st-level goliath liberator has already selected giants as one of her ranger favored enemies, this +2 bonus would stack with the favored enemy (giants) bonus she already had.

It would not increase the character's favored enemy bonuses against other types of creatures.

This bonus increases to +4 when the liberator reaches 5th level.

Avoid Thrown Weapons (Ex): A goliath liberator of 2nd level or higher is adept at dodging rocks thrown by giants, and by extension has learned to avoid other thrown weapons.

She has a +2 dodge bonus to her AC against thrown weapons.

Equal Footing (Ex): The bigger they are, the harder a goliath liberator can make them fall.

At 3rd level, a goliath liberator gains Improved Trip as a bonus feat, even if she does not meet the prerequisites.

In addition, when making a trip attack against a creature at least one size category larger than she is, the goliath liberator gains an additional +4 bonus on her Strength check made to trip the opponent.

Avoid Reach (Ex): At 4th level and higher, a goliath liberator knows how to duck under and around the blows of even the longest-limbed giant.

This ability grants the liberator a +2 dodge bonus to AC against melee attacks made by creatures that are not adjacent to her.

TABLE 5-8: THE GOLIATH LIBERATOR

1st	+1	+2	+0	+0	Favored enemy (giants) +2
2nd	+2	+3	+0	+0	Avoid thrown weapons
3rd	+3	+3	+1	+1	Improved trip
4th	+4	+4	+1	+1	Avoid reach

IRON MIND

Elite warriors trained to resist mental compulsions of all kinds, members of the iron mind prestige class defend dwarf and gnome kingdoms against intrusions by mind flayers, dark elf enchanters, and the like.

An iron mind becomes one with her armor, and its presence protects her from mental assault as thoroughly as it wards against physical blows.

Iron minds combine the protection and assurance that their armor provides with rigorous training to overcome physical injury through mental power into one seamless fighting technique.

Not content to simply play a defensive role, iron minds train fiercely for confrontations against mind-controlling foes.

They then seek out those foes before the threat to their homelands grows too great.

Too few to march openly against mind flayer cities, the iron minds instead concentrate their efforts against powerful solitary foes: illithid scouts and envoys, evil fey, and others capable of mind control.

Dwarf psychic warriors are by far the most likely individuals to follow the path of the iron mind, but other races or classes occasionally dedicate themselves to the philosophy.

Prospective iron minds from other races and classes often multiclass before beginning their training in the prestige class, taking levels in ranger and wilder more frequently than other class levels.

Wherever mind flayers or other such foes menace dwarf communities, iron minds are there to bolster the mental defenses of their compatriots.

Iron minds try to blend in among the dwarves they're with, then surprise attackers by revealing their formidable psionic powers at a crucial moment.

Adaptation: This prestige class is more difficult to deconstruct and modify than others because it draws on so many disparate themes: enmity toward mind controllers, the dwarven desire for collective defense, and the power of psionics.

Changing any one of these elements results in a different class.

For example, the drow might have a prestige class designed for protection against mind flayers, but it would eliminate the Armor Proficiency (heavy) requirement and replace the damage reduction class feature (and perhaps the lend resolve class feature) with abilities more evocative of the drow, such as better spell resistance or new spell-like abilities.

Hit Die: d10.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become an iron mind, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Invest Armor*, Iron Will.

Powers: Able to manifest one 1st-level psionic power.

* New feat described in Chapter 6.

CLASS SKILLS

The iron mind's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Autohypnosis* (Wis), Climb (Str), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), Knowledge (psionics)* (Int), Profession (Wis), Psicraft* (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Swim (Str).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

* A psionic skill described in Chapter 3 of the Expanded Psionics Handbook.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the iron mind prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Iron minds gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Powers Known: At every level except 1st and 6th, an iron mind gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if she had also gained a level in whatever manifesting class she belonged to before she added the prestige class.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (bonus feats, metapsionic or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on). This essentially means that she adds the level of iron mind to the level of whatever manifesting class the character has, then determines power points per day, powers known, and manifest level accordingly.

If a character had more than one manifesting class before she became an iron mind, she must decide to which class she adds the new level of iron mind for the purpose of determining power points per day, powers known, and manifester level.

Armored Mind (Su): An iron mind trains extensively in her armor, learning to trust its protective qualities implicitly. An iron mind wearing heavy armor can expend her psionic focus to add a morale bonus equal to the armor bonus from her armor (not including any enhancement bonus) to a single Will save.

Using armored mind is an immediate action (see the Swift and Immediate Actions sidebar, page 136).

The iron mind must decide whether or not to use this ability before rolling the saving throw.

An iron mind can use this ability once per day at 1st level, twice per day at 4th level, three times per day at 7th level, and four times per day at 10th level.

Damage Reduction (Ex): When psionically focused and wearing heavy armor, an iron mind of 2nd level or higher gains damage reduction 1/—.

This damage reduction stacks with damage reduction of the same sort (such as that of a barbarian), but not with other types.

An iron mind's damage reduction improves by 1 point every three levels above 2nd (to 2/— at 5th level and 3/— at 8th).

Mind Over Body (Ex): An iron mind trains to ignore pain, focus her will, and overcome her body's natural responses through sheer willpower.

Once per day, an iron mind of 3rd level or higher can use her Will save modifier in place of her Fortitude or Reflex save modifier.

The save is still treated as a Fortitude or Reflex save, and the result determined as normal for such a saving throw.

For example, if an iron mind had evasion and used mind over body to apply her Will save modifier to a Reflex save against a fireball in place of her normal Reflex save modifier, she would take no damage on a successful save, as normal for evasion.

An iron mind can use this ability once per day at 3rd level, twice per day at 6th level, and three times per day at 9th level.

Using mind over body is an immediate action (see the Swift and Immediate Actions sidebar, page 136).

The iron mind must decide whether or not to use this ability before rolling the saving throw.

Mettle of Will (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, an iron mind's mental prowess allows her to shrug off many effects that would otherwise harm her.

If she makes a successful Will saving throw against any spell or special ability that would normally be reduced by a successful save, she suffers no effect from the attack.

This includes any effect with a saving throw entry of "Will half" or "Will partial", as well as any other attack that applies a lessened effect with a successful Will saving throw.

This ability applies only when the iron mind wears heavy armor.

Lend Resolve (Ex): At 8th level and higher, an iron mind can expend her psionic focus to grant an ally within 30 feet a bonus to his Will save equal to the iron mind's class level. The iron mind must be able to see the ally in question.

Using lend resolve is an immediate action (see the Swift and Immediate Actions sidebar, page 136).

The iron mind must decide whether or not to use this ability before the ally rolls the saving throw.

Barbed Mind (Su): Any time a 10th-level iron mind succeeds on a Will saving throw against a mind-affecting effect, the creature that caused her to attempt the saving throw takes 1d6 points of nonlethal damage and 1 point of Wisdom damage from contacting the character's mind.

This ability only applies when the iron mind wears heavy armor.

PEREGRINE RUNNER

While goliath tribes are largely self-sufficient, they sometimes need to get a message to another tribe quickly, often because they're under attack or in some other danger. When such a need arises, the goliaths send an elite, fleet-of-foot warrior known as a peregrine runner.

Peregrine runners also serve as long-range scouts for their tribe, checking a far-off valley to see whether game is plentiful before the entire tribe breaks camp and travels there.

When a goliath tribe needs to send an envoy to lowlanders far below their lofty camps, it often sends a peregrine runner.

Peregrine runners are among the fastest land travelers in the mountains, able to scale the highest peaks to deliver a message or scout the lands beyond.

Because they travel so much, peregrine runners tend to be more worldly than the average goliath and fit in well with those not of their tribe (although their size makes it difficult for any goliaths to "blend in" with most humanoids).

A wide array of characters find the life of a peregrine runner appealing, with rogues and barbarians represented slightly more than other classes.

The prestige class is a natural for bards adept at social interaction, but many bards find the dawns caller class more attractive.

If you see a goliath in tribal garb visiting a human or dwarf city—or anywhere out of the mountains—you're probably looking at a peregrine runner.

Peregrine runners can also be found scouting new mountain territory for their tribe, so they're often present in the mountains even when other goliaths are not.

Adaptation: This class, while ostensibly specific to goliaths, could be adapted for any prestige class that focuses on mountain travel.

If you adapt it, be sure to balance abilities useful only in the mountains (such as mountain stride) with abilities gained in the mountains but useful elsewhere (such as fast movement).

Peregrine runners act as envoys of their tribes, so there's a diplomatic element to this class that might not be appropriate for other mountain-based races or classes.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a peregrine runner, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Goliath.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Climb 9 ranks, Diplomacy 4 ranks, Handle Animal 4 ranks, Jump 9 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Run.

CLASS SKILLS

The peregrine runner's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Bluff (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Diplomacy (Cha), Gather Information (Cha), Hide (Dex), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Search (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), Speak Language (n/a), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Tumble (Dex), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the peregrine runner prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Peregrine runners gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Mountain Stride (Ex): A peregrine runner can move through scree and dense rubble at his normal speed.

He can also move up steep slopes and stairs at his normal speed.

See pages 89–91 of the Dungeon Master's Guide for descriptions of terrain types.

Peregrine Companion (Ex): A peregrine runner gains an animal companion: the peregrine falcon that lends its name to the prestige class.

This animal is a loyal companion that accompanies the peregrine runner on his adventures as appropriate.

A peregrine falcon uses the statistics of a hawk (found on page 273 of the Monster Manual).

This ability functions like a druid's animal companion, except that the peregrine runner doesn't get a choice of animal.

If a character already has a peregrine falcon animal companion from another class, the levels of that class stack with his peregrine runner class levels to determine the falcon's power and abilities according to the animal companion table on page 36 of the Player's Handbook.

If a peregrine runner already has an animal companion other than a peregrine falcon from another class, the levels don't stack, and the falcon becomes a second animal companion.

Skirmish (Ex): A peregrine runner of 2nd level or higher relies on mobility to deal extra damage and improve his defense.

The character deals an extra 1d6 points of damage on all attacks he makes during any round in which he moves at least 10 feet.

The extra damage applies only to attacks taken during the peregrine runner's turn.

This extra damage increases by 1d6 for every four levels gained above 2nd (2d6 at 6th, 3d6 at 10th, and so forth).

The extra damage only applies against living creatures that have a discernible anatomy.

Undead, constructs, oozes, plants, incorporeal creatures, and creatures immune to extra damage from critical hits are not vulnerable to this additional damage.

The peregrine runner must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

Peregrine runners can apply this additional damage to ranged attacks made while skirmishing, but only if the target is within 30 feet.

At 4th level, a runner also gains a +1 competence bonus to AC during any round in which he moves at least 10 feet.

The bonus applies as soon as the peregrine runner has moved 10 feet, and lasts until the start of his next turn.

This bonus improves to +2 at 8th level.

A peregrine runner loses this ability when wearing medium or heavy armor or when carrying a medium or heavy load.

If he gains the skirmish ability from another class, the bonuses stack.

Great Stamina (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a peregrine runner has conditioned his body for maximum stamina. The character suffers none of the effects of fatigue—except that when he is exhausted, the peregrine runner becomes fatigued.

Slow Fall (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a peregrine runner within arm's reach of a wall can use it to slow his descent. When first using this ability, he takes damage as if the fall were 20 feet shorter than it actually is.

A peregrine runner's ability to slow his fall (that is, to reduce the effective distance of the fall when next to a wall) improves with his peregrine runner level until at 9th level he can use a nearby wall to slow his descent and reduce the effective distance of his fall by 50 feet.

Climb Speed: Beginning at 4th level, a peregrine runner has a preternatural ability to climb, giving him a climb speed of 20 feet.

This ability also gives the peregrine runner a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks.

He can always take 10 on Climb checks, even when distracted or threatened.

At 8th level and higher, a peregrine runner has a climb speed of 40 feet.

Fast Movement (Ex): Starting at 5th level, a peregrine runner's land speed is faster than the norm for his race by 10 feet.

This benefit applies only when he is wearing no armor or light armor and not carrying a medium or heavy load.

If a peregrine runner gains fast movement from another class, such as barbarian or monk, the bonuses to speed stack.

Inexhaustible Stamina (Ex): At 9th level and higher, a peregrine runner is a paragon of fitness, able to run and climb ceaselessly. He has immunity to all fatigue and exhaustion effects.

RUNESMITH

While nearly any member of dwarf society can learn a little bit of arcane magic, becoming a runesmith requires a whole different level of dedication.

Runesmiths are respected members of dwarf society, always in high demand before any sort of athletic competition, expedition, or battle.

A runesmith has learned to harness the power of runes and can fling fireballs and other staple arcane spells even while encased in full plate armor.

As his power increases, he can inscribe runes that even nonspellcasters can use.

At the height of his powers, he can use himself as the surface for a powerful, permanent rune.

While becoming a runesmith is difficult, many wizards and sorcerers flock to the class to broaden their understanding of magic—and get the chance to cast spells in armor without an arcane spell failure chance.

Most dwarves take a single level in fighter to get the necessary armor proficiencies, but others take the Armor Proficiency (heavy) feat because they're unwilling to give up even one level of spellcasting.

While the practice is primarily dwarven in origin, gnomes and goliaths both have enough familiarity with runes—and good enough relations with the dwarves—to find teachers for the art.

While many runesmiths are accomplished artisans and stonemasons, NPC runesmiths are often found with battleaxes in hand, not stone chisels.

Because they can wear heavy armor—often armor they've made themselves—runesmiths make valuable additions to a unit of dwarf warriors, using their offensive spells like artillery to soften up the enemy before the dwarves advance.

Adaptation: The runesmith class offers a benefit compelling to wizards and sorcerers—the chance to wear heavy armor—but uses the Armor Proficiency (heavy) requirement as a balancing factor.

The flavor of the class is strongly dwarven, and the ability to wear heavy armor combines well with the special dwarf movement rules.

If you create a non dwarven version of this class, make the entry requirements some what tougher and develop a strong story to support these rune-carving arcanists.

Hit Die: d6.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a runesmith, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Dwarf.

Skills: Concentration 5 ranks, Craft (stoneworking) 8 ranks.

Feats: Armor Proficiency (heavy), Scribe Scroll.

Spells: Able to cast 1st-level arcane spells.

CLASS SKILLS

The runesmith's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), and Spellcraft (Int).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are features of the runesmith prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Runesmiths gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each level, a runesmith gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if he had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which he belonged before adding the prestige class level. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If he had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a runesmith, he must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Rune Magic (Ex): A runesmith learns to prepare his arcane spells as runes inscribed on solid objects (usually small tablets of stone, but other objects are possible).

He prepares spells as normal, except that instead of readying the spells in his mind, he readies them in the form of runes.

Preparing daily spells takes the same amount of time as normal preparation and requires the same amount of rest beforehand.

A runesmith can leave spell slots unprepared to scribe runes at a later time, just as a wizard can leave spell slots unprepared and fill them later.

A runesmith who casts a spell prepared in rune form can cast it with out any somatic component.

However, all spells cast from rune form automatically have a material component (the rune itself).

In casting the spell, the rune is erased from the tablet, just as a spell cast normally by a wizard is erased from his mind.

A runesmith cannot get around the runic material component by means of an ability or feat such as Eschew Materials, although he can use such feats and abilities to waive any other material components for a spell he prepares in rune form, subject to the limitations of the ability.

In all other ways, spells prepared in rune form are treated identically to spells prepared in the normal method.

A runesmith can still prepare and cast his spells in the regular fashion if he so desires, subject to the normal arcane spell failure chances for any armor worn.

Stonecraft Expertise (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, a runesmith gains a bonus equal to his class level on Appraise and Craft checks related to objects made of stone.

Share Runes (Ex): At 3rd level and higher, a runesmith can prepare a limited number of rune-form arcane spells such that they can be activated (cast) by any character.

The spell's casting time remains the same, and it is just as effective as a spell cast by the runesmith himself.

The spell's level is increased by two, much as if a metamagic feat had been applied to it.

For example, a 5th-level wizard/4th-level runesmith could prepare a shared rune of the fly spell.

This rune would be treated as a 5th-level spell, would require a standard action to cast, and would function as if he had cast the spell himself for the purpose of duration, caster level, and the like.

A runesmith can prepare a maximum number of shareable runes each day equal to his Constitution modifier (minimum 1).

Each time this ability is used to prepare a sharable rune, that rune takes up one of the runesmith's available spell slots for that day.

So in the example above, the fly rune prepared by the runesmith would take up one of his 5th-level spell slots.

Permanent Rune (Ex): A 5th-level runesmith knows the secret of inscribing a permanent rune of a single chosen spell into his flesh.

To inscribe a permanent rune, a runesmith must permanently sacrifice an arcane spell slot of one level higher than the spell to be inscribed as a permanent rune, and spend 24 hours inscribing the rune.

If the spell has a costly material component, he must expend resources equal to 20 times the gp cost of the material component.

If it has a costly focus, he must expend resources equal to the cost of the focus.

If the spell has an XP cost, he must spend XP as if he had cast the spell normally.

Once he has inscribed a spell as a permanent rune, a runesmith can activate the chosen spell as a spell-like ability (using his arcane caster level as the caster level) twice per day.

SHADOWCRAFT MAGE

Illusionist is one of the most popular spellcasting classes among gnomes due to their natural affinity for illusions. Some gnomes have an even greater affinity for illusions than the average representative of their race, resulting in the prestige class known as the shadowcraft mage.

Gnome society has a great call for individuals who can make one thing look like another for the purpose of decorating, costuming, or playing pranks on people. Shadowcraft mages have a more practical attitude about illusion and focus on the daily application of their powers. Wizards and sorcerers are natural fits for the shadowcraft mage prestige class.

Bards also find it a natural extension of their magical leanings, making for diverse backgrounds among those with this profession.

In general, an NPC shadowcraft mage only reveals herself when she wants to be found—even then, she rarely shows her true form.

Dealing with a shadowcraft mage means peering through layer after layer of misdirection and deception.

Among the most powerful shadowcraft mages, illusion becomes an effective substitute for reality, with shadowcraft conjurations and evocations functioning almost as well as their standard counterparts.

Adaptation: A cabal of nongnome illusionists could certainly use this prestige class; simply replace the racial requirement with a requirement that shadowcraft mages be members of the cabal.

The requirement for a 4th-level spell from the shadow subschool restricts this class to arcane spellcasters.

If not for that requirement, clerics with the Trickery domain could qualify more easily than wizards and sorcerers.

Hit Die: d4.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a shadowcraft mage, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Gnome.

Skills: Bluff 4 ranks, Hide 4 ranks.

Feats: Spell Focus (illusion).

Spells: Able to cast at least three illusion spells, including at least one shadow spell of 4th level or higher.

CLASS SKILLS

The shadowcraft mage's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Bluff (Cha), Concentration (Con), Disguise (Cha), Hide (Dex), Knowledge (arcana) (Int), Move Silently (Dex), Perform (Cha), Search (Int), Spellcraft (Int), and Spot (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the shadowcraft mage prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Shadowcraft mages gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each level, a shadowcraft mage gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If she had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a shadowcraft mage, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Cloak of Shadow (Su): A shadowcraft mage can cloak her form in shifting shadows.

This ability provides her with a variable amount of concealment depending on her level.

While her cloak of shadow is active, attacks against a shadowcraft mage have a miss chance equal to 15% + 5% per class level (to a maximum of 40% at 5th level).

Darkvision and low-light vision offer no help in piercing the cloak of shadow, although any creature that can see in magical darkness can ignore the miss chance, as can a creature with true seeing.

A shadowcraft mage can dismiss or resume this effect as a free action.

While her cloak of shadow is active, a shadowcraft mage can make Hide checks as if she had concealment.

Cloak of shadow doesn't function in daylight, and it is the equivalent of a 3rd-level darkness effect for the purpose of interacting with light spells.

Silent Illusion (Ex): After a shadowcraft mage reaches 2nd level, all spells from the illusion school that she casts no longer require a verbal component, as if the Silent Spell feat had been applied to them.

The levels and casting times of these illusion spells don't change, however.

If a shadowcraft mage casts illusion spells that can't be affected by the Silent Spell feat (for instance, if the character casts bard spells), this ability has no effect on those spells.

Shadow Illusion (Su): Beginning at 3rd level, a shadowcraft mage is able to infuse some of her figments (see the list below) with material from the Plane of Shadow, making them partially real.

The subschool of these spells changes from figment to shadow.

A shadowcraft mage can use the altered spell to mimic any sorcerer or wizard conjuration (summoning), conjuration (creation), or evocation spell at least one level lower than the illusion spell.

The altered spell functions identically to the shadow conjuration or shadow evocation spell, except that the spell's strength equals 10% per level of the figment spell used.

For example, a shadowcraft mage who uses silent image to create an acid splash would deal 10% of the normal damage to a creature that succeeds on its Will save to disbelieve the shadow.

If she used programmed image to mimic summon monster V, the creature would have 60% of the hit points of a normal creature of its kind, and its damage would be 60% normal against a creature that succeeds on its Will save to disbelieve.

A shadowcraft mage can apply shadow illusion to any of the following figment spells: silent image, minor image, major image, persistent image, and programmed image.

Extended Illusion (Ex): After a shadowcraft mage reaches 4th level, the duration of any illusion spell she casts or any spell-like ability from the illusion school that she uses is doubled, as if the Extend Spell feat had been applied to it. The levels and casting times of these spells and spell-like abilities don't change, however.

This ability stacks with the effect of the Extend Spell feat, which still changes the spell's effective level.

Powerful Shadow Magic (Su): When a shadowcraft mage reaches 5th level, the strength of the effects created by her shadow conjuration, shadow evocation, greater shadow conjuration, greater shadow evocation, and shades spells increases by 20%.

That is, these spells are an additional 20% likely to affect disbelieving creatures and deal 20% more damage.

This bonus also applies to figment spells transformed into shadow spells via the shadow illusion power (see above).

STONEBLESSSED

A stoneblessed bonds to the stone of the mountains, blending into a dwarf, gnome, or goliath community and making it her home.

A stoneblessed character usually lives with her chosen race for several years, learning customs and building solid bonds of friendship and trust.

At the end of this period, the potential stoneblessed is invited into the tribe, clan, or community and is forever after considered a member of her chosen people.

Once this ceremony is finished, the members of the adopted community expect the stoneblessed to put her interests above even those of the individual's native race—they consider their home to be the stoneblessed's home, and they expect the stoneblessed to feel the same.

Although members of other races comprise the vast majority of the stoneblessed, dwarves, gnomes, and goliaths occasionally become stoneblessed as well.

An individual usually makes this choice because she feels strongly drawn to one of the other races of stone.

For example, those goliaths brave enough to venture into the deep caverns to trade with dwarves occasionally decide to stay; after a few years, they might join the dwarf community permanently.

An NPC stoneblessed is usually easy to spot because she sticks out like a sore thumb.

The centaur living in the extra-large gnome burrow, the exiled drow who teaches magic to the dwarves, and the hill giant towering above even the goliaths—all are obviously not like their fellows.

Yet no matter how odd they appear, stoneblessed are fully integrated into their adopted cultures.

In fact, many stoneblessed are more mindful of their adopted cultural traditions than native members of a community because they consciously try to be good “gnomes”, “dwarves”, or “goliaths”.

Adaptation: This prestige class—or one like it that you make yourself—is a way to give racial abilities to creatures not of that race.

The class offers racial abilities based on specialized training or cultural immersion first, saving spell-like abilities and more obviously magical or biological abilities for the 3rd (and highest) level of the prestige class.

If you're creating a prestige class tied to a particularly powerful race, you might need more than three levels to effectively balance powerful racial abilities.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stoneblessed, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Creature Type: Giant, humanoid, or monstrous humanoid.

Skills: Appraise 2 ranks, Craft (stoneworking) 5 ranks.

Special: The character must be able to speak Dwarven, Gnome, or Goliath (must match the language of the chosen race), as well as Terran.

Special: The character must be invited to become a stoneblessed by a member of the chosen race.

Fulfilling this requirement usually entails living with the race in question for several years, although it might (at the DM's discretion) also involve the completion of a single great task.

CLASS SKILLS

The stoneblessed's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Jump (Str), and Profession (Wis).

Each stoneblessed character gains additional class skills based on the race to which she forms a bond (see stonebond, below).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 2 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stoneblessed prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stoneblessed gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Stonebond (Ex): A stoneblessed must choose one race of stone with which to bond: dwarf, gnome, or goliath.

This choice must be the same race that invited the stoneblessed to become one of them (see Requirements, above).

Depending on her choice, a stoneblessed gains certain abilities.

Dwarf: A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed adds Appraise (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (architecture and engineering) (Int), and Knowledge (dungeoneering) (Int) to her list of stoneblessed class skills.

A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed gains a +2 bonus on Appraise and Craft checks related to stone or metal.

Gnome: A gnome-bonded stoneblessed adds Bluff (Cha), Hide (Dex), Listen (Wis), Perform (Cha), and Spellcraft (Int) to her list of stoneblessed class skills.

A gnome-bonded stoneblessed gains a +2 bonus on Listen and Craft (alchemy) checks.

Goliath: A goliath-bonded stoneblessed adds Balance (Dex), Diplomacy (Cha), Knowledge (geography) (Int), Sense Motive (Wis), and Survival (Wis) to her list of stoneblessed class skills.

A goliath-bonded stoneblessed gains a +2 bonus on Sense Motive checks and can engage in accelerated climbing (climbing half her speed as a move action) without suffering the –5 penalty on the Climb check.

Racial Battle Technique (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, a stoneblessed gains a +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against monsters of the giant type.

In addition, she gains another ability based on her chosen race: A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed gains a +1 bonus on attack rolls against orcs and goblinoids.

A gnome-bonded stoneblessed gains a +1 bonus on attack rolls against kobolds and goblinoids.

A goliath-bonded stoneblessed gains a +1 bonus on attack rolls against giants.

Stoneborn (Ex): At 3rd level, a stoneblessed completes the bond with her chosen race.

The stoneblessed gains a permanent +2 increase to her Constitution score.

In addition, for all effects related to race, a stoneblessed is considered a member of the race to which she is bonded.

For example, dwarf-bonded stoneblessed are just as vulnerable to effects and abilities that affect dwarves as actual dwarves are (such as a ranger's favored enemy ability), and they can use magic items that are usable only by dwarves.

The stoneblessed meets any racial prerequisite for prestige classes and feats as if she were a member of her bonded race.

Finally, the stoneblessed gets an ability based on her type of racial bond:

Stonecunning (Ex): A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed gains a +2 bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework. Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework.

A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if she were actively searching, and a dwarf-bonded stoneblessed can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can.

A dwarf-bonded stoneblessed can also intuit depth, sensing her approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up.

Speak with Animals (Sp): Once per day, a gnome-bonded stoneblessed can use Speak with Animals, as the spell cast by a 1st-level druid.

Toughness: A goliath-bonded stoneblessed emulates the resilience of the goliath tribesfolk and gains Toughness as a bonus feat.

BEHIND THE CURTAIN: THE STONEBLESSED PRESTIGE CLASS

The requirements for this prestige class are deliberately set lower than normal for a prestige class. A character can qualify for this class as early as 2nd level, take her 3rd character level in

STONEDEATH ASSASSIN

For as long as the two ancient races have existed, dwarves and goblins have fought.

They share an affinity for underground living, but dwarves live for honor and craft, while goblins and their kin practice brutality and spread strife.

Through the many wars that the two races have waged against one another, their stone citadels and underground strongholds have given the stout and honorable dwarves a tremendous advantage.

Although the goblinoids easily outnumber the dwarves, their swarming hordes cannot overcome strong stone walls and carefully trapped corridors.

Through the years, the smartest and cruelest among the goblinkin began to train in earnest to overcome these strongholds, striving to turn the dwarves' affinity for stone into a weakness rather than a strength.

The best of these creatures developed their own affinity with stone, and they began to infiltrate dwarf strongholds, disarming traps, weakening gates, and assassinating dwarf leaders just as they were trying to organize their people to repel a goblin invasion.

Most stonedeath assassins are hobgoblin rogues or rangers, but bugbears and even exceptional goblins have been known to undertake stonedeath training.

NPC stonedeath assassins are usually found sneaking their way through dwarven defenses—if they're found at all. Often they merely leave bearded corpses in their wake. Even when they're not on missions for their goblinoid masters, stonedeath assassins like to hunt dwarves for sport, dwarven mining operations being a favorite hunting ground.

A stone death assassin sometimes lurks in the tunnels of a dwarven mine for days, picking off miners one by one until the dwarves either retreat or form warbands to chase the assassin down.

Adaptation: The stonedeath assassin prestige class combines traditional rogue and assassin abilities with ones related to the likely environment the class will hunt in.

You could create a similar "poison thorn assassin" class, for example, that was designed for elves, not goblinoids.

You would replace meld into stone, stoneskulk, and corrupt stone with forestskulk, tree shape, and perhaps tree stride or blight.

Rather than stonedeath strike as a 5th-level ability, perhaps a poison thorn assassin can exude its own poison periodically for a particularly deadly attack.

Hit Die: d6.

stonedeath, and finish progressing through the class by the time she reaches 5th level. This "early in, early out" feature makes it possible for a stonedeath to pursue a dwarf-, gnome-, or goliath-oriented prestige class at a fairly low level, rather than forcing such a character to wait for an unreasonably long time.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stonedeath assassin, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Creature Type: Goblinoid subtype.

Base Attack Bonus: +3.

Skills: Hide 8 ranks, Move Silently 8 ranks.

CLASS SKILLS

The stonedeath assassin's class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Balance (Dex), Climb (Str), Decipher Script (Int), Disable Device (Int), Escape Artist (Dex), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Cha), Jump (Str), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Open Lock (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Survival (Wis), Swim (Str), and Use Rope (Dex).

See Chapter 4 of the Player's Handbook for skill descriptions.
Skill Points at Each Level: 6 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stonedeath assassin prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stonedeath assassins gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Meld into Stone (Sp): In perfecting their skills to elude pursuit within the halls of a dwarf stronghold, stonedeath assassins develop a near mystical ability to meld with stone surfaces for brief periods.

A stonedeath assassins can use meld into stone as the spell of the same name cast by a cleric of a level equal to the stonedeath assassin's class level.

A stonedeath assassin can use this ability once per day per class level.

Trapfinding (Ex): A stonedeath assassin can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20.

Finding a nonmagical trap has a DC of at least 20, or higher if it is well hidden.

Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A stonedeath assassin can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps.

A magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A stonedeath assassin who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with his party) without disarming it.

Sneak Attack: If a stone death assassin of 2nd level or higher can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from his attack, he can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Basically, the stonedeath assassin's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the stonedeath assassin flanks his target.

This extra damage is 1d6 at 2nd level, and it increases to 2d6 at 4th level.

Should the stonedeath assassin score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

(See Table 8–5: Attack Roll Modifiers and Table 8–6: Armor Class Modifiers, page 151 of the Player's Handbook, for combat situations in which the stonedeath assassin flanks an opponent or the opponent loses his Dexterity bonus to AC).

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

A stonedeath assassin can't strike with deadly accuracy from beyond that range.

With a sap (blackjack) or an unarmed strike, a stonedeath assassin can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage.

He cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty, because he must make optional use of his weapon to execute a sneak attack.

(See Nonlethal Damage, page 146 of the Player's Handbook).

A stonedeath assassin can sneak attack only living creatures that have a discernible anatomy—undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack.

Any creature that is immune to extra damage from critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks.

The stonedeath assassin must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot.

A stonedeath assassin cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment (see page 152 of the Player's Handbook) or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

Stoneskulk (Ex): At 2nd level, a stonedeath assassin learns subtle tricks for moving and blending with stone, especially in caverns and worked stone corridors.

When underground and touching a stone surface, the character can use the Hide skill even if the terrain doesn't grant cover or concealment.

Corrupt Stone (Su): More than simple assassins, the disciples of this class turn their deep understanding and devoted training against the stone that their dwarf enemies love so much.

Starting at 3rd level, a stonedeath assassin can weaken and corrupt objects of stone and creatures of earth with a simple touch.

With a successful melee touch attack, a stonedeath assassin can deal 3d6 points of damage to a stone object or a creature with the earth subtype.

This damage ignores the hardness of such an object or overcomes the natural damage reduction of such a creature. This damage increases to 4d6 points at 4th level and 5d6 points at 5th level.

A stonedeath assassin can use this ability once per round, up to a maximum number of times per day equal to his class level.

Stonedeath Strike (Su): If a 5th-level stone death assassin studies his victim for 3 rounds and then makes a sneak attack with a melee weapon that successfully deals damage, the sneak attack has the additional effect of petrifying the target.

While studying the victim, the stonedeath assassin can undertake other actions so long as his attention stays focused on the target, the target does not detect the stonedeath assassin or recognize him as an enemy, and both remain in contact with a stone surface.

If the victim of such an attack fails a Fortitude save (DC 10 + stonedeath assassin's class level + the stonedeath assassin's Int modifier), the victim's body is petrified (as the flesh to stone spell).

Humanoids with the dwarf or gnome subtype take a –4 penalty on this save.

If the victim's saving throw succeeds, the attack is just a normal sneak attack.

Once a stonedeath assassin has completed the 3 rounds of study, he must make the attack within the next 3 rounds.

If a stonedeath strike is attempted and fails (the victim makes her save) or if the stonedeath assassin does not launch the attack within 3 rounds of completing the study, 3 new rounds of study are required before the assassin can attempt another stonedeath strike.

Both the stonedeath assassin and the victim must remain in contact with a stone surface while the assassin studies the victim and while the attack is made.

STONESPEAKER GUARDIAN

The stonemaker guardian taps into the divine power of the earth itself to defend her fellow stonemakers, as well as other goliaths and friendly races, from their enemies. Equally adept at spellcasting and melee combat, the stonemaker guardian is a terror to behold for the giant, orc, or other marauder who has aroused the stonemaker's ire.

Stonemaker guardians typically come from the ranks of goliath druids of the stonemakers (see page 82).

Some multiclass as barbarians, rangers, or fighters to improve their martial abilities.

NPC stonemaker guardians act in accordance with the concord of stonemakers, and most use spells such as animal messenger to stay in contact with their brethren.

Many stonemaker guardians attach themselves to goliath tribes for months or years, and they are accorded the respect due elders for their wisdom.

Others move across the mountains by themselves or in small groups, settling disputes within or among the tribes before moving on.

Adaptation: One of the key features of the stonemaker guardian prestige class is the ability to use the Stone Form feat in conjunction with the wild shape ability to turn into a kind of creature a druid can't become.

A similar class based in a volcanic region might take on a fiery form or one made from magma. An “oceanspeaker guardian” could take a watery form and gain a swim speed, eventually acquiring the vortex special ability possessed by water elementals.

Hit Die: d8.

REQUIREMENTS

To qualify to become a stonemaker guardian, a character must fulfill all the following criteria.

Race: Feral gargon or goliath.

Skills: Knowledge (nature) 6 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance, Stone Form*.

Special: Wild shape ability.

* New feat described in Chapter 6.

CLASS SKILLS

The stonemaker guardian’s class skills (and the key ability for each skill) are Appraise (Int), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Knowledge (nature) (Int), Knowledge (religion) (Int), Listen (Wis), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), and Survival (Wis).

See Chapter 4 of the Player’s Handbook for skill descriptions.

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

CLASS FEATURES

All of the following are class features of the stonemaker guardian prestige class.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: Stonemaker guardians gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Spells per Day/Spells Known: At each level, a stonemaker guardian gains new spells per day (and spells known, if applicable) as if she had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which she belonged before adding the prestige class level.

She does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained (improved chance of turning or destroying undead, metamagic or item creation feats, and so on).

If she had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a stonemaker guardian, she must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day and spells known.

Stony Hide (Ex): The natural armor bonus of a stonemaker guardian under the effect of the Stone Form feat improves by 1 per class level, up to a maximum of +5 at 5th level.

Wild Shape (Su): A stonemaker guardian’s class levels stack with levels from all other classes that grant the wild shape ability to determine the maximum Hit Dice of the forms she can assume and the amount of time she can spend in one wild shape.

At 2nd level and again at 4th level, a stonemaker guardian gains one additional use of wild shape per day.

This benefit stacks with her number of daily uses gained from other classes that grant that ability.

She doesn’t gain any additional wild shape-related class features, such as the ability to wild shape into Large animals, plants, and so on.

Stoneslam Attack (Ex): The slam attacks of a stonemaker guardian of 3rd level or higher under the effect of the Stone Form feat deal damage as if the stonemaker guardian were one size category larger than she is.

A Medium stonemaker guardian, for example, deals 2d6 points of damage with her slam attacks instead of the normal 1d8 points of a Medium character.

Fortification (Ex): When a critical hit or sneak attack is scored on a stonemaker guardian of 4th level or higher, there is a 50% chance the critical hit or sneak attack is negated and damage is instead rolled normally.

Earth Glide (Su): A 5th-level stonemaker guardian under the effect of the Stone Form feat can glide through the earth like an earth elemental.

The stonemaker guardian moves at half speed while gliding through the earth in this manner, but she can move through stone, dirt, or almost any other sort of earth except metal as easily as a fish swims through water.

This burrowing leaves no tunnel or hole, nor does it create any ripple or other signs of its presence.

A move earth spell cast on an area containing a stonemaker guardian moving in this manner flings the guardian back 30 feet, stunning her for 1 round unless she makes a DC 15 Fortitude save.

Earth Master: At 5th level, a stonemaker guardian gains Earth Master (see Chapter 6) as a bonus feat.

RACES OF THE DRAGON (3.5)

DISCIPLE OF THE EYE

“Leaving an opponent stunned or unconscious only creates a pest that may rise to challenge you again.

However, killing your foe is secondary to planting the fear of the dragon within him—the longer he lives, the more he will tell others of your dreadful, terrifying gaze.”

—Molik, kobold disciple of the eye

The way a disciple of the eye fixes her gaze on someone can be remarkably unsettling.

A leashed draconic fury is smoldering inside her—the promise of a retribution so great that its mere intimation is enough to make observers fear for their lives.

As a disciple of the eye, you know the messages that the eyes alone can impart.

Indeed, eyes can both send and receive information.

You are able to collect heightened knowledge about your environment.

More important, your merest glance guarantees your foes that by the time you move to become a blur of dragon-inspired bloodshed, it is already too late for them.

BECOMING A DISCIPLE OF THE EYE

Monks are natural candidates for disciples of the eye, since the prerequisite skills are class skills for them and they have the prerequisite feat automatically—not to mention the fact that, once they enter the class, disciple levels improve their fast movement and flurry of blows abilities. Sorcerers could also take up the class; they have high Dexterity and Charisma scores, both of which are integral to disciple of the eye class abilities, even though they lack Spot as a class skill.

Rogues with high Charisma scores also make good candidates, but lack Concentration as a class skill.

A rogue/sorcerer multiclass character could certainly work, keeping in mind that you also want a good Strength score for melee combat.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Subtype: Dragonblood.

Alignment: Any lawful.

Skills: Concentration 8 ranks, Spot 8 ranks.

Feats: Improved Unarmed Strike.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Climb, Craft, Diplomacy, Gather Information, Hide, Jump, Intimidate, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (geography), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Sense Motive, Spot, Survival, Swim, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in level, disciples of the eye gain increased unarmed abilities.

They learn how to increase their perception of the world as well as strike fear into their opponents.

Fast Movement (Ex): Your disciple of the eye levels stack with your monk levels (if any) for the purpose of determining your unarmored speed bonus.

(See the monk class feature, pages 40–41 of the Player's Handbook).

If you don't have any monk levels, you are treated as a monk of the same class level as your disciple class level for determining your unarmored speed bonus.

Flurry of Blows (Ex): Your disciple of the eye levels stack with your monk levels (if any) for the purpose of determining the attack bonuses you use when making a flurry of blows.

If you don't have any monk levels, you are treated as a monk of the same class level as your disciple class level for determining your flurry of blows attack bonuses.

Wandering Eyes (Sp): As a disciple of the eye, you gain the ability to remotely perceive your surroundings.

As a standard action, you can create a magical sensor that provides visual information as the arcane eye spell (PH 173), for up to 1 minute per day per disciple level (which can be expended gradually, minimum 1 round).

The effect of this ability is identical to that of the arcane eye spell, except that the magical sensor is shaped like a dragon of Fine size.

The moment you stop concentrating on the invisible sensor, it winks out of existence and must be created again.

Natural Armor Bonus (Ex): By the time you reach 2nd level, your martial training has begun to harden you against physical attacks, providing you with a +1 bonus to your natural armor.

This bonus increases to +2 at 4th level.

Frightful Attack (Ex): At 2nd level, you can unsettle your foes by evoking the presence of the dragon within you.

This ability takes effect automatically whenever you make an attack roll against an opponent that has fewer Hit Dice than your character level.

The target of your attack must succeed on a Will saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Cha modifier) or be shaken for 1d4 rounds.

Dragons and creatures with the dragonblood subtype are immune to this effect.

Creatures that succeed on this save can't be affected again by your frightful attack for 24 hours.

Keen Senses (Ex): When you attain 3rd level, your senses dramatically improve.

You can see four times as well as a human can in shadowy illumination, and twice as well as a human can see in normal light.

If you can already see farther than a human but not as well as indicated above, your vision extends to this improved distance.

If you already have improved vision that matches or exceeds this distance, your vision does not improve.

You also gain darkvision out to 120 feet.

If you already have darkvision but not out to 120 feet, your current darkvision extends to that distance.

If your current darkvision already extends to 120 feet or more, your darkvision does not improve.

Glare of the Enraged Dragon (Su): At 4th level, you can use a swift action (see page 122) and focus your dragon heritage into an enraged glare that you direct against any creature within 30 feet.

The target of your glare must succeed on a Will saving throw (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Cha modifier) or be shaken for 1d4 rounds.

This ability can be used a number of times per day equal to your disciple level.

Affected foes that are already shaken become frightened instead.

Blindsense (Ex): At 5th level, your senses dramatically expand.

You gain blindsense out to 30 feet.

If you already have blindsense out to 30 feet or more, the range of the ability does not improve.

PLAYING A DISCIPLE OF THE EYE

As a disciple of the eye, you are capable of ending a fight by either frightening your foes away, assaulting them with your martial skill, or both.

You are not the kind of melee fighter who rushes into combat, preferring to gather information about your enemy remotely before planning the best method of engagement.

If a quarrel cannot be defused, you are prepared to fight at a moment's notice, often warning your combatant that one of you will probably die.

This is not typically a threat, but an honest profession of consequence.

When you face mindless creatures that operate on instinct, nothing can be gained by such a frank admonition, so against such opponents you attack without reservation.

COMBAT

You prefer to begin combat only after you have collected information on foes using your wandering eyes ability. Your ability to send a dragonlike sensor to scout for you is useful in a wide variety of situations, though the dragonsensor's presence is certainly something potential foes might wonder about, and perhaps be thus forewarned of your imminent arrival.

Once combat is joined, your ferocious martial techniques combined with the frightful nature of your attacks can cause less powerful foes to quail in your presence. While your victims might not run, shaken foes are far less likely to take you down.

They are also more likely to make mistakes, creating valuable openings for you and your comrades to exploit. As you proceed in the class, you eventually gain the ability to use the glare of the enraged dragon.

This is an ideal ability to use on already shaken foes, for if you successfully stare down such a creature with this ability, it becomes frightened and flees the battle. You should use this ability on lesser creatures in a combat against multiple foes, giving you the advantage of focusing your martial prowess on your most significant opponent.

ADVANCEMENT

Disciples of the eye have undergone training as martial artists.

At the same time, they understand that the threat of great violence (specifically, dragon-inspired violence) can be as effective a deterrent as the violence itself.

Sometimes this realization heralds a spiritual journey that can intersect with the path of those who seek to emulate dragons.

As you advance in the disciple of the eye class, consider devoting resources to increasing or enhancing your Charisma score.

This score is an important factor in your ability to shake or frighten your foes, and keeping it as high as possible should be one of your primary goals.

RESOURCES

For the most part, a disciple of the eye has no special resources.

You are usually on your own when it comes to organized support.

As a lawful character, you crave a structured community, and therefore you might associate with Singers of Concordance (see page 91) in particular.

DISCIPLES IN THE WORLD

"Once a disciple of the eye becomes involved in a conflict, the only safe resolutions are to commit to peace or walk away."

—Arytemaurg, dragonwrought kobold

Player characters who become involved with dragonblood humanoids might find themselves crossing paths with a disciple of the eye without realizing it at first, given a disciple's tendency to dress in the same clothes worn by commoners and to avoid notice as much as possible.

A lawful good disciple often chooses to guard a defenseless group of individuals, while a lawful evil disciple seeks to dominate small communities through regular doses of fear.

A lawful neutral disciple might be skilled at negotiating a peace between opposing sides of a war.

ORGANIZATION

Disciples of the eye do not form lasting communities, each feeling most effective as an individual within an existing organization.

Even so, at times several disciples have combined their strength in times of great martial need.

These compacts are formed either when everyone involved attempted to mediate a situation and failed, or when mediation was impossible due to the mindless nature of the threat.

In such cases, it is not unusual for a group of disciples to operate together, either as a team of infiltrators that inflicts damage behind enemy lines, or as a driving force to break through on the battlefield.

These sorts of attacks are highly successful; the disciples can remotely scout ahead with their wandering eyes ability and then focus their energy where the most damage can be done.

NPC REACTIONS

Those unfamiliar with a particular disciple of the eye have an indifferent attitude toward her.

Because disciples are usually not part of a particular organization, very few NPCs would be able to stereotype newly encountered disciples as foes or friends.

If a disciple of the eye has made a name for herself in a particular location, then of course the attitudes of NPCs in that area shift—becoming more friendly if the disciple is seen to be on the side of right, but becoming more unfriendly if the disciple's draconic ability to shake and frighten foes is widely witnessed or talked about.

The average NPC is afraid of dragons and of those who display dragonish abilities.

DISCIPLE OF THE EYE LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (local) or Knowledge (history) can research disciples of the eye to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. DC 10: Disciples of the eye are skilled martial artists who seek to emulate dragons.

DC 15: Disciples of the eye can send little invisible dragonlike creatures wandering to scout distant locations.

DC 20: Disciples of the eye demonstrate a fury during their initial attack that is reminiscent of a dragon's aspect, frightening the weak-willed.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific disciples of the eye, including notable accomplishments and geographical origins.

Player characters trying to locate a disciple of the eye should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the necessary intermediaries and protocols for contacting one.

If the player characters are talking to a Singer of Concordance and request a mediator, give them a +2 circumstance bonus on the check.

DISCIPLES IN THE GAME

This prestige class is interesting to players on multiple levels.

As negotiators sent to intimidate and frighten, disciples of the eye offer roleplaying opportunities.

With their wandering eyes ability, disciples of the eye are ideal for reconnaissance or spying.

As martial artists, they can throw themselves into melee combat with abandon.

Opportunities for each style of gaming should be offered for a full play experience, depending on individual preferences.

ADAPTATION

Disciples of the eye are intended for dragonblood humanoids.

If none are present in your campaign, this prestige class can be played with a regular humanoid—just remove the dragonblood subtype requirement.

Some other element must be used, however, to serve as the seed of the character's ability to frighten others—require instead 2 ranks in Knowledge (arcana), concentrating on some particularly scary magical beast that the disciple emulates.

In addition, the shape of the wandering eyes sensor should change from the form of a dragon to that of the new creature being emulated.

DRACOLEXI

“Before there was a written script, the Draconic language was spoken by true dragons for thousands of years.

The nuances of every word are still filled with arcane meaning, but only if you know how to pronounce and unlock that power.”

—Renthisjarcaniss, black dragon

A dracolexi lives in a world forgotten by most creatures alive today, back when the first Draconic words reverberated with preternatural meaning.

As a dracolexi, you try to understand that primordial vocabulary by devoting yourself to the study of ancient dialects and languages, hoping to discover exactly how certain Draconic words were once uttered.

These words hold little power until a dracolexi understands the meaning behind them.

When a dracolexi can finally pronounce the word with the original emotional and intellectual subtext in mind, he can invoke instantaneous arcane power.

With practice and more than a little experimentation, you can master these Draconic words, but you must be prepared to live a life both adventurous and studious by turns in order to locate and decipher the histories that embody these secrets.

BECOMING A DRACOLEXI

A member of any class capable of spontaneous arcane spellcasting and having Knowledge (arcana) as a class skill can qualify for this prestige class without too much effort. Bards have an easier time qualifying than most other characters, because of the skill and language requirements.

A key attribute for a dracolexi is Charisma for spellcasting, but a high Intelligence is equally important when researching Draconic words, not to mention Decipher Script, Knowledge, and Search checks.

Dracolexi do a fair amount of adventuring, so a good Dexterity helps get them out of tight spots and a high Constitution helps them survive anything they can't escape.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Feats: Eschew Materials or Still Spell.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Perform (oratory) 4 ranks, Spellcraft 4 ranks.

Spells: Must be able to spontaneously cast 2nd-level arcane spells, must know at least one language-dependent spell.

Languages: Must be able to speak Draconic plus at least two languages from the following list: Auran, Dwarven, Elven, Ignan.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Climb, Craft, Decipher Script, Gather Information, Jump, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Profession, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Search, Speak Language, Swim, Use Magic Device.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in the class, dracolexi acquire knowledge of increasingly powerful Draconic words, while also mastering the original dialects of the dragons and thus gaining the ability to affect spell energy.

Spellcasting: At each level beyond 1st, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class before becoming a dracolexi, you must decide which class to add each level to for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Draconic Words (Su): When you enter this class, you begin to discover the arcane nuances that allow specific spoken Draconic words to produce powerful effects.

Your intuitive understanding of how to express these words cannot be imparted to others.

Even if one of these words is repeated perfectly by someone else, the utterance has no effect, because the speaker lacks the internalized understanding that can only come from the special studies that dracolexi engage in.

At 1st level and every three levels thereafter (4th, 7th, and 10th), you can learn one Draconic word from among those described below in order to use it and gain the benefit of its effect.

Some Draconic words have a class level requirement that must be met before the word can be learned.

You can't learn the same word twice.

Speaking a word is a swift action (see page 122) that activates the word's effect; if the word affects a particular creature, you can target any creature (including yourself) within 30 feet.

A silence spell or similar effect prevents you from using Draconic words; if you are deafened, you have a 20% chance of misspeaking a Draconic word when using it (this counts as a use of the word but has no effect).

Beginning at 4th level, you can choose to incorporate a known Draconic word into the verbal component of a spontaneously cast arcane spell as you cast it (which requires no action other than the normal casting of the spell).

In this case, the word takes effect at the end of the spell's casting time, just before the spell takes effect.

If the Draconic word would normally target a specific creature, it can only target a creature that is targeted by the spell, or a single creature within the area of the spell.

A spell cast without a verbal component can't have a Draconic word added to its effect.

You can use each Draconic word any number of times per day, but no more than one word can be used each round (nor can you use the same word more than once per round).

No creature can be targeted by the same Draconic word twice in a 24-hour period.

If a saving throw is allowed against the power of the Draconic word, the save DC is 10 + your dracolexi level + your Cha modifier.

Renthisj: The target's speech can be understood by any creature that can speak a language.

A target incapable of speech gains no benefit from this Draconic word (which means "speak").

The effect lasts for a number of hours equal to your class level.

Will negates (harmless).

Ssifisv: This Draconic word translates into Common as "rest".

It removes the fatigued condition from the target, or reduces the target's exhausted condition to fatigued.

If you are at least 7th level, it instead removes both fatigued and exhausted conditions.

Vor: This Draconic word, which translates as "learn", grants the target a competence bonus on Knowledge checks and Spellcraft checks equal to your class level for 1 hour.

Ocuir: This Draconic word, meaning "see", grants the target a competence bonus on Search checks and Spot checks equal to your class level for 1 hour.

Osvith: This Draconic word, translating to "flee" in Common, renders its target shaken for 1d4 rounds.

If the target has Hit Dice equal to or less than your dracolexi level, it is frightened instead.

Will negates.

Ssearth: The target of this Draconic word ("prolong") is healed of 1 point of damage per caster level.

If you speak this word as part of a spell, you can choose instead to extend the spell (as if you had applied the Extend Spell feat), but without any adjustment in spell slot or casting time.

Veschik: This Draconic word means "replenish".

The target regains one spell slot (but not a slot that held a prepared spell) of the highest level of arcane spell it can cast spontaneously.

If the target has not already cast any spells of that level, it instead regains one spell slot of the highest arcane spell level for which it has already spontaneously cast a spell.

Strix: The target of this Draconic word ("invigorate") gains temporary hit points equal to twice your class level.

These hit points last for a maximum of 1 hour.

Ossalur: This Draconic word, meaning "travel", grants its target a 30-foot enhancement bonus to all its speeds for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

This effect doesn't give the target a mode of movement it doesn't have (a creature with no fly speed isn't treated as a creature with a fly speed of 0 feet).

Valignat: This Draconic word, meaning "burn", deals 5d6 points of fire damage to the target.

If you speak the word as part of a spell with the fire descriptor, you can choose instead either to empower or widen the spell (as if you had applied the Empower Spell feat or the Widen Spell feat), but without any adjustment in spell slot or casting time.

DRACOLEXI DRACONIC WORDS

Minimum Level	Draconic Word (translation)	Effect
1st	renthisj (speak)	Speech can be understood by all creatures
1st	ssifisv (rest)	Eliminate fatigue or exhaustion
1st	vor (learn)	Bonus on Knowledge, Spellcraft checks
4th	ocuir (see)	Bonus on Search and Spot checks
4th	osvith (flee)	Target shaken or frightened for 1d4 rounds
4th	ssearth (prolong)	Heal target or extend spell
7th	veschik (replenish)	Regain spell slot
7th	strix (invigorate)	Grant temporary hit points
10th	ossalur (travel)	+30-ft. enhancement bonus to all speeds
10th	valignat (burn)	Deal 5d6 fire damage, or empower or widen fire spell

Bonus Feat: A dracolexi learns how to rely on little but her own voice to cast spells.

At 2nd level, you gain your choice of Eschew Materials or Still Spell as a bonus feat.

If you already have these feats, you gain nothing from this class feature.

Power Word Spells (Su): The words of Draconic power share some fundamental similarities to the various power word spells (those in the Player's Handbook as well as the ten new power word spells presented in Chapter 7 of this book), and your studies shed new light on the use of these magical effects.

At 3rd level, you can select any single power word spell and add it to the spell list of any one spontaneous arcane spellcasting class that you have, treating it as a spell of one level lower than normal.

If your class spell list doesn't normally include spells of the (adjusted) level of the power word spell, you can't add it to your spell list.

For example, a 5th-level bard/3rd-level dracolexi could select power word distract (see page 115).

It is normally a 4th-level spell, but he can treat it as a 3rd-level bard spell.

He could even choose power word blind (normally a 7th-level spell) and add it to his class spell list as a 6th-level bard spell, despite the fact that he is not yet capable of casting 6th-level bard spells.

He couldn't choose power word kill or power word stun with this ability, since even with the adjustment these would be 8th-level and 7th-level spells, respectively, which aren't normally available to bards.

Furthermore, if you are (or become) capable of casting spells of that level, you can also add the power word spell to your list of spells known.

If you already know the selected power word spell, you can move that spell to one level lower on your class spell list and also add any spell of the power word spell's original level to your spell list.

The bard in the previous example couldn't add power word disable (normally a 5th-level spell) to his list of spells known until he was capable of casting 4th-level bard spells.

A 9th-level sorcerer/3rd-level dracoloxi, on the other hand, could immediately add power word disable to his list of spells known, since he is capable of casting 4th-level spells.

If he already knew power word disable as a 5th-level spell, he would add it to his list of 4th-level spells known and then add a different 5th-level sorcerer spell of his choice to his spells known list.

At 6th level and again at 9th level, you can select another power word spell in this fashion.

Bonus Spells Known: A dracoloxi is particularly talented in using spells that incorporate language and speech.

At 5th level, you can add any two language-dependent spells from your class's spell list to your list of spells known for that class.

The spells must be of a level you are capable of casting, and the two spells must be of different levels.

For example, a 5th-level sorcerer/5th-level dracoloxi could add lesser geas (a 4th-level sorcerer spell) and suggestion (a 3rd-level sorcerer spell) to his list of spells known.

He couldn't learn command (since it's a cleric spell) or mass suggestion (since it's a 6th-level spell and beyond his ability to cast).

Voice in Silence (Ex): When coupled with arcane energy, your voice becomes potent enough to temporarily overcome areas of silence or even your own deafness.

Beginning at 8th level, you can expend an arcane spell slot as a move action to suppress all silence spells (or similar effects) in your space, and to render your voice audible to you and other creatures sharing your space even if you or they are deafened.

This effect lasts for a number of rounds equal to the level of the spell slot expended.

Only you (and any other creatures sharing your space) benefit from this effect; adjacent creatures that are deafened or within a silence effect are still affected by the deafness or silence.

The effect moves with you.

PLAYING A DRACOLEXI

You are that rare breed of academic who takes a decidedly adventurous approach to studying.

As a dracoloxi, you are not well armed and might also not be overtly geared toward offensive spellcasting.

Onlookers might even think that you have paid your companions for their protection.

In fact, you are in a unique position to seem like much less than you are, effectively hiding in plain sight.

Adventuring is a means to an end for you; your primary goal is always acquiring bits of linguistic lore.

Still, if you are heading into dangerous situations to acquire such knowledge, you might as well enjoy the experience by surrounding yourself with trustworthy colleagues.

It is unlikely that they share your passion for languages, but they might accept your impartial leadership.

COMBAT

Words are your weapons, and you wield them as a fighter does a sword—sometimes with finesse, sometimes with a heavy hand.

While most enemies might initially overlook the threat you pose, you are also a spellcaster of no small ability.

Regardless of whether you came to be a dracoloxi as a bard or a sorcerer (or by some other path), you can devote many of your known spells toward stealth, utility, and travel.

While offensive spells are important, you can always use your Draconic words to affect your enemies.

ADVANCEMENT

Dracoloxi are academic by nature.

Most have a background either in research (hailing from an established college or university) or in exploring ancient monasteries or temples.

Perhaps, at some point during your studies, you came upon an obscure dialect embedded in an ancient historical text.

It seemed to go unnoticed by others, but you became obsessed with it.

Following the patterns of this dialect, you were able to discover the existence of Draconic words that, when properly spoken by a proper individual, could alter reality. While you might have discovered these arcane patterns on your own, tracing them back to a single word of power, most dracoloxi candidates have a teacher.

Instructors have been known to provide "seeded" material to all their students and then privately mentor the ones who notice the lexicological patterns.

A brilliant character can continue this research on his own, but most dracoloxi candidates seek out assistance, including those who make their initial discoveries alone.

RESOURCES

If you are mentored by dracoloxi instructors, the resources they have amassed are available to you.

These typically include libraries of scrolls and tomes that can aid your search for additional linguistic magic.

Such a library or resource can even become the place to which you report back with new findings or cross-reference the discoveries made by other dracoloxi in the field.

DRACOLEXI IN THE WORLD

"I didn't know why that little fellow was so smug, until he sent a stream of fire arcing back at the gnome wizard with a single word. Now I get it."

—Bragon Stonesplitter, human barbarian

Player characters are more likely to encounter a dracoloxi studying a rune-covered wall in the deepest part of a monster-filled dungeon than to cross paths with one in a civilized metropolis.

When not adventuring, a dracoloxi is usually trying to gain access to private libraries in the hope of expanding his research.

The PCs might find themselves recruited by a dracoloxi for a spelunking expedition, delving into caves or abandoned lairs that no one previously knew existed.

A dracoloxi can become so fixated on his pursuit of Draconic words that he fails to notice imminent dangers and so counts on others nearby to remain alert.

ORGANIZATION

Dracoloxi really have nothing to lose from full disclosure, and so they openly exchange information whenever the opportunity presents itself.

They always value new perspectives when it comes to their highly obscure interests, regardless of alignment.

In this respect, a dracoloxi puts his academic work before personal feelings when the possibility of pooling resources exists.

Finding more than three dracolexi in one place is extremely rare, however, since they are always traveling to follow up leads.

Instead of an organization, dracolexi have a way of communicating with each other by leaving arcane marks on the scrolls and tomes they read, flagging them after a fashion for other members of their profession.

When a dracolexi enters a library, he casts detect magic right away in the hope of finding such books, reading those texts first and thus saving valuable time.

If dracolexi know one another well, these runes and symbols might be personalized.

NPC REACTIONS

Dracolexi move through a world that remains largely unaware of their profession and purpose.

Only those with significant education or magical knowledge would know of dracolexi at all.

Most members of the class take advantage of this anonymity, preferring to maintain privacy when it comes to the reasons for their travels.

Individuals who are aware of the field of study, such as librarians, scholars, and other academic types, will have a starting attitude of friendly, unless the dracolexi refuses to share information, in which case the attitude will drop to indifferent.

Those who are not aware of dracolexi as a whole will have a starting attitude of indifferent toward any particular dracolexi.

DRACOLEXI LORE

Characters with ranks in Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (history) can research the dracolexi to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Dracolexi are spontaneous spellcasters who somehow draw their power from the study of ancient languages.

DC 15: Dracolexi cast potent power word spells, using their knowledge of Draconic dialects to great effect.

DC 20: Dracolexi include Draconic words of power in their spells' verbal components to create additional effects.

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific dracolexi, including notable accomplishments and mentors from whom they studied.

Player characters trying to locate a dracolexi should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the necessary intermediaries and protocols for contacting one.

If the player characters are searching for a dracolexi in a library, give them a +2 circumstance bonus on the check.

DRACOLEXI IN THE GAME

The dracolexi class is ideal for characters who disdain brawny displays of strength but enjoy the unassuming powers of mind and thought that go unnoticed until too late.

This prestige class appeals to players who enjoy a calculated sense of drama that comes from having a few tricks up their sleeve.

Dracolexi have an economy of motion that really shines when they fight enemy spellcasters.

ADAPTATION

Dracolexi are appropriate for any campaign setting in which recorded history is valued by society and accumulated in libraries.

These repositories of knowledge do not have to be colleges or universities, but can take the form of churches or temples that store information in some form.

A dracolexi could even be found studying ancient runes etched or painted onto the walls of caverns.

A dracolexi does not consider any detail too small for his attention.

DRAGON DEVOTEE

*"I am even more than I appear to be.
At heart, I am dragon."*

—Braxon

Dragons hold a great fascination for some individuals, leading those folk into closer and closer association with the powerful race.

Some individuals (primarily those related to sorcerers) feel the call more strongly, thanks to their dragon ancestry, occasionally even leading them to attempt to awaken their blood and bring those traits to the fore.

Learning more about dragons is the first step toward understanding them.

The dragon devotee expands upon this knowledge and begins to manifest dragonlike qualities.

BECOMING A DRAGON DEVOTEE

Dragon devotees are most often fighters or rogues who desire the power and the glory of dragonkind.

They need to have basic knowledge about dragons and understand their language.

Comprehending the mindset of dragons lets you delve deeper into what it means to be a dragon and to help you become one of them.

An above-average Charisma score is necessary to gain the class's spellcasting ability.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Nondragon, can't have draconic template.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 1 rank.

Languages: Draconic.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Climb, Concentration, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (arcana), Listen, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance through the levels of this class, you improve your combat skills and gain improved (or new) spellcasting abilities.

Ability Increase (Ex): When you enter this class, your Charisma score increases by 2 points.

At 3rd level, your Constitution score improves by 2 points.

At 5th level, your Strength score improves by 2 points.

Natural Armor (Ex): A dragon devotee's skin thickens and toughens, developing minuscule scales.

This change provides a +1 bonus to your existing natural armor bonus to AC, or simply a +1 natural armor bonus if you had no natural armor to begin with.

Combat Technique (Ex): At 2nd level and again at 4th level, you become more deadly in combat.

Each time you gain this class feature, you can choose either to take a bonus feat (any feat from the list of fighter bonus feats for which you meet the prerequisite) or to improve the extra damage dealt by your existing sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike class feature by 1d6.

(The skirmish class feature is described in the scout class, and the sudden strike class feature is found in the ninja class; both of these classes appear in Complete Adventurer).

You must already have the sneak attack, skirmish, or sudden strike class feature in order to choose this option.

If you have more than one of these class features, you must apply the bonus to a single class feature (but you can choose a different class feature at 4th level from what you chose at 2nd level).

Draconic Resistance (Ex): At 2nd level, you become resistant to paralysis and magic sleep effects, gaining a +4 bonus on saves against such effects.

Ignore Spell Failure (Ex): Normally, armor of any type interferes with an arcane spellcaster's gestures, which can cause his spells to fail if those spells have somatic components.

Beginning at 3rd level, you can ignore the arcane spell failure chance when casting 0-level and 1st-level arcane spells.

This benefit doesn't apply to spells higher than 1st level, including 0-level or 1st-level spells that occupy a higher-level spell slot because of the application of a metamagic feat.

Spellcasting: At 3rd level and 5th level, you gain spells per day, spells known, and an increase in caster level as if you had also gained a level in sorcerer.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you don't have any levels in sorcerer before reaching 3rd level in this class, you gain spells per day, spells known, and an increase in caster level as if you were a 1st-level sorcerer.

You use all the normal rules for sorcerer spellcasting as described in the Player's Handbook.

Upon reaching 3rd level in this class, you add magic fang to your sorcerer spell list as a 1st-level spell and greater magic fang to your sorcerer spell list as a 3rd-level spell.

You can choose these spells as spells known (assuming, in the latter case, that you are able to know and cast 3rd-level sorcerer spells), and you can use spell trigger items such as wands that contain these spells.

Claws (Ex): At 4th level, you gain two claw attacks that each deal damage according to your size (see the table below).

Size	Claw Damage
Up to Tiny	1
Small	1d2
Medium	1d3
Large	1d4
Huge	1d6
Gargantuan	1d8
Colossal	1d10

If you already have claw attacks, use the value given here or your existing claw damage, whichever is greater.

These claws are primary attacks unless you already have secondary claw attacks, in which case they remain as secondary attacks.

Draconic Template: At 5th level, you gain all the abilities of the draconic creature template (see page 74) that you have not already gained as dragon devotee class features—except that you do not apply the template's level adjustment.

Specifically, you gain the dragonblood subtype in addition to any subtype you might already have.

You also gain darkvision out to 60 feet, low-light vision, and a +2 bonus on Intimidate checks and Spot checks.

PLAYING A DRAGON DEVOTEE

You admire dragons for their puissance and power, feeling an inexplicable link to them.

Because you are interested in delving into the mysteries of dragonhood, you decide to pursue the life of a dragon devotee to explore that link and awaken the heritage within you.

You love to speak Draconic and to talk about dragons with others who likewise admire this most noble of creatures.

Most dragon devotees feel drawn to likeminded individuals.

They want to share their knowledge of and interest in dragons with others.

Indeed, as a dragon devotee changes physically and mentally to become more like a dragon, he wants to share this experience with those who can appreciate his growth and development.

If the opportunity to interact with a dragon arises, you're the first to take it.

While you would prefer to converse peacefully with a dragon, you're not afraid to pit your own fighting prowess against one if diplomacy isn't an option.

To one as devoted to them as you are, dragons are the ultimate friend or the ultimate foe.

COMBAT

Dragon devotees generally use the fighting techniques they mastered before joining the prestige class.

The new abilities they gain from advancing in the class complement their old ones and expand their options.

If you were a fighter or some other martial character before taking up this class, you'll find that the additional Constitution and Strength the class provides makes up for the lower base attack bonus.

The spellcasting ability gained at 3rd and 5th levels provides greater autonomy and more options.

Even if you're at your best in melee combat, you might still appreciate being able to use spells such as enlarge person or expeditious retreat to make yourself more capable (or more elusive) on the battlefield.

If you were a rogue or a similar kind of character before being attracted to the dragon devotee class, you might continue to improve your sneak attack ability (or a similar class feature), or you might benefit more from selecting bonus feats that enhance your stealth-based approach, such as Improved Feint.

For spells, good selections are weaponlike spells (see the sidebar) that allow you to add your sneak attack damage after a successful touch attack, such as ray of frost or shocking grasp.

If you came into the class as a sorcerer, you still use spells as your primary combat focus.

You end up trading some spellcasting ability for a better Charisma score, which improves your spells' save DCs and gives you one or more additional bonus spells.

The boost you receive in Strength and Constitution improves your chance of surviving close combat when you can't avoid it.

ADVANCEMENT

A dragon devotee must have a strong initial interest in dragons.

Either through culture or through training, you have acquired the ability to speak Draconic, and you know something about arcane matters.

In addition, you must have a moderate level of combat prowess (represented by the base attack bonus entry requirement).

Becoming a dragon devotee and honing one's skills are not structured, formal events.

While at its core the class simply allows you to become more dragonlike, it also offers opportunities to gain bonus feats or increase sneak attack damage.

All of these aspects contribute to simultaneously improving the skills you had when entering the dragon devotee prestige class while enhancing your "inner dragon".

If you choose to pursue the dragon devotee class to the end, your character receives the draconic template.

Alternatively, learning more about dragons might entice you to enter the dragon disciple prestige class (DMG 183).

After attaining 3rd level in the dragon devotee prestige class, you'll likely have what you need to join (assuming you have built up your ranks in Knowledge [arcana]).

The dragon disciple prestige class offers you the opportunity to transform into a half-dragon.

Many dragon devotees feel the allure of this option.

If you have chosen to create in yourself an even closer tie to dragons, the dragon devotee class might be just a beginning, preparing you for better things.

RESOURCES

Although dragon devotees have no regular organization, they do have shared interests with other devotees, dragon disciples, and dragon heart mages (see page 88).

Individuals who hold a similar interest in dragons, such as these, are often very friendly toward others who share their passion.

The support of those others might be as limited as being eager to share reminiscences or as expansive as volunteering to team up for dragon-related activities such as a diplomatic foray or a hunt.

DRAGON DEVOTEES IN THE WORLD

"The one you're looking for is over there, at the bar. I'll bet you five gold pieces that if you say the word 'dragon' loudly, he'll be over here before you can finish counting out my winnings."

—Lidda

The dragon devotee class is a great way for a character to become a bit more dragonlike.

It also provides an effective way for members of many classes to meet the requirements for the dragon disciple prestige class.

ORGANIZATION

Dragon devotees have much in common with dragon disciples and dragonheart mages.

Although no specific organization caters to these individuals, they find great solace and enjoyment in speaking with others who share their devotion to dragons. Their common interests sometimes lead them to the same places.

Dragon devotees wind up meeting together at dragon-focused events or in dragon-inhabited areas.

Quite a few dragon devotees take their admiration and imitation of dragons so seriously that they decide to worship one of the dragon deities.

In such cases, a church or shrine dedicated to the deity serves as a meeting place for those devoted worshippers.

NPC REACTIONS

The increased Charisma that characters gain upon entering the dragon devotee class means they have a good chance of being more likable than the average individual.

NPCs who meet the character for the first time will have a starting attitude of friendly, at least so long as the dragon devotee character does not manifest any blatantly draconic features in his appearance.

Such an abnormal appearance reduces the default starting attitude to indifferent.

Dragon devotees are rare, and they have no organized presence in the world.

Because of this, each dragon devotee influences the NPCs around him without regard to his chosen profession.

The exceptions to this rule are those dragon devotees who have sought out and acquired the company of dragons.

A character traveling with or serving dragons can expect a reaction ranging from hostile to helpful, depending on the type of dragon he serves.

Following a black dragon will cause individuals in the surrounding area to hate and fear you, while serving a silver dragon will invite the admiration and envy of any locals you might meet.

Most dragons enjoy the attention that a dragon devotee lavishes on them, because such attention feeds their vanity. Dragons will greet a dragon devotee with a starting attitude of indifferent, rather than unfriendly or hostile, as can be their wont.

DRAGON DEVOTEE LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research dragon devotees to learn more about them.

When a character makes a bardic knowledge check or a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some individuals find dragons so fascinating that they try to become more like them.

These creatures call themselves dragon devotees.

DC 15: Rogues and fighters who become dragon devotees manage to maintain most of their key abilities while making themselves more dragonlike.

DC 20: Dragon devotees become draconic creatures in the end, though some are not satisfied with this transformation and follow a different path to seek even greater draconic power.

Player characters trying to locate a dragon devotee should make a DC 20 Gather Information check to discover the location of and the method for contacting one.

Characters who make this check in a settlement located within 10 miles of a dragon's lair get a +2 circumstance bonus on their check.

DRAGON DEVOTEES IN THE GAME

Dragon devotee player characters and NPCs are easy to work into an ongoing game.

As long as your campaign has dragons, it's natural to find characters and creatures dedicated to becoming more like them.

A player character need not pursue the life of a dragon devotee.

It's a fine class to dabble in, but need not be pursued to its conclusion.

It's designed to enable a character who doesn't have spontaneous spellcasting ability to meet the requirements of the dragon disciple prestige class after only a couple of levels.

Sorcerers or bards might find the Charisma increase attractive enough to give up some of their spellcasting ability (in terms of caster level).

If one or more player characters in the game are dragon devotees, you should provide them with some chances to focus on their dragon-inspired abilities: opportunities to speak Draconic, encounters with adversarial or friendly dragon, a book about dragons in a treasure hoard, armor made from dragonhide, or even just occasionally meeting another dragon devotee or dragon disciple.

ADAPTATION

The dragon devotee is a very versatile class that should appeal to a wide spectrum of characters.

TABLE 5-4: THE DRAGON DEVOTEE HIT DIE: d6

Level	Base Attack Bonus	Fort Save	Ref Save	Will Save	Special	Spellcasting
1st	+0	+2	+0	+0	Ability increase (+2 Cha), natural armor	—
2nd	+1	+3	+0	+0	Combat technique, draconic resistance	—
3rd	+2	+3	+1	+1	Ability increase (+2 Con), ignore spell failure	+1 level of sorcerer
4th	+3	+4	+1	+1	Claws, combat technique	—
5th	+3	+4	+1	+1	Ability increase (+2 Str), draconic creature template	+1 level of sorcerer

WEAPONLIKE SPELLS

A weaponlike spell, simply put, is any spell that requires an attack roll to affect a target and that deals damage (lethal, non-lethal, ability damage, or ability drain) if the attack roll succeeds. (The concept is discussed in full in Complete Arcane, starting on page 85.)

In all relevant respects, an attack with a weaponlike spell functions like an attack with a natural weapon or a manufactured weapon. It threatens a critical hit on a roll of 20 and deals double damage on a critical hit (unless a spell's description indicates otherwise). It can be used to make a sneak attack—a fact that is critically important to many dragon devotees. As a general rule, if a sneak attack with a weaponlike spell succeeds, the extra damage dealt is of the same type as the damage normally dealt by the spell.

Its focus on dragons is broad and should fit into any campaign with little or no customization. The dragon devotee fills a gap that exists between the dragon disciple prestige class and characters such as fighters and rogues who might find that class attractive. In addition, the class provides a way for a character to add a template gradually instead of in one fell swoop.

For instance, consider a 7th-level rogue/3rd-level dragon devotee who chose to improve his sneak attack ability at 2nd level in the prestige class and who selected chill touch as one of his sorcerer spells known when he attained 3rd level as a devotee. If he succeeds on a melee touch attack after casting the spell and is in a position to make a sneak attack on his target, the attack deals a total of 6d6 points of negative energy damage and, if his target fails its save, 1 point of Strength damage.

(2 + Int modifier per level): Bluff, Concentration, Gather Information, Knowledge (all, taken individually), Listen, Speak Language, Search, Spellcraft, Spot.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance in this class, you cultivate your draconic heritage by developing a breath weapon and gaining draconic feats, at the cost of a couple of levels' worth of spellcasting ability.

Draconic Breath (Su): At 1st level, you gain the Draconic Breath feat.

As a dragonheart mage, you realize some additional benefits from taking this feat.

As stated in the feat description on page 102, you can use a standard action to change arcane spell energy into a breath weapon that deals 2d6 points of damage per level of the spell that you expend.

As you gain levels in this prestige class, however, the amount of damage you can deal increases.

At 6th level, your breath weapon deals 2d8 points of damage per level of the spell you give up.

At 10th level, your breath weapon deals 3d6 points of damage per level of the spell you give up.

Spellcasting: At each level except 1st and 6th, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a dragonheart mage, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

DRAGONHEART MAGE

"Claws and teeth are all very well if fighting is what you like, but my dragon blood has more practical uses."

—Wedlen Mooncaller, dragonheart mage

Some arcane spellcasters are fascinated both by the dragon's hardy physical nature as well as the dragon's spellcasting ability.

The dragonheart mage is perfect for the dedicated spellcaster who wishes to embrace the power of dragon blood while still advancing in magical expertise.

BECOMING A DRAGONHEART MAGE

This prestige class is available only to those who can demonstrate draconic heritage.

Most dragonheart mages are sorcerers, who ascribe their magical ability to a dragon ancestor, and this class enhances the ability to cast sorcerous magic.

Multiclass sorcerer/bards might also find the dragonheart mage interesting, since it helps build on their already impressive Charisma-based abilities.

Kobolds are drawn to the class, which offers greater physical strength as well as improved spellcasting.

Mere dabblers in arcane magic are less likely to become dragonheart mages.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Spellcasting: Ability to spontaneously cast arcane spells.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks.

Feats: Draconic Heritage*.

Languages: Draconic.

* New feat described on page 102.

CLASS SKILLS

Draconic Feat: At 2nd, 4th, and 8th level, you gain a bonus draconic feat.

Choose any draconic feat for which you meet the prerequisite, as given on page 99.

PLAYING A DRAGONHEART MAGE

As a dragonheart mage, you acquire a few draconic powers while accepting a slower spellcasting progression.

You do not become a draconic creature or a half-dragon, as dragon devotees and dragon disciples do, but you also have more freedom to choose which expressions of draconic power you wish to take on.

COMBAT

You are tougher than the average arcane spellcaster, but you are still not a front-line combatant by any means.

Your strengths lie in taking advantage of your draconic abilities while assisting your party's combatants with your breath weapon.

Your best role in combat is to exploit your Draconic Breath feat to its fullest while backing it up with spellcasting.

Once you reach 2nd level, you begin to acquire additional draconic abilities in the form of draconic feats.

Depending on the feats you choose, you could improve your Armor Class, hit points, resistances, or other characteristics that would enhance your survivability in combat.

ADVANCEMENT

You likely started down this path because you were fascinated by the innate power of dragons.

You might have been tempted at first by the dragon disciple class, until you realized that it was more combat-oriented than you desire and would require you to give up too much of your spellcasting advancement.

For you, the transformation to a half-dragon is less important than waking the magical power of a draconic heritage.

You are driven by a thirst for knowledge of all things draconic, and as you advance in power, you are able to face more and more dangerous challenges to find it.

You might seek out and explore lairs of dragons long dead or speak to those who live there yet.

In this search, you might receive commissions from arcane spellcasters who are of a less exploratory bent but seek unusual materials or bits of lore.

You can increase your own experience in this way as well as gain monetary rewards.

DRAGONHEART MAGES IN THE WORLD

Dragonheart mages are the "adventuring archaeologists" of a fantasy setting.

They are bolder about exploring uncharted territory than more scholarly magic specialists.

ORGANIZATION

Dragonheart mages have no special organization; in fact, traditional magic establishments find them to be bizarre and difficult to manage.

As a dragonheart mage, you are likely to be found in the lounge of an adventurer's association, spinning tales of your most recent exploits and eagerly seeking rumors of new mysteries to be unearthed.

Sometimes, just like an adventuring archaeologist, you might have to have a "real" job to hold body and soul together between outings.

You might be a visiting lecturer at an academy of magic, for example, or you could spend time between adventures crafting magic items to finance the next expedition.

NPC REACTIONS

When you make the deliberate choice to become a hybrid of dragon and some other race, you provoke strong reactions, both negative and positive.

Among those you meet for the first time, starting attitudes will be either friendly or unfriendly.

Almost no one you meet will feel indifferent toward you, unless they are familiar with or have some degree of draconic heritage themselves.

Given the lack of specific organization held by dragonheart mages, you rarely encounter anyone who has heard of this particular course of study.

Those who are aware of dragonheart mages, such as the individuals who staff and study at traditional schools and research centers of magic, have a starting attitude of unfriendly, given your unorthodox methods of achieving power.

DRAGONHEART MAGE LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research dragonheart mages to learn more about them.

When a character makes a bardic knowledge check or a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: Some sorcerers claim their abilities stem from dragon blood and seek to awaken it.

DC 15: Certain sorcerers who unlock their draconic heritage actually gain dragonlike abilities.

These individuals refer to themselves as dragon heart mages.

DC 20: Dragonheart mages are powerful spellcasters with draconic abilities.

They are always searching for information about the origin and heritage of dragons.

If a city has an adventurers' gathering place or meeting hall, a dragonheart mage can often be found therein (Gather Information DC 10).

Having a dragon disciple in the party reduces the DC of this check by 5.

DRAGON DISCIPLES AND DRAGONHEART MAGES SHARE SIMILAR MOTIVATIONS, EVEN IF THEY FOLLOW DIVERGENT PATHS

DRAGONHEART MAGES IN THE GAME

As a player character, you are a good choice for an adventuring party's arcane spellcaster.

Unlike a half-dragon or even a dragon disciple, you don't have the powerful physique that might let you travel alone.

In return, you can provide magical support to your companions that is almost the equal of a pure sorcerer's, while being able to defend yourself ably against enemies who focus on eliminating the spellcaster quickly.

An NPC dragonheart mage might well be a rival for a treasure or exploratory mission.

Those who choose evil dragon varieties follow a path of greed or power lust, and they are likely to lead bands of lesser creatures in their service to pursue their ends rather than join a group of equals.

ADAPTATION

The idea of exploring a racial heritage to unlock some of its power can be extended to other types of creatures besides dragons.

For example, a skum in service to an aboleth might learn to awaken some of the aboleth nature within itself, or an aasimar could try to get in touch with his celestial heritage. As a DM, you could adapt the concept of the dragonheart mage (or the dragon disciple) to gradually confer some of the innate abilities of an ancestral creature type on the character progressing in the class.

For example, the skum above would slowly acquire mindaffecting abilities that become more powerful with increasing level; gain the aquatic subtype; and perhaps develop aboleth slime.

The aasimar could follow a path more like that of the dragon disciple, culminating in the half-celestial template.

SINGER OF CONCORDANCE

“The love of Io nourishes all his children.”

—Adetherin Forzenda, Singer of Concordance

The Singers of Concordance are a small order of wandering draconic spiritual guides who begin as servitors of Io, the Ninefold Dragon, creator of all dragonkind.

Their mission is to bring peace and comfort to Io’s scattered children, especially the often isolated half-dragons and draconic creatures.

They are more than simple preachers and healers, however—they have been entrusted by the father of dragons with the task of protecting the Spheres of Concordance that he created to ease his children’s pain.

BECOMING A SINGER OF CONCORDANCE

Almost all members of this class are dragon-descended (half-dragons and draconic creatures), whose life apart from “normal” society prepares them to undertake their wandering ministry.

The ability to cast divine magic is a requirement of the class, and its dedication to Io means that most entrants are clerics who worship that draconic deity.

True dragons with the ability to cast divine spells as arcane spells could enter the class, but not many do.

Sometimes a newly christened Singer has a varied background with a mix of experience, of which divine spellcasting forms only a part.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Subtype: Dragonblood.

Spellcasting: Ability to cast 3rd-level divine spells.

Skills: Knowledge (religion) 8 ranks.

Deity: Io.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Diplomacy, Heal, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (the planes), Knowledge (religion), Profession (any), Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

The higher you rise in this class, the closer becomes your connection to the great spheres created by Io.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain any other benefit a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a Singer of Concordance, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known. Aspect of Peace (Su): Upon entering this class, you attune yourself to the great Song of Io and to one Sphere of Concordance that is sustained by Io’s song.

In so doing, you draw that sphere’s aspect of peace spiritually closer to you and the reality you inhabit. This effect is always active while you are conscious (and the effect moves with you), but not if you are unconscious or dead.

It grants you immunity to the first compulsion effect (magical or otherwise) that would otherwise affect you each day, and for the remainder of the day grants you a +4 morale bonus on saving throws to resist further compulsion effects.

Each ally within 10 feet of you at any time during the day feels a reflection of the Sphere of Concordance’s aspect of peace and gains a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against compulsion effects.

As you gain levels as a Singer of Concordance, you gain the ability to call up additional aspects of a Sphere of Concordance.

As this occurs, you can enjoy multiple aspects operating simultaneously, without conflict.

In fact, the more aspects called into existence, the closer you draw to your chosen Sphere of Concordance.

Bonus Domain: At 2nd level, you gain access to an additional cleric domain from the following list of domains: Dragon*, Healing, Knowledge, Magic, Strength, Travel, or Wealth.

You gain the granted power associated with the domain you choose, and you can select the spells in that domain as your daily domain spells.

* Domain described in Draconomicon, page 107.

Aspect of Refuge (Su): At 3rd level, you increase your attunement to your sphere, allowing you to call upon its aspect of refuge.

You can call up this effect as a standard action, and dismiss it as a swift action (see page 122) or as a free action made in conjunction with attacking any other creature (automatic dismissal), or by moving more than 20 feet from where you first called up the aspect of refuge.

All creatures within 20 feet of you that attempt to strike or otherwise target any other creature, even with a spell, must attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Wis modifier).

If the save succeeds, the creature can attack normally and is not affected.

If the save fails, the creature can't follow through with the attack.

That part of its action is lost, and it can't directly attack another creature while it remains within the refuge.

Creatures that do not attempt to target another creature with an attack or other effect remain unaffected.

The refuge does not prevent creatures within 20 feet of you from being attacked or affected by area or effect spells, or from other attacks launched from farther away.

You can use nonattack spells or otherwise act within the refuge without dismissing it.

For instance, you could heal wounds, cast a bless spell, perform an augury, or summon creatures.

Aspect of Exclusion (Sp): At 5th level, you further increase your attunement to your sphere, allowing you to call upon its aspect of exclusion once per day for a period of up to 1 round per caster level.

You can call up this effect as a standard action, and dismiss it as a swift action or by moving more than 10 feet from where you first called up the aspect of exclusion.

The aspect of exclusion appears as an immobile, faintly shimmering sphere that surrounds you and all creatures within 10 feet of you.

This aspect prevents all spell effects of 4th level or lower from entering the sphere.

This effect is otherwise identical to globe of invulnerability (and is considered a 6th-level spell effect).

After reaching 8th level, you can use this ability twice per day.

Aspect of Healing (Su): At 6th level, you become able to call upon your sphere's aspect of healing.

This aspect is always active while you are conscious (and the effect moves with you), but not if you are unconscious or dead.

Any healing performed within 10 feet of you (and any healing you initiate) cures an additional 1d8 points.

Undead within 10 feet of you that are dealt damage by a cure spell take an additional 1d8 points of damage.

Aspect of Safety (Su): At 9th level, you can call upon your sphere's aspect of safety once per day for a period of up to 1 minute per caster level.

You can call up the effect as a standard action, and dismiss it as a swift action or by moving more than 10 feet from where you first called up the aspect of safety.

The area within the 10-foot-radius sphere surrounding you is impervious to planar travel of any sort, except if such travel is initiated by you.

The effect also deals 6d6 points of damage to creatures that attempt to enter it other than those you designate.

A Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 your character level + your Wis modifier) halves the damage dealt.

An undesignated creature within the sphere takes no further damage beyond the initial 6d6 points, unless it exits and then attempts to reenter.

Sphere of Concordance (Sp): At 10th level, you perfect your unison with the great Song.

You gain the ability to transport you and up to eight willing companions to and from a particular Sphere of Concordance at will.

This effect is considered a 7th-level spell effect.

See the sidebar for a description of the environment found within a Sphere of Concordance.

PLAYING A SINGER OF CONCORDANCE

A Singer of Concordance is an individual at once alone and interconnected with the world.

As you travel and minister to the dragon-descended, you might serve as a wandering mendicant, head up a caravan or a traveling encampment, or adventure side by side with trusted companions (who might themselves have descended from dragons).

COMBAT

As a Singer of Concordance, you are not a violent individual.

Sometimes, however, combat is necessary to preserve your own life or that of your companions.

Yours is not a front-line role, but rather one of support and rescue.

At lower levels, your abilities keep your allies calm in stressful situations and protect them against attacks.

Since your spellcasting ability continues to advance, you eventually gain access to higher-level divine spells—including those that can hinder or harm opponents.

As you advance in level, you are able to extend more potent defenses around your allies.

At the pinnacle of your power, you can make it nearly impossible for enemies to hurt your companions, or you can protect them utterly by transporting them to safety within a Sphere of Concordance.

ADVANCEMENT

The worship of Io is not very formalized.

Some dragons might have a simple shrine to the Ninefold Dragon in their lairs, usually in the form of a polished metal disk affixed to a wall.

Among kobolds, Io's shrines are more standardized but are usually in the middle of a wild space.

Clerics of the Concordant Dragon enter his worship through long journeys of self-discovery; often these are internal journeys of the soul.

The path to joining the Singers of Concordance always begins with seeking out (or, rarely, being approached by) a Singer and agreeing to perform services on behalf of the organization.

Such missions usually involve assisting another Singer in fulfilling one of Io's assignments, such as "calm the fury of the red dragon in the Crag".

While the Singer focuses on more difficult aspects of the task, the acolyte might help protect the common folk in the region or carry word of the holy mission to others who can assist.

If you perform such duties satisfactorily, after a time you are inducted into the society in a ceremony that involves several days of invocations to Io and lengthy rituals, culminating in a journey with another Singer to a special Sphere of Concordance in which the Song of Io resounds eternally.

When you hear the great Song of Io reverberating within the sphere, you know you are in contact with the very thoughts of your creator—and you are forever changed. After you return from the sphere, you remain aware of the Song as a distant echo in your mind.

SINGERS OF CONCORDANCE IN THE WORLD

If you are a half-dragon or a draconic creature, it is likely that your early life was unhappy and filled with loneliness. The need to belong and to find meaning in existence drove you to Io's worship, and now that you have experienced the utter joy of the Song, you desire nothing so much as to bring that joy to your aching kindred.

Not many true dragons follow this path.

On rare occasions, a dragon of one of the more sociable varieties (such as the silver dragon or the song dragon) might decide to bring word of Io's joy to others, but among other varieties a Singer is almost never found.

Most dragons simply have no need or desire to bring knowledge of Io to others.

This class is usually a career path chosen by dragons of young adult to mature adult age, since a wyrm tends to be sluggish and less willing to leave its lair.

Among the lesser kin of dragonkind, especially kobolds, Singers demonstrate the sense of belonging that comes from knowing one's true heritage.

A kobold adept leading a mining party, for example, might become a Singer to bring Io's peace to all the miners in the colony, or even to unite scattered colonies through the great Song.

This class is well suited to divine spellcasters, but it is also a good fit for characters with the ability to cast divine magic as arcane spells.

Bards and even true dragons can thrive in this class, especially as their healing and support abilities grow.

It's also an excellent pretext for adventuring, since you live to bring the knowledge of the Song to all of Io's creations.

You might travel with a group of dragon-descended characters to minister to their souls as they seek their fortunes, or explore the marvels of the world while making its inhabitants happier.

ORGANIZATION

The Singers of Concordance comprise a very loose organization.

Only a small number of Singers exist, and very few of these have attained the pinnacle of their profession.

Singers are widely scattered and do not often come into contact with one another, though sometimes an emergency requires them to gather.

To combat the isolation that could result from such a far-flung group, they engage in regular updates to keep all the Singers informed of the status of the others, as well as their success in bringing the news of the Song.

In order to become a Singer of Concordance, a character must have proved himself capable through earlier service. Because of this, each singer is granted wide leeway in how to handle a situation.

In the matter of admitting others to a Sphere of Concordance, however, not much variance is tolerated. These demiplanes are intended primarily for the children of Io.

Although an emergency situation might require that those of nondragon ancestry enter one, the circumstances would have to be dire indeed.

The spheres are divinely morphic, and if Io judges a singer has used this ability too recklessly, he can hedge out those companions of a Singer who do not have draconic heritage. The first such use generally passes without comment, but repeatedly revealing the spheres to the nonblooded can result in the Singer being barred from the bliss of the Song.

NPC REACTIONS

Singers of Concordance bear a sort of isolated fame.

To members of the general population, a Singer is little more than another wanderer.

They have never heard of Io and have no wish to comfort or console dragonkind, and so they greet all Singers with a starting attitude of indifference.

To those among their ministry, however, the Singers are both beloved and reviled, depending on an individual dragon's taste for spiritual comfort.

Among dragons and the dragon-descended, starting attitudes vary from friendly to unfriendly, but are only rarely indifferent.

No dragon or dragon-descended character who believes in Io will act in a hostile manner toward a Singer, no matter how unwelcome the individual may be, out of respect for the Ninefold Dragon.

The enemies of dragons are hostile to Singers of Concordance, and some even take pleasure in the misery they cause by killing a Singer.

Beings who covet and envy the delights of a Sphere of Concordance are a great danger to Singers.

They might either kill a priest out of spite, or capture and torment one in hopes of forcing him to take them to a sphere.

No Singer has thus far consented to do so, becoming instead a martyr for Io if he or she dies during the ordeal.

SINGER OF CONCORDANCE LORE

Characters with the bardic knowledge ability or ranks in Knowledge (arcana) can research dragonheart mages to learn more about them.

When a character makes a bardic knowledge check or a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs.

Dragons and dragon-descended have a +4 racial bonus on this check.

DC 10: Io created all dragons and their kin.

His priests travel the world ministering to the children of Io and bringing them inner peace.

DC 15: A small group of Io's clergy, called the Singers of Concordance, have secret knowledge that lets them perform wondrous acts of healing and protection.

DC 20: Io is said to have created marvelous retreats for heartsore and injured dragons, filled with every kind of beauty and wealth.

The Singers of Concordance are in tune with these locations and draw on their powers to assist all dragonkind.

DC 30: Long ago, Io defeated Roknar, who coveted the riches within a Sphere of Concordance.

Now these demiplanes of healing and rest are hidden from the knowledge of all but a few trusted priests, the Singers of Concordance.

A DC 20 Gather Information check allows a character to arrange a meeting with a Singer.

Dragons and dragon-descended have a +4 racial bonus on this check.

SINGERS OF CONCORDANCE IN THE GAME

Player character Singers are a great asset to any adventuring party, thanks to their superior defensive and healing skills. They also help to smooth the path diplomatically when encountering dragons or members of draconic races, who universally receive these wandering priests with respect. Characters who prefer roles involving social interaction, diplomacy, and party support are well suited to the class. Having a shrine to Io in the region where the party adventures, one that is known and accessible to the dragon-descended characters, helps encourage clerics of the Ninefold Dragon and sets up the opportunity to enter the organization.

As NPCs, Singers of Concordance are a way to connect different groups of dragon kindred in the campaign world. They can bring news of happenings that might affect the party, and themselves be the sources of adventure.

Perhaps a Singer needs assistance in helping dragonkind who are suffering injustice, or a party intent on plundering a hoard unexpectedly encounters a stern Singer who calls on them to stay their greedy hands.

ADAPTATION

If you wish to open up this prestige class to characters without draconic heritage, it makes a suitable choice for those who are intimately connected with dragons in some way, such as affiliated cultists of Io or dragonfriends (a prestige class in Draconomicon).

Perhaps the more distantly related races, such as troglodytes and lizardfolk, have more draconic heritage in your campaign and could qualify for the prestige class. In general, though, rising in the worship of Io takes longer and is more difficult for those who are not of strong draconic heritage.

The priests of Io set them even more strenuous tasks to prove their dedication before considering them as potential Singers.

SHRINE TO IO

This map depicts a shrine to Io that has been founded in the petrified rib cage of an immense great wyrm gold dragon's corpse.

When the end finally came for that great dragon, its bones literally became part of the landscape.

Now, itinerant dragons and their kin stop to pay respects to Io and to leave a small contribution to the shrine.

A Singer of Concordance is usually present to defend the holy place.

ENTRANCE

The fossilized skeleton is partially buried in the surrounding sedimentary rock, so that the rib cage and the front of the skull protrude somewhat but the head and neck are completely underground.

The entrance to the shrine is through the gaping jaws of the enormous skull.

Tokens of Io's worship (metallic disks of different colors) are hung from the great fangs, and a path of glittering coins is marked down the center of the gullet.

As the dragon's flesh decayed, a hollow tunnel was left through the neck area.

The path, studded with glimpses of vertebrae, continues through the sinuous corridor to the rib cage.

SHRINE

The shrine itself resembles a cathedral, formed by the natural vault of the rib cage.

It is more than 50 feet long, and the sky is visible between the massive bones.

These openings fill the shrine with a waxy yellow light during the day and allow moonlight (when it is present) to silver the space at night.

In the center of the space is a metallic disk inlaid in the rock floor.

This forms the worship area and is also the repository of the Sacred Hoard, which consists of offerings made by worshippers.

Over the millennia, this hoard has become an impressive heap of coins, gems, and other valuable objects.

Such wealth is irresistible to temple thieves, so the shrine is always guarded physically by the clergy of Io as well as by magic wards and traps.

(The DM should place appropriate obstacles along the way inside the tunnel that leads to the hoard).

In addition, a descendant of the long-dead gold dragon has her lair nearby and keeps a watchful eye out against desecration of her ancestor's remains.

SPHERES OF CONCORDANCE

The great dragon deity lo created these retreats among the planes so that his children could find rest, with the Singers of Concordance as their guides.

When a character enters the Singer of Concordance class and chooses a Sphere of Concordance from which to draw off aspects, that Sphere becomes linked to him. Other entrants into the class thereafter choose other spheres.

A Sphere of Concordance is a demiplane, roughly 500 feet across, with the following traits.

- Normal gravity.
- Minor positive-dominant.
- Divinely morphic. Io or his emissaries can prevent the entrance of nondraconic creatures, or expel any creatures that commit violence within the demiplane.
- Mildly neutral-aligned.
- Enhanced Magic. Spells and spell-like abilities that use positive energy, including cure spells, and spells from the Community*, Creation*, Healing, and Protection domains, are empowered (as if the Empower Spell feat had been applied to them, but the spells don't require higher-level slots). Spells and spell-like abilities that are already empowered are unaffected by this benefit.

*Domains described in Complete Divine, pages 137–138.

- Impeded Magic. Spells and spell-like abilities that use negative energy, including inflict spells, and spells from the Death, Destruction, and Madness* domains are impeded.

*Domain described in Complete Divine, page 139.

- Creatures within a Sphere of Concordance are always subject to the aspects of peace, refuge, healing, exclusion, and safety, as defined and described in the Singer of Concordance prestige class entry.

The environment within a Sphere of Concordance is pleasant, with mild temperatures and a normal atmosphere. The sphere is filled with beautiful images, precious works of art, glittering gold, and shining gems for the enjoyment and appreciation of its draconic sojourners. Because the demiplane is positive-dominant, the colors, scents, and other sensations provoked by these features are greatly heightened. However, they are bonded with the demiplane: Any attempt to remove riches from this place causes the material to revert to the raw essence of creation, vanishing instantly. (The essence returns to the demiplane and is then reshaped.)

Being a demiplane, a Sphere of Concordance is not easily accessible with plane shift or other means of planar travel. Attempts to reach a sphere without guidance or prior knowledge (or the Singer of Concordance 10th-level class feature) result in the traveler arriving on a random Outer Plane. Creatures that enter a Sphere of Concordance that is already linked to another Singer of Concordance are considered undesignated (unless they have been previously designated by the other Singer), and thus are adversely affected by the sphere's aspect of safety.

RACES OF THE WILD (3.5)

ARCANE HIEROPHANT

"There's nothing unnatural about magic.

Magic ebbs and flows through the very earth where you stand, the air that you breathe, and the water that you drink.

A fire has some magic of its own, as I'm sure you'll agree when it warms you on a cold day or cooks your food."

—Altherion Duniiloli, arcane hierophant

Arcane hierophants wield a blending of arcane magic and divine magic with a heavy emphasis on nature and the elements.

Though they possess the learning and discipline commonly associated with wizards, they also have practical knowledge of the natural world commonly associated with druids.

Like druids, they can change shape into animal and elemental forms, but they also can wield powerful arcane spells.

BECOMING AN ARCANE HIEROPHANT

Multiclassing as a wizard/druid provides the quickest path to becoming an arcane hierophant, though you can meet the arcane spellcasting requirements as a bard or sorcerer and the divine spellcasting requirements as a relatively high-level ranger.

You'll need druid or ranger levels to meet the class feature requirements.

Intelligence or Wisdom (either one can govern your spellcasting) is a key ability for you.

A high Dexterity score can prove helpful to you in combat, both to improve your Armor Class and to help you beat the opposition to the punch with a quick spell.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Alignment: Any nonlawful.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Knowledge (arcana) 8 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 8 ranks.

Spells: Ability to cast 2nd-level arcane spells and 2nd-level divine spells.

Special: Trackless step class feature.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Knowledge (arcana), Knowledge (nature), Listen, Profession, Ride, Spellcraft, Spot, Survival, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

As they advance in level, arcane hierophants improve their spellcasting abilities.

They also learn how to change shape, and they develop powers that allow them to use plants and animals as weapons and tools.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no proficiency in any weapons or armor.

You abide by the same armor restrictions that druids do, and you lose your divine spellcasting ability and supernatural or spell-like class abilities if you wear prohibited armor or carry a prohibited shield.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in an arcane spellcasting class and a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one arcane spellcasting class or more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming an arcane hierophant, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Ignore Arcane Spell Failure: When casting an arcane spell, you ignore the arcane spell failure chance for any nonmetallic light or medium armor (padded, leather, or hide armor).

You learn to cast arcane spells while wearing the types of armor that druids favor.

Wild Shape (Su): If you do not already possess the ability, you gain no new ability to wild shape.

However, you add your arcane hierophant level to your druid level and gain the wild shape ability of a druid of the resulting level.

For example, a character who is a 3rd-level wizard/3rd-level druid/4th-level arcane hierophant has the wild shape ability of a 7th-level druid.

If you are not a druid, (for example, if you entered the class as a wizard/ranger), you do not gain the ability to wild shape.

Companion Familiar: Upon becoming an arcane hierophant, you must dismiss your familiar, if you have one.

(You do not risk losing XP for doing so).

You may retain any one animal companion you already possess.

You add your arcane hierophant class level to your druid or ranger level for purposes of determining your animal companion's bonus Hit Dice, natural armor adjustment, and Strength/Dexterity adjustment (see the sidebar The Druid's Animal Companion, page 36 of the Player's Handbook).

For example, a character who is a 4th-level druid/3rd-level wizard/4th-level arcane hierophant has the animal companion of an 8th-level druid (+4 bonus HD, +4 natural armor, and +2 Strength/Dexterity adjustment, or an animal companion chosen from the 4th-level or 7th-level lists).

In addition, your animal companion (if any) gains many of the abilities that a familiar would normally possess.

You add your arcane hierophant class level to your arcane spellcasting class level, and determine the Intelligence bonus and special abilities of your animal companion accordingly (see the sidebar Familiars, page 53 of the Player's Handbook).

For example, a 4th-level druid/3rd-level wizard/4th-level arcane hierophant has a familiar companion equal to that of a 7th-level wizard and 8th-level druid (Intelligence 9, alertness, improved evasion, share spells, empathic link, deliver touch spells, speak with master, speak with animals of its kind, devotion).

The Hit Dice, hit points, attack bonus, saving throws, feats, and skills of the familiar companion are determined as normal for an animal companion.

Due to the familiar companion's unusual Intelligence score, it may very well have more skill points than other animals of its kind.

The familiar companion is a magical beast (augmented animal), but you can bestow harmless spells on your familiar companion as if it were an animal instead of a magical beast.

If your familiar companion is killed or dismissed, you do not lose XP.

You can summon a new familiar companion by performing a ceremony requiring 24 hours of uninterrupted prayer.

Channel Animal (Sp): Starting at 4th level, you gain the ability twice per day to establish a magical conduit between yourself and a single animal that you touch (including your familiar companion).

For each use of this class feature, a spell you cast whose range is touch or greater can originate from the animal instead of from you, provided that you have line of sight and line of effect to the animal.

The spell's line of effect then extends from the animal to the target based on the senses of the animal, not you.

You can also use this power to deliver touch spells through the animal.

Once you cast the spell, the animal is considered to be holding the charge for the spell (see page 176 of the Player's Handbook).

Starting at 8th level, you gain two additional uses of this ability each day.

Channel Plant (Sp): Starting at 6th level, you gain the ability to establish a magical conduit between yourself and a natural, nonanimated plant (but not creatures of the plant type) once per day.

This ability functions like the channel animal class feature, except that the line of effect from the plant to the target is based on your senses.

You can use this power to deliver touch spells through the plant.

Once you cast the spell, the plant is considered to be holding the charge for the spell (see page 176 of the Player's Handbook), except that the spell is delivered to the first creature or object that can receive the spell when the subject touches the plant.

At 10th level, you gain a second daily use of your channel plant ability.

PLAYING AN ARCANE HIEROPHANT

Think deeply, but creatively.

Your character relies on a deep understanding of magic and nature for his powers.

He didn't get where he is, however, by thinking inside the box.

He has forged his own way by melding two distinct magical traditions to create a potent new whole.

Your thoughts and actions should reflect that blending of nature and magic.

Avoid emotion and excess.

Nature wastes nothing and proceeds without emotion or sentimentality.

You need not be dour, but calm deliberation suits your character better than recklessness or a volatile temper.

Be wary of unexpected results and unintended consequences from your actions.

Take risks if you must, but stick to calculated risks.

When you ponder an action, know what you're likely to achieve if successful and what you're likely to lose if you fail.

Reject courses of action that expose you to losses greater than your potential gains.

Be persistent.

In time, the wind can wear away a mountain, so don't get discouraged when things don't go your way.

Still, strike hard when you can.

A stroke of lightning cleaves away rock faster than sand blown on the wind.

Show reverence for nature's beauty and bounty.

Oppose the wanton destruction of natural places and objects.

COMBAT

Your wild shape ability can make you an effective combatant when the need arises, but your strength lies in your spells, and you don't have the Armor Class or hit points to fight in the front line all the time. Your combination of arcane and divine spellcasting ability gives you access to all the offensive spells you're likely to need, so don't forget to prepare a variety of utilitarian spells that provide you and your party with healing, information gathering, and mobility.

ADVANCEMENT

Arcane hierophant circles usually keep a close watch on any potential new members operating in or near their areas. They pay special attention to characters who choose on their own to multiclass as druid/wizards (recognizing kindred spirits), but they often study and secretly groom any spellcasters who show an interest in nature.

They may approach such characters with opportunities for adventuring in the wild, such as tracking and rescuing captives, intercepting raids, or even locating and propagating rare plants and animals.

Once accepted into a circle (see Organizations, below), a new arcane hierophant is expected to continue his divine and arcane studies, maintain and defend the circle's citadel, and undertake such missions as might become necessary to maintain the circle's integrity.

These might include reconnaissance missions (to determine the whereabouts and intentions of potential enemies), diplomatic missions, and seeing to the protection and training of prospective new recruits to the circle.

If you have the ability to wild shape, many options open up for you.

The ability is good for fighting, but you also can fly, swim, and even pass through solid ground when in elemental form, making you an excellent scout and infiltrator.

Don't forget to take the Natural Spell feat in order to be able to use your formidable spellcasting abilities while using wild shape.

Don't overlook the tactical possibilities that your channel power gives you.

You can literally cast spells around corners though the use of this ability.

You may need to combine it with some divination to get a decent idea of where your spell is aimed.

RESOURCES

As a member of a circle, you have access to the circle's citadel.

Many citadels are little more than secret hideouts where you can stay for a night or two in reasonable safety.

More influential and powerful circles have citadels that contain libraries and laboratories for your use and a staff of servants and guards for assistance and protection.

Membership in a circle brings you in contact with other characters who share your ideals and your commitment to nature and to magic and who might be available to accompany you on adventures.

A circle may include wildrunners, druids, rangers, wizards, and maybe even some mid- to high-level barbarians.

Such characters generally have starting attitudes of friendly toward you but will expect some sort of compensation (such as a little cash up front and a cut of the proceeds after the adventure).

These characters might help you in other ways such as casting spells for you or even creating items.

You'll still have to pay the going rate for such services, but at least word of what you're doing won't spread beyond the circle.

Likewise if you're strapped for cash you might purchase services or items in return for your own labor (or for a favor to be named later).

ARCANE HIEROPHANTS IN THE WORLD

If the PCs get involved in the diplomacy, politics, or trade that passes between different groups in the wild, they'll eventually meet arcane hierophants—though they might not recognize them for what they are.

To the casual observer, there's not much difference between an arcane hierophant and a druid or wizard. When you need an inscrutable character to convey information, render aid, or launch a magical attack in the wilderness, an arcane hierophant (or a whole circle of them) can serve very well indeed.

ORGANIZATION

Arcane hierophants band together in groups called circles. A circle traditionally has at least seven members (though in theory even a single arcane hierophant might establish a circle) and seldom more than two dozen members (not including guards and servants).

Each circle maintains a secret retreat, called a citadel, where the members can meet to study, train, and discuss matters of mutual interest.

A citadel is usually located in an area of great natural beauty, such as a mountain valley, sylvan glade, or island. Some circles, however, operate within cities, and their citadels might be located near waterways, gardens, or markets where produce or other natural products are sold. Most circles value their privacy, but they don't take great pains to conceal their existence (though they invariably keep the location of their citadel secret).

Some circles operate publicly and others covertly, as their members prefer.

Each circle has a leader, usually called the speaker, chosen for his magical accomplishments, leadership skills, and persuasiveness.

A speaker is often, but not always, the most powerful spellcaster in the circle.

Beyond that, a circle has no formal organization, though an informal hierarchy based on seniority and merit develops in well-established circles.

Circles usually have no formal names.

For convenience, the members choose some fairly meaningless name or simply adopt the name of the circle's founder or one of its more famous members.

Circle members avoid names based on the location or appearance of their citadel, because that information is supposed to be secret.

Typical circle names include The Fellowship of Cymbeline, Servants of the Harvest, Friends of the Highwood, and Syngil's Watchers.

The only circle member with any real duties is the speaker, who keeps track of the other members and their doings, stays in contact with other circles, and sees to it that someone (often the speaker himself) maintains the citadel and trains new members.

Many arcane hierophants (especially halflings and adventurers of all kinds) become associated with several different circles as they roam about.

These itinerant members almost never serve as speakers; they move from citadel to citadel, exchanging news with the local arcane hierophants and taking on any tasks for which a relative outsider might be well suited.

The Circle of the Open Road provides a notable exception to this rule: It is a mobile circle in which halflings make up most of the membership.

Their speaker, a tallfellow halfling called Feideal Chestnutsower, is known for his love of roasted chestnuts and his penchant for planting chestnut trees wherever he goes.

NPC REACTIONS

Arcane hierophants provoke a wide variety of reactions, depending on their own actions and the ideals and prejudices of the people they meet.

A known member of a circle often stands in high regard among commoners in the area where the circle is located, especially if the circle has been active in defending the area, dealing with natural disasters, or giving support and advice. Such commoners will have an indifferent starting attitude at worst.

Not all circles are benign, however, and local folk probably have an unfriendly or even hostile starting attitude when a circle has been acting contrary to their interests, such as interfering with attempts at settlement, breeding or introducing predatory animals, or disrupting activities such as mining or woodcutting.

Many druids look upon arcane hierophants as dabblers in the ethos of the druid and are indifferent at best.

Some druids look upon arcane hierophants as heretical or iconoclastic because of their mingling of nature and magic. The major point of disagreement is how arcane hierophants think about nature and magic.

They see both as forces that can be understood and manipulated, an idea many druids find deeply offensive. These druids usually prove hostile to the arcane hierophant circle.

Other druids regard arcane hierophants as kindred spirits and tend toward friendly starting attitudes upon meeting them.

These druids may become allies or even members of an arcane hierophant circle.

Rangers and bards usually respect arcane hierophants for their knowledge and magical powers.

ARCANE HIEROPHANT LORE

Characters with Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (nature) can research the arcane hierophants to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Arcane hierophants wield the magical might of both arcane spellcasters and powerful druids.

Many can take on the forms of animals and imbue the creatures and plants around them with dangerous or useful spells".

DC 15: "Groups of arcane hierophants are called circles, and their functions vary, depending on their location and the temperaments of their members.

Arcane hierophant circles are loosely organized under a single leader, called a speaker.

The speaker represents the circle in relations with outsiders but has little real authority".

DC 20: "Arcane hierophants believe that magic is just another force of nature, and they behave accordingly.

They share many of the same values and philosophical ideas as druids but lack the druid's commitment to neutrality and the natural order".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about the specific circles in your campaign, including notable members, the areas where they operate, and the kinds of activities they undertake. PCs trying to establish contact with a circle of arcane hierophants for some reason can do so through a Gather Information check.

The check DC depends on how open the circle members are about their activities and goals; it can range from 10 for a circle that operates publicly to 20 for a clandestine circle. Most circles don't bother to keep their existence a secret, but they don't advertise their presence either.

Contacting such a circle requires a DC 15 Gather Information check.

In any case, a successful check either puts you in contact with the speaker or with an intermediary or ally of the circle.

Discovering the whereabouts of a circle's citadel takes at least a DC 25 Gather Information check, and the task could be much more difficult or simply impossible.

ARCANE HIEROPHANTS IN THE GAME

Given their semisecretive nature, it's easy to introduce arcane hierophants to the game.

The PCs could meet one while traveling, or perhaps a druid or wizard they know chooses to multiclass and eventually enters the prestige class.

The prestige class appeals to players who like to wield flashy magic but find sorcerers and wizards a little too fragile.

ADAPTATION

Arcane hierophants are relatively rare as presented here, but you can decide otherwise for your own campaign.

You could create a great circle of arcane hierophants as the ruling magocracy (or theocracy) in a particular land, such as an elf kingdom or an unspoiled human realm.

Entrusted with the learning and lore of a kingdom, arcane hierophants choose the land's kings, hold the powers of high and low justice, and guide the land's defense against the dangers all around.

CHAMPION OF CORELLON LARETHIAN

“When an arrow will not suffice, when no spell will overcome, a stout heart and a sharp blade may prevail. With Corellon’s grace, I fear no foe who stands within reach of my sword.”

—Alissera Berothar, champion of Corellon Larethian

Many evil warriors believe that elves, while dangerous in ranged combat, have no stomach for melee. They expect that elves would fall like leaves in an autumn windstorm once the battle becomes the work of sword and axe rather than arrow and spell. These warriors have never encountered a champion of Corellon Larethian.

The champion of Corellon is a noble elf fighter, an elf knight or lord who can stand up to any orc or human warrior.

All elves admire the grace, discipline, and skill necessary to become a swordmaster, and the champion of Corellon is the very paragon of elven swordsmanship.

Clad in shining elven mail or plate, the champion relies on quickness, agility, and an almost scholarly study of the most difficult and advanced techniques of swordplay instead of brute power.

As the name suggests, a champion of Corellon Larethian holds a special place in elf society.

Large temples of Corellon Larethian often host groups of champions who serve as elite temple guards, advisors and bodyguards to elf rulers, and questing knights in the service of the whole elf race.

BECOMING A CHAMPION OF CORELLON

In order to become a champion of Corellon, an elf must excel in swordplay and exhibit patience, grace, and compassion.

Even in the most desperate of times, elves do not judge a warrior merely by her martial skill.

To take joy only in feats of arms is to live a crude and diminished life.

There is more to life than fighting well, and the true champion knows this.

The quickest way to become a champion of Corellon Larethian is to advance as a fighter, due to the difficult feat requirements.

However, a level of cleric, paladin, or rogue (preferably paladin, because it maximizes your base attack bonus) will be quite useful in meeting the skill requirements.

The champion of Corellon class offers no spellcasting advancement, so you will not receive much benefit for entering this prestige class after advancing primarily as a spellcaster.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Alignment: Any nonevil.

Base Attack Bonus: +7.

Skills: Diplomacy 4 ranks, Knowledge (religion) 2 ranks.

Feats: Proficient with all martial weapons and heavy armor, Combat Expertise, Dodge, Mounted Combat.

Special: Must worship Corellon Larethian.

Special: In addition to the feats above, you must also take either Weapon Focus (longsword) or Exotic Weapon Proficiency (elven thinblade or elven courtblade).

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft (any), Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (any), Profession, Ride, Sense Motive, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

Champions of Corellon continue to improve their combat skills as they advance in level, learning bonus fighter feats and special techniques for making use of heavier armor than that favored by most elves.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Corellon’s Blessing (Su): Upon entering this class, you gain the ability to heal wounds by touch, much like a paladin’s lay on hands ability.

Each day you can heal a total number of hit points of damage equal to your champion level × your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

For example, a 6th-level champion of Corellon with a Charisma score of 14 can heal 12 points of damage per day. You can choose to divide the healing among multiple recipients, and you don't have to do it all at once. Using this ability is a standard action.

You can use any or all of this healing power to deal damage to undead creatures.

Using Corellon's blessing in this way requires a successful melee touch attack and doesn't provoke attacks of opportunity.

You decide how much of your daily allotment of healing to use as damage after successfully touching your undead foe. If you have levels in paladin, you add your levels of champion of Corellon and paladin together and determine your ability to heal accordingly (although if you have a Charisma score of lower than 12, your paladin levels do not contribute to your ability to heal).

Bonus Feat: At 1st level and every three levels thereafter, you gain a bonus feat.

This must be a feat noted as a bonus fighter feat, and the feat must have Combat Expertise, Dodge, or Mounted Combat as a prerequisite.

Elegant Strike (Ex): Upon reaching 2nd level, you become able to place your attacks where they deal greater damage. You apply your Dexterity bonus as a bonus on damage rolls (in addition to any Strength bonus you may have) with any of the following weapons: longsword, rapier, elven thinblade, elven lightblade, elven court sword, or scimitar. Targets immune to sneak attacks or extra damage from critical hits are immune to your elegant strike.

Superior Defense (Ex): At 3rd level, you learn special techniques for making the best use of an elf's natural agility even while wearing restrictive armor.

The maximum Dexterity bonus for any medium or heavy armor you wear (including mithral versions) is increased by 1.

For example, full plate armor normally has a maximum Dexterity bonus of +1, but the superior defense ability increases this to +2.

At 6th level, you improve the maximum Dexterity bonus of medium or heavy armor by 2 and at 9th level by 3.

Unimpeded Movement (Ex): At 5th level, you no longer reduce your movement when wearing medium or heavy armor.

(You still reduce your movement if carrying a medium or heavy load, however).

If you know the Spring Attack feat, your unimpeded movement ability allows you to use Spring Attack even while wearing heavy armor.

Corellon's Wrath (Su): At 8th level, you gain the ability to briefly channel the divine power of Corellon Larethian, enveloping one melee weapon you wield in a veil of incandescent light as a free action.

You gain a +2 sacred bonus on attack rolls and deal an extra 2d6 points of damage with each melee attack you make with the affected weapon for 1 round.

While Corellon's wrath is in effect, the weapon is considered magic and good-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

You can use this ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum once per day).

EX-CHAMPIONS OF CORELLON

Few champions of Corellon ever turn to evil, but it occasionally happens.

If your alignment changes to evil, you are expelled from the order and lose the supernatural abilities derived from this class (Corellon's blessing and Corellon's wrath).

However, you are not barred from gaining more levels in this class if you so desire.

You can continue to refine the combat techniques you have learned, but you cannot make use of the class's supernatural abilities.

PLAYING A CHAMPION OF CORELLON

You are a noble and courageous warrior.

While you espouse a personal code that bears some resemblance to the chivalric tradition of a human knight, you bring a uniquely elven perspective to the concepts of honor, valor, fidelity, and truthfulness.

Specifically, you are not under any obligation to prove your personal bravery by declining advantages that would help you to defeat a foe or by rashly attacking enemies superior to you.

If you had not proved your valor already, you would not be a champion of Corellon; your sacred trust is to defend the innocent, the weak, and the elf people in the most expedient and effective way you can.

Consequently, you do not scorn the bow, the spell, or the ruse of war when such things are called for.

You know that once you strike a blow you cannot undo it, even if it later proves to have been a mistake.

Therefore, you are slow to strike and deliberate in your actions and words until it is clear that combat is the best response to a particular challenge.

When blood must be spilled, you will do so quickly and expertly.

You do not enjoy killing, but you take pride in doing it well when it must be done.

Remember, life is not one continuous battle, and you should not diminish yourself by defining your entire existence as empty perfection behind your blade.

You appreciate many fine things—art, literature, beauty, good company, laughter, and love.

Sometimes hope and heart are the best weapons against evil.

COMBAT

You fight with skill and special maneuvers, not brute power.

Your best attribute is your Armor Class—you win fights by avoiding damage.

Combine your Combat Expertise feat with heavy armor and a shield, and you'll be hard to hit indeed, especially after your superior defense ability kicks in.

If you're facing a tough foe, think about using your Combat Expertise aggressively in conjunction with fighting defensively to occupy your enemy while your companions wear him down.

Your best weapon choice is probably the elven thinblade. It's better than a longsword, and you can use Weapon Finesse to make yourself into a very effective Dexterity-based fighter instead of a Strength-based fighter.

ADVANCEMENT

In order to become a champion of Corellon, you must start down a road that leads to some of the most interesting and powerful feats in the game—Spring Attack and Whirlwind Attack.

You should definitely consider making your next three feat choices Mobility, Spring Attack, and Whirlwind Attack.

You should also think about Improved Disarm, Improved Feint, and Improved Critical (which works very well with the elven thinblade).

Your class abilities are at their best when you commit to wearing the best heavy armor you can afford.

At your first opportunity, upgrade to mithral full plate armor.

It's expensive, but you will appreciate the increase in your maximum Dexterity bonus and your movement rate, especially if you picked up Spring Attack.

RESOURCES

Temples to Corellon Larethian can be found in almost any elf town or city, and even small forest settlements are likely to have at least a shrine dedicated to the Creator of the Elves.

Clerics of Corellon regard you as a staunch friend and ally, and they will go out of their way to aid you in whatever fashion they can.

As long as there aren't other demands on their spellcasting services, you can obtain spells from these temples at no cost unless the spells in question demand an expensive material component or an experience point expenditure, in which case the cleric in question expects you to provide the component or compensate him appropriately for the experience points he must spend.

In addition to the clerics, the other members of your chapter share your skills and interests.

They can often be persuaded to join you in an important quest or to attend to some matter that you cannot deal with yourself because other affairs demand your attention.

Of course, you may in turn be asked to help a fellow champion from time to time in the same way.

CHAMPIONS OF CORELLON IN THE WORLD

As some of the most capable fighters found among elf communities, champions of Corellon can often be found in three common situations—as elite guards to elf rulers, mages, or clerics; as commanders and leaders in elf armies; and as crusaders outside the elf homelands, working hard to counter the efforts of those the elves consider enemies. When you need an elf swordmaster to serve as an ally to the PCs, as a guard to an important elf NPC, or even an honorable lord to rule an elf city, a champion of Corellon is a good choice.

Champions of Corellon bear a strong resemblance to elf fighters or elf paladins, and most strangers do not recognize a member of the prestige class as anything other than a skillful elf warrior.

ORGANIZATION

Naturally, champions of Corellon are strongly affiliated with temples dedicated to Corellon's worship.

Collectively, they comprise an order of religious warriors known to the elves as the Aelavellin Corellon—literally, the Sword Knights of Corellon.

Each temple of sufficient size (generally, any temple in a small town or larger community) hosts a chapter of the Aelavellin, which consists of anywhere from one to a dozen or more champions in the largest temples.

While the chapters are affiliated with the temples of Corellon, the individual champions are not under the command of the clerics of Corellon or even higher-ranking members of the order.

Champions of Corellon generally hold other responsibilities in the community, serving as watch captains, royal advisors, and so on.

Meetings of each chapter are ceremonial in nature, conducted for purposes of companionship and consideration of civic issues.

The Aelavellin Corellon has a command hierarchy of sorts, and on rare occasions (a great battle, for instance) the champions assemble as an elite guard, serving as the armored heart of an elf army.

In practice, a champion of Corellon never has to weigh the dictates of the order against her personal responsibilities to her home, ruler, or family.

A champion is welcome among any chapter she encounters in her travels and free to leave a chapter whenever her duties or desires lead her to move on.

NPC REACTIONS

Champions of Corellon are indistinguishable from any other elf fighters, at least in the eyes of nonelves, and therefore receive much the same reaction from others. Those who would be disposed to be friendly toward elves will likewise be friendly to champions of Corellon Larethian, and those who regard elves as enemies certainly feel no differently about champions of elf deities.

If it is possible for an orc to hate an elf more than orcs generally hate elves, clerics of Gruumsh despise any cleric or servant of Corellon Larethian beyond all reason.

Gruumsh worshipers sometimes launch suicidal attacks in the hope of killing a servant of Corellon.

CHAMPION OF CORELLON LORE

Characters with Knowledge (religion) or Knowledge (nobility and royalty) can research the champions of Corellon Larethian to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "Some powerful elf lords or knights are dedicated to the service of Corellon Larethian.

They are known as champions of Corellon".

DC 15: "Any large temple dedicated to Corellon Larethian is likely to be home to one or more champions.

They are elite guards, agents, and troubleshooters for elven realms, often embarking on quests to advance causes important to elves or defend the elven people.

They don't like to start fights, but when violence becomes necessary you won't find a more skillful or determined opponent".

DC 20: "Champions of Corellon are highly skilled swordmasters.

Few can match their ability with the blade.

They are expert melee fighters and often wear heavier armor than most elves do.

They possess some paladinlike abilities and strive to be just, honorable, and courageous".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific chapters or champions in your campaign.

Finding a champion of Corellon is not terribly difficult, provided one knows where to find a good-sized temple of Corellon Larethian or an elf town or city.

Once the PCs have found an appropriate site, they can establish contact with a chapter of champions by making a DC 10 Gather Information check.

If, for some reason, they wish to meet a champion without going through elf intermediaries or without approaching the clerics of Corellon Larethian, the DC increases to 25.

Elf PCs gain a +5 circumstance bonus on these Gather Information checks.

CHAMPIONS OF CORELLON IN THE GAME

Any elf warrior of sufficient skill might turn out to be a champion of Corellon Larethian.

Champions of Corellon make excellent NPC allies who might aid the PCs against a threat the elves consider important, or the ruler of an elf town might be a champion herself.

The great majority of champions are good.

However, some embark on this path only to later fall into darkness or evil.

Some allow their hatred for enemies or rivals of the elven folk to overcome them and become cold and remorseless killers.

Others are enamored by the lure of power and seek to rule over their fellows.

Few elf realms are subject to the same sort of bitter power struggles that often erupt in human kingdoms, but even elves are not immune to bitterly contested successions or clan rivalries, and an embittered ex-champion is often at the heart of such trouble.

The champion of Corellon prestige class appeals to players who like playing smart fighters who possess a number of tactics at their disposal, thanks to a broad and sophisticated selection of feats.

While she might not match a fighter built purely for inflicting damage, a champion has more options at her disposal and can be just as effective (or more effective, in many cases) than a simple Strength-based fighter in many situations.

ADAPTATION

You can easily adapt the champion of Corellon to the service of almost any other deity, or even another race altogether.

The basic premise of the class (a Dexterity-based fighter with some divine powers) lends itself to association with any number of deities.

A human order of champions in the service of Pelor, for instance, could use the champion of Corellon class with very little alteration.

LUCKSTEALER

"Want riches beyond measure?

Just make sure you're there when the other guy's luck runs out."

—Mik Cobblethrust, luckstealer with the halfling "Four Hands" caravan.

As a luckstealer, you're part spellcaster, part professional gambler—and 100% mischief-maker.

You're the halfling who fleeces local card sharps out of their hard-earned gold, then disappears in a puff of smoke when the swords come out.

Not that you flee, of course—you're just moving to the perfect ambush spot and signaling the rest of your caravan to rob the town treasury while the locals are busy fighting you.

BECOMING A LUCKSTEALER

Luckstealers are spellcasters, so the easiest way to get into the prestige class is to take levels in wizard or sorcerer.

Wizards have more skill points due to their high Intelligence, so it's a little easier for them to buy ranks in Profession (gambler).

A sorcerer is a better match for this prestige class because some of its skills and class features rely on Charisma.

Clerics with the Luck domain also qualify for the luckstealer class, but the low hit points and poor base attack bonus make the prestige class less attractive to them.

Bards also qualify for the luckstealer prestige class easily, but the class doesn't enhance their existing abilities.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Halfling.

Skills: Profession (gambler) 9 ranks.

Feats: Dallah Thaur's Luck (see page 149).

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level arcane or divine spells.

Domain: Luck (divine spellcasters only).

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Appraise, Bluff, Concentration, Craft, Knowledge (local), Profession, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spellcraft.

CLASS FEATURES

As a luckstealer, your spellcasting progression slows down a bit, but you gain two useful curse abilities, class features that have an element of gambling to them, and some magical techniques that help you work your mischief at the gaming table.

Spellcasting: At each level indicated on Table 5-3, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a luckstealer, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Curse of the Fatespurned (Sp): By staring at a living opponent for a moment (a move action), you can steal a bit of his or her luck for yourself.

Your target must succeed on a Will save (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier) or take a -2 penalty on attack rolls, saves, ability checks, and skill checks for 1 minute.

The curse of the fatespurned has a range of 60 feet.

The effect cannot be dispelled, but it can be removed with a break enchantment, limited wish, miracle, remove curse, or wish spell.

Your cursed enemy's bad fortune is your good fortune.

Whenever you successfully use curse of the fatespurned, you gain 2 points for your luck pool.

You can spend points from your luck pool on a 1-for-1 basis to gain a luck bonus on any attack roll, ability check, skill check, or saving throw you make.

You decide how many points you're spending before you make the roll.

You can also use points from your luck pool to power your desperate recall and fate's proof class features (described below).

Unspent points remain in your luck pool for 1 minute.

You can't have more points in your luck pool than your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

You retain the good fortune (and the points in your luck pool) even if your enemy uses remove curse or another spell to remove his or her bad luck.

Subtle Magic (Su): The spells you cast often don't register to divination magic.

If a divination is attempted against one of your spells, the caster of the divination must succeed on a caster level check (1d20 + caster level) against a DC of 15 + your caster level.

The subtle magic class feature covers only your spells; the magic items you possess still register normally to detect magic and other spells.

Lucky Magic (Su): When you reach 4th level, good fortune infuses the spells you cast.

Whenever you cast a spell that has a variable, numeric effect, you can reroll one die out of every five (minimum one reroll).

For example, if you cast enervation, you can reroll the 1d4 to determine how many negative levels the spell bestows.

If you cast a 15d6 delayed blast fireball, you can reroll any three of the fifteen dice.

You must take the results of the new rolls, even if they're worse.

Desperate Recall (Su): At 4th level and higher, you can recover the energy from a spell you just cast, but doing so costs you a bit of the luck you have accumulated.

Once per day, as a move action, you can recall any one spell that you had prepared and then cast (if you prepare spells ahead of time) or the energy from one spell slot (if you cast spells spontaneously).

The spell or spell slot is then ready for use again, just as if it had not been cast.

At 7th level, you can use desperate recall twice per day, and at 10th level, you can use it three times a day.

Whenever you use the desperate recall class feature, you have to pay luck's cost: 1 point from your luck pool for a 1st- to 3rd-level spell, 2 points for a 4th- to 6th-level spells, and 3 points for a 7th- to 9th-level spell.

If you can't afford to pay luck's cost, you can instead lose any luck points you have in your pool and give up a measure of your own personal good fortune: For 1 minute, you take a -1 penalty on all attack rolls, saves, ability checks, and skill checks, and a -1 penalty to your Armor Class.

This penalty stacks with itself and with penalties from the fate's proof class feature and the Dallah Thaun's Luck feat.

Curse of the Black Cloud (Sp): At 7th level and higher, you can manipulate the threads of fate itself, causing a thin black cloud to descend over your foes and steal their luck away.

This ability functions like the curse of the fatespurned class feature, except that the black cloud curses everyone within a 20-foot spread.

The cloud doesn't affect vision, and it naturally disperses a round after you use this class feature.

At 10th level, you can use this class feature twice a day.

As with curse of the fatespurned, you get the good luck that your enemies lose.

You gain 2 points for your luck pool for each living creature that suffers the curse of the black cloud.

The luck pool's maximum size is equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).

As described in the curse of the fatespurned class feature, you can use points from your luck pool to improve your rolls or to use the desperate recall or fate's proof class features.

Fate's Proof (Su): At 10th level, you have a sense of fate that borders on the precognitive.

You gain occasional flashes of insight when you're in danger.

For example, in the middle of a battle you might receive an instantaneous vision of a troll rending you limb from limb.

By ducking and evading the troll's outstretched claws, you're able to avert a grisly fate.

You can use this ability to avoid critical hits, poison attempts, and other particularly dangerous attacks.

Three times per day, you can force an opponent to reroll an attack roll, or you can reroll a save you've failed.

Announce your decision to do so after you know the full effects of your bad fortune: how much damage the attack deals, the consequences of the failed save, or secondary effects such as poison or improved grab.

When you use the fate's proof class feature, the attack begins again from the moment of the attack roll, and the spell or other condition that forced you to make a save begins again from the moment you attempt the save.

You must accept the result of the reroll, even if it's worse than the original result.

You can't use fate's proof more than once on the same roll. Whenever you use the fate's proof class feature, you have to pay luck's cost: 5 points from your luck pool.

If you can't afford to pay luck's cost, you can instead lose any luck points you have in your pool and give up a measure of your own personal good fortune: For 1 minute, you take a -2 penalty on all attack rolls, saves, ability checks, and skill checks, and a -2 penalty to your Armor Class.

This penalty stacks with itself and with penalties from the desperate recall class feature and the Dallah Thaun's Luck feat.

PLAYING A LUCKSTEALER

You are finely attuned to the ebb and flow of probability, and you love to play the odds—or better yet, stack them in your favor.

Tempting fate comes naturally to you.

Whether across a card table or on the field of battle, your enemies wince whenever they have to face you.

They know that you'll take any good fortune they have and replace it with bad luck—and bad luck is the one attack no one can defend against.

Many of the more established and populous halfling caravans have a luckstealer or two traveling with them; the luckstealer title isn't considered pejorative in halfling culture.

The magical techniques that comprise your class features are well understood by halfling sages—it's just that not everyone shows the aptitude for or interest in messing with the laws of probability.

Your fellow halflings think of you primarily as a powerful spellcaster and don't pay too much attention to the literal meaning of your title.

If someone threatens the safety or welfare of a halfling community, the leaders will often turn to a luckstealer, saying, "Can't you curse our nemesis so they'll leave us alone?" They understand the general principle behind a luckstealer's abilities, but they usually don't know the specifics.

COMBAT

For a luckstealer, the fundamental tactical decision is how to spend the luck points you get with your curse class features.

The luck points only last for 1 minute, so it's not worth it to hoard them unless you know in advance that you have a critical roll or check coming up.

Early in a fight or in a battle against undead, you may be caught without luck points.

You can still use desperate recall and fate's proof, but you need to balance the penalties you'll accept against the benefits from an extra spell or possibly thwarting an enemy attack.

Your curse of the black cloud ability is the fastest way to get a lot of luck points, but you have to be careful placing it so you don't steal the luck of your allies.

If you really need the extra spell that desperate recall will provide, it's not necessarily the end of the world if you steal a little luck from a friend.

The penalties disappear after 1 minute anyway, so your ally might agree that a critical, party-saving spell might be more important than a temporary inconvenience.

(At least that's how you'll spin it if your friends complain).

If you're a high-level luckstealer facing a particularly dangerous foe, it's a good idea to try to get 5 luck points as soon as you can and keep them.

That's because the fate's proof ability is your best way to thwart certain death.

It's best used after your enemies get lucky, such as when a monster scores a critical hit against you or you roll a 1 on an easy but important saving throw.

Fate's proof is less useful when average dice results did you in, because it's likely that your enemy will be able to repeat the success during the reroll.

ADVANCEMENT

Usually a wizened mentor teaches the magical techniques that make up the luckstealer's class features to a promising but mischievous student in the halfling community.

The techniques are straightforward but delicate, so the mentor demonstrates them and teaches a series of exercises that hone the student's ability to manipulate fate and fortune.

Once a mentor has taught these exercises, a young luckstealer requires no further instruction.

However, knowing how luckstealing works and actually being able to pull it off are two different things.

It takes countless hours of practice to master the delicate ebb and flow of probability for the luckstealer's art.

When you use first send a curse of the black cloud against your enemies, it doesn't represent something you've just learned.

You've been attempting the curse of the black cloud for months or years, and this is just the first time it worked.

Once you become a luckstealer, your other character-advancement choices are relatively straightforward.

If you were a wizard before you became a luckstealer, use magic to improve your Charisma score.

Don't neglect Intelligence, obviously, but make Charisma a priority.

If you're a sorcerer, consider spells that have variable effects so you can get the full benefit of your lucky magic class feature.

RESOURCES

There is no secret society of luckstealers, but most halfling communities recognize that it's useful to have a powerful spellcaster in their midst.

A luckstealer on the run can almost always count on safe refuge among halflings, who'll hide him and provide what other aid they can spare.

Temples dedicated to Olidammara also treat luckstealers well—if they've heard of them.

LUCKSTEALERS IN THE WORLD

From a DM's standpoint, the luckstealer is a good prestige class to offer a player who has a natural mischievous streak—and to use for a frustrating, hard-to-pin-down nemesis for PCs.

ORGANIZATION

Luckstealers don't have an organized group or an agenda beyond that of their halfling caravans.

Because a luckstealer is a charismatic, powerful spellcaster, such a character is almost always an influential member of the community.

A luckstealer is sometimes an instigator of criminal schemes cooked up by less respectable halflings; many are the ringleaders of roving thieves' guilds.

Other luckstealers lead caravans of their own or act as senior advisors to a community leader.

Pulling strings from behind the scenes is a common tactic for luckstealers because they're personable, good bluffers, and able to use spells surreptitiously to good effect with their subtle magic class feature.

Some luckstealers spend their days working on their next scheme, setting up the big folk for another humiliating loss at the hands of the halflings.

Others take a day-to-day approach to life, relying on fate to bring them one adventure after another.

They're rarely disappointed.

Many luckstealers venerate Dallah Thaun, but their relationship with clerics of the halfling goddess can be complicated.

Recently, clerics of Dallah Thaun have been trying to bring luckstealers under their wing, granting them high station in the church in exchange for magical aid and a measure of control.

Some luckstealers are stubbornly independent, spurning the advances of the church even if they are worshippers of Dallah Thaun.

Other luckstealers wonder whether the luckstealing techniques weren't really Dallah Thaun's to begin with, and they're more willing to cast their lot with Dallah Thaun's clergy.

NPC REACTIONS

Few nonhalflings know about luckstealers, and saying someone is a "luckstealer" sounds like a quaint halfling way of describing an unlucky person.

Of course, those in the know have definite opinions about powerful spellcasters who can twist fate itself.

Most halfling caravan leaders have heard of luckstealers, and few are indifferent toward them. About half of such leaders regard luckstealers well and have an initial attitude of friendly.

The others have found that trouble follows in the wake of a luckstealer and have an initial attitude of unfriendly. Halflings who are not part of a community's leadership almost always have an initial attitude of friendly because many half ling folk tales feature a luckstealer who's always getting into trouble but escaping by fooling the big folk. Luckstealers likewise have few enemies beyond halfling communities.

Rivalries occasionally develop between a luckstealer and a cleric of Dallah Thaur, and sometimes an evil luckstealer will turn on his own caravan.

Clerics of Olidammara (and other gods with the Luck and Trickery domain) tend to think of luckstealers as kindred spirits, when they have heard of them at all, and have an initial attitude of friendly.

LUCKSTEALER LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can research the luckstealers to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following, including the information from lower DCs. Halflings get a +4 circumstance bonus on the check because luckstealers are a significant part of their culture. DC 10: "Luckstealers are spellcasters who specialize in curse-magic".

DC 15: "A luckstealer does what it says—he takes your luck and uses it to power his magic.

A lot of them hide in halfling caravans, stealing people's good fortune and then leaving town".

DC 20: "A luckstealer can steal people's luck—it's a sort of curse—but the effects don't last very long. Almost all of them used to be sorcerers".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific luckstealers in your campaign.

A DC 25 Gather Information check is sufficient to set up a meeting with a luckstealer.

Halflings get a +4 circumstance bonus on this check as well, as a luckstealer is more apt to trust a fellow halfling.

LUCKSTEALERS IN THE GAME

Whether it's a PC or an NPC, a luckstealer is a good choice when you want a slippery spellcaster who always lives to fight another day.

If you have a luckstealer at the table, you can challenge the PCs by giving them multiple encounters without a rest break.

That will give the luckstealer a chance to use his desperate recall ability to save the group.

Longer battles also favor a luckstealer, because his curses have a bigger effect on the game when combat stretches beyond two or three rounds.

ADAPTATION

As written, the luckstealer is tied to halfling culture, but it would be a balanced prestige class for any race.

It would be particularly appropriate for spellcasters with a connection to luck or fate—whether they're arcane or divine casters.

It's also straightforward to put an evil twist on luckstealers, turning them into secretive plotters who work secret magic, bring misfortune, and manipulate fate to their own ends.

RUATHAR

"If you agree to leave the land west of the Dursar River unsettled, the elves of Veldiri will give you leave to settle in the eastern forest and answer any call for their aid, should you need it.

On this matter I can speak for the Veldiri."

—Johdur Ter Harak, elf-friend of Veldiri

Also known as "elf-friend" or "star-friend", a ruathar is a person of some other race who has earned the special friendship of the elven folk.

While many individuals who render the elf people some notable service are known as elf-friends, a ruathar is truly blessed—the recipient of a powerful magical ritual that infuses him with the real and lasting blessing of the elf race.

The elves extend the invitation to become ruathars to very few individuals indeed, but those so honored have a home among the elf people for the rest of their days if they so desire.

Elves can become ruathars, but such characters are somewhat unusual.

An elf becomes a ruathar when he renders a great service to an elf realm that is not his homeland, or when one or more of his nonelf companions receive the honor in recognition for a deed he also shared in.

When an individual elf is singled out for this kind of recognition in his homeland, he is usually called "star-friend" rather than "elf-friend".

BECOMING A RUATHAR

Ruathars are expected to be capable of serving as defenders of the elven people.

While many elf-friends render elves service of great importance through feats of diplomacy, invention, gift giving, or compassion, only those who are willing and able to hazard their lives side-to-side with elf warriors are made into ruathars.

Therefore, elves must find some basic competence with blade or spell in a potential ruathar before they consider bestowing the honor of the ritual.

Ruathars must be noteworthy examples of elven values, so they are often particularly keen-eyed, magically skilled, or well-spoken individuals.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Base Attack Bonus: +6, OR Skills: Any skill 9 ranks, OR

Spells: Ability to cast 3rd-level spells.

Special: In addition to meeting one of the three requirements given above, you must have performed a great service to an elf community, such as participating in the defeat of a monster of at least CR 10, recovering a valuable elven magic item, or risking death in order to save an elf's life.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft (any), Diplomacy, Handle Animal, Hide, Knowledge (all skills, taken individually), Listen, Move Silently, Profession, Search, Sense Motive, Spellcraft, Spot, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

You continue to improve both your skill at arms and your spellcasting abilities as you advance in level.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You receive Martial Weapon Proficiency as a bonus feat.

You can choose the longsword, rapier, longbow (including composite longbow), or shortbow (including composite shortbow).

Other than that, you gain no proficiency with any type of weapon, armor, or shield.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level. You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one spellcasting class before becoming a ruathar, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Word of Friendship (Sp): You learn a short magical phrase that identifies you as a ruathar.

While anyone can learn to mouth the words of the phrase, only ruathars are taught the magical key that makes the phrase more than just a few words in Elven.

This is a sonic, language-dependent effect and is equivalent to a 1st-level spell.

The word of friendship does not influence the hearer's mind in any way, but all elves know that only ruathars are taught it.

Elves addressed in such a fashion generally begin with an attitude of friendly or helpful toward you, unless you are obviously engaged in an evil act.

Gift of the Elves: During the ruathar ceremony, you are traditionally presented with a gift of elven magic to aid you in your travels.

This gift takes the form of any one of the following items: boots of elvenkind, cloak of elvenkind, elven chain, a +1 rapier, a +1 longsword, or a +1 composite longbow (Strength bonus up to +4, as appropriate for you).

The elves provide whatever gift they deem most useful to you.

If the gift is lost or destroyed, you do not receive another one.

While you are free to give away or sell the gift, good manners dictate that the gift of the elves should be kept and treasured.

Low-Light Vision (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain low-light vision.

You can see twice as far as a human in conditions of dim illumination.

If you already have low-light vision, you gain improved low-light vision, and you can now see four times as far as a human in conditions of dim illumination.

Elfwise (Ex): At 2nd level, you gain the uncanny visual acuity and senses of the elves.

You gain a +2 bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks. (These bonuses stack with an elf's racial bonuses).

Star Blessing (Su): At 3rd level, you gain a +1 sacred bonus on attack rolls and saving throws while under the night sky (above ground and outside during nighttime).

Arvador's Grace (Ex): When you reach 3rd level, the love of the elven folk actually changes you, instilling in you a glimmer of elven agelessness.

Your racial life span and the lower limit of each of your age categories increase by 50%.

If this change places you in a younger age category than you formerly occupied, you retain any ability score bonuses and penalties you previously gained for aging—your aging effectively stalls until you cross a threshold into an age category that's new to you.

For example, a human normally reaches middle age at 35, old age at 53, and venerable age at 70, and his maximum age is 2d20 years beyond that.

A 3rd-level human ruathar reaches middle age at 52, old age at 79, venerable age at 105, and has a maximum age of 3d20 years beyond that.

If a 40-year-old human became a 3rd-level ruathar, his age category would revert to adult.

He would retain the -1 penalty to Strength, Dexterity, and Constitution he took when he previously entered middle age at age 35, as well as the +1 bonus to Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma he previously received.

He wouldn't age further until age 79, when he would receive the bonuses and penalties for old age.

Even elf ruathars can receive Arvador's grace; such characters are astonishingly long-lived.

PLAYING A RUATHAR

You have earned a special trust that very few nonelves ever receive.

Above all else, you want to live up to that trust and make sure that you never abuse it.

It's very likely that you already carry yourself with at least some amount of grace, compassion, and wisdom.

After all, if the elves did not see in you many of the values and character traits they hold praiseworthy, they would not have named you a ruathar.

In dealing with others, be patient and consider long-term repercussions.

As a ruathar, your actions reflect on those elves who honored you as an elf-friend.

Do not give hasty answers or act rashly.

You believe, as do the elves, that many problems are only worsened by taking a quick and ill-considered response today, when a better answer might become apparent with a little time.

Don't be afraid to stop and ask yourself: What would my elf friends want me to do now?

While you admire elven ways and seek to emulate elves in many respects, one of the things that your elf comrades most admire in you is the fact that you are not an elf.

You often think of things that would never occur to elves, and sometimes see answers to problems that elves might otherwise miss.

You are at your best when you combine your knowledge and respect for elven ways with the particular viewpoint of your own race.

COMBAT

Your character's strengths and weaknesses remain largely unchanged by taking ruathar levels.

If you were a skilled spellcaster before, you remain one.

If you were a skilled melee combatant before, you still are now.

Do not expect a level or two in ruathar to change the way you handle yourself in a fight.

Remember, though—elves don't often seek out unnecessary fights, and it never hurts to ask yourself whether an act of stealth, subterfuge, or spellcasting might achieve the same result as a battle, but with much less risk.

ADVANCEMENT

As a ruathar, you are not expected to abandon your previous calling and try to be something you are not.

You should continue to hone whatever skills or talents you previously possessed.

If you were a fighter before you became a ruathar, you should continue to choose feats that support your own combat style or help to shore up your weaknesses.

If you were a wizard, you should continue to pursue knowledge of spells in your favored schools of magic and search out arcane lore useful in your chosen quests.

While the ruathar class abilities offer few specific advancement paths, the class slightly favors multiclass characters, who find the combination of a good base attack bonus and good spellcasting advancement useful.

If all you have (other than your ruathar levels) are levels in fighter or some other nonspellcasting class, you are not gaining the full benefit the ruathar class offers.

Consider picking up a level of a spellcasting class, even if you otherwise might not have done so.

The ruathar class also offers some attractive benefits for characters who are good at stealth and detection.

While the class does not provide a great number of skill points, its class skills are useful ones such as Hide, Search, and Spot.

In addition, the low-light vision and elfwise abilities are very useful for characters such as halflings or humans who otherwise don't see well in the dark.

RESOURCES

A ruathar can live among the elves as long as he likes, but he will be expected to be as self-sufficient and responsible as any other member of the community.

A ruathar can even bring nonelf guests into an elf community, and the elves will respect the ruathar's judgment as to the intentions and discretion of his comrades (although the ruathar must answer for his poor judgment as any other elf would, should his trust prove to be misplaced).

A ruathar can certainly purchase or trade for minor magic items, elven items, spellcasting services, and other such useful objects if he so chooses.

Ruathars in distress can count on whatever aid the elves can muster, without expectation of repayment.

Of course, ruathars who require rescuing more than once or twice, or who ask for help when it isn't clearly needed, could conceivably wear out their welcome—but the elves don't make elf-friends of the sorts of people who would abuse their trust, and so the question "How much is too much?" simply doesn't come up.

RUATHARS IN THE WORLD

Elf-friends are generally found in and around elf settlements, as one might expect.

Any nonelf who spends a lot of time near elves might be a ruathar, although in truth real elf-friends are very rare indeed.

Ruathars who don't actually live among elves often serve as elven eyes and voices in other lands.

For example, a human cleric who happens to be an elf-friend keeps her eyes open for news that might interest elves, and certainly reports any dangers she discovers in her travels.

If need be, a ruathar speaks on behalf of his elf friends, representing their views in the courts of human nobles or the throne halls of dwarven clan-fathers.

Most ruathars would not presume to commit their friends to dangerous or distasteful courses of action, but if some matter must be decided, the ruathar can give an answer, and the elves will give his words the same weight they would give to their own.

ORGANIZATION

No real organization of ruathars exists.

Each ruathar is a unique individual, and the majority of ruathars know no other elf-friends.

(The elves themselves know many ruathars, of course).

Sometimes, small orders or bands of trustworthy elf allies—for example, the rangers of a particular forest, a druid circle, or an elite order of eldritch knights from a nearby human realm—may include a number of ruathars, all of whom have rendered great service to elvenkind. Any character belonging to such a group is likely to be treated as an elf-friend himself, even if he has not formally been named as such.

NPC REACTIONS

Ruathars have chosen to stand with the elves, for better or worse.

Those who befriend elves befriend ruathars; those who are enemies to elves are also enemies to ruathars.

Naturally, any elf who meets a ruathar is inclined to be either friendly or helpful toward the character, unless the elf is devoted to evil—in which case he likely looks on the ruathar as an insolent dog who crudely mimics the ways of the elf people.

Rangers and good-aligned bards or druids also look favorably upon a ruathar.

They know that anyone who has earned so much trust from the elf people must be a staunch defender of good and a potential ally in the fight against evil.

Dwarves tend to be suspicious of a ruathar and wonder what the character sees in the carefree, lazy lifestyle that elves embrace.

Orcs, goblins, and other humanoids who hate elves also despise ruathar.

A ruathar would be wise to avoid falling into their hands.

RUATHAR LORE

Characters with the Knowledge (geography) or Knowledge (local) skills can research the ruathars to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

Elf characters making these checks gain a +10 circumstance bonus.

DC 10: "Elves sometimes reward nonelves who have performed some great service for elvenkind by naming them elf-friends".

DC 15: "Elf-friends are called 'ruathars' in Elven.

They are given gifts of magic by the elves they have helped, and they are received as friends in any elf settlement".

DC 20: "Ruathars have phenomenal longevity; they're lightly touched by the same timelessness that elves seem to possess.

They also acquire some other elven traits, such as elven sight, and enjoy the blessing of the elven deities".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific elf-friends in your campaign.

PCs who wish to contact a ruathar can attempt to do so by making a DC 30 Gather Information check (or DC 20 if made in an elf settlement).

If a PC is an elf or a ruathar herself, she gains a +5 circumstance bonus on this check.

A successful check puts the PC in contact with an elf who knows the ruathar personally; whether the elf consents to lead the PCs to the elf-friend is another matter.

RUATHARS IN THE GAME

Almost any good-aligned nonelf character might be a ruathar, especially if he is a natural ally to the elves in your campaign.

A stalwart ranger who helps the elven folk to defend their forest from evil incursions, a cleric who once healed a badly wounded elf prince, or a wandering adventurer who happened to recover and return an elven artifact might easily have been named an elf-friend.

However, most ruathars in your game will likely be players, not NPCs.

The opportunity to become a ruathar is a special reward you can offer a player character who has completed a dangerous quest that aids the elf people.

Even if the PCs did not necessarily set out to perform a service for the elves, the elves admire brave and just deeds, especially those that counter the machinations of evil forces.

The ruathar prestige class appeals to players who like to immerse their characters in the evolving story of the campaign and sink roots into the world you're building for them.

Winning a rare and special honor such as the undying friendship of the elf people is an especially memorable reward, something that these players will appreciate much more than simple experience points and gold pieces.

ADAPTATION

The drow have ruathar of their own, whose mind-set and personality are as well attuned to the dark elves as normal elf-friends are to the surface elves; nonevil player characters would certainly not want to meet them.

Drow-favored ruathar gain darkvision rather than low-light vision at 2nd level and a +1 profane bonus on attacks and saves when underground at 3rd level.

Beyond this, the ruathar prestige class is one that does not adapt well.

You probably shouldn't try to make it into something it isn't.

While you could easily envision a prestige class of "dwarf-friends" or "halfling-friends", the ruathar class features reflect elven strengths and talents.

You would have to create a new set of class features to theme the ruathar class for another race.

SKYPLEDGED

"Hear my cry, lords of wind and sky!

Honor the age-old bargain once more!"

—Mikraeni Vithikil, skypledged druid

The skypledged represent a mystical tradition among the raptorans that harkens back to an ancient pact with powerful lords of the Elemental Plane of Air.

The sky pledged are a tangible manifestation of that pact, exchanging divine power with one another and with powerful air elementals.

BECOMING A SKYPLEDGED

Raptoran clerics and druids will find it relatively straightforward to join the skypledged once they have acquired a modicum of divine power.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Raptoran.

Spells: Ability to cast summon monster IV or summon nature's ally IV.

Special: Flight extraordinary ability.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Concentration, Craft, Handle Animal, Heal, Intimidate, Knowledge (nature), Knowledge (the planes), Listen, Profession, Spellcraft, Spot, Survival.

CLASS FEATURES

The skypledged class features all relate to the bargain that the raptoran race made ages ago with powerful air elementals.

Skypledge: The skypledged receive much of their power from a conduit to the Elemental Plane of Air.

In exchange for this gift, every skypledged must be an exemplar of loyalty to his or her elemental patrons.

Upon joining the skypledged, you vow to aid air elementals in their struggles against other primal forces of the universe (such as the other elements).

As part of this vow, you voluntarily forego casting any spell with the fire, water, or earth descriptors.

If you choose to cast a prohibited spell, it functions normally, but you are considered a pledgebreaker (described below) until you pay for your transgression (often with an atonement spell).

Spell completion and spell trigger items that reproduce fire, water, or earth effects are not prohibited.

You can use a scroll of wall of fire or a staff of earth and stone normally.

Divine Spellpool (Su): The skypledged and their elemental patrons share a magical reservoir of spell energy bound into the fabric of the sky itself.

You can tap into this reservoir, called the spellpool, and call spells from this common resource at need.

Calling a Spell: Calling a spell from the spellpool can be done at any distance but requires you to have an open, unused spell slot of the appropriate level.

When preparing spells for the day, you decide at that time whether to leave some spell slots open.

You can call only for a spell of a level that you could normally cast.

You can call a number of spells per day whose total levels are equal to or less than half your caster level (round down, minimum one).

For example, a 7th-level cleric/1st-level skypledged can call one 3rd-level spell and one 1st-level spell, or two 2nd-level spells, assuming she has slots available and isn't considered a pledgebreaker.

When you call a spell, you take a full-round action to concentrate (which does provoke attacks of opportunity). The spell appears in your mind at the beginning of your next turn and can be used immediately.

However, if you do not cast the called spell within a number of minutes equal to your caster level, it fades from your mind as though cast.

Spell Availability: Three stages of access to the spellpool exist.

A new skypledged gains divine spellpool I privileges, which grants access to spells of 1st to 3rd level.

Starting at 4th level, divine spellpool II allows access to 4th- to 6th-level spells.

Starting at 7th level, divine spellpool III grants access to 7th- to 9th-level spells.

No 0-level spells are available, but the spellpool can provide any other spell on the cleric or druid spell list in the Player's Handbook—even cleric spells to a druid or druid spells to a cleric.

The only unavailable spells are those with the fire, earth, or water descriptor, and those cleric spells that appear as domain spells but not on the main cleric spell list.

Spellpool Debt: Every time you call a spell, you incur a debt. To pay this debt, you must return spell power to the spellpool, in the form of a spell you have prepared of a level equal to that of the called spell, or a number of spells whose combined levels equal the level of the called spell.

For instance, the spellpool debt for a 5th-level spell is five levels, which could be paid off with another 5th-level spell or any combination of spells whose levels total five.

Returning a spell's power to the spellpool is a full-round action, like calling a spell, and depletes a prepared spell slot as if the spell had been cast.

The debt must be repaid within a number of days equal to your skypledged class level; otherwise, you become a pledgebreaker (see below) and you cannot access the spellpool again until you repay your debt and atone for your transgression.

You must repay this debt as a part of any atonement for being a pledgebreaker.

You can't build up a positive balance with the spellpool by paying off a debt before incurring it.

Spellcasting: At each level, you gain new spells per day and an increase in caster level (and spells known, if applicable) as if you had also gained a level in a divine spellcasting class to which you belonged before adding the prestige class level.

You do not, however, gain any other class feature a character of that class would have gained.

If you had more than one divine spellcasting class before becoming a skypledged, you must decide to which class to add each level for the purpose of determining spells per day, caster level, and spells known.

Beckon Breeze (Sp): At 2nd level, you gain the ability to ask your elemental patrons to change the wind speed and direction on your behalf once per day.

You can change the wind direction as you like, and you can change the wind force by one category in either direction—for example, from light to moderate or from severe to strong (see Table 3–24: Wind Effects, page 95 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

The prevailing winds change everywhere within a 100-foot radius centered on your location at the time you ask the wind lords for aid.

The changes you create with this ability last 1 minute per level, and it takes 1d4 rounds for the winds to shift as you've beckoned.

This ability does not function indoors or underground.

Instant Supplication (Sp): Beginning at 3rd level, you can beg the wind-lords to save a falling creature within sight—often a comrade, but you can seek the boon for the yourself if you're somehow rendered unable to fly.

This effect functions like a feather fall spell cast on the targeted creature.

This is an immediate action that a skypledged character can use at any time (even on someone else's turn).

Beckon Winds (Sp): When you reach 5th level, this ability replaces the beckon breeze class feature.

It is identical to that ability, except you can now change the wind force by up to two categories (from light to strong, for example, or from severe to moderate).

Servant Supplication (Su): Starting at 6th level, you gain an ally drawn from the primal power of the Elemental Plane of Air.

Once per day, as a full-round action, you may call a 15 HD Large air elemental (described on page 131) to serve you loyally and well as long as you avoid pledgebreaker status. The air elemental remains with you for 1 hour, after which it returns to the Elemental Plane of Air.

The elemental acts as you command during your turn. Beckon Gale (Sp): At 8th level, this ability replaces the beckon winds class feature.

It is identical to that ability, except you can now change the wind force by up to four categories (from light to windstorm, for example, or from hurricane to moderate).

Assumptive Supplication (Su): Beginning at 9th level, you can ask the elemental powers to lend you their form for 1 minute once per day.

You assume the form of a Huge air elemental; see the 20th-level druid wild shape class feature, page 37 of the Player's Handbook.

Cyclonic Doom (Su): When you attain 10th level, the elemental lords cloak you in the protective power of your own personal cyclone, if you take a standard action to ask for their help.

A cyclone of magical wind spins through all spaces adjacent to you.

If you are on the ground, anyone in an adjacent square takes 15d6 points of bludgeoning damage from the magically enhanced wind.

Those who survive must succeed on a Fortitude save (DC 20 + your Str modifier) or be knocked prone.

If you are flying, anyone in an adjacent square takes 15d6 points of bludgeoning damage and must succeed on a Reflex save (DC 20 + your Str modifier) or be ejected 2d6×10 feet directly away from you (as if they had been bull rushed that far).

Check to see whether a creature is adjacent to you at the start of that creature's turn and at any point during that creature's movement.

If you move adjacent to someone, for example, he won't take damage or attempt a save until the start of his turn.

If someone moves adjacent to you, he takes damage and attempts the saving throw immediately.

The cyclonic doom ability is usable for 10 rounds per day, split up as desired.

You can activate or deactivate your cyclonic doom as a free action, but you can't do both in the same turn.

PLAYING A SKYPLEDGED

To be one of the skypledged is to love the freedom of the open skies and the rush of the wind over your feathered wings.

It's also a solemn role, because you are the tangible proof of an ancient pact made between your ancestors and the lords of the Elemental Plane of Air.

All raptorans have a minor connection to the pact—everyone finds air spells a little easier to manipulate, and all raptorans undergo the Walk of the Four Winds to honor the pact with the air elementals and earn the right to fly.

In contrast, you pledge to uphold the pact in a much more fundamental way.

The mysterious lords of the Elemental Plane of Air grant you extra power because you embody that ancient pact to the fullest.

Usually, you don't have to do anything other than forgo spells associated with other elements to keep your part of the bargain.

Nevertheless, the powerful elementals who made the pact know that if they need winged warriors from the Material Plane, they can call on the skypledged and get immediate help.

They haven't done so in living memory, but you could get the call to help fight a war on the Inner Planes at any time.

The skypledged are spread out among the thousands of flocks that make up raptoran society.

Their only organizational purpose is to pass along the tradition to worthy raptorans and look after the interests of the raptoran race.

Two skypledged who meet don't necessarily agree in matters of alignment, flock affiliation, or anything else.

As a skypledged, you share with your fellows an affinity for air and sky, but little else.

Another skypledged is no more or less likely to aid you than any other raptoran.

COMBAT

Skypledged are spellcasters first and foremost, so you'll generally circle a battlefield from above, hurling spell after spell from the sky.

Because the spellpool gives you access to both cleric and druid spells, you can confound your enemies with combinations few other spellcasters can manage, such as casting both barkskin and shield of faith before a fight, or following a holy smite spell with call lightning.

Many skypledged favor summoning spells (though your dedication to air constrains your choices somewhat), using minions from the Elemental Plane of Air to flank enemies, harry flying foes, and chase down escaping enemies.

You can also use the wind itself to good advantage.

By making the wind blow harder, you can render ranged attacks difficult or impossible.

By confounding archers, you've just made the sky a safer place for you to fly.

ADVANCEMENT

When a skypledged reaches old age, he or she passes along the tenets of the skypledge to two or three younger raptorans—often a flock's most capable clerics or druids.

Not all skypledged survive to old age, so those who do take multiple apprentices to ensure that the overall number of skypledged stays more or less constant.

Such training isn't unduly complicated.

A would-be member of the prestige class must memorize the skypledge itself, then must master the esoteric techniques for accessing the spellpool.

Prospective members also learn the names and histories of some of the mysterious elemental lords on the other side of the elemental-raptoran pact.

RESOURCES

The skypledged have no larger agenda beyond observing the ancient pact, so their organization provides little in the way of resources to its members, though a retiring skypledged will sometimes pass along heirloom weapons or other magic items to promising apprentices.

Part of the ancient pact states that the skypledged should be ready to go to war on behalf of the Elemental Plane of Air at a moment's notice, so you should make sure you're always properly equipped for battle.

(For most adventurers, this won't be a problem).

SKYPLEDGED IN THE WORLD

As an NPC, a skypledged makes an effective elite guardian of a raptoran flock.

The ability to combine druid and cleric magic offers an interesting surprise in combat, and a flying spellcaster with air elemental allies poses a tactical challenge for even a well-prepared group of adventurers.

ORGANIZATION

There's no hierarchy among the skypledged.

The organization of the class manifests more as a shared mystical tradition and a way of life than as a group with schemes and agendas.

Individual skypledged certainly have goals of their own, and there's nothing preventing a group of skypledged from working toward a common objective.

If anyone directs the affairs of the skypledged, it's the elemental lords on the Elemental Plane of Air.

The elemental lords vie with each other for dominance on their own plane.

They drop their internal rivalries only when plotting against the forces of other elemental planes and when facing other threats to the power of air.

The elemental lords function best in a campaign when their exact nature and goals remain mysterious.

If you want to introduce a specific elemental lord into one of your adventures, start with an elder air elemental, increase one of its mental ability scores to the mid-20s, and add levels in a spellcasting class (probably cleric or sorcerer).

Names of the better-known elemental lords include Halasti of the Twelve Zephyrs, Shallafari Achandi, Cumularon, and Rashalae of the Last Breath.

Most skypledged have positions of authority within a raptoran flock, but a few wander the Material Plane helping raptoran communities in need.

Some high-level skypledged spend time on the Elemental Plane of Air, soaring across the endless sky there.

Recently a couple of factions have emerged within the skypledged.

The Vanguard of the Home Skies is a group of several dozen skypledged who have taken it upon themselves to fight the forces of earth, fire, and water—despite no request to do so from an elemental lord.

They attack nonraptoran spellcasters who rely on the power of one of these elements, attack elementals of these kinds they find on the Material Plane, and even raid the other elemental planes.

The Liberators of Vanakalth are a group of seven skypledged who all had a role in the freeing of a noble djinni from imprisonment by a rakshasa clan.

The Liberators are making war on the rakshasas and may have other goals; the djinni Vanakalth now directs their affairs from a cloud-castle on the Elemental Plane of Air.

NPC REACTIONS

The skypledged used to be made up of only the best and brightest among the raptorans, but the ardor of the raptorans to observe the tenets of the pact has cooled somewhat over the centuries.

The average raptoran doesn't often think about the race's pact with the air elementals.

Most raptorans don't consider the pact an active concern but a historical event, and those same individuals largely see the skypledged as followers of an esoteric mysticism. Raptorans don't treat a skypledged any better than they would treat a member of another class.

They have a starting attitude of indifferent.

The skypledged have at least something in common with one another, even if their alignments and flock affiliations are at odds.

Two skypledged who meet have a starting attitude toward one another one step more favorable than would otherwise be the case.

Creatures native to the Elemental Plane of Air have a starting attitude of friendly toward skypledged.

It's rare for Material Plane creatures to understand elemental affairs, and rarer still for others to pledge service to an elemental ideal.

Creatures native to other elemental planes have a starting attitude of unfriendly if they know they're interacting with a skypledged.

If a raptoran is known to be a pledgebreaker, the attitudes of Inner Plane natives are reversed.

The powers of earth, fire, and water will be eager to talk to someone who has spurned the air, but natives of the Elemental Plane of Air will suspect treachery, or at least untrustworthiness, from a pledgebreaker.

SKYPLEDGED LORE

Characters with Knowledge (the planes) can research the skypledged to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The skypledged?

They're raptoran air-element spellcasters".

DC 15: "The skypledged are so called because they've promised to aid the Elemental Plane of Air if it's attacked.

In the meantime, they can draw spell power from the plane, and they're really good at summoning air elementals".

DC 20: "Most skypledged can cast both cleric and druid spells, and many have a powerful air elemental at their beck and call.

They can control the wind itself".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about specific skypledged in the campaign.

PCs who wish to contact a skypledged must first locate a raptoran tribe.

Once they have established contact with the tribe, a successful DC 20 Diplomacy check convinces the raptorans to identify one among their number (if any) as a skypledged.

SKYPLEDGED IN THE GAME

A skypledged PC doesn't place any unusual demands on the DM, because the skypledged organization doesn't demand much from its members.

Unless you're planning a planar campaign where the Elemental Plane of Air is threatened, the elemental lords that created the raptoran pact will never demand anything from the skypledged.

A skypledged PC will want to use her beckon abilities from time to time, so the adventures you create should have some outdoor encounters.

In addition, like any DM with a raptoran PC at the table, you'll quickly become adept at the aerial maneuverability rules (described on page 20 of the Dungeon Master's Guide).

ADAPTATION

As written, the prestige class reflects an important event in raptoran history: the pact with the air elementals.

It can also serve as a model for any spellcasting prestige class that has pledged itself to an extraplanar power.

If you alter the class in this way, you can leave the spellpool class feature intact and develop new abilities to replace the beckon and cyclonic doom class features.

ADVANCED LARGE AIR ELEMENTAL

This air elemental is typical of those received through a skypledged's servant supplication class feature. It is a 15 HD version of the one found on page 95 of the Monster Manual.

Large Air Elemental: CR 7; Large elemental (air, extraplanar); HD 15d8+45; hp 112; Init +11; Spd fly 100 ft. (perfect); AC 20, touch 16, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +11; Grp +17; Atk +18 melee (2d6+2, slam); Full Atk +18 melee (2d6+2, 2 slams); SA air mastery, whirlwind; SQ damage reduction 5/–, darkvision 60 ft., elemental traits; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref +16, Will +5; Str 15, Dex 25, Con 16, Int 6, Wis 11, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Listen +9, Spot +9; Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Flyby Attack, Improved Initiative, Mobility, Spring Attack, Weapon Finesse, Weapon Focus (slam).

Air Mastery (Ex): Airborne creatures take a –1 penalty on attack and damage rolls against an air elemental.

Whirlwind (Su): This elemental can transform itself into a whirlwind once every 10 minutes for up to 7 rounds at a time.

The whirlwind is 5 feet wide at the base, 30 feet wide at the top, and 40 feet tall.

Medium or smaller creatures take 2d6 points of damage per round in the whirlwind (Reflex DC 19 negates).

A second Reflex save at the same DC is required to avoid being picked up by the winds. Creatures in the whirlwind take a –4 penalty to Dexterity and a –2 penalty on attack rolls.

A creature that can fly is allowed a Reflex save each round to escape the whirlwind.

If the base of the whirlwind touches the ground, the whirling debris creates a 20-foot-diameter cloud centered on the whirlwind.

The cloud obscures all vision, including darkvision, beyond 5 feet. Creatures 5 feet away have concealment, while those farther away have total concealment.

PLEDGEBREAKERS

Your pledge to forego fire, earth, and water spells is entirely voluntary on your part; you still have access to those spells, and you can prepare and cast them if you so choose. Likewise, you can take spells from the divine spellpool without replenishing the reservoir.

However, if you do either of those things, you are considered a pledgebreaker. While a pledgebreaker, you retain your spellcasting ability, but you lose access to other class features until you atone for your breach of the ancient pact between the raptors and the air elementals. An atonement spell is often a good way to restore your good standing in terms of the pledge. Unless you broke your pledge while under magical compulsion or similar extenuating circumstances, it'll cost you 500 XP to atone for your misdeed. In particularly egregious cases, the elemental lords may put a geas/quest on you prior to letting you back into the fold.

STORMTALON

"Fear nothing!

Death from the sky!"

—Austriesha, stormtalon captain

The stormtalons are consummate aerial warriors, using both their weapons and their razor-sharp foot talons to dive on their hapless foes.

They are elite protectors of the raptoran race, sent by the high chieftain whenever a raptoran flock is in trouble.

BECOMING A STORMTALON

Becoming a stormtalon means joining the raptoran equivalent of the military.

Recruits are tested for combat prowess before admission into the ranks of the stormtalons, so fighters, paladins, rangers, and barbarians get into the prestige class easiest.

The latter two classes find the stormtalon class particularly appealing because they don't wear heavy armor anyway and will be able to fly unencumbered.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Raptoran.

Base Attack Bonus: +5.

Special: Flight extraordinary ability.

CLASS SKILLS

(2 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Craft, Intimidate, Jump, Spot, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

The stormtalon's class features all make you a better fighter in the air.

Foot Talons (Ex): The first lesson a stormtalon learns is how to sharpen his or her foot talons so they become weapons. Such sharpening takes an hour a day to maintain, but it turns your feet into claws that deal 1d6 points of damage plus your Strength modifier.

You are considered proficient with these attacks.

When you make a full attack, you use your full base attack bonus with any weapons in hand and take a –5 penalty on your talon attack.

The Multiattack feat (see page 304 of the Monster Manual) lessens this penalty to –2.

You can use your foot talons only when you're airborne. They deal both piercing and slashing damage, so they'll do double damage when you make a dive attack (see page 68). The talons are useful as weapons, but they're not dexterous enough to wield weapons or perform any action requiring fine motor skills.

Bonus Aerial Feat: At every even-numbered level, you learn a new trick useful to aerial combat.

Choose a feat from the following list: Aerial Reflexes†, Aerial Superiority†, Born Flyer†, Diving Charge†, Flyby Attack*, Hover*, Improved Flight†, Multiattack*, Wingover*.

* Feat described on page 304 of the Monster Manual.

† New feats described in Chapter 6 of this book.

Fast Flight (Ex): Beginning at 3rd level, you gain a fly speed 10 feet faster than the norm for your race.

At 5th level, it's 20 feet faster, and at 9th level, it's 40 feet faster.

Except that this class feature applies to fly speed rather than land speed, it otherwise functions like the fast movement barbarian class feature described on page 25 of the Player's Handbook.

Improved Foot Talons (Ex): When you reach 7th level, you have become more adept at dealing wicked cuts with your foot talons.

Your talons now deal 1d8 points of damage and can be used even when you aren't flying.

PLAYING A STORMTALON

The stormtalon's battle cry "Death from the sky!" tells you all you need to know.

You swoop down on your foes and deal grievous damage before they even know what hit them.

Take this prestige class if you want a potent combination of battlefield maneuverability and combat effectiveness.

You're also part of a larger organization devoted to protecting raptoran flocks scattered all across the world. When the high chieftain of the raptorans sends in the stormtalons, it's a sign that she takes a particular crisis seriously.

COMBAT

You obviously fight best when you're in the air, but your tactical decisions just start there.

You can function as pinpoint artillery for your allies, circling above the battlefield and skewering with arrows anything that moves.

Alternatively, you can dive down on your foes, dealing double damage with a spear or other piercing weapon and then either moving back out of harm's way or hovering just above the enemy.

Once your enemies have seen one technique, you can confound them by switching to the other.

Your ability to get airborne is also useful before a fight starts.

You can scout out the best terrain in relative safety and perhaps see enemies before they see you.

You're able to get around the battlefield easier than either your nonraptoran comrades or your enemies, so you can quickly move to provide a flanking situation, get a healing potion to a fallen friend, or cut off an enemy's escape route.

ADVANCEMENT

Would-be stormtalons have to pass a six-week training regimen designed to weed out those who aren't tough enough.

You don't have to play through the whole basic training process; your DM will likely account for it between adventures.

You'll periodically reconnect with the stormtalon leadership to get further training.

The leadership may also assign you missions from time to time, sending you to defend a raptoran flock that's in some kind of trouble.

RESOURCES

Stormtalons traditionally wield spears in combat, and the organization has accumulated quite an arsenal of magic spears over the years.

PCs who want a magic spear can get one for 80% of its normal cost if they contact the stormtalons and request one.

Acquiring a spear this way takes one week per point of enhancement bonus (or equivalent if the spear has a special ability).

STORMTALONS IN THE WORLD

The stormtalon prestige class is a good fit for a player who wants to focus on aerial combat.

As a group, the stormtalons function as the cavalry that rushes in at the last minute to save an endangered raptoran flock.

Depending on the situation, the stormtalons might be the answer to PCs' prayers or the object of their curses.

ORGANIZATION

The stormtalons are organized like a military, with senior officers issuing commands to junior officers in charge of small groups of rank-and-file soldiers.

However, they are dispersed across the world, so communication up and down the chain of command is reserved for major issues.

Each stormtalon has a great degree of autonomy.

At any one time, a few hundred stormtalons are stationed near the high chieftain of the raptorans.

If a raptoran flock is in trouble, the group sends a message (often by magical means) to the high chieftain.

If the chieftain perceives a serious threat, she orders a small team of stormtalons (usually less than a dozen) to fly to the distressed flock and take care of the situation.

Storm talons are also usually the ones chosen as messengers when the high chief needs to deliver urgent news to leaders of other races.

Stormtalons who aren't stationed with the high chieftain or out on a mission are dispersed among the thousands of raptoran flocks.

Often an individual stormtalon or a small group will be assigned several flocks to watch over.

The individual or group visits each in turn, benefiting from each flock's hospitality but remaining alert for threats.

Stormtalons can also request "detached duty", which maintains their standing in the organization but frees them to travel on their own.

As long as a stormtalon provides a way for superior officers to make contact with him, he's likely to be granted detached duty status.

Adventuring PCs will probably spend most of their time on detached duty.

A rivalry exists between the high chieftain's stormtalons and those dispersed among the raptoran flocks. The high chieftain's stormtalons believe that their fellows lose the benefit of discipline when they aren't in daily contact with the rest of the organization.

The flock-based stormtalons believe that the high chieftain's stormtalons are too "by the book" and unwilling to employ creative solutions.

There's an element of truth to both stereotypes.

The rivalry isn't violent—a stormtalon is a stormtalon, after all—but the raptoran penchant for debate often comes home to roost in a chieftain-versus-flock argument.

NPC REACTIONS

The average raptoran adores the stormtalons.

They're the raptoran equivalent of the colonial Minutemen, the Texas Rangers, and the 101st Airborne all rolled into one.

A raptoran's starting attitude toward a stormtalon is friendly—or helpful if the stormtalons are responding to a threat against a flock.

STORMTALON LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can research the stormtalons to learn more about them.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "The stormtalons are what raptorans call their best warriors".

DC 15: "Stormtalons work in small groups at the behest of the raptoran leadership.

They swoop in to save raptoran communities under some kind of threat".

DC 20: "The stormtalons train endlessly in aerial combat, and they fight in three dimensions better than most people fight in two".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn important details about the activities of specific stormtalons in your campaign.

Stormtalons are far from shy, so PCs trying to establish contact with one need only contact the nearest raptoran flock (which can require a DC 20 Gather Information check if its location is not already known).

Once the PCs have made their intentions known, the nearest stormtalon will seek them out at a time and place of his choosing to find out their purpose.

STORMTALONS IN YOUR GAME

A stormtalon PC will probably spend most of his time on detached duty status, but you can have a superior officer assign a mission if you need to kick-start an adventure that involves a threatened raptoran flock.

Stormtalons will fight alongside nonraptorans as needed, so the entire party can rush to the rescue of a raptoran flock under monstrous attack.

The stormtalons are also a useful way to rescue PCs who have gotten themselves in over their heads near a raptoran community—and a tough foe for PCs who attack a raptoran cliff dwelling.

Any raptoran PC wants the chance to fly from time to time, but it's essential to give a stormtalon that chance in almost every fight.

Occasionally, it's okay to send the action into low-ceilinged tunnels when you want to give a stormtalon PC an extra challenge, but such encounters should be the exception, not the rule.

ADAPTATION

While the stormtalons are designed for the raptoran race, this prestige class would be appropriate for any flying race such as gargoyles, half-celestials, half-fiends, and aarakocras (found in the FORGOTTEN REALMS® campaign setting).

WHISPERKNIFE

"Killed a halfling over a trifling bit of property?

Burned a wagon, maybe, or drove peaceful settlers out into the wilderness?

Cheated the small folk out of money because you knew that they couldn't even the score—when there were only a handful of them but a whole townful of you?

I'll find you, and I'll collect the debt you owe my kin.

You'll never see me coming."

—Gerend Eastwind, halfling whisperknife

Many halflings are rogues; everyone knows that.

Some towns are careful to befriend halfling caravans, offering honest work and a fair deal in the expectation that halflings won't steal from friends.

Other settlements are standoffish and suspicious, relying on vigilance and harsh laws to discourage any larcenous intent.

Still other places greet halflings with violence, cruelty, and scorn, sheltering brigands and thieves who feel free to murder and rob those who are smaller and less numerous than they are.

Halfling caravans avoid such settlements from then on—but the halfling whisperknife seeks them out, repaying murder, theft, or humiliation in the same coin.

BECOMING A WHISPERKNIFE

A whisperknife must be stealthy, quick, and skilled at both ranged and melee combat.

The quickest path to this prestige class is to begin with one or two levels of rogue in order to gain the necessary skills and sneak attack ability, and then switch to fighter or ranger to improve overall combat ability (in the form of base attack bonus) and learn the necessary feats.

A few whisperknives acquire some arcane spellcasting in the form of a couple of levels of sorcerer or wizard, because spells such as invisibility or deep slumber can make the deadly work of the whisperknife much easier.

A whisperknife of this sort often begins with three or four levels of rogue, then gains five or six levels in an arcane spellcasting class.

However, qualifying for the whisperknife class is much easier with the bonus feats offered by either the fighter or ranger class.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Halfling.

Base Attack Bonus: +4.

Skills: Balance 3 ranks, Climb 3 ranks, Hide 6 ranks, Jump 3 ranks, Move Silently 6 ranks, Tumble 3 ranks.

Feats: Point-Blank Shot, Quick Draw, Two-Weapon Fighting, Weapon Finesse.

Special: Sneak attack +1d6.

CLASS SKILLS

(6 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Bluff, Climb, Disable Device, Handle Animal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (local), Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Search, Sense Motive, Sleight of Hand, Spot, Swim, Tumble.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance in level, you become better at switching from melee combat to ranged combat in the blink of an eye. You become a mobile and infuriating opponent who can launch a devastating barrage of sneak attacks.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no proficiency with any weapon or armor.

Rapid Shot: Whenever you are throwing light weapons, you are treated as having the Rapid Shot feat, even if you do not have the normal prerequisites for that feat.

Most whisperknives, true to their names, throw daggers in this way.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): You cannot be caught flat-footed and react to danger before your senses would normally allow you to do so.

You retain your Dexterity bonus to AC even if caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker.

However, you still lose your Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

If you already have uncanny dodge from another class, you instead gain improved uncanny dodge (see below), and the levels from that class stack with your levels of whisperknife to determine the minimum level a rogue must be to flank you.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Beginning at 2nd level, you deal an extra 1d6 points of damage when you are flanking an opponent or at any time when the target would be denied its Dexterity bonus.

This extra damage applies to ranged attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

At 5th level the extra damage increases to 2d6, and at 8th level it increases to 3d6.

See the rogue class feature, page 50 of the Player's Handbook.

Defensive Throw (Ex): At 3rd level, you learn special defensive techniques for attacking with thrown weapons. You no longer provoke attacks of opportunity for attacking with a thrown weapon (however, if you attack with a different sort of ranged weapon, such as a bow, you still provoke attacks of opportunity).

Improved Catch (Ex): Also at 3rd level, you become so skilled with thrown weapons that you can take better advantage of a weapon with the returning special ability. When you make a ranged attack with a returning weapon, you can move after the attack, and the weapon will still return to you as long as line of sight between you and the weapon exists at the beginning of your next turn.

Close Defense (Ex): Beginning at 4th level, you know how to fight in a crowd of larger opponents.

If you are adjacent to a Medium or larger foe, you gain a +2 dodge bonus to Armor Class against attacks from all foes adjacent to you.

If the Medium or larger foe moves away or falls, you lose the benefit of close defense (although you might be able to move next to the same foe again on your next turn and reestablish it).

Enemies making ranged attacks or attacks with reach weapons aren't affected by close defense.

Fast Movement (Ex): At 6th level, you have mastered the art of unusually swift movement.

Your land speed is faster than the norm for halflings by 10 feet.

This benefit applies only when you are wearing no armor, light armor, or medium armor and not carrying a heavy load.

Apply this bonus before modifying your speed because of any load carried or armor worn.

Poison Use (Ex): Starting at 6th level, you are trained in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning yourself when applying poison to a blade.

Vengeful Strike (Su): Beginning at 7th level, as a standard action you can execute a single vengeful strike in place of a sneak attack.

You coldly whisper the name of your intended victim to your weapon, and then you make a single melee or ranged attack.

You gain a +2 morale bonus on the attack roll.

If you hit, your foe must make a Fortitude save (DC 10 + your class level + your Dex modifier) or be stunned for 1d4 rounds.

You must know the victim's name in order to make a vengeful strike; "that orc over there" is not good enough.

Creatures without names (most creatures of Intelligence 2 or lower) are not subject to a vengeful strike.

You usually use this ability against a person or creature you know to have harmed halflings.

You can use this ability once per day at 7th level and three times per day at 10th level.

Superior Catch (Ex): When you reach 8th level, your improved catch ability is extended.

You can use two returning weapons for two attacks each in a single round, or you can use one returning weapon for three attacks in the same round, as long as your target is no farther away than one range increment.

(If your target is farther away than one range increment, you can still use your superior catch ability, but only for a single attack each turn).

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): When you reach 9th level, you can no longer be flanked.

See the barbarian class feature, page 26 of the Player's Handbook.

Ranged Flank (Ex): At 9th level, you know how to flank a foe by using a ranged weapon.

You must be within 10 feet of the enemy in question, and you flank as if you were wielding a reach weapon (see Reach Weapons, page 137 of the Player's Handbook).

You do not threaten the foe and may not make attacks of opportunity against the foe unless you are actually adjacent to the foe and armed with a melee weapon.

PLAYING A WHISPERKNIFE

If there's one thing you can't stand, it's a bully.

You've seen them all your life—people who use their bigger size or better social standing in order to push around those smaller or poorer than they are.

Your fellow halflings aren't defenseless, of course, but they prefer to deal with bullies by picking up their stakes and leaving trouble behind.

You, on the other hand, are inclined to teach a bully a hard and lasting lesson.

After all, if you let a thug or a robber get away with pushing you around, the same will happen to the next person to come around after you leave.

If you demonstrate that it can be dangerous to make enemies of halflings, maybe the bullies will think twice before they start trouble with the small folk again.

While you are quite able to teach a lethal lesson when it's called for, you also keep a sense of proportional response.

An influential human merchant who cheats a halfling caravan and then has the town guard drive off the camp hasn't killed anybody.

He deserves vengeance in the form of embarrassment, theft, or exposure.

In comparison, a gang of brigands or orc marauders that sack a halfling caravan should be made to pay the ultimate price.

While a dead brigand might not learn much from your efforts, he won't repeat his crimes, and his example might serve to dissuade other ruffians and robbers in the area.

Keep your eyes open and your blades close, but don't tip your hand until it's time to act.

The deterrent you present is made much more effective if you don't seem to be anything other than an ordinary halfling adventurer.

Let people wonder whether all halflings can fight with the stealth and ferocity you possess.

It'll be good for them to treat the small folk with a little respect.

COMBAT

You're an ambusher, most effective when you strike quickly and avoid being trapped in a long, dangerous melee.

Keep moving, use your enemies for cover, and above all use your abilities to create as many sneak attack opportunities as possible.

Get up close to enemies who are not skilled in melee, such as wizards or sorcerers, and stay away from enemies who can beat you in a head-on fight, such as fighters or powerful monsters.

Your Rapid Shot feat and improved catch ability make you very effective as a ranged sneak attack specialist.

Remember, halflings gain a +1 attack bonus with thrown weapons; you're at your best with a bandolier of daggers and an enemy standing 10 feet away.

By the time you have a couple of levels in whisperknife, you can deliver multiple sneak attacks in a single round.

ADVANCEMENT

Surprise and mobility are your best weapons on the battlefield.

Look for feats, skills, or magic items that add to these capabilities.

Dodge and Mobility help you to move around enemies and avoid attacks of opportunity, as does the Tumble skill.

Improved Initiative increases your chance of catching a foe flat-footed at the beginning of a fight and ending the battle before the other fellow even knows it has started.

Your Dexterity score probably exceeds your Strength score by a fair margin, so Weapon Finesse will make you a much better melee combatant.

If you decide to take levels in classes other than whisperknife as you advance, you should strongly consider ranger, fighter, or rogue.

Ranger and fighter levels add more of the feats that you will want to master, while rogue levels increase your sneak attack damage faster.

Find yourself at least one dagger or similar light thrown weapon with the returning special ability, and preferably two or more.

You'll never run out of things to throw as long as at least one of them comes back each round.

RESOURCES

Every halfling settlement or caravan is your haven and your retreat.

Like a partisan or a guerrilla, you can move among your neighbors and kin, hidden from the eyes of your enemies.

Even halflings who generally disapprove of your methods will shelter you for a short time; they know how important it is for halflings to look out for each other.

Your closest allies are the other members of your triangle (see below).

Even if you go for a long time without seeing these comrades, you should stay in touch by correspondence or by leaving messages for them at prearranged places.

When you need someone in the next town over to dig into the truth of a rumor or observe the comings and goings of a particular person, the other whisperknives in your triangle may be able to help you.

Of course, you should expect to do the same for them when they request it.

Not all other whisperknives are your friends.

While few whisperknives ever raise blades against each other, some members of the class are little more than secretive halfling assassins, willing to kill anyone if the price is right.

You share a simple professional courtesy with whisperknives whose methods and motivation differ from yours, but you certainly do not have to help them in their work, nor should you expect them to help you in yours.

WHISPERKNIVES IN THE WORLD

Like the halflings themselves, whisperknives present a dichotomous face to the world.

They are assassins in all but name, frequently stalking and killing the enemies of the halfling race, but they are also courageous defenders of their people.

While some whisperknives lose their way and become simple killers for hire, most save their blades for those who have done (or intend to do) injury to other halflings.

Many whisperknives submerge this hidden cause within the career of an itinerant adventurer, keeping their eyes open for dangers to the halfling race as they wander from land to land.

ORGANIZATION

For generations, whisperknives have used an effective organizational structure: the triangle.

Whisperknives gather in small fellowships of only three members.

Usually, two of these are experienced whisperknives, and the third is an aspiring candidate who is mentored by the other two.

When one whisperknife dies or moves on, the remaining members of the triangle seek out a likely new member—either a solitary whisperknife looking for a triangle to join or a promising new candidate.

Triangles meet in secret and take pains to avoid the discovery of any one of their members as a whisperknife. The purposes and training methods of the whisperknives are recorded as a sort of code or tradition, handed down from member to member over time.

No grand society of whisperknives exists to coordinate the activities of each triangle, although the whisperknife traditions include various signs and passwords by which a member of one triangle can identify the member of a different one.

A whisperknife triangle is basically an association of equals. Because the members rarely operate in concert, an individual is free to pursue whatever calling or interests he likes.

It is not unusual for whisperknives to spend years away from their fellow triangle members, engaged in their own adventures and simply keeping in touch by the occasional letter or message left at a favorite inn.

NPC REACTIONS

Since most people don't recognize the difference between a whisperknife and any other halfling rogue or fighter, members of this prestige class generally provoke the same sort of reactions that any halfling adventurer would among a particular community.

In lands where halflings are regarded as lazy thieves and swindlers, a whisperknife is regarded with an unfriendly attitude.

In lands where halflings are thought of as pleasant (if sometimes larcenous) travelers and neighbors, a whisperknife enters most encounters facing an indifferent or even friendly attitude.

Other halflings are of a mixed mind about whisperknives. Some believe that the whisperknife is only borrowing trouble for all halflings, and they advocate retreat and avoidance instead of confrontation.

Other halflings admire the courage and skill of the whisperknife, and they believe that whisperknives serve to deter the worst of the aggression against the halfling people.

In general, a whisperknife can expect a friendly reaction from other halflings.

WHISPERKNIFE LORE

Characters with Knowledge (local) can undertake research to find out more about whisperknife triangles that might be operating in a particular area and about whisperknives in general.

When a character makes a skill check, read or paraphrase the following material, including the information from lower DCs.

DC 10: "People who grievously harm roaming halfling caravans have a tendency to turn up dead a little while later. There is a secret society of halfling assassins who make a point of killing those who murder or rob other halflings".

DC 15: "These so-called assassins are known as whisperknives.

Some are actually assassins, and they kill for money. Most are secret defenders of the halfling race, stealthy and ruthless blademasters who use their martial skills to make other folk answer for injuries they do to halflings.

Not every halfling caravan or settlement is watched over by a whisperknife, but you never know which ones are".

DC 20: "Whisperknives always associate in triangles, or groups of three.

They rarely work together, but instead gather to pass on the rites and traditions of the whisperknife and to trade news of the enemies of halflings.

Whisperknives have no overarching society or leadership beyond the traditions of their calling".

DC 30: Characters who achieve this level of success can learn the names and known exploits of specific whisperknives.

Contacting a whisperknife is not easy if you are not a halfling.

Whisperknives naturally conceal the true nature of their vocation from any nonhalfling, passing themselves off as scouts, rogues, or simply adventurers of indeterminate sort. A DC 25 Gather Information check in a halfling caravan or settlement puts a character seeking a whisperknife in contact with a go-between who decides whether to introduce the character to a whisperknife.

A halfling who attempts this Gather Information check gains a +10 circumstance bonus; a check made in a settlement without any significant halfling presence has a DC of at least 35.

WHISPERKNIVES IN THE GAME

A whisperknife excels at looking like something less than he is.

You could easily introduce a whisperknife into your campaign by creating an ally for the players who turns out to be more skilled and dangerous than they expect.

You could present a whisperknife as a villain, an assassin who intends to kill someone the PCs are duty bound to protect.

In a more sophisticated campaign, consider introducing the whisperknife as a vigilante whose excesses must be checked.

The whisperknife prestige class appeals to players who want to combine the stealth and flexibility of the rogue with the combat power of the fighter or ranger.

It also offers the opportunity to play against type, by creating a somber and serious halfling who's more interested in fighting than subterfuge and who possesses a bit of a cruel streak, at least when it comes to dealing with those he thinks of as his enemies.

ADAPTATION

The whisperknife is a good class for any Small character; a goblin whisperknife or kobold whisperknife would work just as well as a halfling whisperknife.

You might choose to make this class available to characters of Medium size, but you should alter the close defense class feature to a crowd defense ability that provides the same benefit as long as the character is adjacent to at least two enemies.

WILDRUNNER

*“The land nourishes my soul.
It gives my feet wings and makes my spirit soar.
Thanks to the land I am the watcher unseen, the runner unheard,
and the tracker unerring.
To the enemies of the land I am death unseen and unrelenting.”*
—Finleia Luthiamne, Pack Leader of the Keepers of the High Vale

Wildrunners give themselves almost wholly to nature, seeking to return to their untamed roots and eventually become fey creatures.

Though seemingly barbaric, wildrunners retain their civilized learning and judgment while tapping into the primal forces within themselves and within the land. Some wildrunners choose to live after the fashion of untamed animals, unfettered and beholden to nothing but their own desires and their fundamental needs.

Most, however, become guardians of the land and of the communities that gave them birth.

BECOMING A WILDRUNNER

The ranger class is the easiest path to becoming a wildrunner; all the required skills are class skills for rangers, and the wildrunner’s abilities will make you a better ranger.

Barbarian, druid, and rogue also are good entry paths, although you’ll have to buy some skills as cross-class. Charisma (for your primal scream ability), Dexterity (for stealth abilities and ranged combat), and Strength (for melee combat) are key abilities for you.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Race: Elf or half-elf.

Alignment: Any good or chaotic.

Skills: Hide 5 ranks, Knowledge (nature) 5 ranks, Move Silently 5 ranks, Survival 8 ranks.

Feats: Endurance.

CLASS SKILLS

(4 + Int modifier per level): Balance, Climb, Handle Animal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Knowledge (nature), Listen, Move Silently, Spot, Survival, Swim.

CLASS FEATURES

As you advance in level, you gain abilities that aid you in mastering the environment and making you self-sufficient in the wild.

Weapon and Armor Proficiency: You gain no proficiency with any weapons or armor.

If you wear heavy armor, you do not benefit from your fast movement ability.

Fast Movement (Ex): Your land speed is faster than the norm for your race by 10 feet while wearing light, medium, or no armor.

This increase stacks with similar increases, such as that from the barbarian class.

See the barbarian class feature, page 25 of the Player’s Handbook.

Trackless Step (Ex): You cannot be tracked in natural surroundings.

See the druid class feature, page 36 of the Player’s Handbook.
Primal Scream (Su): At 2nd level, you become able to bring forth the power inherent within and release it in a blood-chilling scream.

Releasing a primal scream is a free action that does not provoke attacks of opportunity.

A primal scream induces a state of feral frenzy that lasts for a number of rounds equal to 3 + your Con modifier (minimum 1).

You can use your primal scream ability a number of times per day equal to 3 + your Cha modifier (minimum 1).

Using a primal scream always requires you to shout, so you cannot use a primal scream if you cannot speak.

In this frenzy, you gain a +2 bonus to Strength and a +6 bonus to Dexterity.

In addition, your jaw elongates and your teeth become razor-sharp; you gain a bite attack that deals 1d6 points of damage (1d4 if you are Small, or 1d8 if you are Large).

You can wield a weapon in one or both hands at your normal attack bonus and make a secondary bite attack, but in that case the bite attack takes a –5 attack penalty (or –2 with the Multiattack feat).

In addition to these effects, a primal scream confers additional benefits as you gain levels, as described below.

All effects are cumulative.

Enemies Shaken: Starting at 4th level, your primal scream makes enemies within 30 feet shaken when you activate the ability.

This is a sonic, mind-affecting fear effect.

Creatures in the area must make Will saves (DC 10 + your class level + your Cha modifier).

On a failed save, a creature is shaken for a number of rounds equal to your class level.

Creatures with more Hit Dice than you are immune to this effect.

Pounce: At 6th level, you gain the ability to pounce on an opponent in the round in which you activate your primal scream.

If you charge a foe in the same round that you scream, you may make a full attack, instead of the normal single attack allowed after a charge.

Enemies Cower: Beginning at 8th level, your primal scream can immobilize enemies with fear when you activate the ability.

This is a sonic, mind-affecting fear effect.

It functions like the enemies shaken ability described above, except that any enemy with less than half your Hit Dice that fails its Will save is cowering instead of shaken.

Fast Healing: At 10th level, when you activate your primal scream you gain fast healing 5 for the duration of your feral frenzy, as long as you have at least 1 hit point.

If you also have the rage class feature, you can rage and use your primal scream at the same time, gaining the benefits of both abilities.

Scent (Ex): At 2nd level, you learn to rely on senses that most other people never even suspect.

You gain the scent special ability.

You can detect opponents within 30 feet by sense of smell. If the opponent is upwind, the range increases to 60 feet; if the opponent is downwind, it drops to 15 feet.

You do not detect the exact location of the source—only its presence somewhere within range.

You can take a move action to note the direction of the scent.

Whenever you come within 5 feet of the source, you pinpoint the source's location.

Endure Elements (Sp): Starting at 3rd level, you can use endure elements on yourself at will.

Your caster level is equal to your wildrunner class level.

Hide in Plain Sight (Ex): Beginning at 5th level, you can use the Hide skill in natural terrain even while being observed.

See the ranger class feature, page 48 of the Player's Handbook.

Unfettered Stride (Ex): At 7th level, you gain the ability to move through or across a variety of terrain features without it affecting your movement or skill checks.

This ability applies to bogs, rubble, undergrowth, ice sheets, and natural stone floors.

See Chapter 3 of the Dungeon Master's Guide for the effect of terrain on movement and skill checks.

Feyheart: At 9th level, your mystic bond with nature changes your very being.

Your type becomes fey (augmented humanoid), and you gain damage reduction 2/cold iron.

PLAYING A WILDRUNNER

You are never completely at ease outside the wilderness. Many wildrunners carry some token brought from a familiar haunt.

It could be something trivial such as a vial of sand from a favorite spot along a river, a leaf or flower from a pleasant glade, or perhaps a feather from a native bird.

It could be something more practical, such as a staff or bow made from wood harvested in your home forest or a tinderbox with a bit of flint from the hills of home.

When adventuring anywhere, stay in touch with what's happening around you.

Observe the local plants, animals, or people, including the people in your party.

Try to ascertain what has happened recently, what the conditions are right now, and what might happen next.

You might express your interest in your surroundings actively by being curious as a cat or passively, like a deer listening for trouble.

In all cases, try to be sensitive to the moods in the people you meet and make some reaction to them.

You might avoid or try to soothe an angry comrade, calm a fearful villager, or bring a braggart down a few notches.

Above all, take an active role in whatever situation you discover, even if all you do is flee from it.

Wildrunners are learned and civilized, but they've worked hard to uncover the feral aspects of their natures, and they seldom deal with anything passively.

COMBAT

Your primal scream abilities are what set you apart from other characters, so use them aggressively.

It doesn't pay to squander your limited daily uses of this power, but there's no prize for finishing the day with uses left over, either.

You'll seldom have a combat encounter in which your primal scream doesn't prove useful.

A primal scream is a free action, so you have little excuse not to use it—unless the situation calls for stealth.

Early in your career, look for foes you can isolate or defeat quickly (much as a hungry predator chooses a weaker member of the herd as a target when hunting for food).

This method has the virtue of thinning out the opposition while minimizing the risk to yourself; both can prove important when you're just starting out in the class, because you're probably fairly lightly armored and you haven't had much time to build up a high natural armor bonus.

Concentrate on one foe at a time, attack until the foe falls or flees, then move on to the next.

When you have felled your lesser opponents, join the attack on your chief foe, if there is one.

As your level increases, you can use your extra speed and your hide in plain sight ability to maneuver around the battlefield and strike where you'll prove the most effective.

As you gain more primal scream abilities, you'll gain the power to thwart or eliminate multiple foes at once, and you'll have a chance to knock out leaders or singularly powerful foes.

When you gain your fast healing primal scream at 10th level, you develop great staying power in a fight.

Just don't get too cocky—you have to be conscious to use your fast healing.

ADVANCEMENT

Becoming a wildrunner is usually a matter of personal choice.

All wildrunners within a particular area customarily form a loosely organized pack with the oldest or most experienced wildrunner serving as the nominal leader.

These wildrunners generally keep a close watch on potential new members, teaching them survival skills and nurturing their love of nature and of the land.

Any character who shows the aptitude to become a wildrunner is welcomed as at least an informal member of the pack, but all new members are expected to come to the pack of their own accord.

Packs do not actively recruit new members.

A new member is often introduced to the pack in a simple ceremony in which the pack members gather during a moonlit night to meet the new member.

As a matter of tradition, only a few pack members introduce themselves to the new member, and these members serve as advisors and mentors to the newcomer. All pack members who are present get a good look at the new member and learn his name, but do not show themselves.

This practice allows the established pack members to remain anonymous yet still able to identify the new member by sight.

The new member's mentors often take the character on a tour of the pack's territory and explain any ongoing concerns or projects the pack might have, such as guarding a settlement, gathering information on newcomers to the area, or watching the movements of a potential enemy. Mostly, however, the new member is left alone but asked to share anything he learns with the rest of the pack and to lend a hand when the need arises.

As you attain higher levels in the wildrunner prestige class, you'll want to focus on the skills and abilities that help you use your class features to best advantage.

Ranks in Hide and Move Silently are necessary to take full advantage of your hide in plain sight ability.

Listen and Spot help you avoid the embarrassment of being ambushed in your home terrain.

You'll do well with a defensive item that can negate or reduce hits against you, such as a cloak of displacement, or even a potion of blur or displacement (drink the potion in the round you lose a scream).

RESOURCES

When a new wildrunner is introduced to a pack, his mentors can provide him with information and access to a network of an unknown number of allies (other pack members) who can aid the character in numerous ways (when they feel inclined).

Most wildrunner packs have informal links with other packs throughout the land, and a wildrunner's mentors can send word out whenever the wildrunner has an errand that takes him away from home.

So no matter where a wildrunner goes, he can find help in unexpected places.

WILDRUNNERS IN THE WORLD

Wildrunners can be found almost anywhere, from the depths of trackless forests to the tops of remote mountains, and PCs who venture into the wilderness can meet them anywhere.

There's no telling whether a modest hunter or eccentric mountaineer is merely a commoner eking out a living in the wild or a powerful NPC wearing a humble guise.

ORGANIZATION

Wildrunner packs might have anywhere from a few members to several dozen, depending on the size of their territory.

A pack's territory usually covers a single well-defined geographical locale, such as a particular forest, mountain, or watershed, and usually not more than fifty miles across.

Ordinarily, pack members have little to do with each other unless there is a new member to induct or some threat to the land develops.

The pack members exchange news and talk whenever they happen to meet, and smaller groups of close friends within the pack may dwell together or at least meet often.

They spend their days reflecting on their own inner natures and honing their outdoor skills.

As part of their commitment to the land, they defend it against invaders and despoilers.

Many packs devote themselves to guarding highways, trails, settlements, tombs, or areas of exceptional natural beauty.

Wildrunners might maintain a secret presence in a sparsely settled area, where they pose as farmers, artisans, hunters, trappers, or woodcutters.

These secret wildrunners work at their vocations at least part time but also take time to wander the wilds and enjoy nature.

Packs often choose names for their groups based on their location and avowed purpose, such as The Wardens of the High Forest, Guardians of the Golden River, or People of the Hollow Hills.

The position of pack leader is largely an honorific that carries no real privileges or authority except what the pack leader can command by virtue of her personal accomplishments or strength of will.

A pack leader with a particularly strong will and sense of purpose can form her pack into a powerful force.

NPC REACTIONS

Druids and rangers tend to think well of wildrunners, mostly because wildrunners usually share a similar mindset and suite of skills with druids and rangers.

Evil druids and rangers usually have little in common with wildrunners except their ability to get along in the wild.
