Foreword

There are times when the player or Games master will be in the position to summon a familiar or animal companion during RPG game play. Most of the time, the choices are either limited or rather mundane. This D100 table is my attempt to add some alternatives which, I hope are possibly a bit more interesting and dynamic, with a few strange character traits added in for good measure. Since all of these 100 chart publications are for all RPG systems, the work of adding statistics, abilities, skills and so forth, will be in the hands of the GM. All the information here is simply to add flavour and ideas for those of you who either are limited to time, lazy or fond of randomness! Of course one may simply choose from the list and do it without the chance element, but this is recommended for the GM only, if players are involved I would imagine the random aspect is better served to stop any power gaming occurring.

What ever and however you use the information here, have fun with these ideas and don't feel stifled by small details in the list, colours gender and so forth can easily be changed to facilitate more options to get even more squeezed out of what's presented.

Have fun!!

Communications & Intelligence

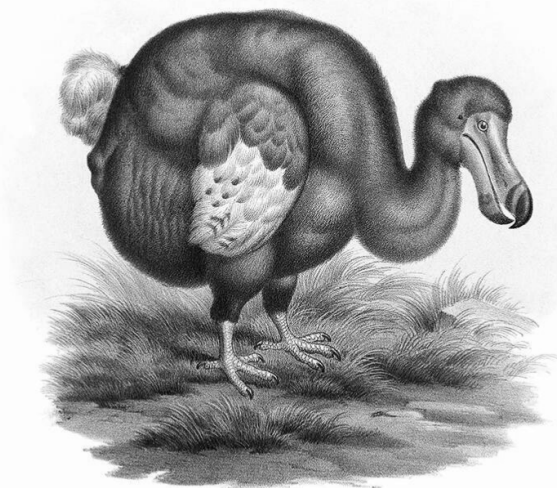

After determining which familiar is summoned, roll a D6 on this chart to find what level of intelligence and interaction one can have with the creature.

Roll D6

1. Normal Animal intelligence & Ability.
2. Higher than animal, can't speak, but can understand.
3. Telepathic.
4. Speaking.
5. Speaking and knows several languages.
6. Speaking and telepathic.

Abilities & Magic

The GM must determine some natural levels of abilities, which could be anything from innate animal skills, or since these are summoned and magical creatures, mimic one or more spell effects. Rule of thumb would be something like assigning it one or more actual spells direct from the RPG system you're using.
