WARHAMMER CAMPAIGN

When you have fought countless battles, when your troops have won and lost innumerable times, what do you do next? The answer is simple: fight a campaign!

This is a series of battles, an important part of a major war, perhaps, or a shorter war all by itself. The really interesting thing about a campaign is that the outcome of each individual battle can affect the chances of ultimate victory. A small skirmish between two squads of scouts can have just as significant an effect as a big battle if, say, an important General is killed or captured, or precious supplies are destroyed. They all lead to a climatic and bloody conclusion which will decide who wins the ultimate victory.

Being a general in command of a campaign is even more challenging and exciting than in a single, one-off battle. As you fight each battle in your campaign, you must keep your long-term aims in mind and think ahead to that final conflict, just like a real general. You may lose a battle along the way, but can you win the war? Now you are playing more than just a game: you are dealing with tactics and strategy on a grand scale.

THE CAMPAIGN

In this campaign, there are three preliminary battles which then lead up to an all-out, death-or-glory final conflict. The first three battles are relatively small actions with up to 1,500 points per side. The final battle involves massed armies of 3,000 points or more.

The campaign you are going to fight is set in a particular time and place, and involves two of the great races or kingdoms of the Old World. The events leading up to each battle, the motives of the leaders and the story behind the campaign are all described. There are also hints on transporting this campaign to another time or place, and fighting it using different armies.

This Warhammer Campaign book complements and supplements Warhammer, the Game of Fantasy Battles and the Warhammer Armies books. The make-up of your armies is determined from the main army lists in those books. This supplement tells you which troops from those lists to use for each of the various battles, and adds extra information about the troops and special rules appropriate to the specific scenarios.

WHAT YOU WILL NEED

Warhammer Campaign is designed for players who are already familiar with Warhammer Fantasy Battles and who want to try something more sophisticated and challenging than the usual pitched battle. To play this campaign, then, you will need Warhammer, the Game of Fantasy Battles, Warhammer Magic and the Warhammer Armies book for one of the contenders in the campaign. Your opponent should have the Warhammer Armies book for the other side.

Players with Dwarf armies will find this campaign particularly enjoyable. They will need the Warhammer Armies book devoted to Dwarfs and a collection of Dwarf models big enough to field a 3,000 point army. Your opponent will need to refer to the Warhammer Armies High Elves book, and should have about 3,000 points worth of High Elf models available to him.

Those who play Warhammer regularly will probably already have a gaming table and enough scenery for the campaign. This Campaign supplement includes the special Dwarf buildings and items which will feature in the scenarios.

If you find that you are lacking any specific units, models or scenery mentioned in the campaign, you have two options. You could use your imagination and improvise with what you already have; there are notes on how to do this later.

Alternately, you could take this opportunity to increase your collection. Above all, Warhammer is a creative hobby which emphasises collecting, painting and modelling. It's a hobby that lasts for a lifetime, with new models to collect and new projects to tackle all the time. With Warhammer Campaigns you can take things several stages further, whether playing, collecting or making models.

Dwarf Miner

PREPARING FOR WAR

To fight the Grudge of Drong campaign you will need Warhammer, Warhammer Magic, the Dwarf and High Elf Warhammer Armies books, and a Dwarf and High Elf army. The campaign is designed for two players, each commanding either the High Elves or Dwarfs.

HOW THE CAMPAIGN WORKS

The campaign consists of four battles – each a confrontation between the Dwarfs and High Elves as recorded by Dwarf folklore in the painfully long and bitter ballad known as the Saga of Drong. These battles are:

Scenario 1

The Battle of Grudge Pass

Scenario 2

Ambush on the Dwarf Road

Scenario 3

The Brewery Bash

Scenario 4

The Battle of Krag Bryn

Each battle is fought one at a time culminating in the final cataclysmic Battle of Krag Bryn. The forces available to the players and any special rules that apply are described on the separate Battle Scrolls for each game. It is worth getting out the Battle Scrolls now so you can refer to them as you read the rest of this section.

SETTING UP THE GAMES

The rest of this rulebook describes the actual events leading up to each of the four battles. We explain how to set up each of the games, provide rules for deployment, and also explain how to establish which side has won.

THE FOUR BATTLES

The campaign is designed so that the results of each of the three preliminary games affect the final battle in some important way. For example, if the Dwarfs win the Battle of Grudge Pass then they are assumed to retain the services of Master Engineer Krudd Mad-Mattock and may therefore field war machines in the Battle of Krag Bryn. On the other hand, if the Dwarfs lose the battle they also lose Krudd and can bring only a single war machine to the final battle.

All of the battles leading up to the Battle of Krag Bryn affect the Dwarf player's choice of troops, characters, runes or war machines for the concluding game. Thus, the better the Dwarf player does in the initial games the better chance he has during the final showdown.

If you look at the Battle Scrolls for each game you'll see that the rewards for winning the game are described under the heading of Victory Gains. The Victory Gain is literally the advantage gained by winning the game.

CHOOSING FORCES

You do not need specific units of troops to fight the campaign. Instead, you are allowed to choose forces of an appropriate points value for each battle.

There are some extra restrictions that apply to the choices from your Warhammer Armies list, and in some cases you are actually allowed more units of a certain type than you normally would. This is because the Warhammer Armies lists are designed to be generally representative of the armies covered. The campaign armies, on the other hand, are based on the specific conflicts described.

We have allowed a degree of choice so that players can fight the games with the armies they already have, as well as allowing players to use a bit of native cunning to outwit their enemy, but the choices permitted are consistent with the descriptions of the battles.

A Selection of Battle Scrolls

To choose your army for a battle refer to the relevant Battle Scroll and your Warhammer Armies book. The Battle Scrolls describe which troops you may choose, whilst the Warhammer Armies books describe their equipment, options, and points values as usual. The Battle Scrolls indicate where magic items are allowed, and usually place a separate limit on the maximum points values of magic items that are permitted.

Note that magic items can only be included as described on the Battle Scroll, and this includes magic standards for standard bearers as well as magic items for characters.

For players interested in such things we have included a separate list of the forces that fought these battles – in fact these were the actual forces used by Rick Priestley (High Elves) and Nigel Stillman (Dwarfs) when we fought the campaign for the first time.

Eventually, each game was fought several times and different forces were chosen on each occasion, gradually improving our selection as we got to grips with the objectives for each battle. See Appendix 1 The Saga of Drong for our example armies.

Blank Roster Sheets

ROSTER SHEETS

A pad of roster sheets are included. As you choose your army for each battle, write down the details on the roster sheet so you can refer to it during the game. You'll find that this is more convenient than constantly looking up details in the Armies books.

SPECIAL CHARACTERS

The campaign features a number of special characters for both Dwarfs and High Elves. You'll find details and appropriate rules for these characters on the Battle Scrolls. These characters can be represented by any suitable models from the Citadel Miniatures range – whether you wish to purchase and paint new characters to play the campaign, or simply use an existing model which fits the description is entirely up to you. We have made a selection of new character models for both armies which fit the descriptions in Grudge of Drong, including models of Drong the Hard, Eldroth the High Elf General and Queen Helgar herself.

The characters described in the Grudge of Drong are compatible with the Dwarf or High Elf armies, and can be used as special characters in other games should you so wish. Special characters should only be used with prior agreement by the players. Of course, any characters prepared for the campaign can be fielded as basic heroes or wizards in your other games.

THE GRUDGE OF DRONG

THE FOUNDING OF TOL ELDROTH

Far back in the time of Caledor II, during the fourth age of Ulthuan, the High Elf Lord Eldroth set sail from Lothorn with a great following, bound for the shores of the Old World. There they discovered a fine natural harbour on the coast, overlooked by a range of high mountains. Eldroth and his folk founded a trading colony which they called Tol Eldroth.

Soon Elf adventurers had explored far among the mountain peaks which loomed upon the horizon. They brought back tales of precious metals and gems hidden in the rocks. They also encountered the Dwarfs.

BRONN'S STRONGHOLD

Many centuries before the Elves landed on these shores, the Dwarf adventurer, Bronn the Bold, and his clan had migrated along the mountain tracks until they reached the peaks overlooking the coastal plain. Bronn's prospectors discovered the gems and gold locked within the mountains and so Bronn and his expedition established a mining settlement. This new colony soon attracted miners, merchants and settlers from other clans and grew rapidly into a mighty stronghold which was ruled over by Bronn and later his descendants. The stronghold became known as Krag Bryn, which means 'Gleaming Mountain' in the Dwarf tongue.

THE COMING OF THRUND

Hearing of the wealth of Krag Bryn, the Dwarf Lord Thrund the Angry gathered a great throng of adventurers, outcasts and restless clans eager for new lands to claim. Thrund held a long-standing ancestral grudge against Bronn, the exact nature of which had long become obscure. Whatever its origin, the grudge itself was still remembered by all of his clan. Thrund resolved to find Krag Bryn and seize the throne for himself.

In the mighty battle that followed, Thrund was defeated by Bronn and mortally wounded. Before he gasped his last, he made his heirs swear an oath to uphold the grudge, which was now drenched with fresh clan blood. True to their pledge, but lacking the force to take Krag Bryn, these 'Thrundlings' built their own stronghold, overlooking the only pass through the mountains and so barring the trade route from the Dwarf Empire to Krag Bryn. They named this fortress Kazad Thrund in honour of their illustrious ancestor. From here they levied a tax on all merchants travelling through the pass. It was for this reason that the pass soon became known far and wide as Grudge Pass.

THE LAST OF THE BRONNLINGS

The centuries passed. When Eldroth's kindred landed on the coastal plain below the towering peaks, the rivalry between Bronnlings and Thrundlings was already old. Endless feuds had taken their toll on the Bronnings and only one Dwarf of the true lineage of Bronn remained. Elven emissaries sent to the court of Krag Bryn were astonished to be welcomed by a Dwarf Queen! She was Helgar, the last living descendant of Bronn the Bold.

The coming of the Elves was an unexpected boon for Krag Bryn. A new trade route to the fabulous Elf empire of the west was suddenly opened up for them. The miners could forget the treacherous pass of Kazad Thrund. Now they could sell gold, silver and gems to the Elves, who paid much more than canny Dwarfs, and without so much hard bargaining besides.

Queen Helgar immediately made a trading pact with the Elves and her popularity with the Dwarfs of Krag Bryn soared. In truth, she badly needed such prestige, since there were none of her own clan left to support her claim to the throne, yet kinsfolk of Thrund were already numerous among the miners. Furthermore, few Dwarfs liked being told what to do by a beardless queen – even if she could drink ale like a Trollslayer and her lineage was as long as her (very long) plaits.

THE WRATH OF DRONG

Meanwhile, in Kazad Thrund, power was in the sturdy hands of Drong the Hard, of the bloodline of Thrund. He looked upon the arrival of the Elves with outrage and disgust. As the treasures of Krag Bryn were loaded onto sleek Elven ships bound for destinations unknown, trade through the pass of Kazad Thrund dwindled to virtually nothing. Drong was becoming poor and his clan was growing angry. The grudge was written down and the axes were sharpened. Drong sought to exploit this growing discontent to raise his fortunes. To this end, he cunningly invented a spurious ancestral claim to the throne of Krag Bryn.

He claimed that his ancestor Thrund had been the rightful lord of Krag Bryn. He had been ousted in a coup and slain most treacherously, rather than in a fair and honourable fight. Drong's words circulated at a time when distrust of the Elves was spreading throughout the Dwarf realms. The false rumour had the desired effect and soon adventurers with axes to grind flocked to Kazad Thrund.

DRONG PREPARES FOR WAR

Soon Drong felt that the time was right to challenge Helgar's claim to her throne, with force if necessary. His following was strong, hers was weak. As for her allies, the Elves, what match would they be for good honest Dwarfs! So reckoned Drong, as he made his war-plans. He sent his kinsmen into the mining outposts of Krag Bryn to stir up discontent.

Thus began the Tale of the Grudge of Drong, as it is known in the sagas. This war between Elf and Dwarf colonies, savage in its ferocity, was a foretaste of what was to come in the long and terrible War of the Beard which broke out soon after.

Eldroth was resplendent in his war panoply, as befitted a lord of one of the noble kindreds of Ulthuan. Beside him rode Fendar, Tethan and Ardath, and several more fine nobles besides. They were the representatives of the kindreds of Tol Eldroth, on their way to the court of Queen Helgar to seal the pact. All were attired to impress the queen and her people with Elven splendour. The Dwarfs would understand that the Elves were an ancient race and a force to be reckoned with. Eldroth was discussing matters of diplomacy and protocol with his companions.

"It is said, Ardath, that you have much knowledge of Dwarfs," Eldroth said. "How should we negotiate with this queen?"

Ardath, an Elf of few words, thought awhile before replying, "Respect and reverence for ancestors is all amongst Dwarfs. The Queen's pride in her ancient lineage is the key to our negotiations. It is only her desire to cling to the birthright of her ancestors that prompts her to tolerate us here at all!"

"Is this more important to her than the wealth of Ulthuan, which flows from us into her treasury in return for metals and gems?" asked Fendar.

"That is useful to her, perhaps, but there is not much that the Dwarfs need from us. They are expert craftsmen, not savages," Ardath answered.

Tethan spoke: "You would call Dwarf work 'art', would you, Ardath?" Everyone smiled, as indeed did Ardath as he offered an explanation.

"True, their work is grotesque to our eyes, and who in his right mind would give a Dwarf ring to a lady of Lothorn? But let us not deceive ourselves: this Queen does not trade with us just because she likes the silks of Saphery or the wines of Chrace."

"Indeed, it is said that she swills that disgusting brew they all have a passion for by the very barrel!" joked Eldroth. "So what is it that she really wants from us, Ardath?" the Elf Lord continued.

"She has no warriors and so she seeks to use us to defend her from her arch rival, Drong" replied Ardath with the shrewd insight of a seasoned warrior and veteran of many past encounters with Dwarfs. "She plans to fight for her throne, down to the last Elf if need be!"

"Do I sense that you disapprove of my policy, Ardath?" Eldroth asked.

"Not at all, lord. It suits us well to support her. Remember the old proverb: 'Divide and rule'. We will prevail over the Dwarfs because we are united, whereas they are riven with ancient grudges and clan feuds," Ardath replied.

"Alas, Ardath, you are old fashioned. Perhaps you have been in the colonies too long. Have you not heard of the kinstrife in Ulthuan? It seems we, too, are united no more."

While Ardath was considering his reply, the debate was put aside as the party approached the great gates of Krag Bryn. Even the Elves marvelled at the massive stone masonry. The immense gates opened before them, operated by some hidden device of the Dwarfs. The party rode down the great paved roadway, through arches and between colossal seated statues depicting Helgar's grim-visaged ancestors, and on into the great hall itself. The dim light was barely banished by the flickering torches. At the end of the audience chamber Queen Helgar sat upon an enormous throne. On the wall behind her hung a wide tapestry depicting her ancestor Bronn slaying his arch-enemy Thrund with his immense axe.

"Welcome, lord of Tol Eldroth," Queen Helgar greeted them.

The Elves dismounted and were seated on carved Dwarf chairs. They listened politely as the long lineage and ancestral accomplishments of the Bronnings was read from a great rune-inscribed book of sagas. Flagons of mead were brought. Eldroth duly noted the wisdom of the queen in offering them this noble beverage rather than Dwarf ale.

Then Helgar herself spoke. She pointed out to Eldroth, in haughty tones, that his folk had arrived uninvited upon her shores. However, she was prepared to overlook this in return for Eldroth's recognition of her as High Queen.

Eldroth's keen mind appreciated the symbolism and the politics. Despite her protest, the queen recognised that Eldroth's colony was now firmly established and there was nothing she could do about it.

By acknowledging Helgar as High Queen, he would be symbolically recognising her authority. In this way Dwarf pride would be satisfied. He would also be recognising Helgar as legitimate heir to the throne of Krag Bryn, over and above the rival claim of Drong. This was sure to bring the wrath of Drong down upon his own people. A further implication was that the queen could call upon the warriors of Tol Eldroth to support her as if they were her own troops. Eldroth had not seen many warriors on the walls of the stronghold, and there were few guards in the great hall.

Eldroth took counsel with his retinue. It was soon agreed. Elven trade goods would arrive in Krag Bryn as 'gifts' from the Phoenix King himself, much to the benefit of Helgar's prestige. Treasures from the Dwarf mines would pour through Tol Eldroth as 'subsidies' to the queen's loyal allies.

The deal was done.

THE BATTLE OF GRUDGE PASS

TROUBLE AT THE MINES

The rumour of Drong's claim to the throne of Krag Bryn spread to that stronghold itself and took root among many disgruntled miners of Thrund's clan. By this time, most of the Dwarfs in the mining outposts were either Thrundlings or Dwarf settlers of a variety of clans, who owed no great loyalty to Helgar. Indeed, most tended to favour Drong. They muttered to themselves as they picked away at the rock, working to make the queen rich.

Why should this hard-won wealth, they grumbled, go to a ruler of the wrong clan and worse, be given away to the decadent Elves? Surely it should be traded only with good honest Dwarfs!

One day Krudd Mad-Mattock, Master Engineer and kinsman to Drong, called an extraordinary meeting of the Engineers and Miners Guild. Everybody at the mining settlements downed tools to indulge in a marathon drinking and grudging session.

Soon the ravines that led to Krag Bryn resounded with revolutionary slogans: "Down with Queen Helgar!", "Dwarf gold for the Dwarfs!" and "Drong for King!" A motley throng of drunken and disgruntled Dwarf rebels was marching on the Queen's stronghold. At their head was their hastily-appointed leader, none other than Krudd himself.

Helgar was brought advanced warning of the trouble by a few loyal Dwarfs, who had been fortunate to escape being pick-axed by the rebels. The queen had no warriors she could send to put down the revolt, so in desperation she sent a messenger to plead with Tol Eldroth for aid.

ELVES IN THE NICK OF TIME

Eldroth responded quickly, dispatching a task force of his fastest troops under the command of Fendar, an experienced captain. The Elves moved faster than the rabble of drunken Dwarf rebels and so it was that they intercepted them as the Dwarfs marched down Grudge Pass towards Krag Bryn.

Fendar spread his troops across the pass to bar the way of the rebels. Taking out his sword, he gouged a line in the dust between the two forces, a bowshot forward of his own troops, who were deploying into a battle line.

As the rebels approached the line, Fendar warned them sternly not to cross it or they would provoke war with the Elves.

"Out of the way, Elf, this is Dwarf business!" the arrogant and indignant Krudd spat back as he strode purposefully onwards.

"Then you shall die!" said Fendar plainly and rode back to his troops.

"Bite my axe, beardless Elf!" Krudd shouted after him, as his men let out a loud, drunken raucous cheer and surged over the line. Silently, the Elves drew their bows and took aim, waiting for the signal from Fendar. And so the Battle of Grudge Pass began.

FIGHTING THE BATTLE

The Battle of Grudge Pass is the first in a series of encounters between Elf and Dwarf forces that will lead to the battle of Krag Bryn. The outcome of this battle decides the fate of Krudd Mad-Mattock, and whether or not the mines of Krag Bryn fall into the hands of Helgar's arch rival, Drong.

THE BATTLEFIELD

The setting for this battle straddles Grudge Pass. This runs along a barren, rocky valley flanked on either side by hills, mountains and crags. The pass is wide and there are stone huts built by Dwarf miners and prospectors scattered here and there along the route. Most of these are abandoned ruins since the miners worked their way further up the mountain valleys in search of richer veins of ore, abandoning their hazardous disused mine shafts. There are no forests and virtually no trees, as these were all felled long ago for pit props.

Set up the battlefield as shown on the Battlefield map. Alternatively, you might prefer to generate the scenery randomly using the chart in Appendix III, or agree with your opponent on a variation of the battlefield to suit the scenery which you have available.

THE ARMIES

Each player refers to the Battle Scroll for his own army, in order to choose his forces for the battle. The Battle Scroll also describes any special rules which apply, as well as victory conditions and victory gains and some tactical hints.

DEPLOYING FOR BATTLE

The 'line in the dust' made by Fendar runs across the battlefield, 12" away from the Dwarf Player's table edge. Temporarily mark this line with a row of dice while the armies are deployed. The Dwarf army deploys within 12" of the Dwarf player's table edge and at least 12" from the side edges. All units deploy facing the Elf player's table edge.

The Elves deploy 24" (a bowshot) back from the line in the dust, and at least 12" from the side edges.

Starting with the player who rolls the highest score on a D6, each side takes it in turns to deploy a single unit. Champions are deployed as part of their units. Other characters are each considered to be a separate unit of one model.

Once the smaller army has been completely deployed, the opposing army continues to deploy one unit at a time. When it is his turn to deploy, the player who has already completed his deployment can now move any one unit 4" towards the enemy. In this way, the smaller army can start advancing into battle while the larger opposing army is still deploying.

The advancing army moves one unit at a time, but the same unit can move more than once if the opportunity presents itself. No advancing units may be moved within 8" of the enemy.

A LINE IN THE DUST

The Elves cannot shoot or attack unless the Dwarfs cross the line in the dust, or the Dwarfs start the battle by shooting at the Elves, using magic against them or attacking them in any way. The Elves will not cross the line themselves unless hostilities have already begun, but may move up to it. The Dwarfs automatically provoke war by advancing across the line, either by moving while the Elves are still deploying or by advancing recklessly under the influence of alcohol.

As soon as one single Dwarf crosses that line, the battle starts and the Elves are free to let loose with everything they have got. If the Dwarfs shoot at the Elves before crossing the line, that will start the war as well. Once the line has been crossed, all Dwarfs are fair game, no matter what side of the line they are currently on.

In the unlikely event that the Dwarfs manage to hold back from crossing the line, the Elves may move or manoeuvre over the rest of the battlefield during their turn. For their part, the Dwarfs might as well cross the line in the dust to deny the cunning Elves this advantage.

Every Dwarf stronghold possesses its own unique book of Grudges, whose pages record every single slight ever suffered by the Dwarfs of that stronghold.

Within Karaz-a-Karak, the capital of the Dwarf Empire and seat of the High King, lies Dammaz Kron, the Great Book of Grudges itself. That its creation dates back to the time of the Dwarfs' first ancestors speaks volumes about how deeply grudge-bearing is ingrained into the Dwarf psyche.

To the Dwarfs, personal and familial honour is all-important. To have one's honour slighted, or to suffer any loss of face, is a fate which all Dwarfs dread and feel an instinctive righteous desire to defend against.

The Great Book of Grudges exists as a repository of every offense ever levelled at the Dwarven race. Unfortunately, it is all too easy to offend a Dwarf, and without the Book, they would soon lose track of all but the most heinous crimes against them. Tragically, most of the entries in the Book are never stricken from its pages. Many have learned to their cost that it is easy to offend a Dwarf, but almost impossible to make reparations toward him.

SPECIAL RULES

ABANDONED MINE SHAFTS

There are two abandoned mine shafts on the edges of the pass. These can be represented by a ring of small pebbles about 3" in diameter.

Any models which move over these shafts during the battle must roll equal to or under their Initiative (I) on one dice or plummet into the darkness, lost forever! Roll for each model that moves over the shaft. The shafts are quite visible, so generals can move units so as not to go near them.

They are, however, particularly hazardous to drunken Dwarfs who happen to be staggering about randomly without looking where they are going!

THE BATTLE

WHO HAS THE FIRST TURN

The Dwarf army has the first turn.

HOW LONG DOES THE BATTLE LAST

The Battle of Grudge Pass lasted from mid-afternoon to sunset. To represent this, the battle lasts for five game turns, each turn representing about an hour of daylight in the original battle. Each player will therefore complete five turns, unless the battle ends earlier in a 'sudden death' victory for the Elves.

VICTORY OR DEFEAT

SUDDEN DEATH VICTORY CONDITION

If Krudd is slain or flees the table, the Elves win the battle. With the ringleader dead, fleeing or in hiding, the rebellion is over and the rebels will disperse. If the Elves achieve their sudden death victory condition in any turn before sunset, the battle ends in a decisive Elf victory at the end of that turn.

VICTORY POINTS

If the battle continues until sunset, decide who has won by counting up victory points as described in the Warhammer rulebook. In the event of a draw on victory points, this is counted as an Elf victory instead, because unless the rebels actually win, the rebellion is crushed.

The rebellion is a major test of Dwarf solidarity. If any Dwarf unit retreats off the table of its own accord (that includes being under the influence of alcohol), the rest of the rebels think that they have lost their faith in the rebellion. The unit is therefore treated exactly as if it had fled when it comes to counting up victory points.

AMBUSH ON THE DWARF ROAD

THE SAGA OF DRONG AND HELGAR

Despite the rebellion at the mines, Helgar held on to the throne of Krag Bryn, so Drong decided to change his tactics drastically. He sent messengers to the queen with presents and offers of friendship and reconciliation. Helgar was won over with jewels of exquisite Dwarf workmanship obtained at great expense from Karak Izril. She summoned Drong to a feast to resolve their differences and proclaim peace.

This was a magnificent occasion, at which the best Dwarf ale flowed in vast quantities. When Drong saw Queen Helgar wielding her tankard like a true Dwarf, he was well and truly smitten. He began to think that he had been wrong about her after all. Perhaps the two rival clans should unite! As Drong pondered this thought, surrounded by a thousand Dwarfs from both factions singing and drinking, he began to see in his mind a son and heir who would one day rightfully sit upon the throne of Krag Bryn.

With this thought in his befuddled head, he proposed to the queen that they be married. Her Majesty, having made good use of her tankard and quite taken with Drong's impressive beard to boot, accepted.

The entire throng rejoiced and toasted the couple with yet more ale. Even in the dawn of a new day, with the effects of the Dwarf ale hammering as if on anvils in their heads, Drong and Helgar continued to see the advantage of their decision. The queen would no longer be the last of her clan and her heirs would still hold the throne. The ancient grudges could be struck off the book, which would be handy as that would make room for some new ones!

When they heard the news, Eldroth and all of the Elf-folk breathed a sigh of relief. The queen's crown seemed secure and a new trade route had opened through the pass of Kazad Thrund. This allowed them to trade directly with the Dwarf Empire. Drong lifted the tax on trade through the pass and went to live in Krag Bryn, which was a much finer stronghold than Kazad Thrund. Everyone seemed very happy. Tol Eldroth continued to prosper under the queen's protection. Drong forgot about the grudge against the Elves... for the moment.

Drong the Hard of Karad Thrund

THE GRUDGE-BRINGER

Elsewhere, though, the storm clouds were gathering. Everywhere war was looming between Elves and Dwarfs. Minor conflicts had already started to break out. Tension was rife. It seemed as though Elves and Dwarfs were waiting for any excuse to set about each other once more.

One day a Dwarf Runesmith turned up in Krag Bryn. His name was Grung and he came from beyond the mountains. His kinsmen had been attacked and driven out by Elves. He bore a grudge. This stranger was summoned to attend the feasts of Drong, who enjoyed hearing news from elsewhere and showing off his new-found wealth. As the evening progressed, however, Grung became very drunk and began telling his story at length. It was a tale that cast spite against the Elves while extolling Dwarfish pride and valour.

The Dwarf High Road is a means of getting to Krag Bryn which avoids Grudge Pass. It is used by some merchants to avoid the tolls exacted by Drong. It is a very treacherous track which is only open in summer when the snow and ice melt. For the greater part of the way, the track runs along the stark edge of the precipitous Chasm of Doom.

The route is totally unsuitable for wagons and horses and all travellers have to carry their merchandise on their backs. In winter, snow and avalanches make the road extremely deadly. In the spring thaw, the frozen bodies of Dwarfs, often centuries old, have sometimes been revealed, along with their artifacts. What or who Grung was looking for here, we shall probably never know. Maybe he was going to Karaz-a-Karak on some obscure errand for Drong? Or perhaps seeking something to help further Drong's ambitions.

THE AMBUSH - SCENARIO II

 The Dwarf High Road	 Woods Difficult Ground	 Steeply sloping hill	 Boulders Difficult Ground	 Gently sloping hill

"Is it fitting," he asked all those assembled around him at Drong's feast, "for a Dwarf such as Drong to make Elves rich?" Drong was shamed and his Dwarf pride was hurt. Soon Drong and the stranger were plotting a grudge-war against the Elven colony. Queen Helgar listened to these proceedings and began to fret about her own shaky hold on her throne. Worse still, Grung was not showing her the respect due to a Dwarf of noble lineage. Were not her plaits equal to any beard? She sat silently, smouldering with suppressed outrage, continually twirling one of her prodigious plaits in a white-knuckled hand. Later, in private, she made her own plans and dispatched secret messages to Eldroth.

The next day Grung was riding out on the Dwarf High Road not far from Krag Bryn, no doubt intending some mischief or other. Somewhere along the route, however, he was ambushed by Elves, acting on the orders of Eldroth himself.

FIGHTING THE BATTLE

Ambush on the Dwarf Road is the second clash between Elf and Dwarf forces on the road to the battle of Krag Bryn. Each of these encounters will influence that final battle in some way. The outcome of this battle decides the fate of Grung and whether the Dwarf army will be able to include a Runesmith in the final battle.

THE BATTLEFIELD

The ambush takes place in a wild and rugged area of mountain wilderness between Krag Bryn and Kazad Thrund. Grung and his retinue are travelling along the ancient Dwarf High Road.

Set up the battlefield as shown on the Battlefield Map. Alternatively you can generate your own version of the battlefield using the Terrain Generator in Appendix III, or agree on a variation of the battlefield to suit the scenery which you have available.

The Dwarf High Road runs parallel to the long sides of the table. It runs right through the Dwarf player's half of the table and joins one of the shorter table edges to the other. The road can be marked with a line of dice, a strip of cloth or by sprinkling sand. The road should be no further than 12" from the Dwarf player's table edge, and wide enough for a column of up to 3 models abreast. If you are generating terrain for the battle randomly, note that the road is a fixed feature of the battlefield which should be placed first. No features should block the road or prevent movement along it. Ensure that there are some terrain features to screen the Elf force lying in ambush from the Dwarf column. These features should not be impassable to movement, so that the Elves can go over or through them to attack, or use them as cover.

DEPLOYING FOR BATTLE

The whole of the Dwarf force is deployed first and the Elf force is then deployed afterwards. The Dwarf army is deployed along the road, no further than 12" from the Dwarf player's table edge (see Special Rules below) and no closer than 12" to the side edges.

All Dwarf units are deployed facing to the Dwarf player's right, to represent the fact that they are travelling along the road when they are unexpectedly ambushed. The Dwarf army is thus deployed in a marching column, presenting its flank to the ambushers.

The Runesmith is placed in the middle of the Dwarf column, no closer than 24" to either side edge of the table. This is because the Elves do not attack until the Runesmith himself is right in front of them. If he is too close to the side edge of the table it makes it easier for him to escape by moving as fast as he can off the side edge. By placing him in the middle, there will be plenty of time for the Elf player to delay him. If the Runesmith does manage to voluntarily leave the table via a side edge, it does not mean that he gets away or that he wins the battle. Instead, the battle continues until sunset and if the Dwarf army is defeated, it is assumed that the Elves catch up with Grung later and finish him off! (See Victory Points below.)

The Elf force lying in ambush is deployed no closer than 12" to the Dwarf army and no closer than 12" to the side edges. It is partially screened from the Dwarfs by intervening terrain features.

SPECIAL RULES

THE CHASM OF DOOM

The Dwarf player's table edge represents a sheer drop into the Chasm of Doom, so there is no escape off the table in that direction for anyone travelling along the road. Any force ambushed while moving along the road will therefore be caught with their backs to the deadly chasm.

Any troops which go off the table via the Dwarf player's table edge, whether voluntarily or not, fall down the Chasm of Doom and are lost. Troops are not foolish enough to pursue a fleeing enemy over the edge and so will halt on the table edge instead.

Dwarf Crossbowman

Queen Helgar of Krag Bryn

THE BATTLE

WHO HAS THE FIRST TURN

The Elf army is lying in ambush and benefits from the element of surprise. To represent this, the Elf player has the first turn of the game.

HOW LONG DOES THE BATTLE LAST

The ambush on the Dwarf High Road lasted from midday until sunset. The battle will last for five game turns, each turn representing about an hour of daylight. Each player will therefore complete five turns.

If the Elves achieve their sudden death victory condition in any turn before sunset, the battle ends in a decisive Elf victory at the end of that turn.

VICTORY OR DEFEAT

SUDDEN DEATH VICTORY CONDITION

If the Runesmith is slain, or plunges to his death down the Chasm of Doom, the battle ends at the end of the turn and the Elves win a decisive victory.

VICTORY POINTS

If the battle continues until sunset, determine who has won in the usual fashion, by counting up victory points as described in the Warhammer rulebook. If the Elves win on points, it is assumed that the Runesmith and his retinue ultimately come to a bad end or leave the realm. If Grung escapes via the side edge on the Dwarf player's left, the Dwarfs can claim 1 victory point and, so long as the Dwarfs can win, Grung is assumed to survive the battle on a dice score of 2+ on a D6 (a roll of 1 indicates that a prowling eagle or mountain lion swoops down and gets him later). In the event of a draw on victory points, this is counted as a Dwarf victory instead, because the ambush has failed and Grung survived.

THE BREWERY BASH

THE FEUD OF DRONG AND HELGAR

When Drong heard about the ambush of his favourite drinking companion, he confronted the queen in a rage, as he suspected that she had betrayed him to the Elves. Drong and Helgar had a thunderous row, like only a Dwarf married couple can do. Ale was spilt – this was a very serious matter indeed. Drong narrowly escaped having his beard shorn by Helgar's axe and stormed off in a grudge-huff to return to his own stronghold. Most of the warriors in Krag Bryn drained their tankards, grabbed their axes and hurried after him.

THE HOSTAGE BREWMASTER

Queen Helgar acted promptly to try and forestall any attack that Drong might have been planning. It seemed certain that he would now renew the feud and try to overthrow her. Helgar immediately sent her guards to arrest Drong's Brewmaster, Largs, whom her husband had brought from Kazad Thrund. This rotund Dwarf had set up a brewery outside Krag Bryn, near the mines and all their thirsty employees. Largs had been too drunk to make a brisk getaway from the queen's domain with the rest of Drong's retinue, and was captured easily. The Brewmaster was thrown into a big copper vat, which fortunately for him happened to be empty at the time, and the lid was locked shut. Helgar sent a cruel message to her estranged husband: "If you dare to attack me, it's no more ale for you!"

Drong was quite understandably enraged when he heard what the queen had done. No more ale meant that he couldn't reward his followers in the manner to which they were extremely accustomed. They would drift away to follow other lords. For sure, she had him by the beard! After several terrifying sober nights, Drong's mind was clear enough to hatch a cunning plan.

THE BATTLE FOR THE BREWERY

Drong dispatched a hand-picked force of desperate and thirsty Dwarfs into the realm of Krag Bryn. These raiders were led by Skag the Stealthy. Their mission: to rescue the Brewmaster, or die in the attempt. Their chances of success were better than they imagined, since Queen Helgar had precious few warriors left, save from a personal bodyguard of Trollslayers of the sort who are attracted to lost causes. Helgar happened to gain advance warning of the task force approach from spies sent by Eldroth to keep watch over the mountain passes. Unfortunately, none of the queen's bodyguard were willing to raise an axe against fellow Dwarfs. Once again Helgar had to send a plea for aid to Eldroth.

Eldroth immediately dispatched Ardath the Vengeful, a determined Elf who could be relied on to defy ten thousand Dwarfs on his own if necessary, along with a force of hardened warriors, to deny the vital ale resources to the enemy. When Skag and his force reached the brewery, they found Ardath's Elves waiting for them.

The Dwarfs have a saying: "If we stopped to count how many varieties of ale we make, we'd never get around to drinkin' 'em." Certainly the sheer diversity of Dwarf ales is astounding. While most humans tend to think of Bugman's XXXXXX when Dwarf ales are mentioned, the fact is that the Dwarfs keep some of their more exotic brews strictly to themselves (partly through fear of letting their secrets slip, but mostly because your average Dwarf ale could stun a human at ten paces).

Consider such potent brews as Enlaf's Special Reserve – an ale which is fermented within the brain pan of a slain troll, and which (despite its somewhat noxious odour) has the peculiar characteristic of regenerating itself, making it extremely difficult to drain the last drop! Then of course, there is the classic Zharrgot, (lit. "firemarch") which as well as having a particularly pleasant peppery flavour, also tends to give Dwarfs the rutz and prevents them from sitting comfortably. Dwarf leaders often use Zharrgot when they need to spur their fellows into travelling great distances.

And finally, who can forget Goddi's Old Original? Reputedly containing a little blood from real werewolves and left to ferment in the light of the full moon; this brew is so strong, it really does put hairs on your chest! Unsurprisingly, this vintage delight is currently selling very well in the Empire, where not only is it sold in taverns, but also in apothecaries, where it is doing brisk trade as hair restorer. Goddi Goddisson's posters are in evidence everywhere around Zhufbar, advertising for werewolf hunters with the slogan: "I don't care where you found it, just bring it back – dead or alive!"

THE BREWERY BASH – SCENARIO III

FIGHTING THE BATTLE

The Brewery Bash is the third clash between Elf and Dwarf forces leading to the final battle of Krag Bryn. Each of these encounters will influence the result of that battle. The outcome of this scenario decides whether Drong regains his master brewer so that his troops can be given the ale ration to which they are accustomed. If not, many of them will desert thus greatly reducing the Dwarf army in the final battle.

THE BATTLEFIELD

The most important feature on the battlefield is the brewery. It consists of three sturdy Dwarf buildings built of stone, one of these is the brewhouse which holds the vat where the Brewmaster is imprisoned. There is also a storehouse containing barrels of ale. The brewhouse is located beside the path leading from Krag Bryn to the mines. The surrounding area consists of mountain scenery with hills, boulders and clumps of trees.

Set up the battlefield as shown on the Battlefield Map. Alternately, you can generate your own version of the battlefield using the Terrain Generator chart in Appendix III, or agree on a variation of the battlefield to suit the scenery which you have available.

Mark a line across the width of the table from one side edge to another using dice. This line should divide the table exactly into two equal halves. These are the Dwarf player's half and the Elf player's half. The brewery buildings should be placed astride the half-way line, or with an edge resting on the line. The brewhouse itself, though, should be placed slightly further back from the line, but no closer than 12" to the Elf player's edge.

If you are generating your own scenery, note that the brewery is a fixed feature of the battlefield and it should be placed before any other terrain, as described above.

The area between the buildings should be clear of any other terrain features except for the brewery's walls. These should be placed so they link buildings or make an enclosure around them. There should be clear gateways or gaps through the walls, allowing access to the buildings facing the Dwarf and Elf table edges. These should be wide enough for at least four models to pass through.

DEPLOYING FOR BATTLE

Skag the Stealthy led his army towards the brewery very early in the morning, under a veil of mist hanging in the mountain valleys. When they were almost there, the mist cleared revealing the Dwarfs to the Elf defenders waiting among the buildings. The mist enabled Skag's force to approach as close as 12" to the buildings and their Elf defenders before the battle commenced.

When the battlefield is set up, the Elf force is deployed first and the Dwarf force is deployed afterwards.

The Elf army is deployed within the Elf half of the table, up to the line dividing the table in half, but no closer than 12" to the side edges. This means that Elf units may be deployed as close as 12" to the Dwarf army and in front of the Brewhouse.

The Dwarf army is deployed no closer than 12" to the brewery area and no closer than 12" to the side edges.

Skag is renowned for his cunning. To represent this the Dwarf player may deploy one Dwarf unit worth up to 200 points in the flank zone along either short table edge. The unit may be placed within 12" of the table edge, but not within 8" of any Elf troops.

THE BATTLE

WHO HAS THE FIRST TURN

The first turn of the game goes to the Elf player. As the mist lifted from over the battlefield, the keen eyes of the Elves saw the Dwarfs before the Dwarfs realised how near they had come to their destination. The Elves reacted immediately to defend the brewhouse.

HOW LONG DOES THE BATTLE LAST

The Battle of the Brewery lasted from morning until sunset. The battle will last for six game turns, each game turn representing about an hour of daylight in the original battle. Each player will therefore complete six turns.

RESCUING THE BREWMASTER

The Dwarf objective in this battle is to rescue the Brewmaster, either by breaking into the brewhouse and freeing him (which secures a sudden death victory for the Dwarfs) or by capturing the brewery (which happens if the Dwarfs win on victory points).

As soon as a Dwarf unit reaches the brewhouse (ie, models move up to and touch the brewhouse), the Dwarf player rolls one dice for every five Dwarf models in the unit. This represents the efforts of the Dwarfs to break into the brewhouse, overpower the guards inside, unseal the vat and drag out the drunken Largs. If a 6 is rolled, this has happened and the Dwarfs achieve their sudden death victory. The Dwarf player rolls in the movement phase of any of his subsequent turns in which a Dwarf unit is in contact with the brewhouse, even if the unit is in close combat, but not if it is fleeing.

Note that the Brewmaster cannot be harmed in any way by either side due to a secret runic talisman that he wears, or more possibly as a result of his beer laden breath which makes it impossible to get near him!

VICTORY OR DEFEAT

SUDDEN DEATH VICTORY CONDITION

If the Brewmaster is rescued in any turn before sunset, the battle ends in a sudden death victory for the Dwarfs at the end of that turn.

VICTORY POINTS

If the battle continues until sunset, determine who has won by counting up victory points as described in the Warhammer rulebook. If the Dwarfs win, they ultimately rescue the Brewmaster. In the event of a draw on victory points, this is counted as an Elf victory.

THE BREWERY BUILDINGS

The Drinking Hall

The Brewhouse

The Ale Store

This Campaign Pack includes card Dwarf brewery buildings to provide the centrepiece to this battle. They can also be used separately as randomly-generated buildings in other battles in the campaign, or for that matter in any other Warhammer battle as sturdy stone buildings and good examples of Dwarf architecture!

Adventurous modellers might like to take these card models as a starting point for further embellishment, turning them into more robust items of terrain by adding a base, balsa wood beams and so on. The buildings can be used as a guide as to what Dwarf architecture looks like if you want to try making some from scratch for yourself.

THE BATTLE OF KRAG BRYN

DRONG GATHERS HIS ARMY

In Kazad Thrud, the sound of hammers striking anvils resounded throughout the mountains as Drong prepared a mighty throng for war. With or without his Engineers, Runesmith or Brewmaster, the grim-faced Drong was determined to lead out his army to conquer Krag Bryn and drive the Elves back into the sea.

Drong's enormous horde marched along Grudge Pass and beyond Krag Bryn, heading for the Elf colony. Using this strategy, Drong knew he could drive a wedge between Tol Eldroth and Krag Bryn. Drong was a shrewd and experienced commander. He knew that the Elves, rather than Queen Helgar's tiny retinue, were the main enemy. He decided to destroy the Elves first and turn against the fortress of Krag Bryn later. The queen would then either surrender or, failing that, he would have all the time in the world to besiege her stronghold and take it for his own.

Drong planned to deploy his army with secure flanks resting against the mountain torrent of Krag Bryn on one side and the steep mountain crags on the other. This was where he could expect to meet the Elf army marching up from the coast. It was a good place in which to win a battle.

ELDROTH'S COUNCIL OF WAR

The Elf Lord Eldroth was constantly informed of events in the neighbouring Dwarf strongholds. He had placed emissaries and spies at the queen's court as a precaution, knowing that one day he would the information that they would gain. Even before Drong's army marched out, Eldroth knew that his arch-enemy had gathered his forces for a final onslaught, and so he called a council of war in Tol Eldroth.

When the nobles were assembled, Eldroth addressed them:

"We are now living in dark times! Throughout the Old World, the Dwarfs have turned against us and there is war. Queen Helgar is our only friend and that is because she has no other choice. The fate of her throne is linked to ours. If she falls, sooner or later we will be driven into the sea by the enemy. I therefore recommend to the council that we arm ourselves and march out to fight Drong and his army without delay."

Anarion the trader rose to speak:

"I speak for the merchants and traders. Eldroth is right! Even if we manage to defend ourselves here it will be to no avail if Queen Helgar loses her throne. Then Drong will have the mines. He will ask extortionate prices or, worse still, he will not trade with us at all. If that happens, this colony might as well pack up its belongings and go home."

Then Fendar, a renowned warrior, gave his opinion:

"I say we should fight and win a great victory. This will show the Dwarfs that we are here to stay. It will give heart to all those other colonies of our kinsfolk which are at present suffering the wrath of the Dwarfs. If they see that they cannot beat us, then perhaps they will forget all this grudge nonsense. If Queen Helgar keeps her throne it will show the hot-heads that it is better to be friends with us!"

Lastly Ardath, a hardened veteran and refugee from the Dwarf conflict raging to the north, stood and spoke:

"Friends and kinsfolk. The queen does not matter. She may be on our side now, but never forget that she is a Dwarf and will betray us in the end! We must seize our chance to crush the Thrundlings once and for all. Waste no more words! Let us draw our swords and slay the foe this day!"

The council unanimously voted for war. The decision was immediately vindicated, for a messenger arrived bearing the news of Drong's advance. Eldroth gathered all the Elf warriors he could muster, including several shiploads of Elves who had recently sailed in from Ulthuan to help fight for Tol Eldroth. Sure of the justness of their cause, the army marched out to meet the Dwarfs.

Elf Lord Eldroth

FIGHTING THE BATTLE

Krag Bryn is the final episode in the Grudge of Drong campaign. The outcome of this conflict will be influenced by the results of all of the previous battles. This battle decides the fate of Drong, it determines who rules Krag Bryn and ultimately seals the fate of the Elves of Tol Eldroth.

THE BATTLEFIELD

Cunningly, Drong has decided to march with the raging torrent of Krag Bryn upon his left flank. So whether the Elves meet him in the mountains or on the plain, the stream will run along one flank of the battlefield. On the far side of the torrent is the stronghold of Krag Bryn itself. Any forces coming from here to join the battle must cross the torrent. In this way, Drong has tried to protect the flank of his army from a surprise attack by Queen Helgar emerging from the gates of Krag Bryn.

Set up the battlefield as shown on the map. Alternatively, you can generate your own version of the battlefield as described in Appendix III. Whether you are generating your own scenery or not, you must first mark out a flanking zone on the Dwarf player's left, separated from the rest of the battlefield by a stream. The stream should be no further than 12" from the nearest side edge, give or take a few inches to allow for the curviness of any terrain pieces. This terrain feature is the raging torrent of Krag Bryn and marks the border of Helgar's realm.

Now mark an imaginary line, using dice, across the width of the table from one side to the other. This marks the centre of the table and divides it into two equal halves. The raging torrent of Krag Bryn is bridged in many places by Dwarf stone bridges. One of these crosses the stream close to this middle line. This feature is placed at the same time as the stream and again is a fixed feature of the battlefield. Place the bridge more or less on the centre line dividing the table in half. The bridge can, if you prefer, be replaced by a ford.

DEPLOYING FOR BATTLE

Queen Helgar's bodyguard of Slayers is deployed first, before either the Elf or Dwarf army. The monarch has led them out of her stronghold and deployed them on her side of the river. From here she intends to observe the battle and join in on the winning side. The unit is placed in the middle of the flanking zone, ready to cross the bridge. At the start of the game, neither player has control of this unit.

Now the High Elf and Dwarf armies are deployed. Each army is deployed no closer than 12" to the centre line dividing the table into two halves and 12" from the side edges. Each side deploys a single unit at a time, one after the other, starting with whichever player rolls the highest score on a D6. Champions are deployed as part of their units. Other characters are each considered to be a separate unit of one model.

Once one army has been completely deployed, the opposing army continues to deploy one unit at a time. When it is the other player's turn to deploy, they can now move any one unit 4" towards the enemy. In this way the smaller army can start advancing into battle while the larger opposing army is still deploying. The advancing army moves one unit at a time, but the same unit can move several times if the opportunity presents itself. No advancing units may be moved within 8" of enemy troops.

THE BATTLE

WHO HAS THE FIRST TURN

Both players roll one dice. The player scoring highest has the first turn.

HOW LONG DOES THE BATTLE LAST

The Battle of Krag Bryn lasted from mid-morning to sunset. Thus it lasts for seven game turns, each turn representing approximately an hour of daylight in the original battle. Each player will therefore complete seven turns.

SPECIAL RULES

WHO WILL HELGAR SUPPORT?

Although Queen Helgar has led her bodyguard out to the battlefield, she cannot make up her mind whether to join one side or the other – indeed, whether to join in the battle at all. As for the Trollslayers, they are divided among themselves about raising their axes against fellow Dwarfs. Some bear grudges against Drong, others bear grudges against Elves. Who knows: they might even end up fighting among themselves.

Helgar's Dwarf pride tells her that she should not fight for Elves against fellow Dwarfs. What a terrible grudge this would bring down upon her! It would be remembered forever, and then some. Even the king of Karaz-a-Karak would write it down in his great Book of Grudges! Perhaps if she was seen to be neutral, she would redeem herself in the eyes of Drong and all the disgruntled Dwarfs, and so save her throne after all!

If she followed this course of action, and the Elves won, she could make an excuse about holding her bodyguard back as a reserve. Even better, if the Dwarfs won, she could say exactly the same thing! She could fool both sides into thinking that she would have joined in to help them, without ever doing anything.

The river marks the border of Helgar's realm. If any player sends troops across the river or attacks Helgar's bodyguard, she will immediately join the other side and fall under the control of the opposing player.

Otherwise, Helgar will either join the Dwarf side or remain neutral. She helps her allies, the Elves, by not joining in to help the Dwarfs. If she is overcome with a surge of Dwarf pride and loyalty on seeing her husband in his war panoply and wielding his mighty axe, she will join in on his side against the Elves. If this happens, the Elves will suddenly find themselves out-flanked.

This is decided in the following manner. At the start of each turn, both players roll a dice. If the result on both dice is a double, Helgar joins the battle on the Dwarf side and falls under the control of the Dwarf player. On any other score, her bodyguard stay out of the battle, supporting the Elves by staying neutral.

VICTORY OR DEFEAT

Determine who has won in the usual way, by counting up victory points as described in the Warhammer rulebook. Each side is fighting for a decisive victory, so there is no sudden death victory condition in this battle. It is fought to the bitter end.

APPENDIX I

THE SAGA OF DRONG

The actual armies which took part in the battles around Tol Eldroth and Krag Bryn can be pieced together from a study of the Dwarfs' Saga of Drong and Helgar and various ancient histories kept by the Elves.

THE BATTLE OF GRUDGE PASS

THE TIDE OF BATTLE

Fendar's archers took a steady toll on the Dwarf rebels as they advanced towards them. The Dwarfs were undaunted due to their drunkenness. Iron Breakers advanced to the top of a hill but, as they descended the treacherous slope on the other side, fell headlong over each other in their drunken stupor. They soon found themselves struggling to retreat from a fiery spell sent their way by the Elf mage. By this time, the mob of raucous miners had smashed into the Elf battle line and Fendar found himself facing Krudd in single combat. Krudd just felled him with his mattock and stepped over him!

The Elf battle line gave way, but the gathering gloom and Dwarf fatigue (not to mention their titanic hangovers) saved them from destruction. As night fell the Elves retreated, taking their wounded leader with them back to Tol Eldroth. Krudd led his men to Kazad Thrund instead of attempting to overthrow Helgar. Drong seized the mines in the days that followed, hiring the rebels themselves as a militia to guard them, under the command of Krudd.

Historian's Comment

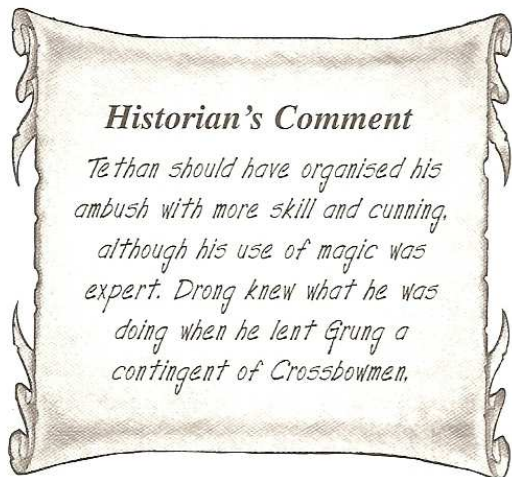

Fendar knew just how brittle the Elf battle line was, but relied too much on archery. When he saw that the rebels were not going to be stopped by arrows alone, he bravely resolved to attack Krudd in single combat. Krudd's strategy, influenced mainly by stubborn Dwarf pride, reckless confidence and alcohol, was nothing more than rushing at the enemy to hit them with their axes. These were excellent and traditional Dwarf tactics, likely to be successful in most circumstances!

AMBUSH ON THE DWARF ROAD

THE TIDE OF BATTLE

Tethan's force ambushed the Runesmith's retinue on the road, taking them completely by surprise. The Trollslayers reacted by immediately rushing forward, but were shot down in great numbers by the Elf bows. If that wasn't bad enough, they were decimated by Tethan's spells, which caused the very rocks to tumble upon them and great chasms to crack open in the earth beneath their feet. It seemed as if the mountains themselves were fighting against them!

The reckless Giant Slayer, witnessing his comrades falling all around him, charged alone into the Elves and was cut down – a suitably heroic end. Meanwhile, the huge contingent of Crossbowmen formed a battle line protecting Grung. Despite being beset by Eagles, the crossbow volleys they fired kept the Elves back. The Elves were unable to get anywhere near the Runesmith, until nightfall brought an end to their determined attempts. Grung seized his opportunity to get away under cover of darkness. Tethan was wounded with a crossbow bolt in the gloom and was borne back to Tol Eldroth by his troops.

THE ARMIES

The opposing armies that fought on the Dwarf road can be represented as described here:

TETHAN'S HIGH ELF AMBUSHERS

THE BREWHOUSE BASH

THE TIDE OF BATTLE

The Elf force was, as expected, massed around the brewhouse itself. Skag opted for a frontal assault and deployed opposite the buildings. He dispatched a unit of Thunderers to cover the right flank. Skag directed the assault across a low ridge to screen his troops from archery for as long as possible. As the Dwarfs appeared over the ridge, the Elves shot volley after volley at them from the safety of the brewery enclosure. The assault was slowed by massed Elven archery and spells. This caused the Trollslayers, who were leading the assault, to fall back into the oncoming Hammerers who were still behind the ridge. This delay probably robbed the Dwarfs of their chance of capturing the brewhouse before nightfall.

Nevertheless, still hoping for a victory, Skag pressed on. Ardath led the Silver Helms forward to block the path of the Hammerers. These suffered under the volleys of the Thunderers shooting from the flank as well as crossbowmen from the front. The Elves became alarmed at the possibility of a Dwarf victory achieved through sheer attrition, but nightfall saved them from this fate.

Next morning, Ardath had been greatly reinforced from Tol Eldroth. Skag, wounded by an Elf arrow and reluctantly accepting defeat, was too shamed to return to Drong. He took the vows of a Trollslayer and vanished into the mountains. Some say he joined Helgar's retinue under an assumed name.

THE BATTLE OF KRAG BRYN

THE TIDE OF BATTLE

The final battle was a cataclysmic end to the whole campaign. The conflict opened with a brisk artillery exchange and war machines were rapidly knocked out on both sides. Soon both Dwarf guns were silent, but the flame cannon remained active throughout the battle, searing holes in the ranks of the massed Elf spearmen. This huge phalanx of Elves was in no way deterred! Similarly, the incessant volleys of the Dwarf crossbows failed to send the Elves reeling back. Elf archers, however, took out an entire unit of Dwarf Thunderers who foolishly attempted to exchange shots with them.

Meanwhile, Drong advanced with the bulk of his infantry along the near bank of the raging torrent of Krag Bryn. Eldroth, leading the Dragon Princes and accompanied by Ardath and the Hero Lithan of Tiranoc who had sailed in from Ulthuan to fight for the colony, charged directly into the Dwarf battle line. Here the Elf nobles engaged Drong and Grung, who led the Hammerers and Krudd's Miners.

Eldroth challenged Drong to single combat and was slain with one mighty blow from Drong's ancestral rune hammer, but not before Drong himself had been severely wounded. Ardath assumed command and hacked away relentlessly at Krudd. Lithan, who had charged into the melee beside the Dragon Princes, quickly slew Grung and bravely engaged the Dwarf leader. Drong was also assaulted by spells, directed by Ardath using the Talisman of Hoeth. All around him, Drong's Hammerers were falling beneath the swords of the Elves, but heroically the remaining Dwarfs valiantly stood their ground.

Queen Helgar, watching Drong fighting heroically like a true Dwarf, could restrain herself no longer and, leading her Trollslayers, she surged across the bridge to help him, even though this meant breaking faith with the Elves. It was to no avail, because at the very moment she set foot upon the opposite bank, Drong fell. It is not known whether he was slain by Lithan or Ardath.

Dusk was gathering and the Thrundling horde retreated to Kazad Thrund bearing away their fallen lord. Krudd, Drong's kinsman, succeeded him as lord of the stronghold. Helgar fled into Krag Bryn, while her Trollslayers were cut down by the Elves who were enraged at the betrayal. It was a great Elf victory! Ardath was ultimately to become lord of Tol Eldroth. The pact with Helgar was now broken and the queen found herself at war with the Elves. She desperately appealed to all Dwarfs to come to her aid, which ultimately they did. Her fate and that of Krudd was to become part of a yet greater saga, that of the War of the Beard.

Historian's Comment

The battle could have swung either way for the Dwarfs. Drong certainly deserved his title of 'The Hard'. Nevertheless, the Elves were utterly determined to seal the doom of their arch enemy. If Helgar had seen Eldroth fall, she may have realised that her fate was now bound up with that of Drong, since only Eldroth was prepared to make a pact with her. Ardath was an implacable foe of the Dwarfs and never trusted Helgar. He was proved right in the end.

The defeat at the Battle of the Brewery had weakened Drong's army and only Helgar's retinue could make up the deficit in numbers. Ale had been rationed and reserved only for the Hammerers. This kept the Miners sober, but may account for the lack of energy on the part of the Dwarf gunners. The gains from the earlier Dwarf victories were not decisive in the battle; the cannons were put out of action quickly, the gyrocopter was shot down and Grung was soon slain. However, had the Dwarfs lost those previous battles, Drong's force would have been even weaker.

Drong's advance along the riverbank was sound strategy. This protected his flank and would make any intervention on his side by Helgar all the more effective. Had the queen thrown her lot in with the Elves, then this line of advance would have cut her contingent off from such allies. Drong used his missile troops to cancel out those of the Elves. The Eagles played little part, and suffered from the skills of the Dwarf crossbowmen.

The Elf army fought with utmost bravery and determination. The desire to inflict a crushing defeat on Drong was no doubt made more urgent by the presence of Helgar's troops on the flank. The queen was quite clearly wavering in her support of the Elves. The decisive action and valour of the Elven nobles sealed the doom of Drong.

APPENDIX II

USING OTHER ARMIES

The Grudge of Drong campaign is based on the Saga of Drong and Helgar, as recorded in Dwarf legend. Although the Dwarfs were at war with the Elves in that campaign, there have been many occasions when the Dwarfs have had to fight other enemies in somewhat similar circumstances.

The theme is simply one in which newcomers gain a foothold in the Dwarf realms and try to divide the Dwarfs among themselves, taking advantage of age-old Dwarf feuds and grudges. It has been a similar story throughout the Dwarf domains all through their long history. It is interesting, therefore, to try the same campaign scenario using different enemies for the Dwarfs.

What follows are a few suggestions on how to do this.

ADAPTING THE CAMPAIGN

It is easy to adapt the campaign for another enemy instead of the High Elves. This is because it is mainly the Dwarf player who has much to gain in the final battle as a direct result of the outcome of the earlier conflicts. The enemy tries to gain their own edge in the climactic battle by denying him such advantages. Another race may replace the High Elves, but their motives and strategy in the campaign will remain roughly the same. Battle tactics, however, will be new and different because you will be using a different army.

If you want to try another army as opponents for the Dwarfs, be prepared to apply generous amounts of imagination and common sense to adapt the various victory conditions and special rules for each scenario. It will all be straightforward enough, but some modifications may need to be made.

What follows are suggested scenario lists for different opponents for the Dwarfs in this campaign. Feel free to adapt these lists as you wish – provided your opponent agrees, of course!

CAMPAIGN SPECIAL CHARACTERS

In the campaign, the High Elf player is provided with High Elf special characters to lead each of his armies. If you are using a different army in place of the High Elves, you will of course have to invent your own characters and give them names.

These lists will give you some idea of the sort of character to use. Characters who survive earlier battles can, of course, be chosen again to lead the final battle.

Dark Elf Spearmen

DARK ELVES

Imagine that it was a colony of Dark Elves which had been founded on the coast of the Old World below the strongholds of Krag Bryn and Kazad Thrund. A Black Ark, carrying rebel Elves from the Kinstrife in Ulthuan, became lost and in time beached on the coast.

Their lord is Droth (a kinsman of Eldroth, perhaps) who has gone over to the worship of evil gods. With him are his followers in damnation. Above all, they seek to obtain metal with which to forge arms, because they fear that the High Elves will eventually find them. Unfortunately, the Dwarf queen Helgar controls the mountains and the mines. So Droth makes a pact with her. In return for the metal he needs, he agrees to help her against her rival, Drong.

As far as Drong is concerned, he and his clan despise Dark Elves as much as High Elves and do not distinguish between them. The scenario is broadly the same as before – but the army which will fight the Dwarfs is very different.

Imagine that, in the aftermath of the War of the Beard, the strongholds of Krag Bryn and Kazak Thrund are remaining outposts of the crumbling Dwarf Empire of the Grey Mountains. Beneath the mountains, stretching away into the west, is the vast Forest of Loren. This forest is the realm of the Wood Elves, those Elves who refused to return to Ulthuan.

The kindred of Eldryth (distant cousins of Eldroth's High Elf folk) have settled in the forest glades in the foothills of the mountains. Their neighbour is Queen Helgar, ruling over the declining stronghold of Krag Bryn. Eldryth and Helgar enter into a pact and agree not to attack each other. The ruler of the next stronghold, deeper in the mountains, is Drong. He belongs to a rival clan and covets Helgar's throne and the mines that she controls. Drong seeks to gain control of Krag Bryn and is the arch enemy of the Elves. He will ultimately invade the forest and fell trees for pit props. Eldryth, therefore, must work towards the defeat of Drong and seeks to support Helgar as an ally and buffer state between the Elves and the wrath of Drong.

APPENDIX III

SETTING UP THE BATTLEFIELD

The campaign maps included with the scenarios indicate how to set up the battlefield for each of the scenarios. A Dwarf brewery forms the central feature of one of the battles and card model Dwarf Brewery buildings are included in the Campaign Pack. For the rest of the terrain you will need to rely on your own collection of terrain pieces which you have been diligently modelling!

THE BATTLEFIELD

The battlefield on which you will play the game needs to be laid out on a large, level area. A dining room table or a board laid out on top of a bed and covered with a green cloth will usually do the job. For convenience, we will refer to the playing area, whatever it is made of, as the table.

The best and most practical size of table-top is about 4 feet by 6 feet. This is about the size of a typical dining room table or single bed, and fits reasonably well into an average small room with enough space to sit around it. All the battles described here were playtested on tables of this size. For convenience, everything is described as if for a 4' x 6' table. You will easily be able to adapt these guidelines to suit any other practical size of table, whether larger or smaller.

BATTLEFIELD ZONES

Campaign games often differ from the normal game layout, so it is important to define various zones of the table. These are useful for laying out scenery and deploying the troops in a variety of ways to fit different scenarios.

Whatever the size of your playing area, you will need to determine each player's table edge and each player's half of the table, so that you know where to place terrain and where to deploy your armies. To do this, first use an imaginary line to divide the table across the middle. When setting up the table for a battle, all such lines can be marked with rows of dice, for example. The line joins the two short edges of the table. Each player's table edge is therefore one of the longer edges of the table.

Each player deploys his army within his half of the table, inside his deployment zone. The deployment zone is usually twelve inches from the imaginary line which divides the table in half, but this may vary according to the scenario. Usually, the opposing armies deploy no closer than a bowshot apart (24"). The zone may have to be deeper or narrower depending on the width of the table. The deployment zone does not run right up to the sides, but stops twelve inches from each of the shorter edges. This creates space for troops to move out onto the flanks from the initial deployment zone.

The area from each table edge to the edge of the deployment zones can be described as a flanking zone. The area enclosed by the player's deployment zones and the flanking zones will be the middle of the table.

THE BATTLEFIELD MAPS

Each battle in the campaign comes with a map showing the layout of the battlefield. It is entirely up to you and your opponent how closely you follow these maps. If you do not have any of the terrain pieces marked on the map, now is a good time to start making them. Alternatively, you could both agree to change the layout of the map in any way you like, to fit what scenery you do have. The maps are there to suggest the kind of scenery on the battlefield; use them as the basis for your own battlefields. Some terrain features are positioned so as to create tactical problems and opportunities, so if you vary the map, you will be creating different problems and opportunities each time.

TERRAIN FEATURES

Any item of model scenery is referred to as a terrain feature. This can be a hill, a cottage, a river or a wood, for example. There are endless different possibilities for model scenery, but any particular item will belong to one of several broad categories: hills, woods, obstacles, difficult ground, buildings, and so on.

A simple wooded hill

Some items of terrain are really impressive if they are very big, such as a gently sloping hill. Other items would be useless if they were too big or too small, because they would either restrict movement too much or prevent you from placing models on them. As a rule of thumb, the handiest size for a terrain feature is not larger than a dinner plate in area. If you do want to use a larger item, count it as a double terrain feature, worth two smaller features, when laying out the battlefield using the Terrain Generator.

GENERATING TERRAIN

The battlefields in this campaign can be set up using a modified version of the Terrain Generator system in the Warhammer rulebook as an alternative to the maps provided. The chart below is designed to create the mountainous landscape in which the campaign takes place. Don't worry if you generate items of terrain you don't have; in such cases just re-roll until you get a result you can use. Alternatively, such results provide a great excuse to go ahead and model some new types of terrain!

Begin with both players sitting on opposite sides of the table. Each player rolls a D6 and the highest scoring player goes first. To generate a piece of scenery, roll 2D6 and consult the chart below. The player places the terrain piece somewhere on his own side of the table, then the other player rolls and places the relevant piece. Whenever it is his turn to place a piece of scenery, a player may choose to stop and declare that he is satisfied with the battlefield as it is. The other player then has the option of generating and placing one more piece if he wishes. The battlefield is then complete. Note that some scenarios require a fixed terrain feature which must be placed before any other terrain is randomly generated.

TERRAIN GENERATOR CHART

Roll 2D6 to determine each item

2 – MOUNTAIN STREAM

The stream must enter and leave on a table edge. It may have a single crossing place, such as a bridge, ford or a series of huge flat stepping stones if you wish.

3 – PIT OR QUARRY

This can be an old, abandoned quarry or an open cast mine. It can be full of loose rocks or water. Either way, it is impossible to move across.

4 – RUINED DWARF BUILDING

A single ruined building. This can be made by arranging three stone wall sections to create an open-ended rectangle.

5 – STEEP HILL

A steep hill is difficult to move over. It may have cliffs on one or more sides which are impossible to move over.

6 – DIFFICULT GROUND

Choose an area of difficult terrain such as boulder-strewn ground, a shallow pit or an area of loose rocks.

7 – GENTLY SLOPING HILL

Even in a mountainous region, there will be gently sloping hills on which troops can gain an advantage for shooting and fighting.

8 – STONE WALLS

Up to 12" of continuous stone wall. This can be made by arranging three short wall sections in a row. This obstacle can be crossed, but troops will be slowed down while they do so.

9 – DWARF BUILDING

A single building representing a Dwarf prospector's cottage perhaps, or a temple dedicated to the ancestor of the clan. How about a ramshackle Dwarf mine complete with a big winding wheel? That would make an excellent modelling project to tackle.

10 – DWARF VILLAGE

Up to three or four buildings arranged close together, representing Dwarf stone buildings and workshops. The buildings can be joined together by walls.

11 – WOOD

Woods are rare in this mountainous region, as the Dwarfs have chopped most of the trees down for use as pit props. Where they are still standing, pine trees predominate.

12 – VERY DIFFICULT GROUND

A feature that is very difficult to cross, such as an area of huge boulders, sheer cliffs, a steep-sided ravine or a deep quarry pit full of stagnant water.

CARD BUILDING ASSEMBLY INSTRUCTIONS

To assemble these buildings you will need a sharp modelling knife and a tube of white PVA glue.
In all cases the toned areas indicate where to apply the glue.

Building 1 - THE BREWHOUSE

NOTE: ALL PARTS FOR THE BREWHOUSE ARE NUMBERED 1.

- (A) CHIMNEY (B) BUILDING SIDES (C) BREWERY ASSEMBLY (D) ROOF ASSEMBLY

Press out the chimney, fold round sides and then glue together.

Fold the sides of the brewhouse round, check that the structure is square and glue together.

Using the locator slots slide the chimney into position onto the side of the brewhouse. Do not glue into position.

Locate the roof by using the large chimney slot provided. Make sure the chimney and roof are all central and glue into position. Finally glue the porch and ridge beams into position.

Building 2 - THE ALE STORE

NOTE: ALL PARTS FOR THE ALE STORE ARE NUMBERED 2.

- (A) ALE STORE SIDES (B) ROOF AND LOFT (C) PORCH AND BEAMS

Bend round the sides of the ale store locating the tab into the slot provided and gluing the remaining tab to the appropriate side.

Fold over the two sides of the loft and glue together, attach the roof centrally and glue the loft to the side of the barn house in the location slots provided.

Add the two porches and attach the appropriate ridge beams. Finally, attach the two long ridge beams.

Building 3 - THE DRINKING HALL

NOTE: ALL PARTS FOR THE DRINKING HALL ARE NUMBERED 3.

A HALL SIDES

Glue the sides carefully to the end section, making sure the structure is square.

B SIDE ROOFS

Once the main structure is dry you can glue the roof sections into position. Position each side roof section so that the indents locate correctly to the back of the building.

Glue the back flaps of the roof sections first. This allows a little adjustment in positioning when gluing the front sections into place. When all the roof sections are correctly positioned glue the remaining tabs firmly into position and leave to dry.

C UPPER LEVEL

Fold round the sides of the top roof section and glue together. Once it is dry attach into position using the slots provided. Finally when it is dry glue the remaining roof section into place.

D PORCH AND BEAMS

When the structure is dry attach the front porch and the last short ridge beam to the top edge. Attach the two remaining porches to the very top section.

Place the longest ridge beam along the roof and glue into position. When dry place the final ridge beam across the porches slotting it into position on the previous beam.

READY FOR BATTLE

Once the buildings are complete we recommend that you stick them to card bases as shown below, this makes them stable and more durable for your games. Simply add some Citadel flock and your buildings are ready for action.

DRONG THE HARD AND QUEEN HELGAR LONGPLAITS

◀ Dronk the Hard is a descendant of Thrund the Angry. His kinsmen, the Thrundlings, swore a grudge-oath to uphold his claim to the throne of Krag Bryn.

▶ Last of the Bronnlings and Queen of Krag Bryn, Helgar Longplaits is a ruler whose grip on power grows more tenuous by the day. Torn between her desire to rule and her proud Dwarf heritage, Helgar must decide whether to keep faith with the High Elves or stand with her own kind.

◀ Well versed in the arcane arts of his kind, the High Elf Mage is a potent force whose elegance and lightness of frame belies the power of his craft. His timely intervention can often turn the tide of a battle in favour of his kindred, leaving the opposition demoralized by his continuous barrage of spells.

▶ Dwarf Runesmiths are enchanters and artificers of great power. Their magic lies not in the use of spells, but in the runes they carve into weapons and armour.

▲ A charging regiment of Dwarf Miners is taken by surprise as a unit of fast moving Reaver Knights appears out of nowhere and joins in the fray.

▼ Dwarf Slayers – the most fearsome and merciless of all Dwarfs.

▲ Every Dwarf King maintains his own elite bodyguard of Hammerers, and Dronk is no exception. These formidable warriors will permit no harm to befall their King.

▲ To a Dwarf Miner, the prospect of a good fight is almost as appealing as tapping a rich vein of gold. With pickaxes in hand, they are a sight to swell the pride of any true Dwarf.
