THE EMPEROR'S WILL

COMPILED BY JOHN BLANCHE

For ten thousand years the Emperor of Mankind has sat immobile upon his Golden Throne. Through all that century of centuries he has uttered not a single word nor made any gesture of command. His desiccated corpse-like figure shows no sign of life as it is normally understood. The faint pulsing of preservative ichor being pumped through his shrivelled veins is the only movement a studious observer could discern. In like manner, the Emperor's thoughts remain unknown and unknowable, his mind is ever silent and closed to telepathic enquiry. The cryptic predictions gleaned from the Emperor's Tarot and the Astronomican continuing to broadcast its unwavering signal are taken as proof enough that the Emperor prevails and that he has not yet surrendered to his seeming fate and abandoned humanity altogether.

How then is the Imperium of Mankind guided through the grim darkness of the 41st Millennium? If not at the literal command of the Emperor, then how is humanity able to face the perils that encircle it and gnaw at it from within? What power exists in the universe that can wield the Emperor's might and do his bidding? The myriad agents and officers of the Imperium's great institutions are that very power. From highborn noble Lord of the Inquisition to deadly assassin snatched from some hive world gutter, men and women of savage faith, warriors, priests, judges, jurists and executioners; each and every one of them wields a tiny, but nevertheless potent, fraction of the Emperor's authority.

To them is given the gravest responsibility: to enact the Emperor's Will.
